State Rep. Young repeats call for tougher gun control measures after Waffle House shooting

Praises restaurant patron James Shaw, Jr. for heroic action disarming shooter
Compiled by MCJ Editorial Staff

State Rep. Leon Young said Sunday's tragic multiple shooting at a Nashville Waffle House reinforces the dire need for more stringent, common-sense gun control measures, including a ban on military grade semi-automatic weapons.

"The time for meaningful action on gun control legislation that aims to protect our children and the public at large is long overdue," said the representative in a recent statement on the restaurant shooting.

Travis Reinking was arrested after eye witness reports stated that he opened fire with an AR-15 rifle on a Waffle House in the Nashville neighborhood of Antioch, killing four people and injuring four others. Reports have indicated the shootings were racially motivated.

Shortly before the shooting Reinking parked his pickup truck in front of the restaurant for a few minutes, then went in and opened fire.

Reportedly, while apparently attempting to reload, James Shaw, Jr. seized the moment and came out of hiding from behind a swinging door and wrestled the weapon away from Reinking and threw it over the counter. After a short scuffle the assailant fled (naked) and was arrested Monday after a massive manhunt. According to the representative's statement, an investigation is ensuing as to whether or not Reinking was legally in possession of a fire arm.

During a news conference with law enforcement officials and the Nashville mayor some 12 hours after the shooting, his right hand bandaged, Shaw, an African American, said his actions were borne of self-preservation, adding he didn't consider himself a hero.

"When I grabbed the barrel of the weapon it was hot, but I didn't care. It was life or death," said Shaw, a 29-year-old Nashville native.

Waffle House CEO Walter Ehmer, who was also on hand, thanked Shaw for his bravery.

"You don't get to meet too many heroes in life," Ehmer said before addressing Shaw, who dabbed at tears in his eyes. "We are forever in your debt."

Shaw said that after going to a nightclub he had decided to stop with a friend early Sunday at a Waffle House. The first one he visited was too crowded with overnight patrons, so he ended up going to another in Nashville.

A personal remembrance of Vel Phillips, who led the way in so many ways

By Richard G. Carter

"My heroic struggle was over, but none was for spite. And then you are 60..." Burgess Meredith, "Hard Contract" (1969)

On a purely personal basis, I loved being around Vel Phillips, and her vivacious sense of self-deprecating humor.

I frequently mentioned this to her, and how it reminded me of her great good friend -- legendary Milwaukee news-woman, the late Mattiebelle Woods.

One of the best examples was at a picnic George Sanders and I hosted honoring Vel in the summer of 1989 at Kern Park. Among the casually dressed attendees were my wife, Janice; John and Rosa Givens and their two daughters; newsman Bill Kurtz and his wife Marge; wheelchair bound Jake Beason; Milwaukee Journal editorial page editor Dave Behrendt, Journal columnist Jay Anderson and ex-New Yorker Joe Dolan.

A jaunty, 65-year-old Vel arrived wearing a short-sleeve, white tee-shirt emblazoned "Brown Sugar" and, laughing and joking, shook every hand -- man, woman and child -- in the happy throng. She was in her element and made sure every one had a good time.

In 1994 -- a year after returning from New York -- I hosted an inside-outside party at my Northridge Lakes apartment at which Vel sparkled with conversation and byplay with Howard Fuller, Annette (Polly) Williams, Larry Harwell, The Shepherd Express's Dave Berkman; Sanders, Anderson, Michael McGee Sr. and his wife, Penelope, and my high school pals Jesse Nixon, John Givens, Gerald Payne, James Reed and Alvin Russell.

Vel and Polly amused the guests with their byplay in my kitchen over how best to make a big pot of highly seasoned stew, on which everyone was to feast.

My late mother and father -- Juanita and Sanford Carter -- always found Vel a delight when she attended a number of our often raucous family gatherings over the years. Indeed, I almost came to accept her as a member of my immediate family.

Vel's marriage to Dale Phillips, brother of my uncle, Paul Phillips -- endeared her especially to the Carters, as well as to our relatives -- the Ethel Phillips, Neil Moody, Beatrice Gee, Fernand Colin and Etna Chancellor families.

