I have liked Chabon's writing for many years. I was disappointed with it's condition and the fact that it had the library plastic dust jacket. The problem is that I couldn't put it down. The aspiration was to die accomplished, namely under the blessing of God, at least figuratively if not literally. You end up rooting for him to succeed. These stories, unobtrusively translated anew by Graham Hettlinger, vary in length from a couple of pages ('Summer Day', which neatly limns the cruelty arising from boredom) to the seventeen pages of Bunin's best known story, 'The Gentleman from San Francisco.

That's not what I want from my romances. Being one of many siblings has made Chelsea a natural goofball around people, considering she seems to be the Win mischievous and outgoing and perhaps the funniest. This book should be a four or five the product: the strategy is great, the instructions provided will help young and old figure out a change if they can't figure it out, and the drawings are cute. Really like the visual the book offers with the convenience of the digital versions. Themes of friendship, family ties, faith, love, thriving, betrayal and humor weave a lovely story set in the 1970's small northern California town of Gridley.
