Congress Considers Funding for FY 2000 Fulbright Program

The Senate Appropriations Committee has recommended a total of $216.48 million in funding for educational and cultural exchange programs in Fiscal Year 2000, of which $102.30 million is designated for the Fulbright Program for Students, Scholars, and Teachers. The Hubert H. Humphrey Fellowship Program, authorized under Fulbright Program legislation, has been allotted $5.85 million.

The Clinton administration's budget request for FY 2000 asked for $210.3 million for the overall international exchanges account and $112 million for the Fulbright and Humphrey Programs (approximately $105.9 million for Fulbright and $6.1 million for Humphrey). Thus, while the exchanges account as a whole received more in the Senate bill than the administration requested, the Fulbright Program received less.

House leadership expects to pass all remaining appropriations bills before the August recess. Appropriations relevant to the Fulbright Program are tentatively scheduled for mark up in the last two weeks of July.

Since 1995, Fulbright exchanges for students, teachers and scholars have suffered from a series of federal funding cuts. The Fulbright Association believes

USIA to Honor International Education Volunteers

By Keith Geiger, Director, Office of Academic Programs, USIA

I would like to take this opportunity to share with Fulbright alumni an exciting new initiative we are working on in the Office of Academic Programs at the United States Information Agency. In celebration of the millennium and the spirit of global volunteerism, we are undertaking a series of events designed to celebrate and give national prominence to the contributions to international education made by individual U.S. volunteers and artists.

Many Fulbright alumni volunteers have contributed to the ongoing work of international educational and cultural exchanges We are searching for individuals who enhance the cause of global understanding and international education. I believe that Fulbright Association chapter activists and individual alumni volunteers may be excellent nominees for this award.

Honorees must be U.S. citizens. Each honoree will receive a $5,000 cash award to the nonprofit organization of his or her choice. plus an expense-paid trip to Washington, D.C. On March 1, 2000, award recipients will attend a dinner in their honor at the National Building Museum in Washington, D.C. Additionally, a symposium is planned to share success stories, exchange ideas and establish partnerships among international volunteer organizations and programs.

For more information, including nomination guidelines and selection criteria, you can go online to http://e.usia.gov/ millennium, to be operational in August. We hope you will join us in celebrating the important contributions that international educational volunteerism has made to enhancing our international exchange and to building a global neighborhood. If you have any further questions, you may also contact John Hishmeh at jhishmeh@usia.gov. We look forward to hearing from you. •

Members Elect President, Directors

At the Fulbright Association's 21st annual business meeting in Washington, D.C., members elected Ronald J. Ross, M.D., to serve as president for a second term in 1999. They also voted to adopt the slate of board candidates proposed for the term Jan. 1, 1999, to Dec. 31. 2001. Newly elected to the board of directors are Pierre D. Bognon, Pamela A. Cook, Jay W. Khim, Abraham F. Lowenthal, Ewell E. Murphy, Jr., and Marie-Monique Steckel. Robert S. Bowen, Howard P. Colhoun, Charles H. Harff, and Sally Shelton-Colby were elected to serve a second term.

Pierre D. Bognon

Vice president and treasurer of Marsh & McLennan Companies, Inc. (New York City), Pierre D. Bognon graduated from the Hautes Etudes Commerciales in France in 1963. He studied economics as a Fulbright scholar at the University of Pennsylvania and received his master's in economics in 1965. He served on the New York Stock Exchange international capital markets advisory committee and holds memberships in the Financial Executives Institute, the Society of International Treasurers, the New York Economic Club and the French-American Chamber of Commerce.

Pamela A. Cook

As manager of community relations for The Clorox Company (Oakland, Calif.), Pamela A. Cook oversees the Clorox Foundation and other community relations activities. Ms. Cook received her bachelor's degree from Duke University and her master's degree in foreign affairs from the University of Virginia. In 1977-78, she was a Fulbright scholar at the Australian National University. She serves on the board of directors of the National Society of Fundraising Executives and serves as vice president of membership for the society's Golden Gate Chapter.

Jay W. Khim

Chief executive officer and chairman of the board of JWK International Corporation (Annandale, Va.), a high-tech systems integration and professional services company, Jay W. Khim received his bachelor's and master's degrees in economics from Kyungpook National University in Korea, which also awarded him an honorary doctor of philosophy degree. He was a Fulbright scholar to the U.S. in 1965-66. He received his doctor of business administration degree and a doctor of economics degree from the University of Maryland and an honorary doctor of law degree from Randolph-Macon College.

Abraham F. Lowenthal

Professor of international relations at the University of Southern California and founding president of the Los Angeles-based Pacific Council on International Policy, an independent, non-partisan international leadership forum which focuses on global trends of importance to the western United States, Abraham F. Lowenthal is also vice president and deputy national director of the Council on Foreign Relations. He earned his bachelor's degree, his master's of public administration and his doctorate from Harvard University. In 1994 he received a Fulbright fellowship to Japan.

Ewell E. Murphy, Jr.

A retired partner of the law firm of Baker & Botts (Houston), Ewell E. Murphy, Jr. was chairman of the firm's international department. He received his bachelor's and LL.B. degrees from the University of Texas at Austin and a doctor of philosophy degree from Oxford University, which he attended as a Rhodes Scholar. Mr. Murphy was appointed by President Bush to serve on the J. William Fulbright Foreign Scholarship Board and served as the board's chairman from 1993 to 1995. He is currently a distinguished lecturer at the University of Houston Law Center. From 1986 to 1990, Mr. Murphy served as a member of the Board of Direction for the Association of American Rhodes Scholars.

Marie-Monique Steckel

President of France Telecom North America (New York City), Marie-Monique Steckel received a political science diploma, the

At the May 15 Board of Directors meeting, our Advocacy and External Relations Committee recommended that the Association's local chapters be asked to make advocacy a priority. Many chapters have contacted their congressional delegations on behalf of the Fulbright Program, invited members of Congress to be featured speakers at chapter events, and met with members and/or their staffs both in Washington and in the districts.

To build on these initiatives, the Board has asked each chapter to create a position responsible for advocacy and to appoint an individual to serve both as advocacy coordinator for the chapter and as liaison with the Board committee and association staff in Washington, D.C.

As the lead article in this edition of the newsletter indicates, adequate funding for the Fulbright Program is by no means a "sure thing."

Advocacy for federal funding of the program is a central focus of this association. While the staff

Members of Congress continually ask, "How does this affect my district or state?"

We believe that the appointment of chapter advocacy officers will advance the Association's advocacy program by involving more members at the local level. By doing so, we strengthen our support for the Fulbright Program. Thank you to all members for their work on behalf of the Fulbright Program.

these cuts diminish U.S. capacity to develop international leaders in politics, diplomacy, business, government, technology, the sciences, education and the arts through a program whose open. merit-based selection of participants serves as a worldwide model for its rigor and integrity.

