WELCOME FROM THE DEAN

Welcome to The University of Tulsa College of Law. Our dynamic program of legal education prepares TU Law students to excel in legal and related professions. Outstanding faculty, high-level scholarship, robust experiential programs and an unwavering commitment to public service and professionalism stand at the core of the law school. Firmly embedded in our community is a welcoming environment and commitment to justice and decency.

In addition to our strong foundational curriculum and experiential programming, our upper-level courses offer students the opportunity to specialize in a number of areas including health law, sports law, family law, criminal law, civil rights, and intellectual property. Our Native American Law program is considered one of the best in the nation, and through our Comparative and International Law Center, students have an opportunity to take a number of international law, human rights and business courses, as well as to participate in a study abroad program in Dublin, Ireland. We also have the nationally recognized Sustainable Energy and Resources Law (SERL) program, providing rich curriculum that encompasses the many subsets within energy law.

TU Law plays an integral role in a top-ranked, forward-thinking doctrinal research university located in a vibrant, historic city with a strong economy, a rich, diverse arts culture, and a community spirit of service and achievement. Our institutional, geographic, and professional connections and opportunities make TU Law an exceptional law school from which to launch your professional career. We look forward to being a part of your professional journey in the classroom and beyond.

TU COLLEGE OF LAW

TU Law students master a challenging curriculum, bolstered by the support of faculty and staff who take personal interest in ensuring student success during law school and after graduation.

Students enjoy a high quality of life in the Tulsa community, and make lifelong personal and professional relationships.

Zack Brandwein (JD '16)

The opportunity I had to attend TU Law and leave my hometown of Portland, Maine, was simply too good to pass up. The school's generous scholarship allowed me to attend a top 100 law school without incurring the crippling debt many graduates face today.

Hillary Hellmann (JD '15)
Former President, TU Law Public Interest Board

I have always been passionate about serving the community. Because of the scholarship I received from TU College of Law, I was able to serve in a capacity that mobilized the entire student body to make our community a better place.

Scholarships

Numerous scholarship opportunities exist for TU Law students.

- 100% of the incoming class of 2016 received scholarship.

MAKING A DIFFERENCE

TU Law Immigrant Rights Project students spent the 2015 spring break working on behalf of women and children detained at Karnes County Residential Center near San Antonio, Texas. Students assisted more than 60 families, all fleeing persecution in Central America, with their applications for bond and claims for asylum protection.

Watch the Karnes trip video at

EXPERIENTIAL LEARNING

TU Law students are prepared to be practice-ready upon graduation. Every student is guaranteed opportunities for practical, first-hand experiences through legal clinics, practicum, the student-led Board of Advocates, internships, and externships in a broad range of legal settings.

Legal Clinics

Community Advocacy Clinic (CAC) The Lobeck Taylor Community Advocacy Clinic promotes access to justice by advocating for systemic change on behalf of client organizations (fall semester) and by representing individual clients (spring semester) in cases before state courts and administrative agencies. Student attorneys serve the community by providing representation for low-income individuals. In the CAC, students explore the ethical, strategic, and theoretical dimensions of legal practice through an intensive one-semester clinic.

Immigrant Rights Project (IRP) The IRP is a one-semester, four-credit clinical program in which law students represent non-citizens in immigration matters, primarily those seeking asylum in the US as a result of persecution in their home countries. The program provides a cross-cultural experience and a combination of practical legal experience, theory, intensive training, and supervision not available in most traditional law school courses or legal jobs. Students face the challenges and rewards of overcoming the barriers to understanding posed by differences of language and culture.

Tulsa Immigrant Resource Network (TIRN) TIRN is a service-oriented clinical program designed to reach broadly to Tulsa's immigrant community. TIRN complements the work of the Immigrant Rights Project, creates and trains a network of local lawyers to provide pro bono representation for immigrants, and educates the community at large about immigrant rights and issues.

TU Law Co-op (TLC) & Solo Practice Clinic (SPC) The TLC is a post-graduate program for new lawyers who are committed to a solo or small practice and providing legal representation to traditionally marginalized populations. The incubator provides participants with office space, networking opportunities, practice support, and law office management training. The SPC is the student component to the TLC and consists of a seminar and live client component. Students provide assistance to TLC participants and TIRN lawyers and produce a business plan for a solo law firm.

