LETTERS FROM THE PRESIDENTS

This issue of the UNF Endowment Report features a look at the history of the UNF Foundation. It's an appropriate time to look at where we started and what we have achieved as the University begins celebrating its 40th anniversary.

As the newest president of the UNF Foundation, I'm struck by the drive, dedication and determination of those who preceded me. Beginning with Jacksonville physician Thaddeus Moseley, who became the first president when the Foundation was formed in 1971, we are fortunate to have been led by outstanding civic leaders. Their dynamic leadership has greatly contributed to the thriving University we see today.

as president but also provided valuable insight as chair of our investment committee.

Counting Susan, we have had 25 Foundation presidents who have harnessed the collective skills and talents of more than 250 volunteer board members from all walks of life over the 40 years of our existence.

However, one thing we all have in common is an abiding love for UNF and a desire to help this University grow and prosper. The Power of Transformation campaign is a perfect example. For the past six years, the Foundation Board has been supportive as donors helping us to move toward the $110 million goal.

Through it all, the commitment of the Foundation Board has been steadfast. We are committed to developing the private support to assist UNF while guaranteeing the funds entrusted to us are used in the ways intended by the donors.

Thank you for allowing me to be part of this wonderful tradition, as I become the 26th UNF Foundation president.

Margaret B. Gellatly, President
UNF Foundation Board

On Dec. 31, 2012, we will conclude The Power of Transformation campaign. It's a milestone to celebrate, for at its core lies the dedication of thousands of volunteers and donors.

First, the campaign is a success. We are raising millions for scholarships, fellowships and various academic enhancements. We continue to seek resources for some needs that have yet to be met. Nevertheless, the response from the community has been overwhelming.

Success was not at all certain. Before launching the public phase in 2009, we had several soul-searching meetings to determine if we should proceed.

I'm sure I don't have to remind you that 2008 was a year full of economic uncertainty. Although we faced an economy with a depressed stock market, a housing crisis and increasing unemployment, a decision was made to proceed with the campaign.

Members of the UNF Foundation and the campaign steering committee realized the initiative was too important to the future of this University to postpone. The Foundation and the campaign steering committee made a courageous decision to launch this private fundraising effort. Our volunteers took on the incredibly difficult job of knocking on doors at a time when many potential donors were unsure about their businesses, personal finances and the global economy. However, their belief in UNF was so strong and their dedication so unwavering, they were able to convince thousands of alumni, friends, corporations and foundations to support our cause.

Our campaign theme is more than a slogan. We offer our students opportunities for transformational experiences every day. The power of this transformation is phenomenal, and it's because of donors and the dedication of hundreds of hard-working faculty and staff that it's possible. For a 40-year-old public university, we have made great strides in a very short period of time.

Thank you from the bottom of my heart.

John A. Delaney, President

The Foundation's first decade 1971-1981

This issue of the annual UNF Endowment Report is published to coincide with the 40th anniversary of the University of North Florida. The UNF Foundation has been a major part of the University's growth. Many civic leaders and donors have contributed to the UNF Foundation during the last 40 years. A few of these individuals are mentioned in the historical section of this report. However, short profiles of all 278 endowments are also included as a way of recognizing all donors who are helping us provide transformational experiences to our students.

UNF Foundation had humble beginnings

It's often said that a journey of a thousand miles begins with a single step. That same philosophy can also apply to building a university foundation, especially a foundation for a new university in a city already dominated by a long-established private institution.

That was the situation faced by the University of North Florida's first president, Thomas G. Carpenter, as he and a band of dedicated faculty and staff set out to create a new state university. One element of that university was the establishment of a non-profit foundation to generate the private support so essential to supplementing public financing. The first debate was about the location for UNF. When it was finally settled, along with the combination of a sale and a donation of land from the Hodges, Skinner and Brest families, attention shifted to building a tax-exempt organization to accept gifts.