Recent funding reductions weaken the Fulbright Program's proven ability to increase understanding of the United States among foreign leaders and publics and to promote U.S. interests in prosperity and security through building peaceful relationships with other nations. Cuts have also hurt Fulbright's leverage of funding from partner governments among our allies.

Restoration of funding will help maintain vital Fulbright exchanges with our partners in a united Europe and in the industrial democracies of the Asia/Pacific region and South America, while increasing Fulbright exchanges with countries in Central America. the Caribbean, Africa, the Near East, Southeast Asia and the Pacific Islands.

Fulbright alumni and friends are encouraged to contact their representatives and senators to express their support for the Fulbright Program. It is critical that members of Congress hear from their constituents that Fulbright exchanges and other international affairs programs are important to U.S. citizens.

Senator Moynihan Proposes Fulbright Scholarships for Cuban Nationals

On Jan. 19 Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan (D-N.Y.) introduced S. 73 to the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations. The bill authorizes scholarships under the Fulbright Academic Exchange Program in section 102 of the Mutual Educational and Cultural Exchange Act of 1961 for nationals of Cuba who seek to undertake graduate study in public health, public policy, economics, law or other fields of social science.

The bill prohibits officials of the Cuban government, or any member of the immediate family of such officials, from receiving scholarships. It authorizes funding for Fiscal Years 2000 through 2004, with an initial authorization of $1.4 million for not more than 20 scholarships in FY 2000 which increases to $2.45 million for not more than 35 scholarships in FY 2004.

In his remarks, Sen. Moynihan stated, "The world is a changed place. The Soviet Union dissolved almost a decade ago, and since then democracy has replaced totalitarianism in Eastern Europe. Since the demise of its sponsor, the Soviet Union, and the disappearance of Soviet subsidies, Cuba has had to change to survive. In time, the winds of democracy sweeping the globe will reach the shores of Cuba."

"The young people of Cuba are that country's future. As such what they learn now will help shape a post-Castro Cuba," Sen. Moynihan said.

About his own Fulbright experience, the senator said, "Nearly 50 years ago they sent me off to the London School of Economics. I left the United States untouched by war to live in Europe as it climbed out of its ruins. In London, I learned from experience Seymour Martin Lipset's dictum, 'He who knows only one country knows no country.""

"Fidel Castro will not live forever - it is time to get ready for an end game. Now is the time to start showing the people of Cuba, especially the young people, how the United States works and how their country might change. So let us bring them here and not act like it's the middle of the Cold War. Let us bring them to the United States and offer them education and a chance to see the world's oldest democracy in action," Sen. Moynihan concluded. .

New Fulbright Program Launched in Trinidad and Tobago

The Fulbright Program 2000 will offer up to 12 three-year scholarships for combination bachelor's/master's degree programs in the U.S. to students in Trinidad and Tobago. The new program has been made possible by the financial support of a combination of local and U.S.-based businesses.

Edward E. Shumaker III, U.S. ambassador to Trinidad and Tobago, was instrumental in creating the program's unique dual-degree focus. To date, ten sponsors have come forward, with more expected to be announced later this year. Strong competition for Fulbright Program 2000 scholarships is expected among the second-year undergraduate students in Trinidad and Tobago who will form the applicant pool. It is hoped that the establishment of this scholarship program will contribute to the development of future Trinidadian leaders in business and government. •

In Memoriam

John F. Reichard, a longtime executive of international education organizations died Feb. 4 at his home in Bethesda after a heart attack.

From 1980 until 1993, Mr. Reichard served as executive vice president of NAFSA: Association of International Educators.

A former program chairman for "The Fulbrighter As Cultural Ambassador" in 1979, he also held the position of vice president for financial affairs of the Fulbright Association from 1979-80.

Mr. Reichard was a native of Pennsylvania and served in the Army Air Forces in World War II. He was a Phi Beta Kappa graduate of Weslevan University. As a Fulbright scholar he attended the University of Glasgow in Scotland.

Survivors include his wife, the former Ruth Nachod, of Bethesda; two sons, Scot, of Clifton Heights, Penn., and J. Nicholas Reichard of Mililani, Hawaii; and eight grandchildren. *

American Fulbright Grantees Attend LASPAU Information Technologies-Ecology

By Winthrop D. Carty

Editor's Note: LASPAU, a nonprofit organization affiliated with Harvard University, designs and implements exchange programs to advance learning in the Americas. Winthrop Carty is the organization's senior development officer for new programs and technology initiatives.

For over 30 years, LASPAU: Academic and Professional Programs for the Americas has facilitated academic exchange activities involving Latin American institutions in the belief that institution-building is fundamental to strong societies. One of the greatest concerns LASPAU has identified among academic, research and nonprofit institutions in Latin America today is the underutilization of currently available information technologies Robust use of the Internet and, more significantly, the production of on-line content (databases, research results and publications) has been extremely uneven among LASPAU's Latin American constituencies. Networking defined here as the electronic production, use and sharing of information - is heavily concentrated in specific types of institutions and notably absent in others. Political and economic agencies and the multinational business sector are most likely to take advantage of networking capabilities. Latin American universities, research institutions and NGOs will play a diminishing role in civil society in the Information Age unless they adopt dramatically different strategies aimed at broader interconnectivity.

To address this concern, the "Seminar on the Strategic Use of IT by Environmental Organizations in Latin America and the Caribbean" (IT-Eco) was held last summer at Harvard University. The seminar, sponsored by the United States Information Agency and hosted by LASPAU and Harvard's Kennedy School of Government (KSG), included both on-site and extended on-line components. The workshop's principal facilitator was Jerry Mechling, director of the Kennedy School of Government's program on strategic computing and telecommunications.

The IT-Eco seminar brought together 17 grantees from the Amazon Basin Scholarship Program and the Central American and Caribbean Ecology Program, two Fulbright ecology programs administered by LASPAU. The seminar and its on-line resources promoted discussion and debate among the participants on how new information and communication technologies could best further the goals of Fulbright ecology grantees and their home institutions and countries.

In conjunction with the seminar, LASPAU hosted a website with research papers, links, and other information relating to the seminar topics and to the participants and their countries and institutions (http:/www.laspau. harvard.edu/IT-eco/contents.htm). Participants also exchanged information on an electronic discussion list archived on the website. These activities provided the curriculum, framed the issues and allowed for personal networking before the seminar. They continue to serve as a resource for participants following their return to Latin America. *

This year Barry University, Miami, is hosting its first visiting Fulbright scholar, Denis V. Makarov, associate professor of political science at Moscow State Pedagogical University. Dr. Makarov teaches in the Department of History and Political Science and in the Department of Interdisciplinary Studies. He is also collaborating with faculty members involved in civic education and the National Issues Forums, a series of public seminars on current political issues. Dr. Jesus Mendez, a member of the Fulbright Association Board of Directors and president of the South Florida Chapter, serves as Dr. Makarov's campus liaison.

