IN

2013, George Waters, then an aspiring golf-course architect and now the manager for the United States Golf Association's Green Section Education, wrote a book titled Sand and Golf: How Terrain Shapes the Game. It's marvelously instructive, one of many books on our recommended reading list for Golf Digest's nearly 1,500 course-rating panelists. ► Waters starts with the premise that "sandy terrain lies at the heart and soul of the game," a simple declaration that explains the ascension of many of the courses listed on the 2019 renewal of Golf Digest's biennial ranking of America's 100 Greatest Golf Courses.

It starts at the top of the list, with No. 1 PINE VALLEY in New Jersey, where irregular fairways framed by acres of exposed sand present a compelling 18 holes of challenge and reward. Fifty-three years ago, when Golf Digest first introduced the concept of course rankings, Pine Valley was considered the ultimate in penal golf-course architecture. These days, it's considered highly strategic, a change in attitude brought about in part by experts like Waters, who writes that Pine Valley "was the first course in America constructed in a truly naturalistic style" and celebrates its sandy wastelands as superior to flanking fields of ankle-deep manicured rough.

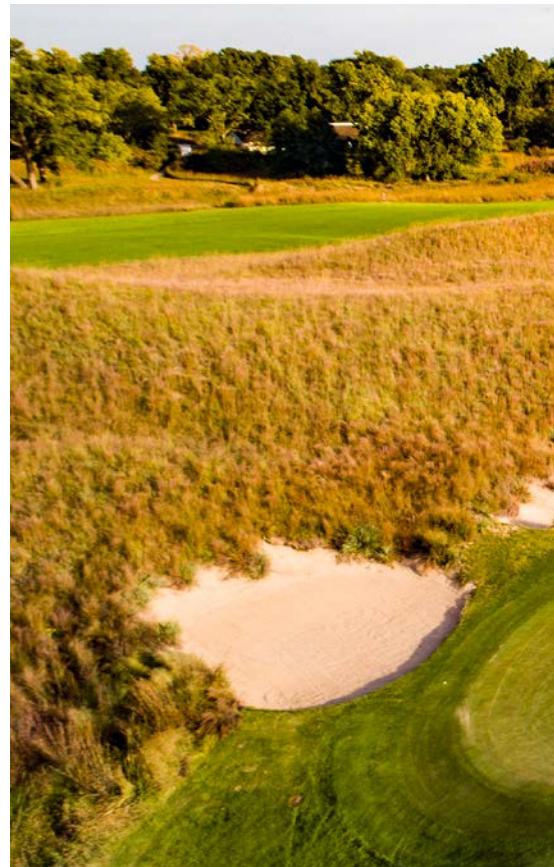

"Golf is a game of recovery," Waters says, and points out that the low-nutrient content of sand results in sparsely grassed rough that gives even below-average golfers a chance of finding their way home.

But even in sand, something will eventually grow, be it weeds or trees. Considerable effort has been made to re-establish Pine Valley's naturalistic rough. Just last year, consulting architect Tom Fazio had a crew chop away a brushy hillside of overgrown trees along the left side of the short, splendid par-4 12th (previous pages), reintroducing a daunting canyon of sand scars and pits.

In 2010, Waters had been part of the reconstruction crew that, under the direction of architects Bill Coore and Ben Crenshaw, pulled out all the Bermuda-grass rough from PINEHURST NO. 2, now ranked 29th, to expose the sand beneath. The goal was to restore what they believe original architect Donald Ross intended, a rough of sandy hardpan dotted with wiregrass. Waters calls today's Pinehurst "an interesting twist on playable rough . . . the perfect balance between penalty and playability." That rough also provides distinctive visuals that many panelists favor with good scores in our Aesthetics category.

The concept of sandy rough is now a characteristic of several America's 100 Greatest courses. Coore and Crenshaw have recently implemented it in their remodeling of No. 12 SEMINOLE in South Florida and No. 67 MAIDSTONE on the Atlantic shoreline of Long Island in New York. It's also a primary feature at the Grand Slam of layouts at Oregon's Bandon Dunes Resort: No. 17 PACIFIC DUNES, No. 36 BANDON DUNES, No. 50 OLD MACDONALD and No. 69 BANDON TRAILS.

NO. 89 : SLEEPY HOLLOW : 16TH HOLE

DISPLAY TERRAIN THAT “LIES AT THE HEART AND SOUL OF THE GAME.”

On California’s Monterey Peninsula, the concept is used a bit more sparingly, given the rocky nature of the area. Sandy rough is not a natural characteristic at No. 7 PEBBLE BEACH, whose name suggests a coarser foundation, but clusters of holes in sand dunes are prevalent at other area courses: No. 3 CYPRESS POINT, No. 45 SPY-GLASS HILL and two courses at MONTEREY PENINSULA COUNTRY CLUB, No. 56 SHORE and No. 79 DUNES, the latter one of four additions in 2019 to America’s 100 Greatest (see accompanying list).