From a professional standpoint, I had several significant encounters over the years with Vel. One includes her smiling broadly as I led the questioning during her 1986-87 appearances before the Milwaukee Journal editorial board, and several lively guest shots in 1994-95 on my top-rated, controversial WNOV radio program "The Carter-McGee Report"

-- where she deftly responded to challenging calls from listeners.

When I occasionally would play a doo-wop record -- which was expected by many listeners -- Vel would sing along, delighting my co-host, ex-alderman McGee Sr.

In October 1958, Vel, at 34, received her first major, full-size national publicity in SEPIA magazine which, at the time, was giving EBONY a run for its money. Headlined "Milwaukee's First Woman Alderman" over my byline, it was accompanied by an attractive photo of her on the magazine's

BREWERS MOURN PASSING OF DAVEY NELSON

Davey Nelson

Davey Nelson, a member of the Brewers family since 2001 and a former Major League All-Star infielder, passed away earlier this week after battling a long illness.

He was 73.

"Davey took every opportunity to turn a casual introduction into a life-long relationship, and his legacy will live on in the positive impact he had on the lives of so many people," said Brewers Chief Operating Officer Rick Schlesinger.

"Davey's love of life and commitment to helping those in need were second to none, and we are so grateful for the time that we had with him. Our thoughts and prayers are with his family and all of those who loved him."

Nelson joined the Brewers in 2001 as roving minor league outfield instructor and became the Major League first base coach for the Brewers in 2003.

In 2006, he moved into a broadcasting (FOX Sports Wisconsin analyst) and front office role for the organization.

Prior to joining the Brewers, Nelson spent time with the White Sox, A's, Expos and Indians in coaching roles.

A 10-year Major League veteran, Nelson played from 1968-77 as an infielder with the Indians, Senators, Rangers and Royals. In 1973, he was an American League All-Star with Texas as he hit .286 with 43 stolen bases in 142 games.

Born in Fort Sill, Oklahoma, Nelson graduated from Junipero Serra High School in California. He attended Compton Junior College for one year and Los Angeles State College for two years. Nelson also served in the Army Reserve for six years.

Nelson served on the board of directors for Open Arms Home for Children in South Africa, an organization that serves as a home to over 50 children who are either orphaned or do not have a stable family situation.

His annual golf tournament has helped raise significant funding for the organization.

In lieu of flowers, donations to Open Arms Home for Children are suggested for those looking to honor Davey's memory. Contributions can be made online at openarms-home.com.

There will not be a formal memorial service, but a private celebration of Davey's life will be held later this spring.

WisDOT issues new Children's Hospital specialty license plate

The Children's Hospital of Wisconsin specialty license plate, featuring their blue children silhouette logo, is now available. The donations collected will go to the Children's Hospital of Wisconsin Foundation and will fund child-life programs not covered by insurance, needed supplies and equipment to advance ground breaking research, and support the latest medical equipment and tools specific for children.

Anyone may request this or any other specialty plate. The $25 tax-deductible contribution is transferred to the sponsoring organization, which is in addition to the regular registration fee, plus a one-time $15 specialty plates issuance-fee for non-personalized plates. At each annual renewal, plate holders will pay the annual $25 donation and the regular registration fee.

Children's Hospital of Wisconsin Foundation was one of the first organizations to apply through the new Authorized Special Group license plate process, which began October 1, 2016 with Wisconsin Act 227.

When a group applies for a specialty plate, DMV will make the public aware of the application and invite individuals with objections to the group's application to fill out an objection form. This form is available on the DMV website at wisconsinmv.gov/specialgroupreview.

To apply for an Authorized Special Group license plate, groups must pay a $15,500 fee for development costs and collect signatures from 500 Wisconsin residents who intend to purchase the special plates. If authorized, the group must maintain 500 valid special plate registrations after three years, or the plates will be discontinued. More on the process is available here.

Last Day of School for High Schools Changes to May 21

Change in calendar due to snow day in February

The end of the school year is approaching and Milwaukee Public Schools has a necessary change to the last day of school for all 9th to 12th grade students.

Due to the snow day on February 8, 2018, when schools were closed, MPS will need to extend the school year by one day for students in grades 9-12.

Wisconsin requires schools to provide a specific number of minutes of instruction for each grade level.