This spring Stephen L. Benz, associate professor of English and chairman of the Department of English and Foreign Languages, served as a Fulbright lecturer in American studies and literature at Moldovan State University, Chisinau.

Assistant Professor of Theology Mary Jo Iozzio received a Fulbright research travel grant for study in Leuven, Belgium, through August 1999. Dr. Iozzio will examine the works of Odon Lottin, OSB, on theology in the high scholasticism period of the Middle Ages.

Montezuma Castle, on the Armand Hammer United World College of the American West campus in Montezuma, N.M.

NEW MEXICO

The Armand Hammer United World College of the American West received a gift of $45 million from the S&G Foundation, founded by Shelby and Gale Davis. The gift is thought to be the largest private contribution ever made to the field of international education. Approximately $40 million of the gift endows the "Davis Scholars" program, which provides full merit scholarships to U.S. teenagers for the two-year International Baccalaureate Diploma program at United World Colleges abroad. The first Davis scholars were announced in April.

The Davis gift also includes a $3 million challenge grant for the renovation of the historic Montezuma Castle, the signature building of the United World College Campus in Montezuma, N.M. The castle, built in the late 1800s as a hotel, has been placed by the National Trust for Historic Preservation on the list of America's Most Endangered Historic Places. Planning for its restoration and adaptive reuse is underway.

Commenting on his gift, Mr. Davis said, "Students at the United World Colleges live and study with other students from all over the world, enabling them to benefit from this diversity and contributing to our nation's understanding of other lands and cultures. This interaction builds bridges of understanding which grow in importance in the global world of the 21st century."

Philip O. Geier (France 1977, Germany 1988), president of Armand Hammer United World College and immediate past president of the Fulbright Association, added, "In selecting Davis scholars, we will be identifying those U.S. teenagers with the most promise for positive engagement at an early age with the world scene. Our hope is to foster world peace though building a network of tomorrow's leaders."

Three doctoral students in the Department of Anthropology of the Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs at Syracuse University received Fulbright awards during the 1998-99 academic year.

Susan Wadley, professor of anthropology and the university's Fulbright Program adviser, said, "We've had three Fulbrights before, but never in the same department....To pull three in one year — from among the best in the country — is really a coup."

Lisa Knight traveled to India for her project, "Gender and Agency Among Women Bauls in West Bengal." She studied the experiences of women of the Baul sect, whose members renounce the world in order to focus on the divine, which they believe resides within the human body.

Jason Pribilsky's grant took him to Ecuador to study AIDS among Ecuadorian migrants to the United States. His research examined the impact of migration on rural Ecuadorian communities and migration patterns and their relationship to the spread of the AIDS virus. Mr. Pribilsky first became interested in the subject while teaching in Ecuador.

Ginger Weigand explored "The Negotiation of Meaning and Representation in Folkloric Dance in Accra, Ghana" by observing how local drum/dance troupes disseminate Ghanaian culture by singing and dancing for different audiences. As part of her project, Ms. Weigand planned to perform with one of the troupes.

Also at Syracuse, doctoral student Matthew Lachniet, in the College of Arts and Sciences, received a grant to study prehistoric glacial activity in the Costa Rican highlands.

Associate Professor of English Harvey Teres spent the spring semester teaching American literature and literary theory to students at the Beijing Foreign Studies Institute in China.

Adam Gilbert, Case Western Reserve University, holding a shawm, an ancient instrument similar to the modern oboe.

OHIO

Adam Gilbert, a doctoral student in the Department of Music at Case Western Reserve University, Cleveland, received a Fulbright grant to study early music at the Catholic University of Leuven and the University of Luge in Belgium for the 1998-99 academic year. Mr. Gilbert's research on the cultural roots of early Flemish and French music and poetry will form the basis of his doctoral dissertation on the connection between words and music in the Franco-Flemish chansons he calls "the Gershwin love songs of the 15th century." According to Mr. Gilbert, Fulbright grants have helped advance early music by supporting Fulbrighters in Belgium who bring back to the U.S. valuable information on medieval and Renaissance musicians and instruments.

PENNSYLVANIA

Pennsylvania State University reports that it has consistently ranked among the top three U.S. universities for Fulbright scholar awards. Twenty-nine Penn State faculty and students were awarded Fulbright grants for the 1998-99 academic year. The university also welcomed six visiting Fulbright scholars to its campus in 1998-99.

John A. Brighton, university executive vice president and provost, and Beverly Lindsay, dean of the office of international programs, traveled to China last year to discuss strengthening academic relations with South China Agricultural University (SCAU) in Guangzhou, Penn State's first international partner, and with other institutions. Chapter Events and Activities

A Fulbright Program Enrichment grant made possible by the United States Information Agency (USIA) and the contributions of alumni volunteers enabled the Alabama Chapter to organize a two-day program introducing visiting Fulbrighters studying in Mississippi, Alabama, and the Florida Panhandle to Alabama's Gulf Coast region. Alumni joined the Fulbrighters for a tour of downtown Mobile on April 23 and then were hosted for dinner by John and Rhoda Hafner. Dr. Hafner (Greece 1974; Indonesia 1984, 1985; Philippines 1995), professor of English at Spring Hill College, served as program chairman for the event. On April 24 the group toured Bayou La Batre, met local residents and traveled to Dauphin Island to see historic Fort Gaines and enjoy the beaches and the waterfront.

Visiting Fulbrighter Charles Zabada from Benin said of the experience, "This was so wonderful. You can read about things and know them that way, but you really don't know them until you go there and you meet the people."

Gerald A. Heeger (India 1968, Pakistan 1974), the new president of University of Maryland University College, delivered the keynote address at the 12th annual dinner of the National Capital Area Chapter on June 12, organized, as chapter tradition dictates, by president-elect Glenn W. Geelhoed (Mozambique 1996). The dinner capped a busy year during which the chapter, with the leadership of President Michael Szporer (France 1982, Macedonia 1986, Lithuania 1990), worked with the Library of Congress, the U.S.

The South Florida Chapter held its annual tour of Biscayne Bay on the "Heritage of Miami" schooner. The group was joined by a Russian scholar and his family and two Fulbright students from the University of Florida.