On the Atlantic coast, Pete Dye’s design at THE OCEAN COURSE at Kiawah Island in South Carolina, ranked 24th, has always featured holes surrounded by natural sand dunes merged with man-made bunkers. At the 2021 PGA Championship, all sand will again be played “through the green,” just as it was in the 2012 PGA, allowing contestants to ground the club anywhere.

On the north shore of Long Island, No. 15 FRIAR’S HEAD, by Coore and Crenshaw, has a back nine in magnificent coastal dunes. Its front nine also has sandy rough but was actually reshaped from old potato fields. “In spots where soil was heavy,” Waters writes, “they flipped it over to expose gravelly sandy soils beneath.”

Sandy rough is even found far from the coastlines, in the middle of the country, at courses like No. 9 SAND HILLS in central Nebraska, another Coore and Crenshaw layout, and No. 46 BALLYNEAL, designed by Tom Doak in northeastern Colorado.

Exposed sand is also a dominant feature on several courses in our ranking of America’s Second 100 Greatest, particularly at Florida’s Streamsong Resort, built from sand spoils deposited by phosphate strip-mining operations. STREAMSONG RED is ranked No. 112, the BLUE is 138th and the two-year-old BLACK is 169th; all use sand as much as grass. The Gil Hanse-designed Black was Golf Digest’s Best New Public Course of 2018 and is one of 23 courses new to our Second 100 Greatest list (see accompanying list).

Among those newcomers are No. 110 SAND VALLEY, yet another Coore and Crenshaw design, in dramatic sand barrens of central Wisconsin, and its companion MAMMOTH DUNES, a David McLay Kidd design ranked 145th. (Mammoth was Best New runner-up to Streamsong Black last year but is now ranked higher because of additional panelist evaluations received before our 100 Greatest deadline.) Another Kidd design, No. 180 GAMBLE SANDS, stretches across the sand-dune highlands of northeast Washington.

Even on courses with conventional turf-grass rough, Waters writes, a base of sand will provide firm-and-fast turf conditions (the essence of Golf Digest's Conditioning category) and irregular terrain that poses stance and lie as strategic elements: random hazards dug from natural sand; unusually contoured putting surfaces; interesting wrinkles off greens; and, more often than not, prominent wind, because wind most commonly deposited the sand on such sites in the first place. All these elements are addressed in our Shot Values and Resistance to Scoring categories.

Among 100 Greatest Courses displaying these sand-related attributes are the triumvirate of Southampton, N.Y.: No. 4 SHINNECOCK HILLS, No. 8 NATIONAL GOLF LINKS and No. 39 SEBONACK GOLF CLUB. ▶ Others

A BASE OF SAND WILL PROVIDE FIRM-AND-FAST CONDITIONS, THE ESSENCE OF GOLF DIGEST'S CONDITIONING CATEGORY. SAND IS ALSO A FACTOR IN SHOT VALUES AND RESISTANCE TO SCORING.

HOTTEST COURSES

Among 100 Greatest Courses ranked for at least five survey periods, only two have risen in our rankings every two years. Ballyneal in Colorado went from No. 95 in 2011 to 46th this year. Friar's Head in New York started at No. 34 in 2011 and is now 15th.

THE 22 COURSES THAT HAVE MADE EVERY LIST

Only 22 courses have been members of our top national ranking every year since 1966: Augusta National, Baltusrol (Lower), Congressional (Blue), Cypress Point, Inverness, Los Angeles C.C. (North), Medinah (No. 3), Merion (East), Oak Hill (East), Oakland Hills (South), Oakmont, Olympia Fields (North), Olympic Club (Lake), Peachtree, Pebble Beach, Pine Valley, Pinehurst (No. 2), Riviera, Scioto, Seminole, Southern Hills and Winged Foot (West).

include No. 27 PRAIRIE DUNES in Kansas, No. 33 OLYMPIC CLUB (LAKE) in San Francisco, No. 42 ERIN HILLS near Milwaukee, No. 51 GARDEN CITY on Long Island, No. 68 ARCADIA BLUFFS (BLUFFS) in Michigan, No. 83 CALUSA PINES and No. 125 JUPITER HILLS (HILLS) in Florida, No. 137 DISMAL RIVER (RED) in Nebraska and No. 162 OCEAN FOREST in Georgia.

ADAPTING TO CONDITIONS

There is still an abundance of courses on our 100 Greatest and Second 100 Greatest conceived from less-than-ideal topographic and subsoil conditions, and yet they're highly regarded and highly ranked. Some of those, Waters argues, exist because architects adapted design elements of sand-based courses, particularly the famed links layouts of Great Britain.

No. 2 AUGUSTA NATIONAL was scraped from tall hills of red Georgia clay, but, Waters writes, original architect Alister MacKenzie intended it to be "an inland course that embodies the best principles of links golf." It wasn't until after MacKenzie's death that low-lying greens on the seventh and 10th holes, originally receptive to bouncing, rolling approach shots, were relocated atop hills, and the narrow, nearly dry creek beds guarding the 11th, 12th, 15th and 16th greens became ominous water hazards.