The UNF Foundation Inc. was officially formed in December of 1971, less than a year before the University officially opened for classes. Fundraising had actually started somewhat earlier with a $300 restricted donation in 1970. University records do not indicate the source of that donation.

The first UNF Foundation Board consisted of 15 community leaders. They were invited by Carpenter with assistance from George W. Corrick, the founding executive director of the Foundation.

Thaddeus Moseley, a prominent Jacksonville physician, was recruited as the first board president. He was succeeded in the presidency by a line of prominent Jacksonville residents including John Walters, executive editor of the Florida Publishing Co., predecessor of The Florida Times-Union, and Homer Humphries, a Jacksonville lawyer and former president of consolidated Jacksonville City Council.

Raising money in the first few years was difficult because UNF had no alumni. Business and community leaders were asked to step up. Corrick came up with an idea to call these individuals “volunteer alumni,” and about $40,000 had been raised by the time UNF opened for classes.

Corrick recalled the UNF Foundation followed the lead of many universities that first developed annual giving programs. As the institutions matured, the foundations concentrated on endowments and planned giving. The same was true with UNF, which also faced a headwind of being the “new kid on the block” in the early years, Corrick said.

In 1973, the first UNF graduating class of 35 students participated in commencement exercises. That fall, more than 3,000 students registered for classes. As the number of graduates began to increase, it was apparent an alumni association needed to be created. In 1976, the foundation developed the UNF Alumni Association, which eventually became part of the Division of Institutional Advancement.

Donations increased slowly through the '70s. For the remainder of the decade, total annual gifts ranged from $23,000 to as much as $77,000. By the end of the University's first decade in 1981, the Foundation broke the $100,000 mark in total annual gifts for the first time.

Several factors contributed to the slow growth in financial support, with the lack of an alumni base at the top of the list. Other factors hampering decisions by local philanthropists included long established relationships between them and other educational institutions and discussions about merging UNF with the University of Florida.

In the early days of the Foundation, many of the University's biggest supporters were recent transplants to Jacksonville who did not have affiliations with a university.

“In those early years, the members of Jacksonville's old guard were not the champions of this university. Our friends were newcomers,” Corrick said.

That attitude was evident when merger discussions occurred. The Florida Legislature approved the UF-UNF merger with all of Duval County's delegation voting in favor of the measure, with the exception of Sen. Joe Carlucci, who compared it to “pouring a half pint of rich cream into five gallons of skim milk.”

Although the merger passed the legislature in 1980, Gov. Bob Graham eventually vetoed the measure because it had not been considered by the Board of Regents.

One stroke of the governor's pen ended UNF's near-death experience and saved the UNF Foundation.

By 1981, the UNF Foundation had survived merger discussions that threatened its very existence, setting the stage for decades of unprecedented growth with strong community support.

The Second Decade 1982-1991

Foundation grows with new 4-year university

With the University of North Florida rescued from an unwanted merger, it fell to a group of enthusiastic Foundation board members to get the word out to the greater Jacksonville community that UNF was here to stay.

One of the most enthusiastic supporters of the University, long-time civic leader Pam Paul, recalled getting involved on the Foundation Board because members were told they were going to be allowed to dream and develop this new university.

Shortly after becoming involved in the Foundation, Paul said the University received approval to offer freshman and sophomore classes.

“We were now a full-fledged four-year university and we needed to make the community aware of it,” she noted.

One of the biggest hurdles she remembered was raising private dollars for a public university.

“Nobody could understand why private support was needed for a public university,” she said. “Fortunately we were able to recruit some CEOs who had just moved to town, and they realized the importance of supporting a university to produce a workforce for the area.”

One of those new residents was Bill Hightower, president of AT&T American Transtech, who became involved in UNF’s growth shortly after arriving in Jacksonville in 1984 and subsequently became a Foundation board president.

Hightower recalled becoming close personal friends with UNF’s second president, Curtis McCray and working on an important element of building a university — establishing on-campus housing.