Holocaust Memorial Museum, and other groups to provide a variety of programs for visiting Fulbrighters and alumni. They included a tour of the National Institutes of Health, a policy forum on "East-East" assistance, a tribute to Jan Karski (Poland, England, France 1974) and the popular annual embassy reception, made special this year by the participation of Vytautas Landsbergis, chairman of the Lithuanian Parliament. Prof. Landsbergis also lectured at the Woodrow Wilson Center and performed at the piano the music of Mikalojus Ciurlionis with soprano Patricia Miller (Italy 1975) at a concert at the Library of Congress. Ms. Miller is a member of the chapter's Board of Directors.

The Connecticut Chapter sponsored a lecture last November by political consultant Stanley Greenberg, who spoke on "Measuring the Public Pulse."

The annual meeting of the North Georgia Chapter was held on April 18 to elect officers. Nancy Neill (New Zealand 1963) is the new president.

Fubrighters Marina Gontcharova, Ganhar Sazanbacra and Natalya Lysova join Frank Peterson on the Hawaii Chapter's outing to the Big Island of Hawaii.

volcanoes and a tour of the Bishop

Museum. In February the chapter co-sponsored with the East-West

Center a seminar concerning

"Hawaii in the World."

The Southern Illinois

Chapter, a first-time recipient of a Fulbright Program Enrichment grant from USIA in 1998. organized two trips for visiting Fulbrighters. In October they toured the historic French river town of Ste. Genevieve, Mo., and saw Fort de Chartres, known for its French-Indian War Assemblage featuring re-enactments of life in the 1700s. In November Fulbrighters explored the Cahokia Mounds World Heritage Site to learn more about Native American culture and visited St. Louis to learn about the Civil War and Riverboat periods as well as contemporary issues.

In April the Massachusetts Chapter organized a tour of Salem. Visiting Fulbrighters and alumni visited the Salem Maritime National Historic Site, had lunch at Pickering Wharf, and participated in an architectural tour of historic Salem and a guided tour of the Peabody-Essex Museum. These activities were supported by a Fulbright Enrichment Program grant from USIA. Last November chapter members and visiting Fulbrighters toured the John F. Kennedy Library and Museum and participated in a conference on "The Task of Abolishing Nuclear Weapons and Other Weapons of Mass Destruction."

To bring visiting Fulbrighters and Fulbright alumni together, the Southeast Michigan Chapter organized several lectures in the homes of chapter members. In February Eugenii Trushliakov presented a lecture on marine education in the Ukraine, while Avse Culden Cerit from Turkey spoke on shipbuilding and market orientation determinants at the home of Rosemary Saari (Australia 1977), a chapter officer. In March Charisse Baldoria from the Philippines performed piano works and discussed the compositions at the home of Judith and Sol Elkin. Dr. Elkin (Argentina 1984) is now chapter president. University of Michigan President Lee C. Bollinger hosted a holiday reception for chapter members and guests at the president's historic house. Nurgul Djanaeva from Kyrgystan spoke in January.

The Minnesota Chapter joined the Czechoslovak Society of Arts and Sciences in co-sponsoring a conference on April 24 and 25 convened on the occasion of the visit of Czech Republic President Václav Havel to Minnesota. President Havel, the 1997 J. William Fulbright Prize laureate, received honorary degrees from the University of St. Thomas and Macalester College, where he delivered an address.

Antonio Monteiro, ambassador and permanent representative of Portugal to the United Nations, spoke at the College of Saint Elizabeth for a program and reception organized on May 1 by the New Jersey Chapter. He discussed Portugal's place in the international community and its educational system. Sr. Frances Rafferty, president of the college, welcomed visiting Fulbrighters and alumni to the College of Saint Elizabeth campus. The program also featured a duet by Anthony Scelba (Korea 1983), double bass. and Ted Hoyle (France 1967), cello.

On April 25 the Native American community treated members of the Central New York Chapter and visiting Fulbrighters to a program of Iroquois music and dance and a feast of native foods, including corn soup, artichoke hash and strawberry juice. The program, supported through a Fulbright Program Enrichment grant, follows an event last fall featuring a performance of gospel songs by the Children's Choir of Hopps Memorial C.M.E. Church of Syracuse, step routines by the Hopps drill team and a traditional African-American dinner.

The Greater New York Chapter sponsored a meeting in May at the King Juan Carlos I Center of New York University where members heard guest speaker Jules B. Kroll, esquire, chairman of Kroll-O'Gara, a large international investigation and security firm. Mr. Kroll is an authority on defensive tactics in contests for corporate control, "due diligence" in the context of public offerings, and the prevention and detection of white collar crime and industrial counterespionage. For its March meeting Mary E. Kirk, director of Fulbright and Academic Services, Institute of International Education, spoke about aspects of her work on behalf of the Fulbright Program. Chapter President Jerome Ginsberg reports that the question and answer period following her presentation was the longest in recent chapter history.

The Northern New York
Chapter presented "Poems and Pictures of Belgium" by John N.
Serio (Greece 1993, Belgium 1998). The chapter's spring meeting preceded the presentation.

Jean F. Gounard (U.S.A. 1964, Germany 1985), president of the Western New York and Northwestern Pennsylvania Chapter, confers honorary membership on D. Bruce Johnstone.

The 1999 annual Fulbright Seminar sponsored by the Western New York and Northwestern Pennsylvania Chapter was held at Buffalo State College on April 24. The seminar considered "Opportunities and Challenges in Cross-Cultural Exchange: The Fulbright Perspective." D. Bruce Johnstone, former chancellor of the State University of New York and SUNY at Buffalo University Professor, spoke on "Higher Education in International Perspective: Reforms and Other Issues."

Last year the Northeast Ohio Chapter joined Cleveland State University in sponsoring the "K'inal Winik 1998," a festival of Maya art, language and culture, and also a lecture by Iris Chang, author of The Rape of Nanking: The Forgotten Holocaust of WWII. With John Carroll University, the chapter sponsored a lecture by Salih Booker on "Africa: Renaissance of the New Millennium."

Frederick R. Patton (Russia 1994), professor of Russian and Spanish at West Chester University, spoke on "Bringing Russian Culture to the Classroom" at the annual dinner meeting of the Philadelphia/Delaware Valley Chapter on May 14.

Last year visiting Fulbright scholars from Bolivia, Israel, Macedonia, Nepal, Pakistan, Portugal and the United Kingdom and international students from Ursinus College participated in a trip to Hershey, Penn., to visit Hershey Chocolate World. The group then traveled to Mount Hope Mansion for a wine tasting and performances of several Edgar Allen Poe classics.

In December the Rhode IslandChapter hosted a holiday reception for visiting Fulbrighters and their families at the home of Richard B.
Otis (Belgium 1954) in Providence, R.I.