Because there was no instruction on the snow day, MPS is required to add additional time to the calendar.

The last day of school for 9th - 12th graders will be Monday, May 21, 2018. MPS apologizes for any inconvenience this causes our students and families.

The district explored a number of other options, but they were much more complicated for families and staff than adding an extra day.

The last day for grades K-8 at schools on the early start calendar will not change and is still Friday, May 18, 2018.

For all schools on the traditional calendar, the last day of school is June 8, 2018.

The MPS updated calendar is translated into seven different languages and is available for families now.

Families who have questions are encouraged to contact their child's school.

Vincent High School hosts Agricultural Spring Showcase

Public invited to experience the only agriculture-focused high school in Milwaukee

Vincent High School recently hosted its second annual Agricultural Spring Showcase to spotlight the rigorous, engaging and dynamic work the school's students and staff have been engaged in this school year.

Vincent is located at 7501 N. Granville Rd. on the city's far northwest side.

Students were introduced to universities, businesses and community organizations that can help them achieve their dreams and begin their careers. Visitors met the cows who became famous earlier this year when they escaped campus and saw the new lamb that was born only a few weeks ago.

Media and the public are invited to the Showcase. Students are excited to show members of the public and media their accomplishments and hard work in Horticulture Science, Animal Science, Food Science, Environmental Science, Culinary Arts, Agribusiness, and General Science.

Visitors saw animal exhibits, were able to buy plants, inspected class project displays, witnessed science demonstrations, and enjoyed food prepared and sold by the school's culinary arts students.

Representatives from higher education institutions, members of the agriculture community, and community partners shared their information with students and attendees.

UWM program trains paramedics as community health partners

By Laura L. Otto

With the help of a UWM program, Kendria Donaldson found her calling as a Milwaukee community paramedic. —UWM Photo/Pete Amland

Kendria Donaldson thought the career she wanted was traditional nursing. Then, when her boyfriend's brother joined the Milwaukee Fire Department, she considered a different option.

Becoming a firefighter would still allow her to help people with their health, but in a way that would build long-term wellness rather than just provide spot care. A University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee program helped her do just that.

Donaldson discovered that running into burning buildings is a relatively small part of the job. Far more common are health-related 911 calls, including many that aren't true emergencies. Many of these frequent calls are from people unequipped to manage chronic diseases like asthma, diabetes and heart conditions. "A lot of times, when we get there, the person tells us they just don't feel good. That's where the conversation starts," Donaldson said. "We have to find out why they are not finding the right care. With those patients, we are forming a long-term relationship. When you spend two hours with a patient, you can have an impact."

In 2015, the Milwaukee Fire Department partnered with the UWM College of Nursing and Milwaukee County Emergency Medical Services to train firefighters who are already paramedics as "community paramedics." Their role is educating, fact-finding and building relationships with patients whose emergency calls are not urgent.

The goal was twofold: improve people's health habits while reducing the number of non-emergency calls coming in. And the strategy worked.

Under the program, which the fire department calls Mobile Integrated Health-care (MIH), 911 use across all demographics for Milwaukee County dropped significantly from 2014 levels. According to Michael Wright, MIH care coordinator for the Milwaukee Fire Department, the calls were down 56 percent in 2016 and 62 percent in 2017.

UWM has trained more than 70 community paramedics at fire departments all over Wisconsin, and nearly half of them work in Milwaukee. Another class will be offered this fall.

Community paramedics try to learn what barriers prevent patients from managing their own health, whether it's finding transportation to clinics or understanding the correct use of their medications. Community paramedics also check for safety hazards around homes and give patients information on other programs that can help them.

That's different from traditional firefighter paramedics, who perform triage in order to quickly transport a patient to a hospital for treatment.

"The community paramedics program capitalizes on the strengths of all participants," said Kim Litwack, dean of UWM's College of Nursing. "Our expertise in health promotion and health education paired with the knowledge of fire department paramedics in neighborhood-centered care can lead to improved health outcomes for the citizens of the state."

UWM's nurse-trainers expose the firefighter paramedics to different parts of the medical field, including pregnancy issues and chronic conditions like asthma. They also learn how to help navigate the challenges faced by many people who live in poverty, such as how to get around on a bus with children, where to go when you are homeless, or how to obtain and use food stamps.

