HURLEY — Iron County was recently represented at an international conference, as members of the Iron County University of Wisconsin-Extension Office and a Hurley student presented on ways the county has involved its youth in community development projects.

The Community Development Society and National Association of Community Development Extension Professionals 2017 conference held in Big Sky, Mont., ended Wednesday.

"We were there for the project we did in October with the trailhead designs," UW-Extension Youth Development Educator Neil Klemme said. "We were in a block of presenters talking about engaging young people and getting young people involved in that type of work."

The trailhead design project was a day-long event with the UW-Extension Community Vitality and Placemaking Team that led to sketched designs of two trailheads. The first, located between the Montreal River and U.S. 51, roughly parallel to Silver Street, will be between the motorized and non-motorized trails running from Michigan. The other will be located in Montreal.

The students creating the plans included a range of features in the trailheads, ranging from parking and pavilions for shelter to playgrounds and basketball courts.

The project won the "Outstanding Team" award from the Wisconsin Extension Environmental and Community Development Association earlier this year.

Klemme said he and Community Natural Resource and Economic Development Educator Amy Nosal had considered applying to take part in the national conference; but then realized that given the topic, it would make sense to include some of the high school students actually involved in the project.

Klemme brought Hurley student Tate Guenard to present on his experience with the trailhead design day, while Felicia Herlevi talked about some of the earlier youth engagement efforts that led to the trailhead design day.

Herlevi, a 2015 Hurley High School graduate, is attending the University of Minnesota majoring in speech language sciences. She participated in a number of extension youth programs while at HHS and is working at the extension office this summer as an assistant.

"Felicia has done a lot of the other stuff we've done in the past, like the first impressions (surveys). She was there for the background work, so I thought it was a good fit for her too," Klemme said.

Guenard will be a senior at Hurley this fall.

Speakers at the conference came from as far away as Africa and Europe.

Each of the four groups had roughly 20 minutes to present, although according to Klemme, many in the audience stayed after to talk to the kids about the experience.

"We ended up staying after for 20 minutes to a half hour because so many people wanted to talk (about the presentation)," he said.

Klemme said he has presented at the conference several times,

Ironwood quiz bowl competes in national tournament

By RICHARD JENKINS

IRONWOOD TOWNSHIP — For a second year in a row, the Ironwood Area Schools quiz bowl team competed in a national tournament, taking 12th place in a tournament in Chicago Monday.

Ironwood was among the over 200 teams from around the country that competed in the three-day event, coach Steve Boyd said — with all the teams having won local tournaments to earn their place.

"The requirements to get into (the tournament) is, you have to finish first in a state or regional tournament," Boyd said.

Each team competed in at least six matches, with a 4-2 record needed to advance to the finals.

"And that's what we went, 4 and 2," Boyd said.

The teams then competed in a single-eliminations final round, where Ironwood finished 12 overall.

Ironwood's wins at both of Gogebic Community College's tournaments — along with a second place finish in the Upper Peninsula-wide tournament in Marquette — secured Ironwood's spot, according to Boyd.

Boyd said the Chicago tournament had slightly different rules from the tournaments Ironwood normally competes in, which resulted in faster matches covering more material.

"Each match had four quarters, but all together they finish it in less than half an hour. So it flies pretty quick," Boyd said. "When we do the ones at GCC, they're usually 45 minutes to one hour."

Teams were also only allowed one guess per question, rather than multiple attempts like Ironwood is used to.

The first quarter of each match featured toss-up questions either team could answer, the second quarter featured toss-up questions with bonus questions for the team that answers the original question correctly, the third quarter was a lighting round with 10 questions in 60 seconds and the fourth round was a toss-up round with harder questions.

Boyd was proud of his team — which was comprised of Zane Ozzello, Ian Bentley, Rico Braucher and Corissa Mattson and Emily Carey — for competing against much bigger schools; which were from as far away as Illinois, Nebraska, Texas, Virginia and Ohio.

"We lost to a school that had 6,000 (students) in their high school," Boyd said. "There were some schools there where quiz bowl was a class. There were a couple schools where the quiz bowl kids are actually in a separate academic (track); where they have their English, math, social studies and science in a block — just the quiz bowl kids."

Even though Ironwood may not have had some of these advantages, Boyd said his team handled the pressure of the competition — earning several victories on the last question of the match.

"Our kids really did well and the community should be proud of them," Boyd said. "We beat much larger schools and they really stood toe-to-toe with much larger schools and didn't blink."

While in Chicago; the team also took in a show at Second City, explored the Midwest's largest book fair, attended the Chicago Blues Fest and "ate well," according to Boyd.

He thanked the district for its support of the team, and teacher

BESSEMER — This July, members of the Marquette City Band and Marquette Choral Society will perform in Finland to celebrate the Finnish centennial.

Rob and Barb Ahnen, of Bessemer, were asked to join the band for the tour, which will include 48 instrumentalists and 48 singers.

Locally, they play in the Gogebic Range Concert Band and met the Marquette ensemble members at band festival last year. Not all the Marquette band members were able to make the European trip, so they contacted the Ahnens to help fill out the ranks.

Barb Ahnen said the City Band will play both Finnish and American music in four or five concerts over a seven-day period. The musical ensemble will open its tour in the capital city of

'Cars 3' speeds to No. 1, Tupac biopic nets strong debut

LOS ANGELES (AP) — “Wonder Woman” fell to second place in its third weekend in theaters, but it’s still doing the heavy lifting for the otherwise lackluster summer box office.

While many worn-out franchises and franchise hopefuls continue to struggle to find a significant North American audience, smaller films such as the Tupac biopic “All Eyez on Me” and the shark thriller “47 Meters Down” were able to break through the clutter and make a splash this weekend.

As expected, the third installment in Disney and Pixar’s $1 billion “Cars” franchise easily took the top spot, but its estimated $53.5 million in earnings told a more complicated tale.

“Cars 3” had the worst opening in the series’ history — “Cars” opened to $60.1 million and “Cars 2” to $66.1 million — and it was one of the lowest debut totals for the Pixar brand.

It was also a disappointment compared with the top films over this weekend in 2015 and 2016, noted comScore senior media analyst Paul Dergarabedian.

A year ago, Pixar’s “Finding Dory” debuted with $135.1 million. In 2015, “Jurassic World” raked in $106.6 million in its second weekend.

“That kind of tells you the state of the industry,” Dergarabedian said.

The G-rated “Cars 3” got an “A” CinemaScore and generally positive reviews, but it will have to contend with “Despicable Me 3” which opens in two weeks.

“Wonder Woman” was knocked down to second place with $40.8 million, bringing its domestic total to $274.6 million, while holdover “The Mummy” slid to fourth place in weekend two with $13.9 million.

“It’s been a challenging summer. I always say it comes down to product. Are the movies grabbing people?” Dergarabedian said. “Before ‘Wonder Woman’ we were about 9 percent behind last summer. We’re now at about even, but the industry would like to see better than even.”

Amid the doldrums, lower-profile films were able to make a mark. The longtime-coming Tupac biopic “All Eyez on Me” earned $27.1 million to take third place on the charts.

Despite largely negative reviews, audiences gave the film an “A-” CinemaScore. Lionsgate’s Codeblack division marketed the pic, which cost Morgan Creek Productions around $40 million to produce. It opened to coincide with what would have been the late rapper’s 46th birthday on June 16.

“It’s always nice to exceed expectations,” said David Spitz, the president of theatrical distribution for Lionsgate.

The Mandy Moore shark thriller “47 Meters Down” also exceeded low expectations, earning $11.5 million for a fifth place start. A “C” CinemaScore, however, could mean the pic is dead in the water going forward.

The raunchy R-rated comedy “Rough Night” is also facing some rough waters ahead with its ghastly “C+” CinemaScore. The film, about a bachelorette party weekend gone wrong, starring Scarlett Johansson, Kate McKinnon and Jillian Bell, took in a paltry $8.1 million against a $20 million production budget.

“Rough Night” opened in seventh place, behind “Pirates of the Caribbean: Dead Men Tell No Tales,” which brought in $8.5 million. The fifth “Pirates” film has earned $150.1 million domestically and $500 million internationally.

Next week, another fifth installment — “Transformers: The Last Knight” — opens. Dergarabedian expects it follow suit with most of the summer’s franchises and earn the bulk of its money abroad.