Student Organization

Board of Advocates (BOA) As TU Law's premier student organization, the BOA promotes the development of practical skills in oral and written advocacy. BOA teams compete at the regional and national level in moot court competitions, achieving noteworthy success.

Internships & Externships

Judicial & Legal Internships TU Law students prepare for the practice of law through their experience as a licensed legal intern (LLI), a program that allows students to appear in court and go on the record under the supervision of an attorney. LLIs may appear before any Oklahoma court of record, municipal court, or administrative agency. LLIs gain valuable experience through either an externship, clerkship, or internship or through the FAC.

Externships (see pages 6 and 7)

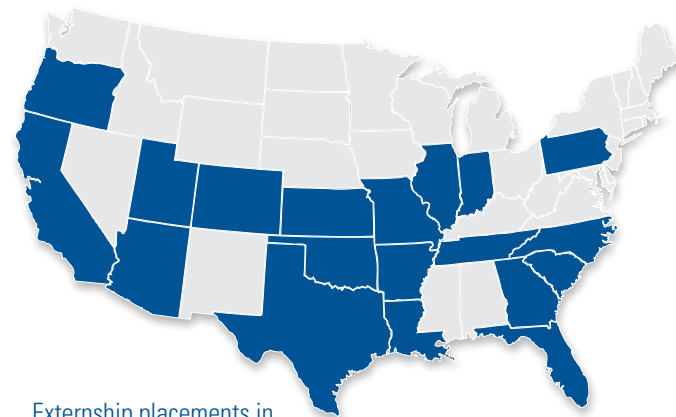

EXPERIENTIAL LEARNING

Externships

TU Law's externship program offers 2L and 3L students the opportunity to earn academic credit while gaining practical, live client experience. Students work in a legal setting under the supervision of a licensed attorney or judge while taking a contemporaneous academic course.

Opportunities exist in a broad range of areas: federal, state, and tribal courts; law firms; government agencies; non-profit organizations; and in corporate/company legal departments.

Students may secure their own externship (subject to approval) or work with the Dean of Experiential Learning to create an experience tailored to their interests.

Externship placements in 19 states and 2 international (Ireland and The Netherlands), summer 2010 through fall 2016

Myriah Downs (JD '15)
Dean's Seminar

During my first semester, I was able to see what the practice of law looks like in the real world. The Dean's Seminar course highlights the possibilities available outside traditional practice by bringing in attorneys from a variety of disciplines.

April Moaning (JD '13)
Externship

I was able to observe court hearings, attend continuing legal education seminars, sharpen my interviewing skills, prepare and file pleadings, and attend brainstorming meetings. These skills cannot be taught only in a classroom.

Chris Flail (JD '14)
Externship

As a student with an interest in the energy industry, I was able to gain work experience with a large corporation's in-house counsel. My experience has allowed me to see the real-world application of topics previously covered in my classes at TU Law.

Lorena Rivas (JD '12)
Legal Clinic

I'm passionate about immigration law because it personally touches my ethnicity and my family. TU Law faculty, staff, and students create a welcoming but challenging environment that encourages and prepares students for a future of infinite possibilities.

PUBLIC INTEREST

Public Interest Board/Pro Bono Work

TU College of Law believes in instilling a life-long commitment to public service by assisting clients with unmet legal needs and enabling public service organizations and individual lawyers to accept more public service cases.

Students automatically become members of the student-run Public Interest Board upon enrollment at TU Law. Pro bono work begins during Foundations of Legal Study (orientation week) during Public Service Day, and all students have the opportunity to assist the underserved and underrepresented in the community by enrolling in a legal clinic, participating in an externship, and/or working directly with a local non-profit organization.