The Foundation played a critical role when it issued bonds to finance construction of the first residence hall on campus. Osprey Village opened in 1985, marking another milestone for the young university.

Paul, who was at the ribbon-cutting, recalled the excitement of the event. “That was a really big deal for us. I don’t believe any foundation board in the state had ever undertaken anything quite as ambitious,” she said. “We were the little engine that could.”

Another major milestone Paul recalled was obtaining a donation from Jacksonville business executive Ira Koger, who endowed a chair in American Music in 1986. Paul was president of the Foundation Board at the time and recalled that McCray was instrumental in establishing a personal relationship with Koger that secured funding. Eventually, nationally-known jazz musician Rich Matteson was recruited to begin the program — a significant step in starting UNF's now highly regarded Jazz Ensemble. Music is one of UNF's Flagship Programs.

The Koger endowed chair was actually one of several early professorships that were responsible for attracting outstanding faculty members who made lasting contributions to the University in a variety of academic fields.

The first endowed chair occurred in 1982 when CSX Transportation funded the Prime F. Osborn Eminent Scholar Chair in Transportation. Osborn was the chairman of CSX.

Nationally known jazz musician Rich Matteson (center) was recruited to Jacksonville after business executive Ira Koger endowed a chair in American Music in 1986.

That corporate investment was the catalyst that helped shape the current Transportation and Logistics Program, another Flagship Program for UNF.

Other chairs endowed during the decade included investments by Fred and Nancy Schultz to establish the Andrew Robinson Eminent Scholar Chair in Education. Robinson, a respected area educator, was also an interim UNF president after Carpenter left. The National Paper Trade Association, now known as the PAPER Institute, also created a chair in the Coggin College of Business.

Another first for the University was the establishment of the first endowed scholarship in 1987. Jacksonville business executive Hy Kliman endowed a scholarship he had been providing on an annual basis. Since then, the Kliman Family Scholarship has assisted dozens of UNF students.

Kliman, who also joined the Foundation Board, might hold the record for being the longest tenured member at 21 years.

“Many businessmen didn’t know about UNF when we started,” he said. “We began bringing them out to campus, and they learned what we were building. The business community began helping with endowments.”

These gifts and others were a major reason why the Foundation was able to increase the endowment from just over $1 million in 1982 to $5.8 million by 1991. At the beginning of the decade, the Foundation was receiving only about $240,000 in donations annually. However, over the span of the next 10 years, total annual gifts increased to more than $1.6 million, an eight-fold increase.

The '80s were a building decade for UNF, Paul said.

“We were no longer the step-child of the State University System. We were the real deal, and we set out to convince the community.”

The Third Decade 1992-2001

Foundation records explosive growth in the '90s.

The groundwork laid in the early years of the University of North Florida began paying off in the '90s with explosive growth for the Foundation. It was a coming-of-age period for the University and the Foundation, according to Charlie Commander, who was Foundation president from 1995 to 1997.

The University conducted its first capital campaign, issued bonds to expand housing and parking garages and launched the highly successful Pathways to Success scholarship program.

President Adam W. Herbert will always be remembered for the community impact he had in the '90s and the alliances he formed with Jacksonville's corporate and civic leaders. Commander says working with Herbert was the most memorable experience of his tenure.

"He developed a great rapport with the business and the professional community," he recalls.

At the beginning of the decade, endowments held by the Foundation totaled a little more than $6 million. By the end of the decade, endowments exceeded $35 million. Economic prosperity also was reflected in the generosity of donors. In four of the last five years of the decade, gifts to the Foundation surpassed $8 million annually.

Commander credits much of that success to the creation of a professional development organization under Pierre Allaire, who became the university's chief fundraising officer in 1995. Allaire said a key element in the success was a conscious effort by Herbert to build up the development team.