“Sometimes the bigger and better box office stories are not at No. 1,” Dergarabedian said. “All Eyez on Me” and ‘47 Meters Down’ are the kind of movies people are looking for. It bodes well for ‘Baby Driver’ and ‘Atomic Blonde.’”

Tourists descend as temperatures climb in Death Valley

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Desert dwellers in the western U.S. see temperatures topping 120 degrees as a reason to hunker down indoors and turn up the air conditioning.

But some tourists welcome it as a bucket-list opportunity to experience Death Valley — the hottest place in America.

Many will get their chance in the days ahead as a vicious heat-wave bakes parts of Arizona, California and Nevada.

Death Valley National Park is expected to reach its first 120-degree day of the year on Sunday, and temperatures could creep toward 124 by Tuesday as the sweltering system envelopes much of the region.

Officials also warned of excessive heat across southern portions of Arizona and Nevada, and throughout California’s Central Valley.

“There’s very few places on Earth to go to experience those temperatures and Death Valley is one of those,” said John Adair, a National Weather Service meteorologist.

Business booms as temperatures soar in July and August at Panamint Springs Resort, near the entrance of Death Valley National Park.

“When it’s 120 to 125 (degrees), there’s more customers than there ever is,” said Mike Orozco, who works at the resort that includes a restaurant, gas station, camp sites and cabins.

Orozco said locals jokingly refer to the summer spike as “European season,” when a flood of tourists from Germany, France, Sweden and other places arrive in Death Valley to experience heat unheard of in Europe.

TOURISTS WALK along a ridge at Death Valley National Park, Calif. Death Valley National Park was expected to reach its first 120-degree day of the year on Sunday and temperatures could creep toward 124 by Tuesday as the sweltering system envelopes much of the region.

“Some people consider being out there in those conditions a kind of suffering. Other people can get a kind of euphoria, or a reward, out of it,” said Ed Carreon, a commercial photographer in Los Angeles who regularly visits the park and prefers the scorching summer months.

“As a younger man, I would go out there to test myself” by hiking peaks in the Panamint Range under blazing sun in triple-digit temperatures with the barest of supplies, Carreon said.

Now 58, he recognizes those broiling excursions as the folly of youth. He still makes the treks but usually in the morning before the day heats up “and with the proper clothes, plenty of water and sunscreen.”

Almost all of inland California was predicted to simmer this week at above normal temperatures.

In Las Vegas, organizers of the three-day, outdoor Electric Daisy Carnival music festival encouraged attendees to stay hydrated. Free water was available during the nighttime event that has drawn more than 130,000 people in past years.

Las Vegas temperatures crept near 110 degrees on Sunday and could reach 117 when the heatwave peaks by midweek. That would be the highest temperature ever recorded at McCarran International Airport since logging began in 1937.

The National Weather Service in Phoenix said the last time the temperature topped 120 was 1995, at 121. It could happen again on Tuesday. The record high is 122 degrees, set on June 26, 1990.

Teresa Flores in Phoenix said she will make sure her two sons and daughter stay hydrated.

“Water, water, water, water,” Flores said. “So even when they think they’re not thirsty, they’re drinking water.”

St. Paul's Lutheran of Mass City receives Bread Basket Award

MASS CITY — Penny Maki of St. Paul's Lutheran Church (ELCA) in Mass City was the recipient of the Bread Basket Award at the recent Northern Great Lakes Synod Assembly held at Northern Michigan University.

Pastor Jay Welshonse accepted the award at the assembly on Maki's behalf and she was presented with it at the beginning of Sunday services on May 26.

Each year, the World Hunger Committee of the NGLS recognizes a group from a congregation that has made an exemplary effort in the area of hunger ministry.

Maki was nominated for the award for her continuing efforts as one of the organizers of the free monthly community meals held at St. Paul's on the third Monday of each month.

Since the meals began in February of 2013, the average attendance has grown from 25 to over 100 meals served per month.

These homemade meals are prepared and served from St. Paul's fully licensed kitchen by volunteers trained by coordinator Jim Michie.

While the meal is offered at no cost, donations of fresh produce from local producers and monetary donations from individuals and groups have made this a self sustaining project.

Each year, the NGLS also recognizes a committee, task force, or team from a Northern Great Lakes Synod congregation for their efforts in helping "bear" other's burdens.

The Community Meal was previously honored in 2013 when Jim Michie received the Big Bear for his efforts organizing the monthly meal program at St. Paul's.

This was the second time St. Paul's had been honored with the Big Bear service award.

In 2010, the award was presented to St. Paul's in recognition of the monthly Malaria Net fund raising events that were begun in the fall of 2008.

The free will donations for the Malaria Net project totaled $5,455 at the time the 2010 Big Bear Award was presented to Christine Raisanen who organizes this monthly fellowship.

The project continues today and will exceeded $20,000 in July, all of which has been sent to the synod's campaign to help eradicate malaria and improve maternal and child health care in our companion synod, the Eastern and Coastal Diocese of Tanzania.

The next Community Meal will be held at St. Paul's in Mass City on Monday, June 26, a week later this month due to the week long Vacation Bible School being held at St. Paul's beginning on June 19.

The Community Meal will return to the third Monday in July.

Volunteers are always welcome and normally meet at the church around noon.

The meal itself is served from 3 to 6 p.m.

Absent Jay Z inducted to Songwriters Hall by Obama via video

NEW YORK (AP) — Jay Z, whose wife Beyonce is expecting twins soon, was absent from the 2017 Songwriters Hall of Fame, where he was inducted by a charismatic longtime fan: former U.S. President Barack Obama.

Obama, appearing in a taped video, told the audience Thursday that he's been listening to Jay Z since he was a "young and hungry state senator" and compared himself to the New York rapper.

"Nobody who met us as younger men would have expected us to be where we are today. You know what it's like not to have a father around, you know what it's like not to come from much, and to know people who didn't get the same breaks that we did. So we try to prop open those doors of opportunity so that it's a little easier for those who come up behind us to succeed as well," Obama said, earning an applause from the audience in New York City.

"Jay and I are also fools for our daughters, although he's going to have me beat once those two twins show up. And let's face it, we both have wives who are significantly more popular than we are," he added.

Jay Z became the first rapper inducted into the prestigious organization and was the first hip-hop act nominated for the honor. The icon, who rarely tweets, posted multiple messages on Twitter around the time the ceremony took place, naming rappers who he admires, from veterans like Rakim and Nas to contemporaries such as Kendrick Lamar and J. Cole.

"Thank you to all the people that have inspired me," Jay Z, born Shawn Carter, tweeted. "Salute to anybody who made a song to feed their family or just vent."

The 2017 Songwriters Hall class also included Motown founder Berry Gordy; R&B maestro Kenneth "Babyface" Edmonds; songwriting duo Jimmy Jam & Terry Lewis; pop music great Max Martin; and members of Chicago.

Jon Bon Jovi kicked off the multi-hour event at the Marriott Marquis Hotel with "It's My Life," his band's 2000 hit that Martin co-wrote. Bon Jovi said that Martin, who has written monster hits for Taylor Swift, the Backstreet Boys and other pop stars, had been a part of 22 No. 1s, placing him only behind John Lennon and Paul McCartney.

Martin, who rarely does interviews or appears in public, called the induction "unbelievable."

Bat-Signal lights up Los Angeles in tribute to Adam West

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Los Angeles became Gotham City Thursday night as the Bat-Signal glowed at City Hall in honor of late Batman actor Adam West.

Hundreds of fans, some in costume, cheered as Mayor Eric Garcetti and Police Chief Charlie Beck switched on the iconic signal and splashed a yellow oval with a bat silhouette high up on the wall of City Hall.

West, who played the Caped Crusader in the campy 1960s TV series, died last week at 88.

"Like you, we all spent many hours in front of the TV, same bat time, same bat channel," Garcetti told the crowd.

"Adam West taught us each one of us had a heart of gold," Garcetti said. "There will never be another Batman like Adam West and there will never be another Adam West."

The mayor also led the citizens in a rendition of the TV show theme song, which consisted of playfully singing "nah-nah, nah-nah, nah-nah, nah-nah" to imitate the driving rhythm.

On display was a red Bat-Phone like the one Gotham City's Commissioner James Gordon used to chat with Batman in the TV series.

