

Contemporary Researches in Hindu Philosophy & Religion

1. Idealistic Thought in Indian Philosophy : Rise and growth from the Vedic Times to the Kevalādvaita Vedānta up to Prakāśānanda of 16th century, including as propounded in the Mahāyāna Buddhism; by Shuchita C. Divatia (ISBN 81-246-0021-X)
2. Karma and Reincarnation: The Vedāntic Perspective; by Muni Narayana Prasad (ISBN 81-246-0022-8)
3. Stonemill and Bhakti : From the Devotion of Peasant Women to the Philosophy of Swamies; by Guy Poitevin and Hema Rairkar (ISBN 81-246-0059-7)
5. Advaita : A Conceptual Analysis; by A. Ramamurty (ISBN 81-246-0067-8)
6. Mind-Body Dualism : A Philosophic Investigation; by Alpana Chakraborty (ISBN 81-246-0071-6)
7. Hinduism and Modern Science; by T.R.R. Iyengar (ISBN 81-246-0077-5)

Contemporary Researches in Hindu Philosophy & Religion; no. 4

Śaivism

Some Glimpses

G.V. Tagare

D.K. Printworld (P) Ltd.

NEW DELHI-110015

Cataloging in Publication Data — DK

Tagare, G.V. (Ganesh Vasudeo), 1911-
Śaivism.

(Contemporary researches in Hindu philosophy & religion; no. 4).

Includes bibliographical references (p.).

Includes index.

1. Śaivism. 2. Hindu sects. 3. Philosophy, Hindu.
I. Title. II. Series : Contemporary researches in Hindu philosophy & religion; no. 4.

ISBN 81-246-0076-7

First Published in India in 1996

© Author

No reproduction or translation of this book or part thereof in any form, except brief quotations, should be made without the written permission of the Author and Publishers.

Published and printed by:

D.K. Printworld (P) Ltd.

Regd. office : 'Sri Kunj', F-52, Bali Nagar
New Delhi - 110 015

Phone : (011) 546-6019; Fax : (011) 546-5926

Preface

ŚAIVISM is an ancient Indian religion in the broad sense of the term. It has millions of followers in all strata of the society all over India from Kedārnāth in the Himālayas down to Rāmeśvara in the south and from Paśupateśvara in Nepal to Somanāth on the western coast of the Arabian Sea.

It existed before the Indus (Sarasvatī?) civilization. The series of Śiva's names in the 'Rudrādhyāya' of the Taittirīya Samhitā (IV.5.7) and 'Śata-Rudriya', in the Vājasaneyī Samhitā (Ch. 16, 18) show that Śiva-worship is as old as the Yajurveda. Lord Kṛṣṇa's initiation in Paśupatism mentioned in the Anusāsana Parva (14.379-380) of the Mahābhārata shows that it was a respectable sect of Śaivism in the fourth millennium BC, if the consensus of Brāhmanical Purānas on the date of Kṛṣṇa's death in 3101 BC (the very day on which Kaliyuga began) is to be believed. This ancient religion is still a living faith is shown in Günther-Dietz Sontheimer's Pastoral Deities in Western India. It is perhaps the only faith that continues to be so vibrant and popular that it continues to attract millions of pilgrims to the various sites sacred to Lord Śiva.

Śaivism is more than mere theology. It is a philosophy that keenly attracted the attention of ancient and modern sages and thinkers. With faith in Śiva as the Ultimate Reality, these sages pondered and meditated over Śiva deeply and expressed their speculations about the nature of Śiva (the Ultimate Reality). His relations with man and the world. Some glimpses about Śiva and His relations with man and world flashed before their "inward eye". These were recorded by them or by their disciples and we have a rich vista of Śaivism. Its philosophies, mythology rituals, etc.

It is neither possible nor necessary for a layman to enter into the intricate subtleties of the various doctrines promulgated by them. I propose to elucidate the main features of the following prominent schools of Śaivism:

- (1) Pāśupatism;
- (2) Kaśmīr Śaivism;
- (3) Siddhānta Śaivism;
- (4) Śivādvaita; and
- (5) Vīra-Śaivism.

These schools are meant for decent people. They advise worship, japa (repetition of mantra in undertone), and yoga for the realization of Śiva and do not advise black-magic, reprehensible types of worship like the Pañca Makāra Pūjā (involving intake of wine, meat, sexual intercourse and the like). Those are Vāmācāra (left-handed) types of Śaiva sects. (As an instance see Kāpālikas pp. 132-35).

Curiously enough, the main tenets or broad features of these Śaiva (right-handed) schools are similar to those of some schools of Vaiṣṇavism. Thus the Monism of Kaśmīr Śaivism is similar to that of the advaita of Śaṅkara with the exception of the special type of his Māyāvāda. Siddhānta Śaivism, which is dominant in Tamil Nadu shares a number concepts of Duality (dvaita) with those of Madhva, the promulgator of Vaiṣṇava Dualism. Śrīkaṅṭha's Śivādvaita is akin to Rāmānuja's Viśiṣṭādvaita.

Not that these ācāryas borrowed from the other Śaiva or Vaiṣṇava ācāryas. That is totally against Indian (not merely Brāhmaṇical) tradition. In telling the Rāma story, a Śvetāmbara Jain author never borrows or mentions a Digambara Jain predecessor. The similarity in the philosophical speculations of Śaiva and Vaiṣṇava ācārayas shows that great minds think alike. Call the ultimate Reality Śiva or Viṣṇu, thinkers thought in similar patterns called Monism, Dualism, etc. The spirit of syncretism so warmly espoused in Purāṇas, has expressed itself iconographically.

It is hoped that the wisdom of the old will prevail and may lead to social integration.

Śiva is the fountain-head of all arts according to Purāṇas like the Vāyu or Brahmāṇḍa. A peep through modern Art critics like A. Coomaraswami, Stella Kramaris, H. Zimmer will convince anyone in the matter.

After deeply pondering over the problem, I believe that Śaivism has relevance in the present world of cut-throat competition and tremendous nerve-racking tensions. If one spares some time for upāsanā [worship, prayer meditation or some sort of communion with some spiritual entity, (call it Śiva, Viṣṇu, Śakti, etc.)] one can gain some peace of mind, and poise and successfully cope with one's job, however intricate or difficult it may be. 'Have faith in me and do your duty conscientiously' — this message of Karma-Bhakti Samuccaya shows the relevance of Śaivism to the present age.

I sincerely thank Shri Susheel K. Mittal, Director of the D.K. Printworld, New Delhi, for his kind encouragement and forbearance shown to this aged author. This beautiful production of this book is due to him and his associates.

I also thank the artist for the sublime presentation of Lord Śiva. Lastly, I thank the Librarian of Shivaji University, Kolhapur, for providing me the references promptly.

Hope this last bilva leaf will please the gracious Lord Śiva to whom this work is dedicated.

Contents

Preface	v
Abbreviations	xi
Introduction	1
1. Some Fundamental Concepts	9
2. Pāśupatism (Dvaitādvaitism)	31
3. Kaśmir Śaivism	41
4. Siddhānta Śaivism	59
5. Śivādvaita (Śaiva Viśiṣṭādvaita of Śrikanṭha)	85
6. Vira-Śaivism	101
7. Epilogue	127
Glossary	139
Bibliography	151
Index	157

Abbreviations

- BG* — Bhagavadgītā
BMB — Brahma-Mīmāṃsā-Bhāṣya
BrS — Brahma Sūtra
ChāUp — Chāndogya Upanṣad
KŚ — Kāśmīr Śaivism
Mbh — Mahābhārata
Pās — Pāśupata
PP — Periya Purāna
RV — R̥gveda
ŚA — Śivādvaita
Sam — Samhitā
ŚB — Śrikara Bhāṣya
SP — Sambandhara Purāna
SŚ — Siddhānta Śaivism
SŚn — Siddhānta Śikkāmaṇi
ŚV — Śakti-Viśiṣṭādvaita
ŚvUp — Śvetāśvatara Upaniṣad
TaittSam — Taittirīya Samhitā
TaittĀr — Taittirīya Āraṇyaka
TaittUp — Taittirīya Upaniṣad
TD — Tattvārtha Dīpikā

TP — Tattvārtha Prakāśa

TM — Tirumandiram

VāiSam — Vājasaneyi Samhitā

VŚ — Vira-śaivism

Introduction

What is Śaivism

ŚAIVISM is a school of Indian Philosophy which believes that there is some ultimate principle — para tattva : at the basis of the universe, which, within itself, creates, sustains and withdraws within itself (annihilates) the universe. It believes : that principle is both immanent and transcendent to the universe. For the sake of the convenience of linguistic expression, it is called “Śiva” (the Auspicious). Hence the school came to be designated as Śaiva (Śaivism).

The school speculates about the nature of Reality called Śiva (or pati in the jargon of Śaivites), its relation with the Individual Soul (jīvātman or paśu in Śaivite jargon) and with the world at large and among themselves. When you designate this ultimate Principle as Viṣṇu (the pervader of the universe), it is Vaiṣṇavism. It is, however, interesting to note that the speculations of both these — isms about the nature of the Reality or the Ultimate Principle, the individual soul and the world, run in certain similar thought-patterns. Broadly speaking, the school or thought pattern which believes that the Ultimate Reality and the Individual Soul are one (or equal) may be called Monists or Advaitins or Īśvarādvaya-Vādins (holding non-difference between God and man).

This is a very broad statement as there are several differences between both these schools. For the sake of brevity and simplicity we shall mention Īśvarādvaya-Vāda as Kashmir Śaivism (KŚ). When God, individual souls and objects in the world are regarded as different mutually and inter se, that school is called dvaitin or Dualist. Madhva was the exponent of Vaiṣṇava Dualism. The Śaiva Dualists are known as Śaiva Siddhāntins and their school, Siddhānta Śaivism (SŚ). Though this school originated in Kashmir and was dominant up to AD 800, it shifted to Madhya Pradesh in the tenth century AD. King Bhoja of Dhar (AD 1018-60), a patron of this school, has contributed to its philosophy. At present Tamil Nadu is its stronghold. The credit of establishing it here goes to Śaiva Tamil Saints and authors like Aghora-Śiva (AD 1200).

There is a third thought-pattern about the relation between God, Man and the world. It believes that the individual soul (a conscious entity, cit) has a sort of qualified identity with God (be he Śiva or Viṣṇu) and the world (unconscious — a-cit) has a qualified relation with God. A sort of identity — “qualified non-duality” is posited between God, Man and the world. Hence it came to be known as Viśiṣṭādvaita. Rāmānuja is the Vaiṣṇava exponent while the Śaiva promulgator of this doctrine is Śrīkaṇṭha. Another very powerful group of this type is Viraśaivism who advocate *Śakti-Viśiṣṭādvaita*s.

Though these Śaiva and Vaiṣṇava schools are broadly clubbed together as Monists, Dualists etc., there are very important differences in Śaiva and Vaiṣṇava schools. We shall consider here the most important Śaiva schools viz:

- (1) Kashmir Śaivism (KŚ)
- (2) Siddhānta Śaivism (SŚ)
- (3) Śivādvaita or Śrīkaṇṭha's schools (ŚA)
- (4) Śakti-Viśiṣṭādvaita (ŚV) or Vira-Śaivism

These are originally based on Śaiva Āgamas.

There is a Vedic School of Śaivism called Pāśupatism. Though it shares the fundamental concepts of Śaivism along with others, it is treated separately as it is non-Āgamic.

Cultural Contribution of Śaivism

Śaivism is not a dry philosophy. Its cultural contribution is a superb fusion of Art and Philosophy. Kroeber and Kluckhohn have recorded more than one hundred and sixty formal definitions of culture in *Culture: A Critical Review of the Concepts and Definitions*¹. But instead of going into the complexities of those definitions, I would like to adopt an earlier definition by Sir E.B. Tylore² who describes culture as “that complex whole which includes knowledge, belief, art, morals, laws, customs and other capabilities, acquired by man as a member of the society”. Literature or literary aspect of Śaivism, the glory and legends of Lord Śiva sung in epics, (*Mahākāvya*s), Purānas, dramas, stotras (eulogies and prayers) is already familiar to all and are adequately appreciated by literary critics. I would like to present just a glimpse of the Art-aspect of Śaivism.

Śaiva Art is not flippant. It is pregnant with Vedānta, Bhakti with its intensely appealing lyricism and such other serious concepts. But they are presented in such an attractive form as conveys its message to a common man without his being aware of it.

Let me take up the art of dancing. In the bronzes of the Cola period of the tenth century AD or those of Tanjore of the twelfth century AD, Indian artists have conceived of the cosmic rhythm in the most imaginative and symbolic manner in the icon of Dancing Śiva (Natarāja). Śiva is traditionally regarded as the Lord of Dancing. The eternal rhythm of evolution (sr̥ṣṭi) and destruction (pralaya) of the universe is exquisitely expressed. Ananda Coomaraswamy explains the famous image of Natarāja: “The upper hand of the God holds a damaru to symbolize the primal musical Nāda of creation. The mystic experience of a Tibetan Lama noted by Mrs. Alexandra David in her Tibetan Journey is interesting. The Lama told her :

All things are aggregate of atoms — each atom perpetually sings its song and the sound at every moment creates dense and subtle form.

A. Coomaraswamy continues (about Natarāja):

The upper left hand bears a tongue of a flame, fire, the element of destruction. The balance of these two hands, represents the dynamic balance of creation and destruction.

It is further accentuated by Śiva's calm and detached face in the centre of those two hands in which the polarity of creation and destruction is dissolved and transcended.

The second right hand is raised to express (abhaya mudrā — the gesture “do not fear”). It symbolizes maintenance and protection of the universe and peace. The remaining hand points down to the uplifted foot. It symbolizes release from the illusion of māyā. Śiva is shown as dancing on the body of a demon — the symbol of man's ignorance. It must be annihilated before the attainment of mokṣa (Liberation from Samsāra — Dance of Śiva).

Another eminent art critic, Heinrich Zimmer says about Dancing Śiva,

His gestures wild and full of grace, precipitate the cosmic illusion. His flying arms and legs and the swaying of his torso produce — indeed they are — the continuous creation, destruction of the universe, death exactly balancing birth, the annihilation, the end of everything coming forth.³

A.L. Basham calls it “the greatest and most triumphant achievement of bronze casting”.⁴

This cosmic dance of Śiva, in a way, represents the scientific reality in sub-atomic world as discovered by Modern Physics. Dr. Fritjof Capra who had been doing research in theoretical high energy Physics in the universities of Paris, California and Stanford has contributed many papers about the relation between modern Physics and Oriental mysticism. His book, *The Tao of Physics*⁵ is an exploration of the parallels between Modern Physics and Eastern Mysticism. Capra says, “For the Modern Physicist, then Shiva’s dance is the dance of sub-atomic matter. . . The bubble-chamber photographs of interacting particles, which bear testimony to the continual rhythm of creation and destruction in the universe, are visual images of the dance of Shiva equalling those of Indian artists in beauty and significance”. (p. 259)

The metaphor ‘cosmic dance’ thus unifies ancient mythology, religious arts and modern Physics. It is indeed, as Coomaraswamy says, “Poetry but non-the-less-science”.

The cultural influence of Śaivism is not limited to performing arts but extends to architecture and sculpture, but I have taken up this image of Dancing Śiva at first as Dr. Kapila Vatsyayana says, “Over a period of 2000 years, the image of Dancing Śiva has fascinated, the poet, the sculptor, the painter, the musician, while Indian drama and poetry, sculpture and painting have immortalised these eternal myths, it is Indian performing arts which have provided a living link into contemporary times”.

It is not merely the icon of Śiva but we have the use of beautiful female forms, scantily dressed, as a decorative motif. The Indian artist is not averse to sensuous beauty, though he expresses Vedāntic concepts symbolically as in the case of dancing Śiva. The floral embellishment on door-frames and columns in temples is simply superb.

Śiva is associated with music both vocal and instrumental. The Vāyu Purāṇa gives a list of nine musical instruments such as bherī (war-drum), ḍiṇḍima, jharjhara; dundubhi; wind-instruments like venu (flute), gomukha; string instruments like tumbeviṇā (i.e., tānpūrā). Some of these are not mentioned in the Ṛg Veda but Śiva's followers of lower status like bhūtas play on them. Just as many rāgas and rāginīs bearing local or provincial names such as Gurjarī, Karnāṭakī, Bangālī⁶ etc. show their base in local folksongs.

A visit to some ancient temples and prominent museums will convince anyone about the great cultural contribution of Śaivas.

Notes

1. Peabody Museum of American Archaeology and Ethnology, Harvard University Papers XLVII, No. 1, pp. 1-223.
2. Tylore E.B. : Primitive Cultures, New York, 1874.
3. Myths and Symbols in Indian Art and Civilization, Princeton University Press 1972, p. 155.
4. The Wonder that was India, p. 575.
5. Fontana/Collins, 1976.
6. Skanda Purāṇa — Nāgara Khaṇḍa, chs. 254, 27-45.

Curiously enough the position of the main rāgas is located with particular Yogic cakras or Plexuses.

Today's classical Hindu Music is based on or evolved from folk-music and not so much from sāma-gāna.

Śiva is a mahā-naṭa. In the Skanda Purāṇa (VI. 254.28-45) we are told that when Śiva began to dance, six rāgas with their wives (rāginīs) assumed human forms and accompanied Śiva in his dance. The rāgas and their wives (rāginīs) are named as follows:

Name of the Rāga	Name of Corresponding Rāgiṇis
1. Sri	(1) Gaurī, (2) Kalāhali, (3) Dhirā, (4) Drāviḍī, (5) Mālakauśiki, (6) Devagandhā
2. Vasanta	(1) Āndolā, (2) Kauśiki, (3) Carama-Maṅjirī, (4) Gaṇḍagiri, (5) Deva-sākhā, (6) Rāmagirī
3. Pañcama	(1) Trigunā, (2) Stambhatīrthā, (3) Ahirī, (4) Kumkumā, (5) Vairāṭī, (6) Sāmavedī
4. Bhairava	(1) Bhairavī, (2) Gurjarī, (3) Bhāṣā, (4) Velāṅguli, (5) Karṇāṭakī, (6) Rakta-hamsā
5. Megha (Malhāra)	(1) Bangāli, (2) Madhurā, (3) Kāmodā, (4) Akṣinārikā, (5) Devagirā, (6) Devāti
6. Naṭa-Nārāyaṇa	(1) Troṭakī, (2) Modakī, (3) Narā, (4) Dumbī, (5) Malhārī, (6) Sindhu-Malhārī

The names of provinces like Gurjara, Karnataka etc. show that they were developed out of local folk-music.

The Positions of Rāgas in Yogacakras

Name of the Cakra	Name of the Rāga
1. Bhrū-madhya	Śrī
2. Mūlādhāra	Vasanta
3. Viśuddhi	Pañcama
4. Anāhata	Bhairava
5. Maṇipūra	Megha
6. Ādhāra	Naṭa-Nārāyaṇa

Though the Purāna is not a work on musicology, it is enough to show the belief of Śiva being the progenitor of vocal music.

Some Fundamental Concepts

ŚAIVISM whether Vedic or Āgamic, shares some common fundamental concepts and technical terms. They are pati, paśu and pāśa. These terms have been used by the ancient-most Śaiva sect called Pāśupatism or Pāśupata-mata. The founder of this sect is “La (Na)-kuliśa”. He was regarded as the twenty-eighth incarnation of Śiva (Śiva Purāna : Vāyaviya Samhitā 2.9.5, Kūrma Purāna, I.53). His historicity has been established inscriptionally. His work — The Pāśupata Sūtra (Pāś. S) has come down to us with an excellent commentary by Kaṇḍinya (circa fifth century AD).

Pati* in Pāśupatism

According to Pāśupatas and other Śaiva sects, pati is Śiva (The Auspicious). The word pati is derived from √pā- ‘to protect’. Śiva creates and protects all beings including god Brahmā. Kaṇḍinya in Pāś. S, 5. defines:

Śiva is designated as Pati, as He creates and protects Paśus (beings).¹ He is one, eternal. It is due to His Grace (anugraha) that beings can attain Mokṣa (release from Samsāra). One cannot achieve Mokṣa on the strength of one’s individual knowledge or renunciation.²

This is obviously an echo of the Kaṭha Upaniṣad (Kaṭha Up.) which declares that realization of the Self (ātman) depends solely on His Grace.³ Śiva is the material and instrumental cause of the universe.

Pati in KŚ

There is another school of Śaivism, based on ancient Śaiva Āgamas. Its founder, Vasugupta (circa AD 825) belonged to Kaśmir, hence the school is popularly known as Kaśmir Śaivism (KŚ). Its basic text is Śiva Sūtra. It is believed that it was disclosed to Vasugupta by Śiva Himself in his dream. It advocates non-difference between Śiva, individual Soul, and the universe. Hence this doctrine is called Īśvarādvaya-Vāda (for the sake of brevity Kaśmir Śaivism is mentioned as KŚ). According to KŚ Pati is the Supreme Śiva (Para Śiva). He is the ultimate Principle. Its synonyms are: cit, citi, parā saṁvit (Ultimate consciousness or knowledge), Parameśvara (Supreme Ruler). The concept of Para Śiva in KŚ is superior or more comprehensive than that of the sañkarita Brahman.

Para Śiva is beyond name or form. He is both immanent and transcendent to the universe. The universe is Pati's manifestation within Himself. He is endowed with prakāśa (Supreme Knowledge) and vimarsā (power to create, to sustain, to destroy anything by sheer will-power, without the help or assistance of any outside agency like māyā, avidyā and the like) KŚ argues that if Pati be presumed as being without this vimarsā power. He would be jaḍa (inert) like a stone or a clod of earth.⁴

The Dualists' View

The other important but Dualistic school is Siddhānta Śaivism (SŚ). It appears that it originated in Kaśmir and was older and more popular than the school of Vasugupta. Vasugupta's followers had to popularise their sect by claiming Śiva as the real author of the Śiva Sūtra and Vasugupta was only a medium to propagate Śiva's philosophy.⁵

The eldest extant author of this Dualistic school is Sadyojyoti (c. ninth century AD). In his Kārikās he accepts Pati, Paśu and Pāśa as fundamental concepts. For example, in the first verse of the Tattva-traya-nirṇaya, he pays obeisance to Śiva calling Him Pati who is independent, beginningless, granter of fruits of karmans to all beings impartially.⁶ At the same time he confirms the co-status of the individual soul (puruṣa) with Śiva.⁷

This school is now very popular in Tamil Nadu and not in Kaśmir.

Another famous school of Śaivism of the Viśiṣṭādvaita type is called Śivādvaita. Its famous exponent is Śrīkaṇṭha. Like previous ācāryas of other school he tried to establish his view in his Brahma-mīmāṃsā bhāṣya (BMB) — a commentary on the Brahma Sūtra (Br.S). His commentary takes a stand similar to that of Rāmānuja in Śrībhāṣya though at some places he leans to the Advaita of Śaṅkara.

His acceptance of Br. S. as the authoritative text, forced Śrīkaṇṭha to declare that Śiva and Brahman are synonymous and Śiva's position in KŚ is compromised. According to BMB Śiva is the subtle cause. It is characterised both by Cit (consciousness, knowledge) and acit (jada, non-consciousness). The subtle cit and acit, to quote BMB "The Brahman characterised by subtle Cit and Acit is the cause."⁸ As the Upaniṣadic Brahman and Śiva are identical, Śiva is described as being endowed with infinite suspicious characteristics".⁹

Śrīkaṇṭha repeats the identity of Śiva with Brahman in so many places in BMB.

Another school, very powerful in Karnataka, is 'Vira Śaivism or Śakti-Viśiṣṭādvaita. Its exponent was Śrīpati

Paṇḍit, a brāhmaṇa from Andhra (circa AD 1100). His lucid commentary on the Br. S. is well-known as Śrīkara Bhāṣya. It is amusing to find that both Śrīkaṇṭha and Śrīpati are valiantly trying to show that Āgamic Śaivism has the firm support of the Br. S. though not all Śaivas had a special respect for Br. S. I call Śaṅkara a Vaiṣṇava as his guru-paramparā starts from Viṣṇu as follows:

Viṣṇu Brahmā Nārada Śuka
Gauḍapāda Govind Yati. As Śaṅkara is not a Śaiva, his views are excluded here.

Vīra Śaivism regards this Śiva or Pati as the same as Upaniṣadic Brahman. They assert the equality between the Vedas and Āgamas as Śiva is the author of both these works. They claim that the Br. S. advocates their philosophy viz; Śakti-Viśiṣṭādvaita.

Paśu* (Individual Soul)

All Śaiva sects use the term Paśu for the individual soul. The other synonyms used for Paśu are : aṇu, ātmā, jīva, pudgala, kṣetrajña.

The Liṅga Purāna explains that individual souls from god Brahmā downwards are called Paśus of the God of Devas (Śiva) as they are bound down by Samsāra. As Śiva is their master, He is called Paśupati.¹¹ It is noteworthy that no sect of Śaivism regards jīvātman (individual soul) as the 'creature' of Śiva. Śrīkaṇṭha on Br.S., 2.3.18 (Ātmādhikaraṇa) plainly states :

Individual souls are not created or born.¹²

In other words Śiva and jīvātman are of the same status, though the original powers of jīva are closely circumscribed or limited by malas or pāśas so much so that from the point of powers, jīva is like an atom as compared with Śiva. The term aṇu for jīva is not used in a spatial sense. When the malas are completely washed off or the bonds (pāśas are cut asunder, the jīvātman attains his original Śiva-hood. Consciousness (caitanya) is the common factor between jīva and Śiva.

The term paśu for jīvātman seems to be first adopted by the oldest and Veda-based sect called Pāśupatism. Kaunḍinya in his commentary on the Pāśupata Sūtra (Pāś. S.) quotes from the Pañcārtha-bhāṣya :

With the exception of those who are liberated through Sāṅkhya or are The Masters (experts) in Sāṅkhya-Yoga all beings from god Brahmā are Paśus.¹³

The individual souls are encaged in Puryaṣṭaka (a City consisting of 'eight' viz. five tanmātras (subtle elements) plus the psychical apparatus viz. buddhi (intellect), aḥamkāra (Ego, Sense of I-ness), manas (mind). The other term used by other schools is Linga-Śarīra.

The term Puryaṣṭaka is adopted by Siddhānta Śaivas (SŚ) as is seen from Bhojadeva's explanation in the Tattvārtha Prakāśa (T. Pr.).¹⁴ Bhojadeva and Śivādvaitin Śrīkaṇṭha hold that the individual soul and his cage (Puryaṣṭaka) are transferred to the next birth of the Individual Soul. The size of the body of the previous birth and the next birth may be different (as that of an ant and an elephant), the Puryaṣṭaka occupies the whole body like a lamp filling the whole room with light irrespective of the size of the room.¹⁵

Pāśa* or *Mala

All sects of Śaivism explain that though jīva and Śiva are of equal status and possess the same powers originally, the powers of the jīva are restricted due to the limiting factor called pāśa, bandha, mala, ajñāna, paśutva, tamas or avidyā — all synonyms for Ignorance.¹⁶ There are, however, some slight differences in the implications of each, but they are grouped together as each of these is, as per usage of different Śaiva writers, a limiting factor.

But by 'Ignorance', Śaivas do not mean 'total absence of knowledge' or 'Total ignorance' but only a partial one. They say that the concept of total ignorance will reduce the individual soul whose special characteristic sin-qua-non is caitanya, to the category of a stone or a clod of earth.¹⁷ The problem, however, is that if jīva and Śiva are equal in status, how is it that the jīvātman got 'soiled' with mala (dirt) or got enchained in pāśa at all. No Indian philosopher (believing in God or the Soul) has a satisfactory reply. Śaivas attribute it to the will power of Parama Śiva which drastically restricted the powers of the jīva and made him an atom — an imponderable willfulness of the great Śiva! This consciousness of imperfection creates an innate limitation,¹⁸ in that aṇu (jīva) and is hence called ānava mala (the innate mala of an aṇu or jīva). This mala is beginningless but it ends in the mokṣa stage.

This concept of mala is different from the rāga concept of Sāṅkhyas. They regard rāga as the quality of intelligence (buddhi) which creates attachment.

As noted above, all Śaiva sects believe that Ignorance of a jīva is partial and not total. It is 'slight knowledge' as BMB puts it. This ānava mala makes the jīva believe in the identity of the body and the Soul (dehātmaikya-bhāve). It is only in the mokṣa stage that this mala is washed off completely.

KĀRMA MALA

Kārma mala is confused by some with karma saṁskāra. But saṁskāras are the effects of mental, verbal and physical acts committed by a jīva. Kārma mala, however, is objectless limited will-power of the Soul and its existence depends on the innate ignorance called ānava mala.

In the beginning of the universe, this will-power is objectless. It is due to the will of the Lord that the desire to enjoy objects is generated. This results in an unending series of births and deaths. In other words, as Abhinavagupta, the great philosopher and teacher of KŚ bluntly puts it :

God of devas creates the bondage and it is that God Himself who releases him from the bond.²⁰

ŚŚ MALA

This is regarded as Śiva's 'playfulness'! ŚŚ regards this mala as great bondage (mahā-pāśa). It is not destroyed even in pralaya when the whole universe is annihilated. It sticks to the jīva. Immediately after the recreation of the new universe, this pāśa drags the jīva from one birth to another like a beast.²¹

MĀYĪYA MALA

Māyā is a very complex term in Indian philosophy. Great controversies both oral and written have been recorded in many books in India and the West in modern times. But the concept is still elusive. Kaśmir Śaivas briefly explain it as "the bond that makes jīva to see difference or un-relatedness in himself and other persons and objects (bhinna-vedya-prathā). This causes pleasure, pain, transmigration of the Soul. Siddhānts Śaivas regarded māyā as real, eternal and the material cause of the world.²² As māyā is real, its creation, the world is real. This māyīya mala or pāśa is accepted in one form or the other by other sects of Śaivism.

Mokṣa

Mokṣa or liberation from Samsāra has been the goal of all school of Indian philosophy (except the materialistic school of Br̥haspati). The concepts of mokṣa or nirvāna are slightly different. Limiting ourselves to Śaivism, mokṣa means release from bonds or pāśas. With the grace of Śiva, ultimately āṇava mala disappears and the jīvātman or paśu becomes free. Kāśmir Śaivism regards bandha and mokṣa as mere fiction, as Lord Śiva is present everywhere. The great KŚ Ācārya Somānanda, in his work Śiva-dr̥ṣṭi says : As there is no real bandha, there is no mokṣa to jīvātman. This is obviously an echo of Īśvara-Kṛṣṇa's Sāṅkhya-Kārikā.²³ To quote Somānanda : "As Lord Śiva is ubiquitous everywhere, there is no real existence to Bandha or Mokṣa — As there is no real bondage to the Soul there is no stage called 'release' to him due to the non-existence of Bandha."²⁴ In this stage, jīvātman becomes like Śiva. The Pāśupatas regard mokṣa as an end to miseries (duḥkhānta). Siddhānta Śaivas regard it as "similarity to Śiva (Śiva-Sādr̥śya). When all malas are cleansed, Śiva, out of grace, gives the jīva similarity to Himself. Śrikanṭha, an Ācārya of Viśiṣṭādvaita persuasion, in his BMB opines that even after parity with Śiva, the liberated Soul has not the higher powers of Śiva such as the creation of the universe and the like.²⁶

It is not within the parameters of this work to compare the concept of mokṣa in other systems like the Buddhists or Jains. In passing it may be noted that the concept of mokṣa in Sāṅkarādvaita viz. complete merger of the jīva in the Brahman, is not accepted even in KŚ.

Tattvas (Principles, Categories)

Since ancient times, Man has been trying to understand and decipher the riddle of the universe. Amazed at the vast, unending vista of the world, the seer of the Nāsadiya Sūkta in the Ṛgveda (ṚV, X.129) asks :

Wherefrom has this Cosmogony come?
 Who is the chief architect?
 Does he know about it?²⁷

Dr. R.D. Ranade points out that terms asat in this Sūkta which is generally translated as 'non-being' is not absolute non-existence but the archa of all things. The speculation that asat (non-being) is the cause of the universe persisted from Vedic times to the Upaniṣadic period. Thus the Chāndogya Upaniṣad. (Ch. Up.) states that sat was evolved out of *asat*²⁸ — a view shared by the Taittiriya Upaniṣad (Tait. Up.). The Ch. Up. however accepts the decision in favour of sat as the cause of the universe as explained by Āruṇi to Śvetaketu²⁹ Āruṇi further says that the sat entered into its own evolutes (called 'deities' there) viz. (1) Fire, (2) Water and (3) Earth and unfolded both Name and Form (i.e., the entire universe).³⁰ This entry in three 'deities' or bhūtas (elements) is called trivṛt-karāṇa. Śāṅkara explains : "In everything there are three bhūtas, viz. (1) Fire, (2) Water and (3) Earth. Out of them one element is dominated while the other two elements are in a subordinate position. This trivṛt-karāṇa is obviously the precursor of the theory of Pañcīkarāṇa of later day Vedānta when five elements, earth, water, fire, wind and the ether came to be recognized. The Chāndogya concept of trivṛt-karāṇa shows a close relationship between microcosm and macrocosm in that ancient period.

The Sāṅkhya Theory Anticipated

The Ch. Up. goes a step further and attributes colours to these bhūtas. Āruṇi explains to Śvetaketu :

Fire is red, water is white and earth is black.

He emphasizes that what exists is only three colours and the rest is only name and form.³¹

As is well-known, according to Sāṅkhyas the colours of three guṇas — sattva, rajas and tamas — are respectively white, red and black. Prakṛti consists of these three guṇas. Sāṅkhyas, Prakṛti and its evolutes under the wide name "Name and Form" (nāma-rūpa) are found in the Ch. Up.

