The first Navy Drug Safety Action Program class at Marine Corps Air Station, Kaneohe Bay started Jan. 11 in the Counseling and Assistance Center. The aim of the NDSAP course is The aim of the NDSAP course is to provide information to participants regarding the specific effects of drugs and the medical and legal consequences of use or abuse. "NDSAP is an intervention and prevention program designed to talk about the use, misuse and abuse of drugs other than alcohol." said John Dickerson, Lead-counselor of the CAAC.

THE PROGRAM WAS patterned after the successful Navy Alcohol Safety Action Program initiated in 1973. According to a paper written at the Naval Alcohol Rehabilitation the Navai Alcohol Kenabilitation Center, the NASAP mission is to provide a consistent mechanism to identify Marines and sailors involved in alcohol related problems, and refer them to appropriate levels of education or treatment.

The Navy Personnel Research and Development Center, San Diego conducted a study to analyze the results of the NDSAP analyze the results of the NDSAP pilot program. Questionnaires were distributed to the supervisors of those who attended NDSAP classes and the results were evaluated in terms of program strengths and weaknesses to generate recommendations for possible course improvements

WEAPONS COMPANY First Sergeant Jesus Ubarro described the two Marines, "They are both outstanding Marines. Duso is a boxer and though he had the opportunity to stay here when we deployed, he turned down the chance to box. He wanted to stay with the company for deployment. "Lance Corporal Baehr is filling a leader's position in 81mm mortars. He knows what is expected of him and he knows the next step up the ladder." Corporal Victor Kirk, Acting Platoon Sergeant for 81's platoon added, "Basically they are very good Marines, As for the robbery, they saw that something was Dickerson said that while the first NDSAP class was at the CAAC, subsequent classes may be at station training or other locations if necessary. He added thet classes are limited to 20 that classes are limited to 20 people. Twenty-five people are being enrolled for each class, allowing that five will not be able to attend the classes.

It is considered off-duty education and students can acquire 3.6 continuing education units from the University of Arizona," Dickerson said. "It also counts for continued education when cutting scores are figured for promotions." For command referrals the class is considered as "We want to run at least one class per month," Dickerson said. "If we can fill them and the need arises, we will run more classes."

Dickerson said that most of the personnel in the NDSAP classes are referrals. "They are Marines and sailors who were picked up for one type of infraction or the other and the command had reason to believe the cause of the violation was drugs other than alcohol," he said.

HE ADDED that there are four kinds of referrals. They are: command, health, mental health and court referrals. Students can also arrange to take the course because they want the continuing education credits or just want to know more about the effects of drugs and the medical and legal consequences arising from their use/abuse. During the NDSAP course discussions will include attitudes and values of the individuals taking the class. It will also address alternatives such as community action, sports and other means to enjoy life without drugs

NDSAP and NASAP are based upon the idea that "attitude is the father of action." Unless an individual's attitude about a given behavior is changed, long-term change is rare. The goal of the two programs is to change attitudes about drugs and alcohol.

Marines apprehend felons

The two Marines lost track of the man they were chasing, but as of Tops Coffee Shop, they saw a man in an alley. "We were checking him out, and Duso said he was the same guy. We started the chase again," Bachr said. This time the leathernecks caught the man and while Baehr held their captive, Duso attracted Duso added some details, "The

International Forgiveness Week

HONOLULU — How can we cool off the "war fever" that is now starting up once again around the world? By healing the roots of international relationships: those people-vs-people and group-vs-group attitudinal buildups which eventually spill across national boundaries. This attitudinal healing, on a wide scale is the aim of a grass-roots a wide scile, is the aim of a grass-roots network that has begun to sprout in 14 U.S. cities and Manila and Geneva, with a new but powerful idea whose time, they believe, has come: International Forgiveness Week.

INTERNATIONAL FORGIVEis observed annually Week

This year the dates are Feb. 7 through 13. Mayor Eileen Anderson issued a formal Proclamation of the Week in the City and County of Honolulu; the Proclamation was presented in her office at Honolulu Hale, Jan. 7, to William Kalt, founder of the idea and of the growing network of co-sponsors of the week both locally and internation-ally Among the co-sponsoring groups ally. Among the co-sponsoring groups are the Hawaii Council of Churches and the Chamber of Commerce of Hawaii. How does one participate in the Week? Very simply. On the first day, Feb. 7, you forgive yourself, on the second day, Feb. 8, you forgive your family; on the third day, you forgive your friends and associates; the fourth day you forgive across economic lines within your own nation; the fifth day you forgive across cultural lines within your own nation; on the sixth day you forgive across politicallines within your own nation; and on the seventh day, you forgive other nations. How will this make a difference? Just imagine what it would mean if you knew that it was going on all over the world, simultaneously: by Americans; by Russians; by Iranians; by Chinese; by Jews and Arabs — in growing numbers, every year. The gool of this effort, now in its fourth year is to establish International Forgiveness Week as a major worldwide annual observance and household word by the time of its 10th year, 1988.

