Punching above its weight

Austria's Leisure Boat Industry

October 2010 by Jake Kavanagh,
International Boat Industry
www.ibinews.com

The landlocked country's innovative approach and marine manufacturing know-how are helping it ride the downturn.

Austria's contribution to the global marine industry is really quite surprising, and yet the small, landlocked country hasn't a single port to its name. The nearest sea, the Adriatic's Gulf of Venice, is some 80km away across the southern border with Italy. So why is it such a key supplier to the world's shipbuilders, and why is it a producer of such distinctive yachts and motorboats? Austria's economy is largely based on the service sector, but

Punching above its weight. Austria's Leisure Boat Industry

October 2010 by Jake Kavanagh,
International Boat Industry, www.ibinews.com

1st Revision, February 2011

Austria's contribution to the global marine industry is in fact quite surprising! A hallmark of the Austrian marine business is that many of the companies involved are family owned, with long and unbroken histories ("Mittelstand"). Small is beautiful! This applies not only to this landlocked country, but to its manufacturing sector too!

Austria's lakes and the river Danube attract millions of visitors every year. However, due to the tight restrictions on the use of marine combustion engines, which are banned altogether in many areas, electric boating and sailing have become very popular.

AMEM is happy to publish a small directory on Austrian small ship, yacht and boat builders as well as suppliers of allied marine equipment well ahead of the Austrian Boat Show in Tulln, approximately 60km West of Vienna, 3 – 6 of March 2011.
