The value of extensive reading in language learning is considerable. Research shows that reading extensively in a foreign language can result in:

- faster, more fluent reading
- greater vocabulary acquisition and familiarity (also called 'automaticity')
- a better understanding of how the language works and is used
- better writing skills
- improved confidence and motivation, greater independent learning
- a more positive attitude to the foreign language in general

Why use graded readers?

Macmillan Graded Readers meet the needs of today's language learners by maximising reading opportunities in an enjoyable, relaxing and accessible way. They are short books and audio books, encompassing both fiction and non-fiction genres specially written or adapted with the language learner in mind.
