THE SUN WILL SHINE TO-MORROW

You'll find no help in sighing, When skies are overcast; Sighing makes the heart more drear And shadows longer last.

A REBEL'S HEAD.

This is not really my own story—it is my grandfather's. Still, since it is all in the family, I may as well tell it; and, besides, it has special interest now, when so many people in this land are looking and longing across the Pacific to where our flag floats over Manila Bay.

In the year 1842 my grandfather, a young man of 20, shipped as common sailor on the three-masted ship Polly Ann of New Bedford, bound from New York to the Philippines with a cargo of flour.

During the ship's stay there grandfather, who was of an investigating disposition, looked over the city pretty well, and believing there were chances for a wide-awake Yankee to make a fortune in the islands, he quitted the ship and took service with a trading firm on the harbor front.

As his business grew he was unable to manage all the details of the increasing trade, and so called to his help a young Filipino named Juan Aguado, a bright young man, half Spanish, half Malay, who had formerly been an assistant in the packing house.

Aguado was absolutely fearless—that was where his Malay blood showed out, grandfather would remark; when he himself had occasion to refer to the story. They were out hunting one day in a jungle, some 10 or 15 miles away from the city, when they were charged by a maddened buffalo that dashed out of a water hole upon them.

From that time on the two men were like brothers. Juan seemed glad that he had had an opportunity to show his regard for his employer and benefactor, and grandfather was too much of a man to be anything but generous to one who had saved his life.

But it was about the end of their comradeship. One day a native from up country called at the warehouse for Aguado. They retired to a distant part of the building and talked long and quietly together.

That night, when it came time for closing, Aguado said: "Senior, I must leave you—I am wanted at home, and it will be useless to try to detain you."

Two years passed and not a word came from Aguado; but that was not very strange, for the province where he lived had been in open revolt for some time, and as the fighting on both sides was constant and relentless, communication with Manila was practically cut off.

However, as time went on the rebellion was crushed, and the insurgents were scattered or captured. The leader of the revolution, one Luis Berceo, was a man of considerable generalship and resources, for without munitions or money he had held his ground against the Spaniards for a long time, and had intrigued successfully among the native troops sent to oppose him.

Then it was that the Government resorted to an expedient often tried in Spanish countries for catching those who will not surrender—a price was set on Luis Berceo's head. Placards were posted in Manila and throughout the islands wherever Spanish authority was recognized, proclaiming a reward of 40,000 Mexican dollars to the one who would bring the head of the insurgent leader to the authorities.

My grandfather had frequently seen these announcements, and wondered what sort of a man it was who caused the captain-general so much annoyance. Both the captain-general and himself were soon to know.

One afternoon the captain-general sat alone in his office. It was in a complacent mood, for certain documents before him related to the disposition of the surrendered insurgent bands who had been harassing his chosen province for the last two years.

A bee's wings are said to beat the air at the rate of 100 strokes per second, and to propel the bug a distance of thirty miles in an hour.

MY FATE.

The moon looked over the hill, Coldly dispassionate; And the dreamy daffodil Bow'd by the silent rill.

The moon looked into your eyes, Neither with love nor hate, And I waited to hear your sighs. In tender or worldly wise, As a dying man might wait.

When I found my fate.

THE MISSING MILLAIS

A dull London afternoon was fading away into a murky twilight. One by one the lamps lit up in the streets, and the gloom gathered in the garret in which Jack Chatteris sat painting.

He laughed rather bitterly and strode across to the window to look out upon the chimney-pots of Camden Town.

He remembered how on his sixth birthday he had turned this canvas around to the light, revealing the face of a beautiful woman wonderfully painted by a master hand.

Then came a memory of a glimpse through a half-opened door as he lay in bed, sick and dazed from the blow.

Jack rose and strode over to a pile of old sketches that lay against the wall.

One of these he selected without hesitation, and, taking his palette knife, scraped carefully.

There was a picture below the rough landscape.

Stimulated by this discovery, Jack went eagerly to work, and in the course of a few hours he removed the upper painting entirely.

He gazed long and lovingly at the face. He knew by its likeness to himself that this was his mother, this beautiful woman.

Hastily wrapping up the picture, he carried it off to Mr. Broadbean, to seek his advice as to the completion of its cleaning.

Mr. Broadbean was in his shop. He greeted Jack with a friendly nod.

"I want you to look at a picture for me, Mr. Broadbean."

"Chuck up!" replied Mr. Broadbean, affably.

Jack cut the string and threw back the paper.

"It's the missing Millais!" ejaculated Mr. Broadbean, starting back.

"Excuse me," replied Jack, politely; "it is a Millais."

"Why, I've been on the lookout for that picture these twenty years! So has every picture dealer in England," answered Mr. Broadbean.

"William Chatteris, landscape painter."

Mr. Broadbean raised his glasses with a sinking hand. He looked at the picture, then at Jack.

"A wonderful likeness," he murmured. "You say that your father was William Chatteris, the landscape painter?"

"Yes."

"Is your mother still alive?"

"She died when I was a baby."

"Are you certain that this is her portrait?"

"Quite."

Mr. Broadbean leaned his face in his hands for some seconds; then he spoke.

"See here, Mr. Chatteris," he said, "I do not wish to pry into any of your family affairs, but I will tell you the history of this portrait. It was painted thirty years ago by Millais. The lady is the duchess of Wessex, and is still—"

"Alive?" gasped Jack.

"Yes; still alive. The duke of Wessex, it is said, was an exceedingly eccentric and jealous man, and the marriage was an unhappy one."

