I. Let us read.

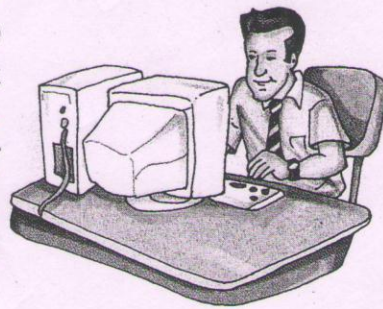

How often one hears of people wishing they were in someone else's shoes! Children seem to be impatient to grow up while old people wish they were young again. Each age brings with it its pleasures and pains. One must learn to make the best of each age and enjoy the present rather than brood over the past or dream about the future.

Childhood is blessed as one gets tonnes of love and affection during this phase of life. Children are pampered and cared for and provided with all that they need. A child finds pleasure in everything around him. He enjoys getting soaked in rain or playing with balloons. He is always learning new things and feels excited about every new place he visits. But he is bound by the rules made by his elders. He is constantly being told not to do certain things and how to do others. Often he is chided for his behaviour. A child is not free to choose or make decisions. He therefore wishes to be a grown-up, for grown-ups can do as they please.

Youth not only brings with it freedom and self-dependence but the burden of responsibilities also. A young man has to start earning for himself and cannot expect to get anything for free. He is responsible for his actions and decisions, which may not always prove to be correct. He can no longer afford to play or sleep at will. Although he can go out to enjoy himself if he wishes to do so, there is always lurking at the back of his mind a shadow of the 'time' that he is wasting. In order to be successful in life, he has to work hard, keep out of trouble and keep distracting pleasures at bay.

A. Write T for true and F for false statements.

1. A child enjoys pure happiness.
2. Grown-up people have to control many of their desires because of shortage of time.
3. The freedom to take one's own decisions makes youth a period of great mental satisfaction.

4. Success is usually given greater importance in life than happiness.