At the annual dinner meeting of the Tennessee Chapter on April 23, David A. Johnson (USSR 1978; India 1983, 1986; Thailand 1984; Cyprus 1998), a past president of the Fulbright Association and professor of planning at the University of Tennessee, spoke on "The Challenge of Rebuilding a Civil Society on Cyprus." For the first time the chapter held its annual dinner in Nashville, meeting at Vanderbilt University.

On June 17 the Southeast
Virginia Chapter and the World Affairs Council of Greater Hampton Roads, in cooperation with The Virginian-Pilot, co-sponsored a program on the future of Kosovo.
Speakers included Nedzib Sacirbey, ambassador of the Republic of Bosnia-Herzegovina to the UN, Alan Sorensen, editorial page editor of The Virginian-Pilot, and Rear Admiral
Ray Taylor, U.S. Navy (Ret.). •

2000 by 2000!

We invite you to demonstrate your commitment to Fulbright exchanges by joining the Fulbright Association as a life member. Please help us reach our goal of enrolling 2000 life members by year-end 2000. A one-time payment of just $300 to receive a lifetime of benefits.

Melanie Fromentin, a Fulbright student from France, Nour Moghrabi, a student from Jordan, Stephen Darian of Rutgers University-Camden, and Robert J. Dobie (Belgium 1997) of Springfield, Penn. attend the reception hosted by the Philadelphia/Delaware Valley Chapter at Villanova University in January.

Greater New York Chapter Holds Fulbright International Youth Conference

By Alison Gardy (Mexico 1988)

"Ninety-five percent of the world's consumers live outside of the United States."

"Of the 64 largest commercial banks, only nine are in the United States."

The shock value of these statements, presented by IBM spokeswoman Mary Ellen Cositore, had their intended effect on the dozens of New York City high school students who, last November, attended the Fulbright International Youth Conference, sponsored by the Greater New York Chapter of the Fulbright Association.

Guest speakers Harriet Mayor Fulbright, executive director of the President's Commission on the Arts and Humanities, and Roger Peel, director general of the International Baccalaureate Program, clarified the significance of these statements to the 150 students.

scholars, alumni, and guests in the audience with the message that no matter what we do in life, our individual and collective success and survival depend on our ability both to think in global terms and to develop a heightened sense of responsibility for one another. That message lies at the heart of the Fulbright philosophy.

Mrs. Fulbright remarked that the history of human progress has been lopsided, with stellar accomplishments in the realm of human invention on one hand, yet "disturbing developments" in the area of human relations on the other. As an example, she pointed out that while we managed to send a man to the moon only 70 years after the Wright brothers' first successful airplane flight, we still have not found a way to reduce our unabated reliance on fossil fuels, which is destroying our planet.

Enter "the noble task of teaching," in Dr. Peel's words. Teachers need to instill in technology in the classroom, the keynoters stressed the importance of live, in-person international exchange.

"Learning is inseparable from engagement in the world, and intellect inseparable from experience," said Mrs. Fulbright.

"The idea of teaching kids from an early age that they can go beyond their local community is wonderful," said Caroline Geiger, 17, a senior at Horace Mann High School, after the presentation.

> "I never really considered international study," added Joel Camacho. 16, a Horace Mann junior, "but now that I've listened to the speakers today, it's going to become more of a possibility."

Following the speaker program, which Greater New York Chapter board members Nancy Heiles and Donnettee Ativah co-chaired and President Jerome M. Ginsberg helped organize, Japanese choreographer and dancer Saeko Ichinohe, whose Fulbright grant enabled her to study with Martha Graham, performed a thousand year-old court dance against a backdrop depicting the New York City skyline.

Through words, dance, music and food, the Fulbright International Youth Conference epitomized a genuine celebration of difference. Vive la difference!

students the importance of education, good citizenship, international responsibility, and a "lifelong love of learning," said Dr. Peel. Teachers also play a critical role in helping students develop pride and confidence in their own identities, which helps them to understand others and other ways of thinking.

While speakers from IBM and Xaverian High School in Brooklyn discussed exciting innovations in computer software and creative uses of

Fulbright Association Task Force Updates

Arts Task Force

By Hilda Green Demsky (The Netherlands 1992)

The Arts Task Force hosted a slide show of Fulbrighters' art during the Fulbright Association 21st annual conference. Visual artists presented slides of their art in the disciplines of sculpture, painting and printmaking. Patra Holter (Norway 1962) spoke on the inspiration for her prints and described the processes of printmaking. Members of the audience asked questions about the artists' ideas and methods of working. Hilda Green Demsky, cochairwoman of the task force. moderated the event.

Task force members were pleased with the artists' dialogue and slide-sharing program. Those in attendance suggested that the task force host the program again at a future conference and expand the program to include poets, writers, musicians and dancers. All artists who would like to participate in October 1999 are requested to notify Hilda Green Demsky by mail at 24 Orsini Dr., Larchmont, NY, 10538 or by e-mail at Demskyart@AOL.com

The task force also held its annual meeting during the conference. During the meeting, the visual artists expressed their interest in another opportunity to hold an exhibition in Washington, D.C., for a future conference. The task force also encourages all Fulbright artists to contact their colleges to see if they are interested in hosting an exhibition of Fulbright artists.

Ms. Demsky recognized Naima Prevots (Australia 1987) as founder of the Arts Task Force. Dr. Prevots spoke about the importance of the arts in international exchange and in the Fulbright Association.

International Education Task Force (IETF)

By Constance Chapman (Ghana 1995)

The IETF was created in May 1998 and is off to an excellent start under the direction of Jenny Johnson (Nigeria 1977).

At the Fulbright Association 21st annual conference, members of the IETF steering committee presented several papers, some relating their experiences as Fulbrighters and others outlining educational issues the IETF might address in communications with Fulbright Program administrators. Such issues include how to garner support for the student and teacher exchange programs; easing cultural transitions by providing assistance for new Fulbrighters; and encouraging colleges and universities to recognize Fulbright grantees in more tangible ways.

Association members interested in participating in task force activities should contact Dr. Johnson by e-mail at jjohnson@polaris.umuc.edu, or telephone, (301) 203-1232.

Science and Environment Task Force

By Eric Howard (Germany 1989)

Two task force meetings were planned last year: one in the spring at the annual meeting of the International Council on Water Resources and one at the Fulbright Association 21st annual conference. Lack of outside funding prevented the first from happening, but the second meeting went off without a hitch in October. Approximately 20 people heard presentations on genetically modified plants and on environmental remediation in Croatia and in Bosnia.

The second part of the meeting involved a discussion about further development of the task force. Cochairman Robert George (India 1984, 1988) spoke about his initial efforts to find funding so that the task force can have a more meaningful presence in the scientific and policy community.

Co-chairman Eric Howard is seeking material for the task force newsletter. He can be reached by e-mail at eshoward@igc.apc.org. .