SĀṆKHYA ANALYSIS

Important from the point of Śaiva (and Vaiṣṇava) schools are the twenty-four tattvas of Sāṅkhya as they are adopted by all these schools. But in between Upaniṣads and Classical Sāṅkhya is an early Sāṅkhya school elaborated by Caraka (AD 78). At one place he states that there are six elements (dhātus), viz., the five elements such as earth, water, etc., and cetana (Consciousness). Elsewhere he presents another point of view and categories or tattvas are said to be twenty-four, viz. ten senses (five cognitive plus five conative), manas (mind), five objects of senses and then eightfold prakṛti viz., prakṛti, mahat ahaṅkāra and five elements (bhūtas). Caraka does not mention tanmātras.

Caraka identifies the unmanifest (avyakta) part of prakṛti with puruṣa forming one (puruṣa-prakṛti) category — a sort of Śiva-Śakti identity in Śaivism. But there is some difference. Vikāras or evolutes of prakṛti are the kṣetra while the avyakta part of prakṛti, viz. (puruṣa) is regarded as kṣetrajña.³² Caraka and Āsuri (the disciple of Pañcaśikha, the great disciple of Kapila) hold similar views in general. Āsuri regards the final state like that of special characteristics (alinga). The Mahābhārata (Mbh), Śāntiparva, 31.70 ff., mentions three schools of Sāṅkhyas admitting respectively twenty-four, twenty-five and twenty-six categories or principles. The Mbh recommends the realization of twenty-sixth (puruṣa) principle for escape from samsāra.

A tabular statement of the Principles and their evolutes as given by Sāṅkhyas and Kāsmira Śaivas and Siddhānta Śaivas are given as Appendix I to this chapter.

TATTVAS IN SAIVISM

Śaivism (and Vaiṣṇavism as well) have accepted twenty-four tattvas of Sāṅkhyas. They, however, posit twelve tattvas above Sāṅkhya tattvas and then show how everything has been evolved from Śiva. All schools of Śaivism accept thirtysix tattvas in general, though there are some differences in details. These will be discussed separately in the treatment of different schools. A Tabular statement of tattvas according to Siddhānta Śaivism will show a close similarity in different Śaiva schools.

As a specimen of Śaiva analysis of tattvas, the analysis of tattvas in Kaśmir Śaivism is given as follows :

KŚ is a Monist. They have to explain our day-to-day experience of difference and distinction between 'I' and 'This' (the outside world). They have given the gradation of devolution of universal experience as follows:

Stage I : Śiva

Śiva and Śakti being identical the experience is "All am I" (sarvam aham).

Stage II : Sadāśiva tattva

At this stage of manifestation (ābhāsa) the experience of 'I'-ness is more dominant than the 'This'-ness (the experience of outside world). The 'I' has a very vague idea of 'This', like that of a painter having a vague outline of a picture he proposes to paint. They call it anunmīlita-citra-nyāya Kṣemarāja in Pratyabhijñā-hṛdaya (on sūtra 3) explains : "(At this stage) experience is dominated (ācchādita) by the consciousness of 'I'-ness' (ahantā) and (the experience of) Thisness (idantā) is yet incipient (asphuṭa)".

Stage III : The Īśvara Tattva

The consciousness of 'Thisness' grows viz 'I am this' (idam-aham vimarśā). Both consciousness of I (ahantā) and that of 'this' are simultaneously distinct (sphuṭa) — Kṣemarāja (op. cit., p 50).

Stage IV : Śuddha Vidyā

Here the distinctness of 'I'-ness and 'This-ness' is complete (aham aham-idam-idam vimarśā).

These stages do not conceal Śivahood and hence are called "Pure Path" (suddhādhvan). The tattvas after This viz māyā to niyati conceal Śivahood and restrict the divine — Śivalike powers of Śiva. As these tattvas conceal Śivahood, they are called 'Impure Path' (aśuddhādhvan).

The remaining tattvas are the same as those of Sāṅkhyas. Siddhānta Śaivism accepts the reality of māyā and of Śiva. Discussion of their tattvas will be found in the chapter on Śaiva Dualism in (Siddhānta Śaivism).

It will be seen that tattvas from (11) puruṣa to (36) prthivī are borrowed from Sāṅkhyas. The first tattvas (1-5) will be discussed in the section in Kāśmīra Śaivism.

Linga Worship

All Śaiva Sects have prescribed Śiva-worship essential for attaining mokṣa. For this worship the linga as the representative symbol is accepted by all sects.

The history of evolution of the linga worship is interesting. In this field, the spade of the archaeologist or hypothetical forms with asteriks from the imagination of linguists, are not the proper guides. Theories about Śiva being pre-Vedic or post-Vedic are irrelevant. The fundamental principle of the universe which is both immanent and transcendental is called Śiva, Viṣṇu or the Brahman for the convenience of linguistic expression. It is beyond the scope of such discussion. Persons who have devoted their lives for the realization of that Reality are not at all interested in such fruitless wranglings. Śaivites regard the linga as the object of worship and meditation for the realization of the highest principle. It is however interesting to know how the linga worship came to be accepted.

AGNI : RUDRA

The importance of fire in the life of man needs no discussion. It was probably the greatest invention of early man when he could produce fire by attrition. But the trouble of rubbing two pieces of wood was so exhausting that people thought it essential to keep fire unextinguished as the rekindling by attrition was not so easy. Preservation of fire all the twenty-four hours in every homestead was absolutely necessary. It was given a religious bias and maintenance of Agni-hotra became essential for every house-holder (gr̥has̥tha). The development of simple domestic worship into elaborate sacrifices (yajñas), like Soma, Aśvamedha, Rājasūya, etc. was the result of the growing affluence of the society. But fire, the friend of man, was originally a 'roarer' in forest conflagrations and was called Rudra (the roarer) even after its 'domestication'. This identification of Rudra and Fire (agni) is stated in the Taittirīya Samhitā (Tait. S.) as follows :

"This is verily Rudra that is Fire"³⁴ and the identity of forest-fire and domestic fire came to be established. Seers of Rudrādhyāya (Tait. S., IV.5.7 and of the Vājasaneyī Samhitā (VS chs. 16 and 18), used epithets common to both. Thus in the Rudrādhyāya, tawny and reddish brown (babhru) reddish (aruṇa, vilohita), blue or blue-throated (nila-grīva), bluish-red (nila-lohita) : All these are the colours of flames of fire, i.e., of Fire (god). Fire with a smoky crown is Rudra with a mass of hair (jaṭās) : in kaparadin, smokeless fire is vyupta-keśa Rudra (of shaven head).

This identity between Rudra and fire is found even in RV, I A3.4.³⁵ The association of Rudra and agni in public mind was so powerful that the association of agni and vāyu, Soma and other deities came to be superseded and forgotten with lapse of time. An additional evidence of the popularity of the identity of Rudra and agni is found in the Atharva Veda (15.5.1.7) and the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa (1.7.3.8) where the eight epithets of Rudra and agni are common.

In Purānas we are told that gods Brahmā and Viṣṇu advanced against each other to prove their respective superiority. Śiva manifested himself in the form of a column of fire between them and subdued them both, by showing his infiniteness and their inferiority to him. This legend and the identity of the fire blazing in the sacrificial pit (kunda) probably gives a clue to the shape of the linga.

MUKHA LINGAS*

It will be seen that linga worship is not penis-worship. Śiva-Linga is identified with god Rudra, we find the Face(s) of Śiva carved in the linga since ancient times³⁶ while human penis is faceless.

LINGAS WITH FACES

Śiva is credited to have the following five faces :

Sadyojāta, Vāmadeva, Aghora, Tat-Puruṣa and Īśāna. Śiva-Lingas with five faces are found at Bhita near Allahabad. This belongs to the second century BC. Bhagavan Ekalingajī, the guardian deity of erstwhile state of Mewar (Udaipur), Rajasthan, is a linga with five faces.

LINGAS WITH FOUR FACES

According to the Mbh. Anuśāsana Parvan, 140-47 Śiva has the following four faces : Aghera, Uṣṇīśa (Turbaned one), Yogī and a woman. Lingas with four faces are found at Bhita, Mathurā and Kauśāmbī (Modern Kosam near Allahabad — both belonging to circa 200 BC).

VIGRAHA LINGAS

Lingas with full form of Śiva inscribed (as if it is the icon of Śiva) are called Vigraha Lingas (vigraha = Body). One such linga is near Renuguntha (Tamil Nadu). It is famous as Paraśurāmeśvara. Another Vigraha Liṅga is at Gamaru, near Bharatpur (Rajasthan). All these liṅgas belong to the Kuśāṇa period. Two more Vigraha Liṅgas are in Philadelphia Museum (USA.).

* The Lingas which have the faces of Śiva carved on them are Mukha-Lingas.

These Mukha Liṅgas and Vigraha Liṅgas expose the patent mischievous absurdity in equating Śiva Liṅga with Śiva's penis.

STHĀṆU LIṅGAS

Faceless liṅgas are called Sthāṇu Liṅgas. Sthāṇu (a column) form is traced to the legend recorded in different Purāṇas like the Liṅga (ch. 17), the Kūrma (I.26.68-99), the Vāyu and others. According to this legend, when gods Brahmā and Viṣṇu began to quarrel about their personal superiority and were on the verge of fighting, a huge column of fire — a liṅga of fire — intervened and asserted his superiority over both of them. It was a fiery god Śiva who manifested himself in the Liṅga form.

LIṅGA : THE PARA BRAHMAN

The Śivānubhava Sūtra (3.3) defines Liṅga as follows:

That in which all mobiles and immobiles enter, i.e., get dissolved, and that from which the universe goes out, i.e., is created, is called a Liṅga by those who are experts in the Principle called Liṅga.

Thus the word liṅga is traced to two Sanskrit roots \sqrt{li} — 'to dissolve' and \sqrt{gam} — to go, to get manifested or created. This concept of liṅga is similar to the Upaniṣadic concept of the Brahman expressed in the Ch. Up. as TAJJALĀN, Śaṅkara explains this expression as follows:

TAJJA : That form which all elements such as earth, water, fire etc. are evolved.

TALLA : That in which the universe is absorbed or dissolved.

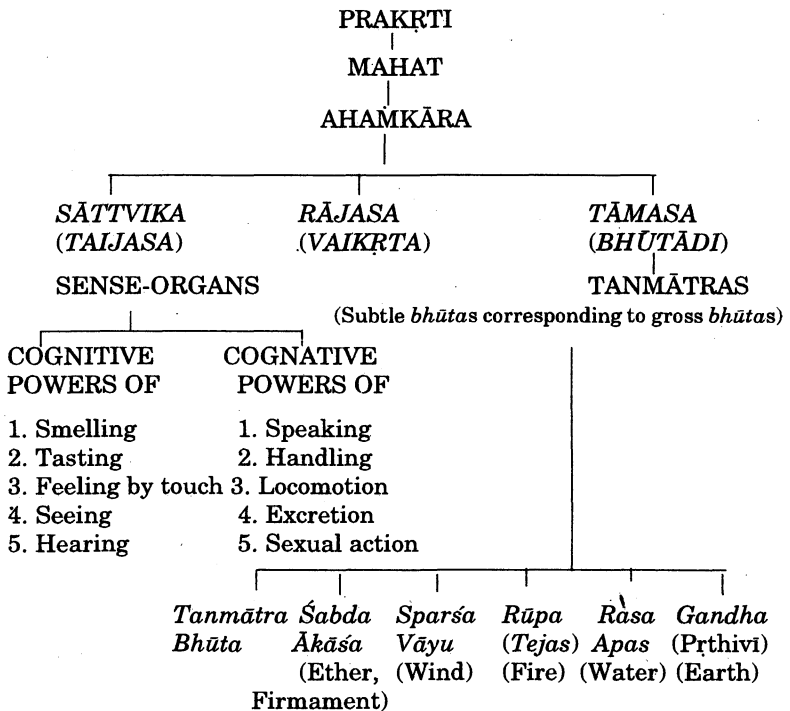

and \sqrt{an} — 'to breathe' — That in which the universe breathes, exists and makes movements (prāṇiti). Thus the term linga means the Brahman according to these schools.

It will thus be seen that Śiva-Linga is the symbol (linga) of the ultimate Reality which Śaivas designate as Pati and Vedāntins as the Brahman.

APPENDIX I

Categories or Principles (Tattvas) and Their Evolution as per Sāṅkhyas

(Puruṣa being Aloof is not Included)

APPENDIX II

Tattvas Analysed (as per Kaśmir Śaivism)

I. TATTVAS OF THE UNIVERSEAL EXPERIENCE (1-5)

- | | | |
|-----------|-----------------------------|-------------------------|
| 1. Śiva | 2. Śakti | 3. Sadāśiva or Sādākhya |
| 4. Īśvara | 5. Sadvidyā or Śuddha Vidyā | |

II. TATTVAS OF THE LIMITED INDIVIDUAL EXPERIENCE (6-11)

- | | | |
|---------|----------|------------|
| 6. Māyā | 7. Kāla | 8. Vidyā |
| 9. Rāga | 10. Kalā | 11. Niyati |

(Tattvas from 7 to 11 both inclusive are regarded as the kañcukas of māyā).

III. TATTVAS OF THE LIMITED INDIVIDUAL (12-13)

- | | |
|------------|-------------|
| 12. Puruṣa | 13. Prakṛti |
|------------|-------------|

IV. TATTVAS OF MENTAL OPERATION (14-16)

- | | | |
|------------|--------------|-----------|
| 14. Buddhi | 15. Ahaṁkāra | 16. Manas |
|------------|--------------|-----------|

V. TATTVAS OF SENSE EXPERIENCE

The five powers of sense-perception

The power of 17. Smelling, 18. Tasting, 19. Perception or seeing, 20. Tactile or feeling by sense, 21. Audition or hearing.

VI. KARMENDRIYAS (CONATIVE ORGANS) : 22-26

Power of 22. Speaking, 23. Handling, 24. Locomotion or moving or walking, 25. Excretion, 26. Sexual action.

VII. TANMĀTRAS (SUBTLE BHŪTAS) : 27-31

- | | | |
|-----------|------------|----------|
| 27. Śabda | 28. Sparsā | 29. Rūpa |
| 30. Rasa | 31. Gandha | |

VIII. TATTVAS OF MATERIALITY (FIVE BHŪTAS) : 32-36

- | | | |
|-----------|-------------|-----------|
| 32. Ākāśa | 33. Vāyu | 34. Tejās |
| 35. Apas | 36. Pṛthivī | |

APPENDIX III

Classification of Tattvas According to Siddhānta Śaivas (Dualists)

Based on: T.M.P. Mahadevan—Śaiva Siddhanta. History of Philosophy.

Notes

1. āpti, pāti ca paśūn ity atah patir bhavati — Pās. S., p.5.
2. tasmāt prasādāt sa duḥkhāntam pratiyate ।

na tu jñāna-vairāgya dharmaiśvarya-tyāga-mātrāt |
— Pāś.S., p.6.

3. yam evaisa vṛnute tena labhyaḥ |
tasyaiṣa ātmā vīvṛnute tanūm svām

— Kaṭha Up., 1.2.23.

4. (patih) yadi nirvimarsaḥ syāt
anīśvaraḥ jadaśca prasajyeta |

— Kṣemarāja : Parā Prāveśikā, p.2.

5. Kṣemarāja, in his commentary on Vasugupta's Śiva-sūtra, claims that these sūtras were imparted by Śiva in his dream. dvaita-darśanādhivāsita-prāye jīva-lokerahasya-samparadāyo (= Īśvarādvaya-vāda) mā vicehedi ityāśayataḥ . . . parama-sīvena svapne'nugrhya . . . śiva-sūtrāni . . . sacchiṣyeṣu prakāsitavān |

6. pumbhyaḥ phalaṁ vicitram dadāti saṁvikṣya bandha-vaicitryam |

svamahimnā nādyudayo nāyatto namo namas tasmāi ||

— Sadyojyoti, Tattva-traya-nirṇaya (ed. G.V. Tagare — Parāmarśa, Pune University)

7. śiva-puruṣāvatisāṅkhau prasava-vihīnau citā saṁsthau |

— op. cit., 2nd verse.

8. sūkṣma-cid-acid-viśiṣṭam
brahma kāraṇam, sthūla cid-acid viśiṣṭam kāryam |

— BMB, 1.1.5; 1.27 (I.p.14)

9. anantānanda-katlyāṅgaṇaika- ghana īśvaraḥ śiva ity eva ucyate

— BMB, 3.2.17 (vol. II pp.248-49).

10. janmādi-srṣṭi-sthiti-vilaya tirodhanā'nugrahātmakaṁ
krtya-pañcakashyacidacit prapuñca-vilāsasya

— Śrīkara Bhāṣya, II, p. 29

Here the words cit, acit etc. show the Viśiṣṭādvaita characteristic of Vira-Śaivism.

11. brahmādyāḥ sthāvarāntās ca deva-devasya dhīmataḥ |
paśavaḥ pari kīrtiyante saṁsāra-vaśa-vartinaḥ

teṣāṁ patitvād bhagavān rudraḥ paśupatiḥ smṛtaḥ |

— Līṅga Purāṇa quoted in Bhojadeva's Tattva-Prakāśa

12. ātmā na jāyate |

Not only that but he is by nature knowledge itself (jñā) in BMB on Br. S., 2.3.19 viz. jñō' ta eva Śāṅkara holds similar view.

13. sāṅkhya-yogena ye muktāḥ sāṅkhya-yogeshvarās ca ye :
brahmādayas tiryagāntāḥ sarve te paśavaḥ smṛtāḥ ॥
— Pās. S., 31.
14. puryaṣṭakam antaḥ-karaṇam dhī-karma-karaṇāni ॥
— Tattva-prakāśa (T. Pr.), I.12.
15. BMB on Prakāśādivat
— Br. S., 2.3.24-27
16. ajñānam kila bandha-hetur iditaḥ ॥ sāstre malam tat smṛtam ॥
— Abhinavagupta : Tantra-Sāra, p.5
17. Ajñānam it na jñanābhāvaḥ sa loṣṭhādike' pyasti ॥
— op. cit., p. 28
18. jñanani bandhaḥ ॥
— Śiva S., I.2.
19. jñā'nau iti jīvasyā'jñatvam kiñcij-jñatvam eva ॥
— BMB, 2.142
20. svayam bādhnāti deveśaḥ svayam eva vimuñcati ॥
— Tantrāloka, 8.82
21. karmākhyo' yam mahā-pāśo durmocas tenajantavaḥ ॥ itas-tataḥ samākṛṣya niyante paśava iva ॥ — Quoted from the commentary on T. Pr., I.16
22. (i) māyā vastūrūpā mūlam viśvasya nityā sā ॥
— T.Pr., I.18.
- (ii) māyā tāvanna parameśvarādhiṣṭhitā jaḍā, jagad-upādāṇam bhavati ॥ maheśvaraś cetano'pi na māyām vinā jagad mūlatām bhajate ॥
— op.cit., p.62
23. tasmānna baddhate' ddhā na mucyate, nā'pi santarati kaścit ॥
— Īśvarakṛṣṇa — Sāṅkhya-Kārikā, p. 62
24. bandha-mokṣau na bhidyete sarvatraiva śivatvataḥ ॥ pratiti-mātram evātra tāvataḥ bandha-mokṣatā ॥
— Śiva-drṣṭi 365-69 also 370-72
25. tasya prasādāt sa duḥkhāntaḥ prāpyate ॥
— Pās. S., p.6.
26. muktasya parameśvara-sāmye' pi jagat-srṣṭyādi vyāpāra-varjam eva svātantryam asya bhoga-vastuṣu ॥
— BMB, II.496

27. iyam visṛṣṭir yata ābabhūva |
 jo' syādhyakṣaḥ parame vyoman |
so'nga veda yadi vā na veda ||
 — RV, X.129
28. asad eva idam agra āsit |
ekam evādvittiyam |
tasmād asataḥ saj-jāyata |
 — Chāndogya Upaniṣad, 6.2.1
29. satveva somyedaṁ agra āsīd ekam evādvittiyam tad aikṣata 'bahu syām prajāyeya' |
 — op. cit., 6.2. 2-3 |
30. hanta, ahaṁ tisro devatā anena jīvenātmanā'nu praviśya
nāma-rūpe vyākaravāñi |
 — op. cit., 6.3.2 and 3
31. yad-agne rohita, rūpaṁ tejasas tad rūpam, yacchuklam tadapām |
yat kṛṣṇaṁ tad annasya pṛthivyāḥ vācārāmbhaṇam vikāro nāmadheyam trīṇi rūpāṇityeva satyam |
 op. cit., 6.4.1
32. avyakta-madhyasya kṣetrasya
kṣetrajanāṁ ṛṣayo viduḥ |
 For details — S.N.Dasgupta, History of Indian Philosophy
 Vol. I, p. 216 ff.
33. janma-mṛtyu-bhayād bhītā yoga-saṅkhyāśca kaśyapa |
sad-vimśam anupaśyantah śucayas tat-parāyaṇāḥ |
yadā sa kevalibhūtaḥ ṣaḍvimśam anupasyati |
tadā sa sarvavid vidvān punar janma na vindati |
 — Mbh Śānti, 318.79-81
34. rudro vā eṣa tad agniḥ
 — Taitt. S., V. 4.3.1.
35. gāthapatim medhapatim rudram jalāpabheṣajam |
 — RV, 1.43.4 also AV, 7.8.7.1
 The similarities between the procedure of Fire-worship and Linga-worship are practically the same — G.B. Dandage Rudra, Yajña and Śive-Linga (Marathi book, Maharashtra Grantha Bhandar, Kolhapur).
36. N.P. Joshi — Bharatiya Mūrtiśāstra (Indian Iconography), Marathi, Maharashtra Universities Book Production Board, Nagpur.

37. liyate gamyate yatra, yena sarvam carācaram । tadeva liṅgam ityuktam liṅga-tattva-parayanaiḥ ॥
— Śivānubhūti Sūtra, 3.3

The word liṅga is derived from two roots \sqrt{li} — ‘to dissolve’, \sqrt{gam} — ‘to go’, ‘to let out,’ ‘to create’.

Pāśupatism (Dvaitādvaitism)

IN the Introduction, we have seen that the term 'School of Śaivism' means the particular relationship between Pati, Paśu and Pāśa adopted or believed by certain thinkers and their followers. This over-simplified concept about the term 'School' is enough for a common reader in the beginning. At first the school called Pāśupatism (Pāś.) is considered, as that is the ancient-most and the only Veda-based School of Śaivism.

What is Pāśupatism

The term Pāśupata means 'pertaining to Paśupati'. Paśūpati is 'The Lord of Paśus' (bound or enchained jīvas). In Vedic literature, Paśupati or Paśūnām patih is the name of Śiva (Taitt. Saṁ., 4.5.2.1 Vāj. Saṁ. chs. 16,17; Maitrāyaṇī Saṁ., 2.9.3) and obeisance is paid to him. The Āśvalāyana Gṛhya Sūtra (2.2) specifically mentions that Śiva, Paśupati and Śaṅkara are the names of the same deity.¹

The Rudrādhyāya of Taitt. Saṁ. (IV.5 and 7) Śatarudriya in Vāj. Saṁ. (chs. 16, 18) show that Śiva-worship in some form was in vogue in those times. The mantras in Taitt. Āraṇyaka (XVII.1-5) were adopted by Lakuliśa, the founder of Pāśupatism, as the basis of his philosophy and Sādhanā. But an earlier form of Pāśupatism is traceable to the Śvetāśvatara Upaniṣad (Śv. Up.). For example : According to Śv. Up., Śiva is the only God and one. He creates the heaven and the earth and pervades it all.² But the monotheism of Lakuliśa is more fervid in devotion. He prohibits the worship of gods other than Śiva and of ancestors viz. performance of śrāddha on the ground that Śiva is immanent in them.³ Kauṇḍinya the commentator of Pāś. S. explains the rationale of this instruction. The concept of god Rudra in Śv. Up. and Pati in Pāśupata Sūtra (Pāś. S.) is similare to that in Śv. Up. It regards Him as the creator, sustainer and annihilator of the universe (Śv. Up., 4.9; 1.8; 5.3). Śiva according to Śv. Up. (1.16) is both immanent and transcendant.⁴

The path of Yoga seems to be common to both Śv. Up. and Pāśu. S. The Śv. Up. states :

One's own body is (the lower) araṇi and praṇava (omkāra) is the (upper) araṇi, dhyāna (meditation) is the attrition (rubbing against) each other. Thus one should see the Lord unmanifest⁵ (like an unmanifest spark emanates while rubbing).

The Śv. Up. is earlier than the Bhagavad Gītā (BG) so Śv. Up. is definitely earlier than Lakuliśa. I believe that this is enough to show the Vedic roots of Pāśupatism.

Lakuliśa — His Time — Spread of Pāśupatism

THE FOUNDER LAKULIŚA : HISTORICITY AND TIME

The historical founder of Pāśupatism is Lakuliśa. He is probably called so as his icons all over India show him as holding a wooden staff (lakuṭa > lakula 'a staff') and an erect position of his penis — a symbol of his being ūrdhva-retas (of sublimated sex). Purāṇas like the Kūrma (I.53), Śiva-Vāyaviya Samhitā (2.95) state that he was the 28th incarnation of Śiva and he had four disciples viz., Kuśika, Gārgya, Kauruṣa and Maitra. All these five persons are mentioned in old epigraphs — a proof of their historicity. Lakuliśa was born at Kārwan in Dabhoi Tehsil of Baroda District, Gujarat. Then he proceeded to Ujjain, Madhya Pradesh.

SPREAD OF PĀŚUPATISM

As to Lakulīśa's time, R.G. Bhandarkar's conjecture (200 BC) is nearer the mark. Rāśikara Kaundinya, the commentator of Pāśupata Sūtras belonged to circa AD 350. Rājaśekhara Sūri, the Jain commentator of Haribhadra Sūri's Ṣaḍ-darśana Samuccaya states that Rāśikara Kaundinya was the 18th teacher from Lakulīśa. A generation is regarded as a period of twenty-five to thirty years. Taking the lower figure, Lakulīśa is 450 (25 × 18) years earlier than Kaundinya. Thus Lakulīśa should be located in circa 100 BC. (AD 350 minus 450 years).

This sect spread all over India. The Chinese traveller Hiuen-Tsiang (AD 629-45) mentions Jullandhar (Punjab), Ahicchatra (near Ramnagar, Rohil Khand), Malakuta (Tamil Nadu), Malwa, Maheśvar and Khotan as the centres of Pāśupatas (Po-shu-po-lo). Śārṅgadeva's Sintra inscription (Ep. India, p. 282) adds Lāṭa (Southern Gujarat), Prayāg, Śrīparvata (Andhra Pradesh), Rāmeśwar. Paśupati Shrine in Nepal is said to have been originally established by Cārumatī, the daughter of Aśoka Maurya. K.C., Panigrahi's, Archeological Remains at Bhubaneshvar records the icons of Lakulīśa and other remains of the Sect. in Orissa.

THE BASIC TEXT — PĀŚUPATA SUTRAS (PĀŚ. S.)

Lakulīśa explained his system in 168 pithy sūtras. Some sūtras attributed to him are the parts of the first five mantras of Taitt. Āraṇyaka,⁶ 17.1-5. For example Tait. Ār., 17.1 is :

sadyojātam prapadyāmi, sadyojātāya vai namaḥ | bhave bhave nātibhave bhajasva mām, bhavodbhāvāya
namaḥ ||

Lakulīśa composed the following five sūtras based on the above mantra :

- (1) sadyojātam prapadyāmi ।
- (2) sadyojātāya vai namaḥ ।
- (3) bhave bhave nāti bhāve ।
- (4) bhajasva mām ।
- (5) bhavodbhavāya nahah ।

— Pās. S., 1-40-44

It is creditable that Kaunḍinya created a philosophical school on the basis of these sūtras.

It is interesting to note that Sāyaṇa, the commentator of R̥gveda who was interested in textual interpretation and not into its philosophical significance, regards that the prātikas (first words) of the first five mantras of Tait. Ār., 17 viz. sadyojāta (17.1), vāmadeva (17.2), āghora (17.3), tat-puruṣa and īśāna (17.5) are the names of the five faces of Śiva and other epithets in those mantras such as śreṣṭha, kāla, kalavikaraṇa are Śiva's powers.

Chronologically Kaunḍinya was more near to Lakulīśa and belonged to his school. We may presume that he understood Lakulīśa's sūtras better. Kaunḍinya does not refer to Jainism, Buddhism, Vedānta or Māyā-Vāda.

Main Tenets of Pāśupatism

Kaunḍinya summarises the main tenets of Pāśupatism as follows :

MOKṢA (LIBERATION FROM SAMSĀRA)

1. Mokṣa is not a mere negative state of painlessness. Nor it is complete absorption of the Individual Soul in the Supreme Brahman as believed by Advaitins of Śaṅkara school. According to Pāśupatas, the Individual soul retains his separateness or independent individuality in the mokṣa stage. He is endowed with powers of vision and action (drk-śakti and kriyā-śakti) like that of Maheśvara and enjoys vicinity (sāmīpya) near the Lord. All this implies a state of painlessness.

2. There is no mention of a place like Kailāsa as the spatial location of mokṣa.

3. Man gets the fruit of his action. But this is not niyatī-vāda. God through His Grace can and does destroy the effect of mala or the karmans.

4. Mokṣa depends more on the grace of the Lord rather than through human endeavour. This is an echo of Kaṭha Upaniṣad (2.23) and Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad (3.2.3.)

But God does not behave arbitrarily. He does not revert a liberated soul to samsāra.

5. There is no trace of saguṇa bhakti.

6. Thorough belief and total emphasis on the japa of omkāra. Lakuliśa lays down "One should meditate on Omkāra" (Pāś., 5.5.24).⁸ Kaunḍinya explains : "Only Omkāra should be meditated upon, not anyone else". Bhāsarvajña, another authority on Pāśupatism, in his commentary on its Gaṇa-Kārikā (a standard work on Pāśupatism) "Omkāra is the only object worth meditating for (as the cause of) the end of duḥkha i.e. Mokṣa".

Philosophical Tenets of Pāśupatism Compared With Other Systems

Mādhava, in Sarva-darśana-Saṅgraha gives an excellent summary of the Tenets of Pāśupatism, comparing them with those of other schools.

MOKṢA

Other schools (like Sāṅkhya and Yoga) regard the end of misery (duḥkhānta) as mokṣa, but in addition to the end of misery, Pāśupatas believe in endowment of the powers (of knowledge and action) of the Supreme soul in the mokṣa stage.⁹

KĀRYA (EFFECT)¹⁰

In other schools kārya (effect) has no previous existence. It follows the cause (kāraṇa). But Pāś. S. says the effects such as Paśus (Bound Souls) are eternal (beginningless and endless).

CAUSAL RELATION¹¹

In other schools, the Causal relation, the result depending on related cause and vice versa. But in Pāśupatism, Maheśvara or Paṭi is the only cause. He does not depend on or gets modified as per effect.

KAIVALYA (MOKṢA)¹²

In other schools, kaivalya (aloneness?) implies complete freedom of the Soul from Prakṛti. It is the fruit of yogi's efforts. But Pāśupata Yoga itself confers Supreme Powers and end of misery.

DIFFERENCE FROM PŪRVA MĪMĀMSĀ¹³

Other schools (e.g. Pūrva Mīmāṃsā) confer fruits like stay in heaven but they result in the re-birth in Saṃsāra. In Pāśupatism mokṣa is non-return to saṃsāra and stay in the vicinity of Maheśvara is the fruit.

Pathway to Liberation

Pāśupatism is no arm-chair philosophy. It has laid down its special path to mokṣa. The sādhanā starts with renunciation of household saṃsāra. It consists of the following five stages in the sādhanā mārga of Pāśupatas whereby one attains the summum bonum.

STAGE I

The aspirant (sādhaka) has to stay in a Śiva temple and perform bhasma-snāna (smearing the whole body with holy ashes). He has to wear the nirmālya (stale flowers thrown away after Śiva's worship). He is to imitate the loud laugh (aṭṭahāsa) of Śiva. He is to perform continuously the japa of the mantra; sadyojātam prapadyāmi etc. (Tait. Ār., 17.1)

STAGE II

Austere penance with strict observance of Yama and Niyama. No god other than Śiva to be worshipped. No performance of srāddha. Unswerving devotion to Śiva. Continuous japa of the mantra : vāmadevāya namo etc. (17.2).

STAGE III

To shed off one's ego or self-esteem and pose to behave in such a manner outwardly as will incur censure and insults from the public. Inwardly the sādhaka must be pure, self controlled and reasonable, but you have to behave like a mad person or a debauchere ogling and showing amorous gestures to other women as god Śiva did to the wives of sages in the Dārūka Vana. In this stage he is to perform continuously the japa of the mantra: aghorebhyo'tha ghorebhyah (Tait. Ār., 17.3). The rationale of such behaviour is that one reduces one's sins and effects of past karman when one is thus censured though one is innocent.

STAGE IV

In order to conceal one's penance etc. the sādhaka behaves like a mad or mentally retarded person. He is to stay in a deserted house or hut or in a solitary cave and perform the japa of the mantra : tatpuruṣāya vidamahe. (Tait. Ār., 17.4).

STAGE V

In this last stage, a Pāśupata yogī is to stay under a tree in a cemetery or burning place of the dead or under the sky and perform the japa of the mantra : iśānaḥ sarva-bhūtānām. (Tait. Ār., 17.5)

Here one is reminded of the XV saya of the Bhagavati Sūtra of Śvetāmbara Jains in which the Ājīvaka Tirthaṅkarā, a senior contemporary of Mahāvīra, named 'Maṅkhali Gosāla' is reported to have behaved in a censurable way as prescribed for the Pāśupata yogins. Such behaviour was a part of the sādhanā of Ājīvakas. In the Sarabhaṅga Jātaka (Jātaka Tales, V.12.5). We are told that the third spiritual predecessor of Maṅkhali Gosāla, the Ājīvaka Tirthaṅkara called Kisavaccha, incurred censure from the public of Kumbhavatī, the capital city of King Daṇḍakin so much so that people spat on him. But when he died eminent ascetics attended his funeral and gods showered down flowers on his body.