After a violent quarrel he disappeared, together with his infant son and his portrait of his wife. The police have had the case in hand for years, and every picture dealer in the world has been told to look out for the missing Millais, as it is called in the profession.

If that lady is your mother she will probably call on me in ten minutes to look at that there Constable. If you are her son I hope your grace will break it to her as gently as possible that you are the duke of Wessex."

"Hold on, Mr. Chatteris, for heaven's sake! Here she is!"

An elderly lady was descending from a carriage which had just drawn up at the door.

Jack stood rooted to the ground. She was a beautiful lady, with the eyes of the picture and wonderful white curls.

An obsequious footman flung open the door of the shop.

Mr. Broadbean stealthily slipped over to the door and held it. Then he let fall the blind, much to the footman's annoyance, and slipped off on his knees into the cellar, where he commenced to tear up a ten-guinea proof engraving into small pieces—just to ease his feelings, as he afterward said.

The old lady advanced toward Jack. She did not see the picture, but saw Jack.

"My boy!"

"Mother!"

Mr. Broadbean, down in the cellar heard the cry and promptly punched his fist through the empty of a doubtful Rubens.

Otherwise, he declared, he would have died of heart failure.

No one was more surprised than Sir John Silvertown, who, by the way, has never paid Jack for his portrait of the duchess of Wessex, which, again by the way, was rejected at the academy.

Just why the 14th of February should be set apart upon the calendar in perpetuation of the memory of the worthy saint and the growth of the pretty sentimental customs which have come to characterize it are alike enveloped in a certain amount of uncertainty.

Very little of the real history of St. Valentine is known, except that he was a bishop of Rome in the early part of the third century, and received the crown of martyrdom in 270.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From Our Regular Correspondent

Washington, Feb. 6, 1899.

If the Senators who aided Senator Gorman in his fight against Mr. Bryan's leadership of the Democratic party to the extent of voting with him against the ratification of the treaty of peace could see themselves as others see them, they would hang their heads for shame.

The War Investigating Commission has completed its report, which will be handed to President McKinley this week. It is expected that the President will very shortly make the report public, and that, as a result of a portion of it, a military inquiry will be ordered of the charges made by General Miles concerning the quality of the beef furnished the army by the contractors during the war with Spain.

Now that the treaty is out of the way, the Senate Committee on Military Affairs will endeavor to push the Hull army bill, recently passed by the House, to the front, and keep it there until passed.

Governor Shaw, of Iowa, who passed through Washington on his way home, from a visit to New York, was impressed by the Iowa Republican Association, and persuaded into an informal talk on public affairs.

When the House adopts the resolution reported from the Judiciary Committee, declaring that the four representatives who accepted commissions in the army thereby vacated their seats in Congress, as it will, it will merely put on official record what has been practically accepted by the four gentlemen most directly concerned.

The outlook for Nicaragua canal legislation at this session was brightened considerably when the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce made the amended Hepburn bill a substitute for the Morgan bill, which has been passed by the Senate, instead of reporting it as an entirely separate bill.

Representative-elect Long, of Kansas, who will succeed Jerry Simpson, and who is now in Washington, said of his State: "Kansas is now back in the Republican column, and though I am not an aspirant for prophetic honors, I am free to state that it will remain there. The people have had their fill of Populist heresy. In our banks there is more money in proportion to population than in any other State in the Union."

SOCIAL STUDENTS.

They Hold an Interesting Session at the Home of Dr. Stryker.

The fifteenth meeting of the Social Students was held at the residence of Dr. Stryker, Asbury Park, on Monday evening. Despite the severe storm of snow and wind, there were nearly twenty present, of whom half were from Ocean Grove.

After music and reading the minutes, the regular program was taken up. Mrs. E. Henrietta Reid recited an original poem, entitled "What Woman Loves," in which it appeared that she loves her own way; but, on second thought, loves to serve others, and thus secure love in return—a good pattern for theologians.

Miss Kelso read "The Domestic Strike," where a striker's wife struck, locked the pantry and showed him the strike problem from the other side of the fence.

Mrs. Bird read the "Banner," giving the editorial in a clever Irish vein, representing herself as a "French lady from Cor-rik."

The question box occupied a large share of the time. As to the authorship of the "Mother Goose Melodies," Mrs. Stryker said there was a real woman named Mrs. Goose (her husband, therefore, was to be blamed for the name), who lived in Boston, and whose tombstone Mrs. Stryker had seen.

Some weeks ago the question, "What is Man's Highest and Noblest Faculty?" was referred to Mrs. Bird. She answered, "Love," and gave various quotations. But Dr. Gill said that the power to reason, or, briefly, intelligence, is the highest faculty.

As to what knowledges survive the death of the body, Dr. Bird said that all knowledges do, but that not all knowledges survive eternally, since those that are not used will be forgotten, as on earth. We wake up over there, the same individuals that we are when we go to sleep here.

Dr. Gill, answering as to higher criticism, said the earliest criticism of Bible manuscript dealt with the text only, covering the spelling, punctuation, accept, etc. Later scholars began to consider the questions of authorship and authenticity, interpolations and omissions. This was higher criticism, because more important.

At the next meeting a discussion will take place on the desirability of legislation against loaning money at interest. E. C. Wyckoff defending present arrangements and Dr. Gill advocating such a law.

Mrs. E. Henrietta Reid will edit the "Banner."

There is never any lack of material at these meetings, but always lack of time to consider what material there is. The membership is now over forty.

The next meeting will be held at the Alhambra, 400 Sewall avenue, Asbury Park, Monday evening, February 13th, at 7:30. All are invited.