"It was very eye-opening," Donaldson said. "Sometimes, people are stuck between paying their energy bill or buying their medications. By telling them about various other programs available, we may give them some more options."

For Donaldson, the most valuable aspect of the training was learning how to interact with people who may be struggling with untreated mental health needs. She also takes pride in being able to directly help her community.

"I like the idea of treating our own frequent callers," she said. "We're a brotherhood and sisterhood. And if we're helping our own, it will ultimately lead to fewer calls."

MKE Health Dept.: Lead exposure poses a significant threat to the public

The City of Milwaukee Health Department (MHD) is sounding the alarm to all Milwaukee residents that no level of lead in the water is safe. MHD is working diligently to make Milwaukee lead-safe.

In November of 2017, the Milwaukee Common Council passed a Lead Transparency resolution about the dangers of lead exposure in water and the need for broad community education. The resolution was sponsored by Alderpersons Tony Zielinski, James Bohl and Chantia Lewis.

"I appreciate the leadership the Common Council has demonstrated on this very important issue," stated Health Commissioner Patricia McManus "No level of lead is safe! This includes lead from paint, water or soil."

As detailed in the Lead Transparency resolution, populations living in homes where lead service lines are present are at-risk if they are:

Women who are pregnant, who are of childbearing age (15-45 years) or who are breastfeeding, and Children up to the age of 6 years old.

MHD encourages families who may live in homes with a high risk for lead in the drinking water to avoid lead exposure by:

Using drinking water filters (NSF/ANSI Standard 53) that are certified to remove lead. This is the most effective way to reduce lead exposure from drinking water.

Flushing drinking water by running faucets on cold for a minimum of three minutes (or longer if needed) until the water is noticeably colder.

Using only cold water for cooking and drinking, and considering buying bottled water for drinking and cooking from a known lead-free source.

Cleaning and removing, on a regular basis, aerators from faucets and rinsing out any dirt, which may include particles of lead.

Replacing lead service lines or interior plumbing.

The City of Milwaukee Health Department provides drinking water filters for at-risk populations. Individuals can call the MHD Lead Hotline 414-286-8800 to see if they qualify.

All children in Milwaukee should be tested three times before age 3; some children may need to be tested up to age 6. Parents and caregivers are encouraged to make sure their children are tested by their medical provider. MHD provides lead testing at its clinics as well.

Milwaukee Water Works treats and delivers drinking water throughout the city that is lead-free. Lead service lines and plumbing inside the home can cause lead to get into drinking water. Residents can find out if their home has a lead service line at Lead-SafeMKE.com.

Milwaukee residents are encouraged to frequently check the City of Milwaukee Health Department's Lead Poisoning Prevention website for resource information and MHD's Facebook and Twitter pages.

Young repeats call for tougher gun control measures

As he entered the Waffle House, he was just two minutes ahead of the gunman, seating himself at a counter.

Suddenly he heard a loud noise, thinking at first that freshly washed plates had crashed from a stack in the restaurant. But he said he saw restaurant workers running and turned and saw a body near the front door as the gunman burst in.

It was then that he realized he was hearing gunshots.

"I looked back and I saw a person lying on the ground right at the entrance of the door, then I jumped and slid ... I went behind a push door — a swivel door," Shaw said. "He shot through that door; I'm pretty sure he grazed my arm. At that time I made up my mind ... that he was going to have to work to kill me. When the gun jammed or whatever happened, I hit him with the swivel door."

Shaw said as they began wrestling he grabbed the hot barrel of the gun, ignoring his own pain.

"He was kind of cussing while we were wrestling around. When I finally got the gun he was cussing like I was in the wrong," he said. "It wasn't any kind of talking between us; I just knew I just had to get that away from him."

Of the gun, he added: "I grabbed it from him and threw it over the countertop and I just took him with me out the entrance."

Shaw said after getting the man out of the Waffle House, he ran one way and saw the suspect, naked save for a jacket, going another way.

Shaw said a bullet apparently grazed him on one elbow and he fell and hit his knee as he escaped, landing in the hospital for a time early Sunday.