Pāśupata was regarded as a Vedic Sect and Ājīvaka as non-Vedic. It appears that both followed similar pathway to liberation. Philosophically Pāśupatism seems to follow Dvaitādvaita (difference-cum-non-difference). The Āgama or the path of Lakulīśa was later followed by the ignorantly designated Kālāmukha sect in the eleventh and twelfth century. Epigraphica Carnatica records a number of inscriptions from Bijapur and Shimoga Districts of Karnataka. These were brāhmaṇas probably migrants from Kaśmir. They were liṅga-worshippers and they built liṅga-Temples like Kedārevara, Somnāth. Like Pāśupatas they taught Yoga, Śāstras etc. to all people as such vidyādāna is specifically mentioned in some inscriptions (David N. Lorenzen : The Kāpālikas and Kālāmukhas, pp. 97-172). As S.C. Nandimath notes in his Handbook of Vāraśaivism these temples are now with Vīraśaivas who follow the tradition of vidyādāna : "Slowly and imperceptibly they have been absorbed in Vīraśaivism". Mysore Gazetteer (II part 885) specifically states : “The Saivite revival under Basava — The natural result of the work of those Saiva teachers of the Pāśupata (read for ‘Kālāmukha’) school of Belagami (= Belagave). It may not be far from truth if one says that though the old Pāśupata school in its pristine purity is not seen today, it has, to some extent, survived in a transformed form — Vīraśaivism”.

Notes

1. paśupataye, śivāya, śaṅkarāya . . . svāhā |
— Āśvalāyana Gr. S., 2.2
2. devaḥ ekaḥ samāvṛṇoti — Śv. Up., 6. 10 dyāvā-bhūmī janayan deva ekaḥ — Śv. Up., 3.3
3. deva-vat pītrvacca |
ubhayam tu rudre devāḥ pitarasca |
— Pāś. S., 2-10-11.
4. sarva-bhūta-guhāśayaḥ |
sarva-vyāpī bhagavān |
— Śv. Up., 1-16
5. sva-deham aranīm kṛtvā praṇavam co'ttarāraṇim |
dhyāna-nirmathanā bhyāsāt devam paśyet nigudhavat ||
— Sv. Up., 1.14.
6. For the convenience of reference those five mantras are quoted below :
 - 17.1 sadyo-jātaṁ prapadyāmi, sadyojātāya vai namaḥ |
bhave bhava nātibhave bhajasva mām, bhavodbhavāya
namaḥ ||
 - 17.2 vāmadevāya namo, jyeṣṭhāya namaḥ, śreṣṭhāya namo,
rudrāya namaḥ |
kālāya namaḥ, kalavikaraṇāya namo, balavikaraṇāya namo, balapramathanāya namaḥ, sarva bhūtadamaṇāya namo
manonmanāya namaḥ |
 - 17.3 aghorebhyo'tha ghorebhyo ghora-ghoratarebhyaḥ |
saravataḥ sarva-sarvebhyo namaste astu rudra-rūpebyaḥ ||
 - 17.4 tatpuruṣāya vidmahe mahādevāya dhīmahī |
tanno rudraḥ pracodayāt ||
 - 17.5 iśānaḥ sarva-vidyānām iśvaraḥ sarva-bhūtānām |
brahmādhipatir Brahmano'dhipatir brahmā śivo me astu ||

7. *tasmāt prasādāt sa duḥkhāntaḥ prāpyate |
na tu jñāna-vairāgya-dharmaśvarya-tyāgamātrāt ity artha |*
8. The quotations on Pās. S., 5.24 may be grouped as follows :
omkāram abhidyāyīta (Pās. S., 5.24) omkāra eva dhyeyo nā'nyaḥ — Kauṇḍinya duḥkhānta-nimitta-dhyānaika-viśayatvam omkāratvam |
— Bhāsarvajña in Ratna Tīkā
9. *anyatra duḥkha-nivṛttir eva dukhāntaḥ |
iha tu pāramaiśvarya-prāptiś ca |*
10. nityam kāryam | kāraṇeśvara-nityatvat — Pās.S.
Mādhava explains :
*anyatra abhūtvā bhāvi kāryam |
iha tu nityam paśvādi |*
11. *anyatra sāpekṣyaṅ kāraṇam |
iha tu nirapekṣaḥ bhagavān eva |*
12. *anyatre karvalyādi-phalakaḥ yogaḥ |
iha tu pāramaiśvarya-duḥkhānta-phalakaḥ |*
13. *anyatra punarāvṛttirūpa-svargādi-phalako vidhiḥ |
iha punar apunarāvṛttirūpa-sāṃpiyādi-phalakaḥ |*
— Sarva-darśana-Saṅgraha, p. 75

Kaśmir Śaivism

THE geographical term 'Kaśmir Śaivism' is wide as four Śaivite sects flourished in Kaśmir. Out of them one was Dualist (dvaitī) and was perhaps older and more predominant than the Monist sects as noted by Kṣemarāja, a commentator of Vasugupta's Śiva-Śūtra.¹ In circa ninth century AD Ugra-Jyoti and Sadyojyoti were famous teachers of Śaiva Dualism called Śaiva Siddhānta a term by which it is now known in Tamil Nadu.

As Aurel Stein notes in the introduction to Kalhaṇa's Rājataranginī (p.9) Kaśmirīs are a tolerant people as "Buddhism and the orthodox creeds existed peacefully side by side in Kashmir" and the founders of Buddhist stūpas and vihāras "with equal zeal endowed also the shrines of Śiva and Viṣṇu". No struggle between Dualist and Monist Śaivas is recorded.

There were three Monist sects : one propagated by Vasugupta, known as Trika Śāstra here. The second is the Kaula system of Śaiva Yoga. B.N. Pandit states that the present-day Kaulas of Kaśmir believe that one Maheśvarānanda was their ancestor who came from Mahārāṣṭra and settled in Kaśmir (Aspects of Kashmir Śaivism, p. 27). Abhinavagupta belonged to the śiṣya-paramparā (tradition of disciples) of Vasugupta. But B.N. Pandit states : "Abhinava Gupta's teacher's (Śaṁbhu Nātha's) teacher and grand teacher viz. Soma Nātha and Sumati Nātha were southerners (op. cit., p. 30) and he supports his statement by quoting a commentary on Tantrāloka.² The matter needs further investigation as little trace of Kaula-mata is found in Mahārāṣṭra.

The third Monistic Śaiva system is the krama system. But firstly it is a Tāntrika system. Secondly it is a monistic Śaiva system. Thirdly it marks the emergence of the Śākta tendency in the Śaiva philosophy. As Navjivan Rastogi puts it, "It (the Krama system) developed into a synthetic and complex whole in which the Śaiva philosophy, the Śākta esotericism and the Tantric synoptic view of life are inter-knitted together" (The Krama Tantricism of Kashmir Vol. I, Preface, p. x).

Here we restrict ourselves to the first monistic school of Vasugupta as it is popularly and generally accepted as 'the Kashmir Śaivism'.

This school (and the other two schools) are based on Āgamas as contrasted with Pāśupatism which is Vedic. Due to their emphasis on three tattvas, Paṭi, Paśu and Pāśa, this school is popularly known as trika system. Though Āgamic, the followers of these schools call themselves superior to other systems. The gradation of Superiority is claimed as follows³ : "Śaiva school is superior to the Vedic school". The Superiority grows on as follows : Śaiva . . . Vāma . . . Dakṣa . . . Kula (Kaula). "But the Trika is the best of all". (Trikam Sarvottamam param). Parā-Trimśikā Vivaraṇa, p.92.

Though Īśvara-Pratyabhijñā-Vimarsinī claims that this Sect is open to all : (yasya kasyacit jantoriti nātra jātyādi apekṣā kācit), the necessity of Vedic saṃskāras shows that it is open only to three varṇas.

The influence of orthodox Hinduism was so great that before being initiated into Śaivism, all Vedic saṃskāras from Inception (garbhādhāna) to marriage must be performed.⁴

Trika-Śāstra

The Kaśmir Śaivism is taken here to imply Trika Śāstra. It may be roughly divided as (1) Āgama Śāstra, (2) Spanda Śāstra and (3) Pratyabhijñā Śāstra. J.C. Chatterji points out in Kashmir Śaivism (p.7, fn. 1) : “The term Śāstra as employed in this connection does not mean a separate system of thought or treatises dealing with a particular aspect or aspects of the same system”. By śāstra they imply ‘a book’.

Trika-Śaiva Literature

The vast Trika-Śaiva Literature may be broadly classified into three divisions : (1) Āgama Śāstra, (2) Spanda Śāstra and (3) Pratya-bhijñā Śāstra.

ĀGAMA ŚĀSTRA

Lord Śiva is the author of the Āgamas. Hence they are authoritative like the Vedas. Their number is sixtyfour — a number recorded by Śaṅkara in the Saundarya Laharī (K.C. Pande in his work on Abhinavagupta records the titles of these Tantras at pp. 77-80).

About these monistic Āgamas, J.C. Chatterji says that though some Āgamas are Dualistic, the commentators have striven hard to show them as monistic (Kashmir Śaivism, op. cit., p.9). For example the text of Mālinī-Vijaya-Tantra teaches plain, unvarnished dualism but the commentator has shown it to be monistic. Similar monistic interpretation (by commentators) is found in the case of Dualistic Tantras like Svacchanda, Netra, Mātāṅga Tantras (J.C. Chatterji, op. cit., pp. 9-10) Vasugupta (AD 825) has the credit of bringing out a real monistic system out of such a chaotic state. His work is not polemical like the Brahma Sūtra but it explains paths to mokṣa. There are four commentaries on the Śiva Sūtra. Though I have included them all in my Marathi translation of the Śiva Sūtra, here

I have mainly followed Kṣemarāja's commentary, the best one in the lot.

SPANDA ŚĀSTRA

Spanda is 'vibration', 'an apparent movement' but here it is used in the sense of 'The Divine Creative Pulsation'. These Kārikās elaborate the principles of the Śiva Sūtra. There are a number of commentaries on these Kārikās e.g. Spanda Vṛtti by Kallaṭa, Vivṛtti by Rāma Kaṇṭha, Spandanirṇaya by Kṣemarāja. I have rendered the Spanda-Kārikās (with comm.) in Marathi.

PRATYABHIJÑĀ

The Individual Self or jīvātman is Śiva but forgetting his divine nature identifies himself with his psychophysical mechanism called śarīra or body. The recognition that 'I am God or Śiva' is *pratyabhijñā*⁵. It is polemic and interprets logically the main doctrines of the system. Hence it is called manana sāstra or vicāra sāstra.

Somānanda, a disciple of Vasugupta wrote a polemical work of 700 verses called Śiva-drṣṭi. (Here drṣṭi means darśana, school of philosophy). In his work Somānanda criticises the Śabda-Brahma-Vāda of grammarians (2nd Āhnika), Śāktism and Śaiva Dualism (3rd Āhnika), Vijñāna-Vāda of Buddhists (5th Āhnika), other dārśanika views (6th Āhnika) and established Vasugupta's theory of Īśvarādvaya-Vāda. As Somānanda was the first polemic writer of the school, Abhinavagupta glorifies him by calling him Svātmeśvara-pratyabhidhāna-parasya tarkasya kartā.

A galaxy of Kaśmirian scholars like Utpala, Abhinavagupta, Kṣemarāja, Jayaratha and others wrote authoritative works on this.

Trika Philosophy

As stated already, Vasugupta's school, is called Trika, the triad being Pati, Paśu and Pāśa. The concept of Pati in Trika Śaivism and in other schools is discussed from a comparative point of view in the chapter 1 (Some Fundamental Concepts). Here a few more characteristics are noted.

According to Trika Śaivism, pati, the Ultimate Principle, is Para Śiva. Its other designations are : cit, citi, parā samvit (The ultimate knowledge) Parameśvara (The Supreme Lord or sovereign God etc.). The English renderings are inadequate. For example, cit or citi is translated as 'Consciousness' — a word implying subject-object relation, a duality. But cit is non-relational. It means it has immediacy of feeling where I and This (World, other than 'I') are indistinguishable.

As Pratyabhijñā-hṛdaya (Sūtra 3, p.54) states :

It is both immanent and transcendent to the Universe. The universe is God's manifestation within Himself. Out of all the (36) Tattvas (Principles, categories) Tattva from Śiva to Prṥthvī is within Him. He is luminous and illuminating and full of Bliss.⁶

Para-Śiva is endowed with prakāśa (knowledge). As Kāthopaniṣad puts it : It shining, everything else is illuminated.⁷ In addition to prakāśa, Śiva has vimarśa, the power to create, destroy or do anything without depending on any outside agency, by sheer will-power. On this point Śiva appears more powerful than Śāṅkarite Brahman which cannot create unless it is united with avidyā. Kṣemarāja says : If Śiva be vimarśa-less he would be powerless and inert.⁸ Vimarśa or śakti is an inalienable integral part of Śiva. To state briefly, Śiva is Śakti, Śakti is Śiva. As Somānanda, the first polemic Ācārya of Trika Śaivism says in his dārśanika work Śiva-drṣṭi (3.23) : "Never has Śiva been bereft of śakti and vice-versa. Śaivas do not recognize any difference between Power (śakti) and the possessor of (one endowed with) Power (śakti)."⁹

Kālidāsa seems to have anticipated this relation between Śiva and Śakti (Pārvatī) when he compares their oneness 'as between word and its meaning' (Vagarthāviva Samprktau). Infinite are the powers of Śiva. But Abhinavagupta mentions the following as more prominent:

(1) cit, (2) ānanda, (3) icchā, (4) jñāna and (5) kriyā.

He succinctly explained them as follows (in Tantra Sāra, I. 6) :

- (1) Cit — Power of self-revelation, of being Light (prakāśa-rūpatā)
- (2) Ānanda — Absolute bliss. It is perfect freedom (svātantrya) to do or to be anything.

Cit and Ānanda constitute the nature of Śiva.

- (3) Ichchā — Will-power to be anything (tathā bubhūṣā) or to create anything without obstacles. (svātantryam-nāma yatheccham tatra icchā - prasarasya avighātaḥ) Hence God is called Sadāśiva or Sādākhya.
- (4) Jñāna — Non-emotional knowledge (iṣattayā vedyonmukhatā) about everything. Hence Śiva is called Īśvara.
- (5) Kriyā — Power to create everything from Himself. (sarva-kārya-yogitvam). Hence Śiva is known as Sadvidyā or Śuddha vidyā.

Somānanda, in Śiva Drṣṭi (I. 44-45) explains :

Just as a Yogī can create anything without any upādāna (Material cause) so does Śiva's Will :

tathā bhagavad-icchaiva tathātvena prakāśate ।

Utpaladeva explains tathātvena in the above verse :

bhagavad-icchā-matreṇeva viśvarūpam sampadyate
Mere will manifests itself in the form of universe.

This is a special characteristic of Śiva in Trika thought.

Functions of Śiva

The following five are the functions of Śiva :

- (1) Srṣṭi — \sqrt{srj} — ‘to let go’. The Universe is not created. Śiva uncovers or manifests it.
- (2) Sthiti — Maintenance of the Universe.
- (3) Samhāra — The process of ‘drawing in’ (Himself) the Universe which is let out.
- (4) Vilaya or Pidhāna — To cover the real nature of the jīvātman (Souls).
- (5) Anugraha — Grace. There is no mokṣa without the grace of Śiva.

The creation, maintenance and destruction of the universe is Śiva’s sport (kriḍā).

PAŚU (INDIVIDUAL SOUL)

As in other sects of Śaivism, the Trika system uses the term Paśu for individual souls as they are bound by Pāśas (Bonds) or malas (dirt). The soul is thus encaged in Puryaṣṭaka ‘a city of eight constituents’ viz. the physical apparatus of five tanmātras (subtle elements) and the psychic apparatus consisting of intelligence (buddhi), Ego or I-ness (ahamkāra) and Mind (manas). This is the liṅga śarīrā in which the individual soul (ātma-tattva) who is really Śiva, is confined, with all his divine Śiva-like powers reduced to an ‘atom’ (aṇu) due to Pāśas or malas. The term aṇu does not signify spatial dimension (pradeśa vyāpti). The individual soul is transmigrated to another suitable body as decided by his karmas.

PĀŚA, BANDHA OR MALA

The topic of Pāśa or bandha (bondage) or mala (dirt) and the three varieties of Pāśa, viz āṇava (caused by or due to the atom-like power of the individual Soul), kārmika or kārma (caused by karmas or actions of the jīva) and māyīya (caused by māyā) have been adequately discussed in chapter 1. The Trika point of view may be summarized here.

Ignorance is the limiting factor of the soul and it (Ignorance) is called mala or Pāśa. But this Ignorance is partial. Its imposition on the Soul is attributed to the sweet will of Śiva. This original ignorance of aṇu (Soul) is called āṇava mala. It is imposed by Śiva's will in order to restrict the powers of the jīvātman and is hence beginningless. It is however in the mokṣa stage that this mala is completely washed off. It is due to the bondage (pāśa) that jīvātman though endowed with caitanya (consciousness) like Śiva, came to be designated as Paśu and Śiva as Paśu-pati. This mala is different from the rāga concept of Sāṅkhyas. That is the quality of the buddhi which creates attachment.

The āṇava mala is in a way the root or cause of kārma mala (mala caused by karmas) and of māyīya mala (mala caused by māyā).

Kārma Mala

Kārma mala is different from karma saṃskāra. The saṃskāras are the effects of verbal, physical and mental acts committed by a jīva. But kārma mala is objectless limited will-power of the Soul and its existence depends on the innate ignorance or āṇava mala. In the beginning of the universe, this will power is objectless, but it is due to the Will of the Lord that desire for enjoyment is generated resulting in a series of births and deaths (saṃsāra).

As Abhinavagupta remarks in Tantrāloka (8.82) "God creates the bondage and God releases a Jīva from it". This is Śiva's playfulness at the cost of the jīvas.

Māyīya Mala

The bondage caused by māyā is māyīya mala. By the term māyā, the Trika Śaivas mean "the misconception of the jīvātman that his physical body is the real Self or Soul and that it is distinct and different from other objects". (Bhinna-vedya-prathā) The fact of the matter is that there is no difference or distinction between I (aham) and the world outside (idam). This misconception causes pleasure, pain and rebirth (samsāra).

MOKṢA

As we have seen in the previous chapter, Trika Ācāryas deny the existence of bondage and release. Mokṣa is nothing but the awareness of the true nature of the Soul.¹¹ It is the recognition (pratyabhijñā) of our true nature or attainment of the original, innate I-Consciousness (akṛtrima-aham-vimarsāḥ). It is simplistically stated in Somānanda's Śiva-drṣṭi (3.70) "Mokṣa is the realization of one's identity with Śiva".¹² The mokṣa stage is not merely the end of misery (duḥkhānta) but enjoyment of the supreme bliss and powers of Śiva (except the creation of the world).

ANUGRAHA OR ŚAKTI-PĀTA

Apart from the theoretical discussion about the unreality of Bondage (bandha) or Liberation (mokṣa), it is everyman's experience that bandha is a fact of life from which one should exert oneself to free. But as we have seen in chapter 1, since the times of Upaniṣads, it is the experience of sages that self-realization cannot be achieved by intellectual efforts, scholarship, disputations. The Divine Grace is essential for it.¹³ Trika Śaivism also emphasizes the necessity of Divine Grace (anugraha) or Descent of Divine Power (śakti-pāta) in man. Persons with powerful spiritual samskāras of the previous birth derive this śakti-pāta without any sādhanā. Mere sight of his Guru is enough for śakti-pāta and mokṣa. Those who are not so advanced, have to approach a Guru for initiation and perform sādhanā. This is called madhyama śakti-pāta. People who are still less advanced have some moderate (manda) śakti-pāta and they get some interest in spiritual matter and they progress slowly.

UPĀYA : PATHWAY TO MOKṢA

According to Trika Śāstra there are four pathways to mokṣa suitable according to the spiritual progress of the jīva. They are (1) Anupāya, (2) Śāmbhava Upāya, (3) Śāktopāya or Jñānopāya, (4) Ānavopāya or Kṛtyopāya — the last being for the least advanced persons.

Anupāya

Here an means iṣat (slight or nominal). A jīva whose spiritual advancement (may be of the previous birth) is great, loses his individual consciousness in Śiva, at the word, touch or even the sight (darsāna) of Guru or even without that. They are instantly blessed with sakti-pāta (Descent of the Power of the Lord) or anugraha (Divine Grace) and attain mokṣa. As this upāya refers to a stage in which one achieves self-realization without any Yogic practice, Vasugupta, the founder of this sect, does not deal with this upāya either in his Śiva-Sūtra or Spanda Kārikā.

Śāmbhavopāya

This is suitable to spiritually advanced aspirants (sādhakas) as it is psychological, depending on meditation. For attaining “pure I-consciousness” (akṛtrima aham) one has to eliminate vikalpas or the ideation which differentiates between ‘this’ and ‘that’ and to attain the stage of pure consciousness (cit). Lord Śiva is all-pervading and hence beyond the petty differences of ‘this’ and ‘that’. To achieve this stage, one should meditate on the five functions of Śiva viz. creation (srṣṭi), maintenance of the world (sthiti), saṁhāra (withdrawal of the world within Himself), vilaya or pidhāna (covering, restriction) and anugraha (Divine Grace) and try to realize by meditation that all these very functions go on in his individual Self. As noted in Pratyabhijñā Sūtra (11) a samsārin (a person involved in samsāra) is deluded and is ignorant of his own (Śiva-like) powers. By meditation one should realize the identity of his individual Soul with Lord Śiva and try to get that experience of identity progressively.

Ultimately the persistent progress of assimilating experience to the consciousness of the sādhaka (experient) leads to adsorption in the Lord. When one experiences that the difference between 'I' or mine-ness and the objective world diminishes gradually, the aspirant (sādhaka) enters into a psycho-physical state called bhairavī mudrā. 'His (sādhaka's) eyesight becomes steady, unwinking and his attention is absorbed in the soul'.¹⁵

In this upāya no physical exertion is necessary as has been prescribed by Patañjali in his Yoga Sūtra.

Śāktopāya, Jñānopāya, Mantropāya

The term Śākta here has no relation with Śākta Saṃpradāya. Here the emphasis is on mantra-śakti (power of mantras). Hence the term śāktopāya. One has to meditate that "I am Śiva" (Śiva'ham) or "I am identical with the universe" (atmaivedam sarvam). Such meditation leads to the realization of the 'Supreme-I-consciousness' and the aspirant (sādhaka) reaches vikalpa-less self-realization.

In this upāya, meditation and not the physical activities of Pātañjala Yoga is advised.

Āṇavopāya or Kr̥tyopāya

This is meant for the beginners. It consists of external (physical) activities such as japa, prāṇāyāma, dhyāna (meditation) for the realization of the inner self. As acts like japa, dhyāna etc. are used in this path to mokṣa, it is also called kriyāyoga. It included what is called nādānusādhanā (concentration on the japa of so'ham that continuously goes on while we breathe. The number of breaths within twenty-four hours is expected to be 21,600. Concentration on this nāda (so'ham) is also recommended.) These Śaiva Ācāryas use technical terms for simple processes. Thus for sa they use the term sr̥ṣṭi bīja and for ha, samhāra bīja. It is presumed that the sound of ha and sa while inhaling and exhaling of breath is the hamsa mantra. It is also called ājapā gāyatrī. For 'breath' they use the term vāha. This upāya corresponds to the main steps of Pātañjala Yoga.

Although I have followed the Śiva Sūtra in the order of giving the upāyas, in practice it is the reverse. That is Ānavopāya leads to Śāktopāya which in its turn is supposed to lead to Śāmbhavopāya.

APPENDIX

A few more notes concerning the Trika system are added for clarification in the next chapter.

Tattvas

Kāsmira Śaivas are Monists. They had to explain the process of manifestation of the world from the first principle — Śiva. In the chapter of 'Fundamental Concepts' the first six tattvas "of the Universal experience" are explained — the hypothesis being that these tattvas do not obscure Śiva-hood and were termed as 'The Pure path' (śuddhādhvam).

But the fact of the matter is that 'Śivahood' is concealed or obscured. For this they put forward the hypothesis of 'tattvas limiting Individual experience'. If numbered in continuation of previous tattvas, they are (6) Māyā, (7) Kāla, (8) Vidyā, (9) Rāga, (10) Kalā, (11) Niyati. Of these Māyā is dominant and tattvas (7) to (11) are her kañcukas (bodices, i.e., coverings). As they obscure Śivahood, they are cumulatively called aśuddhādhvam (Impure Path). Māyā as already explained is (bhinna-vedya-prathā). The 'universal experience' is now restricted to the separation of experience of 'I' and 'This'. Māyā is presumed to draw a veil (āvaraṇa) on the Self and makes him forget his universal nature. Now to him 'I' and 'This', the world other than 'I' is distinct and different. The next five tattvas (7) to (11) are māyā's products and their functions are to 'cover' the nature of the Soul.

- (7) Kalā : To reduce drastically the universal power of the Self and reduce it to non-entity
- (8) Vidyā : To reduce the omniscience of the Soul and limit it to individual level.
- (9) Rāga : To reduce the pūrnatva, complete satisfaction of the universally conscious Self, and create desire for enjoyment of objects.
- (10) Kāla : To reduce the continuous, indivisible eternity (nityatva) and bring about the limitation of Time as Past, Present and Future.
- (11) Niyati : The unlimited freedom (svatantratā) and pervasiveness (vyāpakatā) of the Original Self are reduced. He is limited in regard to cause, space and form.*

After the 11th tattva — establishment of Duality by māyā, the remaining 24 tattvas are those of Sāṅkhyas. They are however classified as follows :

III. Tattvas of Limited Individuality

(12) Puruṣa

(13) Prakṛti

IV. Tattvas of Mental Operation (14-16)

(14) Buddhi (15) Ahaṁkāra (16) Manas

V. Tattvas of Sense Experience

The five powers of sense perception : Power of (17) Smelling, (18) Tasting, (19) Perception or seeing, (20) Tactile or feeling by senses, (21) Audition or hearing.

VI. Karmendriyas (conative Organs) Powers of

(22) Speaking, (23) Handling, (24) Locomotion, walking, (25) Excretion and (26) Sexual action.

VII. Tanmātras (Subtle Elements of Bhūtas)

(27) Śabda, (28) Sparsā, (29) Rūpa, (30) Rasa, (31) Gandha

* Summarised from ṣaṭ-triṁśat-sandoha esp. verses 8-12. On verse 12 the commentator Rājānaka explains that causality is the effect or function of niyati.

VIII. Tattvas of Materiality (Five Elements)

(32) Ākāśa, (33) Vāyu, (34) Tejas, (35) Āpas, (36) Pṛthivī

But elements from 12-36 are adopted from Sāṅkhyas and need not be discussed as they are not special to Trika Śaivism.

KŚ holds that this variety of the universe is within the 'heart-seed' of the Lord like the leaves, branches etc. of a Nyaggrodha tree are in its seed.¹⁶ That is how they establish their Monist view.

Svātantrya Vāda

This is no vāda. It is the special characteristic of Śiva. His independence in creating, destroying or doing anything at will by sheer Will power — without depending on māyā or other agency — is known as svātantrya (Independence). This sovereign free-will is svātantrya of Śiva.¹⁷

Ābhāsa Vāda

This term consists of two words : ā (= Iṣat 'slight') and bhāsa 'manifestation' or 'appearance'. The world is a slight manifestation of the Divine Being or Lord Śiva. Just as the beautiful coloured plumage of a peacock lies in an undifferentiated state in the plasma of its egg, the variegated universe lies within the Lord. The KŚ calls this mayūrāṇḍa-rasa-nyāya. Ābhāsa is external projection of the universe without any external agency — by mere will power.¹⁷ But the projector and the projection are the same just as sea-water and sea-waves (which are nothing but appearances) are the same. The manifestation or projection of the universe makes no difference in the fullness of the Lord as Śiva and the Universe are identical

Saḍadhvā

It is an esoteric topic. To state simplistically : from the point of parā śakti (Supreme Power) the manifestation of the Universe takes place in six forms or ways. Hence it is called (ṣaḍ-advā), advān = 'a way'. They may be classified as follows :

Subjective Side	Objective Side
Vācaka or Śabda or Varṇādhvā	Vācya or Artha or Kālādhvā
1. Varṇa	Kalā

2. Mantra

Tattva

3. Pada

Bhavana

Varṇādhvā is like pramā — a resting place of prameya (object), pramāṇa (means of knowledge) and pramātā (Experient). Here varṇa does not mean 'a colour' or 'a caste'. Varṇas are of two kinds. (1) māyīya and (2) non-māyīya. The māyīya varṇas arise out of non-māyīya varṇas which are pure, natural, innumerable. The vācaka śakti (Indicative power) of non-māyīya varṇas is inherent in māyīka varṇas as the power of hearing.

There is a polarisation between varṇa and kalā.

There are five kalās : (1) nivṛtti kalā, (2) pratiṣṭhā kalā, (3) vidyā kalā, (4) sāntā kalā (5) santātita kalā.

(1) Nivṛtti kalā consists mainly of the element Earth and according to Abhinavgupta, it has 16 bhuvanas (planes of existence). It is encircled on all sides by (2) pratiṣṭhā which in turn is encircled by (3) and so on up to (5). There is no bhavana in (5) but only Śiva-Śakti.

Śiva Transcends All Kalās.

Kevalādvaita and Īśvarādvaita

The term — advaita — being common to both the names of schools of Śāṅkara and Vasugupta, there is some confusion in lay people about Kevalādvaita (Śāṅkarādvaita) and Vasugupta's Īśvarādvaya-vāda as advaya and advaita apparently appear synonymous. But there are fundamental differences on the following points :

- (1) The Supreme Power according to Vedānta (including Śāṅkarādvaita) is the Brahman. KŚ regards Śiva as the Supreme-most power. Though later Śaivas like Śivādvaitins and Vira Śaivas regards Śiva and the Brahman as identical, KŚ differs. They say Parama Śiva has the power of creating, maintaining, or destroying the universe or doing and undoing anything by dint of his sheer Will-power. For Śiva is endowed with both powers of Prakāśa (knowledge) and Vimarśa (Power or Śakti — an approximate rendering of the term). But the Brahman is mere prakāśa (knowledge).

*About the tattvas and bhuvanas see Pratyabhijñāhrdayam, Jaideva Singh, pp. 152-55. The whole topic is esoteric and complicated.

- (2) The Brahman by itself is inactive. The World is created with avidyā associates with the Brahman (called Īśvara at this stage). Hence they call Brahman sānta (a euphemism for 'impotence').
- (3) With Śaṅkara the world is created by avidyā. Hence it is mithyā (unreal) but KŚ hold that the world is created by sheer Will Power of Śiva and as Śiva is real, the world created by him is automatically real. Reality of the world is a fundamental difference between KŚ and Śaṅkara.
- (4) According to Śaṅkara māyā is unreal (mithyā) — a misconstrued term according to anti-Śaṅkara authors. Śaṅkara holds that māyā is unreal (mithyā) and indescribable (anirvacanīya). But māyā is real and is one of the powers of Śiva.
- (5) Śaṅkara advocates the Upaniṣadic view that the world is nothing but Name and Form (nāma-rūpa). But KŚ states that the universe itself is Śiva or is illuminated by Śiva and it is cid-vilāsa.
- (6) According to Śaṅkara avidyā is destroyed by śravaṇa, manana and nididhyāsana. But according to Trika Śaivism ignorance is āṇava or pauruṣa and bauddhika. The bauddhika (of intelligence) can be destroyed by Śaṅkarite ways mentioned above, but āṇava ignorance is eliminated by the grace of God.

For this dīkṣā from a guru is essential.

There are a few other differences but the essential ones are summarised above.

