Foreword

Here at Beth Sholom Congregation, we use the Memorial Booklet as a way to remember family members whose lives helped shape the people we have become-and the people we are becoming. There is pain in evoking the memory of our loved ones, even as we pray that the sweetness of those memories will add fragrance to our lives. We Jews have developed a particular expertise in our ability to experience both the bitter and the sweet simultaneously. Even as we prepare to usher in the New Year with anticipation and gratitude, we remember that to be human also involves the experience of loss.

The consciousness of the bitter along with the sweet is present in so many Jewish rituals and customs. From the breaking of the glass (a reminder of the destruction of the Temple, and the world's lack of wholeness) at the end of a wedding ceremony; to the saying of Kaddish (an affirmation of God) in the wake of death; to the lighting of the hanukiyah at Hanukkah (bringing in light at the time of year when the world is dark); so much of Jewish life reminds us of both the blessing and the fragility of life.

That is why when we Jews come together to celebrate, the phrase that we hear so often is L'Chaim-"To Life!" L'Chaim is not a toast-not a wish for good health or good luck. It is not a prayer or a petition, for God has already given us life. To say L'Chaim is to affirm our faith in the goodness and the holiness of life even when life is difficult and painful. At the same time L'Chaim is also an affirmation of gratitude for the many blessings that we have already been given.

From this perspective, L'Chaim is a way of living life. To say L'Chaim is not so much to celebrate life as we know it, but to be willing to choose life even when life feels most difficult. As a people, we have been willing to say L'Chaim in the midst of great suffering and great sorrow. And as individuals, our willingness to say L'Chaim is a sign that life is precious and holy, even when it is painful and unfair.

In this coming year, may each of us merit the gift of the power of the words L'Chaim-so that we may celebrate the beauty of life-through both our joys and our sorrows.

Service for the Cemetery

Those who have not visited a cemetery for more than thirty days recite the following Berakhah:

בְּרוּךְ אַתָּה יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ מֶלֶךְ הָעוֹלָם, אֲשֶׁר־
יָצַר אֶתְכֶם בְּדִין, וְזָן וְכִלְכַּל אֶתְכֶם בְּדִין, וְהֵמִית
אֶתְכֶם בְּדִין, וְיוֹדֵעַ מִסְפָּר כָּלְכֶם בְּדִין, וְעֵתִיד
לְהַחְיֹר וּלְהַחְיֹתְכֶם בְּדִין. בְּרוּךְ אַתָּה יְהוָה,
מַחְיֵה הַמֵּתִים.

Praised are You, Adonai our God, who rules the universe, who in keeping with the laws of nature created you, nourished and sustained you, knows how many of you there are, and who will someday restore and give life to you. Praised are You, Adonai, Master of life and death.

Verses from the Psalms

English read responsively
by the Rabbi and Congregation

בְּרָאוֹשׁ וַתַּחֲשֹׁבֶהוּ:	יְיָ מִהָאֲדָם וַתְּדַעְהוּ
יָמָיו כְּצֵל עוֹבֵר	אֲדָם לְהִבָּל דָּמָה
לְעָרֵב יִמּוֹלַל וְגִבֵּשׁ:	בְּבִקְרָא יִצִיץ וְחִלַּף
וַנְּבִיא לִבֵּב חֲקֻמָּה:	לְמִנּוֹת יָמָיו כֵּן הוֹדַע
כִּי־אֲחֻרִית לְאִישׁ שְׁלוֹם	שָׁמְרֵתֶם וְרָאָה יֵשֶׁר
אֲדָאֲלֵהֵם יִפְדֶּה־נַפְשֵׁי מִיַּד שְׂאוּל. כִּי יִקְחֵנִי סֵלָה:

Adonai, what is a person that You should care about her? The human being that You should think of him?

A human being is like a breath;
His or her days like a passing shadow.

At daybreak it flourishes anew
But by dusk it withers and dries up.

Teach us to use all our days,
That we may attain a heart of wisdom.

Mark the blameless, note the upright,
For there is a future for a person of integrity.

God will redeem my life.
When taking me, God will save my soul.

Unison Reading

Eternal God, give us the gift of remembering. May our memories of the dead be tender and true, undiminished by time. Let us recall them, and love them, as they were. Shelter us with the gift of tears. Let us express our sense of loss, our sorrow, our pain, as well as our love, and words unspoken. Bless us with the gift of prayer. May we face You with an open heart, with trusting faith, unembarrassed and unashamed. Strengthen us with the gift of hope. May we always believe in the beauty of life, the power of goodness, the right of joy. May we surrender our being, and the souls of all the dead, to Your all-knowing compassion.