"When I was first hired we had 12 people on the staff, and this included development, alumni affairs and public relations," Allaire said. "Adam was ready to provide the positions, the space and the operating budget to grow our division."

The Foundation received its first $1 million donation when Jacksonville attorneys Steve and Gary Pajcic announced their scholarship commitment for students from Paxon High School in 1994.

By the next year, when student enrollment exceeded 10,000 for the first time, the Foundation was beginning to acquire more prominent donations.

Gary and Steve Pajcic made the first $1 million gift to UNF in 1994.

In 1996, the University received its first seven-figure gift from an alum. Ann Hicks, (B.A.'95) along with her husband David, made a $1.1 million commitment to establish the Hicks and Gray scholarship programs.

By the end of that year, Herbert and then Jacksonville Mayor John Delaney announced the Pathways to Success Scholarship program, with a goal of raising $10 million. No one knew at the time the effort would be so successful it would raise more than $15 million.

In addition to bonding for housing, the Foundation enhanced campus with the construction of two parking garages in 1992 and 1997 at a cost of more than $12 million.

In 1997, the University also celebrated its 25th anniversary. Student enrollment exceeded 11,000 and the Foundation was awarding more than 350 scholarships a year.

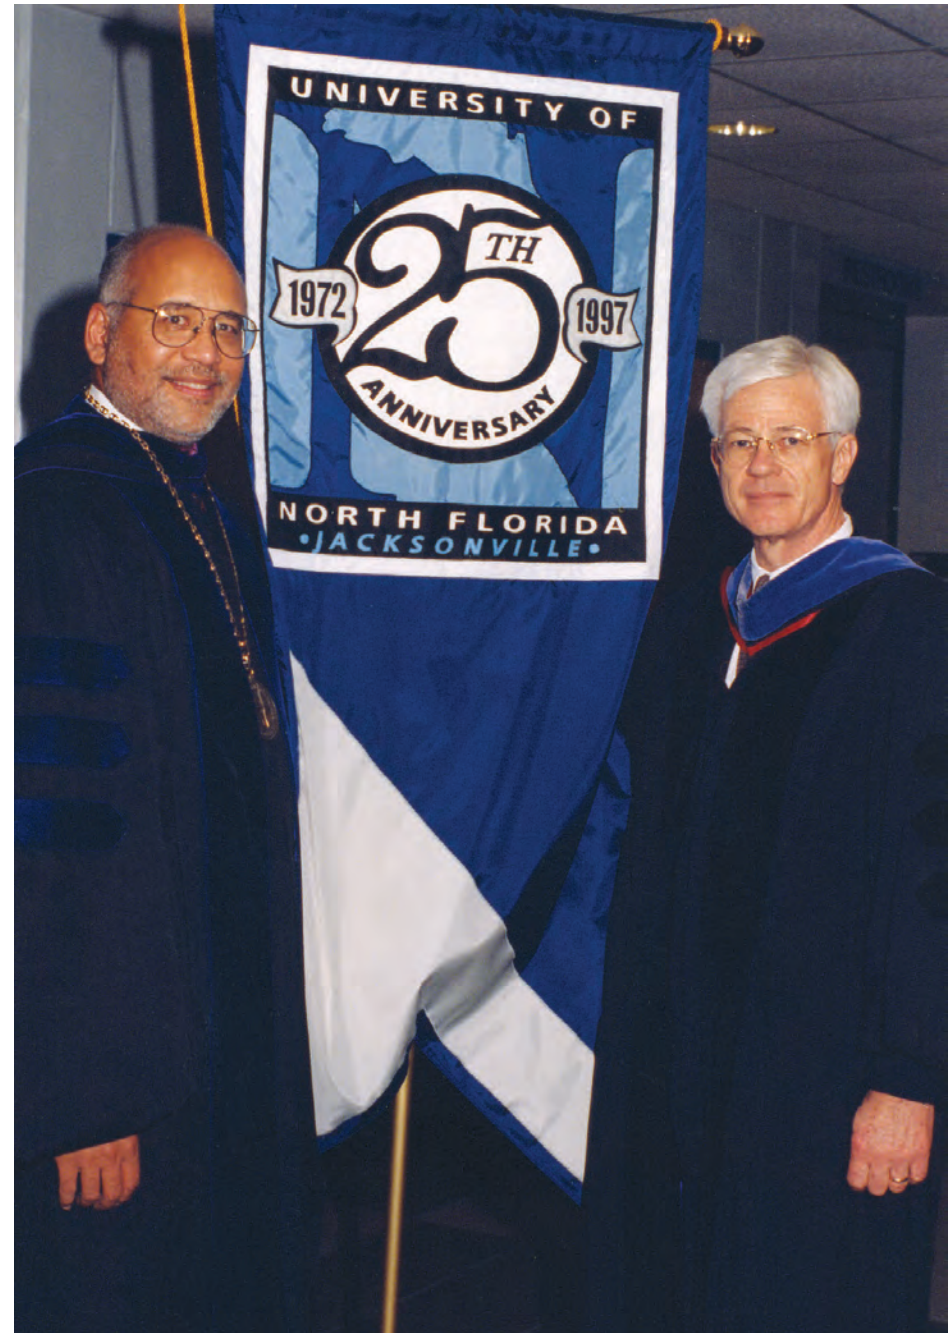

While the anniversary celebration garnered considerable publicity, behind-the-scenes work began on the quiet phase of the University's first capital campaign, Access to Excellence.

Commander notes that before embarking on the quiet phase, a decision was made to establish an investment committee for the Foundation.

Although the quiet phase was successful, the public phase of the campaign was delayed when Herbert left UNF in 1998 and became chancellor of the State University System. When Anne Hopkins became president near the end of that year, her first priority was to get to know the community.

By 2000, all the parts were in place to launch the public phase of the Access to Excellence campaign, which at the time was the most ambitious philanthropic undertaking in Jacksonville history. With $40 million already in the bank and Ann and David Hicks as campaign co-chairs, the campaign easily exceeded its $65 million goal.

"When I look back on my time on the board, I remember it as a period when UNF started receiving substantial help from the business community, such as Barnett Bank, First Union and CSX," Commander said. "We had real business support and it made a huge difference on campus."