Notes

1. dvaita-darśanādnivāsita prāye jivaloke rahasya-saṁpradāyo mā viccedī ।
2. kaścid daksīṇa-bhūmi pīṭha vasati loke'bhūt sumatiḥ ।
— Comm. on Tantrāloka
3. vedāc chaivam, tato vāmam, tato dakṣam, tataḥ kulam । tato matam tataścāpi trikaṁ sarvottamam matam
— Parātrimsīka-vivarāṇa, p. 92.
4. garbhādhānāditaḥ-kṛtvā yāvad udvāham eva ca ।

- tāvat tu-voidikam karma paścāt śaive hyananyabhāk* ।
— Saiva Agam quoted in Tantrāloka-viveka, p. 278.
5. aham īśvara-eva nānyaḥ, ity evam yaḥ sākṣātkāraḥ sa pratyabhijñēti ucyate . . .
— M. Abhyaṅkara's Darsanāṅkura Tikā on Sarva-Darsanasaṅgraha, p. 190
6. *śrīmat parama-śivasya punaḥ viśvottirna-viśvātmakaparamānandamaya-prakāśaikaghanasya evam-vidhameva śivādi-dharanyantam akhilam abhedena eva sphurati, na tu vastutaḥ anyat kiñcit.
grāhyam grāhakaṁ vā* ।
— Pratyabhijñā-hṛdaya-sūtra, 3
7. tam eva bhāntam anubhati sarvam । tasya bhāsā sarvam idam vibhāti ।
— Kaṭha Up., 5.15; Śv. Up., 6
8. *yadī (śivaḥ) nir-vimarsaḥ
syāt (saḥ) anīśvar jaḍaś ca prasajyeta*
Kṣemarāja — Parā-prāveśikā, p.2
9. na śivaḥ śakti-rahitaḥ na śaktir vyatirekiṇī । śakti-śakti mator bhedaḥ śaivair jātu na varṇyate ॥
— Śiva-drṣṭi, 3.23.
10. bandha-mokṣau na bhidyete sarvatraiva śivatvataḥ । pratiti-matram evātra, tāvata bandha-mokṣatā । tadātmatatve nāsti bandhaḥ tadābhāvāt na mokṣatā
— Śiva-drṣṭi, 365-69; 370-72
11. mokṣo hi nāma naivānyaḥ svarūpa-prathanam hi tat ।
— Tantrāloka, I, p. 192
12. śivābheda-pratitimātram mokṣaḥ tad-apratitis tu bandhaḥ
— Comm. on Śiva-drṣṭi, 3.70
13. nāyam ātma pravacanena labhyo, na medhayā, na bahunā śrutena yamaiveṣa vṛṇute tena labhyaḥ ।
— Kaṭha Upaniṣad (2.23)
— Mundaka Upaniṣad (3.23)
14. svayam badhnāti deveśaḥ

- svayam eva vimuñcati*
— Tantrāloka, 8.82
15. antar-lakṣyo bahir dṛṣṭir
nimiṣoṇmeṣa-varjitaḥ |
iyam sā bhairavī mudrā
16. yathā nyagrodha-bijasthaḥ śakti-rūpo mahā-drumaḥ |
tathā hṛdaya-bijasthaṁ viśvam etac carācaram ||
— Parā-trīṃśika, quoted by Kṣemarāja 17. svātantryaṁ nāma yathecchaṁ tatra icchā-prasārasya avighātaḥ
— Īśvara-pratyabhijñā, 1.5.13
18. cidātmaiva hi devo'ntaḥ sthitam icchāvasād bahiḥ |
yogīva nirupādānam arthajātam prakāśayet ||
— Īśvara-Pratyabhijñā, 1.5.7

Siddhānta Śaivism

It is believed that the designation Śaiva Siddhānta to this school of Śaiva Dualism (or rather Pluralistic Realism) is given by a Kashmirian author Sadyojyoti (9th cent. AD). In his small treatise Bhoga Kārikā (v = verse 2), he says that 'the term Siddhānta is applied to Śaivism based on twenty-eight Tantras like Kāmikāgama composed by Śiva'.¹ In this treatise on Mokṣa-Kārikā (v.79) based on the Śaivāgama called Ruru Siddhānta, he states that this Siddhānta leads to bhoga (worldly pleasures) and mokṣa (liberation from Samsāra).² In Parā-mokṣa-kārikā, he refutes both Pāśupatism and Vasugupta's Advayavāda. Brhaspati, the author of Śiva-tanu-Śāstra is another dualistic writer of that century. But we do not find a systematic treatment of this school in these works. After Vasugupta, the Kaṇṭha family, e.g., Rāmakaṇṭha, Nārāyaṇakaṇṭha upheld the banner of Dualism in Kashmir, but they were swamped by Vasugupta's followers from Kallaṭa to Abhinavagupta and others.

It is, however, not known how SŚ (Siddhānta Śaivism) reached Tamil Nadu in the sixth century AD, as Tirumūlar's Tirumandiram shows an advanced stage of SŚ, as compared with Sadyojyoti's treatises,³ Sekkilār's Periya Purāṇam

(PP) describes the lives of sixtythree canonical saints of ŚŚ who are known as Nāyanārs or Aḍiyārs.

The Śaivism popularized by these devotees of Śiva was a cosmopolitan creed. Many of these were of Vellāl community, some brāhmanas, some Ādivāsīs. Ordinary prejudices of castes did not weigh much on the minds of these Śiva-bhaktas (devotees of Śiva). High-caste Śiva-bhaktas dined with their low-caste comrades, Ādi Śaiva brāhmaṇa Sundarmūrti ate with Sermān Perumal Nāyanār and married a dancing girl; joint association of Appar (a Vellāl) and Sambandhar (a brāhmaṇa) is famous.

Even the brāhmanas were not expert in their traditional lore. Very few mastered Śaiva Āgamas. The rest of them were Aḍiyārs or Toṇḍars (bhaktas) pure and simple. About them C.V. Narayan Aiyar writes : “The saints of PP were mostly uncultured folk whose outstanding virtue was their intense Bhakti”. (op. cit. p. 205) About the ‘Victories’ over Jains, CVS remarks: “The victories won for Śaivism were through miracles and not through philosophical disputations. (op. cit. p. 205) The earliest author-saint-Tirumūlar was claimed to be a yogī from Mount Kailās who entered the dead body of a Tamilian — a ruse adopted by some saints. (For example, Lakuliśa, the founder of Pāsūpatism) to prevent inconvenient probe in the past of the teacher concerned. I believe that Tirumūlar was possibly a Tamilian who went to the North (probably to Kashmir) where he studied Śaiva Siddhānta and promulgated it in Tamil Nadu by his work Tirumandiram.

The legend about the origin of Vasugupta’s Śiva Sūtra recorded by Kṣemarāja regarding the age-old prevalence of Śaiva Dualism in Kashmir long before the ninth century AD, is supported by Tirumūlar’s work Tirumandiram in Tamil Nadu.

Tirumandiram⁴ (TM)

This is the first exposition of ŚŚ in Tamil Nadu. It consists of nine Tantras or chapters with an introduction (Tam = Tamilian Pāyiram) and contains 3,000 and odd verses. It deals with the ethical, metaphysical and mythological aspects of ŚŚ. Tirumūlar regards the Vedas and Āgamas of equal status as both are created by Lord Śiva. The work is a sort of religious miscellany.

The Tirumandiram (Summary)

The following summary of some of the important topics in each Tantra (chapter) will give some broad idea about the nature of the Tirumandiram.

The First Tantra begins with Upadesam (teaching), then it gives instructions on religious matters such as agnihotra (fire-worship), dāna (religious gifts) etc., ethical topics like ahimsā (non-violence), celibacy, preserving equanimity of mind, etc.

The Second Tantra narrates in a nutshell, legends about Śiva (from Purānas and Itihāsa, such as Agastya's arrival in the South, manifestation of liṅga, Dakṣa's sacrifice, etc. He interprets the destruction of three purās (tripura) as the removal of three malas (pāśas, bonds). He enumerates the five functions of Śiva viz. creation, sustenance and withdrawal (annihilation) of the world, concealment (of powers of Śiva), grace (to confer mokṣa), jīvas (souls) are classified as viññāna-kala, sakala and pralayākala. It concludes with an appeal to resort to guru.

The Third Tantra is a treatise on yoga, as Tirumūlar conceived it. The eight stages (aṣṭāṅgas) of Yoga of Patañjali are described. But this Śiva-yoga is different from Pātañjala Yoga. Even the powers (siddhis) acquired after the mastery over some stages are different. For example, mastery over āsana (posture) the first aṅga, secures the grace of Umā and attainment of stay in Amarāvati (capital of Indra).

Mastery over the stage called dhyāna (meditation) confers the power of moving in regions of gods Brahmā, Viṣṇu, etc. Patañjali does not mention such siddhis, after the mastery of these aṅgas. Tirumūlar describes the three great Śiva Yogas called Khecarī, Paryāṅka and Candra.

The Fourth Tantra is esoteric. It gives the Mantra-Śāstra or upāsana path of Tirumūlar such as ajapājapa, bhairavī mantra, six cakras like tripura, erolī cakra, navākṣarī cakra and describes pūrṇa śakti.

The Fifth Tantra describes certain Śaiva paths of liberation such as śuddha, aśuddha, mārga and kaḍum (i.e., extremely pure). There is the elaboration of the four parts of Tantras viz. caryā, kriyā, jñāna and yoga. The three auspicious paths of Śiva-realization viz. sakhā-mārga (propitiation of Śiva as if he were a friend), satputra-mārga (path of behaviour of a good son up to Śiva), dāsa-mārga (bhakti-path regarding oneself as Śiva's humble servant), the four categories of liberation viz. sālokya (living in the same region as that of the Lord), sāmīpya (stay in the vicinity of the Lord) sārūpya (similarity in the form like that of the Lord) : four types of Divine grace from 'slow' to 'very intensive', criticism (censuring) of other non-Śaiva paths.

The Sixth Tantra is very useful to the common man. It deals with Śiva-guru-darsana (view of Śiva as guru), the importance of vairāgya (detachment), tapas (penance) and knowledge. It ends with the description of worthy and unworthy people.

The Seventh Tantra pertains to yoga. It describes six yogic cakras, ṣaḍadhvā in SŚ six types of lingas viz. aṅḍa, piṇḍa, sadāśiva, ātmā, jñāna, and Śiva, need of self-control, characteristics of sadguru (spiritual preceptor). Then there is a discussion on yoga, different mudrās, abstruse discussion on bindu, five ādityas, prāṇāyāma, the five types of prāṇa viz. puruṣa, anu, jīva, paśu and bodha.

Lastly the Tantra appeals to people to follow the true path.

The Eighth Tantra deals with fundamental teachings of ŚŚ, its differences from the tenets of other schools, eleven spiritual stages, the triads of three pādas e.g. (tat-tvamasi), doṣas, kāraṇas and sūnyas. Three categories of each of the three stages — being awake, dream-state and (sound) sleep. The significance of *mahāvākya*s such as tattvamasi, aham brahmāsmi.

The Ninth and the Last Tantra records Tirumūlar's spiritual experiences such as Dance of Śīva, sight of his real self. It concludes with the eulogy of the omnipresent Lord.

The Śaivism of Tirumūlar

A few topics of ŚŚ may be gleaned from TM (Tirumandiram). There were four forms of Śaivism: śuddha, aśuddha, mārga, and kaḍum śuddha (very pure) and four sādhanas: caryā, kriyā, yoga and jñāna (the usual four parts of tantras). He discusses the four paths (mārga) to Śīva-realization viz. sanmārga, sakhā mārga, sat-putra mārga and dāsa mārga. We find herein the concept of śakti nipāta (descent of power) and its 'speed' of descent: manda (slow) mandatara (slower), tīvra (incessant) and tīvratara (more incessant).

Tirumūlar emphasizes the importance of Śīva-bhakti. He attempts to synthesize Vedānta and Siddhānta (Āgama). When Vedānta is re-inforced by practice, it becomes Vedānta-Siddhānta. He uses the term liṅga in the sense of sign or index and not the globular stone deity worshipped today. The greatest contribution of Tirumūlar is the synthesis of Vedānta and Siddhānta. It may be summarised as follows:

1. When the paraguru instructs the disciple that the Śīva in the aṇḍa (universe) is the same as the Śīva in himself, it corresponds to the mahāvākya — tattvamasi "That art thou".
2. When one sees the Sadāśīva Liṅga and receives divine grace it corresponds to the Truth in the mahāvākya — aham brahmāsmi.

3. When the ātma-līṅga is visualized and when one rests in pure cit it is paralleled to the realization of brahmaivāham.
4. When the jñāna-līṅga is seen, the stage is indicated prajñānam brahma.

In the final stage when Śiva līṅga is seen, there is the final union of jīvātman and paramātman and as there is no distinction between the preceptor and the disciple, there is no mahāvākya. (CVN Aiyyar, p. 280)

The whole matter is esoteric which a spiritual master can explain.

SAMAYĀCĀRYAS

After Tirumular we have four great Tamil saints. Appar (AD 600-81), Sambandhar or Tirujñāna Sambandhar (AD 644-60), Māṇikkavācakar (AD 660-92) and Sundaramūrti (AD 710-35).⁵ By their sweet devotional songs and ideal Śiva-bhakti, they are credited to have ousted Buddhism and Jainism from Tamil Nadu and re-established Śaivism. These saints are regarded as the ideal representatives of paths to Śiva-realization viz. dāsa mārḡa or the path of a servant (service to Śiva), sat-putra mārḡa (the path of an affectionate good son), sakhā-mārḡa (the path of a friend) or sakhya-bhakti and sanmārḡa or the true path. These paths (mārḡas) are regarded as corresponding to (1) caryā, (2) kriyā, (3) yoga, and (4) jñāna sections in other schools of Śaivism. The influence of these intensely devotional songs is so great that they are called Tewāram and are regarded as Tamilian Vedas. They are sung even today in Śiva temples.

Appar

Appar was a rich Vellāl (name of his community) of South Arcot district in the reign of King Mahendra I of Kanchi. In search of truth, he embraced Jainism first but later he was miraculously saved by Śiva and so he became a Śaiva. Though he was not a brāhmaṇa, he knew Upaniṣads and Purāṇas as we hear the echoes of Upaniṣadic philosophy in his songs. He was called Appar (Father, Daddie) by Sāmbandhar (b. AD 639) and thenceforth he became well-known as Appar. Appar insisted on the japa of five syllabic mantra of Śiva : śivāya namaḥ.

Curiously enough Tirumūlar, Appar and Sāmbandhar believe that Para Viṣṇu and Para Śiva are one in reality and believe that in the liberation stage (Śiva-mukti) there is no duality between the individual soul and Śiva. At the lower level, the mythological gods Śiva and Viṣṇu worship each other.

The syncretic icon of Hari-Hara is the implication of the Purāṇic legend of Śiva's fascination for Mohinī (Viṣṇu). Appar believed that Śaivism is the real path to mokṣa. He used to impart the mantra śivāya namaḥ for the realization of Śiva who is beyond 'Name and Form'.

Tirujñāna Sāmbandhar (c. AD 644-60)

Sāmbandhar (Samb.) was a junior contemporary of Appar. He was a brāhmaṇa from Shiyālī (Brahmapuri) PP (Periya Purāṇa) attributes to him a number of miracles such as Śivā, offering him a pearl palanquin (SP = Sāmbandhar Purāṇa, v. 226) : curing of the ailment of Malava Princess (SP, vv. 318 ff) — an incident mentioned by Sāmb. in (v. 441), resuscitating a dead person at his widow's request (PP Sāmb Purāṇa, v. 481) — an incident attested by Sāmb. himself (PP Sāmb. 564-70).

But the most important miracle relates to his victory over his Jain rivals in the presence of the King of Madurai. To prove the superiority of their religion, Sāmb. and his Jain rival were asked to write on a palm-leaf and those two leaves were consigned to fire. And lo and behold, the fire did not burn Sāmb.'s palm-leaf. Sāmb. sang the prayer on the leaf to the King (PP Samb. v. 345). It should be noted that in these contests with Jains, matters were decided not on the strength of philosophical disputations but on the occurrences of miracles — some of which are attested by Appar.

PP (v. 1253) tells us that when Samb. and his wife went to the Śiva temple at Nallūr Perumaṇam, he prayed to the deity: "O God, bless us with death" (v. 3848) and immediately he and his wife got merged in the vyotiṣ or brilliance of the deity.

And to this day, that Samb.'s song is sung in that Śiva temple at Nallūr Perumaṇam.

Śaivism in Saṁbandhar

Samb. believes in two grades of Śiva. The higher form of Śiva is similar to that of Upaniṣadic Brahman. The Higher Śiva is formless and beyond the ken of gods Brahmā and Viṣṇu of the lower grade, though lower grade of Trinity of Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Rudra are created by Him. Vaiṣṇavas too believe in two grades of Viṣṇu and the Trinity of lower grade (Brahmā and others) were created by Mahāviṣṇu.

The Higher Śiva is the creator, sustainer and annihilator of the entire universe (v. 296 and v. 3.448). It reminds us of Taittiriya Upaniṣad, III.1. The *Māṇḍūkya Upaniṣad*⁷ calls the Brahman 'quiescent Śiva' beyond the ken of sight, comprehension, etc.,⁸ a characteristic of Higher Śiva in Saṁbandhar. He mentions the Purāṇic legend of Śiva manifesting himself as a column of fire to Brahmā and Viṣṇu (v. 148.9).

In Samb. there are some clear concepts of SS Such as mention of three types of malas (v. 119-6), the five functions of Śiva viz. creation, sustenance, withdrawal (annihilator of the universe), concealment and grace. But instead of calling them function, he calls them types of Śiva's grace (Tam. Arul) (v. 1433).

Saṁbandhar emphasizes the importance of five-syllabled mantra (śivāya namaḥ) as the esoteric essence of the Vedas, the japa of which is essential for liberation. Brahmā and Viṣṇu could visualize the fire-column form of Śiva due to the japa of this mantra. Saṁbandhar advises the age-old Tamilian path of bhakti (devotion) consisting of smearing oneself with holy ashes, worship of Śiva, japa of His name, etc. in Tevāram.

It is significant to note that none of these ancient Śaiva saints, Tirumūlar, Appar or Saṁbandhar underestimate Mahā Viṣṇu.

Māṇikka-Vācakar (AD 660-92)

The Dravidian spelling is Maṇikka-Vāsagar but I follow Surendranath Dasgupta's Sanskritised form Vācakar. It means 'a person of rubylike (precious) speech'. It may be his later title, but PP (Periya Purāṇa) accepts it as a personal name.

Māṇikka-Vācakar was an officer of Pāṇḍya King Arimardana of Madura. The king became a disciple of his servant-saint Māṇikka-Vācakar. He abdicated his kingdom in favour of his son and led a pious life. Māṇikka-Vācakar then went to Chidāmbaram which was then a centre of Buddhism. There he had a religious disputation with Buddhists. But accounts of the disputation show that neither side knew much of Buddhism. S.N. Dasgupta doubts whether such disputations could oust Buddhism from Tamil Nadu.⁹

The Tiru-Vācaka (TV) is a book of poems by Māṇikka Vācakar. It is full of devotional sentiments and philosophical ideas. There he describes his spiritual progress.¹⁰ In Śiva Purāṇam section, he describes his realization of the beginningless and endless Śiva as dwelling in his heart and Śiva's dance, etc. were of the god in his heart. Śiva is embodiment of Bliss. After purification, i.e., removal of malas, he experiences God as Supreme Effulgence (parañjyoti). He finally reaches the stage called ānandātita (beyond bliss) and realizes the parāparam (Supreme-most Śiva).

Mānikka-Vācakar's teaching as gleaned from his songs (verses) are as follows :

He accepts the fundamental triad of pati, paśu, pāśa. It is due to Śiva's grace (Tamil — Arul) that an individual can progress spiritually and all the three malas (pāśas or bonds) viz āṇava, kārma and māyīya are completely removed. The individual soul becomes free and stays in spiritual bliss in the vicinity of Śiva. Spiritual preceptor (guru) is needed for the destruction or disappearance of the object of knowledge (jñeya), the knower (jñātā) and knowledge (jñāna) in the samādhi stage, and the need of Śiva's grace for mokṣa.¹¹

As noted by S.N. Dasgupta, all the characteristics of SŚ are detailed in the Vāyaviya Saṁhitā of Śiva Mahāpurāṇa.

*Sundar or Sundarmūrti*¹² (circa AD 716-35)

Sundar or Sundaramūrti, the boy-saint is regarded as the ideal of sakhā mārga (sakhya bhakti). Not merely from the mythological PP, but information gleaned from his songs, we find him requesting Śiva pleasures in life including a girl (called) Śāṅgīlī and Śiva granted it. He lost his eyesight after marriage with Śāṅgīlī and he requested Śiva 'to give a stick' (v. 54.4). He blames Śiva for his blindness : "O God, you made me blind for Śāṅgīlī" (v. 63.4). He complains : "O Lord, I try to speak with women but they discard me calling me a blind man. It is so humiliating, O Lord." (v. 9) But his other verses are noted for intense devotional fervour couched in the sweetest language.

Sundar went as a guest to King Cermān Perumal. There he prayed Śiva for taking him to Kailāsa. The request was promptly granted by Śiva. He was only eighteen years old then.

These Tamilian saints were ardent devotees. They were not experts in Vedic lore but were familiar with Purāṇic legends about Śiva. They gave philosophical turns to these legends to suit the Śaivite cases. (For example, Śiva-Mohinī incident at the basis of the concept of Hari-Hara icon with a view to emphasize the identity of Śiva and Viṣṇu.

There is, however, no systematic treatment of the system of Siddhānta Śaivism in Tamil then. It was in the thirteenth century AD and after that great Sanātanācāryas like Aghora Śiva, Meyakandadeva, Aruṇa Nandi, Umāpati Śivācārya who produced systematic treatises on Siddhānta Śaivism (in Tamil and Sanskrit).

But some three to four centuries before the Tamil Sanātanācāryas, we have a standard systematic treatise on Siddhānta Śaivism called Tattva Prakāśa by King Bhoja of Dhara (AD 1018-63). It is commented upon by Kumāradeva and Aghora Śiva — the great Sanātanācārya of SŚ of Tamil Nadu. This work is cited as authority in the Śaiva-darśana section of Sarvadarśana-Saṅgraha of Mādhavācārya.

Siddhānta Śaivism in Tattva-Prakāśa

Like other schools of Śaivism, this school subscribes to the theory of three categories viz. pati, paśu and pāśa. (In Tamil, Irāi, Uyir and Kaṭṭu). Mādhava, in Sarva-darśana-Saṅgraha (Sds) calls SŚ 'a Mahā-Tantra' with three categories and four feet.¹³ Bhojadeva differs from others and adds to the usual three pāśas viz. (1) (āṇava) mala, (2) karma and (3) māyā, two more pāśas viz. (4) the world created by māyā and (5) tirodhāna (power to conceal) and designates this group as Arthapañcaka in Tattva-Prakāśa (TP). In fact (3) and (4) are the subtle and gross aspects of māyā and (5) is inclusion of Śiva's power of tirodhāna as a pāśa — a point emphasized by Kumāradeva in Tātparyā-dīpikā (TD) a commentary on TP.

Though consciousness or caitanya is a common factor between pati (Śiva) and paśu (souls), the latter are bound by saṃsāra and include everyone from god Brahmā to immobiles in this category, Śiva being their controller is hence called Paśupati.¹⁵

In the very introduction of TP, Bhojadeva states : Śiva is essentially cit (consciousness), omnipresent, eternal one, bliss incarnate (Śaṃbhu), bestower of grace on all, quiescent, self-luminous (ever-illuminating) — master (i.e., of unobstructed sovereignty), the sole seed of the universe.¹⁶ He is called Śiva as he is untouched by the beginningless (āṇava) mala.¹⁷ He is disinterested (udāsīna) but by his very presence the universe is created, as rice-grains are turned into food by the presence of fire though not touched by it.¹⁸ SŚ differs considerably from KŚ, in explaining world-creation. In KŚ, Śiva is endowed with prakāśa and vimarśa. By his sheer will-power, without any upādāna (material cause or any other agency). Śiva creates (etc.) the universe. In SŚ Śiva is the operative or efficient cause (like a potter) and māyā is the material cause (clay in case of a pot) and Śiva's śaktis serve as kāraṇa or instrumental cause. It is the Prakṛti-pariṇāma-vāda and not Brahma-pariṇāma-vāda as in the Vedānta.

In SŚ, māyā is real and not mithyā as in Sāṅkara Vedānta. Māyā is a subtle prakṛti and hence an invisible material cause¹⁹ which pervades everything (i.e., its products) from kāla (time) down to the gross element, earth. Just as earth (clay) pervades the entire (earthen) pot²⁰ Bhojadeva firmly refutes the attempts of the author of Ratnatraya to regard māyā as a part of Śiva. He states, when you accept māyā as the material cause (upādāna) and try to identify it with operative cause (Śiva), you cannot explain the creation of the universe.²¹ To argue that Śiva and His powers (for example māyā) are related to each other by dharma-dharmī relation, it gives the credit if creation to powers (māyā) and Śiva, the basis (dharmīn) of powers is reduced to non-entity — an absurd position.²² Bhojadeva concludes that māyā, though mūlaprakṛti (initial primordial nature) is after all an upādāna — and is different from Śiva.

A few more peculiar concepts about Śiva may be mentioned :

- (1) Nirguṇatva does not mean 'attributelessness' of Śiva. It means that Śiva is devoid of the guṇas of māyā viz. sattva, rajas and tamas.²³
- (2) Nirākāratva does not mean 'formlessness' but that Śiva pervades all forms. Pauṣkarāgama says: "How can one's intelligence grasp a formless object".²⁴ To solve this problem of devotees who wish to adore Śiva, Śiva was presumed to have a body consisting of the five mantras from the Taittirīya Āraṇyaka, 17.1-5 which form the basis of the Pāśupata school. The five mantras, the pratīkas (opening word) of which are: iśāna forms the countenance or face of Śiva, tatpuruṣāya, the heart, aghora, the secret part, and the like. But this is an imaginative theorizing. The Līṅga Purāṇa identifies Śiva's person with omkāra with the Ṛgveda as the mouth, Sāmaveda as the tongue and the like. The Pauṣkarāgama is conscious of this imaginative theorization and concludes: "such a form is remembered to be such for the protection of the aspirant"²⁶ (sādhaka). Further it addresses Śiva : "You with a form can be appreciated. The intellect cannot grasp a formless entity".²⁷

It is with such a body constituted of mantras that Śiva performs the five functions: viz. creation (sending out of himself the universe), sustenance, withdrawal (of the universe within Him), concealment and grace (to grant mokṣa).

Māṇikka-Vācakar who supports the ancient concept of aṣṭamūrti Śiva (Śiva pervading eight forms viz. the five elements, the sun, the moon and the sentient man) firmly states that Śiva transcends these forms and has no name, no forms and no characteristic marks.

- (3) The svātantrya-vāda : According to KŚ, svātantrya means absolute free-will or vimarśa. But in SŚ, it means 'not being subject to the instruction of others'. Śiva is thus free but he dispenses fruits or results according to the karmas of the jīvas.²⁸ Due to such dispensation, Śiva cannot be charged with partiality (vaiṣamya) or cruelty (nairghrṇya). Just as the sun spreads his rays equally all over the world, some lotuses bloom immediately and some late according to their nature but the sun treats all equally.²⁹ This is not niyatīvāda as Śiva exercises his power and grace and grants mokṣa to the deserving. He exercises his functions to help paśus to attain mokṣa. The term Śiva was later extended to spiritually advanced souls, called Mantra Mantreśvara, and released souls also.

Paśu (Individual Soul)

We have seen (supra pp. 12-13) that individual souls are not born or created and that originally they are of the same status as that of Śiva. It is due to malas or pāśas (bonds) that their powers are severely restricted and from the point of powers as jīvātman (individual soul) is like an atom. "When freed from the bonds through the grace of Śiva, they become veritable Śiva."³⁰ As noted before (supra p. 14) the unanswered question is how Śiva(s) got bound or sullied with the so-called beginningless āṇava mala and why Parama Śiva bound the *jīvātman*s at all. As the concept of pāśa (bondage) or mala is already discussed (supra pp. 13-15) we proceed with the classification of these paśus. Paśus are classified according to their bondages (malas) as follows:³¹

1. Vijñānakala : Sullied with the beginningless āṇava mala.
2. Pralayākala : Bound with āṇava and karma malas.
3. Sakala : Bound with āṇava, karma and māyā malas.

Here kalā means 'a part or a particle referring to the condition of empirical existence'.

Sakala-jīva is the soul with all the empirical conditions of existence and is associated with all the three bonds (malas). The concept of pralayākala jīva is peculiar. It means the condition of a jīva during the period of a pralaya when the universe is dissolved. As there is no existence of māyā during that period, the jīva has only two bonds viz. āṇava and kārma (karmas do not get destroyed during the pralaya). After the period of the pralaya, pralayākala becomes sakala. The vijñānakala jīvas (with āṇava mala only) remain in the region of suddha māyā till they get Śiva-mukti through Śiva's grace. They are not born again in samsāra.

Another belief is that Śiva gives some spiritual knowledge to these spiritually advanced people and appoints them on the posts of vidyeśvara (masters of vidyā).

After pralaya, those jīvas whose āṇava and karma malas are not mature, get a pūryaṣṭaka body (body constituted of eight elements) according to their karma and are born in different species,³³ to experience the fruits of their actions.

In his commentary on TP, 1-11 and 12, the commentator Kumāradeva enumerates the constituents of pūryaṣṭaka or liṅga-śarīra as follows:

- (1) Five sense-organs of sound, touch, form, taste and smell, (i.e., the physical apparatus) plus the psychic apparatus viz. manas (mind), buddhi (intelligence) and ahamkāra (ego, 'I'ness).
- (2) He quotes another source which is more extensive. "The eight constituents" are as follows :
 - (1) Five conative sense-organs, (2) Five cognitive organs, (3) Group of four psychic apparatus like mind, intelligence, etc., (4) Five vital airs, (5) Five tanmātras, (6) kāma (desire), (7) karma (action) and (8) avidyā.³⁴

Pūryaṣṭaka is a special term used by SŚ for the Purāṇic term liṅga-śarīra, KŚ however, is silent about its constituents.

Pāśa (Bondage)

All sects of Śaivism accept three malas or pāśas viz. āṇava, karma, and māyā. But SŚ adds tirodhāna (concealment) as the fourth pāśa. The last is the power of Śiva, and not that of a jīvātman. As the topic is discussed in details (supra pp. 13-15, 47-49) it will be briefly noted here about māyā some special points may be noted.

Like other Śaiva sects SŚ uses the terms mala, ajñāna, etc. for the first (i.e., āṇava) mala. As TP, 1.17 states, it conceals the powers of knowledge and action (jñānaśakti and kriyāśakti). It is beginningless like husk on the grain or green patina on copper but can be wiped out by spiritual knowledge (jñāna-nivartya).³⁵ Though āṇava mala is not completely washed off, some souls are spiritually advanced. Śiva, out of grace, appoints them on some vidyeśvara post. Hence it is called adhikāra mala.

Karma

Karma is regarded as a powerful bondage from which it is difficult to extricate oneself. It drags the souls like beasts.³⁶ It is beginningless like seed-sprout continuity. It is of two types: (i) dharma conferring merits and (ii) adharmas resulting in sins — dharma-karmas are iṣṭa, i.e., Vedic and pūrta-karmas are tāntric. Dhārmic acts are niṭya (to be observed daily like agnihotra — fire-worship), naimittika (occasional, e.g. performance of iṣṭi after the birth of a son) and kāmya performed with some desire (such as performing sacrifices for getting a place into heaven). By non-performance of dhārmic acts and committing immoral deeds, the person contracts sin. (TP, p. 59) Both merits and sins are bondages which condition the transmigration of the soul. It is Śiva's grace which releases man from this bond.

By the way, it may be noted that Kumāradeva has not consulted Smṛti texts and defined iṣṭa and pūrta dharmas. According to Smṛtis, pūrta-dharmas are works of public utility such as digging wells, construction of temples, while iṣṭa-dharmas include agnihotra, recitation of Vedas, performance of penance (vide Atri Smṛti 43, 44).

Concept of Māyā

According to SŚ māyā is the material cause of the universe. It is real and eternal.³⁷ The Śaiva Siddhāntas believe in sat-kārya-vāda (the necessary existence of an effect inherent in the cause.) The world is non-intelligent (a-cit), so its material cause māyā is a-cit. Hence, by itself, it cannot create unless it is activated by some intelligent one (cid-vastu) which is Śiva. Conversely Śiva by himself cannot create the world — unless both Śiva and māyā are united.³⁸

Śiva alone is sat-, māyā is different from, other than, Śiva, hence a-sat. The term a-sat does not mean 'non-existent'. Not only is māyā real (vastu-rūpā) but its products or effects, the tattvas and the world are real (TP, pp. 71-72).

They derive the term māyā from two roots — $\sqrt{mā}$ and $\sqrt{yā}$. Mā = 'one in which everything is dissolved'. Yā = 'that from which everything goes out' (is produced or created). It provides the soul with a body (tanu), sense-organs, objects of enjoyment. Activated by the power of intelligence (cicchakti) of Śiva, it creates the universe. It is due to its power of delusion that māyā is regarded as a bond.³⁹

ŚŚ regards two grades of māyā : (1) Pure and (2) Impure.

PURE — ŚUDDHA, OR MAHĀMĀYĀ

It is untouched by āṇava and karma malas. By his powers: icchā (wish or desire), jñāna (knowledge), kriyā (will or action), Śiva creates from śuddha-māyā, nāda, bindu, sādākhya, māheśvarī and śuddha vidyā. Nāda is śiva-tattva, bindu is śakti-tattva. Nāda is due to the operation of jñāna-śakti on śuddha-māyā and bindu arises when kriyā-śakti operates on nāda. When jñāna and kriyā-śakti operate on bindu in equal measure sādākhya is created. māheśvarī is derived from this, when more of kriyā-śakti operates along with jñāna. Śuddha-vidyā is evolved from māheśvarī when jñāna-śakti is a dominant factor.

The group of the above five evolutes of śuddha vidyā are called Śiva-tattvas or preraka kāṇḍa. The terms śiva, śakti, sādāśiva, vidyā have different implications in KŚ as Śiva is both nimitta and upādāna kāraṇas in KŚ. ŚŚ holds that it is from śuddha māyā that the system of sounds, parā, paśyantī, madhyamā and vaikharī are evolved. Parā is the subtle, supreme sound and is located in the navel region of man. Paśyantī is a grosser, undifferentiated sound somewhere in the region of the heart. Madhyamā is grosser still but not articulate. It is presumed to be in the throat region. Vaikharī is the articulate sound we produce with our mouths. Meaning (import) is communicated by a śakti manifested with letters and words. This capacity is called sphoṭa by grammarians. The remaining tattvas (given in Appendix III of chapter 1) are the evolutes of aśuddha māyā or mohinī (the deluder). Due to the impurity of this māyā, Śiva does not operate on it. Sadāśiva produces from aśuddha-māyā three tattvas viz. kāla (time), niyati (destiny), kalā (a digit or a particle) and from kalā, two more tattvas (principles) viz. vidyā (knowledge) and rāga (attachment) evolve. These five tattvas constitute the sheaths or kañcukas of the soul. The soul as conditioned by these tattvas becomes puruṣa tattva.