Psalm 23

A Psalm of David.

Adonai is my shepherd, I lack nothing,
Making me lie down in green pastures,
Leading me beside still waters to revive
my spirit,

Guiding me on the right path, for that is God's essence.

Though I walk through a valley of deepest darkness

I fear no harm, for You are with me.

Your rod and Your staff, they comfort me.

You prepare a meal for me in the presence of my foes,

You anoint my head with oil; my drink is abundant.

Surely goodness and kindness shall be my portion

All the days of my life,

And I shall dwell in the house of Adonai

For many long years.

Guide to Jewish Mourning

Adapted from The United Synagogue of Conservative Judaism

A Jewish funeral is a sacred rite and should be invested with both dignity and simplicity as taught by Jewish tradition. The family of the deceased should consult a rabbi when death occurs. Preplanning is encouraged. When a death occurs, please call the synagogue at any time 215-887-1342 to reach Rabbi Glanzberg-Kranin or Rabbi Merow. Our local Jewish funeral homes can be reached at Goldsteins' Rosenberg's Raphael-Sacks at 215-927-5800 and Joseph Levine and Sons at 215-927-2700.

The Jewish way of dealing with death is one part of a larger philosophy of life in which all persons are viewed with dignity and respect. Our people believe that, even after death, the body, which once held a holy human life, retains its sanctity. Our sages have compared the sacredness of the deceased to that of an impaired Torah scroll which, although no longer useable, retains its holiness. In Jewish tradition, therefore, the greatest consideration and respect are accorded the dead.

Jewish law and tradition have endowed funeral and mourning practices with profound religious significance. To this end, Jewish funerals avoid ostentation; family and visitors reflect in dress and deportment the solemnity of the occasion; flowers and music are inappropriate; embalming and viewing are avoided; and interment takes place as soon as possible after death.

The preparation and burial of the body are highly valued mitzvot. It is a chesed shel emet, an act of kindness performed without ulterior motive, for the dead cannot repay this service.

When a member of a community dies, it is the community's responsibility to lovingly assist the deceased's family in this final act.

When Death Occurs

Time of Funeral/Burial - Jewish law requires that burial take place as soon as possible. Burial may be delayed for legal reasons; to transport the deceased; if close relatives must travel long distances to be present at the funeral/burial; or to avoid burial on Shabbat or another holy day. It should not be delayed longer than necessary. Special cases such as death by accident or suicide, or death of children less than 30 days of age should be referred to the Rabbi for guidance.

Shmirah (Attending to the body) - Jewish tradition requires that the deceased not be left alone prior to burial. Hospitals should be requested to avoid disturbing the remains until the arrival of a Shomer (guardian). It is preferable that shomrim be members of the family, friends of the deceased, or members of the congregation. You may also ask the funeral homes to help provide people to do this mitzvah. Tehillim (Psalms) are recited by the shomrim.

Aninut - Time Between Death and Burial

Autopsies and organ donation - The practice of routine autopsies is contrary to Jewish law, since autopsies are viewed as a desecration of the body. In most cases, when an autopsy is recommended, the family can refuse. Alternatively, Judaism does permit an autopsy when it is legally required or if there is medical knowledge that can be gained to help others. Organ donation may be viewed as an example of K'vod Ha-met (respect for the deceased) which brings healing to the living. Thus, willing organs or tissues should be considered a mitzvah.

Embalming - According to Jewish tradition, embalming and the use of cosmetics on the deceased are not permitted. Embalming is not permitted unless required by civil law.

Cremation - Cremation is against Jewish tradition and the family of the deceased should be so advised by the Rabbi. Should a family ignore a Rabbi's advice against cremation, the Rabbi may still choose to officiate in the funeral parlor before the body is cremated.

Taharah (Ritual cleansing) - Jewish law requires that the deceased be cleansed according to prescribed ritual as an expression of respect. A group of specially trained persons called a Hevra Kadisha (holy society) or a Jewish funeral director should perform the mitzvah.

Tachrichim (Shroud and burial attire) - Jewish law prescribes burial in plain white shrouds (tachrichim) so as to demonstrate the equality of all. In addition, a Jewish male is customarily buried wearing a kipah and his own talit and a Jewish woman may do the same.

Aron (Casket) - To avoid interference with the natural process of "returning to the earth," Jewish tradition requires that an aron be made entirely of wood. Consult the Rabbi for details.