"INTERJECTING FORGIVE-ness as a new variable into diplomacy at all levels — from family relations to international relations — is an idea whose time has come because it must come," said Kalt. "True, it raises more questions than it answers, but it raises the vight questions. the right questions.

Nor the kind you can "solve" by staying in the waking dream and accepting its premises. They're a collective waking dream, the kind we all create together by the interaction of our unexamined attitudes. The Passage Perilous has been created The Passage Perilous has been created by us passengers. It is the logical result of our own incompatible thoughtstreams in the mental air, driving us through inharmonious currents of emotion, against the rock-like fixations of character armor in each national self-image. All of these are our own

Image. All of these are our own projections, we passengers of our own interrelation-ship. World conflicts have become seemingly insoluble, because historical recriminations have set into generations old cultural definitions-whereby ach group institutions ligan its whereby each group institutionalizes its official memory of the economic and political injustices perpetrated upon it by its traditional enemies.

THE AVERAGE SEMI-EN-LIGHTENED man or woman of goodwill feels helpless to change these goodwill feels helpless to change these patterns, because of their massive momentum in the popular milieu. The unentightened masses, who self-righteously follow the line of least mental resistance, perpetuate the received communal doctrine of their nation or group as victim of others' moral turpitude. The masses are unaware that their "passive" recipience of this doctrine is in fact a mental activity, which daily creates the nandated by the prejudices of the mandated by the prejudices of the common people; the common people claim to be helpless before the machinations of diplomats. Maintain-ing this claim of helplessness is part of

The passive looking act of creating the way things are. There is only one way to change the reality, and that is to begin by changing your contribution to the collective thoughts which construct it. Bafore the content of international

Before the content of international fixed accusations can change, the context in which these positions are held must be shifted.

Underlying the vast-array of specific criss-crossing accusations (about which nations and quasi-national groups are in a chaos of disagreement) is the near-universal meta-belief that "Our nation is a predominantly innocent victim of the moral atrocities of yours." Since all nations hold this identical meta-belief, they are in a paradoxial hidden they are in a paradoxial hidden agreement. It is tacitly agreed that each participant in an international conflict participant in an international conflict will roots its specific accusations in this contextual meta-belief; and while expecting its enemy nation to do the same, it will allow the enemy no justification for doing so. In this king of a context, we must have conflict — because each side, all by itself, holds the other in a thought pattern which is self-contradictory. contradictory.

TO SHIFT THIS CONTEXT, we must step back from the immediate, concrete content of the disputes, in which the contending parties differ-and see the underlying attitudinal context of all the contending parties, which is usually the same. Making the shift is both personal and national work. Pointing the finger at national leaders Pointing the finger at national leaders implies pointing three fingers back at ourselves. Most bureaucrats explain themselves, as mere high-level clerks constrained by the matrix of policies and prejudices mandated to them from below; and so an effort to change things merely at national levels will die from lack of energy. On the other hand, working at "peace-loving" attitudes purely at the personal level seems to avoid the issue-for most individuals walk around with the convenient fixed belief that they are but cogs in a vast societal machine which they individually neither cause nor control.

We need a strategy which operates simultaneously on both levels: a strategy which covers the entire spectrum from personal to international relations; a strategy which creates personal responsibility for national attitudes; a strategy which offers a feasible target for the transition phase between today's institutionalized between today's institutionalized grudges and the ultimate world harmony of a still-distant tomorrow.

What is that feasible intermediate target? We propose it is a new, intermediate context: the willingness to intermediate context: the willingness to forgive (and be forgiven). This willingness shifts the picture from the extreme polarity of "We are right, you are wrong" to "We are all in this muddle of partial rightness and partial wrongness together." The feasible target, of implanting willingness to forgive into world politics, is an efficient use of nervery for our energies forgive into world politics, is an efficient use of personal energy, for our energies are not scattered upon an impossible distant goal (actually "solving" world problems), but are focused upon the point of leverage. Every increment of change from "You are wrong and we're going to rub it in how totally wrong you are" to "You are partly right and we're willing to help that which is right in you to grow," is like the liberation of a particle of struck thought-mass into a moving thought-energy. We're focusing on getting the world's will-to-peace unstuck. unstuck.