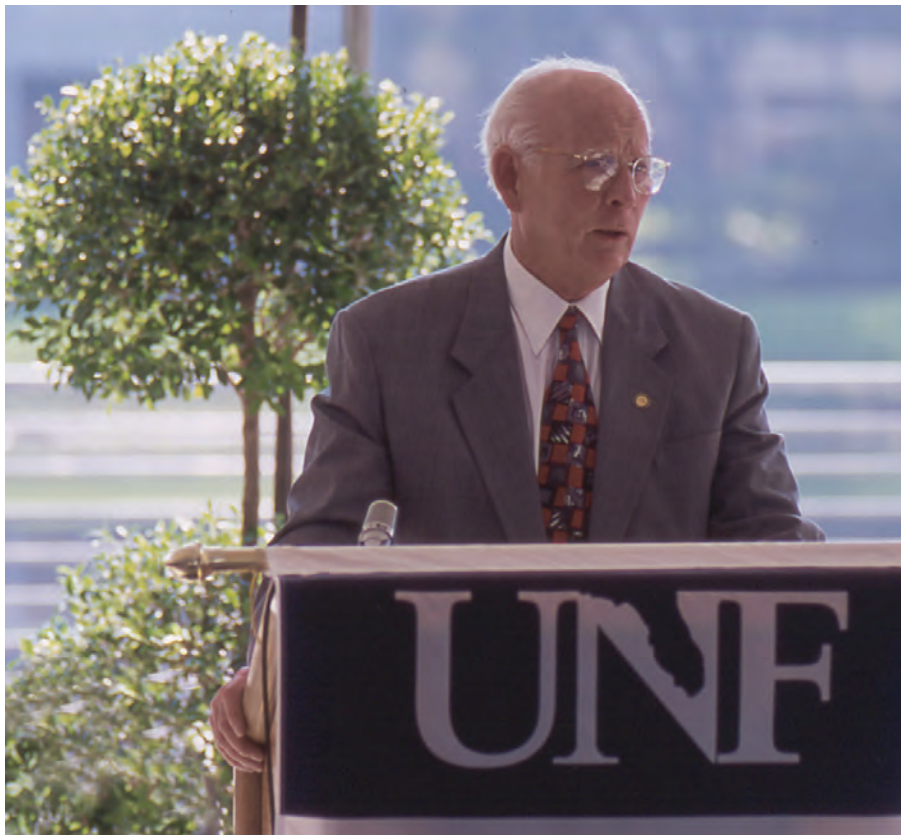

UNF's third president, Adam Herbert (left) invited the University's second president Curtis McCray to campus to celebrate the 25th anniversary in 1997.

Current Decade 2002-2012

Foundation flourishes despite rocky national economy

The horizon looked bright and the future unlimited as the UNF Foundation entered its fourth decade of existence. This 10-year span featured the Foundation receiving the largest gift in University history and ending one highly successful campaign while embarking on a second despite being buffeted by an economic downturn.

The decade started with a mighty shot in the arm when auto business executive Luther Coggin and his wife, Blanche, announced a donation of $5 million to endow the College of Business Administration, which was renamed in their honor.

Luther Coggin announced a $5 million donation to endow the College of Business Administration in 2002.

Interim President A. David Kline was prophetic using the term “transformational” to describe the gift’s impact on students. Not only did it provide for scholarships and fellowships, it also endowed professorships that allowed the college to recruit top-level faculty. It established the trajectory for the Coggin College of Business to continue its path to national prominence.

The gift also pushed the Access to Excellence campaign well ahead of its $65 million goal more than a year sooner than expected. When it concluded in 2003, the campaign had raised more than $103 million. In that time, it had garnered donations from 11,000 donors with 25 gifts of $1 million or more — a remarkable achievement considering the Foundation only received its first $1 million gift in 1994.

Howard Serkin, who became Foundation president in 2002, credits the campaign’s success to outstanding leadership by Ann and David Hicks and a strong community response.

“The University really established itself in the community as an important asset. We were no longer the ‘start-up school’ on JTB,” Serkin said.

The University also benefited from several high-profile donations. Those benefactors include Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Florida, now Florida Blue, which established the Center for Ethics, Public Policy and the Professions, and Ann and David Hicks, who made an additional $1.15 million gift, bringing their total giving with state matching funds to $6 million for the campaign.

The Foundation Board also shared the spotlight with another group of distinguished area civic leaders when the UNF Board of Trustees was officially established as part of the state’s higher education reorganization in 2002.

Ann Hicks, who had been Foundation president, became a member of the new Board of Trustees. When she stepped down as Foundation president, Serkin was named to fill her unexpired term.

“When Carol Thompson was elected first chair of the Board of Trustees, we worked together to make sure there would be no confusion or misunderstanding about the roles of the two groups,” Serkin said. “From day one, the Foundation members respected the role of the Trustees, and the Trustees respected the role of Foundation members. We really worked well together.”

Rad Lovett and Rusty Newton are the co-chairs of the successful Power of Transformation campaign ending in 2012.

The Board of Trustees exercised an important aspect of its new authority when it hired former Jacksonville Mayor John A. Delaney as UNF's new president to succeed Anne Hopkins. When Delaney assumed the presidency, Access to Excellence might have been over, but the donations didn't stop arriving.

Shortly after taking office, he was instrumental in securing gifts totaling more than $2 million from two of Jacksonville's most prominent families — the Crawford and Newton families.

