JUST, AND SUSTAINABLE WORLD.

THE SANTA CLARA HERITAGE

On January 12, 1777, six months after the signing of the Declaration of Independence, two Franciscan padres, Tomás de la Peña and José Antonio Murguía, founded the eighth of California's original 21 missions along the banks of the Rio Guadalupe. Mission Santa Clara de Asís, as they named it, served as a spiritual center and school for the Indians and early settlers. Besides providing religious instruction for both men and women, the Franciscans taught the men stock raising, farming, and the building trades; the young girls, weaving and sewing; the boys, reading, music, and religious drama.

Three times in the early years—twice after floods and once after an earthquake—the mission moved to safer ground. The fourth mission, built in 1819, was remodeled and expanded in 1825. The present Adobe Lodge and the Adobe Wall are all that remain of the 1825 mission. The present Mission Church, an enlarged replica of the 1825 church, was completed in 1928 after a fire destroyed the previous structure.

In 1850, the new bishop of San Francisco, Joseph S. Alemany, asked Jesuits Michael Accolti and John Nobili, formerly of the Oregon mission territory, to open a college at Mission Santa Clara. The property was transferred to the Jesuit order and classes began on March 19, 1851. Thus, Santa Clara became the first institution of higher learning in the state of California. During its first complete academic year, 1851–52, Father Nobili and a few Jesuits and lay teachers offered instruction in reading, writing, and foreign languages. Santa Clara College, opening its doors with 12 students, taught approximately 40 students during its first year.

In 1854, the Jesuit Province of Turin, Italy, adopted California as its permanent mission field, marking a turning point in Santa Clara's history. As a consequence, the Jesuits of Turin provided the college with the faculty and support it needed to grow. The following year, Santa Clara College received a Charter of Incorporation from the state of California.

Slow and steady growth followed, and distinguished graduates became prominent members of California life. In 1912, a year after the School of Law was founded, Santa Clara College became Santa Clara University.

In that same year, the School of Engineering was founded, and courses in the humanities and sciences were expanded. Responding to urban growth in the Santa Clara Valley, the University established a School of Business in 1926. Today, Santa Clara University consists of the College of Arts and Sciences, the Jesuit School of Theology, the Leavey School of Business, and the Schools of Law, Engineering, and Education and Counseling Psychology.

The Board of Trustees has voted to limit the size of the undergraduate population, an action intended to preserve the character and ensure the quality of the University for generations to come. Today, Santa Clara enrolls approximately 6,000 undergraduate students and 3,000 graduate students. Since 1960, the number of courses taught has more than doubled, and opportunities for individual study have proliferated. Santa Clara University continues its mission of service by helping its students become well-balanced human beings through an education that emphasizes both humanistic values and professional competence.