West's wife and children attended the event, Garcetti said.

Burt Ward, who played Robin on the show, called the actor a "family man."

"He loved humanity. He loved his fans," he said.

Before the lighting, people lined up to take photos with two red-and-black, sharp-finned Batmobiles parked on the sidewalk. Some wore Batman masks and others wore capes, T-shirts and hats adorned with the Batman TV logo.

Katie Aiani said she idolized West.

"I grew up watching him," the 29-year-old said. "It was my childhood."

"He's a legend," said Chad Evatt, a 30-year-old costume designer who made a Riddler costume to wear to the event. "For the longest time he was the only Batman and that's a position that commands respect."

Justin Harrison, 43, wore a Batman costume and said West was not only an actor but someone who "inspired millions."

In Their Opinion

Legislature and governor need to find common ground on state budget

Despite controlling both houses of the Legislature and the governor's office, Republicans can't seem to find common ground on the state budget, especially on the questions of funding for transportation and education. There's no reason to panic — the state will continue to function even if legislators don't pass a budget by July 1 — but continued delay and disagreement don't bode well for providing thoughtful strategic solutions to the state's most serious fiscal challenges.

Transportation is one of those challenges. With roads and bridges deteriorating and traditional transportation revenue (gas tax and registration fees) unlikely to provide the funds needed, Republicans need to come up with a sustainable strategic plan for the long term. So far, they're not even close.

Some, such as Assembly Speaker Robin Vos (R-Rochester) and Senate Majority Leader Scott Fitzgerald (R-Juneau) are at least willing to talk about alternative funding such as toll roads. Others are willing to raise the gasoline tax and registration fees.

We think what's needed is a combination: A moderate increase in the gas tax, toll roads, perhaps sales taxes, as Rep. Dale Kooyenga has suggested, perhaps a vehicle miles traveled system.

The best system would maintain the idea that users should pay for roads while ensuring a steady and sufficient stream of income from those users given the fact that vehicles are becoming ever more efficient and able to use less gasoline, the traditional source of road funding.

Sadly, Republicans can't look to the governor for help, or even a reasonable long-term plan. He would borrow more and put off some necessary major projects, such as improving the I-94 East-West Corridor through Milwaukee. That simply wastes money and kicks the can down the proverbial road to future generations. It's unfair to them and it's unfair to the businesses looking for a reliable transportation network to grow the economy.

Walker needs to take off his blinders and recognize the severity of the problem. And he needs to sit down and come to terms with Vos and Fitzgerald on a solution that can meet long-term needs.

Republicans do have urgent work to do on this budget beyond transportation, including funding for rural schools. They need to show voters that they can do their jobs in a timely manner. Failure will leave the state a lot more than a day late and a dollar short.

A gunman shoots, and we become a family

As the wife of a U.S. senator, I work hard to keep separate my marriage and my career as a newspaper columnist.

Normally, I mention my husband, Sherrod Brown, only when the disclosure is necessary or I am writing a personal essay that has nothing to do with politics.

However, on this Wednesday morning, two hours after news first broke of the shooting at a baseball practice for congressional Republicans, I am incapable of writing about anything else.

Most of the time, I live and work in Cleveland, so I am not a part of Sherrod's daily routine when he is in Washington. But as anyone who loves a member of Congress can attest, our fears — both spoken and desperately buried — unite us. From the moment the news broke, we were family.

This has been increasingly true since Jan. 8, 2011, when a gunman shot then-Rep. Gabby Giffords in the head and killed six others in a supermarket parking lot. All congressional spouses, as we're often called, can tell you where they were when they first heard about that tragedy. When something bad happens to any member of Congress or to the staff that sustains these public servants or to someone in the protective Capitol Police, political differences evaporate.

As I write, House Majority Whip Steve Scalise remains in critical condition after a gunman opened fire on a neighborhood baseball field in suburban Washington. Scalise was playing second base when he was shot. He fell to the ground and reportedly "army crawled" his way into taller grass. His teammates, all of them fellow members of Congress, dropped to the ground or ran for cover, unable to immediately help him as the gunman continued to shoot from the third-base dugout.

"There was so much gunfire you couldn't get up and run," Rep. Mike Bishop told The New York Times. "Pop, pop, pop, pop — it's a sound I'll never forget."

Connie Schultz

A bystander's video released midafternoon offers horrifying corroboration. Four others were injured, including two Capitol Police officers — heroes, both of them — a congressional aide and a lobbyist.

As we waited for updates, Republicans canceled a congressional hearing about gun legislation scheduled for that same morning. As CNN reported, the bill up for debate "would make it easier to purchase silencers, transport guns across state lines and ease restrictions on armor-piercing bullets."

I have so much to say about that, but not in this column. I understand that even my writing that will spark outrage on both sides of the debate. Usually, I weigh in, no question. Today, though, I'm a wife first and a member of the congressional family. I'm not asking for anyone's sympathy. Gun deaths are rising in many cities, including in Cleveland. By the end of this day, more people in America will have died from gun violence. None of us will ever know their names. There is so much wrong about that.

Right now, I keep thinking about the camaraderie of those congressional baseball teams. Sherrod and I had not yet married when, in 2003, I climbed into a van full of his fellow Democrats after their practice for the House baseball game, which raises hundreds of thousands of dollars for charity every year. It was a loud ride with boisterous, grass-stained men still high from two hours of reliving their boyhoods.

Their joy was infectious, on that ride home and on game day, too, when Democratic and Republican fans filled the stands for a game of Partisan Lite. My favorite moment from that particular game was when Sherrod, playing second base, looked around until he found me sitting in the eighth row. The weight of the world would return to his shoulders soon enough, but in that instant, he smiled up at me like a high-school boy who couldn't believe that his girlfriend had shown up to watch him play.

It is so easy to imagine that same light-heartedness in those Republican congressmen as they gathered at 6:30 Wednesday morning and shuffled onto the field at Eugene Simpson Stadium Park in Alexandria, Virginia — past their prime, maybe, but not over their dreams.

A half-hour later, the gunfire started.

At 8:49 a.m., Gabby Giffords tweeted: "My heart is with my former colleagues, their families & staff, and the US Capitol Police — public servants and heroes today and every day."

We were waiting to hear from her, many of us in the congressional family. We needed her, I hope you can understand.

and while people always talk about how great it would be to include young people, it usually doesn't actually happen.

“One woman even said to me, ‘You know, this is a really expensive conference and your presentation made it worth the price of admission.’” Klemme said.

Klemme said one of the points Guenard and Herlevi made regarding the importance of youth involvement was that when they return to Hurley in the future, they will always be able to point at the trailhead and say they had a hand in designing it.

Herlevi said while it was her first time presenting at an international conference, she was surprised to learn not everyone had successfully engaged youth as much as Iron County has.

“I was really surprised how (the others groups) were presenting on how to get youth involved, and some of them were doing longitudinal studies on how to get youth involved and what makes them want to be involved,” she said. “And here Neil is — we go up and present and we have youth there. Start to finish, youth was involved and this was the final product. That was really impressive. I just assumed everybody else did the things Neil did, and they don't.”

Klemme said the opportunities for students presented in projects like the first impression trips — where students visit a community for the first time to give feedbacks on its positives and negatives — and presenting at conferences is it allows the young people to think about not only how to improve their own communities, but also each of their community’s existing strengths.

“Everybody can always come up with the negatives of their community, the things they hate. But can you help them identify the things they love about it, because most kids like their community, so how do we connect them to the positives rather than the negatives,” Klemme said.

He argued the trip also benefits the students individually, giving them new experiences and allowing them to network and build social capital.

“The increase in social capital gives people more power. I think giving young people these opportunities ... gives them more clout and more influence,” Klemme said. “Those connections to adults are things they can use in everyday life, I write a lot of recommendations but I think it's beyond that ... kids are really taken seriously from participating in things like this.”

One example of this social capital was an invitation to address an upcoming conference in Missouri that came as a result of the conference.

In addition to attending the conference, the group explored the surrounding area — including Bozeman, Mont., to see how the city incorporates its natural assets.

“They really promote their natural assets, and I thought that was a good connection to what we do and the trail work we’re doing, connecting young people to the assets they have here,” Klemme said.

“We had fun too. We got to go to Yellowstone for the day, and cruise around Yellowstone. They ran out of compact cars, so they gave us that really nice Dodge Challenger,” Klemme joked. “Tuesday, it snowed all day.”