Cultural Diplomacy & the Cold War

The largely untold story of the partnership of the performing arts and foreign policy.

"Dance for Export: Cultural Diplomacy and the Cold War is an important work. Clearly and concisely written, it describes a little-known episode in the history of dance, while also illuminating the broader subject of cultural policy during the Cold War era. Naima Prevots's insights are a valuable asset to anyone interested in US foreign policy." - Harriet Mayor Fulbright, Executive Director, President's Committee on the Arts and Humanities

The Australian Fulbright Association has announced that its W.G. Walker Memorial Scholarship Fund, named after the association's inaugural president, has passed the fundraising milestone of $80,000.

On a recent visit to the Fulbright Association, the Executive Director of the Commission for Educational Exchange between the United States of America and Brazil, Mr. Marco Antonio da Rocha, expressed the commission's interest in achieving greater diversity in the pool of individuals applying for Fulbright grants to Brazil.

Mr. da Rocha feels that increased diversity in Fulbright grantees to Brazil would be beneficial not only to Brazil, which is itself a country of great diversity. but to Americans of all backgrounds. He welcomes efforts by alumni and friends of the Fulbright Program to encourage scholars, students and teachers in their communities to consider applying for Fulbright grants to Brazil. Grants are available in a wide variety of academic fields.

He also noted that any anxiety about dealing with the Portuguese language should not be a barrier to applying, as many institutions accept teaching in Spanish and as for day-to-day life, Brazilians are patient and helpful and welcome any attempts to speak their language!

If you have any suggestions, you may contact Mr. da Rocha at the Commission for Educational Exchange between the United States of America and Brazil, Edificio Casa Thomas Jefferson, SHIS QI 09-CONJ 17 Lote L-Lago Sul 71625 Brasilia, D. The Foundation for Educational Exchange between Canada and the U.S.A. has begun efforts to start a Fulbright alumni association in Canada. This year the commission is concentrating on the development and growth of alumni chapters. A recently established Toronto chapter is projected to be the first of many formed across the country. Additional tasks will be to compile an alumni directory with subsequent annual updates and to launch a membership drive and various alumni activities.

Alumni of Canada-U.S. Fulbright exchanges are encouraged to contact Victor Konrad, executive director of the commission, for more information. Dr. Konrad may be reached by post at 350 Albert St., Suite 2015, Ottawa, Ontario, K1R 1A4, CANADA, by phone at (613) 237-5366, or by e-mail at vkonrad@fulbright.ca.

The GARIOA/Fulbright Alumni Association held its 23rd Annual Fulbright Charity Golf Tournament last fall, raising ¥700,000 for the Fulbright Program in Japan. Since 1982, fund-raising efforts by Japanese Fulbright alumni have enabled 241 Americans to study in Japan under the Fulbright Program. This year's tournament is scheduled for October.

Dr. Akito Arima (U.S.A. 1959) was appointed minister of education for the Obuchi cabinet in Japan. Dr. Arima is a nuclear physicist and former president of the University of Tokyo. He is also an award-winning haiku poet and a former president of the Haiku International Association.

The Board of Directors of the Jordanian-American Commission for Educational Exchange has created the "King Hussein Memorial Fulbright Scholarship and Endowment Program in Conflict Resolution Studies" in recognition of King Hussein's significant contributions as a peacemaker. During His Majesty King Abdullah's recent visit to Washington, D.C., President Clinton informed him of the U.S. government's contribution to this new initiative "as a tribute to the late King and his efforts on behalf of peace and reconciliation." The U.S. government's financial commitment to the memorial scholarship program will help the commission in seeking additional donations from private Jordanian and U.S. funding sources.

Alain McNamara, the executive director of the Fulbright Commission in Jordan, said, "It is this commission's duty to uphold the dual legacy we have inherited from His Majesty the late King Hussein and Senator Fulbright two courageous leaders who shared a passion for promoting international understanding and peace."

More information on the scholarship can be found on the commission's website at http:// www.fulbright-jordan.org/.

The Netherlands America Commission for Educational Exchange (NACEE) and the Netherlands Fulbright Alumni Association (NFAA) have teamed up to publish Exchange Affairs, a new digital magazine. The emphasis in Exchange Affairs will be on trends and developments in the field of education, international research co-operation, and firsthand insights into "exchanging." Exchange Affairs also aims to be the communication platform for Fulbright alumni, to keep everyone abreast of current NACEE and NFAA initiatives. This first issue of Exchange Affairs was published in January 1999. The periodical can be viewed by visiting the NACEE website at http://www.nacee.nl/.

A new NACEE initiative, Humanity in Action, enables young people to study issues of social oppression and resistance movements past and present. The first group of 30 participants from three countries visited Amsterdam in June for a three-week program.

Fulbright Commission in Egypt Seeks Donations for Library

In 1996 the Fulbright Commission in Egypt established the Library Development Fund to meet the growing need for current books and periodicals in Egyptian university facilities and to improve the quality of English language books and periodicals available to children in schools and to public libraries. Contributions of books, periodicals, teaching tools and computers are sought.

The commission has limited funds available for donors who require assistance in covering costs for small shipments via sea freight. Larger shipments must be covered by the individual or institution making the contribution or by a second party donor.

The commission also welcomes monetary contributions to help defray shipping costs

To make a contribution, please:

- 1. Collect the materials which you would like to contribute. If possible, prepare a list of the materials that you will be sending, including the titles, authors and dates of publication of all materials. This list should be sent separately to the commission (not with your book shipments) to the attention of Ms. Carrie Lynn Johnson, senior project specialist. The list will facilitate the clearing of your shipments through customs.
- 2. Pack the items into a sturdy cardboard box lined with plastic for protection.
- 3. On a piece of paper inside the box(es) write your name, address and telephone number and the following statement:

"These books/journals/materials are donations to the Fulbright Commission's Library Development Fund for Egyptian national university libraries."

4. Label the outside of the box or boxes with the following address. Please note that the address must be written exactly as follows: Fulbright Commission, 20 Gamal El Din Aboul Mahasen Street Garden City, Cairo, Egypt

5. Take the box(es) to your local post office. Inform the postal clerk that the shipment consists of books and/or periodicals and that you would like to send them by sea freight. (Please note that the commission will reimburse you for sea freight cost only.)

Should you wish to request reimbursement from the commission, please obtain a receipt that clearly indicates the weight of the box(es), the date sent and the amount of postage paid.

6. Send your receipt to the above address in care of Ms. Johnson for reimbursement. Please indicate to whom the reimbursement should be addressed, either to you personally or to your institution.

