Georgia

Georgia is a diverse state, offering everything from mountains and white-water rapids to forested ridges honeycombed with caves and low-lying swamps.

Located in southeastern US, Georgia was founded in 1735 by James Oglethorpe, an Englishman who landed in Savannah and established the 13th colony in the New World.

From farms and orchards in the south, to the mysterious Okefenokee Swamp in the southeast, and the Atlantic coastline of tidal marshes, there is plenty to see and do.

Packed with colorful history, Georgia saw the emergence of Creek and Cherokee Indian nations and the start of the infamous Trail of Tears, the wealthy days of cotton plantations fueled by slave labor and bloody Civil War battles culminating in Union General Sherman's devastating 'March to the Sea' and the burning of Atlanta.

The state is still the home of southern hospitality, gracious homes and a rich history and culture proudly preserved. The booming city of Atlanta - known as 'The City in a Forest' - most dramatically expresses the transition from Old South to New. Magnolia and dogwood trees still surround handsome Georgian-style homes, yet only blocks away, dazzling contemporary buildings add to Atlanta's ever-growing skyline. Georgia's climate ranges from the low humidity of the Blue Ridge Mountains to the subtropical southern coastal region.\

When settlers first arrived in the South Georgia area, there were no Honeybees to pollinate their crops. W. L. Morgan introduced beekeeping to the area at Troupville. The black bee was brought from Germany or Holland and the yellow bee from Italy. J. E. Williams developed an Apiary in the part of Lowndes County that is now Cook County, near Sparks. Mr. Williams was the first commercial beekeeper recorded in Lowndes County. Now, in these days, when the bee industry is mentioned in this area, the name of Garnett Puett Sr. and The Puett Co. is remembered as one of the pioneers of the bee industry.