Donations also flowed for the newest scholarship program at UNF, The Jacksonville Commitment. This joint program with three other educational institutions, the City of Jacksonville and the Duval County Public Schools, made college affordable to public school students from low-income families. A series of corporate and private donations also made it possible to place college advisers in a number of area schools.

Perhaps less noticed but no less significant was a decision in 2005 to create the University of North Florida Financing Corp. of which Serkin was named the founding chairman. The corporation assumed the Foundation's role of financing major campus improvements such as the Student Union, parking garages and campus housing. As of this year, the organization had financed nearly $134 million in bonds.

The Foundation was planning to launch the University's second major capital campaign — The Power of Transformation — when the 2008 recession gripped the country. Like most universities, the endowment suffered in the downturn. However, a decision was made that the initiative was too important to the future of the University to postpone. The goals were modified to focus more on student financial aid and less on bricks-and-mortar. The Foundation voted to proceed despite uncertainty about the economy.

That courageous decision paid off for UNF. In the summer of 2012, as the economy began to rebound, the campaign exceeded its $110 million goal, marking a high note for the celebration of the Foundation's 40th anniversary. Jacksonville business executives Rad Lovett and Rusty Newton led the campaign as co-chairs.

The conclusion of the campaign in 2012 will also make The Power of Transformation the most successful fundraising effort in Northeast Florida history.

Endowment Report 2012

Fiscal year 2012-2013 has a great many facets making it a very interesting time in UNF's history. The University turns 40 (the Foundation turns 41); the Power of Transformation campaign ends on December 31, 2012; the total number of alumni will surpass 75,000; and UNF will receive more than a dozen national and regional rankings from such groups as Forbes, Princeton Review, Kiplinger, US News and World Report and others. Few universities in this country less than 100 years old can boast such accomplishments. I point all this out because it directly correlates to the growth of the endowment.

Endowment Update

In 1997 when UNF celebrated its 25th anniversary year, the Foundation had 55 endowments totaling $18.7 million. In this report, we have 278 endowments valued at $75 million. This is a four-fold increase in the past 15 years. Fourteen new endowments were added between July 2011 and June 2012. Roughly every month we add one or two new endowments. And this does not take into account future endowments established through bequests and planned gifts such as trusts and annuities.

Ongoing support of already established funds is always strong. Of the 278 accounts, 75 (27 percent) received additional gifts totaling $1.2 million. Building the corpus of each endowment through additional contributions is a long term strategy that reaps many benefits. UNF's ability to maximize the spending from each account only enhances the benefits our students and faculty receive for their scholarships, fellowships, academic programs and professorship support. For example, 900 students received need-based and merit scholarships totaling more than $2 million. The endowment has a powerful impact on the lives of our students.

Performance

January 2012 marked the beginning of the Foundation relationship with Chris Bittman, our outsourced Chief Investment Officer (CIO) who is with the firm of Perella Weinberg Partners. After 18 months of due diligence the Foundation board voted to engage the services of Mr. Bittman. The firm currently has roughly two-thirds of the portfolio. Morgan Creek will continue to manage the remaining one-third of our assets currently in private equities. For the immediate future, this combination is in the best interest of our investment strategy.

The return for the fiscal year was just under one percent. Gains in the first half of the year were erased in the second half. We believe that our current model with Perella Weinberg Partners will position us for steady growth in the future and minimize downside loss during turbulent years. One observation over the past five years correlates strongly with the economy and that is – as the economy gets better so does philanthropy.

The Investment Committee chaired by Carolyn Mathis is totally committed to overseeing the endowment in a manner that fosters a strong fiduciary responsibility while at the same time seeking maximum returns. They are a terrific group of volunteers working on your behalf.

Pierre N. Allaire,
Vice President and Executive Director,
UNF Foundation

The Foundation's 278 Endowments represents a four fold increase in the past 15 years.