The commission will issue and send you a check drawn on an American bank to cover the expenses incurred in making your contribution. •

Attention Federal Employees:

The Fulbright Association has been accepted into the 1999 Combined Federal Campaign of the National Capital Area. We will be listed under "Local Agencies" in the campaign catalogue. Our designation number is 7046. Please designate the Fulbright Association in the 1999 campaign.

Thank you!

Message from Matt

Greetings Fulbrighters! My name is Matt Bennett, and I am the new membership assistant at the Fulbright Association. I am originally from Warwick, R.I., and I am currently a senior at American University, majoring in political science.

One of my main projects at the Fulbright Association is maintaining our database of members and then using that information to better serve our advocacy efforts. And I need help from all of you!

When you return your membership applications or renewals, please remember to list your congressional district or the name of your member of Congress. If you have the opportunity, you can submit this information on our website on the Contact Page (http://www. fulbright.org/contactFA.htm) or email it to us at fulbright@fulbright.org.

If you don't know your district or the name of your representative, it's easy to find out. Go to the House of Representatives web site at http:// www.house.gov. There is a search engine that can tell you your district based on your zip code.

Please remember to send this information to us. In visits to the Hill, our message is much more effective if we are able to make a connection between the Fulbright Program and the member's district. It is a vital tool for our working with Congress to ensure that Fulbright and other international exchange programs are properly funded for the years to come. Thank you!

21st Annual Conference Keynote Address The View from South Asia By Karl F. Inderfurth

Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen, thank you for the opportunity to address the Fulbright Association tonight. The Fulbright program, several of the South Asian nations which fall under my responsibility at the Department of State, and I - a Fulbright alum have one thing in common: having recently turned 50 years of age, we have entered that sobering period of introspection and reflection which compel us to assess who we are, what we have accomplished, and where we will head in the future.

I remember when President Clinton reached 50, he remarked that he was now at that point in life when he has "more vesterdays than tomorrows," I'm not sure that I appreciated hearing that, even if he is my commander-in-chief! But I am pleased to say that I have no doubt that, unlike President Clinton and myself, the Fulbright program, even at 50, has "more tomorrows than yesterdays" - if we all work hard to make it so.

Conference Theme

The theme of this conference is "The Fulbright Challenge: Within and Across Borders." As the assistant secretary for South Asian affairs, I am struck by how many of the issues that challenge us in that region are not the conventional problems of international relations. Their sources are diverse economic trends, individual actions, ethnic identity, religious or political ideology — but they cross borders to affect the populations of many countries, in and out of the region, for good and ill. The spread of narcotics use and trafficking, the growth of domestic and international terrorism, the threat from disease and environmental degradation, the promotion of democracy and the encouragement of equal rights for all citizens, regardless of ethnicity or gender, all of these are among the fundamental challenges and opportunities that confront the nations of South Asia. These are also the issues which will increasingly define the agenda of our world as we move into the 21st century.

These transnational challenges must be met by all the world's > nations, working together, a point driven home to me during my four years of work in New York at the United Nations. Traditional diplomacy will continue to have a place in our efforts. So will the international institutions we have created and strengthened since 1945. But our most important resource will be people - men and women with the breadth of vision, the flexibility of mind, and the ability to overcome the problems and seize the opportunities of the emerging global system. Such people are the product of the Fulbright program. They are the reason it was created. And their presence is making itself felt in South Asia.

Karl F. Inderfurth

As home to over a fifth of humanity, South Asia is a critical region for demonstrating how we can meet the ongoing challenges of providing security and peace. promoting development and prosperity, improving human and religious rights, and fighting disease and poverty in the > developing world. These massive tasks are being undertaken by governments in the region, often in partnership with outside friends such as the United States: by international institutions; by non-governmental organizations, both foreign and domestic; and by individuals with a strong commitment to positive change. While the challenges are enormous, progress is being made. To continue this progress requires at every level the expertise, experience and vision of leaders with the international perspective the Fulbright program has helped develop.

That is the good news. There is also some bad.

The nuclear explosions set off by India and Pakistan in May directly affected the two countries' relations with the United States, their regional neighbors, and the world community. In our view, these tests worsened rather than improved their security; damaged prospects for sustainable economic development; and ran contrary to global efforts to deal with nuclear non-proliferation and nuclear disarmament. We are now working with both countries to see how we can reconcile our respective security concerns, and we are making some progress. Meanwhile, the threat posed by the nuclear tests to the security of the region does not diminish the importance of other issues in South Asia. We continue to work with the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation (SAARC), national governments, non-governmental organizations, and the private sector to undertake a host of initiatives with profound regional and global consequences. Our efforts range from encouraging democratic values and human rights, to promoting rapid economic development. resolving ethnic conflicts, lowering greenhouse gas emissions, checking population growth, reducing the spread of infectious diseases, halting the trafficking of women and children, stemming the deadly flow of narcotics and confronting terrorism, including the threat posed by Osama bin Laden in Afghanistan. It is quite an agenda.

South Asia and the Fulbright Program

In short, the issues of concern in South Asia have joined the highest priorities on our foreign policy agenda. They are a test of leadership, here and abroad. Many of the problems defy borders, impinge upon cultural mores, and confront our societies with unprecedented and sometimes uncontrolled change. But they also demonstrate the continued relevance of Senator Fulbright's vision when he created the web of educational ties linking the United States with traditional and emerging partners. In his first address as president of the University of Arkansas in 1939, Senator Fulbright argued that "our efforts should be directed toward the fulfillment of society's greatest need, which is wise and capable statesmen..." Educational exchange, he later declared, was the means by which the potential leaders of countries both great and which administers the Fulbright program, is the sixth largest in the world and the largest in the North Africa, Middle East and South Asia region. Since its inception in 1950, the Fulbright program has fostered mutual understanding between the very talented cultural and academic communities of our two countries. Through the counseling services it provides to students who wish to pursue higher education in the United States, the Foundation annually reaches more than 100,000 Indian students. The success of this program can be measured in the more than 30,000 Indian students who currently are registered at U.S. universities.

The over 8,000 distinguished alumni of Fulbright exchanges with India include the current governor of the state of Andhra Pradesh, Dr. Rangarajan. While head of the Reserve Bank of India, Dr. Rangarajan helped to shepherd the country through its early critical years of economic liberalization, reshaping macro-economic policy. instituting financial reforms, enforcing lending norms, and overhauling national monetary and credit policy. Today we have a new economic relationship with India; in no small part this can be credited to a Fulbright alum. On the American side, another

Patrick Moynihan, returned to India as U.S. ambassador. Ever since, he has devoted his great talent and energies to improving our relations and policy toward India and the region — including the creation of my job! Several years ago Sen. Moynihan argued that South Asia, home to one-fifth of humanity, needed a separate bureau within the State Department, and an assistant secretary of state to head it. In 1992 the South Asia Bureau was established. Thank you Senator Moynihan!