The counterpart of puruṣa is prakṛti. It arises out of kalā by the operation of Rudra. The five sheaths along with puruṣa and prakṛti are known as vidyā tattvas. They are called bhojayitr kāṇḍa — the part of evolution causing enjoyment. Citta (mind) and buddhi (intellect) are the evolutes of prakṛti in its unmanifest (avyakta) stage. From buddhi is evolved ahaṁkāra (ego, I-ness). There are three varieties of ahaṁkāra — that which is predominated by sattva-guṇa is taijasa, by rajo-guṇa is vaikṛta and by tamo-guṇa, bhūtādi. It should be noted that Sāṅkhyas call sāttvika ahaṁkāra as vaikṛta and the rājasa ahaṁkāra as taijasa.

From taijasa ahaṁkāra are evolved organs of senses and manas (mind), from vaikṛta ahaṁkāra conative organs and from bhūtādi, the subtle elements called tan-mātras.*

The above discussion shows the close relation between māyā and the tattvas. We have seen that māyā as a mala or bondage of the soul provides the soul with the body, locations and objects of enjoyment. It is called bhogyakāṇḍa.

*Refer to tattvas (supra pp. 16-17 and Appendix III (supra p. 26)). The whole matter is esoteric theorizing.

Nirodha or Tirodhāna

To the usual list of three pāśas, Bhojadeva adds the fourth pāśa viz. tirodhāna. To justify this addition, he says that pāśas (bonds) are themselves insentient. It is Śiva who infuses the power (āveśa) of restricting the original Śiva-like powers of the jīvātman (soul). This restricting power (puruṣa-tirodhāyikā) is in a sense a bondage. Hence four pāśas should be recognised.⁴⁰

Bhojadeva at one place (TP, p. 33) accepts five pāśas viz. mala (āṇava), karma, māyā, the world created by māyā and tirodhāna. His commentator Kumāradeva tries to defend him by saying that the gross (sthūla) māyā and subtle (sūkṣma) māyā constitute but one pāśa. Hence the number of pāśas remain⁴¹ four only.

The Paths to Mokṣa (Liberation)

Śaivism is no arm-chair philosophy. It is meant for liberation from samsāra and as such has prescribed paths to mokṣa. They have used the terms caryā, kriyā, yoga and jñāna which are used for the parts of Āgama texts. They hold that these terms stand for the four consecutive paths to Liberation. They are :

DĀSA MĀRGA (CORRESPONDING TO DĀSYA BHAKTI OF NINEFOLD PATH OF BHAKTI)

The aspirant is to cleanse the Śiva Temple, worship Śiva — icon or Linga — present therein, sing eulogies or stotras of Śiva, to render physical service to devotees of Śiva who in a way represent god Śiva himself. This is the caryā path.

SAT-PUTRA MĀRGA

In due course, the services as a servant of Śiva create affection for the lord as a son feels for his father. This qualitative change in rendering service to Śiva is important. This corresponds to kriyā.

SAKHĀ-MĀRGA (CORRESPONDING TO SAKHYA BHAKTI OF THE NINEFOLD DIVISION)

In this stage, by practice of yogic practices such as pratyāhāra, dhyāna, dhāraṇā, the aspirant establishes internal intimate relation with God. The main difference from the previous two paths and this is that they are external. Here, in this path of contemplation, senses are withdrawn from external objects and the mind is concentrated on Śiva.

These three paths are preparatory to the final sanmārga, the path of knowledge of sat, i.e., Śiva. It is at this stage that by Śiva's grace, the beginningless (āṇava) mala is washed out and the soul (jīvātman) attains śivatva — not complete Śivahood. The soul is not completely absorbed in Śiva as believed by Advaitins of Śaṅkara School. SŚ believes that the pati-jñāna in the mokṣa stage is the soul's knowledge through the Lord.

It is believed that the successful completion of these stages (which are mutually inter-linked) lead to the types of liberation called salokatā (stay in the same region as that of Śiva) samīpatā (stay in proximity to the Lord), sarūpatā (similarity in appearance like the Lord) and sāyujyatā (not absorption in Śiva but Śivatva — the bliss of Śivahood. Such jīvātman has not the capacity to wield Śiva's five functions — from creation to conferment of grace on the devotee).

Presentation in Tamil Literature⁴²

In Śaiva Siddhānta Literature in Tamil the spiritual progress of the aspirant is given as follows :

The soul must equate the two types of karmas — good (puṇya) and evil (pāpa) — as both constitute the bond — karma. When such an attitude — indifference to merit and demerit — is confirmed, it is the mala-paripāka (maturation of the mala). At this stage the soul no longer cognizes with the evolutes of aśuddha māyā nor with its own feeble intelligence. The soul has no use now for pāśa jñāna and paśu-jñāna as it is now filled with glory of Śiva through contemplation. Now God blesses him with his grace called śakti-nipāta (the descent of Śiva's power). After this descent of Śiva's grace, Śiva reveals Himself to the aspirant soul and imparts to him the knowledge (jñāna) that liberates him. The soul is now in the jñāna-mārga in śuddha avasthā in the state of grace (Tamil Arul). This state is different from kevala avasthā (a state of darkness (or Tam. Irul) and the sakala avasthā — a state of confused knowledge (Tam. Marul). The soul in the Śuddha avasthā is viññānakala to whom Śiva manifests Himself as its (soul's) inner light. To pralayākala souls, Śiva appears in a divine supernatural form and to the sakala jīva, he appears as a human guru (spiritual preceptor). He gives the sakala jīva, dīkṣā, weans him away from association with malas and makes him realize his own Śivatva.

SŚ believes in jīvan-mukti — liberation within the lifetime of jīva. During the remaining part of life, such a person experiences the residue of his prārabdha karma but it does not affect the soul's perfection.

Concept of Mokṣa

SŚ does not believe in the complete absorption of the jīva (soul) in Śiva as believed in Advaita. SŚ believes that in the mokṣa stage, the individual soul retains his identity but enjoys the bliss of Śivahood. He does not have the power to exercise the five exclusive functions (from creation to grace) of God. As all his malas are removed, he does not revert to saṁsāra. This stage is the superior (para) mokṣa stage. In case of those whose karma and māyā malas are destroyed but there is some slight residue of āṇava mala have a body created from bindu. Śiva appoints such advanced souls on vidyeśvarī posts. These souls are in the aparā (lower stage) of mokṣa. With SŚ mokṣa (liberation) is not a negative concept of duḥkhānta but a positive Śiva-like blissful state.

As noted in the Introduction (supra p. 1) it is interesting to compare the speculations of this Dualistic Śaivism with Dualistic Vaiṣṇavism of Madhva.

- (1) Like SŚ, Madhva affirms the multiplicity of souls, the difference between God and Souls, difference between souls inter se and between matter, souls and God. God is independent while souls and matter are dependent on God.
- (2) Like SŚ, Madhva believes that in the creation of the universe, God is the efficient cause (nimitta kāraṇa) like a potter, clay or earth is the material cause (upādāna) and other śaktis (like the stick that moves the potter's wheel) are the instrumental cause.
- (3) Importance of bhakti for obtaining supreme spiritual knowledge and the necessity of the descent of God's grace (anugraha) for liberation.

Notes

1. siddhānta-śabdah . . . yoga-rūḍhyā śīva-praṇiteṣu kāmikādiṣu daśāṣṭā-daśasu tantreṣu prasiddhaḥ |
Bhoga-Kārikā, 2 (Quoted by K. C. Pande in Bhāskarī)
2. ruru-siddhānta-samsiddhau bhoga-mokṣau sa-sādhanau vacmi sādha-ka-bodhāya leśato yukti-sanskṛtau
 — Mokṣa-Kārikā, 79
3. C.V. Narayan Aiyar, Origin and Early History of Śaivism in South India, pp. 224 ff.
4. Op. cit. (summarised from the section on Tirumandirum) pp. 247-84.
5. Op. cit. pp. 423-31, 444-662 for these dates.
6. Op. cit. pp. 372-74.
7. yato vā imāni bhūtāni jāyante |
yena tātāni jīvanti |
yat prayānty abhisamviśanti |

- tad vijjñāsasva tad brahmeti* |
— Taittiriya Upaniṣad, 3.1
8. adrśyam . . agrāhyam alakṣaṇam
acintyam . . . śāntam śivam advaitam . . . sa ātmā sa vijñeyah |
— Māṇḍūkya Upaniṣad, 7
9. S.N. Dasgupta, History of Indian Philosophy, V p. 154.
10. C.V.N. Aiyar, op. cit pp. 436-39.
11. S.N. Dasgupta, op. cit. pp. 149-59.
12. C.V.N. Aiyar, op. cit. pp. 444-62.
13. Mādhava, Sarva-darśana-saṅgraha (Sds) p. 77.
14. TP, p. 32.
15. Liṅga Purāṇa (quoted in TD, p. 31).
16. cidghana eko vyāpī nityah satatoditah prabhuh śāntah |
jayati jagadeka bījam sarvānugrahakah sambhuh ||
— TD, 1-1
17. anādi-mala-saṁśleṣa-prāga-bhāvāt svabhāvatah |
atyanta-pariśuddhātmā-ityato' yam śiva ucyate ||
— Vāyaviya Saṁhitā (quoted in TP, p. 42)
18. yathā hyavikriyo vahnir jalataṇḍula-vikriyām | tathā karotyudāsīnah sambhur māyādi-vikriyām,
— TP, p. 46
19. māyopadānam mrt-tantvādi-sthānīyam . . . sūkṣmatvād anupalāmbho māyāyā na asattvāt |
— TP, p. 111
20. vyāpini-ghaṭa-sarāva-kumbhādiṣu mṛdvat, svakāryeṣu kālādyavani-anteṣu jaḍatayā'nusyūtā
— TP, p. 114
21. tasyā upādānāntarābhāvena akāryatvāt |
tadabhāve cānavasthā prasaṅgaḥ "eteśāmeva pāsānam
māyā kāraṇamucyate | mūla-prakṛtir avyaktā" iti māyayā
mūla-prakṛtitvopādānācca siddham |
— TP, p. 113
- TP*, re-affirms this view on p. 117.
22. śakter dharmatvenāśrayam vīṇā avasthānāsambhavāt
tadāśrayah sa eva śaktimān saṅkalpa-mātreṇa viśvakartā |
— Ratnatraya, 103
23. T.M. Mahādevan, History of Philosophy Eastern & Western
vol. I., p. 371 (Meykaṇḍa quoted here).

24. Quoted by Mādhav Sds, p. 80.
25. pañca-mantra-tamus śrīmān sakalam paripaṭhyate |
īśāna-mūrdhā, 'puṁ'-vaktro |
hy'aghora' hrdayaḥ prabhuḥ |
ucyate 'vāma'-guhyo'yam 'sadyo-mūrtr maheśvaraḥ | evam mantrāstū pañcaite yair nibaddha-taṇuḥ śivā
— TP, p. 43
26. sādhakasya tu rakṣārtham
tasya rūpam idam smṛtam |
— Pauṣkarāgama (Quoted in Sds, p. 80)
27. ākāra-vāns tvam niyamād upāsyo na vastvanākāram upaiti buddhiḥ
— Quoted in Sds, p. 80
28. svatantrasyāprayojyatvam karaṇādi-prayoktrtā kartaḥ svātantryam etad hi na karmādyanapekṣatā
— Sds, p. 78
29. anugraha-svabhāvavte na sarvān mocayet śivāḥ |
svabhāvo'pi hi bhāvānām bhāvino'rthasya kāraṇam |
svayaṁ na vikasantyeva sva-svabhāvānurodhataḥ |
evam pakva-malāneva mocayen na śivāḥ parān ||
— Vāyavīya Saṁhitā quoted in TP
30. muktātmāno'pi śivāḥ
kintvete tat-prasādato muktāḥ |
— TP (Quoted in Sds, p. 81)
31. After enumerating and naming the classes, Soma-Śambhu states — tatrādyo mala-mātreṇa yukto'nyo mala karmabhīḥ |
kalādi-bhūmi-paryanta-tatvais tu sakalo yutaḥ |
— Quoted in Sds., p. 82
32. ādyān anuḡṛhya vidyeśatvam niyojayatyāṣṭau |
— TP, p. 1-10, p. 49
- The list of eight 'offices' of Vidyeśvaras is quoted from 'Bahudaivata' in Sds, p. 81.
33. pralayākaleṣu yeṣāṁ pakve mala-karmaṇi vrajantyanye |
pūryāṣṭaka-deha-yutā yoniṣu nikkhilāsu karma vas'āt ||
— TP, 1-11

Also

buddhān śeśānakhilān viniyunkte bhoga-bhuktaye puṁsaḥ |
tat-karmaṇānugamāt |

— TP, p. 1-16; TD on TP 1.13, p. 51

34. TD on TP, 1.13, p. 52.
35. *eko hyaneka-śaktir dr̥k-kriyayoś chādako malo puṁsām |
tuṣa-kāmbukavaj jñeyah tāmṛāśrita-kālimāvad vā ||*
— TP, 1-17
36. *karmākhyo'yaṁ mahā-pāśo durmocas ten jantavaḥ |
itastataḥ samākṛṣya nīyante paśava iva |*
— Siddhānta-hṛdaya (Quoted by Kumāra on TP, 1-18, p. 60)
37. māyā to vasturūpā mūlaṁ viśvasya, nityā sā |
— TP, 1-18
38. *māyā tāvan na parameśvarānadhiṣṭhitā jaḍā jagad upādānam
bhavati | maheśvaraś cetano'pi māyām vinā | na viśvamūlatām bhajate nir-vyāpārodāsīna-mātratvād iti tayoh saṁsrṣṭayoreva jagan-mūlatvam |*
— TP, p. 62
39. moha-hetutvād viparīta-pratipattihetunā māyākhyena bandhanena bhāvyaṁ — Ratnatraya (quoted in Bhāskari)
40. *pāśānuḡrāhitvāt puruṣa-tirodhāyikā vibhoḥ śaktiḥ |
pāśatvenābhīhitā pāśaś ca catur vidhās tvevam ||*
— TP, 1-19
41. *sthūla-sūkṣma-vibhāgenoktāyā māyāyā ekatva-vivakṣayā
cāturvidhyābhīdhānād iti |* — TD on TP, 1-19, p. 73
42. Summarised from T.M.P. Mahādevan's article in The History of Philosophy Eastern and Western, p. 378.

Śivādvaita (Śaiva Viśiṣṭādvaita of Śrīkaṇṭha)

WE have seen that while solving the riddle of life, the main problem of Indian thinkers (whether Śaiva or Vaiṣṇava) has been how to determine the relation between unity and plurality, God and the world which consists of sentient (cit) and non-sentients (a-cit). Monists of Śāṅkara school declared that the Brahman alone is Real and the Plurality (of the world) is mithyā — an enigmatic (and hence untranslatable) term. S.N. Dasgupta has devoted more than 100 pages as to how this term generated a controversy between Vaiṣṇava Dualists and Monists for some generations. (History of Indian Philosophy, Vol. IV, pp. 204-315).

In Śaivism, Vasugupta's Īśvarādvaya Vāda advocated the concept of Śiva which was wider than Śāṅkara's concept of the Brahman. Māyā of Śāṅkarite philosophy was superfluous in KŚ as Śiva possessed both prakāśa and vimarśa powers. But Pluralistic Realism of Siddhānta Śaivas, despite some loose ends in their metaphysics, appealed to the masses in Tamil Nadu.

The one common factor between the above two schools is their Āgamic authority. The Śaiva authors however, equate the Āgama and the Veda as authoritative texts, as Lord Śiva is the author of them both. Even some Āgama texts claim to contain the essence of the Vedas. For example, the Makutaḡagama says “This Tantra is the essence of the Veda” :

veda-sāram idaṁ tantram ।

Another Āgama — Suprabhedāgama states that the teaching of Āgama (Siddhānta) is the essence of the Veda:

siddhānto vedasāratvāt ।

Modern scholars however differ.

One more attempt of reconciling unity and plurality is attributed to a post-Śaṅkara commentator of BrS — Bhāskara who holds that there may be plurality or difference in the effects but there is non-difference (a-bheda) in the cause (kāraṇa).¹ It is however a pre-Brahma Sūtra teacher, Āsmarathya who advocated this bhedā-bheda (difference-cum-non-difference) theory. Referring to BrS, 1.2.29 and 1.4.20. S. Radhakrishnan explains : “The soul is neither different nor non-different from the Brahman even as the sparks (flying away from fire) are neither different nor non-different from the fire. The relation (between the two) is not of absolute identity but of cause and effect” — a view endorsed by commentators of BrS like Bhartṛprapañca. Bhāskara, Rāmānuja and Nimbārka.²

The next stage is to regard that the sentient (cit) and non-sentients (a-cit) though different are, parts of God’s body (Śiva or Viṣṇu) and are related mutually.

Śrīkaṇṭha, the exponent of Śivādvaita, adopts this view. In the conclusion of his commentary on Pariṇāmāt (BrS, 1.4.27) he states :

It is logical to hold that the Supreme God is characterised by the sentient (cit) and non-sentients (a-cit). He is both the cause and the effect according to the special state or condition.³

Rāmānuja also holds that Viṣṇu Nārāyaṇa designated as Brahman which is characterised both by sentience and non-sentience, is the only Reality (tattvam). I shall point out later that Śrīkaṇṭha, though an exponent of Viśiṣṭādvaita is not a follower of Rāmānuja.

Śrīkaṇṭha : His magnum opus Brahma-mīmāṃsā Bhāṣya

Very little is known about the life of Śrīkaṇṭha. He does not mention the name of any commentator of BrS like Śaṅkara. Rāmānuja, etc. In the introduction to his commentary on the BrS the Brahma-mīmāṃsā-bhāṣya (BMB), he pays respects to his guru Śveta — an incarnation of Śiva in the first Kaliyuga of this Manvantara. Śveta has the following disciples viz. Śvetaśikha, Śvetāśya, Śvetalohita (Kūrma Purāṇa, I.51.4.13) — sheer mythology of little historical value.

As distinguished from teachers of KŚ and ŚS schools, he adopted BrS and not Āgamas, as the authoritative text to establish his Śaiva Viśiṣṭādvaita theory.

So we have to turn to internal evidence. In the introductory verse No. 5 of the BMB, he declares that his object of writing this commentary on BrS is 'to purify' the BrS 'polluted' by other previous authors (ācāryas).⁴

We can guess that the target of this criticism is Śaṅkara, Sūryanārāyaṇa Śāstri's Śivādvaita of Śrīkaṇṭha (Appendix III.B) shows that there are 22 instances of resemblance between the Bhāṣyas of Śaṅkara and Śrīkaṇṭha while the number of differences between them is 84 — and many of them on important points. For example BrS, 1.1.2:

janmādyasya yataḥ |

According to Śaṅkara, this Sūtra does not present an inferential argument but demonstrates (the reconciliation and harmonization) of different texts of the Śruti. As he poetically put it, the sūtra intends 'to string together the flowers in the form of the statements in the Vedānta'.⁵

Śrikanṭha refutes Śaṅkara's doctrine of the "attributelessness" (nirguṇatva) of the Brahman. The Brahman is the basis of all auspiciousness and is hence called śivatattva. The Brahman characterised by subtle sentients (cit) and non-sentients (a-cit) is the cause, while the Brahman characterised by gross sentients and non-sentients is the effect. Hence the decision (siddhānta) of this sūtra (BrS, 1.1.2) that the Brahman caused by the above (subtle-gross nature) is the cause of the creation, etc.⁶

(1) Further in Śrikanṭha's commentary on the following sūtras :

(i) jñō'ta eva (BrS, 2.1.18) in the ārambhāṇa section (BrS, 2.1.15-20 in BMB, II, p. 1-29) and

(ii) kartā sāstrārthavat-tvāt

(BrS, 2.3.33, BMB, III, p. 152)

Śrikanṭha criticises Śaṅkara's view on the ātman (soul) and tries to prove the atomic nature (aṇutva), possession of knowledge (jñātr̥tva) and being a doer (kartr̥tva) of the ātman.⁷

The above is enough to show that Śrikanṭha criticises Śaṅkara and hence belongs to post-Śaṅkara period.

2. There are two views about the contemporaneity of Rāmānuja and Śrikanṭha. Both being advocates of Viśiṣṭādvaita, it is natural that there should be similarity in arguments. Possibly both must have used Bodhāyana vṛtti, one using it for Vaiṣṇavite views and the other for Śaivite view. Appaya Dikṣita, commentator of Śrikanṭha's BMB, regards Śrīkaṇṭha the senior. Their philosophic views are compared later.

Discussing the problem of Śrīkaṇṭha's date in details, S.S. Sūryanārāyaṇa Śāstrī locates him in the twelfth century AD (op. cit., p. 66). S.N. Dasgupta, C. Hayavadanarao and Jadunath Sinha assign him to the thirteenth century AD.

Śrīkaṇṭha's learned yet lucid commentary on the BrS is known as Brahma-mīmāṃsā-Bhāṣya (BMB). It was commented on by Nijaguṇa Śivayogī, Haradatta Śivācārya. Brahmavidyādharīndra and Appaya Dīkṣita. The commentary of Appaya Dīkṣita Śivārkaṇḍīpā is extant and published, while the others are lost. All these commentators are south Indians. I believe, like all other commentators on BrS like Śaṅkara to Vallalha, Śrīkaṇṭha must be in all probability a Southerner.

Śrīkaṇṭha — An Independent Thinker

We have seen above that Śrīkaṇṭha differs from Śaṅkara in the interpretation of the BrS about the nature and attributes of the Brahman and those of the soul (ātman). He knew bhedābheda-vāda (difference-cum-non-difference) advocated by Bhāskara (9th cent. AD). In this commentary on adhikam tu bheda-nirdeśāt (BrS, 2.1.22) he explains :

Although there is non-difference in cause and effect and though the world consisting of sentient (cit) and non-sentients (a-cit) is the effect, the bhedābheda-vāda is not proved. We do not unhold absolute difference and non-difference between the Brahman and the phenomenal world. Nor do we hold bhedābheda-vāda.

Our position is that of Viśiṣṭādvaitins who regard their relation as that between the body and soul or guṇa and guṇin (attribute and the possessor of that attribute).⁸

Elsewhere Śrikanṭha thinks that the person of God consists of both sentient (cit) and non-sentients (a-cit).⁹

Śrikanṭha and Rāmānuja¹⁰

Both Śrikanṭha and Rāmānuja advocated Viśiṣṭādvaita. It is hence natural that both of them should share some views in common. S.S. Sūryanārāyaṇa Śāstrī in his work on Śivādvaita has recorded systematically in the sūtra-wise order the points of resemblance between Śrikanṭha's BMB and Rāmānuja's Śrībhāṣya. It is found that Śrikanṭha agrees with Rāmānuja's interpretation of sūtras at 50 places (Appendix III.A to op. cit Sūryanārāyaṇa Śāstrī's Śivādvaita) but Śrikanṭha treats 85 topics differently from Rāmānuja's Śrībhāṣya (Appendix IIIC to op. cit.).

It is not arithmetical majority of differences in interpretation. The topics so independently explained are important. For example

SUPERIORITY OF ŚIVA OVER NĀRĀYAṆA

Nārāyaṇa is not Brahman. He is the upāsaka (worshipper, propitiator) of the Brahman which is upāśya (God to be worshipped). As per Mahopaniṣad, Parmeśvara (Śiva) is the Supreme Brahman (BrS, 1-2, 3-8). It is amusing to find that the very sūtra which glorifies Nārāyaṇa in Śrībhāṣya is interpreted as the glorification of Śiva. For example : BrS, 3.2.17.

UPĀSANĀ : MEDITATION

In BrS, 4.1.3 :

ātmeti tūpaqacchanti grāhayanti ca |

Rāmānuja interprets : "God is the self of souls, as souls are the selves of bodies. The Brahman that is meditated upon thus retains the difference between the two (prthaktvānusandhānam rakṣitam)". But Śrikanṭha says "Meditation is to be of the Brahman as identical with the self and not as another being. (Brahma-bhāvenopāsanā-mupāsakasya mukti-karam, anyathā saṃsārānivr̥t̥tiḥ — BMB, II, p. 428). This is an obvious tilt to Advaita.

IMPORTANCE OF PĀŚUPATA VRATA

In BrS, 3.4. 48-49 :

kr̥tsnabhāvāt tu gr̥hinopasamhārah |
maunavad itereṣām apyupadeśāt |

Śrīkaṇṭha interpretes : The pāśupata vrata if practised to the end, leads to liberation. Though this vrata is not included in the āśrama dharma, the virtues like chastity, control of senses, etc. are associated with this vrata.

Śrīkaṇṭha's independent views will be clear in the exposition of his system.

Śivādvaita — Based on Śruti

As contrasted with KŚ and SŚ, Śrīkaṇṭha takes the Brahma Sūtra (BrS) as the basic text supporting Śivādvaita. To emphasize the supporting Śruti to his doctrine, he calls his commentary (bhāṣya) on the BrS as Brahma-mīmāṃsā-bhāṣya (BMB) or Aupanīṣadī mīmāṃsā. He knew the Āgamic texts and in BMB he tries to reconcile Śruti and Āgamas. He affirms the equality of authority between the two and as Śiva is the author of both Śruti and Āgama, the difference being that only the upper castes (brāhmaṇa, kṣatriyas and vaiśyas) were eligible to study the former, while the Āgamas were open to all.¹¹

Like other Śaiva sects, Śrīkaṇṭha builds his system on the three main categories (1) pati, (2) paśu, (3) pāśa or (1) Śiva, (2) jīva, (3) mala or bonds as follows :

PATI : BRAHMA : ŚIVA

The identification of pati or the Supreme with Śiva is found even in very early times such as in the R̥g Veda, 10.125.7.

Atharva-sīras Upaniṣad, V. 3 and the Taittirīya, Āraṇyaka, XVII.1-5. Śrīkaṇṭha holds that pati or Śiva characterised by subtle-cum-gross cause-effect of the universe is the Brahman.¹² It is beyond the ken of time, space, etc. It is called bhava because it exists everywhere at all times. The root \sqrt{bh} connotes 'existence' (sattā). Brahma being sadrūpa (existential) is called bhava.¹³ It is called śarva as the root \sqrt{sr} — 'to kill', 'to destroy' implies that it destroys everything at the time of pralaya.¹⁴ It is called Śiva because it is full of all auspicious attributes and is free from taints.¹⁵ It is the Lord controller of all jīvas (paśus) and is hence called paśupati. (BMB, I.127) It causes bondage, birth, maintenance in life, death, tirobhāva (restriction of powers of jīvas), anugraha (grace of granting liberation) — all showing his overlordship (parameśvaratva). It dispels all the miseries of the world and is hence designated as Rudra.¹⁶ It is called Mahādeva as it is engrossed in its own highest bliss (mahatvena dīvyamānatayā). It confers blessings (śam-) on all and hence the epithet śambhu.

It is nirguṇa that is devoid of bad attributes and full of auspicious qualities, — not 'attributeless' as in Śāṅkara. It is bisexual — both He and She.¹⁷

The above epithets showing identity of Śiva (pati) and the Brahman are acceptable to pure Āgamic sects. Śrīkaṇṭha showed that the Āgamic concepts of Śiva are the same as those of Upaniṣadic Brahman.

Like other Śaiva sects, he attributes the five functions (pañca-kṛtya) viz. creation, maintenance, destruction of the world and tirodhāna and anugraha to Brahman through his śaktis. But like KŚ he maintains that 'there is no difference or distinction between the Brahman and its powers, (quoted in BMB, I. 300-301). Though the Brahman is one, there is variety. It consists of both cid and acid and thereby it recognizes the reality of the world. For the creation of the world, the Brahman is both the material and instrumental cause (BMB, I. 340-41) the Brahman (Śiva) is neither partial nor cruel. Jīvas receive the fruits of their own karmas good or evil. When the jīva, after experiencing the results of his karmas becomes pure-hearted. Śiva favours him with spiritual knowledge and finally mokṣa as grace. The concept of grace is as in Upaniṣads (e.g. Kaṭha, 2.23, Muṇḍaka, 3.2.3).

Śrīkaṇṭha does not differ much from KŚ and SŚ about the concept of pati except that he claims Upaniṣadic sanction for the Āgamic concept and adopts the Viśiṣṭādvaita-vāda in Śaivism. He has, however, some important differences from Rāmānuja.

PAŚU : JĪVA : INDIVIDUAL SOUL

Śrīkaṇṭha does not believe in the creation or origination of paśus or individual souls from Śiva or Brahman (vide supra, pp. 12-13). The jīva has co-status with but not identity with Brahman as held by Monists.

There have been differences of opinion about the jīva-Brahma relationship since pre-Brahma-sūtra period. Āśmarathya, a pre-BrS thinker, advocates 'difference-cum-non-difference' (bhedābheda) between the two (BrS, 1.4.16). Auḍulomi, another pre-BrS teacher, opines that Brahman ensouls jīva and functions as his interior ruler. Śrīkaṇṭha holds that the embodiment of the jīva, despite this co-status with Brahman, is due to some beginningless transgression (apacāra) on the part of the jīva that the Lord willed to conceal the true nature of the jīvas. He points out that the jīva is soiled by beginningless ajñāna (or āṇava), karma and māyā malas. The soul is forced to enter or leave a body assigned to him for experiencing the fruits of the acts committed by him according to his good or evil predilections. (BMB, I, pp. 89-90)

Another view of the Jīva-Brahma relation is expressed in the Kauṣītaki Upaniṣad.¹⁸

The relation between jīvas and Brahman is like that between fire and fiery sparks emanating from the fire. They are of the nature of fire but they are separate and distinct from fire. Śrīkaṇṭha says that this Upaniṣadic analogy simply means that the jīva gets 'Name and Form' from the Brahman. It does not suggest origination or creation of the jīva from the Brahmā.

About the problem of Free will of the jīva, the Taittirīya Upaniṣad firmly declares the Free Will in case of the jīva or *vijñāna*¹⁹ (a term used there to designate jīva). But Śrīkaṇṭha opines that he is not entirely free. He can undertake some acts of his own free will for the maturation of his karmas but it is God who makes him do or refrain from doing it. The position is similar to a boy who can lift a log of wood with the help of a strong man. But his actual lifting depends on the will or command of the strong man. (BMB on BrS, 2.3.41). But, asserts Śrīkaṇṭha, there is no partiality (vaiṣamya) or cruelty on the part of God in this matter.²⁰

Upaniṣadic statements like tattvamasi do not show identity between the jīva and the Brahman. It is the relation of the pervaded-pervader (vyāpya-vyāpaka) type. A log of wood pervaded by fire is called 'fire' though is only a part (aṁśa) that is fiery. So the world is pervaded by an aṁśa of Maheśvara (Śvetāśvatara Upaniṣad, 4.10). Śrīkaṇṭha concludes : The jīva is only an aṁśa (particle) of Śiva.²¹

ATOMICITY OF THE JĪVA

If the jīva is a part of Brahman what is its size. Śrīkaṇṭha states that it is atomic in size but is encased in a linga-sarīra constituted of the seeds of his future body. He transmigrates to another species with his linga-sarīra (BMB, II, pp. 196-97). Like a lamp illuminating a room of any size, this atomic jīva enlivens all the body irrespective of its size (e.g., an ant and an elephant).

MALA : PĀŚA : BONDAGE

Śrīkaṇṭha recognizes four malas : paśutva (āṇava), karma, māyā, and rodha (tirodhāna — concealment). Śrīkaṇṭha does not discuss much about paśutva which is the quality of being an individual, due to which the body is regarded identical with soul (dehātmaikya-bhāva). He regards karma as a beginningless mala. Being bound by karma—bondage the soul is forced to enter a māyā — made body and experiences pleasure or pain. (BMB, I, pp. 350-51)

Though both SS and Śaiva Viśiṣṭādvaita flourished in South India and as systems of Śaivism there are naturally many common concepts, the differences between the two systems are important. A few are mentioned below :

As noted above, Śrīkaṇṭha ignores the concept of āṇava mala, substitutes it by the concept paśutva and accepts a fourth mala called rodha. The second point noted above is the atomicity of the soul, whereas SS regards souls as all-pervasive.

Another important difference is about the relation between God and the world. Śrīkaṇṭha regards the world consisting of intelligent (cit) and non-intelligent (a-cit) as the result of Lord's energy called cit-śakti which as intelligence and bliss is not different from the Lord. This leads to two conclusion which are unacceptable to SS viz.

- (1) The world is the transformation of the Lord as there is no difference between śakti and śaktimat (śakti-śaktimatoḥ abhedah).
- (2) Non-intelligent world (bodies, objects of enjoyment etc.) is derived from the same principle as the enjoying soul. (Suryanārāyaṇa Śāstrī, op. cit., p. 20).

Rodha or obscuration is the power of Maheśvara but due to its effect it is regarded as a pāśa.²²

Śrīkaṇṭha regards karma as a beginningless and the most powerful bond.

Mokṣa : Liberation

For mokṣa, without underestimating the importance of Vedic rites and rituals Śrīkaṇṭha strongly recommends the path of bhakti (devotion) consisting of listening to the glory of the Lord, meditation, etc. Thereby the highly merciful Śiva becomes pleased and all the malas or bondages are destroyed by His Grace.²³ Bhakti was a social force then in the South.

When all the malas are washed off, the original Brahma-like qualities or powers of the jīva which were so long veiled became manifest — by the Grace of Parabrahma — Śiva, the jīva's obscuring bondages are dropped down or eliminated and the real form of jīva which is similar to Brahman is revealed.²⁴

He emphasizes the point that the released soul enjoys Bliss like the Brahman but does not become merged in the Brahman as in Śāṅkara Vedānta. The similarity between the two (jīva and God) is in the sameness of Bliss.²⁵ The liberation called sāyujyatā is merely similarity in appearance and enjoyment.²⁶ He is not empowered to carry out the five functions of Śiva such as creation and destruction of the universe, etc.