"I didn't really fight that man to save everyone else. That may not be a popular thing," said Shaw, a Nashville native who went to college in Tennessee and now works as a wireless technician. "I took the gun so I could get myself out" of the situation.

He said he was glad others were saved.

When Shaw's father went to visit him in the hospital early Sunday before he was released, he had one piece of advice for his son: "Don't do that again."

"I take no pride in him charging a loaded gun," James Shaw Sr. said. "I do take pride in him helping save the lives of other people."

In his statement, Young expressed his prayers and condolences to the victims and families, and praised Shaw for putting his life on the line and preventing further deaths and injuries.

"Once again we are seeing the deadly results of random gun violence via assault weapons," Young continued. "The AR-15 rifle that he (Reinking) used is classified as a semi-automatic weapon and should be banned. The time for meaningful action on gun control legislation that aims to protect our children and the public at large is long overdue."

Young said enacting common-sense gun control measures like: universal background checks, raising firearm age and banning bump stocks, have wide public support.

"Truth be told, rapid-fire assault weapons with large clips of ammunition have only one purpose: the mass slaughter of large numbers of human beings. They are designed for use by the military to achieve that mission in combat—and that mission alone. Assault weapons should be banned along with high-capacity magazines."

"I Remember Mom..."

I remember mama as a soft spoke tower of power! She had a look that made you automatically correct bad behavior without speaking a word.

She could whisper in your ear and you'd smile while tears were coming out your eyes.

Being raised during the turbulent sixties was a feat she never bowed down to.

While riots and fighting were all around us, my mother spoke of being respectful and turning the other cheek.

My dad was the more radical one and my mom was the calming spirit that kept the time bomb from going off in our family.

She always pushed for her girls to get a higher education and it was mandatory for us to always conduct ourselves in the fashion of a lady.

It was a long time before I knew I couldn't get pregnant from kissing a boy. She was not one to play with with it came to boys.

Although I may have been naive about some things she instilled in me a will to stand up for myself and speak out against adversity.

My mother came up during a time of great struggles. She endured the blows of segregation and the Jim Crow laws. She lived during a time when Blacks were considered second class citizens.

Eunice Augusta "Evelyn" McIntosh

Her struggle was one she strived to keep away from her children. She took us with her in the march for housing across the 16th street viaduct. She wanted to make sure we knew how to fight for what was right.

My mother instilled in me a belief that God is my creator and my strength. She instilled in me qualities of honor and being trustworthy.

She always made home a place of love and happiness.

Even though we at times had strife, my mother would seek to bring peace to our young lives.

She worked as a substitute teacher and was starting to go back for her Master's Degree when her health took a turn for the worst.

She'd be barely able to walk sometimes, but she was determined to complete her goal. Unfortunately, she died before she could finish. I remember looking at her resting in her casket and wanting her to wake up.

After she passed, I'd catch a glimpse of her smiling face in a crowd or smell her perfume in the wind. I like to think that was God's way of helping me get used to her being gone.

Now I find myself thinking of how I've used her instructions in my life to help my children in their lives.

My mother's name was Eunice Augusta McIntosh. To family and friends she was known as Evelyn. She was 41-years-old when she answered God's call to come home. Because of her love and devotion to family and friends, I'm able to instill those same qualities of loyalty, honor and love to my family. I know her qualities in me are still enabling our family to be strong today.

—As told by Donna Johnson

A personal remembrance of Vel Phillips

This also was the first thing I ever wrote that appeared in a national publication -- the product of our refreshing interview. And this is how it began:

"Firstest with the mostest" is an apt way to describe Milwaukee's Vel Phillips, indeed, a very remarkable person.

"That city's first Negro alderman, first woman alderman and an accomplished lawyer who shares a thriving practice with her attorney husband, Dale Phillips -- another first for the state of Wisconsin -- is, in addition, the first Negro to serve as national committeewoman for a state political party organization (Democratic). She was elected to the latter post in May to serve out the term of Mrs. Betty Graichen, who resigned to take a job in Washington, D.C...."

Midway through, I wrote: "Mrs. Phillips regards her election to this honorary, yet important post, with great enthusiasm and has promised to devote more time to it than has been the custom in the past."