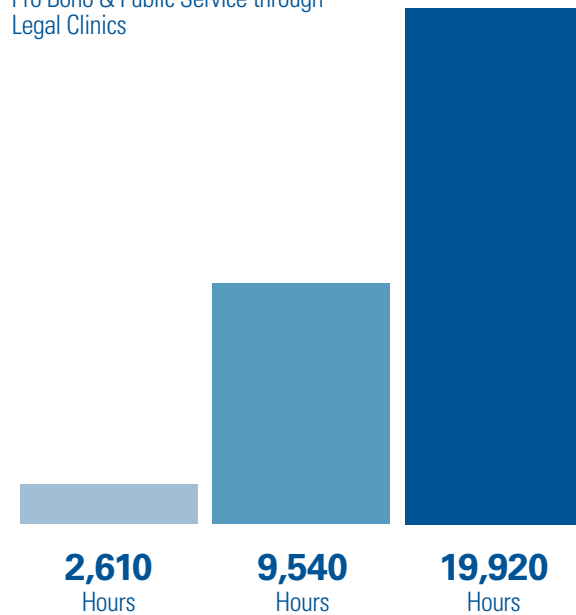

Additionally, students who volunteer at local non-profit organizations during the summer are eligible to receive public interest law stipends to assist them financially throughout their endeavors. Recent notable pro bono and public service partners include:

- Lawyers Fighting Hunger
- Tulsa Area United Way
- Iron Gate Ministries
- Community Food Bank of Oklahoma
- Murdock Villa
- Catholic Charities
- Rescued 'n Ready
- Tulsa Lawyers for Children
- Legal Aid Services of Oklahoma
- Court-Appointed Special Advocates

2015 Summary

32,070 Hours

- General Pro Bono & Public Service
- Pro Bono & Public Service through Externships
- Pro Bono & Public Service through Legal Clinics

DEDICATED TO THE COMMUNITY

A FACULTY OF LEADING SCHOLARS & EXPERTS

Robert Spoo
Chapman Distinguished
Chair in Law

A distinguished James Joyce scholar and former editor of the James Joyce Quarterly, Spoo is included in the Best Lawyers in America (2010) in intellectual property law and copyright. He recently published the book, "Without Copyrights."

Tamara Piety
Professor of Law

Piety is a scholar of commercial speech and author of a recently published book, "Brandishing the First Amendment." She has presented at the Federal Trade Commission and regularly gives First Amendment presentations at law schools across the US.

Judith Royster
Professor of Law

Royster, an expert in Indian Law, has testified before the US Senate Committee on Indian Affairs regarding water and mineral rights. The US Supreme Court cited one of her 2003 articles in United States v. Navajo Nation.

A HIGH-QUALITY, HIGH-VALUE LEGAL EDUCATION

ACADEMICS

Foundations of Legal Study

Foundations of Legal Study (FLS) is a one-week orientation program prior to the start of the first semester that prepares students for academic and professional success at TU Law.

Dean's Seminar in Professionalism

The Dean's Seminar gives students an overview of various aspects of legal practice in America and provides a foundation for professional development and market readiness upon graduation.

Academic Support

The TU Law Academic Support Program is a student-centered program that offers opportunities to develop the skills necessary for effective case briefing, note-taking, outlining, exam preparation, and exam-taking.

Legal Writing

Students participate in a three-semester Legal Writing program that emphasizes individual attention and integrates legal analysis and legal research into the preparation of objective legal memoranda and trial or appellate court briefs.

Bar Support

To maximize the potential to pass the bar exam, the Bar Support Program is offered during the final year of law study and combines outside commercial bar preparation courses and workshops.

Journals

Tulsa Law Review (TLR) Founded in 1965, TLR publishes outstanding scholarly works covering the full spectrum of the law. This nationally recognized law journal dedicates itself to publishing works that stimulate critical thinking, provoke legal debate, and improve societal law. Each year, select student articles are published in the Tulsa Law Review.

Energy Law Journal (ELJ) The ELJ is a preeminent energy publication, published by TU Law's Sustainable Energy & Resources (SERL) program and the Energy Bar Association in Washington, DC, that provides thought-provoking and deeply researched articles by practitioners, internationally acclaimed academics, federal judges, high-ranking government officials, and members of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

ELJ's student board of editors is also responsible for The Year in Review, a joint project with the ABA's Section on Natural Resources, Energy, and Environmental Law. Reports from each committee in the section update important developments in 26 areas that are of crucial interest to practitioners and students. This annual 400-page volume has a nationwide circulation of more than 14,000.

The US Supreme Court, federal and state courts and agencies, law review articles, and energy industry leaders often cite the journal.