Experts to discuss tsunami warning system for Great Lakes

ANN ARBOR (AP) — Experts are meeting in Ann Arbor this week to discuss a tsunami warning system for the Great Lakes.

Scientists say tsunamis happen on the lakes, although many are too small to notice. In fact, the lakes average 106 such events a year.

In the oceans, tsunamis are caused by earthquakes. Great Lakes tsunamis result from rapid changes in barometric pressure associated with fast-moving weather systems. Scientists call them “meteotsunamis.” In some cases, people standing on piers or swimming along shorelines have been swept to their deaths.

Meteotsunamis also can cause sudden drops in water levels that endanger nuclear power plants’ cooling systems.

The University of Michigan’s Cooperative Institute for Great Lakes Research is hosting a meeting from Monday through Wednesday where experts will consider a system for warning the public.

Compound from chickens used to improve fish farms

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — University researchers are using oil that comes from a gland on chickens' tails to improve survival at fish farms in a discovery that could have global implications for the Atlantic salmon industry.

University of Wisconsin-Madison researchers discovered the oil has anti-inflammatory properties, Wisconsin Public Radio reported.

University animal science professor Mark Cook knew from previous research that another anti-inflammatory compound boosted fish growth. He contacted university senior scientist Terence Barry and they ran a test using fathead minnows where they saw an increase in growth.

“During the experiment all the fish getting the oil survived and many or most of the fish on the control treatments died and that happened with different stressors in different experiments,” Barry said.

Researchers believe the oil allows fish to focus energy that's otherwise spent fighting off infections and parasites in their gut into growth development. It also improves their chances of survival in stressful situations.

“So, by eliminating that or reducing it, that energy that would normally go to fighting something you don't really have, goes to growth,” Barry said.

The oil, which they've named cosajaba, could have a global impact on the Atlantic salmon industry, Barry said. The industry loses hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of fish when they're moved between tanks, vaccinated and transition from fresh water to saltwater.

The oil could also be used to domesticate wild fish like wall-eye and allow them to be farmed, Barry said.

US Supreme Court could take up fight over electoral maps

WASHINGTON (AP) — In an era of deep partisan division, the Supreme Court could soon decide whether the drawing of electoral districts can be too political.

A dispute over Wisconsin’s Republican-drawn boundaries for the state legislature offers Democrats some hope of cutting into GOP electoral majorities across the United States. Election law experts say the case is the best chance yet for the high court to put limits on what lawmakers may do to gain a partisan advantage in creating political district maps.

The justices could say as early as Monday whether they will intervene.

The Constitution requires states to redo their political maps to reflect population changes identified in the once-a-decade census. The issue of gerrymandering — creating districts that often are oddly shaped and with the aim of benefiting one party — is centuries old. The term comes from a Massachusetts state Senate district that resembled a salamander and was approved in 1812 by Massachusetts Gov. Elbridge Gerry.

Both parties have sought the largest partisan edge when they control redistricting. Yet Democrats are more supportive of having courts rein in extreme districting plans, mainly because Republicans control more legislatures and drew districts after the 2010 census that enhanced their advantage in those states and in the U.S. House of Representatives.

In the Wisconsin case, a federal court struck down the districts as unconstitutional in November, finding they were drawn to unfairly minimize the influence of Democratic voters.

The challengers to the Wisconsin districts say it is an extreme example of redistricting that has led to ever-increasing polarization in American politics because so few districts are genuinely competitive between the parties. In these safe seats, incumbents tend to be more concerned about primary challengers, so they try to appeal mostly to their party’s base.

“If the court is not willing to draw a line here, it would suggest the court is unlikely ever to feel comfortable setting a limit,” said Richard Pildes, an election law expert at New York University’s law school.

Defenders of the Wisconsin plan argue that the election results it produced are similar to those under earlier court-drawn maps. They say the federal court overstepped its bounds and judges should stay out of an inherently political exercise.

Trump attorney says president not under investigation

WASHINGTON (AP) — A member of the president’s outside legal team said Sunday that Donald Trump is not under federal investigation, days after Trump appeared to confirm he was with a tweet about being the target of a “witch hunt.”

Appearing on a series of morning news programs, attorney Jay Sekulow repeatedly stressed that “the president has not been and is not under investigation.” He said a Friday tweet from Trump was specifically directed at a story in The Washington Post about the expanding probe into Russia’s election meddling.

As evidence, Sekulow said that Trump has not been notified of any investigation. He also cited the testimony from former FBI Director James Comey before the Senate intelligence committee, in which Comey said he had told Trump he was not under investigation in the months leading up to his May 9 firing.

Asked about the possibility that an investigation has since developed and the president just does not know, Sekulow said: “I can’t read people’s minds, but I can tell you this, we have not been notified that there’s an investigation to the president of the United States. So that — nothing has changed in that regard since James Comey’s testimony.”

The Post reported last week that Robert Mueller — the special counsel appointed to investigate Russian involvement in the 2016 presidential election — was looking into whether Trump obstructed justice. Mueller was appointed by Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein and has expansive powers to probe any matters that develop from his initial investigation.

The president wrote on Twitter Friday: “I am being investigated for firing the FBI Director by the man who told me to fire the FBI Director! Witch Hunt.”

“Witch hunt” has become Trump’s preferred phrase to dismiss the probe into Russian election interference. The message apparently referred to Rosenstein, whose role leading the federal investigation has become increasingly complicated. The White House used a memo he wrote to justify Trump’s decision to fire Comey, but Trump’s firing of the FBI director may now be part of the probe.

The president has denied that he has any nefarious ties to Russia and has also disputed that he’s attempted to block the investigation into his campaign’s possible role in Russia’s election-related hacking.

The president has directed some of his frustration at Rosenstein and Mueller. Sen. Marco Rubio said Sunday that he does not expect Trump to seek to fire them.

“I don’t believe it’s going to happen,” said Rubio on CNN’s “State of the Union.” “The best thing that could happen for the president, and the country, is a full and credible investigation.”

Trump is under pressure to reveal whether he has any tape recordings of private conversations with Comey. Rep. Adam Schiff, the top Democrat on the House intelligence committee, said that the panel — overseeing one of several congressional investigations — is looking forward to getting a response from the White House on whether recordings exist.

The president suggested on Twitter that he may have taped those conversations. Schiff said he wants the White House to acknowledge the tapes or make clear there are no tapes and “it was an idle threat.”

The committee sent a bipartisan letter this month to White House counsel Don McGahn seeking an answer by this Friday. It also sent a letter to Comey asking for any notes or memos. Schiff said if the panel can’t get an answer then he believes a subpoena will be needed.

Schiff also said he believes recent congressional testimony from Comey and Attorney General Jeff Sessions points to signs of possible obstruction by Trump that warrant further investigation. Schiff cited the fact that the president at one meeting “cleared the room” of advisers and asked to speak to Comey alone. Comey testified to Congress that Trump then asked him to back off the investigation into his fired national security adviser, Michael Flynn.

“That signifies this president knew all too well that it was inappropriate,” Schiff said.

And Senate intelligence committee member Sen. Angus King, an independent from Maine, stressed that the probe will likely last for a long time. King said the “collusion, the cooperation aspect of the investigation is not over.” He added: “A lot of people have said, ‘When do you think you’ll be done?’ Maybe the end of the year. This is a very complex matter, involving thousands of pages of intelligence documents, lots of witnesses. There’s a lot of information yet to go.”

While aides have advised Trump to stay off Twitter, the president continued to weigh in Sunday as he spent the weekend at Camp David, the government-owned presidential retreat in Maryland.

In a two-part tweet posted before 7 a.m., Trump wrote: “The MAKE AMERICA GREAT AGAIN agenda is doing very well despite the distraction of the Witch Hunt.”

Sekulow appeared on NBC’s “Meet the Press,” CNN’s “State of the Union,” CBS’s “Face the Nation” and “Fox News Sunday” on Fox. Rubio spoke on NBC, CNN and CBS. Schiff spoke on ABC’s “This Week” and King spoke on NBC.

In Georgia, a key US Congressional race comes down to its final days

DORAVILLE, Ga. (AP) — Dr. Nadine Becker wasn’t politically involved until she saw Donald Trump elected president, but the suburban Atlanta gynecologist didn’t know how to engage, given her traditionally Republican surroundings.