K'riah (Rending the garment) - Mourners for parents, a spouse, children, or siblings traditionally participate in the rite of K'riah (rending of garments) usually just prior to the funeral service. This rite consists of tearing a visible portion of clothing (lapel, pocket, collar, or ribbon, for example) The torn garment is worn throughout the 7-day mourning period (shivah). The tearing for parents is on the left side over the heart and for all other relatives on the right side.

Onen (Bereaved person) - Between the time of death and the funeral, an immediate family member of the deceased is called an onen. The onen is exempt from the performance of all affirmative religious obligations, such as reciting the three daily services or putting on tefillin during aninut. The laws of aninut, as well as all the laws of mourning, apply to the seven specific relatives: spouse, father and mother, son and daughter, brother and sister. (See: A Guide to Jewish Religious Practice - Isaac Klein)

The Funeral

Services - Funeral services may be held in the synagogue, in a funeral home, or at the gravesite. The funeral service is usually brief and simple. It usually includes the chanting of psalms, Eyl Malei Rahamim (the traditional memorial prayer), and a hesped (eulogy) honoring the deceased.

Viewing - Viewing the body publicly is contrary to Jewish tradition.

Pall and pallbearers - At a funeral, the casket may be covered with a specially prepared cloth, called a pall, and is borne from the funeral service to the gravesite by family or friends (pallbearers) selected by the mourners.

K'vurah (Burial) - In traditional practice, the casket is lowered into the earth and the grave filled, using a reversed shovel until a mound is formed over the casket. The Kaddish is recited at the grave after k'vurah is completed. There are different customs or variations and the Rabbi should be consulted.

Leaving the cemetery - It is customary for the mourners to pass between two rows of people in attendance to receive traditional expressions of consolation. After burial, washing one's hands when leaving the cemetery or before entering the house of mourning is also traditional.

The Mourning Period

Who is obligated - Mourners are those whose parent, spouse, child, or sibling has died.

Shivah (Initial period of mourning) - Shivah is the seven-day period of intensive mourning observed by the immediate family of the deceased beginning on the day of the burial. During the entire shivah period mourners are encouraged to stay away from work or school, and to remain at home. It is, also, a time to contemplate the meaning of life and the manner in which adjustment will be made to the death of the beloved. Public mourning observances are suspended on the Shabbat in view of the belief that the sanctity and serenity of this day supersedes personal grief. Mourners are permitted and encouraged to attend Shabbat services; but they are not given an aliyah, may not conduct services, and they do not display the k'riah publicly. The major festivals terminate shivah. (For details consult the Rabbis.) Since Judaism teaches that the feeling of loss of a human life is not limited to the descendant's family alone, but is shared by the entire community, it is customary for the name of the deceased to be recalled at the Shabbat service after the funeral.

Condolence Meal - It is customary for family and friends to arrange for a seudat havra'a, condolence meal, which traditionally includes round foods such as eggs, which are symbolic of the cycle of life, to be served the mourners at the house of mourning upon their return from the cemetery.

Shivah - It is customary, as expressions of mourning, for mirrors in the shivah home to be covered, for a seven-day memorial candle to be kindled, for the mourners to refrain from wearing leather shoes and for males to refrain from shaving. In ancient times, mourners sat on the floor to experience discomfort.

Today, we reflect that experience by sitting on lower or harder chairs without cushions. Greetings of Shalom between mourners and visitors are not normally exchanged. The house of mourning should reflect solemnity. Mourners shall not deem themselves as hosts who are obligated to serve their visitors during the mourning period.

Minyan - Every day, the mourner recites Kaddish at a service. A minyan is required. It is preferable to have the services in the home of the mourner. If a minyan cannot be assured then the mourner attends the synagogue service. On Shabbat, mourners join the synagogue service and receive public condolences.

Shloshim - The first thirty days - During the thirty days following burial, after the observance of shivah, mourners return to work and activities but refrain from public entertainment or social activities. The k'riah is customarily worn during shloshim. In place of home services, mourners participate in synagogue services daily and recite Kaddish.

Shanna - Twelve months: The duration of the mourning period - Mourners for deceased parents attend services daily to recite Kaddish for eleven Hebrew months, and continue to refrain from public celebratory activities for the full twelve months. Other mourners often choose to say Kaddish during this period as well.

Yahrzeit (Anniversary of death) - The Kaddish is recited each year on the Hebrew calendar anniversary of death. It is customary to light a yahrzeit (24 hour burning) candle, to study a portion of Torah or Mishnah, and to donate tzedakah on the anniversary. The synagogue and your Jewish funeral home will send you the date each year.

Yizkor (Memorial prayers) - The Yizkor is recited on Yom Kippur, Sh'mini Atzeret, the eighth day of Pesah, and the second day of Shavuot. The Rabbi should be consulted to determine when the first Yizkor is recited. Some Jews follow the custom of lighting a yahrzeit candle on each of these occasions, others only on Yom Kippur.