CERTIFICATE PROGRAMS

Health Law

The Health Law certificate program at TU Law enables students with special interests in health care finance, medical malpractice, health care benefits, elder law, disability law, and medical ethics to tailor their academic program to coincide with their professional interests and career goals. Scholarship, internship, and externship opportunities exist for students in the program.

Students take courses selected from five categories: Basic Health Law (required core); Health Care Practical Skills; Administrative, Employment, and Business; Law and Society; and Health Law Practice.

Native American Law

Tulsa lies in Indian Country and is in close proximity to 35 major tribal headquarters. TU Law was the first law school in the nation to offer a certificate program in Indian Law and continues to be at the forefront of the field with its Native American Law Center (NALC). NALC provides resources for the study and teaching of legal issues concerning Indian tribes and other indigenous peoples worldwide.

NALC offers unparalleled resources and opportunities:

- A specialized library collection in Indian law
- Gilcrease Museum, a nationally renowned museum of Native American art and artifacts, providing academic opportunities and internships
- Scholarship, internship, and externship opportunities
- Unique opportunities to work with nearby tribal governments

Sustainable Energy & Resources Law

Tulsa, home to many of the world's largest energy companies, is rich in resources and uniquely positioned at the center of energy law and public policy.

TU Law's Sustainable Energy and Resources Law (SERL) certificate program is among the nation's leading interdisciplinary organizations promoting and engaging in research involving energy, natural resources, and the environment.

SERL's international reputation is based upon its visionary curriculum and resources:

- Six full-time faculty who specialize in energy and environmental law
- Editorial and staff support for the Energy Law Journal (ELJ), a student-managed journal co-published by SERL and the Energy Bar Association in Washington, DC
- Scholarship, internship, and externship opportunities
- A rich curriculum focusing on energy, environmental, and natural resources law and policy that is one of the strongest in the nation
- Conferences, symposia, and public forums are held throughout the year. Recent events include the Oklahoma Environmental Agencies Roundtable, Oil & Gas Tax Policy Roundtable, Wind Regulation Roundtable, and Water Week.
- A Board of Visitors comprised of distinguished TU Law alumni and other leaders in private, non-profit, government, and corporate practice across the United States

THE POWER OF CONCENTRATION

Certificate programs provide TU Law graduates an advantage in the marketplace in niche areas of energy, natural resources, and environmental law; tribal law and government; and health law.

AT THE CENTER OF IT ALL

Tulsa is centrally located and within a short driving distance from other major cities in the region, and Tulsa International Airport offers non-stop flights to 18 destinations.

The city itself is designed on an easy-to-navigate grid system and boasts the nation's second shortest commute time. Tulsa Transit provides curb-to-curb bus service throughout the city seven days a week.