“I was yelling at the TV and throwing things at the TV,” recalls the 55-year-old mother of three. Then she found her cause in 30-year-old Democrat Jon Ossoff, who is aiming for a major upset in Georgia’s 6th Congressional District runoff Tuesday against Republican Karen Handel.

With a potential price tag exceeding $50 million, the most expensive House race in U.S. history has become a proxy for the nation’s political divides, offering another early test for Trump and the GOP’s monopoly in Washington. And it gives Democrats a chance to prove they can flip at least 24 GOP-held seats and reclaim a House majority in the 2018 midterm elections.

“My values are being threatened,” Becker said, mentioning health care access, abortion rights and voting rights, “and now we have something we can do.”

Business owners Brian Sleeth and Dave McCleary are equally appalled, but for reasons that leave them backing Handel.

“This is about who will support Donald Trump and his agenda,” says Sleeth, a 37-year-old landscaper from Johns Creek, Georgia. “Karen Handel says she will, and we look forward to holding her accountable.”

For McCleary, 58, it’s less about Trump. The Roswell, Georgia, resident sees Ossoff as a charlatan, campaigning as a moderate but certain to become a marionette of his national party.

“He’s a phony. I think he’s been coached up,” says McCleary, arguing Handel would cast reliably conservative votes.

Those are some of the rationales that could ultimately settle what both campaigns agree will be a close race, despite Republicans holding the seat since 1979 with representatives from Newt Gingrich, the eventual House speaker, to Price. The seat opened in February when Price resigned to become Trump’s health and human service secretary.

Ossoff, who led April’s first round but fell shy of outright victory, gamely insisted that “this is about the folks right here in Georgia.”

Handel, 55, said it’s about choosing her record as Georgia secretary of state and commission chairman of the state’s most populous county over the resume of a former congressional staffer and documentary filmmaker who’s never held public office.

“My opponent likes to talk about it,” she says. “I’ve done it.”

But the national attention — and all the money — tells another story. And the attention is all the more intense given Republicans held on to House seats in Montana and Kansas earlier this spring and are expected to hold a South Carolina seat on Tuesday.

Ossoff’s television ads mostly frame him as a centrist who criticizes both parties in Washington for “wasteful spending” and promises to focus on developing metro Atlanta’s economy. He’s also taken aim at Handel as a “career politician” and an executive for the Susan G. Komen Foundation when the organization threatened to cut off funding for Planned Parenthood, a health care and abortion provider.

But he’s financed that message with a fundraising haul from outside the district, and his donor list contains far more addresses from California, New York and Massachusetts than from Georgia.

For Handel, Ossoff’s “values are 3,000 miles away in San Francisco,” the hometown of House Democratic leader Nancy Pelosi. But Handel also has benefited from millions in out-of-state spending. A political action committee backed by House Speaker Paul Ryan spent $7 million on her behalf, and the GOP’s House campaign committee about $4.5 million.

Despite their emphasis on local matters, the candidates have generally aligned with their national parties on policy. She says she’d have voted for the House GOP health care bill; he says he’d have opposed it. She broadly endorsed Trump’s loose outlines for tax cuts; he’s said any plan must be “fiscally responsible.” He supports a higher minimum wage, with caveats; she’s opposed.

Brooks Koepka caps record week with US Open title

ERIN, Wis. (AP) — Brooks Koepka received a short piece of advice from a valuable source on the eve of the final round at the U.S. Open.

Defending champion Dustin Johnson was doing most of the talking.

“It was a long phone call for us — it was like two minutes,” Koepka said. “But he just said a few things, and just stay patient. And I’ll win if I stay patient and just keep doing what I’m doing.”

What he did looked awfully familiar Sunday at Erin Hills, minus any mess involving the rules.

With athleticism and power, and four straight putts over the back nine that allowed him to pull away, Koepka capped off his hardscrabble journey around the world and found stardom at home as the U.S. Open champion.

He closed with a 5-under 67, only realizing after his par on the final hole that a birdie would have set yet another U.S. Open record in a week filled with them.

Koepka finished at 16-under 272, matching the lowest score to par first set by Rory McIlroy six years ago at Congressional.

Tied for the lead with six holes to play, Koepka holed an 8-foot par putt on the 13th hole that gave him confidence with his stroke and momentum to pour in birdies on the next three holes to turn the final hour into a celebration of another young star in golf.

The 27-year-old Koepka wound up winning by four shots over Brian Harman, who was done in by back-to-back bogeys right when Koepka was making his run, and Hideki Matsuyama, who closed with a 66.

“That’s probably the most emotion I’ve ever shown coming down the stretch,” Koepka said. “It feels amazing to get my name on this trophy with so many other great names. It’s truly an honor.”

Emotion? The most he displayed was a light fist pump, his hand clenched a little tighter with each birdie, and a double fist pump on the 18th when he tapped in for par.

It’s not much different from Johnson.

They are close friends on the golf course and in the gym, and they play a similar game of power off the tee, a clean strike with the iron and a knack for looking calm even as the pressure is ramping up.

And now their names are on the U.S. Open trophy, one after the other.

It capped quite a journey for the Floridian. Without a card on any tour when Koepka got out of Florida State, he filled his passport on the Challenge Tour with stamps from Kazakhstan to Kenya, Scotland and Spain, India and the Madeira Island.

One night in Scotland, he called his agent and wanted to come home, even though he was leading the tournament. He had been on the road for so long, in so many different countries, and was feeling lonely. He won the next day to graduate to the European Tour. The next year, he earned a spot in the U.S. Open through a qualifier in England, and his tie for fourth at Pinehurst No. 2 helped him earn a card on the PGA Tour.

Koepka took it from there — a victory in Turkey against a strong field, his first PGA Tour victory in the Phoenix Open, his first Ryder Cup and now a major championship.

“To go over there, I think it helped me grow up a little bit and really figure out that, hey, play golf, get it done, and then you can really take this somewhere,” he said.

Koepka became the seventh straight first-time winner of a major championship, and it was the first time since 1998-2000 that Americans won their national championship three straight years.

Tommy Fleetwood, who played alongside Koepka and closed with a 72 to finish fourth, played the Challenge Tour a year before Koepka arrived.

“It gives you a good grounding,” Fleetwood said. “Obviously, Brooks dealt with it amazingly. He came and kicked everyone’s (behind) over there, didn’t he? But he’s proven for a long time how good he is. Now he’s done it in a major.”

It was only fitting that Koepka left Erin Hills with yet another record matched or broken.

McIlroy finished at 16-under 268 when he won on rain-softened Congressional in the 2011 U.S. Open. But the low scoring went much deeper than that. Only six players had ever reached double digits under par in the previous 116 times at the U.S. Open. McIlroy and Tiger Woods (12 under at Pebble Beach in 2000) had been the only players to finish there.

This week alone, nine players reached at least 10 under and seven finished there.

Xander Schauffele, a rookie on the PGA Tour playing in his first U.S. Open, birdied his last hole for a 69 to tie for fifth at 10-under 268 along with Bill Haas (69) and Rickie Fowler (72), who was poised at yet another major to win only to fall back. Fowler started one shot out of the lead at the Masters this year and shot 76. He was only two behind when he made the turn, but bogeys on the 12th

Emotion? The most he displayed was a light fist pump, his hand clenched a little tighter with each birdie, and a double fist pump on the 18th when he tapped in for par.

It’s not much different from Johnson.

They are close friends on the golf course and in the gym, and they play a similar game of power off the tee, a clean strike with the iron and a knack for looking calm even as the pressure is ramping up.

And now their names are on the U.S. Open trophy, one after the other.

It capped quite a journey for the Floridian. Without a card on any tour when Koepka got out of Florida State, he filled his passport on the Challenge Tour with stamps from Kazakhstan to Kenya, Scotland and Spain, India and the Madeira Island.

One night in Scotland, he called his agent and wanted to come home, even though he was leading the tournament. He had been on the road for so long, in so many different countries, and was feeling lonely. He won the next day to graduate to the European Tour. The next year, he earned a spot in the U.S. Open through a qualifier in England, and his tie for fourth at Pinehurst No. 2 helped him earn a card on the PGA Tour.

Koepka took it from there — a victory in Turkey against a strong field, his first PGA Tour victory in the Phoenix Open, his first Ryder Cup and now a major championship.