Śrīkaṇṭha and Siddhānta Śaivism

ŚŚ authors strongly object to the identity of māyā and cit-śakti. Thus, Umāpati Śivācārya in the section in 'nimittakāraṇa-pariṇām-vādas' in his work Sankarpanirākaraṇam refuted this doctrine. Śrīkaṇṭha's non-recognition of an independent origin for the non-intelligent (acit) world is tantamount to the vivarta-vāda of Śāṅkara. As noted by Sarvajñātma Muni in Saṅkṣepa-sārīrika, Vedāntins accept pariṇāma-vāda (transformation theory) for empirical purpose but this pariṇāma-vāda automatically leads to vivarta-vāda :

vyavasthite'smin pariṇā mavāde samaṁ samāyāti vivarta-vādaḥ.

V. 2

A position repugnant to SŚ.

There is a difference of opinion about the nature of tādātmya : It means :

- (1) One thing appearing as two e.g., guṇa-guṇin, substance-attribute.
- (2) Two things are so intimately connected as to be regarded as one. This is Advaita e.g. ātmā-paramātmā.

Śrīkaṇṭha accepts the first view.

Lastly the concept of jīvan-mukti (liberation before death, while alive). The SŚ believe that to men of mature knowledge, mokṣa (liberation) is possible even here (in this world while alive). Śrīkaṇṭha says that even after brahma-jñāna one must experience the fruits of his actions during his remaining life-time. These past karmas should be eliminated by performing sacrifices, etc. The malas come to an end by the devayāna path. And the Brahman is attained. Śrīkaṇṭha reconciled Āgamic and Upaniṣadic teachings. He tried to find support for Śaiva theism in the Vedānta Sūtras, the reality of the world and the individual, the relative freedom of human will, the essentially ordered nature of the universe that even God respects it. God's greatness is in conferring Grace on deserving individual. The Āgamic doctrine of Śiva's status as a Supreme Being who out of Grace grants liberation and insistence on bhakti. This in brief is the permanent contribution of Śrīkaṇṭha.*

*For detailed "Estimate" of Śrīkaṇṭha's contribution vide S.S. Sūryanārāyaṇa Śāstri's Śivādvaita of Śrīkaṇṭha, ch. VII, pp. 230-75.

Notes

1. kārya-rūpeṇa nānātvam |
abhedaḥ kāraṇātmanā |
— Bhāskara Bhāṣya (BrS, 1-14)
2. S. Radhakrishnan, The Brahma Sūtra; Introduction, p. 25. For more details about the theory of Bhedābheda see P.N. Śrīnivasācāri's The Philosophy of Bhedābheda.
3. tataḥ samucitam cid-acid-viśiṣṭaḥ parameśvaraḥ kāraṇam ca kāryam ca tat-tad-avasthā-viśeṣāt |
— BMB (Brahma-mīmāṃsa-bhāṣya — Śrīkaṇṭha Bhāṣya on BrS 1-4, 27)
4. vyāsa-sūtram idam netram viduṣā brahma-darśane |
pūrvācāryaiḥ kaluṣitam śrīkaṇṭhena prasādyate ||
— BMB, Intro., 5
5. Conclusion by Śaṅkara :
vedānta-vākya-kusuma-grathanārthatvāt sūtrāṇām |
tasmād 'janmādi'-sūtram nānumānopanyāsārth . . . tasya
(viz. yato vā imāni bhūtāni etc. in TaittUp, 3-1) ca nirṇaya-vākyaṃ (reconciled with) ānāndād hyevam bhūtāni jāyantī | in TaittUp, 3.6) — Śaṅkara on BrS, 1.1.2 so he states the purpose.
6. sūkṣma-cid-acid-viśiṣṭam brahma kāraṇam, sthūla-cid-acid viśiṣṭam tat kāryam bhavati |
ato janmādi -lakṣaṇam brahmeti siddhānataḥ |
— BMB on BrS, 1-2, (Vol. I, 135)
7. For an interesting discussion on this topic see Vedānta-kaustubha ed. by Dhunḍirāj Śāstri, Kashi Sanskrit Series 99, Banaras 1932. An authoritative detailed statement of Roma Chaudhuri's Doctrine of Nimbārka but it was not available to me. For a brief yet lucid exposition : History of Philosophy Eastern and Western, Vol. I, pp. 338-46.
8. kārya-kāraṇayor ananyatve'pi kārya-bhūta-cid-acid-prapañcāt kāraṇam atrādhikena śrūyate | na vāyam brahma-prapañcayor atyantam eva bheda-vādināḥ
. . . na vā atyantābheda-vādināḥ . . na ca bhedābheda-vādināḥ
. . kintu śārtra-śārīriṇoriva, guṇa-guṇinoriva ca viśiṣṭādvaita-vādināḥ |
— BMB, II, p. 231
9. tataḥ samucitam cid-acid-viśiṣṭaḥ parameśvaraḥ kāraṇam kāryam ca tat-tad-avasthā-viśeṣāt |
— BMB, I, p. 57

10. S.S. Śāstri : Śivādvaita of Śrīkaṅṭha Appendix IIIA. Resemblance between Śrībhāṣya and Śrīkaṅṭha Bhāṣya. III B. Resemblance between the Bhāṣyas of Śaṅkara and Śrīkaṅṭha.
11. vayaṁ tu veda-sivāgamayoḥ bhedaṁ na paśyāmaḥ | vedo'pi śivāgama itī vyavahāro | yuktaḥ, tasya tat kartrkatvāt | ataḥ śivāgamo dvidvidhaḥ traivarnīka-viśayaḥ sarva-viśayaśceti | vedaḥ traivarnīkaviśayaḥ | sarvaviśayas' cānyaḥ | ubhayoḥ eka eva śivaḥ kartā |
— BMB on BrS, 2.2. 38 (BMB, II, p. 111)
12. sthūla-sūkṣma-cid-acid-prapañca-viśiṣṭaḥ parameśvaraḥ kārya-kāraṇa-rūpaḥ — BMB, 1.27 (1. 1.5)
13. sarvatra sadā bhavati bhavaśabda-vācyam | bhū-dhātoḥ sattārtha-katvāt | . . . tataḥ sadrūpam brahma bhavavācyam bhavati | — BMB, I, 125
14. śarva-śabdena sr-hīmsāyām itī dhātvarthāt sakala-saṁhartr brahma pratipādyate | — BMB, I, 126
15. anantānanda-kalyāṇa-guṇaika-ghana īśvaraḥ śivaḥ ityucyate |
Also
atyanta-parisuddhātmā — BMB, II, 248-49
16. saṁsāra-rug-drāvakatvāt rudra-śabda-vācyam brahma
— BMB, I, 127
17. heya-guṇa-rāhityena, kalyāṇa-guṇa sāhityena cobhaya-liṅgam brahma — BMB, II, 248
18. yathā'gner jvalato visphuliṅgā vipratīṣṭheran, evamevai-tasmād ātmanah prāṇā yathayatanam vipratīṣṭhante etc.
— Kauṣītaki BrUp, 4-20
19. viññānam yajñam tanute |
karmāṇi tanute'pi |
TaittUp, 2.5.1
20. ato jivakṛta-prayatnā pekṣyatvāt karmasu jīvasya pravartaka īśvaro na vaiśamyabhāk, tasyāpi svādhīna-pravṛtti-sadbhāvāt vidhi-nīsedhādi vaiyartham na sambhavati |
— BMB, II, pp. 156-57
21. In concluding Āmśādhikaraṇa, Śrīkaṅṭha states :
tato brahmaṇo'mśa-bhūtaḥ jīvas tadaviśavīṣeṇaika-svabhāva itī yuktaṁ eva | — BMB, II, p. 162
22. rodha-śaktyākhyasya pāśatvavyapadeśasya śivāgameṣu prasiddhatvāt |
yadāhuḥ māheśvarī śaktih . . . paranuvarta-nādeva pāśa ityupacaryate |
— BMB, I, pp. 567-68

23. tatra śruvaṇa-mananādinīścitasya, bhakti-jñāna-viśeṣābhīmukhasya parama-kāruṇikasya mahādeśikasya sarvānūgrāhakasya śivasya para-brahmaṇaḥ prasādātīśayenāsyādhikāriṇaḥ pradhvasta pāśa-paṭalā . . . kaivalya-lakṣmīḥ . . . prayojanaṁ ca bhavati | — BMB, I, 91-95
24. *brahma-prāpta-jīvasya mala tirohitam brahma-sadrśa-guṇasvarūpaṁ purvaṁ sadeva malāvaraṇāpagamād āvirbhavati
. . . sarvānugrāhakasya śivasya parabrahmaṇaḥ prasādena svāvarāṇe male vigalite tat-sadrśa-guṇam-ātma svarūpaṁ
prādurbhavati |* — BMB, II, pp. 481-82
25. yathā brahma sakalān kāmān bhunkte tatha mukto'pi, iti bhogasāmya mātram muktasya brahmaṇā, iti samīcīnam |
— BMB, II, p. 50 (on BrS., 4.4.21)
26. brahmaṇā sādṛśyaṁ sāyujyam muktānām, bhogādidharmasādharmyāt | — BMB, II, p. 501
27. muktasya parameśvara-sāmye'pi jagad-srṣṭyādi-vyāpāravarjyam asya bhoga-vastuṣu — BMB, II, p. 496

Vīra-Śaivism

THE name 'Vīra-Śaivism' applied to this Śaiva sect seems to be comparatively recent.* Not only do Śaṅkara and Rāmānuja not mention it, but Śrīpati Paṇḍit (AD 1200), the exponent and the defender of this Āgamic system on the basis of the Brahmasūtra (BrS) gives the following epithets by which this sect is recognised by others (kecit) :

1. Dvaitādvaita
2. Viśeṣādvaita
3. Seśvarādvaita
4. Śivādvaita
5. Sarva-śruti-sāra
6. Bhedābheda
7. Śakti-viśiṣṭādvaita

— Śrīkara Bhāṣya (ŚB) 2.1.5.13, p. 195

The above designations imply some aspects of Vīraśaiva philosophy. Śrīpati himself explains how the above synonyms are applicable to the teachings of this sect :

* According to the archives of the Sanskrit Dictionary Department of the Deccan College Pune, the earliest occurrence of the vocable 'vīra-śaiva' is in Mādhava's Śaṅkara Digvijaya (Dr. Mrs. Yashodhara Wadhvani's letter dated 16.10.1995).

Dvaitādvaita

There is distinction and difference between a river and a sea at the beginning. When the river is yet to join the sea. There is dvaita between the two (the river and the sea). When the river joins the sea, it gets merged and becomes identical with the sea. This is advaita between the two. Similarly, a devotee (śaraṇa) and God (śaraṇya, Śiva) are different in the initial stage. Through his devotion, the devotee gets merged into Śiva. This development : merging of difference into non-difference, is implied in the term dvaitādvaita.

Viśeṣādvaita

Śrīpati explains this term in different ways:

- (i) Śiva is the receptacle of cit-śakti. Cit-śakti is the supreme cause (parama kāraṇa) of the entire prapañca or universe. According to Śaivism, Śakti is non-different from the Supreme Lord who is both the instrumental as well as the material cause of the universe. This advaita has the speciality (viśeṣa) of bhedābheda (difference-cum-non-difference). Hence, it is called Viśeṣādvaita. (ŚB, II.1.3.17, pp. 135-36)
- (ii) Śiva and jīva have intelligence or consciousness as the common factor between them. That is they belong to the same genus. But the jīva is atomic, while Śiva is all-pervading. Jīva's knowledge is negligible while Śiva is omniscient. These are the fundamental differences between the two. So the first word in viśeṣādvaita viz. viśeṣa indicates that sheer dvaita (dualism) or mere advaita is not proved and is untenable. Hence, the union or advaita of the two is the speciality (viśeṣa) which is implied in this term.

- (iii) Śripati gives a popular etymology of the term as follows:

vi = the jīva (Individual Soul)

śeṣa = Omnipresent Śiva

The non-difference [advaita between vi (Individual Soul) and śeṣa (Śiva)] is viśeṣādvaita. He pithily puts it as follows:

viś ca śeṣas ca tayoḥ advaitam

This transformation of the jīva into Śiva is through constant meditation. (SB, II, p. 136)

Śeṣvarādvaita

Īśvara or pati is the fundamental principle with the potentiality of doing or undoing anything by sheer will-power. This śakti (power) is never different or apart from its possessor (śakti-mat) or Īśvara.

This sect advocates the (ultimate) identity of the jīva with Īśvara or Śiva. Hence the term śeṣvarādvaita.

Śivādvaita

It is within Śiva that innumerable varieties of the mobiles and immobiles are created, sustained and dissolved. The universe is entirely contained within Śiva. Hence, the universe is non-different from Śiva.

Sarva-Śruti-Sāra

Some Śruti texts advocate Monism. Some Śruti texts propound Dualism. Both being advocated by Śruti are valid. Viraśaivism advocated 'difference-cum-non-difference' and reconciles the contradiction between the Śruti texts. Hence, it is called 'the essence of all Śrutis'.

Bhedābheda

Viraśaivism holds that there is non-difference (abheda) in the cause but difference and variety in the effect. For example, the seed of a tree is one but its effects, branches, flowers and fruits are many.

Śakti-viśiṣṭādvaita

As Kumāra Swāmīji explains: Viraśaivism does not visualise an incurable antinomy between Śiva and Śakti, between being and knowing. It rather effects a synthesis by saying that Śakti is the very soul of Śiva: that knowing is inherent in being. There is an integral association between Śiva and Śakti. Hence, this is called śakti-viśiṣṭādvaita. (History of Indian Philosophy: Eastern and Western, p. 398).

Sripati Paṇḍit does not call his philosophy as 'Vira-Śaivism'.

Vira-Śaivism Defined

It is rather curious that popular etymologies of the term 'Vira-Śaivism' ignored whether the vowel in vi is short or long. They attributed different meanings to vi- and -ra. In Siddhānta Śikhāmaṇi (SSm, V. 15-18) we find the following meanings of Viraśaivism — especially of the first term:

1. Vī: The lore (vidyā) that imparts knowledge of non-difference between Śiva and jīva.
2. Ra: One who enjoys, indulges in: thus one who enjoys (ramate) implicitly in the non-difference between Śiva and jīva is a Viraśaiva.¹

The same author now regards that Viraśaiva is the correct term and defines:

Vī — vidyā 'knowledge born', i.e., derived from Vedānta

Ra — ramate — one who enjoys (is interested in).² The Parameśvara Tantra (pāṭala 9.1.15) gives a number of such etymologies such as:

“Hero-ship” (vīratva) is the dauntless action of a brave man in a battle. He who is firm (in faith) by his excellent devotion and non-attachment (vairāgya) is a Vīraśaiva.³

From the various definitions of ‘Vīraśaivism’ and the usage of applying the epithet vīra (a hero, a warrior), I think vīra in Vīra-Śaiva means ‘a staunch follower of Śaivism’, we find the use of the term Vīra Vaiṣṇava in Tamil Nadu and Vaiṣṇava Vīra in Maharashtra : implying ‘a steadfast or firm devotee of Viṣṇu’. But it does not indicate a particular school of philosophy. The synonyms used by Śrīpati Paṇḍit are philosophically more significant.

The “Prophet”(s) of Vīraśaivism

There are two views among Vīra-Śaivas as to the founders of their sect. Some regard Bāsava as a ‘founder’ or ‘prophet’ of Vīraśaivism. Bāsava was a brāhmaṇa from Bagewadi. Dist. Bījāpur, Karnataka. He was not merely a mystic or a religious man but a revolutionary social reformer. He advocated equality of status to women, abolition of caste system, dignity of labour and such other advanced views in those days. He tried to breathe new spirit in a decaying society. His vacanas (sayings) express his intense devotion to kūḍala saṅgama-deva (Śiva). They remind us of similar earnest devotion to Śiva in the Tamil songs of Tevāram and Abhaṅgas of Marāṭhā saints.

In AD 1160 Bāsava established Śūnya śimhāsana at Kalyāṇī in Bidār District of Karnataka. It was a forum — a meeting place for contemporary saints and mystics like Channa Bāsava, Alam Prabhu, the great lady saint Akkā Mahādevī and others. For the moral and spiritual uplift of the masses, the vacanas of these saints serve a beacon light. There is no differences of opinion that these vacanas form an invaluable contribution to Kannaḍa literature. But Bāsava did not write a systematic treatise on Vīra-Śaivism. It is from his vacanas that we find that as an ardent devotee he believed in the efficacy of the name of Kūḍala-Saṅgama-deva (Bhaktasthala Vacana, No. 167, p. 115). His visualization of Śiva-linga as 'more brilliant than a thousand suns, incomprehensible yet blissful which renders him speechless' (Māheśvarasthala, No. 183, p. 396). Aikyasthala, Nos. 34-35, p. 540), certainly show that he was a great mystic, saint. He was a religious organizer and a social reformer. M.Ā. Sākhare (History and Philosophy of Lingayat Religion, pp. 426-27). Kumāraswāmijī (in History of Philosophy — Eastern and Western, p. 395) give the credit of founding Viraśaivism to Bāsava for "assiduous and impartial historical research" of Kannāḍa scholars have proved beyond doubt that these so-called ācāryas are not the originators of Vira-Śaiva faith (op.cit., p. 398).

Five Ācāryas : Real Founders

There is another school among Vira-Śaivas which regards the following pre-Bāsava teacher-saints as the founders of this faith. They are : 1. Revaṇasiddha, 2. Maruḷasiddha, 3. Ekorāma, 4. Paṇḍitārādhyā, 5. Viśvārādhyā. They are believed to have been born out of the following Śiva-lingas.

- (1) Revaṇasiddha : Someśa linga at Kollipak
- (2) Maruḷasiddha : Siddheśa linga at Ujjain, Dist. Bellari, Karnataka.
- (3) Ekorāma : Śrisailya Mallikārjuna, Kurnool Dist. Andhra Pradesh.
- (4) Paṇḍitārādhyā : Rāmanātha linga at Kedārñāth (Uttar Pradesh).
- (5) Viśvārādhyā : Viśveśvara linga at Vārāṇasī (Uttar Pradesh).

This school regards Bāsava as a social and religious reformer and not the founder of this sect.

In their enthusiasm to proclaim the antiquity of their sect, blind followers of these ācāryas have blown up their greatness out of proportion and exiled them from historicity to mythology. Thus Revanasiddha, the first ācārya had founded a math at Bale-Honnur, in Chikkamangalur District of Karnataka. The math exists today. But the blind followers relegated him to tretā yuga, attributing to him the supervision of the worship of thirty million lingas simultaneously for Vibhīṣaṇa, the brother of Rāvaṇa. Such accounts naturally evoked sharp reprisal from modern scholars like M.R. Sakhare, Kumāraswāmījī and others. S.C. Nandimath who is a strong advocate of these pre-Bāsava ācāryas as the founders of Vīraśaivism, ruefully admits:

The five Ārādhyas (Ācāryas) are the founders of Vīraśaivism according to tradition. But unfortunately no authoritative historical information about them had been made available as yet. — Handbook of Vīraśaivism p. 18.

In this context, a historical convulsion in pre-Bāsava period is worth noting. Towards the end of the tenth century AD, Muslim aggression in North India destroyed the holy places of Somanāth (Saurāṣṭra) and Mathurā. Both were centres of the Pāśupata sect. The Pāśupata teachers fled to the South and Kings in Karnataka and Andhra generously supported these refugees as is seen from the inscriptions from the eleventh to thirteenth century AD. At that time brāhmaṇa followers of Vasugupta also left Kaśmīr and settled in Mahārāṣṭra and Karnataka. As Gunaratna, the Jain commentator of Haribhadra's Ṣaḍ-darśana samuccaya informs us that these Pāśupata brāhmaṇas, besmeared themselves with holy ashes, worshipped the liṅga forms of Śiva, wore a liṅga on their persons in addition to yajñopavīta (sacred thread). Practices adopted by Vīra-Śaivas. Kannada inscriptions in Bijāpur district (of AD 1074-75, 1147, 1158) state that these Pāśupata brāhmanas were not only expert in the Pāśupata Sūtra but also in Vedas, Śāstras, Itihāsa and Purāṇas and in Yogic practice as well. In their mathas attached to their linga temples, they taught this to all irrespective of castes and communities. This cosmopolitanism was later adopted by Bāsava and his followers. The Pāśupata centres of these brāhmanas, their temples such as those of Kedāreśvara, Pañcaliṅga, Somanāth Huli (Dist. Belgaum) are now inherited by Vīra-Śaivas. Their formative influence on Vīra-Śaivism is noted by S.C. Nandimath (op.cit., pp. 8-10).

Vīra-Śaiva Philosophy

A systematic presentation of Vīra-Śaiva philosophy in pre-Bāsava period is found in Śrīpati Paṇḍit's Śrīkara Bhāṣya, a commentary on the Brahma Sūtra (BrS). Śrīpati was a brāhmaṇa of Vijayavāṭikā (Bezwada) in Andhra Pradesh. He wrote a lucid commentary on the BrS, and has shown that the āgama-based faith, viz. Vīra-Śaivism has full support of the Brāhmanical prasthāna, the Brahma Sūtra (BrS).

After paying respects to his guru-paramparā (tradition of teachers) from Śiva to Ekorāma, he states that his Bhāṣya called Śrīkara contains the essence of Vyāsa's BrS. It is an ornament (authentic presentation) of Viśeṣādvaita philosophy. It is a synthesis of Vedas, Upaniṣads and Āgamas. This Bhāṣya is like a wish-yielding tree to Mokṣa-seeking Śaivas and pure Vaidikas.⁴

As stated at the beginning of this chapter. Śrīpati gives the following names of his Bhāṣya, each indicating the nature of its philosophy:

- (1) Dvaitādvaita,
- (2) Viśiṣṭādvaita,
- (3) Seśvarādvaita

- (4) Śivādvaita,
- (5) Sarva-śruti-sāra,
- (6) Bhedābheda
- (7) Śakti-Viśiṣṭādvaita

All these terms are explained above.

Pati : Para-Śiva : Brahma : Liṅga

As with other Śaiva sects, Vīra-Śaivas regard Śiva as the Supreme Principle who controls both Paśu and Pāśa. His speciality is that he is a synthesis or rather receptacle of contradictory characteristics such as sat (manifest), asat (non-manifest), 'embodied'-'disembodied', 'with characteristics', 'without characteristics'. Commenting on BrS, 1.1.2 Śrīpati adopts the term Brahman for Pati which is characterised by five functions viz. creation, maintenance and annihilation of the universe, concealment (tirodhāna) and grace (anugraha).⁵

Śrīpati explains the relation between the world and the Lord as: the Lord is the cause and the world, effects. Pots are created from clay, that means they are clay before creation and even after destructions, are clay. In commenting on asad-vyapadeśān etc. (BrS, 2.1.17) he says:

Before creation the world was in a subtle stage (sūkṣma) and was hence called asat : after creation, a gross stage — it was called sat. Just as a tortoise spreads out its feet, Parama Śiva manifests out of himself, the world characterised by name and form. And just as a tortoise withdraws its legs within itself, the Lord conceals within Himself the universe. (ŚB, II, p. 198 on BrS, 2.1.18)

On BrS, 2.1.20 (ŚB, II, p. 198) he explains the same by taking an example of a yogī who controls his breath at the time of entering into samādhi, exhales it (and breathes normally) after the samādhi period. Similarly the Lord extends the universe at the time of creation and withdraws it within at the time of pralaya.

He concludes the section by stating that hereby the topic of the difference between the world and the Lord, and the mithyātva of the world are disproved and the doctrine of difference-cum-non-difference is vindicated (ŚB, II, p. 198). In other words the world is real and eternal.

Though the relation between jīva (individual soul) and God is like that of the body and the embodied (i.e., the ātman), God is eternally free. All things (worlds) are accommodated in ākāśa (the sky) but it is free from all blemishes, etc. of those worlds contained within it. The Supreme Śīva, though the cause of everything and immanent in everything is untouched by their blemishes.⁶

The Supreme Śīva is independent. As his body is not kārmika (formed out of the result of karmas) pleasure-pain, etc. do not affect him. Jīvas (individual souls) are seen to experience miseries, etc. due to their beginningless karma-mala, there is neither partially or cruelty on the part of Śīva in allotting them pleasure or pain.⁷

On the contrary, by conferring grace on jīvas. He removes the beginningless mala and absorbs the jīva within himself. Due to beginningless mala, the jīva (individual soul) and Śīva are at first separate but like rivers merging into the sea, the paśu or jīva becomes one with Śīva. Attainment of such a state is the culmination of spiritual experience.

Līnga : Brahman

Although Śrīpati showed how Vīra-Śaivism has Upaniṣadic basis and as such it is a Vedic sect, it is mainly based on Āgamas which regard liṅga as the highest principle. Vīra-Śaivas call themselves Liṅgāyats. The concept of liṅga is already discussed in supra (pp. 20-24) where it was shown that what Vedāntins call the Brahman, the Śaivites call it Pati and Liṅga. Vīra-Śaiva texts state the liṅga concept as follows:

That from which the universe comes out (is evolved) and that in which it is dissolved (is withdrawn) that is the Liṅga — the eternal Brahman.⁸ (SSn, VI.37) The Candra-jñānāgama (Kriyāpāda 3.8) goes a step further and asserts that the creation and dissolution of the universe takes place in the Brahman which is called Liṅga.⁹

The same has been emphasized in the Vedāntasāra-Vīraśaiva Cintāmaṇi which quotes TaitUp (3.1.1) and says that ‘the Brahman is the cause of the creation and dissolution of the universe (Layāgamana-Kāraṇam) — an echo of the term Tajjalān in the ChāUp (3.14.1).

The term liṅga is derived from two Sanskrit roots $\sqrt{tī}$ — ‘to dissolve’, $\sqrt{gā}$ or \sqrt{gam} — ‘to go forth’. Śivānubhava Sūtra (3.3) defines : “Liṅga is that in which the mobile and the immobile universe merges and from which it (i.e., the universe) issues forth (evolved)¹⁰ — an echo from Sūkṣmāgama (Kriyāpāda 6.6).

Śiva-Liṅga is not merely the upper protruding part but includes its base (pīṭha). These are respectively called Śiva and Śakti, prakāśa and vimarśa (Śiva’s inherent powers of knowledge and action), nāda and bindu (both esoteric untranslatable) terms (Candrajñānāgama, Kriyāpāda pāṭala 3.13).¹² The axiomatic belief of Śaivas is that the above pairs (Śiva-Śakti) constitute one whole and inherently inseparable thus echoing Kaṭha (2.5.15), Muṇḍaka (2.2.9) Upaniṣads and BG, XIII.17, Sūkṣmāgama (Kriyāpāda, pāṭala 6.9) says that the sun, the moon, stars and other luminaries shine by his (liṅga’s) illumination.¹³

In short, the icon of stone, crystal, etc., which a Vīra-Śaiva receives from his guru at the time of initiation is the symbol of parabrahman, the Supreme Lord. Both men and women are eligible to wear it. The liṅga is never to be separated from the person of the initiated. The initiated person has to perform the worship of the liṅga assiduously everyday. Śrīpati Paṇḍit asserts that liṅga-dhāraṇa is sanctioned like the acceptance of Agnihotra.¹⁴ After liṅga-dhāraṇa no impurity from birth and death (sūtakā) or that of menstruation (in the case of women) needs be observed. This liṅga which is given by the guru is called iṣṭa-liṅga.

Classification of Liṅgas

Liṅgas are mainly classified according to their spiritual significance: 1. iṣṭa, 2. prāṇa, 3. bhāva. They are called sthūla, sūkṣma, parātpara by Reṇukācārya (SSn, 6.2.8). Liṅga is also called sthala as it is the Absolute Parabrahman characterised by sat, (real existence), cit and ānanda (bliss) and is the receptacle of all beings (Śivānubhava Sūtra, 2.8).

Prāṇa-Liṅga

SSn (12-67) describes Prāṇa-liṅga as follows:¹⁵

When the aspirant (sādhaka) performs prāṇāyāma as per guru's guidance, light emanates from the yogic plexus Mūlādhāracakra. It proceeds upwards and rests in the plexus called anāhatacakra which is located in the heart region. This spiritual light illuminating the heart is called Prāṇa-liṅga. This is the resting place (sthala) of prāṇa. It being formless, can be grasped only mentally.

Bhāva-Liṅga

The Supreme soul in the eight-petalled lotus (plexus) in the heart (region) is in the form of prāṇa but the soul abides in the thousand-petalled lotus in the brain-region wherein both kriyā (action) and bhāva (feeling or thinking) get dissolved. It is to be propitiated by the feeling or thinking one self being Śiva Himself (śivo'ham). Where this feeling or thought too is lost — that sthala is Bhāvaliṅga. It is connected with ātman and should be approached through bhakti, iṣṭa-liṅga, prāṇa-liṅga and bhāva-liṅga are the āvaraṇas (protective coverings) of the gross, subtle and kāraṇa bodies — sthūla (gross, physical), sūkṣma (subtle) and kāraṇa śarīras, respectively.

There are six liṅgas corresponding to six sthalas (summarised from S.N. Dasgupta — History of Indian Philosophy, V.62-63) (ṣaṭ-sthalas) — sthala a resting place.

1. Māhātma-liṅga: It is subtle, without beginning and end, self-sufficient, indefinable, graspable by intuition of the heart.
2. Prasāda-ghana-liṅga — Sādākhyā tattva: It is beyond sense-perception. It contains seeds of consciousness.
3. Cara-liṅga: The pure luminous puruṣa without inside and outside and formless. It is known as ātman.
4. Śiva-liṅga: The ego as manifested by icchā-śakti (Śiva's will-power).
5. Guru-liṅga: This sthalā by its own knowledge and powers functions as a guru.
6. Ācāra-liṅga: It upholds the universe and holds them all in the mind.

There are many other classifications of liṅga but the important ones and those associated with ṣaṭ-sthala are noted here.

Vīraśaivism advocates the path or bhakti for Śiva (self)-realization.

Paśu : Ātmā : Piṇḍa

Vīra-Śaivas use the following terms to denote individual soul (jīva): aṇu, ātmā, jīva, paśu, puḍgala, kṣetrajña, puruṣa.

Many of these terms are current from Upaniṣadic time and the rest in other Śaiva sects Vīra-Śaivas use two special terms to indicate the spiritual progress of the jīva viz. piṇḍa and aṅga.

Piṇḍa is the individual soul who has a pure heart, has his 'cage' of sins broken and whose present birth is the last birth.¹⁶ According to the 'body' of the piṇḍa, it is classified as (1) sthūla piṇḍa (gross-body), (2) sūkṣma piṇḍa (subtle-body or liṅga-sārīra), (3) kāraṇa piṇḍa (pertaining to kāraṇa body or kāraṇa sārīra).

Aṅga is derived (in the medieaval fashion) as follows :

aṁ — the Brahman, \sqrt{ga} — gacchati : 'goes'.

The individual soul that strives to reach the Brahman is called aṅga.¹⁷ They interpret the Upaniṣadic mahāvākya : tattvam asi as follows :

tat	—	liṅga or Supreme Soul
tvam	—	aṅga as explained above
asi	—	tādātmya 'one-ness, identity'

The mahāvākya means liṅgāṅga-samyoga (the union of liṅga and aṅga) or liṅgāṅga-sāmarasya (merging or union of liṅga and aṅga (these terms are explained above).

Śrīpati Paṇḍit enumerates the general characteristics of a jīva as compared with those of Śiva. He says that there are four types of liberation (mukti) viz.:

- (1) Salokatā (residence in Lord's, i.e., Śiva's, region)

- (2) Samīpatā (vicinity to Śiva)
- (3) Sarūpatā (similarity with Śiva's appearance)
- (4) Sāyujyatā (total identity with Śiva : merger in Śiva)

These four types of liberation are possible as jīva and Śiva, though bracketed in a common genus are different in species in their size, knowledge etc. (ŚB, II, p. 201). The relation between Śiva and jīva is like that between the fire and its sparks. (ŚB on BrS, 2.3.17 an Upaniṣadic concept).

Jīvas are many and eternal. But it is by way of sport that the Supreme Śiva or mahāliṅga assumes upādhis or malas and re-assumes Śivahood by washing off malas. In other words, a jīva with malas washed off becomes automatically Śiva and just as milk mixed with milk or ghī with ghī or oil with oil gets merged with no distinction (between the two) so jīvas get merged in Śiva.¹⁸ This is obviously an echo (nay practically a quotation) from the Ātmopaniṣad, 22, 23 Vira-Śaivas use different terms like liṅga, sthala but they use Upaniṣadic terms like viśva, taijasa, prājña to denote the stages of the ātman (MāṇḍūkyaUp, 3, 4, 5) as in Śivānubhava Sūtra, 5.61 (Quoted in E. V., p. 40).

There is not much discussion on mala in ŚB but Vira-Śaivas, like other Śaiva sects, believe that jīva's original Śiva-like powers become limited but the jīva regains them in full, when the malas are cleansed completely.

Evolution of the Universe (Tattvas)

Like other sects of Śaivism like KŚ, SŚ, Vira-Śaivas believe in thirty-six tattvas in a somewhat different terminology.

At the beginning (before the creation of the universe) there was only Śiva or niṣkala-liṅga. This parabrahman called Śiva desired to create the universe 'for obliging yogīs' (yoginām upakārāya) as Sūkṣmāgama (Kriyāpāda, 1.18.19) puts it.

According to one classification, the tattvas are classified in three categories — (1) Śuddhādhva (pure path?), (2) Miśrādhva (mixed path), (3) Aśuddhādhva (impure path).

(1) The tattvas in Śuddhādhva are :

1. śiva, 2. śakti, 3. sadāśiva, 4. īśvara and
5. śuddha vidyā.

The above principles are said to be related to prasāda-līṅga, cara-līṅga, śiva-līṅga, guru-līṅga and ācāra-līṅga.