"Even more active at home, than on the council floor of the city hall were she serves on the finance and public utilities committees, Mrs. Phillips is the proud mother of a son, and is expecting another child shortly..."

My piece ended thusly: "Vel Phillips impresses those who meet her with her straightforward character and warm charm. It is this feeling of friendliness and understanding that endears her to the citizens she represents."

I clearly recall her words when she called me after the magazine came out.: "You really did it, Dickie. A young man like you. Thanks so much. Please tell Nita {my late mother, Juanita} how much I appreciate what you did. I will never forget it, or you."

One of my funniest memories of Vel was when she and Dale, and his brother Paul, were discussing how Paul almost made the 1936 Olympics as a sprinter. But he lost out to Ohio State's Jesse Owens and his Marquette University teammate, Ralph Metcalfe.

Said Vel: "Don't fret, Paul. Maybe your legs didn't measure up to Jesse and Ralph, but you and Dale have 'em beat brain-wise, from here to Sunday."

Smiling, Paul replied: "Yeah, but I still don't have Jesse's money," bringing the kind of belly laugh from Vel that is how I probably best remember her.—Milwaukee native Richard G. Carter is a freelance columnist

Maggie Vance celebrates 100 years of life

Maggie "Idea" Vance (seated center wearing hat) recently celebrated her 100th birthday with family and friends recently at the Carter Conference Center at Holy Redeemer COGIC. Vance was born in Wilmot, Arkansas on April 17, 1918. She moved to Milwaukee in 1949. She held various jobs through the years: nursing homes, the dietary department at Mt. Sinai Hospital, to name a few. She was very active in the community, going door-to-door in the 1950's and 60's working on voter registration. She was a member at Philadelphia MBC under the late Rev. H. Henderson; a member of Genesis MBC under Rev. A.L. Douglas Jr., and is presently a member of Greater Love MBC under Pastor Frank Ballantine. When she first moved to the city in the late 1940's she lived on 7th Street. She moved to 23rd and Walnut Street in the late 1950's where she purchased two homes and moved her only daughter and her six children into one of the homes and she lived in the other. Her daughter died in July of 1972 in a car-train accident. Without hesitation, Vance moved into the home with the six children and got them to adulthood. Vance witnessed two World Wars, the Great Depression, the Apollo Moon Landing, 20 U.S. Presidents including voting in the election of the first African American President, Barack Obama, and remarkable advances in medicine and technology. As you can see Maggie has accomplished and seen a lot with only a fifth grade education and the Lord on her side.

MCJ EDITORIAL

Congress owes victims of mass shootings laws that keep guns out of the hands of American terrorists

If you listened to Armstrong William's syndicated radio talk show Monday, you probably were as shocked as we were to hear him provide a 'partial' list of mass shootings in America over the last 20 years.

The list went on for several minutes, which gives you an idea of how many "native" terrorists and psychopaths were included in his deadly diatribe. Most of the mass shooting victims numbered a half dozen people per rampage.

Interestingly, none of the three dozen terrorists were Black, although many of their targets were racially motivated, including the Waffle House murders of last Sunday morning.

Two thoughts come to mind when you provide listeners (or readers) with the cold hard and deadly reality of homegrown terrorism in America: first, despite the pronouncements and political rhetoric that usually follow this tsunami of terrorism, their concern ends there, with words and little or no action.

In fact, Congress has even turned a blind eye to the cries of America's youth, who assembled by the thousands around the country on two occasions this month, demanding gun control and safe schools (the focal point of a half dozen terrorist attacks).

Secondly, in all but a couple of cases, the guns (sometimes semi-automatic weapons) were legally purchased.

That disheartening reality is true because there are few "national" safeguards to protect us, from "them," (the terrorists).

For example, while some states have strict requirements for obtaining a concealed-carry permit, or to purchase a gun, in many others a mentally disturbed, domestic abuser with a felony conviction can walk into a store, plunk down his money and walk out with a bazooka.

We're exaggerating...BUT, not by much.

And there are also "strawman sales," in which guns are purchased by a person on behalf of someone else who doesn't qualify for a gun because of a prior felony conviction.

Our leaders on the national and local level better wake up, swear-off NRA money, and realize America is a—in military jargon—"target-rich environment."

