INTRODUCTION

This seventh convention, in the series which began in 1986, continues the tradition of uniting persons with an interest in parrots worldwide, in an exciting and intensive atmosphere to exchange information and ideas for the benefit of the parrots themselves. Globally the most important forum for the broadest discussions on this family of birds, the seventh convention will again combine aspects of aviculture with topics concerning the conservation of parrots.

The convention will be of interest to all persons with an interest in parrots and their well-being, and is especially suitable for aviculturists, hobbyists and professionals maintaining and attending parrots under controlled conditions. Thus the convention will deal with key aspects of management, care, breeding and welfare, with the objective to continue making significant advances for these widely-kept birds. The convention will also include presentations on the study and management of parrots in the wild, once again with the objective to highlight the relevance of field and captive in the conservation of psittacines. The internationally recognised speakers are all well experienced in the topics they will present.