The Fulbright experience in Bangladesh is a vivid example of the multiplier effect created by an exchange program. Its 300 alumni include two of the country's "National Professors," the highest academic honor awarded in Bangladesh, and the recently appointed Attorney General. Fulbright grads remain very supportive of the program's goals, and were joined enthusiastically by government officials and university administrators in establishing the American Institute of Bangladeshi Studies and The Bangladesh Association of American Studies.

Let me add one further story about Bangladesh. This past April, along with Ambassador Bill Richardson, I had the opportunity to visit a clinic run by the National Women Lawyer's Association of Bangladesh. The Association has been at the forefront of promoting the awareness of women's rights, combating trafficking of women and children, and providing legal assistance to women who otherwise cannot afford to assert their legal rights. Bangladeshi Fulbright alumni, in their capacity as government officials and social activists, are among the country's leading women's rights activists. The most senior female civil servant in Bangladesh, Ms. Salma

Khan, chairs the UN Committee on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women. She also initiated the women's wing of Bangladesh's National Planning Commission, which ensures inclusion of gender issues in the country's five-year economic plans. Another Fulbright alumna, Dr. Najma Chowdhury, a prominent academic and former interim minister of labor, social welfare, and women and children's affairs, received the American Political Science Association's award for the best book on gender and politics in 1994. Together with Bangladesh's first and, to date, only female National Professor, Dr. Sufia Ahmed, these Fulbright alumnae have been in the forefront of efforts in local and international fora to redress gender inequality.

Since the Fulbright program's inception in Pakistan in 1951, more than 1,100 Pakistani students, professors, and researchers have traveled to the United States on Fulbright grants, while 2,200 Americans have traveled to teach or do research in Pakistan. Thousands of Pakistani university students have been taught by American Fulbright professors and no fewer than 12 alumni have served as university vice-chancellors.

One alumnus, Dr. Mocen Qureshi, served for 23 years in the IMP and World Bank, retiring as the World Bank's senior vice president for finance in order to raise more than $1.1 billion in private sector funding for development and infrastructure investment in Asia. In 1993, on the basis of his economic expertise and apolitical reputation, Dr. Qureshi was appointed caretaker prime minister of Pakistan and earned the title "Mr. Clean" for his vigorous pursuit of political reform and economic transparency.

Turning to Nepal, since 1961

approximately 250 Americans and 400 Nepalis have participated in the Fulbright exchange. The list of Nepali alumni includes at least 5 current or former government ministers, four of the six members of the National Planning Commission, two former ambassadors to the U.S., one former ambassador to the United Nations, a former chancellor of the Royal Academy, several joint secretaries, and many university professors and deans.

All of these individuals have made important contributions, but tonight I would like to highlight the achievements of one Nepali alumnus, the Honorable Dr. Prakash Chandra Lohani, who will be participating in a conference roundtable discussion here on Sunday.

Dr. Lohani was awarded a Fulbright scholarship to undertake an MBA program at the University of Indiana at the ripe age of 17. He went on to complete his Ph.D. in business at UCLA by the age of 24. For 27 of the last 30 years, he has been active in government and has served as the minister for housing and physical development, minister for finance and communication, and minister of foreign affairs. He now is an esteemed member of the opposition in parliament.

Always engaged in furthering Nepal's economic development and an influential commentator and analyst of regional economic issues, Dr. Lohani has been recognized throughout his career for his brilliance and integrity. I understand Dr. Lohani is with us tonight. Would you please stand to receive our congratulations and applause. You have been a great credit to the Fulbright program,

Finally, let me turn to Sri Lanka: This is the 46th consecutive year of bilateral academic exchanges between the United States and Sri Lanka, with the Fulbright Commission the only independent educational commission of its kind in the country. The nearly 800

American and Sri Lankan scholars who have participated in the various academic exchange programs
under the oversight of the commission include the island's first woman Supreme Court Justice and the renowned historian,
Professor Kingsley

de Silva. Among Professor de Silva's outstanding achievements has been to transform the International Center for Ethnic Studies, which he heads, into one of the top research institutes on ethnic studies and conflict in the whole of South Asia. Professor de Silva has been at the forefront of efforts to address the root causes of ethnic conflict. I might add that he is joined in this battle by Sri Lanka's minister of justice, ethnic affairs, and national reconciliation, Professor C.L. Peiris, with whom I met yesterday at the Department of State. In addition to searching for a peaceful resolution to the conflict with Tamil separatists, Minister Peiris has served on Sri Lanka's Fulbright Commission.

What does all of this add up to? Simply stated, "within and across borders" these Fulbright alums are making a difference by providing the "wise and capable" leadership called for by Senator Fulbright. Creating economic systems that facilitate the growth of business and commerce that will raise living standards, promoting political reforms which strengthen democratic systems, working to legally enshrine universal norms of human rights for all citizens, addressing the root causes of conflict before it spills across borders - all of this is what Senator Fulbright envisioned when he stated:

I have always tried to keep in mind Senator

Fulbright's admonition, that we should see the world as others see it, not just through our own eyes. And I have retained throughout my career a deep commitment to strengthen our nation's relationships with countries around the world, in whatever way possible, large or small.

have retained throughout my career a deep commitment to strengthen our nation's relationships with countries around the world, in whatever way possible, large or small.

My wife Merrie and I recently had a very special opportunity to host a dinner at our home for a group of South Asian Fulbright Scholars, from Bangladesh, India and Nepal.

The dinner and our very animated conversation reminded me once again of the diverse talents and energy of those who take part in the Fulbright exchange program around the world. I was also able to share this Fulbright experience with our two teenage daughters — giving them an opportunity to see the world that will lie before them when they leave home. It is a world that has been enriched by the Fulbright program — a program that I am convinced, as I said earlier, has "many more tomorrows than yesterdays." •

Mr. Inderfurth is assistant secretary of state for South Asian affairs. This is the text of his keynote address, given at the 21st Annual Conference of the Fulbright Association in Washington, D.C. on Oct. 9, 1998. The theme for the conference was "The Fulbright Challenge: Within and Across Borders."

"The preservation of our free society in the years and decades to come will depend ultimately on whether we succeed or fail in directing the enormous power of human knowledge to the enrichment of our own lives and to the shaping of a rational and civilized world order."

Closing Remarks

Let me close with a personal remark. I can testify personally to the profound influence that the Fulbright experience has on aspiring academics and practitioners of foreign policy. Senator Fulbright made his way from the Ozarks to Washington via a Rhodes Scholarship in England. I made my way from the Tarheel state to Washington via a Fulbright Scholarship in Scotland in 1973. It was my very