Drugs rob man of intelligence, free will

by Father John Newton

Early one Saturday evening not too Early one Saturday evening not too long ago, a Marine was greeted by his buddy in this fashion: "Hey, where've you been, I've been looking all over for you?" He replied that he had been to chow...to which the buddy disgustedly said: "Chow? You go to chow on Saturday? Weekends ain't for eating.... they're for drinking!"

THIS REMARK focuses attention on one of the most serious situations facing the world today . . . the problem of substance abuse . . . specifically, drug and alcohol abuse

Two qualties distinguish man from the beasts of the jungle, his intelligence and his free will. Drugs and alcohol rob us of both these features and put us back in the jungle, not the idyllic forest of Tarzan and Jane, but the savage violent world of the beasts.

Eighty percent of all violent crimes are drug or alcohol related. Deprived of the characteristics that mark him in the image and likeness of God, man takes on the image of a beast. However, it is rarely a single misfortune. It almost always occasions other crimes.

weakened by drugs. Crimes of anger, fighting, theft and sexual assault most frequently follow such abuse. The dangers that ride with the "stoned" driver cannot be overestimated.

THEN WE HAVE the "hangover." the "afterglow." How can one expect to be on the job, alert and sharp to fulfill his duties properly when his vision is blurred and his judgment impaired by fuzzy thinking?

We know the consequences for drug abuse. Alcohol abuse, on the other hand continues to cost the military man and his family physical, emotion and financial pain.

This is not a plea for total abstinence. It is a plea for sobriety. That means, if you feel you must drink ... or even that you want to drink, then learn your capacity for alcoholic beverages and capacity for alcoholic beverages and stay within that capacity. If you know that five drinks put you "over," — then stop at four or "nurse" the last one until the effect of the others wear off... or switch to soft drinks (horrors) for a while ... and eat between, even if it is a weekend.

Blood-stripe more than just ornamentation

AND IF YOU DON'T, YOU'RE DEAD - First Ser-geant Ronald Newman, Company K, 3d Battalion, 3d Marines, 1st Marine Brigada Marines, 1st Marine Brigade, expounds on vital aspects of small unit planning, orders and tech-niques. The first sergeant shared his combat knowledge with other 3/3 leathernecks during leathernecks during the battalion's noncommissioned officers' seminar Jan. 11 through 14 at the Boondocker Thea-Boondocker Thea-ter. (Photo by Sgt Chris Taylor)

by Sgt Ernie Carter

"The red stripe means something," Battalion Sergeant Major James McGuirk, 3d Battalion, 3d Marines, 1st Marine Brigade, said. McGuirk's conviction that the blood stripe worn by Marine noncommissioned officers is worn by Marine honcommissioned orneers is more than just ornamentation, is the primary reuson why he conducted un NCO seminar at the Air Station's Boondocker Theater, Jan. 11 through 14. He said that when a recent white letter from the Commandant of the Marine Compared that the Com Corps called for units throughout the Corps to develop NCO schools, he wusted no time starting his.

THE SERGEANT MAJOR HAND-picked the instructors for the seminar. Most of them are senior staff noncommissioned officers with combat experience. Five first sergeants and two master sergeants were among the 11 seminar instructors.

"You don't see senior staff NCOs giving classes anymore," McGuirk said. "Usually such training is given by staff sergeants or junior officers." He added that senior staff NCOs have a lot of experience to draw upon and should let the younger NCOs have the benefit of that experience.

McGuirk started the seminar with a three hour session covering leadership principles and traits. The other 25 hours of the course included such topics us: financial management, land navigation, defensive tactics and patrol orders. The goal, according to McGuirk, is to give corporals and sergeants the knowledge and confidence to do a job with little or no super-vision. He said, "A staff NCO shouldn't have to spend all his time checking upon sergeants and corporals. They (corporals and sergeants) should be given the responsibility to see a job properly completed."

HE ADDED THAT IN COMBAT those NCOs may find themselves as platoon leaders and they must be ready. It all boils down to the and they must be ready. It an oons own to the NCO having training, confidence and dignity. "A corporal may be the bottom link of the chain of command, but more importantly he is the first leader and authority in the execution of command in the training and authority in the execution of our mission," the Battalion Sergeant Major concluded. "If the dignity of two chevrons suffers, then a chink is made in the overall dignity of command."