“To go over there, I think it helped me grow up a little bit and really figure out that, hey, play golf, get it done, and then you can really take this somewhere,” he said.

Koepka became the seventh straight first-time winner of a major championship, and it was the first time since 1998-2000 that Americans won their national championship three straight years.

Tommy Fleetwood, who played alongside Koepka and closed with a 72 to finish fourth, played the Challenge Tour a year before Koepka arrived.

“It gives you a good grounding,” Fleetwood said. “Obviously, Brooks dealt with it amazingly. He came and kicked everyone’s (behind) over there, didn’t he? But he’s proven for a long time how good he is. Now he’s done it in a major.”

It was only fitting that Koepka left Erin Hills with yet another record matched or broken.

McIlroy finished at 16-under 268 when he won on rain-softened Congressional in the 2011 U.S. Open. But the low scoring went much deeper than that. Only six players had ever reached double digits under par in the previous 116 times at the U.S. Open. McIlroy and Tiger Woods (12 under at Pebble Beach in 2000) had been the only players to finish there.

This week alone, nine players reached at least 10 under and seven finished there.

Xander Schauffele, a rookie on the PGA Tour playing in his first U.S. Open, birdied his last hole for a 69 to tie for fifth at 10-under 268 along with Bill Haas (69) and Rickie Fowler (72), who was poised at yet another major to win only to fall back. Fowler started one shot out of the lead at the Masters this year and shot 76. He was only two behind when he made the turn, but bogeys on the 12th and 15th holes — and no birdies until No. 18 — ended his hopes.

Justin Thomas, coming off a 9-under 63 that matched the major championship scoring record and was the first 9-under round at a U.S. Open, went out in 39 and closed with a 75 to tie for ninth.

The week ended with 31 players under par, breaking the U.S. Open record of 28 players at Medinah in 1990. There were 133 sub-par rounds, nine more than the previous record in that 1990 U.S. Open.

Barno wins third straight Grandma’s Marathon in Duluth

DULUTH, Minn. — Kenya’s Elisha Barno showed why he wore the No. 1 on his chest as he won the 41st Grandma’s Marathon Saturday.

The 31-year-old, two-time defending champion won an unprecedented third straight, crossing the finish line in 2 hours, 12 minutes and 6 seconds on a sunny, sometimes-muggy and nearly windless morning.

Barno won the 2015 race in 2:10:38 and claimed the 2016 title in 2:11:26. His personal best is a 2:09:45 in Slovakia in 2013.

The 26.2-mile course runs along North Shore, mainly along Minnesota Highway 61 from Two Harbors to Duluth.

Hellen Jepkurgat of Kenya held off Askale Merachi of Ethiopia down the Canal Park straightaway to win the women’s race.

Jepkurgat, 36, who won the Los Angeles Marathon earlier this year, was timed in 2:32:09. That was about a minute slower than Jepkurgat’s personal record set in the Rennes (France) Marathon in 2016.

Kenyan Evans Kurui and Ethiopian Biruktayit Degefa won the men’s and women’s Garry Bjorklund Half Marathon titles.

University of Illinois athletes long have dominated the wheelchair marathon, and that was the case again Saturday.

Aaron Pike edged Illinois teammate and three-time former winner Joshua George by less than the length of a wheel to capture the men’s race, while Amanda McGrory beat another Illinois racer, Susannah Scaroni, by the same distance to win her eighth Grandma’s women’s title.

AP source: 76ers, Celtics agree on trade for No. 1 pick

AP - Philadelphia and Boston have agreed in principle on a trade where the 76ers would acquire the chance to take Markelle Fultz with the No. 1 pick in Thursday’s NBA Draft, a person with knowledge of the deal told The Associated Press.

The Celtics will get the No. 3 pick, plus an additional first-round in either 2018 or 2019, according to the person who spoke on condition of anonymity Saturday night because the trade has not been formally approved by the league. The agreement between the Celtics and 76ers was struck not long after Fultz worked out for Philadelphia on Saturday evening.

Once the trade goes through, Philadelphia will own the NBA’s No. 1 selection for the second straight season.

Fultz — donning a Philadelphia cap as he arrived at the team’s practice facility — visited the 76ers in a hastily arranged get-to-know-you session, with the workout and meeting with team officials on his itinerary. That visit was essentially the final hurdle to clear before Boston and Philadelphia could decide to actually consummate the trade.

“I don’t really pay attention to everything that’s going on,” Fultz said. “I’m truly blessed to be in this position. Whatever happens, I’m looking forward to taking my talents to wherever I go.”

Barring any other changes before Thursday, the first four spots in this year’s draft order would mirror the first-four from last year: Philadelphia at No. 1, the Los Angeles Lakers at No. 2, Boston at No. 3 and Phoenix at No. 4.

Fultz’s rise to stardom has been rapid. In 2014, he was playing junior varsity basketball in high school. Barely three years later, he’s almost certainly going to become the No. 1 pick in the NBA draft — and if he gets to start his pro career by calling Philadelphia his new home, he’ll be living roughly a 2 1/2-hour drive from his hometown of Upper Marlboro, Maryland.

“It would be pretty cool. Just being with a young team,” Fultz said. “The upside of it would be crazy. I’m close to home, so a lot of my family can come out and just show love. This city has great fans.”

The 6-foot-4 guard averaged 23.2 points, 5.7 rebounds and 5.9 assists in 25 games during his lone college season at Washington, excelling on a team that finished 9-22 and lost its final 13 games. Fultz led the Pac-12 in scoring and finished No. 6 among all Division I players, and was the top freshman scorer in the country.

Over the past 10 seasons, only two other freshmen had a better scoring average in college: Kevin Durant for Texas in 2006-07, and Michael Beasley for Kansas State in 2007-08.

Durant and Beasley were both No. 2 draft picks.

Fultz is apparently going to get taken one spot better. “I’ll do whatever it takes to help any team I go to win,” Fultz said.

Philadelphia had the No. 1 draft spot three previous times, taking Doug Collins in 1973, Allen Iverson in 1996 and Ben Simmons a year ago.

The 76ers have a top-three pick for the fourth straight year: No. 3 Joel Embiid in 2014, No. 3 Jahliil Okafor in 2015 and Simmons in 2016. But with Fultz, Philadelphia — which has asked its fans to endure some very dismal stretches and “Trust The Process” for the past few years — would likely expect to turn a real corner toward respectability again.

Nelson pitches 1st complete game, Brewers nip Padres 2-1

MILWAUKEE (AP) — With a tired Brewers bullpen in dire need of a break, Jimmy Nelson carried the load all by himself Sunday.

Nelson struck out 10 in his first career complete game and Milwaukee got home runs from Hernan Perez and Manny Pina in a 2-1 victory over the San Diego Padres.

“This is a guy picking everybody up and giving those guys a day off,” Brewers manager Craig Counsell said. “That’s what you need some days. That’s what big-time performance does — not only wins you the game, but gives guys rest.”

Counsell said closer Corey

Knebel and relievers Oliver Drake and Jared Hughes were not available because they needed a breather.

Nelson (5-3) allowed six hits and two walks while throwing 118 pitches in his 89th major league start. He gave up only an unearned run and lowered his ERA to 3.28.

Nelson (5-3) allowed six hits and two walks while throwing 118 pitches in his 89th major league start. He lowered his ERA to 3.39.

“I’ve gone seven-plus or eight a couple of times, but that ninth inning definitely is nice,” Nelson said. “Counsell showed confidence in letting us go deep.”

Leading off the sixth, Perez hit his 10th home run into the Brewers’ bullpen off starter Luis Perdomo (1-4). One batter later, Pina connected on a 1-2 pitch for his fourth of the season to give Milwaukee a 2-1 lead.

Perdomo gave up eight hits and two walks with four strikeouts in six innings. He was helped by three double plays in the first five innings.

“He was in trouble in the first, the second, the third, the fifth,” Padres manager Andy Green said. “He navigated a lot of trouble today. Some good defense behind him.”

Perdomo has lasted at least six innings in four of his last five starts.

“I did pretty well,” he said. “I was just trying to be aggressive with my pitches and get some double plays, which I did.”

San Diego scored in the fifth after Cory Spangenberg reached on an infield single and advanced to second on Nelson’s throwing error. Erick Aybar hit an RBI single.

