- Provide complete Beneficiary Bank information including name, branch name, address, city, state, country and routing number. The Federal Reserve Routing number (ABA) for a beneficiary bank can be verified by checking the Federal Reserve Bank's web page: <https://www.fedwiredirectory.frb.org>.
- For International wires include the SWIFT/BIC Code, International Routing Code (IRC) and/or International Bank Account Number (IBAN) for countries that require it.
- If you do not have a SWIFT/BIC, IBAN or IRC, you should contact the beneficiary of the wire. If the beneficiary does not have the needed information, please have the beneficiary contact their bank to obtain the appropriate information. Sending international wires without the required information can cause the wire to be delayed, returned or assessed additional fees.

International Wires

Wires sent to foreign countries require different numbers depending on the receiving foreign country. All wire transfer payments destined for Europe should include the SWIFT Bank Identifier Code (SWIFT/BIC Code), International Routing Code (IRC) as applicable, and for participating countries, the beneficiary's International Bank Account Number (IBAN). These codes should be obtained from the beneficiary. Sending a wire without these identifying numbers can delay the wire or the receiving bank may return the wire and assess additional fees.

The SWIFT/BIC is a unique series of 8 or 11 alpha numeric characters that identify a specific financial institution. Some countries have created international routing codes (IRC) which are used in combination with the SWIFT/BIC Code to aid in routing the payment through a main office to a branch. Each country has a specific name for their routing code (i.e., Sort Code in the United Kingdom). The International Bank Account Number (IBAN) varies by country/institution. Countries that require an IBAN:

Aland Islands	Guernsey	New Caledonia
Albania	Hungary	Northern Ireland
Andorra	Iceland	Norway

Belgium	Isle of Man	Portugal