(2) Miśrādhva: The following tattvas are included herein:

1. māyā, 2. kāla, 3. kalā, 4. vidyā, 5. niyati,
6. rāga and 7. puruṣa

(3) Aśuddhādhva contains the following twenty-four tattvas corresponding to Sāṅkhya tattvas:

Twenty-four Tattvas (Details)

- 1-4 (1) prakṛti, (2) buddhi (intelligence), (3) ahamkāra (ego), (4) manas (mind).
- 5-9 Cognitive sense-organs of : (5) Audition — ears, (6) Touch (i.e., skin), (7) Vision (eyes), (8) Taste (tongue), (9) Smell (nose).
- 10-14 Conative sense-organs, viz.: (10) vāk — speech, (11) Hands (action), (12) Feet (Locomotion), (13) Organ of urination, (14) and of excretion.
- 15-19 tanmātras : (15) śabda (sound), (16) sparsā (touch), (17) rūpa (form), (18) rasa (taste), (19) gandha (smell).
- 20-24 Mahābhūtas — gross elements : (20) ākāśa (ether), (21) vāyu (wind), (22) tejas (fire), (23) jala (water), (24) pṛthvī (earth).

Another enumeration of these tattvas is given in Parameśvarāgama (2.17.29-33).¹⁹ According to another classification the group of twenty-five (Sāṃkhya) tattvas the ātma-tattvas or aṅga tattvas and the liṅga tattvas include (five) śaktis, or kalā, (five) sādākhya and śiva tattva or mahāliṅga.

Though there is a difference in terminology, Kāśmir Śaivism, Siddhānta Śaivism and Vīra Śaivism (and Śāktas as well) recognize 36 tattvas out of which the first twelve are esoteric and the next twenty-four are those of Sāṃkhyas. All these tattvas are evolved out of the śakti — the will power of Śiva.

Vīra-Śaivism has ṣaṭ sthalas correspondence between sthala, śakti-pāta, or āvīrbhāva is given below:

Sthala		Āvirbhāva of Śakti-pāta
1. Bhakta	—	Māheśvara-Tattvāvīrbhāva
2. Māheśvara	—	Sadāśiva-tattvasākṣātkāra
3. Prasādī	—	Śiva-śakti-saṃyoga
4. Prāṇa-liṅga	—	Sarva-bhuvana-gamana-parokṣa-darśana
5. Śaraṇa	—	Aṇimādi-aiśvarya saṃpannatā
6. Aikya	—	Unmanī-avasthā prāpti

(Explanation follows)

A few details of each stage will show how the jīva (individual soul), originally different from Śiva, progresses step-by-step till he merges (becomes identical with aikya) in Śiva.

1. Bhakta-sthala : Śrīpati recommends the listening (to the glory of Śiva or Śiva's names, constant meditation of Āgama and Vedānta which explains the relation of body and spirit (jīva) and universal spirit (śīva). One should realize that parama Śīva is eternal and Supreme Bliss.

For the above realization bhakti (devotion to Śīva) is essential. Hence it is called bhakta-sthala. S.C. Nadiamath (op.cit., pp. 168-69) gives the following features of the bhakta-sthala:

- (1) Firm belief and devotion to Śīva only. No other god should be worshipped.
- (2) The Īṣṭa-linga offered by the guru at the time of initiation is the symbol of the Supreme Śīva.
- (3) To lead a chaste moral life.
- (4) Belief in the distinctness of the jīva (individual soul) and Śīva (the Supreme Reality) to be observed.

2. Māheśvara-sthala: All the features of the bhakta-sthala are to be observed more minutely and scrupulously. In addition to these, emphasis is on observance of holy vows (vratas and niyamas).

Śrīpati uses the term sadāśīva in the sense of 'Supreme Śīva' (vide ŚB, II, p. 73 on BrS, 1.1.21) where Hiraṇmaya-Puruṣa is called Sadāśīva. It may be noted that Śrīkaṇṭha identifies 'the golden person within the sun' with Śīva.

Śrīpati insists on the realization of this Sadāśīva-tattva by observance of holy vows and meditation.

3. Prasādi-sthala: Śrīpati states that following the Śīva-yoga, brings about the union of Śīva-Śakti at brahmarandhra (cerebral aperture). This is the real prasāda or grace of Śīva and the person so blessed is prasādi.

Nandimath (op.cit., p. 171) emphasizes only desireless action (niṣkāma-karma) in this stage.

In these first three states. Kriyā (action) is emphasized. But the duality between the jīva and Śīva still remains. In the next three stages, spiritual knowledge is emphasized and the distinction between jīva and śīva gradually disappears. Ultimately there is complete merger and identity of the jīva and śīva in the last aikya stage.

4. Prāṇa-līṅga-sthala: Śrīpati says that the guru enters the person of the disciple and helps him to move through all yogic cakras and makes him directly perceive all bhuvanas like Śīva.

S.C. Nandimath (op.cit., p. 172) equates prāṇa with ātman. The Self is looked upon as līṅga. The visualization of the internal light of prāṇa or ātman is achieved by Śiva-yoga. This stage is presided over by jaṅgama līṅga.

5. Saraṇa-sthala: Śrīpati says that at this stage, the jīva attains all spiritual powers like aṇimā, laghimā, etc. S.C. Nandimath (op.cit., pp. 172-73) says: At this stage bhakti develops into complete self-surrender (prapatti). The duality between the jīva and Śīva is very thin. It has practically vanished.

6. Aikya-sthala: At this stage, the jīva ceases to exist as distinct and different from Śīva. There is a complete unqualified identity between the Soul and the Deity. S.C. Nandimath (op.cit., pp. 173-74) says that vacana-sāstra tends to advaita — Śrīpati says that this is the jīvan-mukti (liberation during life-time) stage.

This is the sādhanā-mārga to mokṣa.

Mokṣa (Liberation)

We have seen that mokṣa (liberation from bonds of saṃsāra) is looked upon as the highest achievement (parama puruṣārtha) in life, according to all schools of Indian Philosophy except the materialists (supra, pp. 15-16). Śaivism holds that mokṣa is liberation from three types of bonds or malas viz. āṇava, karma, and māyīya. Vīra-Śaivism has prescribed dikṣā (initiation into the Śaiva spiritual path) as the condition precedent for all aspirants to mokṣa. As Siddhānta Śikhāmaṇi (SŚn) states: “By dikṣā three types of malas disappear and knowledge about Lord Śiva is imparted”.²⁰

Śrīpati asserts that ‘by the knowledge about God one gets release from all bonds’. By the knowledge of the Brhman called Śiva, there is liberation from the bonds of māyā consisting of three malas. By realization (vision of Śiva) one attains the Supreme Śiva-tattva (the attainment being the gain of the highest object of human beings).²¹ But Śrīpati assures that even by bhakti (devotion to Śiva) one can achieve the four types of liberation (such as salokatā, samīpatā, sarūpatā and sāyujyatā).²²

Śiva-yogī Śivācārya in SŚn says that mere spiritual knowledge is not enough. It should be reinforced by bhakti and be assimilated by meditation on the knowledge imparted. Bhāva (emotional attachment) is essential both for bhakti and jñāna. SŚn makes an emphatic statement:

Even a yogī without bhāva can never be able to visualize Śiva.²³

Like all other Śaiva sects, Vīra-Śaivas believe that it is only due to Śiva’s grace that one can get liberated.

There is a social aspect and personal restraint also on those who deem to have realized Śiva that every Śiva-yogī must follow the daily prescribed routine of karmas. As SŚn (16-4-9) states:

Even a desireless Mahāyogī should not give up the routine religious duties.²⁴

This is necessary to retain discipline in the followers and for their own guidance. This is bhakti-karma-samuccaya according to Vīra-Śaivas. Dr. Candra Śekhara Śivācārya (in Siddhānta Śikhāmaṇi-samīkṣā) notes: ‘Karma associated with bhāvanā is bhakti and bhāvanā associated with jñāna is meditation (Nididhyāsana)’. The objection that such a yogī should by doing a karma must experience the fruit, is not correct. It is not applicable to him as he is jīvan-mukta (liberated while alive). Śrīpati says that a jīvan-mukta realizes that Śiva is in everything (sarva-sivātmaka-jñāna-sadbhāva). If at all, he has a very tenuous relation with his mind (antaḥkaraṇa). The realization that he is the Brahman (ahaṁ brahmāsmi), he is always absorbed in the experience of Brahma-hood. He is not affected by the results of these karmas — if affected at all, it will be 'like the light of camphor as against blazing light of midday sun' as they have realized that everything is Śiva.²⁵

What is the condition of the jīvan-mukta or a person who has realized Śiva, after the fall of his body (death)? He loses his individuality and merges into (becomes identical with) Śiva. This is also the view of advaita advocated by Śaṅkara. This however does not mean that Vīra-Saiva accepts the Śaṅkara's view about the unreality (mithyātva) of the world. As Śiva is real, his creation, the world is real. This automatically discards the adhyāsa-vāda of Śaṅkara. Respectful non-controversiality is a special feature of Vīra-Śaivism. As the SŚn (Siddhānta-Śikhāmaṇi) states. Veda, Sāṁkhya, Yoga, Pāñcarātra and Pāśupata are respectable. They should not be controverted by arguments (against them).²⁶

APPENDIX

Guidelines to Vīra-Śaivas

According to *Candra-jñānāgama*²⁷ (Kriyāpāda 9-4) the following duties are prescribed for every Vīra-Śaiva:

1. Līṅgācāra (līṅga-worship)
2. Sadācāra (Good behaviour or conduct)
3. Śivācāra (Unflinching faith only in Śiva)
4. Gaṇācāra (Behaviour like fraternity viz. not to listen to derogation of Lord Śiva, Vira-Śaivism.

5. Bhrtyācāra (Service to devotees of Śiva).
1. Lingācāra includes daily worship of the liṅga given by the guru, mental concentration on it and profound and repeated meditation on it.
2. Sadācāra: Literally, the conduct of the good. Here to behave like a pious Śiva-bhakta and to serve the guru, jaṅgamas with money earned by honest means.²⁸
3. Sivācāra: Firm faith that Śiva is the Supreme Brahman. There is no other resort (Candra-jñānāgama, Kriyāpāda 9.7).
4. Ganācāra: Explained above.
5. Bhrtyācāra: To regard Śiva-Yogi as Śiva himself and to render services to him like unto a master (Siddhānta Śikhāmaṇi, 9.9).²⁹

Notes

1. vīra-śabdenocyate vidyā śiva-jīvaikya-bodhikā |
tasyām ramante ye śaivā vīra-śaivās tu te matāḥ ||
— Siddhānta-Śikhāmaṇi (SŚn), V. 16
2. vedānta-janyam yaj jñānam vidyeti pari-kīrtiyate |
vidyāyām ramate tasyām vīra ityabhidhīyate ||
— SŚn, V. 18
3. vīratvam nāma deveśi yathā vīro raṇe bhataḥ |
tathā mate ca sad-bhakyā vīro vairāgyato drdhāt |
— Pārameśvara Tantra 9-1 Quoted by Allī in SŚn
4. śrī-vaiyyāsika-brahma-sūtra-pada-mukhyārtham śivānu- grahāt |
bhāṣyam 'śrīkara'-nāmakam śrīmacchrīpati-panḍitendrayatinā vyācakṣate sāmpratam ||
aśeṣopaniṣat-sāra-viśeṣādvaitamaṇḍanam |
śiva-jñāna-pradam sūtra-bhāṣyam jayatu sarvadā ||12||
vedāgamārtha-tattvajña-śaivānām mokṣa-kāṅkṣiṇām |
vaidikānām viśuddhānām etad bhāṣyam tu kalpakam ||13||
— Śrīkara Bhāṣya (SB), p. 2
5. janmādi-srṣṭi-sthiti-vilaya tirodhānātmakam kṛtya-pañcakam asya cīdācit-prapañca-vilāsasya ।

— SB II, p. 29

6. tathā paramēśvaraḥ sarva-kāraṇatva-sarva-sārīratva sarvāntaryām itvena vyavasthito'pi sarva-doṣa-kalaṅka-vilakṣaṇaḥ ।

— SB II, p. 194

7. loke jivānām sukha-duḥkha-bhoga-darśanāt paramēśvarasya vaiṣamya-nairghrṇyādi-prasaktitṛnopapadyate । sāpekṣatvāt jīva-kṛtā-puṇya-pāpa-sāpekṣatvāt ।

— SB, II, p. 208 on BrS, 2.1.11.34

8. layaṁ gacchati yatraiva jagadetaccarācaram । punah punah samutpattim tal-liṅgam brahma sāśvatam ।

— Siddhānta Śikhāmaṇi-Liṅgadhāraṇa, 16

9. jathare liyate sarvaṁ jagat sthāvara-jaṅgamam । punar utpadyate yasmāt tad brahma liṅga-saṁjñākam ॥

— Candrajñānāgama, Kriyāpāda, 3.8

10. liyate gāmyate yatra yena caiva carācaram । tadeva Liṅgam ityukam liṅga-tattva-parāyaṇaiḥ ॥

— Śivānubhava Sūtra, 3.3

11. līnam prapañcarūpaṁ hī sarvam etac carācaram । sargādaḥ gāmyate yasmāt tasmāt liṅgam udiritam ॥

— Sūkṣmāgama, Kriyāpāda paṭala, 6.6

12. binduḥ śaktiḥ śivo nādaḥ śiva-śaktyātmakam jagat ।

— Candra-jñānāgama, Kriyāpāda, paṭala, 3.13

13. tasyaiva tejasā devī candrādi-graha-tārakāḥ । prakāśante niyamitāḥ kāla-krptyā devānīśam ॥

— Sūkṣmāgama, Kriyāpāda, 6.9

14. śruti-smṛtyāgama-vihitatvena liṅga dhāranasya agnihotrādivat vaidikatvam siddham ।

— Śrīkarabhāṣya on BrS, 1-1-1

15. prāṇāpāna-samāghātāt kanda-madhyād yad utthitam । prāṇa-liṅgam tadākhyātam prāṇāpāna-nirodhībhiḥ । prāṇo yatra layaṁ yāti tat prāṇaliṅgam uddiṣṭam ॥

— SŚn, 12.6 and 7

16. bahu-jarṇa-kṛtaiḥ puṇyaiḥ prakṣiṇe pāpa-pañjare ।

- suddhāntaḥ-karaṇo dehī piṇḍa-sābdena gīyate* ॥
— Siddhānta Śikhāmaṇi, V. 31
17. aṁ iti brahma san-mātram gacchatiti gam-ucyate ॥ rūpyate'ṅgamiti prājñaiḥ aṅga-tattva, vicintakaiḥ ॥
— Śivānubhava Sūtra, 4.4
18. yathā ghrte ghrtam nyastam, kṣīre kṣīram jale jalam ॥ kevalatvam yathā prāptam na kiñcidapi tad bhavet ॥
— Quoted from EV, p. 40
19. atha vakṣyāmi giriḥ saiva-tattvāni vai śruṇu ॥ pañca-bhūtāni tanmātra-pañca karmendriyāṇi ca ॥ jñāna-karma-vibhāgena pañca-pañca vibhāgasah ॥ tvagādi-dhātavaḥ sapta pañca prāṇādi ॥ manaścāhañkṛtiḥ khyātir guṇā prakṛti-pūruṣāḥ rago'vidyā kalā caiva nīyatīḥ kāla eva ca ॥ māyā ca suddha-vidyā ca maheśvara-sadāśivau ॥ saktiśca śiva-tattvāni proktāni kramaśah śrīve ॥
— Parameśvaragāma, 2.17.29-33
20. diyate ca śiva-jñānam kṣiyate pāśa-bandhanam ॥ yasmād atah samākhyātā dikṣetiyam vicakṣanaiḥ ॥
— SŚn (Siddhānta Śikhāmaṇi), 6-11
21. jñātvā devam mucyate sarva-pāśaiḥ-ityādīṣu-paraśiva- brahma jñānena-mala-trayātmaka-māyā-pāśa-duḥkhanīvṛtti-pūrvaka-parama-puruṣārtha-paraśiva-tattva-prāpti-darsanāt ॥
— ŚB, II.5
22. ataḥ mumukṣūṇām — bahu-janma tapaḥ-siddhāvyabhicāra bhaktireva sālokyādi-caturvidha-mukti-hetuḥ ॥
— ŚB, II.201
23. bhāva-hīnas tathā yogī na śivam draṣṭum īśvara ॥
— SŚn, 6-11
24. niḥsprho'pi mahāyogī dharma mārgam ca na tyajet ॥
— SŚn, 16.9
25. sivopāsaka-jīvan-muktānām pracandātāpa-madhya-nikṣipta- karpūra-dīpavad antaḥkaraṇa-sad-bhāve'pi sarva-sīvātmaka jñāna-sadbhāvāt ॥
— ŚB, II.138

26. *sāṅkhyam yogah pañcarātram vedāḥ pāśupatam tathā |
etāni mānabhūtāni nopahanyani yuktibhiḥ ||*
— Siddhānta Śikhāmaṇi, V.4
27. *liṅgācāraḥ sadācāraḥ śivācāras tathaiva ca |
bhrtyācaro gaṇācāraḥ pañcācārāḥ pracoditāḥ ||*
— Candra Jñānāgama, Kriyāpāda, 9.4
28. *dharmārjiteṇa dravyeṇa yat santarpaṇam anvaham |
guru-liṅga-jāṅgamānām sadācāraḥ sa vai smṛtaḥ ||*
— op. cit., 9-6
29. *śiva-yogī śivah sākṣād iti kainkarya-bhakti taḥ |
pūjayed ādareṇaiva yathā liṅgam yathā gurum ||*
— Siddhānta Śikhāmaṇi, 9.9

Epilogue

THUS far we have considered how ancient Śaiva thinkers tried to comprehend the Reality (Śiva) and His relation with Man (jīvātman) and the world. Their speculations or thought-currents in these matters flowed through four channels:

1. Monism (advaita) : KŚ (Kāśmīr Śaivism)
2. Dualism-cum-monism (dvaitādvaita) : Pāśupatism, Vīra-Śaivism
3. Pluralistic realism (dvaita) : Siddhānta Śaivism
4. Qualified monism (viśiṣṭādvaita): Śrīkaṇṭha's Śivādvaita

All these schools, however, belong to the 'Right-hand Path' (dakṣiṇācāra). There are other sects of Śaivism such as Kāpālikas, Kālāmukhas, Tāntric Śaivism and others. Due to their unacceptable practices, they are called 'Left-handed Path' (vāmācāra). Some of them are briefly noted in the Appendix, as a detailed treatment will require a separate volume.

From the syncretic icons of Hari-Hara, Mārtaṇḍa-Bhairava, Ardha-nārīśvara found all over India, we may presume that such syncretic schools of Śaivism must have existed in olden times, but their treatises or literature is not easily available.

The Veda : the Āgama

Out of the above dakṣiṇācāra schools Pāśupatism (pās) is based on the Taittirīya Āraṇyaka (17.1-5) and hence Vedic. The rest are based on Āgamas and are hence Āgamic.

Śaiva teachers claim equality of status between the Veda and Āgamas. They say that the Āgama contains the essence of the Veda (vide supra, p. 86). Śrīkaṇṭha's commentary on Brahmasūtra (BrS) and that of Śrīpati Paṇḍit (Śrīkara Bhāṣya) show that their respective sects. Śivādvaīta and Vīra-Śaivism, though Āgamic, have Upaniṣadic support. Kaunḍinya, the commentator of Pāśupata Sūtra, a work on Pāśupatism accepts that "Āgama is a sāstra that has come down from Maheśvara by guru paramparā (tradition of teachers).

āgamo nāma ā maheśvarād

guru-pāramparāyāgatam sāstram

(PāsSūtra 5.8)

It is a pious belief to be respected.

Cosmopolitanism

Cosmopolitanism is a welcome feature of Āgamic Śaivism. It is a religion of the masses. In Pāśupatism japa of Vedic mantras automatically restricted its following to the classes who are eligible to study Vedas. But like Śrīkrṣṇa's catholicity of outlook in BG, IX.32, the Āgamic Śaivism threw open the gates of mokṣa to women, sūdras and all low caste people. The Śaiva Siddhāntin saint Appār was a Vellāl and saint Saṁbandhar was a brāhmaṇa. The high caste brāhmaṇa saint Sundraramūrti dined with non-brāhmaṇas and married a dancing girl (supra, pp. 64-69).

Influence of Brāhmaṇism

Some Śaiva sects show the influence of Brāhmaṇism, probably due to local conditions. Thus KŚ claims superiority of Śaivism to Veda, and the Trika (KŚ) as being the best. But it laid down the condition that before being initiated to Śaivism all Vedic saṃskāras from Inception (garbhādhāna) to marriage must be performed (vide supra, p. 42).

It is interesting to find how a predominantly non-brāhmaṇa sect like Vīra-Śaivism assumes Brāhmaṇism. The Kāraṇāgama-Kriyāpāda, 3rd Paṭala — a Vīra-Śaiva Āgama — requires a Vīra-Śaiva to perform sandhyā-prayer thrice a day. As in Brāhmaṇism, the sandhyā includes oblation of waters to the sun-god. Japa of the Śiva Gāyatrī Mantra and also performance of five sacrifices like daily Pañca-mahā-yajñas in Brāhmaṇism). Nandikeśvara, the author of the famous work "Linga dhāraṇa-candrikā claims that he was an exponent of a Vedic Śakti Viśiṣṭādvaita school."

The evolution of Vīra-Śaivism (supra Ch. 6) explains this strong influence of Brāhmaṇism. Vīra-Śaivas up to the last generation, claimed that they were Vīra-Śaiva Liṅgī Brāhmaṇas.

The cosmopolitan Siddhānta Śaivism appears immune from such predominance of Brāhmaṇism. Its samayācāras and sanātanācāras were both brāhmaṇas and non-brāhmaṇas and they inter-dined — a practice decried by orthodox Brāhmaṇism.

Bhakti — the Path to Mokṣa

Śaiva sects differ from each other in the concept of mokṣa — especially the state of the individual soul in that state viz. complete merger with Śiva (as in VŚ) or retention of independent individuality. They, however, unanimously affirm bhakti (devotion to Śaiva) as the path to mokṣa and they prescribe it to their followers. Thus the entrant in Pāśupatism has to perform the japa of a mantra suitable to his stage, offer physical service to Śiva (and Śiva temple) and serve Śiva-Yogīs (vide supra, pp. 36-37). In Kāśmīr Śaivism, the elementary path, the Ānavopāya, consists of japa, meditation. In a higher type of path to mokṣa, in Śaktopāya. Mantra-japas is emphasized (vide supra, pp. 51-52). The Dāsa Mārga and Sakhā Mārga in Siddhānta Śaivism correspond to the dāśya (service) and sakhya (intimacy, friendship) type of the usual ninefold path of bhakti (vide supra, 78-79).

Śrīkaṇṭha is the first Śaiva teacher who proved that the theistic Śaivism of Āgamas has Upaniṣadic sanctions. He reconciled Vedic teaching with Āgamic theism — what may be called Bhakti-karma-samuccaya and exposition of bhakti as a path to mokṣa (supra, pp. 96-97).

In Vīra-Śaivism, the spiritual progress of an individual culminating in absorption in Śiva is neatly presented in ṣaṭ-sthala. The first sthala or stage of which is Bhaktasthala. Śrīpati Paṇḍit prescribes listening to the glory of Śiva (śravaṇa) japa of Śiva's name, meditation and study of Āgamas in order to realize the blissful nature of Śiva.

It will thus be seen that despite some differences in details, all sects of Śaivism emphasize bhakti. The path to mokṣa is open to all.

This is why Śaivism has become the religion of the masses. The (Male) pastoral deities of western India such as Khaṇḍobā, Birobā, Nāikbā, etc. are forms of Śiva which masses worship and serve in their own way.

Yoga

Since Upaniṣadic times, practice of Yoga was in vogue in India. The technique in sādhana pāda in Patañjali's Yoga Sūtra, the eight steps (aṅgas) of the path of Yoga have been generally accepted by all whether it is Jainism, Buddhism or Brāhmaṇism, though Patañjali's philosophy is criticised by them. Yoga implies an attitude of detachment from worldly affairs (saṁsāra). It describes deep meditation for the realization of the ātman. Śiva is the supreme yogī. He is always absorbed in meditation and is detached even during his dance (supra, pp. 3-5). In Pāśupatism, the aspirant deliberately tries to emulate Śiva from smearing of ashes to the practice of samādhi in a lonely place or in a funeral ground. Kāśmīr Śaivism prescribed three paths (upāyas) to mokṣa, the higher types — the Śākta and Śāmbhava upāyas — are practised at psychological level, the physical aspect of Pātañjala Yoga is ignored. The great Siddhāntin, Śaiva teacher Tirumūlar, in the third Tantra of Tirumandiram, describes Yoga. The terms are the same as those in Pātañjala Yoga but the fruit of mastering those aṅgas are totally different. For example, mastery over the first stage — āsana (posture) secures stay in Indra's capital (vide supra, p. 61). The special Śaiva Yogas viz. khecari, paryāṅka and candra are different from Pātañjala Yoga.

After Tirumūlar, the samayācāra saints from Appār to Sundar Mūrti were ardent devotees. They did not encourage Yoga.

In the eleventh century AD the resurgence of Viṣṇu-bhakti movement (which boosted up Śiva-bhakti as well) and the political and social upheavals which followed, adversely affected the following of the Yoga path. It however, did survive as we find Śiva-yogīs even today.

Lastly, a modern reader will naturally ask: "Has Śaivism any relevance today?" The answer is "Yes. Positively so."

The growing popularity of Yoga in advanced countries shows that people want some relief, mental peace from the tensions and imbalances created by the so-called advancement of science, technology and culture. Śaivism is a panacea to all these side-effects of modernism.

Śaivism boosts up the self-respect and self-confidence of man. Asserts Śaivism:

You are Śiva Himself. It is your privilege or birthright to be Śiva or Śiva-like again.

To a man worried with problems, this promise is an asset.

Śaivism further advises: "Though you are Śiva, your infinite powers are circumscribed due to your mala (dirt, i.e., pāśa). It can be washed off through ardent devotion to Śiva. Follow any path of bhakti (devotion) that you can afford. The merciful Śiva will favour you with divine Grace. Do your duty sincerely to the best of your ability and leave the rest with Lord Śiva."

This Karma-bhakti-samuccaya (synthesis of niṣkāma karma with ardent devotion) shall help you.

Yoga is possible for a selected few but Karma-bhakti-samuccaya is an easier way open to all to realize Śiva.

APPENDIX

Some Minor Sects of Śaivism

From literary, inscriptional, iconographic and other sources, we find that there were some other sects of Śaivism such as Kāpālikas, Kālāmukhas, Hari-Hara, Ardha-nārtīśvara and Nātha Panth. Most of these were non-Vedic and were generally followed by people who were not eligible for Vedic studies. Unfortunately, with the exception of two or three sects not much information is available about their philosophy or — spiritual path. We shall briefly notice some of these sects.

Kāpālikas

The sect of Kāpālikas is also known as kapāli, mahāvratin and soma-siddhāntins. This sect appears to be an Āgamic branch of Pāsupatism. The followers of this sect carried kapālas or human skulls for begging alms. The sect came to be called Kāpālika due to this special characteristic of the followers. They were called kāpālins (bearers of a kapāla). Carrying a human skull was only a part of the mahāvratā which Śiva had to adopt in order to expiate for the sin of brāhmaṇa-hatyā viz. plucking off a head of god Brahmā. The observance of the mahāvratā considered of: (1) stay in a cremation ground or an isolated place, (2) smearing of the body with ashes from funeral pyres, (3) to carry khatvāṅga (skull-topped baton) and (4) use of human skull as a begging bowl.¹ The observers of this mahāvratā are mahāvratins.

The sect appears to be very old as the Maitrī Upaniṣad prohibits stay with them (mantras 7-8). The Kūrma Purāna (II.40.61-62) condemns it as being beyond the pale of the Vedas (Veda-bāhya). Their caricatures in Sanskrit literature represents them to be hypocrites, and wicked. (For example, in Mahendra Varṃā's Matta-Vilāsa, Bhavabhūti's Mālati-Mādhava).

Originally they were devout followers of Śiva. As access to the Vedas was denied to them, they followed the path of Āgamas. Assuming the semblance of Śiva as a mahāvratin was a very difficult vow that they followed, despite the ridicule of the public at large. It is preposterous to believe that all these Āgamic followers of Śiva were condemnable simply because some of them might be following evil practices under the influence of Buddhists and Tāntrikas.

Kāpālika Philosophy

Few treatises on Kāpālika philosophy are available. Our information is based on unsympathetic sources who wanted to condemn the practices of a non-Vedic sect.

We can presume that like all other Śaiva sects, they believed in Śiva as the ultimate authority. Like all other schools of Indian philosophy (except the atheists) they regarded mokṣa (liberation from samsāra) as the ultimate goal (puruṣārtha) of human life. But their concept of mokṣa is not negative as duḥkhānta (end of miseries, a state wherein there is no misery). It is a bit strangely positive as implied in their epithet soma-siddhāntin. Out of this epithet, the term soma (-sa + umā) means 'Śiva in intimate-sexual-contact with Umā). And the 'greatest bliss' mahāsukha is the highest peak in sexual happiness. Those who believed in this soma-siddhānta were called soma-siddhāntins.

Rāmānuja in his Śrī-bhāṣya (a commentary on the Brahma Sūtra) informs us while commenting on Patyurasāmañjasyāt (BrS, 2.2.35) that Kāpālikas believe in God as the instrumental cause as against the Vedāntic view about Him as the material cause as well as the instrumental cause of the Universe. "They prescribe various rituals and ways of meditation and rules of conduct which were at variance with the Vedic ones. They prescribe various rituals and methods of meditation and rules of conduct repugnant to the Vedic ones." Applying six mudrās (marks) on the body and meditation on the ātman as abiding in bhaga is the way to mokṣa.² It may be noted that the term bhaga means sūnya in Buddhism and as such is not objectionable.

The Kāpālika teacher Bodholbaṇa Nityānanda (in Śāṅkara Digvijaya, Ch. 3) explains:

Our way of life confers happiness to all as it is without formal rituals. For ritualistic actions do not lead to mokṣa. We adore only Bhairava (i.e., Śiva), the creator, sustainer and destroyer of all. All deities obey Him.

This in a nutshell is the Kāpālika philosophy.

B. Bhattacharya in Esoteric Buddhism tells us that the sect came under the influence of Buddhism. Later it was dominated by Śāktism and adopted five makāras in the literal sense of the terms. They revelled in makāras like madya (wine), māmsa (meat), maithuna (sexual intercourse) as a pathway to mokṣa. Naturally it became unpopular despite their bluff of possessing miraculous powers.

Kālāmukha Sect

Kālāmukha was a branch (with some changes) of the ancient Pāśupata sect. They were so-called as they used a black line(s) on the forehead (T.A. Gopinathrao). The sect spread over the major part of Karnataka and some part of Andhra. It had two branches: (i) Śakti Pariṣad and (ii) Siṃha Pariṣad. Śakti Pariṣad dominated in Dharwar and Shimoga districts. Inscriptions from Bijāpur (AD 1074-75). Muttagi (AD 1147, 1158) indicate that Kāśmīr brāhmaṇas were the exponents or preachers of this sect. They were experts in Lakulāgam (Pāśupatism) but they also taught Vedas, Śāstras, Purāṇas in the maths (monasteries) attached to their Śiva-linga temples. They emphasized Yoga. The Kings of Karnataka and Andhra supported their temple-institutions generously as can be seen from Kannaḍa inscriptions from the eleventh, twelfth and the early half of the thirteenth centuries AD.

Modern scholars believe it to be an earlier form of Vira-Śaivism on the following grounds:

1. All important temples and maths and sacred places of Kālāmukhas are slowly and imperceptibly absorbed into Vira-Śaivism. (S.C. Nandimath—Handbook—Vira-Śaivism, p. 9).
2. Mysore Gazetteer (II. Part 11, 885) states: "The Śaivite revival under Bāsava and the early Vira-Śaivas seem to have followed as the natural result of the work of these Śaiva teachers of the Pāśupata (sic for Kālāmukha school of Belagami — Belagave).

3. The term jaṅgama — now used for the priest-class among Vīra-Śaivas was applied to Kālāmukha teachers. For example, Gadag inscription of AD 1192, Kālāmukha teacher Candrabhūṣana Paṇḍit is called 'Jaṅgama-linga of Lord Trikūṭeśvara'. Sarveśvaradeva, Kālāmukha head of Jagdiśvara temple Munavalli, is called Jaṅgama Lingāvatāra in the inscription of AD 1252.

Very little is recorded about their philosophy. Kaunteya Muni, a Kālāmukha teacher of Hombal is credited with the view: "Śiva-Brahman, though formless can by its will-power create, sustain and destroy the world."

A view endorsed by Revaṅārya and other teachers of Vīra-Śaivism.

These Pāśupata (Kālāmukha) brāhmaṇas seem to have contributed their mite in the formation of Vīra-Śaivism.

SOME SYNCRETIC ICONS

Hari-Hara

Since Purāṇic times attempts have been made to combine (or reduce the rivalry between) followers of the powerful sects of Śaivism and Vaiṣṇavism. Thus we find the Kūrma Purāṇa declaring the identity of Śiva and Viṣṇu. States the Kūrma Purāṇa (I.15.89-91):

He who is Viṣṇu is Rudra himself. And he who is Rudra is Janārdana.³

The Nārada, a Vaiṣṇava Purāṇa tells : (83.23) "Originally there was god Kṛṣṇa who divided himself into two, the right part was Viṣṇu and the left Mahādeva". The Matsya Purāṇa (259.22.27) gives instruction for the preparation of a Hari-Hara icon of which the right part is Śaiva while the left half is Vaiṣṇava. Thus half part of the head has matted hair with the crescent moon while the left half of the head has a bejewelled crown. That way the whole body showed both Śaiva and Vaiṣṇava characteristics. Curiously enough, it was the Turkish, i.e., Kuṣāṇa King Huviṣka (AD 106-138) who attempted a compromise between the two sects by using such complex figure on his coins. If this icon represents a sect, the sect must be presumed to have existed at those places or states where they are found. We find such icons at Visnagar (Gujarat), Sopara (Thane district, Maharashtra), Tirupati (in Andhra Pradesh) was a Śiva-icon Vaiṣṇavised at the time of Rāmānuja. Old Alwār saints like Payalvar, Paugai regard Tirupati as both Śiva and Viṣṇu.⁴ The icon of Viṭṭhala at Paṇḍharpur (Maharashtra) is also believed to combine both Śiva and Viṣṇu. As it can be seen from legend this Hari-Hara cult most probably began from the Mahābhārata period.