HOMER HAPPY

There were 17 home runs in the three-game series, nine hit by the Brewers. They have scored their last 15 runs on homers.

MILWAUKEE BREWERS starting pitcher Jimmy Nelson reacts after his team’s victory over the San Diego Padres in a baseball game Sunday in Milwaukee.

Larson outlasts Elliott at Michigan again

BROOKLYN, Mich. (AP) — Three times, Kyle Larson needed to outrace the rest of the contenders on late restarts.

That’s a task he’s proven he can handle at Michigan International Speedway.

Larson took control on a restart with five laps remaining and held off Chase Elliott on Sunday for his second NASCAR Cup Series victory of the season. The finish was similar to the race at Michigan last August, when Larson took the lead on a restart with nine laps left en route to his first Cup win.

Larson won this year at Fontana and has five second-place finishes. He also was second in the All-Star race, which doesn’t count in the standings.

Boyfriend moving in may spell disaster

Dear Annie: All the advice columns I've read recommend not moving in together before marriage — or at least not before you and your partner have been dating for a year.

I get the logic behind that, but in real life, things rarely follow a perfect timeline.

In my case, my boyfriend of six months, "Michael," has to move out of his house because his landlord is selling it.

Dear Annie

He has two months to find another place. We think it makes the most sense for him to move in with me.

My apartment is plenty big. We'd both save money.

We get along great and spend so much time together as it is.

Sure, I always thought I would wait a year before moving in with someone, too.

But Michael and I have a great thing going. We have off-the-charts romantic chemistry, and we're very compatible as friends. We've never even had a fight.

We have discussed our living styles and think we would make good roommates.

We're both in our mid-20s. What do you think?

And please, with all due respect, I don't want to hear that "why buy the cow" line.

I'm not writing to you for a lecture on marriage. — Roommates-to-Be

Dear Roommates: Imagine a house that has no foundation but just sits atop the dirt.

It may have been carefully constructed, with sturdy wooden walls and a dazzling slate roof.

But when a hurricane blows through and there's nothing keeping the whole thing grounded, how long do you think that house will last?

No matter how great your chemistry with Michael, you don't deeply know each other.

No matter how sunny things are now, storms will appear on the horizon eventually. (By the way, I wouldn't be so proud about never having had a fight. It's healthy to have conflicts in close relationships.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) — You'll be put in a vulnerable position if you don't choose your words wisely. Your charm will open doors, but living up to your promises will keep them open.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Don't get worked up over nothing. Erratic behavior will lead to trouble, while carefully considered ideas will help you get what you want and stabilize your life. Use your intelligence.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Stay focused on what and who is important to you. A personal change will make you feel good about your future. Look for innovative ways to get fit and to stay healthy.

Suspected jihadists attack popular resort in Mali’s capital

BAMAKO, Mali (AP) — Suspected jihadists attacked a hotel resort Sunday in Mali’s capital, taking hostages at a spot popular with foreigners on the weekends. The number of casualties was unclear in the assault, which continued into the evening, authorities said.

Gunfire first rang out at the Campement Kangaba on the outskirts of Bamako in the late afternoon, according to a security official with the U.N. mission known as MINUSMA. The official spoke on condition of anonymity because he was not authorized to talk to reporters.

“I heard gunfire coming from the camp and I saw people running out of the site,” said Modibo Diarra, who lives nearby. “I learned that it was a terrorist attack.”

Malian soldiers later succeeded in entering the resort area, according to Commandant Modibo Traore, a spokesman for the Malian special forces in the former French colony.

“The operation is ongoing,” he said, estimating there were three or four assailants.

As night fell, witnesses saw smoke rising from the Campement Kangaba, which features three swimming pools and is a popular escape from the Malian heat. It was not immediately clear what was burning, although jihadists in other attacks have set cars ablaze.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility for the attack, which came amid the final week of the Muslim holy month of Ramadan. In predominantly Muslim Mali, people have been fasting from sunrise to sundown for three weeks.

Sunday’s violence came about a week after the U.S. State Department warned of possible attacks on Western diplomatic missions and other locations in Bamako that Westerners frequent.

The U.N. official said those at the resort when the attack began included people affiliated with the French military mission as well as the U.N. and European Union missions in the country.

Religious extremism in Mali once was limited to northern areas, prompting the French military in 2013 to lead a military operation to oust jihadists from power in the major towns. But the militants have continued targeting Malian forces and peacekeepers, making it the deadliest U.N. mission in the world.

There are no French troops based in Bamako, but about 2,000 French troops are based in northern Mali fighting Islamic extremists.

French President Emmanuel Macron was informed about the attack and was following the events carefully, according to an official in his office.

In recent years, the jihadists have become even more brazen, attacking sites frequented by Westerners. In March 2015, five people died when militants hit a popular restaurant in the capital. A devastating attack on the Radisson Blu Hotel in Bamako later that year left 20 dead — six Malians and 14 foreigners.

That attack was jointly claimed by both the regional al-Qaida affiliate and a group known as Al Mourabitoun, which was founded by Moktar Belmoktar after he fell out with al-Qaida leaders.

US shoots down Syrian Air Force fighter

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. military on Sunday shot down a Syrian Air Force fighter jet that bombed local forces aligned with the Americans in the fight against Islamic State militants, an action that appeared to mark a new escalation of the conflict.

The U.S.-led coalition headquarters in Iraq said in a written statement that a U.S. F-18 Super Hornet shot down a Syrian government SU-22 after it dropped bombs near the U.S. partner forces, known as the Syrian Democratic Forces. The shoot-down was near the Syrian town of Tabqa.

The U.S. military statement said it acted in “collective self defense” of its partner forces and that the U.S. did not seek a fight with the Syrian government or its Russian supporters.

U.S. forces tangled earlier this month with Syria-allied aircraft in the region. On June 8, U.S. officials reported that a drone likely connected to Iranian-supported Hezbollah forces fired on U.S.-backed troops and was shot down by an American fighter jet. The incident took place in southern Syria near a base where the U.S.-led coalition was training Syrian rebels fighting the Islamic State group.

An Army spokesman at the Pentagon said at the time that the drone carried more weapons and was considered a direct threat, prompting the shoot-down.

Just hours earlier, the U.S. bombed Syrian government and allied troops inside a protected zone in that area, and marked a sharp escalation in the skirmishes between the coalition and those pro-Syrian government forces there.

Forest fire kills 61 in Portugal; search on for more bodies

PEDROGAO GRANDE, Portugal (AP) — A raging forest fire in central Portugal killed at least 61 people as they desperately tried to flee, charring cars and trucks as it swept over roads. The disaster — the worst tragedy Portugal has experienced in decades — shook the nation, with the president declaring that the country’s pain “knows no end.”

Almost 24 hours after the deaths Saturday night, fires were still churning across the forested hillsides of central Portugal. Police and firefighters were searching charred areas of the forest and isolated homes, looking for more bodies.

“It is a time of pain but also ... a time to carry on the fight” against the flames, President Marcelo Rebelo de Sousa told the nation in a televised address Sunday evening after the government declared three days of national mourning.

A huge wall of thick smoke and bright red flames towered over the tops of trees in the forested Pedrogao Grande area, 95 miles northeast of Lisbon where a lightning strike was believed to have sparked the blaze Saturday. Investigators found a tree that was hit during a “dry thunderstorm,” the head of the national judicial police said.

Dry thunderstorms are frequent when falling water evaporates before reaching the ground because of high temperatures. Portugal is prone to forest fires in the dry summer months and temperatures as high as 40 degrees Celsius (104 Fahrenheit) hit the area in recent days.

At least four other significant wildfires were burning Sunday elsewhere in Portugal but the one in Pedrogao Grande was responsible for all the deaths.

“The dimensions of this fire have caused a human tragedy beyond any in our memory,” said Prime Minister Antonio Costa told reporters as he arrived at the scene Sunday. “Something extraordinary has taken place and we have to wait for experts to properly determine its causes.”

He said the death toll was lowered to 61 from 62 because one person had been counted twice.

Search for 7 Navy sailors ends after bodies found on ship

YOKOSUKA, Japan (AP) — The U.S. Navy has identified the seven sailors who died when their destroyer collided with a container ship off Japan on Saturday.