They must create and pass legislation that, while not denying law-abiding, felony-free citizens the right to "bear arms," keeps these "weapons of mass destruction" out of the hands of not only felons, but those who have had multiple run-ins with the law and/or suffer from some form of mental disease.

Congress owes the victims and their families...the nation...nothing less!

The three "Pioneer Sisters" who influenced my life

Of the many African American women who helped mold me during my formative years (which continue to this day), three in particular can be credited with tilling the hardened American soil deeply enough to seed my growth.

And while each have joined our ancestors, I (we) continue to stand in their shadows reaping the benefits of their wisdom and maternal instincts.

Civil rights icon Vel Phillips, cultural advocate and educator Virginia Stamper and Polly Williams, the mother of school choice were on different political and cultural trains, but the same track, which intersected at the waystation of Black empowerment.

Some of us boarded their trains, while unfortunately far too many others chose instead to find comfort under the shadow of slavery, which explains why we have not fully progressed as a people.

Phillips, who died last week, was the matriarch of Milwaukee's civic rights movement, breaking ground in the political and legal battlefields.

Queen Virginia was the personification of Ghana's Yaa Asantewa, introducing hundreds of college students—including myself—to the richness of our native land, inspiring intellectual curiosity, and more importantly, planting the seeds of cultural pride.

Mother Polly was the only true independent state representative of my era, putting her people before her "adopted" political party (and thus incurring their wrath), and espoused a Black Nationalist philosophy that ultimately resulted in the most significant educational movement in U.S. history.

I loved all three sisters, each of whom played an important role in my life.

Call it fate, coincidence or a nudge from Nyame, each of these pioneer sisters' voices have been in my ear this month.

Vel's death last week sparked a well-earned citywide commemoration. The city's first African American and female alderwoman, judge and state office holder (secretary of state), she was a tireless worker for civil rights and equal opportunity.

I first met her through my mother, who Vel would always describe as, "my dearest friend."

Vel opened doors for my mother when she recommended her to cater a series of functions for Milwaukee's Black Bourgeoisie.

I use that term because there was—and continues to be—a caste system within the confines of apartheid that provides a clear distinction between the haves and have nots (which is not to say they were any less "Black", or committed to overturning apartheid, but that they separated themselves from us through culture and social mingling.

Among the elite were the doctors, lawyers and "some" entrepreneurs who met specific educational and lifestyle prerequisites.

W.E.B. Dubois called them the "Talented Tenth," theorizing they would lead. But my first exposure to them left a bad taste in my mouth that took years to cleanse.

My mother was consumed with the idea of being a first-class caterer. She studied the culinary arts, and put that knowledge to good use. Equally important, she took particular joy in service, both because of her upbringing and also her strong Christian ethics.

My two siblings and I generally accompanied my mother at her catered functions, but I could never get over how these members of the Negro hierarchy seemed to look down on us.

Obviously, I was wrong in one respect: while a caterer was commissioned to serve, he or she was not a servant, but an entrepreneur.

But at the time, I viewed our "clients" as prestigious "House Negroes" who disrespected my mother and every hard working menial Black worker by their uppity attitudes.

Maturity and exposure ultimately changed my minds about them.

Vel helped to change my perception.

She could have sat on a throne. Instead, she dedicated her life to activism, starting with her championship of the open house ordinance, which was my first exposure to the civil rights movement.

The White media painted a picture of the "po' Negroes" being led by the "great White father," Roman Catholic Priest Father James Groppi during the 200 days of the open housing campaign. But while I would recommend him for sainthood, the marches were the brainchild of Vel, and orchestrated by the NAACP and Commandoes.

Vel inspired and tasked us to continue marching even as we confronted racists on the Southside who refused to allow us to live in their neighborhoods. The bricks and bottles thrown at us were not enough to stop us from revealing the system of apartheid that still exists in Milwaukee.

Vel's involvement in dozens of other political campaigns opened many doors, and while we disagreed on her seemingly blind loyalty to the Democratic Party and her opposition to school choice, I loved, respected and applauded her accomplishments.