The old pasture upon which No. 5 OAKMONT was constructed lacked sand content to provide ample drainage, so its architects improvised, canting and slanting its greens for surface drainage and digging ditches along many fairways to direct rainwater away from areas of play. Those greens and ditches now provide Oakmont its singular character.

A similar solution was implemented by A.W. Tillinghast in his creation of No. 11 WINGED FOOT (WEST) and No. 52 WINGED FOOT (EAST), masterpieces chiseled from the granite rock of Westchester County in New York. In the past seven years, Gil Hanse has recaptured all the glory of Tillinghast's tilted, folded-edge green complexes that shuttle rainwater—and golf balls—off to the sides.

Perhaps the antithesis of the naturalistic style of sand-based beauties like Pine Valley and Sand Hills are the works of early 20th-century golf architect C.B. Macdonald and his understudy Seth Raynor. Their designs were indubitably manufactured, with lots of precise angles and parallel lines. Though Macdonald began his career on sandy soil, creating National Golf Links in 1911 and then an early version of Shinnecock Hills, his ego drew him to take assignments elsewhere, from the hills of the Hudson Valley to the hills of West Virginia to the hills of St. Louis, at each stop hammering out the same template of favorite holes using mule teams and steam shovels. Raynor, less outspoken but no less confident, was even more productive on a wider range of destinations.

Collectively, their works are represented prominently on our rankings. The latest Macdonald creation to join our 100 Greatest is No. 89 SLEEPY HOLLOW, north of New York City, its inclusion aided greatly by recent work by Hanse, who converted seven holes built by Tillinghast in the late 1920s into Macdonald's distinctive style to match the original 1915 architecture of the other holes.

Macdonald is also represented at No. 119 PIPING ROCK and No. 143 THE CREEK, both in the eastern suburbs of New York City; No. 157 ST. LOUIS COUNTRY CLUB; and No. 173 THE GREENBRIER (OLD WHITE TPC), a PGA Tour stop expertly reclaimed by architect Keith Foster after a destructive flood in 2016.

Raynor's courses are equally as impressive, starting with the Pebble Beach of the East Coast, No. 10 FISHERS ISLAND on the New York island of the same name, and No. 14 CHICAGO GOLF CLUB, a reconfiguration of his mentor Macdonald's original design, which had been the first 18-hole course in America. Raynor also did No. 44 CAMARGO outside Cincinnati; No. 55 SHOREACRES north of Chicago; No. 95 YEAMANS HALL in Charleston, S.C.; No. 160 FOX CHAPEL in Pittsburgh; No. 174 MOUNTAIN LAKE CLUB in central Florida and No. 194 COUNTRY CLUB OF FAIRFIELD in Connecticut. Yeamans, Mountain Lake and Fairfield are sand-based sites, but you wouldn't know that from their architecture of steeply sloped hazards, pedestal greens and geometric bunkers.

For those curious as to what Macdonald and Raynor might have done had they ever attempted to emulate the exposed-sand virtues of Pine Valley, look at two other 100 Greatest Courses: Old Macdonald at Bandon Dunes, a softly molded, sand-splashed homage to Macdonald by Doak and co-designer Jim Urbina, and the Dunes Course at Monterey Peninsula Country Club, a design started by Raynor, completed after his death by others and reimagined a few years back by Tom Fazio and former associates Tim Jackson and David Kahn. Both reflect the "MacRaynor" philosophy of angularity without the rigidity of their originals. G

MORE RANKINGS TO COME

► Golf Digest will continue our celebration of great golf architecture in May, when we announce Best in State rankings, and June, when we reveal America's 100 Greatest Public Courses.

HOW WE RANK THE COURSES / Our panelists play and score courses on seven criteria

1. SHOT VALUES
How well do the holes pose a variety of risks and rewards and equally test length, accuracy and finesse?

2. RESISTANCE TO SCORING
How difficult, while still being fair, is the course for a scratch player from the back tees?

3. DESIGN VARIETY
How varied are the holes in differing lengths, configurations, hazard placements, green shapes and green contours?

4. MEMORABILITY
How well do the design features provide individuality to each hole yet a collective continuity to the entire 18?

5. AESTHETICS
How well do the scenic values of the course add to the pleasure of a round?

6. CONDITIONING
How firm, fast and rolling were the fairways, how firm yet receptive were the greens and how true were the roll of putts on the day you played the course?

7. AMBIENCE
How well does the overall feel and atmosphere of the course reflect or uphold the traditional values of the game?

► To arrive at a course's final score, we total its averages in the seven categories, doubling Shot Values. A course needs 45 evaluations over the past eight years to be eligible for America's 100 Greatest and the Second 100 Greatest.