Miscellaneous

Kohanim (Priests) - There are special provisions related to the attendance of ekohanim at a funeral. Consult the Rabbi.

Flowers - Friends and associates of the deceased who wish to express condolences should be encouraged to contribute to a Tzedakah Fund important to the deceased or the family.

Nichum Avaylim (Condolence calls) - Condolence calls to comfort the mourner should be made after the funeral, during the dshivah period, except on Shabbat.

Opportunities to participate in a mitzvah include helping with:

- Funeral arrangements
- Shmirah
- Taharah
- Cemetery arrangements
- Condolence meals
- Shivah minyanim

Unveiling - There is no required formal rite. If a ritual service is conducted, it may be anytime after one month has passed. Often it is conducted close to the first yahrzeit.

Pre-Planning - Advance purchase of gravesites is important and appropriate. Providing designated relatives with vital information to direct the decisions and allow the family to follow the Tradition and wishes of the deceased is sensitive and wise. The Committee on Jewish Law and Standards of the Rabbinical Assembly has prepared useful material on Living Wills which should be utilized by those engaged in advance planning. The following information will be needed at the time of death:

- Full name of the deceased
- Hebrew name, Hebrew name of father and mother
- Kohen/Levi/Yisrael
- Date of birth and location of birth certificate
- Place of birth
- Mother's maiden name
- Social Security number and where card is kept
- Location of will, legal advisor's telephone number
- Life insurance agent's telephone number
- Life insurance policy numbers and where policies are kept

- Bank account numbers - checking and savings and where kept
- Securities information and where securities are kept
- Cemetery deed/location

- Rabbi to be notified
- Funeral home choice

The Wisdom of Jewish Mourning Practices

By Anne Brener

I didn't have this map at twenty-four, when my mother and sister died. In the aftermath of their deaths, I became a lonely sojourner. Horrified by the suggestion of my father's cousin that I observe the Jewish mourning rituals and determined not to spend my life grieving, I grabbed my backpack and fled my hometown of New Orleans to northern California, where I had once gone to school.

My attempts at self-healing sent me on a roller-coaster ride through the human potential movement. I learned yoga, gestalt, and transactional analysis. I tended a garden, kept a journal, and attended consciousness-raising groups. Each experience taught me a lot, but I felt alone. Few people understood me. No one seemed to want to hear about the pain of my loss.

I reacted with embarrassment and anger. My life was unfocused. Sometimes I thought I was crazy. Was I the only one who had ever taken this tumultuous journey? My behavior, I later learned, was exactly like a mourner's. And the rough path toward healing was known and the journey had been eased centuries ago by the rabbis who had created the rituals of mourning.

Twenty years later, my reaction to my father's death was profoundly different, because I had this map. Upon receiving the news of his death, I ripped my garment and recited the blessing praising "God the true Judge." I then called my father's rabbi in New Orleans and made certain that the members of his congregation would perform the sacred duty of sitting with my dad's body, reciting psalms until I could get there from Los Angeles and say my final goodbye.

After the funeral, I knew how to accept the congregation's generosity. The people who had stood in prayer with my father over the course of his lifetime came to sit with me in his apartment during shivah. Twice a day for seven days they came, offering food and prayer until I had found my own voice in the words of the Kaddish and could return to my home in Los Angeles to say the mourner's prayer on my own.

When the week of shivah ended, I followed the tradition of walking around the block to re-enter the world, accompanied by members of my father's community. Strengthened by their caring and compassion, I was able to leave his house and return to Los Angeles, where I would walk the less protected path of the first year of mourning.

During that time, my own synagogue community held a place for me where I could regularly recite the Kaddish. The word "place" is of great significance; it is the name used for God-HaMakom, the Place. When the Temple stood in Jerusalem, mourners had a place—a separate gate through which they entered and continued walking along a special Mourner's Path. As they walked, they came face to face with all the other members of the community, who greeted them with the blessing, "May the One who dwells in this place comfort you. May you find God-HaMakom—the Holy place of comfort."

Those walking in the opposite direction, former mourners who had made it through, affirmed by their presence the possibility of healing. Looking into their experienced eyes, the mourners found comfort in the knowledge that one does not walk the mourner's path forever.

Those who had never walked the Mourner's Path looked into the face of grief and learned that death and loss are part of life. Knowing that someday they too would walk this path, they could prepare themselves for that eventuality. They realized also that, when that day came, they would not be alone; they would walk in the company of other survivors.