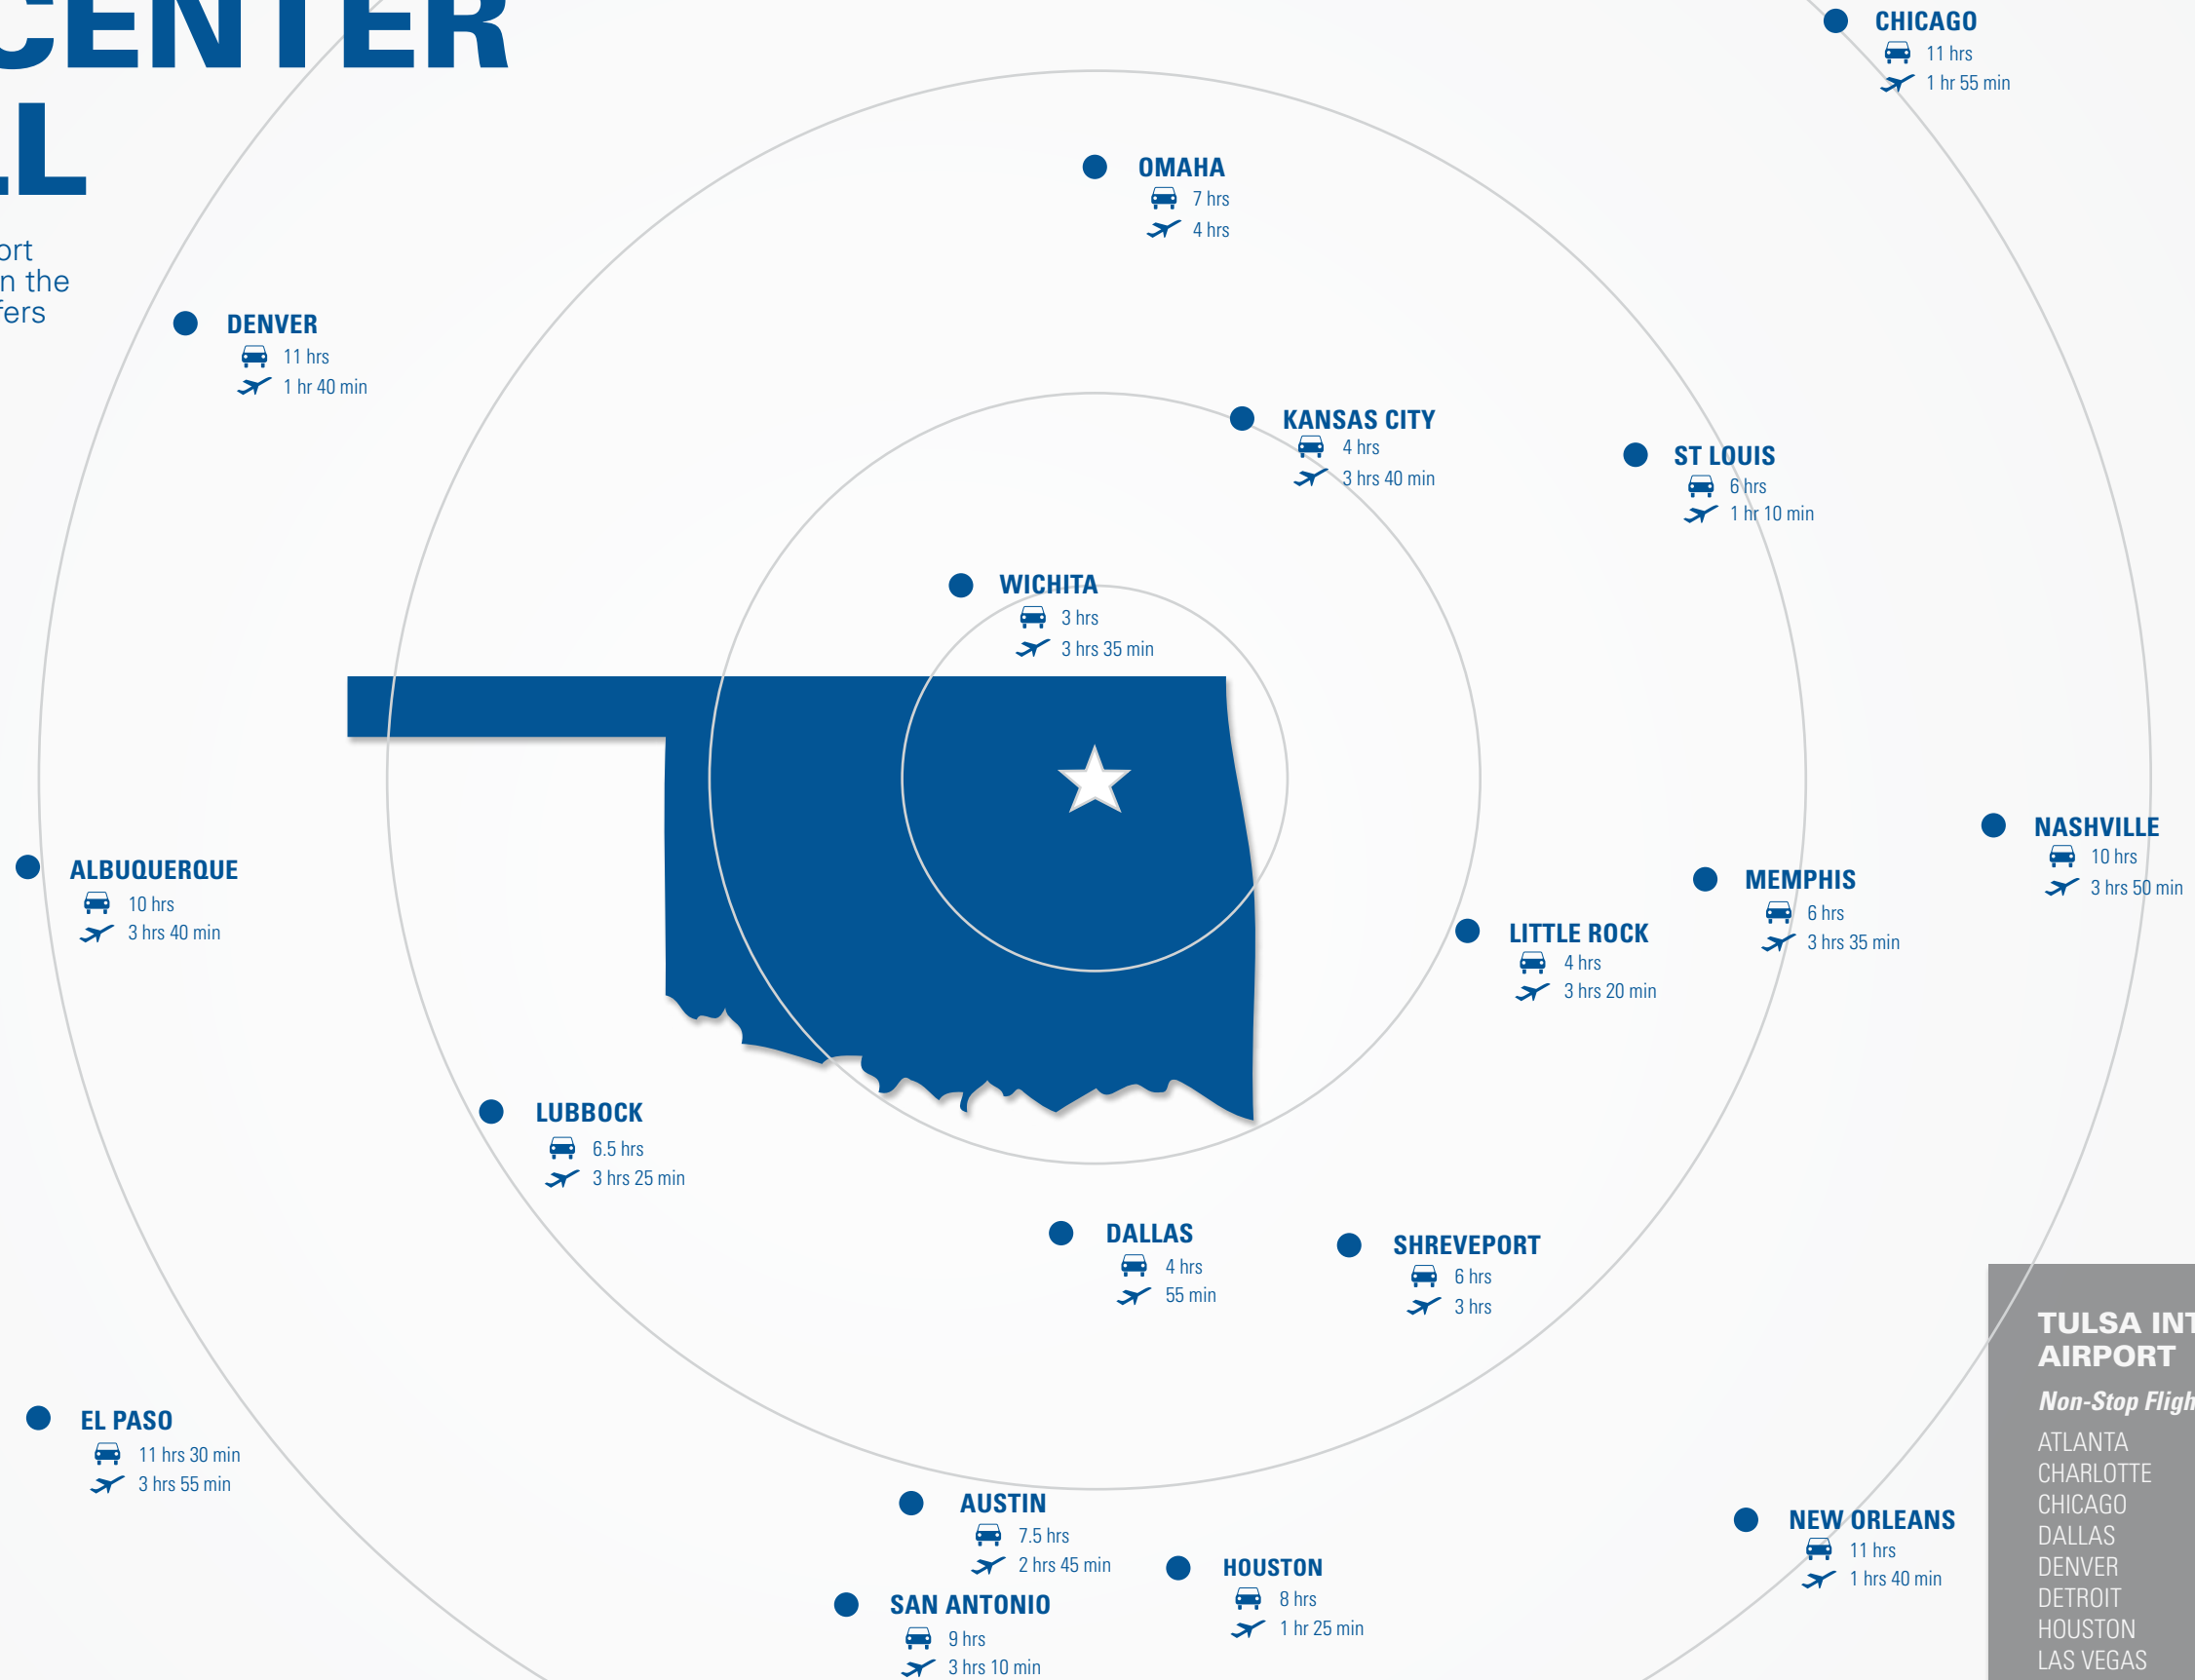

Nolan Fields (JD '13)

Assistant District Attorney
Civil Division, State of Oklahoma

Before moving up to Tulsa for law school, I lived my entire life in Texas. I visited the Tulsa area a couple of times and liked the small-town feel in a city that still had everything I wanted.

Known for its tight-knit community, TU Law is small enough that you can have rewarding relationships with professors but rich in resources so that you can literally shape and customize your legal education and experiences.

ALUMNI