Seven crew members were unaccounted for after the collision flooded berths with seawater. Navy divers recovered the bodies after the severely damaged USS Fitzgerald returned to a Navy base in Yokosuka, Japan, aided by tugboats.

The Japan-based 7th Fleet identified the victims today as Gunner’s Mate Seaman Dakota Kyle Rigsby, 19, from Palmyra, Virginia; Yeoman 3rd Class Shingo Alexander Douglass, 25, from San Diego, California; Sonar Technician 3rd Class Ngoc T. Truong Huynh, 25, from Oakville, Connecticut; Gunner’s Mate 2nd Class Noe Hernandez, 26, from Weslaco, Texas; Fire Controlman 2nd Class Carlosvictor Ganzon Sibayan, 23, from Chula Vista, California; Personnel Specialist 1st Class Xavier Alec Martin, 24, from Halethorpe, Maryland; and Fire Controlman 1st Class Gary Leo Rehm Jr., 37, from Elyria, Ohio.

Earlier, the mother of a U.S. Navy sailor who survived a direct hit to his sleeping berth during a collision at sea said her son kept diving to try to save his shipmates until the flooded berth began running out of air pockets, while others — believing the ship was under attack — hurried to man the guns.

Mia Sykes of Raleigh, North Carolina, told The Associated Press on Sunday that her 19-year-old son, Brayden Harden, was knocked out of his bunk by the impact, and water immediately began filling the berth, after their destroyer, the USS Fitzgerald, collided with a Philippine-flagged container ship four times its size off the Japanese coast.

The ships collided about 2:20 a.m. Saturday, when the Navy said most of the 300 sailors on board would have been sleeping, and authorities have declined to speculate on a cause while the crash remains under investigation.

Sykes says her son told her that four men in his berth, including those sleeping on bunks above and below him died, while three died in the berth above him.

“They did what they were trained to do,” said Sykes, who said she hopes her son, from Heroin, Illinois, can come home to be with family as he works through

Associated Press

A DAMAGED USS Fitzgerald is docked at a U.S. Naval base in Yokosuka, southwest of Tokyo, Sunday. Navy divers found seven sailors’ bodies Sunday aboard the destroyer that collided with a container ship in the busy sea off Japan.

what happened. “You have to realize most of them are 18, 19 and 20-year-olds living with guilt. But I told him, ‘There’s a reason you’re still here and make that count.’ “

Vice Adm. Joseph Aucoin, the commander of the Navy’s 7th Fleet, also described a harrowing scene as other sailors fought to keep the ship from sinking. Most of the damage is below the waterline, including a large gash near the keel, Aucoin said.

“So the water flow was tremendous, and so there wasn’t a lot of time in those spaces that were open to the sea. And as you can see now, the ship is still listing, so they had to fight the ship to keep it above the surface. It was traumatic,” Aucoin said.

The Navy called off the search for seven missing sailors Sunday after divers found a number of bodies in the ship’s flooded compartments, including sleeping quarters, Aucoin said at a news conference at the 7th Fleet’s home base in Yokosuka, Japan. He wouldn’t say how many bodies were recovered, pending notification of next of kin.

He said one machinery room and two berthing areas for 116 crew members were severely damaged from what he called a significant impact to its side. The destroyer returned to Yokosuka on Saturday evening with the help of tug boats.

The victims might have been killed by the impact of the collision or drowned in the flooding, said Navy spokesman Lt. Paul Newell, who led the media on a visit to get a firsthand look at the mangled destroyer.

“The damage was significant,” he said. “This was not a small collision.”

The Fitzgerald’s captain, Cmdr. Bryce Benson, was airlifted from the ship’s deck after daybreak Saturday to the U.S. Naval Hospital in Yokosuka with a head injury. Two other crew members suffered cuts and bruises and were also flown out by helicopter.

Aucoin wouldn’t speculate on the cause of the collision and would order a thorough investigation. Conditions were clear at the time of the collision, though the area is particularly busy with sea traffic.

The damage to the destroyer suggests that the container ship, the ACX Crystal, might have slammed into it at a high speed, raising questions about communication between the two vessels in an area where as many as 400 ships pass through every day, according to Japan’s coast guard. Most congestion occurs in the early hours of the day, and fast currents make it a tricky area that requires experience and skill to navigate.

The ACX Crystal weighs 29,060 tons and is 730 feet long, much larger than the 8,315-ton destroyer.

The container ship’s left bow was dented and scraped, but it did not appear to have sustained any major structural damage when it was docked in the Tokyo bay late Saturday.

But on Sunday, a group of accident investigators from the Japanese transport ministry found damage to the container ship that had been hidden under the waterline when it arrived in Tokyo the previous night. Footage from Japanese broadcaster NHK showed a sharp horizontal cut across the bow area, which looked like a shark’s mouth. Many scratches were also seen in the frontal area.

The container ship was seen making a U-turn before the collision on some ship trackers, a move that has raised questions about what happened. Both Aucoin and the Japanese coast guard, however, said it was too early to determine what led to the collision.

The coast guard questioned crew members of the ACX Crystal, and is treating the incident as a case of possible professional negligence, said Masayuki Obara, a regional coast guard official.

President Macron’s party dominates French parliamentary vote

PARIS (AP) — French voters gave President Emmanuel Macron’s upstart party a solid victory in Sunday’s parliamentary election, handing the centrist a strong mandate to reshape French politics and overhaul the country’s restrictive labor laws.

Polling agency projections suggested that Macron’s Republic on the Move! party could take 355 to 365 seats in the 577-seat National Assembly, the powerful lower house. That’s far more than the 289 seats needed for an absolute majority to carry out his program.

Prime Minister Edouard Philippe, a center-right politician who joined Macron’s movement, said “through their vote, a wide majority of the French have chosen hope over anger.”

With 82 percent of the vote counted, the Interior Ministry said Macron’s party had 42 percent of the vote, the conservative Republicans had 22 percent and the far-right National Front captured 10 percent. The Socialists, who ruled the nation before Macron’s independent presidential victory in May, were decimated and only won six percent of the vote.

Republicans leader Francois Baroin declared his party the main opposition and wished Macron “good luck” because he said he wants France to succeed. He said conservative lawmakers are going to have a strong bloc in the lower house to be able to voice their views.

However, some prickly opponents vowed to do their best to counter Macron’s plans.

Far-right National Front leader Marine Le Pen registered a massive victory in her northern bastion of Henin-Beaumont, defeating Macron’s candidate as she won her first French parliamentary seat. Le Pen was handily defeated by Macron in the May 7 presidential vote.

Le Pen said she would “fight with all necessary means the harmful projects of the government,” especially what she called Macron’s pro-European, pro-migrant policies. She said her National Front party had won at least six seats — with not all votes counted — an increase from the two seats it held in the outgoing legislature.

Ultra-leftist Jean-Luc Melanchon, who Macron also defeated in the presidential vote, said he won in his Marseille district. Melanchon, whose party was projected to win 25 to 30 seats, denounced Macron’s planned labor reforms that would make it easier to hire and fire French workers, calling them a “social coup d’etat” that he would fight.

Voters overall showed little enthusiasm for the election, which could see record low turnout. Experts partly blamed voter fatigue following the May election of Macron, plus voter disappointment with politics.

Confusion also played a role, according to Frederic Dabi of the IFOP polling firm. Macron’s party, which didn’t exist 14 months ago and offered novice candidates from civilian life for many seats, drew from both the left and right to fill its ranks, effectively blurring the country’s traditional political divide.

Macron’s party “vampirized” the left and right after his huge win in the presidential ballot, Dabi said on CNews TV.

After a crushing defeat, Jean-Christophe Cambadellis resigned Sunday from his post as head of the Socialist Party, which dominated the outgoing assembly but was flattened by the unpopularity of former President Francois Hollande.

He said the Socialist party needs to change its ideas and its organization and that a “collective leadership” will replace him. With its allies, the Socialists could get fewer than 50 seats after this vote, projections showed.

“Emmanuel Macron’s triumph is uncontested, the defeat of the left is unavoidable, and the defeat of the Socialist party is irrevocable,” Cambadellis said.

Across the border, German government officials appeared to be celebrating Macron’s victory. Chancellor Angela Merkel’s chief of staff, Peter Altmaier, wrote Sunday on Twitter that “France now has a strong president with a strong majority in parliament.” Altmaier added: “Good for Europe and for Germany!”
