FOREWORD

As the Cabinet Member for Culture, Leisure, Equalities and Communities I am delighted to be able to introduce the programme of events to celebrate this year's Black History Month in Southwark. This month is a wonderful opportunity to celebrate the important cultural contribution the Black community has made, and continues to make, to both the culture of Southwark and our nation. The events are an excellent way to bring communities together and strengthen the social fabric of our amazing, diverse and vibrant borough.

This brochure contains events taking place throughout October across the width and length of the borough. From Borough in the north to Dulwich in the south, events will cater for all ages and provide a wide range of indoor and outdoor activities, held together by the common thread of Black History.

All events are free or low cost; so please get involved, engage and be inspired.

For more information on Black History Month or to download a copy of this brochure, visit www.southwark.gov.uk/BHM2019
A limited number of brochures are available from local libraries.

Equalities and Communities

Interview with author

ALEX WHEATLE

Alex Wheatle is the author of several novels, some of them set in Brixton, where he grew up.

Born in London of Jamaican parents, his first book, Brixton Rock (1999), tells the story of a 16-year old boy of mixed race in 1980s Brixton. Brixton Rock was adapted for the stage and performed at the Young Vic in 2010. Its sequel, Brenton Brown, was published in 2011.

His second novel, East of Acre Lane (2001), has a similar setting, and won a London Arts Board New Writers Award. A prequel, Island Songs, set in Jamaica, was published in 2005, and a sequel, Dirty South, in 2008 and this year he was awarded an MBE for services to literature.

In 2010, he wrote and toured the one-man autobiographical performance, Uprising. His play, Shame and Scandal, had its debut at the Albany Theatre, Deptford in October 2015. In 2016 Alex won the Guardian children's fiction prize with his book Crongton Knights.

BHM in the UK started in 1987. As you were born in 1963 it would not have been an influence on you as a child. Are you able to comment on what a difference it might have made to you growing up if it had been in existence then?

Alex: I was brought up in a harsh children's home and at times racist attitudes were prevalent. So any representation of positive Black role models for me would have been greatly beneficial. I was raised to believe that Black people were inferior.

I would have definitely valued myself higher and been more confident in my Black skin if there was anything in my world that showed Black people in a positive light.

Why did you choose to write for young people 11 years and above?

Alex: It's not easy as a UK Black man gaining a foothold in the adult literature world. In terms of profile, reviews, and recognition it can be extremely difficult. In 14 years writing adult fiction, I only received an invitation to a major literary festival once. I've always written about young people. You can change the thinking and mind-set of teenagers, with challenging narratives, more easily than with adults.

In what way do you think your early life experience at Shirley Oaks Children's Home has influenced your writing?

Alex: My experience of Shirley Oaks is the major influence on all of my work. It taught me empathy. It taught me that there is a class below working class. And that class deserves its place in literature and a platform. Often this class is forgotten but I never will forget.

The theme of Black History Month 2019 is 'A legacy of strength, a future of hope'. Is there a historic figure that embodies this for you?

Alex: Reggae music transformed me, and my sense of value, so I have to go back to the legendary Bob Marley. His lyrics moved me immensely; shook my whole foundation. There were other reggae artists too that I must mention; Dennis Brown, Gregory Isaacs, Sugar Minott, Jimmy Cliff and Johnny Osbourne. Reggae music made me believe I could contribute.

Over the years you have worked at several libraries - what do they mean for you?

Alex: Any progressive country that cares for its residents should have libraries in all its regions, especially the poorer communities. It's a space where you can learn at any age and not have to pay a penny. It's a space that was crucial for my own reading and writing development. The closure of libraries distresses me because it's one of the most valuable resources in our communities.

What is next on your writing journey?

Alex: I'm working on a slave rebellion story based on a real historical incident that is set in Jamaica. All I can say is that while writing it I found myself weeping.

Alex will be talking about his life experience and writing at a Meet the Author event on Wednesday 16 October at Dulwich Library. See listings for booking information.