Mārtaṇḍa-Bhairava

The Skanda-Purāṇa, Khaṇḍa VII contains a list of Śiva-Āditya Liṅgas. I think a featureless liṅga is not an icon or idol. Those being nor icons are not called Mārtaṇḍa-Bhairava (the Sun-Śiva complex). We find such icons in east India (Bengal, Orissa). The Liṅga-Purāṇa Uttarārḍha in 16.27-39 states that paying obeisance to Śiva is the same as done unto the Sun-god.⁵ Not much is known about this sect.

Nātha-Pantha⁶

This important cult has been carefully studied by Eastern and Western scholars like Rāhul Sānkṛityāyan, Hazāri Prasād Divedi, G.W. Briggs and others. This Pantha seems to be influenced by Buddhist Sahajayāna and Vajrayāna cults, 'Left-hand' Śaiva cults like Kāpālīka, Kaul and also by Śaiva Āgamas. It is noted for its Yogic culture. Assimilation of Buddhist concept of sūnya, sahaja and Śiva-Śakti concept of Āgamic Śaivism seems to have been fused together in this cult. The guru-paramparā of this sect includes the names of Tibetan (Buddhist siddhas). This fusion seems to have taken place during AD 800-1100. It is after AD 1100 that an independent Nātha Pantha became established and is respected all over India as a Śaiva sect. Its followers too assumed some externalities of Śiva like smearing with ashes, using damaru (hand-drum) etc. Some Santa-paramparās (traditions of saints) in Mediaeval India have been developed out of this sect). It is a living sect with affluent centres in various parts of the country.

Notes

1. *śtraḥ kapālī dhvajavān bhikṣāsi karma vedayan |
brahma-hā dvādaśāhdāni mitabhuk śuddhīmāpnuyāt ||*
— Yājñavalkya Smṛti, 3.2.42

This is echoed in Kūrma Purāṇa, II.30.12-16

2. Śrībhāṣya on BrS, 2.2.35 (Karamarkar's translation pp. 690-91.
3. yo viṣṇuḥ sa svayam rudro

yo rudrah sa janārdanaḥ |

— Kūrma Purāṇa, I.15.89-91

4. C.V. Narayana Aiyar, The Early History of Śaivism in South India, Madras University, Madras, 1936, pp. 240-42.
5. namaḥ śivaya devāya . . . tubhyaṁ brahmane sūrya — mūrtaye |
— Linga Purāṇa, II.16.27-60
6. Based on Tattvajñāna Mahākośa, Pune, 1974 and G.V. Tagare, "Jñāneśvara and Vajrayāna sect", in Navabharat (Monthly) Pune, August 1956.

Glossary

Ābhāsavāda (in KS) : Absolute self-dependence of Śiva:
Śiva's svātantrya.

Ābhoga (in KS) : Spiritual delight. Also called camatkāra.

A-cit : Non-intelligent, non-spirit.

Acintyatva : Incomprehensibility.

Adhiṣṭhāna : Substratum, base.

Adhiṣṭhātr : The presiding principle.

Ādho-māyā (in SS) : Aśuddha-māyā.

Adhyāsa : False superimposition.

Adhvā : Pathway, course. Śuddha advhā — The intrinsic course super-mundane manifestation; aśuddha advhā — The course of mundane manifestation.

Advaita : Monism.

Āgama : Scriptural Text — Śiva, the author.

Agnihotra : Maintenance of sacred fire.

Ahaṅkāra or ahantā : 'I'-ness; I-consciousness; Ego.

Ajñāna : The primal limitation (mala or pāśa), inherent in man.

Ānanda : Supreme Bliss.

Ānanda upāya : The same as anupāya.

Ananta (in SS) : The representative agent of cosmic functions: A mature soul free from practically all bonds.

Āṇava mala : Primal limiting condition which reduces the Śiva-like powers of jīvātman.

Āṇava upāya : The yoga whereby the individual utilizes his senses prāṇa and manas for self-realization. Also called bhedopāya, kriyā yoga or kriyopāya.

Āṅga (in VŚ) : An individual (soul) trying for union with Śiva.

Āṇu (in KŚ) : One that breathes; the limited experient.

Anugraha : Grace; A function of Śiva; Śiva's grace essential for mokṣa.

Anupāya (in KŚ) : Spontaneous manifestation of Śiva without any special effort.

Anusandhāna : Repeated intensive awareness of essential Reality (i) A synthetic unity of apperception (ii) spiritual experiences, (iii) Concentration on natural so'ham sound.

Apāna : Inhalation.

Araṇi : The piece of wood for kindling fire by attrition.

Asat : Non-being.

Aśuddha vidyā : Empirical knowledge (limited to a few particulars).

Āvaraṇa : Veil; covering. But in VŚ, protective armour (rakṣā kavaca). These are eight in number viz. suru, liṅga, aṅgama, pādodaka, bhasma, rudrākṣa and mantra.

Avidyā : Non-knowledge; ignorance.

Avikalpa (nirvikalpa) : Direct jñāna — Direct realization of Reality, unparticularised awareness.

Avyabhicāritva : Non-presence of the one without the other.

Bandha : Bondage, pāśa, limited knowledge.

Bhairava : Para Bhairava : Śiva; Apara Bhairava : Siddha.

Bhairavī mudrā : A special mudrā with attention inward and gaze outward.

Bhakti : Devotion ; Parā bhakti : A higher type of devotion.

Bhāvanā : Creative contemplation (in sākta upāya).

Bhoga : Experience; Bhoktā: Experient.

Bhūta : Gross physical element.

Bhuvana : Planes or place of existence there are 108 bhāvanās in Śaivism.

Bindu : A metaphysical point, (a compact mass of Śakti ready to create).

Brahma-randhra : The sahasrāra caraka : An aperture in the crown of the head.

Caitanya : The foundational consciousness endowed with the jñāna and kriyā.

Cakra : (i) Collection of Śaktis; (ii) Yogic plexus such as mūlādhāra, anāhata.

Camatkāra (in KŚ) : Bliss of pure I-consciousness.

Cit : Foundational consciousness; Intelligent.

Citi (in KŚ) : Absolute's consciousness-power (for world process).

Citta : The mind (of an empirical individual).

Darsāna : A school of philosophy; Insight.

Dehātmaikya-bhāva : Notion of the identity of the body and soul.

Dhāraṇā : Concentration (on something); Meditation.

Dharma : (i) an Attribute; (ii) Disposition of intellect to good; (iii) Good predicative element.

Dhvani : A subtle sound; Anāhata nāda.

Dhyāna yoga : Yoga of meditation; (in KŚ) The highest dhāraṇā in āṇava upāya.

Dīkṣā : Initiation; The ceremony is a gift of and entrance into a spiritual path. The procedure of a dīkṣā varies with different sects.

Divya mudrā : Khecarī mudrā.

Drk-kriyā-śakti : The power of knowledge and action (inherent unto jīvātman).

Dvaita : Pluralistic Realism; Dualism.

Dvaitādvaita : Dualism-cum-monism.

Gaṇatattva (in SŚ) : The principle of material constituent.

Ghorā śaktis : The Śakti-deities that drag the Jīva to saṃsāra.

Gocarī : 'Go' means 'a sense-organ'. They are related to antaḥkaraṇa; (in KŚ) A sub-species of Vāmeśvarī.

Haṃsa : The jīva; The soul.

Haṃsa-japa : The consciousness of nāda-kalā; The ajapā japa.

Ichā : Will, will-power to do anything; Ichā-Śakti (in KŚ): The innate power of parama Śiva, the onward state of Śiva wherein jñāna and kriyā are unified; the predominant aspect of Sadāśiva. The sovereign free-will is Śiva's svātantrya.

Idantā : 'This-ness'; objective consciousness.

Īśvarādvaya-vāda : The doctrine of non-difference between man and soul.

Īśvara-tattva : The fourth tattva from Śiva, jñāna is predominant (in aham-idam relation) (also in KŚ).

Jagadānanda : The bliss of the Divine (in KŚ); cf. Śivānanda (in VŚ).

Jagat : The world.

Jāgrat (avasthā): The waking condition (jñāna); Objective knowledge in waking condition.

Jīva : The individual soul: classified according to malas, associated: viññānākala (with āṇavamala) pralayākala (with āṇava and kārma malas) sakala (with āṇava, kārma, māyīya malas).

Jīvan-mukta : The liberated individual soul while alive

Jīvan mukti : The experience of the above state.

Jñāna : Spiritual knowledge; (in KŚ) limited knowledge, a source of bond.

Jñāna yoga : Śākta upāya.

Kalā : (i) Part, particle; (ii) A kañcuka limiting jīva's activity.

Kalā-cakra : Māṭṛcakra. The group of letters from a to kṣa.

Kāla tattva : Time, past, present and future.

Kañcuka : Coverings of māyā converting Śiva into jīva. They are (1) kalā (2) [aśuddha] vidyā (3) rāga, (4) niyati, (5) kāla.

Karaṇa : The means of jñāna and kriyā. Thus antaḥ-karaṇa is 'internal organ'; psychic apparatus. Bahiṣkaraṇa — External organ.

Khecari (in SŚ): The special yoga propounded by Tirumular in Tirumandiram.

Khecari mudrā or Śivāvasthā (in KŚ) : Śiva-like bliss.

Khyāti : Knowledge.

Kleśa : Hindrance; Impurity (SŚ) kṣetrajñā; The individual soul; The empirical subject.

Kriyā (in KŚ) : Power to create everything out of oneself, also called śuddha vidyā.

Kṛtya : (1) Action; (2) Function — the five functions of Śiva are: viz. sr̥ṣṭi (manifestation, creation), sthiti (maintenance of the manifested), saṁhāra (withdrawal of the manifestation), vilaya or pidhāna (veiling of self), anugraha (grace).

Kumbhaka : Retention of breath in prāṇāyāma (breath-control).

Kuṇḍalinī : The spiritual śakti lying in three and half folds in the mūlādhāra cakra.

Laya : Dissolution, complete concentration.

Liṅga : (i) Representation of Śiva; (ii) The Brahman (iii) varieties of liṅgas: (a) mukha-liṅga (with face of Śiva on the liṅga, (b) vigraha liṅga (with full form of Śiva on the liṅga, (c) sthāṇu (faceless liṅgas).

Madhya : Suṣumnā, central prāṇa nāḍī.

Madhyamā : See parā vāk.

Mahāmāyā/Māyā: Deluding power: It is śuddha or mahāmāyā having contact with Śiva. In SŚ māyā is the independent creator of the world : Mahāmāyā or (aparā) is below śuddha vidyā. Māyā is the material substratum of the cosmos.

Mantra : Sacred formula for chanting.

Mantresvara : The individual who realize Śiva, Śiva assigns some duties to them.

Mārga (in SŚ) : Pathway to mokṣa. They are four:

- (1) Dāsa-mārga : service unto Śiva and Śivabhaktas.
- (2) Sat-putra mārga : Service to Śiva as father.
- (3) Sakhā-mārga : Service as a friend of sakhya bhakti.
- (4) San-mārga : The path of knowledge.

Mātrkā : The letters of alphabet and word power (of these deities).

Māyīya mala : A bond created by māyā.

Moha : Delusion.

Mudrā : Yogic control of certain organs or postures of hands, etc.

Mukti or Mokṣa : Liberation from saṃsāra.

Nāda : (i) Metaphysics: The first movement of Śiva-Śakti to manifestation; (ii) In yoga: anāhata sound experienced in meditation.

Nāḍī : Nostril through which the breath flows : Sūrya or Idā (right nostril), Soma or Piṅgalā (left nostril).

Nididhyāsana : Continuous contemplation: intuitive realization.

Nimeṣa : Lit. closing of eyelids; (in KŚ) Dissolution of the object into the subject (the inner activity of spanda).

Nimīlana samādhī (in KŚ) : Absorption of the individual consciousness into universal consciousness.

Nimitta-kāraṇa : Efficient cause.

Nirākāra : Formless; (in SS) Possession of all forms.

Nirvikalpa : Devoid of all ideation.

Niṣkala : Formless, pure.

Niyati : The principle of determination of karmas.

Pañca-kṛtya : See under kṛtya.

Pañcākṣara (in VŚ) : The mantra — śivāya namaḥ.

Pañca-śakti : The five fundamental śaktis of Śiva viz. cit, ānanda, icchā, jñāna and kriyā.

Parāmarśa : Mental grasping; contemplation; Remembrance.

Parāpara (in KŚ) : The intermediate stage both identical and different.

Parā vāk : The first stage of speech at the mūlādhāra cakra: Paśyanti is a more manifest stage (place heart region), madhyamā is inarticulate speech (at the throat region), vaikharī: articulate, gross, physical words.

Pāśa : Bondage : they are the āṇava, kārma and mayīya.

Paśu : The empirical individual bound by avidyā.

Pati : Lord Śiva, the liberated soul.

Piṇḍa (in VŚ) : An individual in the last (pre-mokṣa) birth.

Prakāśa Lit : Light; Śiva's omniscience.

Pralayākala : See under jīva.

Pramā : Exact knowledge.

Pramāṇa : Means of knowledge.

Pramātr : Knower.

Prameya : Knowable, object of knowledge.

Pratybhijña : Recognition.

Puruṣa ajñāna : Innate ignorance of puruṣa about real self.

Pūryaṣṭaka : Linga-sarīra (subtle body) of eight constituents viz. five tanmātras, buddhi, ahaṅkāra and manas (mind).

Rāga : A kañcuka of māyā creating desire, passion.

Rajas : A constituent or quality of prakṛti, shows activity.

Śabda : Sound; Word.

Śabda Brahma : The Vedas, the ultimate reality wherein thought and word are identical.

Ṣaḍadhvā (in KŚ) : Six forms of manifestation : mantra, varṇa and pada on the subjective side and kalā, tattva and bhuvanas on the objective side.

Sadāśiva or Sādākhya : The third devolutionary tattvas from Śiva (on the evolution of the world); (in VŚ) One of the five Śiva tattvas, evolved from bindu.

Sahaja vidyā : Knowledge of the innate essential nature; Sometimes unmanī avasthā.

Śakta upāya or Sāmbhava upāya : See under Upāya.

Śakti : Divine will power (to create, sustain and annihilate the world; (ii) The spanda, creative pulsation of Śiva.

Śakti-pāta : Descent of Śakti; Divine grace (for self-realization).

Sāmarasya (in KŚ) : Union of Śiva and Śakti identical stage with disappearance of differences.

Samāveśa : Being possessed by the Divine; Absorption of one's consciousness in the Divine.

Samsāra : Transmigratory existence; the world process.

Samvit : Consciousness; supreme consciousness with complete fusion of prakāśa and vimarsā; jñāna śakti.

Ṣaṭ-sthala (in VŚ) : Stages of spiritual development viz. (1) Bhakta, (2) Maheśvara, (3) Prasādi, (4) Prāṇa-līṅga, (5) Śaraṇa, (6) Aikya sthala.

Ṣaṭsthala : Also Sthala. Spiritual position of a jīva.

Spanda : Creative pulsation of Śiva.

Sthūla śarīra : Gross physical body.

Śuddha adhvā : The course of world manifestation from Śiva to śuddha vidyā, the fifth tattva wherein consciousness of both 'Ī' and 'The world' is equally prominent.

Sūkṣma śarīra : See Pūryaṣṭaka; subtle body.

Śūnya (Buddhism) : An undefinable state of Reality (ii) (Śaiva) A state wherein no object is experienced.

Svātantrya : Absolute freedom of will, the vimarsā śakti.

Tamas (Lit.) : Darkness; a constituent of prakṛti, principle of delusion.

Tan-mātra : 'That only', subtle element (of gross prthivī, etc. or of sense-perception such as śabda, sparsā).

Tantra : A system of philosophy.

Tattva : 'Thatness', principle, a category (e.g., in Sāṅkhya evolution of the universe).

Tirodhāna : Śiva's power to conceal.

Trika : System of philosophy of Triad such as nara, śakti, śiva, pati, paśu pāśa — Kāśmīr Śaivism.

Tūrya : The fourth state of consciousness beyond those of waking, dream, sleep. It strings these states together.

Tūryātīta : State beyond the above state of pure blissfulness.

Uccāra (in KŚ) : A technique of concentration on prāṇa.

Udāna : Upward moving vital vāyu; (ii) The śakti moving upward in suṣumnā after awakening.

Udyama (in KŚ) : The sudden spontaneous emergence of supreme I-consciousness.

Unmeṣa (in KŚ) : The emergence of divine I-consciousness; The start of the world-process.

Upādāna kāraṇa : The material cause.

Upāya (in KŚ) : Pathway to liberation. They are (i) anupāya, (ii) sambhava, (iii) śākta, (iv) āṇava.

Vāha : Flow of breath: The channel of prāṇa flowing through nostrils.

Vaikharī : Overt articulate speech; See Parā vāk.

Varṇa : A letter of alphabet; anāhata (unstruck) nāda (sound).

Vāsanā : Residual trace of action and impressions in mind.

Vidyā : (i) Śuddha vidyā tattva; (ii) Limited knowledge a kañcuka of māyā.

Vikalpa : Option; Difference of perception; thought-construct.

Vijñānākala : Individual soul free from kārma and māyīya mala.

Vimarsā : Self-consciousness of parama Śiva fall of jñāna and kriyā for world process.

Vyāpti : Universal relation; concomitance.

Yoga : Joining or communion with God; Samādhi — there is no mental fluctuation in this state.

Yoni : Source, womb; (in KŚ), Nine classes of consonants.

Bibliography

- Abhinava Gupta : Tantra-sāra, Kashmir Sanskrit Series (KSS), Śrīnagar, 1918.
- , Tantrāloka (with Jayaratha's Com. (= commentary): KSS.
- , Paramārtha-sāra (Com. by Yogarāja) : KSS 7, 1916.
- Ādyanātha : Anuttara-pañcāsikā : KSS 14, 1918.
- Āgama-Ardha-māgadhī : Agamodaya Samiti, Bombay.
- Āgama-Pāli-Bauddha : Nalanda edition, ed. by Jagadish Kaśyapa.
- Aiyer C.V. Narayan : Origin and Early History of Śaivism in South India, University of Madras, 1936.
- Awaliker Pandit (ed.) : Viveka Cintāmaṇi (Marathi), Dharwar, 1963.
- Bhagavatī Sūtra* (Ardha Māgadhī-Jain canon) : tr. by Pt. Bechardas, Gujarat Vidyapeeth, Ahmedabad.
- Bhandarkar, R.G. : Vaiṣṇavism and Śaivism (A Symposium) Bhandarkar O.R. Institute, Pune, 1976.
- Bharatiya Vidya Bhavan : Vedic Age (History and Culture of Indian People), Bombay, 1965.
- Bhāsarvajña : Ratna Tīkā (on Gaṇa Kārikā), C.D. Dalal, 1920.
- Bhojadeva : Tattva-prakāśa (with com. Tattvadīpikā), ed. by T. Ganapatiśāstrī, Trivandrum, 1920.

- Chakrobarthi, Haripad : Pāśupata Sūtram (Eng. Translation), Academic Publishers, Calcutta, 1970.
- Chatterji J.C. : Kashmir Shaivism: Kashmir Granth Mala, Śrīnagar, 1914.
- Coomaraswami A. : Dance of Śiva, Asia, Bombay, 1948.
- Dandge G.B. : Rudra, Yajña and Śiva Linga (Marathi), Maharashtra Granth Bhandar, Kolhapur.
- Dasgupta S.N. : History of Indian Philosophy, Vol. V, Motilal Banarsidass, Delhi, 1975.
- Gajendragadkar K.V. : Neo-Upaniṣadic Philosophy, Bharatiya Vidya Bhavan, Bombay, 1959.
- Hāla (Sātavāhana) : Gāthā Saptasatī (Marathi), tr. by S.A. Joglekar, Pune.
- Haradatta : Gaṇa Kārikā, C.D. Dalal, 1920.
- Haribhadra : Ṣaḍ-darśana-saṅgraha, Bhāratī Jñānapīṭha, 1970.
- Hastings : Encyclopaedia of Religion and Ethics.
- Jash, Prabananda : History of Shaivism, Roy and Choudhuri, Calcutta, 1974.
- Kāravāṇa Māhātmya* (Purāṇic) : ed. by C.D. Dalal, 1920.
- Kṣemarāja : Parā-praveśikā, KSS, 1918.
- , Pratyabhijñā-hṛdaya, ed. by Jayadev Singh, Motilal Banarsidass, Delhi, 1980.
- Lakuliṣa : Pāśupata sūtra, (with Kauṇḍinya's Com.) ed. by Ananta Kṛṣṇa Śāstrī, Trivandrum, 1940.
- Lorensen David N. : The Kāpālikas and Kālāmukhas, Thomson Press, New Delhi, 1972.
- Madhva : Com. on Brahmasūtra (with com. Tattva Prakāśikā), Marathi Translation, Rangacharya Raddi, Pune, 1949.

- Maheśvarānanda : Mahārtha-Mañjarī, Yoga Tantra Granthmālā, Vārāṇasī, 1972.
- Malldevaru H.P. : Essentials of Viraśaivism, Bharatiya Vidya Bhavan, Bombay, 1973.
- Marshall, Sir John : Mohenjo Daro and the Indian Civilization, 3 vols., London, 1931.
- Nandikeśvara : Linga-dhāraṇa-candrikā, ed. by M.R. Sakhare, Belgaum, 1938.
- Nandimath S.C. : A Handbook of Viraśaivism, Dharwar, 1942.
- Pande K.C. : Abhinavagupta: An Historical and Philosophical Study, Chowkhamba Sanskrit Series, Benaras, 1935.
- , Bhāskarī, Vol. I, III, Lucknow University.
- Pandit B.N. : Aspects of Kashmir Śaivism, Utpala Pub., Śrīnagar, 1977.
- Patañjali : Vyākaraṇa-mahā-bhāṣya, ed. by Keilhorn. Purāṇas : Guru Mandal edition, Calcutta.
- Pusalkar A.D. : Studies in Epics and Puranas of India, Bharatiya Vidya Bhavan, Bombay, 1963.
- Radhakrishnan S. (ed.) : History of Philosophy — Eastern and Western, Vol. I, George Allan & Unwin, London, 1967.
- Ramakrishna Mission : Cultural Heritage of India, Vol. IV, Calcutta, 1956.
- Rāmānuja : Śrī-bhāṣya (on Brahma sūtra), tr. by R.D. Karamarkar, Pune University, Pune.
- Rao T. Gopinath : Essentials of Hindu Iconography, Motilal Banarsidass, Delhi.
- Renou L. : L'inde Classique, (French).

Sachau S.C. : Alberuni's India, London, 1910.

Sakhare M.R. : History and Philosophy of Lingayat Religion, Belgaum, 1942.

Śaṅkara : Śārīraka Bhāṣya (on Brahma Sūtra), Nirnaya Sagara, Bombay, 1904.

Śivayogi Śivācārya : Siddhānta Śikhāmaṇi, Viraśaiva Sāhitya Saṁśodhana Maṇḍal, Śolāpur, 1990.

Smṛtis : Guru Mandal edition, Calcutta.

Śrīkaṇṭha : Brahma-mīmāṃsā-bhāṣya : ed. by Halasyanāth Śāstrī, Kumbhakoṇam, vol. I 1908, vol. II 1918.

Śrinivasachari P.N. : Philosophy of Bhedābheda, Madras, 1950.

Śrīpati Paṇḍit : Śrīkara Bhāṣya (on Brahmasūtra) ed. by C. Hayavadanrao, Bangalore, 1937.

Somānanda : Śiva-dr̥ṣṭi, KSS 54, 1934.

Sūryanārāyaṇa Śāstrī : Śivādvaita of Śrīkaṇṭha, Madras University, 1930 and 1972.

Tagare G.V. : Śaivadarśana (Marathi) Continental, Pune, 1987.

Upaniṣat-Saṅgraha : ed. by J.L. Shastri, Motilal Banarsidass, Delhi, 1970.

Utpala-deva : Īśvara-pratyabhijñā (Com. by Abhinava-gupta) vol. I, KSS 22, 1918; vol. II, KSS 33, 1921.

Vasugupta : Śivasūtra ed. and tr. (Marathi) by G.V. Tagare, Impressions, Belgaum, 1996.

———, Spanda Kārikā, ed. and tr. (Marathi) by G.V. Tagare, Satara, 1984.

Vedas : Svādhyāya Maṇḍala, Aundh.

Vyāsa : Kūrmapurāṇa, A.S. Gupta, Kashiraj Trust, Vārāṇasī, 1972.

- , Bhagavad Gītā (with 18 commentaries), Gujarati Printing Press, Bombay.
- , Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, tr. (Eng.) by G.V. Tagare, Motilal Banarsidass, Delhi.
- , Mahābhārata, Gita Press, Gorakhpur.
- , Mahā-Śiva-Purāṇa, Pandit Pustakalaya, Vārāṇasī, Samvat 2020.

Index

- Ābhāsavāda (KŚ), 54
Āgama and Vedas, equally authoritative, 85-86
Ahaṁkāra
 Classification (SŚ), 77
Ajñāna (See Ignorance)
Aṅga (VŚ), 114
Anugraha
 Śiva's power, 49

Brahma-mīmāṃsā-bhāṣya
(BMB)
 Basic Text of ŚA, 11, 86-88
 Date of BMB, 88-89
 Author Śrikanṭha
 An independent thinker, 89
 Śrikanṭha and Rāmānuja differences, 90-91

Ignorance (KŚ), 48
Īśvarādvayavāda (See KŚ), Īśvarādvaita and Kevalādvaita
 comparison, 55-56

Kāpālīka (a Śaiva sect), 132-35
Kāśmīr Śaivism (KŚ)
 Term explained 41-42
 Sects of KŚ, 42-43
 Concept of Pati 10, 45-47
 Concept of Paśu, 47
Pāśa (bandha, mala)
 Ānava, 47-48
 Kārma, 48
 Māyīya, 48-49
 Concept of mokṣa, 16
 Branches (Texts or Śāstras)
 Āgama
 Spanda, Pratyabhijñā, 43-44
Anugraha (Śuktipāta) essential for mokṣa 49-50
 Comment to (All sects of Śaivism)
 Paths to mokṣa (upāyas)
 Anupāya, 50
 Śāmbhava, 50
 Śākta, 57
 Ānava, 51-52

Liṅga,

Kālāmukha (a Śaiva sect), 136

- Concept 20, 111-12
- Evolution
worship 20
- Linga*: the Parabrahman,
23,24, 110-12
- Classification of Lingas, 22, 23
- Mukha, Vighraha,*
Sthānu, 22-23
- In SS (Tiruman- diram), 63-64
- Lingas* corresponding to sthalas (VŚ) 112-13
- Māyā*,
Concept in SS, 75-76
- Mahā (śuddha) māyā*, 76-77
- Mokṣa* (Liberation from Samsāra)
Concept in general 15-16 in Pāśupatism, 34-35
in Kāśmīr Śaivism,
49
in Siddhānta Śaivism
(Tamil literature), 80-
81
Concept of mokṣa,
in Vira-Śaivism, 115
Paths to mokṣa,
in Siddhānta Śaivism,
75, 76, 78, 79
Types of mokṣa, 114
- Pañcikaraṇa*, 17
- Paśu* (Synonyms : aṇu, ātmā, jīva, pudgala kṣetrajña)
(Individual Soul),
Self-born , 12
General Concept, 13, 14 in Kāśmīr Śaivism, 47
in Siddhānta Śaivism,
72-74
in Śivādvaita, 93-94
in Viraśaivism, 114
- Paśutva (see Pāśa, Mala)*
- Pāśa* (Synonyms : bandha, mala (bond) paśutva, ajñāna, tamas, avidyā),
Pāśa,
Concept
Classification, 13-16
Āṇava, kārma, māyīya, mala different from rāga
(sāṃkhyā), 14
In Kāśmīr Śaivism,
47-49
(Kārma 48, Māyīya 48-49)
In Siddhānta Śaivism,
74-75
In Śivādvaita, 94-95
- Pāśupatism: (Pāś:)*
The term pāś, 31-32
An early form of Pāśupatism, 31-32
Founder (Prophet) of Pāś, 32-33
Spread of Pāś, 33
Basic text, 33-34
Main tenets, pati, 9-10
paśu, 13
Concept of mokṣa, 34-35
Pathways to mokṣa, 36-38
Comparison with other sects, 35-36

- Pāśupatism and Ājīvakas, 38-39
- Pāśupatism-precursor of,
Kālāmukha and Virasaivism, 38-39
- Pinḍa* (VŚ) - pre-mokṣa stage of jīva, 114
- Ṣaḍadhvā* (KŚ), 54-55
- Śaivism,
Defined, 1
Cultural contribution of Śaivism, 3-6
Schools of Śaivism, 31 Concepts of Śiva (See under Pati in Pās, KŚ, SŚ, SA, VŚ) also, 127
Characteristics, 127-29
Influence of Brāhmaṇism,
129
Bhakti, the path to mokṣa,
129-30
Yoga in Śaivism, 121-22
Minor sects of Śaivism,
Kāpālikas, 133-35
Kālāmukhas, 135-36
Nātha pantha, 137-38
Syncretism — Hari-
Hara, Mārtaṇḍa-
Bhairava, 136-37
Relevances of Śaivism
today, 137-38
- Siddhānta Śaivism,
Term explained 2, 59
Concept of pati, 10-11; of paśu, 13
Concept of pūryaṣṭaka, 13
Mala, a mahāpāśa, Śiva's playfulness, 15-16
- Concept of mokṣa, 16
Pathways (mārga) to
mokṣa, 78-79
Cosmopolitan nature, 60
SŚ in Tirumular (Tirumandira)
Teachers of SŚ, Tirumular (and his Tiru-mandiram) 59-
64
- Samayācāras*,
Appāra, 64-65
Tirujñāna
Sambandhara, 65
Sambandhar's
Śaivism, 62-68
Māṇikka Vācakara,
67-68
Sundara Mūrti, 68-69
- SŚ* in Bhoja's Tattva Prakāśa
Concept of Śiva, 70-72 (Siva's body is comprised of mantras 70)
- Pāsās* five, 69
Concept of māyā, 70
Concept of mokṣa, 80-81
SŚ, in Tamil Literature,
79-80
SŚ and Madhva Dualism,
81
- Śiva (See under pati in pās, KŚ, SŚ, SA and VŚ)
Śiva inseparable from Śakti, 45-46
Concept of Para Śiva, 45
Functions or powers of Śiva, 46-47
- Śivādvaita (ŚA),
Based on Śruti, 91

- Basic Text BMB, 86-88, 91
 Śiva identical with Brahman, 11, 93, 94
Pati (Śiva, Brahman), 91-93
Jiva, 93
 Automicity, 94
 Freewill, 94
Pāsās (four malas) a comparative view, 94-95
 Concept of mokṣa, 96
Jivanmukti, 97
 ŚA and SŚ, compared 96-97
- Śrikanṭha,
 Advocate of ŚA, 86-87
 Śrikanṭha's date, 87-88
 Śrikanṭha and Rāmānuja, 88-90
 An independent thinker not a follower of Rāmānuja, 89-90
 Points of difference,
 Śiva superior to Nārāyaṇa, 90
Upāsana, 90-91
 Importance of Pāsupata Vrata, 91
 His Bhāṣya BMB based on Śruti,
- Tattvas* (Categories, Principles)
Tattvas in *Sāṃkhya*s, 24
 in Kāśmīr Śaivism, 18-19, 25-26
 in Siddhānta Śaivism, 26
 in Vira Śaivism, 115-17
- show evolution of the world from Śiva (KŚ), 19-20, 52-54
- Tirumandiram* (Tirumular), 60-63
 Śaivism in Tirumandira, 63
 Synthesis of Vedānta and Siddhānta, 63-64
- Trika* (See Kāśmīr Śaivism)
 Trika Śaiva literature, 43-44
Āgama, 43-49
Spanda, 44
Pratyabhijñā, 44
Trika Philosophy (Para Śiva, 45)
- Upāyas* (paths to mokṣa in KŚ), 50-52
Anupāya, 50
Śāmbhava, 50-51
Śākta, 51-52
Āṇavopāya, 51-52
- Viraśaivism (VŚ) or Śakti Viśiṣṭādvaita Synonyms explained:
Dvaitādvaita, 102
Viśeṣādvaita, 102
Śeṣvarādvaita, 103
Śivādvaita, 103
Sarva-śruti-sāra, 103
 Śaktiviśiṣṭādvaita, 104
 VŚ defined, 104
 Projects of VŚ
 Rāsava, 105, 106

- Five ācāryas, 106-07
Pāśūpatas, 107-08
 Aspects of VŚ philosophy,
 108-09
 Pati (Para Śiva, Brahma, Linga) Linga concept (See under Linga), 110-12
 Classification of lingas in VŚ, 112-13
 Path to Śiva realization, 113
- Paśu (ātmā, piṇḍa)*,
 114, 116
Tattvas in VŚ, 115-17
 Some special concepts,
Aṅga, 114-16
Sthala, 117-19
Mokṣa, 119-21
Jivanmukti, 121
Bhakti, the path to
mokṣa, 123
 Guidelines to Viraśaivas, 121-22