When the Temple stood, the commonality of the various experiences of loss was publicly acknowledged. Others joined the mourners on the path. For it was understood that economic reverses, personal illness, relocation, and the illness of someone close required attention similar to that given to mourners. As it says in the Talmud: "Who are they who circle to the left? A mourner, an excommunicant, one who has someone sick at home, and one concerned about a lost object" (Minor Tractate of Talmud: Semahot).

The existence of the Mourner's Path confirmed that it is acceptable for those facing significant loss to be out of step with others and affirmed their status as a normal part of community life. Having their experience mirrored in this holy place kept mourners from feeling invisible, unsupported, or ashamed.

Today, we do not have such places. We no longer live in small communities which share our sorrow. More often than not, we attend funerals out of state and then hurry home to a transitory community where few people share our grief. When no one around us carries the stories and memories that mirror our loss and bring us comfort, our pain becomes even more invisible. Moreover, in our society death is often seen as a failure of the medical community, something abnormal and inappropriate. The bereaved are not encouraged to take time out to walk the Mourner's Path. Having a strong reaction to a death, one which prevents the mourner from bouncing back into the normal stream of living, is seen as evidence of maladjustment, requiring the help of psychiatrists or social workers. HaMa-kom is hard to find.

How, then, do we reclaim the Mourner's Path for the Jewish community and remove the negative connotations associated with this universal life experience?

After returning to Los Angeles at the end of shivah, I continued to wear the cut black ribbon given to me at the funeral. It was the only visible sign of the profound change in my life. This practice has roots in the Jewish tradition of keriah, in which a person rips his or her garment upon hearing the news of the death of someone he or she will mourn. As it says in the Shulchan Aruch: "...all garments must be rent opposite the heart...for the mourner has to expose the heart." (Kitzur Shulchan Aruch: 195:3-4)

After the completion of Sheloshim, the first month of mourning, I was reluctant to remove the ribbon, not wanting to hide my heart. I appreciated the compassionate nods of recognition I had received from those who understood the significance of my little ribbon. Their silent deference, their awareness of my status as a mourner continued to provide reassurance, help me stay connected to my feelings, and focus on my griefwork. I felt acknowledged as one walking an ancient and venerable path. Gone was the shame and embarrassment I had felt twenty years earlier.

Rather than surrender my ribbon, I decided to embrace it and reclaim the visibility of mourning. I began handing out colored ribbons to signify the varying statuses of those who walk the mourner's path: black ribbons for those in the first year of mourning; green ribbons for those observing a yahrzeit or another significant date connected to the loss; blue ribbons for those in the midst of other major life changes such as divorce, ending a relationship, relocation, change of job, illness, or becoming a caretaker for someone else who is ill; and purple ribbons for those whose lives have been transformed by the journey of mourning.

Wearing these visible marks of mourning helps guide the process of healing. Some people will bring comfort through gently acknowledging the significance of the ribbon. Others may ask the ribbon's meaning and give the mourner a chance to tell his or her story. All of these responses give the bereaved validation and solace.

Ironically, being marked as different makes it easier for the mourner to return to the mundane tasks of everyday living. Visible ribbons give mourners relief from the incongruity they feel when their inner experience of grief is masked by the persona they feel obliged to present to a community that is unaware of their loss. Without the burden of covering up their sense of brokenness, mourners are able to attend to their deeper emotional and spiritual needs.

After a while, people begin playing with the ribbons. They weave them into their jewelry, wrap them around their buttons, and finger them as comforting talismans. In those actions the experience of mourning begins to change. It shifts from a static state to an active, creative process—a kind of dance.

Indeed, mourning is a dance. It is a dance that has been choreographed over the millennia by everyone who has passed through the Mourner's Path. By making loss and bereavement visible, we can fulfill the psalmist's promise: to turn mourning into dancing.

זכרונם לברכה

In this solemn hour, O God, when each of us remembers his beloved ones, we remember also, as a Congregation in Israel, those deceased members who served Beth Sholom as President or as members of the Board of Directors in loyalty and devotion.

We recall in gratitude their good and generous deeds that made our Congregation possible. May the remembrance of their service to Beth Sholom help us to carry on the work they began.

66

In this spirit of love and solemn joy we remember our comrades, who have gone to their eternal home.

Neither shall they learn war any more.”

*Yizkor, Memorial Services, are held on Yom Kippur and on the last day of the Festivals of Sukkot, Passover and Shavuot.

Yizkor, "May God Remember Our Beloved Departed," is a Memorial Service for our beloved Dead, and is a rededication to the spiritual heritage of our forebears.