Queen Virginia, was my cultural mentor, my Black English and creative writing teacher and my co-parent (that latter title given for her help in raising my late son, Malik, as I took on the challenge of being a single parent).

Queen Virginia brought Africa to life through her cultural mentorship, and opened my eyes about the African elements that we subconsciously kept alive that link us back to the Motherland.

Did you know that we say "dis" and "dat", not because we have poor grammar, but because there was no "t" sound (as in "this" and "that") in many West African languages? The Queen taught us that in her pioneering study of African American linguistics. She proved Ebonics was rooted in African languages and Black English is a result of a culture that refused to be beaten out of slaves.

Virginia took us through a matriarchal-inspired rites of passage, opening our eyes to the rich and beautiful culture of our ancestors.

And her dedication was such that she left UWM to run Urban Day school, where she could plant seeds in the fertile minds of hundreds of Black youth.

And unbeknownst to many, the Queen was also one of the early catalysts for the school choice revolution. She attended the historic meeting in 1988 with MPS Superintendent Robert Peterkin who sought a partnership with Black independent schools. The bill he "authored" was ultimately high jacked by the teachers' union. The next year, a bill introduced by Polly was signed into law, where upon the Queen proudly filled out the application making Urban Day the first school in the program.

There was probably no more polarizing and empowering sister in politics than Polly.

Over the years, she lambasted Republicans on a regular basis and Democrats as often as necessary. She was forced to turn to the Republicans to support the school choice legislation because her Democratic Party colleagues put special interests (teachers) before Black children, prompting Polly to declare, "No permanent friends, no permanent enemies, just permanent issues."

Indeed, Polly was one of the few Black leaders who was unafraid, didn't care about party politics and was quick to call a liberal a racist, as she was a conservative.

Polly was unapologetically Black. And although she was a champion for justice for all, she prioritized what was best for Black folks, and was uncompromising in her ethics and her sledgehammer tactics.

She first emerged on the scene as co-chair of the Coalition to Save North Division (which has been resurrected in light of the meddling of the same union that wanted to limit Black student options) and even sponsored legislation to carve out a separate school district that would be totally staffed and controlled by Black educators.

When the union stopped that revolutionary effort, she turned to school choice to empower Black families to control the education of their children.

I served as a lieutenant in Polly's Army and learned to appreciate her tenacity and philosophy (which I shared).

After this paper took on the establishment ("educracy") in support of choice, Polly and I traveled the country promoting Black empowerment.

My book, "Not Yet Free at Last" paints a portrait of this dynamic leader.

In fact, it was originally conceived as a biography of her, but morphed into a chronology of the educational revolution.

The seeds these three women planted in the hard ground of American apartheid can be witnessed in the advocacy of their protégés, each of whom takes on the attributes of their mentors.

Alderman Milele Coggs is today's Vel Phillips, following in her footsteps as an attorney (Vel once said all council members should have law degrees—obviously I disagreed) and alderwoman.

Coggs learned through Vel to analyze issues from all perspectives, to stand fast in her positions and to use her office to close the gap between rich and poor, business and labor, haves and have nots.

Russell Stamper II has taken into office many of the attributes of his mother: her tenacious spirit, her cultural foundation and her unwavering desire to empower our people.

As an added bonus, he also carries with him into battle his father's intellect and assertiveness.

I am a product of each but many would assess Polly's imprint is my most obvious tattoo.

I don't disagree, but Vel and Queen Virginia significantly influenced who and what I am.

Virginia explained to me the importance of planting a tree to commemorate my son's passing. That cultural paradigm is particularly apropos given that each of these sisters have now joined him among the ancestors.

So, next time you feel a tug on your shoulder or a tingling sensation and no one is there, it just might be these sisters trying to tell you something. You should listen.

Headline correction!

We apologize to the alumni of North Division High School and the owners/operators of Irie Zulu restaurant for our headline for this and another photo in last week's MCJ (Page 6, April 15, 2018 edition). We meant to say: "DOIN' LUNCH AT IRIE ZULU." (The word we had was "Don," as in "don't.") The North alumni recently treated some deserving students from the school to lunch at Irie Zulu, a restaurant located at 7237 W. North Ave. in Wauwatosa, which specializes in seasonal, homemade African and Jamaican meals. —Kemp photo