The TU Law alumni community plays a significant role at the College of Law through ongoing mentoring and professional development assistance. Many TU Law alums have earned distinguished careers throughout the world and continue to be actively involved in the academic and professional success of current students and recent graduates.

Aaron Hurvitz (JD '07)
Foreign Counsel for Kangxin Partners, Beijing, China

TU Law absolutely provided me the foundation for success in the international arena. Not only was I taught the law and practice behind my area of expertise, I was encouraged to venture out and gain experience overseas. TU Law, without a doubt, provided the roadmap and tools to achieve success.

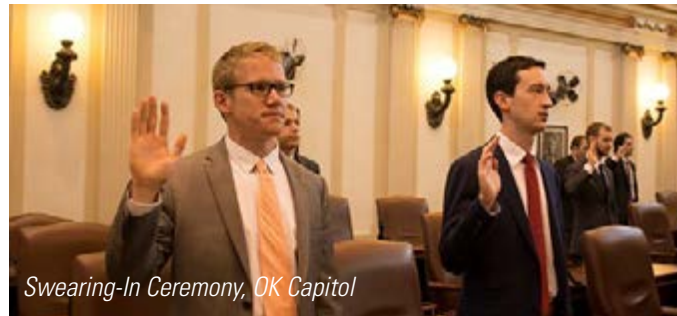

Angie Beehler (JD '94)
Senior Director of Energy Regulation & Legislation
Walmart Stores, Bentonville, AR

TU Law is a great place for students who have already started a career but want to pursue their law degree. While I don't practice law every day, I do use my energy law knowledge every day. A TU Law degree opens up many opportunities across many sectors in our economy.
