COURSE SYNOPSIS

DIPLOMA IN INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

INRL 5000: SPECIALISED SEMINARS

Each candidate follows one Seminar. For the academic year 2021/2022 the topic on offer will be International Security Studies. The Seminar Course is year-long over both Semester I and II.

INRL 5001: INTERNATIONAL HISTORY AND POLITICS

“History is past politics, and politics present history.” (Source: The Growth of British Policy (1895) by Sir John Robert Seeley (1834-1895), Professor of Modern History at Cambridge University from 1869 until his death).

The statement by Sir John highlights the interconnectedness between History and Politics; and, it may be applied to both the domestic and international contexts. Even though, part of the title of this course is ‘international politics’, which refers essentially to relations between and among states, the actions and influence of non-state stakeholders at all levels will also be covered for the sake of completeness and to address the complex reality of world politics, with its multi-stakeholder influences and interactions. The course examines approaches to pursuing national interests, accommodating the demands of competing groups, negotiating multilaterally agreed goals and commitments and engaging state and non-state actors in political processes. The course will trace changes in world politics over the decades, paying attention to the actions of states and non-state actors, against the background of international history and with reference to different International Relations theories.

The topics to be covered, include: (i) sovereignty, power, conflict and cooperation; (ii) World Wars I and II; (iii) post-WWII decolonization, regionalism, the Cold War and post-Cold War eras; (iv) globalisation, transnationalism and the multilateral system; (v) different perspectives of and approaches to development, peace and security and human rights; (vi) South-South and triangular cooperation (SSTC) and the emergence of the BRICS (Brazil, Russia, India, China and South Africa); and (vii) the roles and impact of states and non-state actors in the setting of international development agendas, using the examples of three initiatives (e.g. The small island developing states (SIDS) Accelerated Modalities of Action (SAMOA) Pathway (2014); the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development (2015); and the UN Conference on Oceans (2017) to support the implementation of SDG 14.”

INRL 5002: INTERNATIONAL LAW

The challenge which the teaching of International Law presents is becoming greater and greater as the process of globalisation deepens and gathers momentum. The impact of this development on the discipline of International Law is manifested in the expansion of its subject matter and the enhancement of the capabilities of non-state actors.

It is, therefore, inevitable that the International Law lecturer has to be selective in the topics which are covered in the course: Nine different topics are listed in the course outline mainly on the basis of striking a balance between the topics which were traditionally taught and those which are now emerging, but highly relevant. For many years topics such as jurisdiction, recognition and international personality were taught but are now omitted. On the other hand, international environmental law, the WTO and its dispute resolution machinery and foreign investment are included. It is hoped that this trade-off would meet the expectations of the student.

The choice of topics is meant to reflect a sensitivity to the peculiar circumstances of the Caribbean. Most of our states are small islands which became independent in the postwar era and are struggling to grapple with the myriad of problems associated with small size. In this epic struggle does the law strike the right balance between the weak and the powerful?

INRL 5003: INTERNATIONAL MONEY AND FINANCE

The main purpose of the course is to help students understand the nature of financial linkages among states in a world that has grown increasingly interdependent, the channels and instruments of interaction, the relationship between real transactions and the financial situation, the need for international arrangements to guide the conduct of states, and the adequacy or inadequacy of mechanisms available to governments to help correct unsatisfactory situations.

The focus of the course is on the structure and functioning of the international monetary system and on issues relating to the transnational movements of public and private capita. The course will examine the foundations and working of the international monetary system, its evolution and how recent developments have affected both developed and developing countries. We shall identify its essential features and the factors that have shaken the basic system laid down in the early post-war years and the attempts at reform. The role of both rich and poor countries in the reform effort will be examined, as well as the relevance of the reforms to the interests of poor nations.

Other topics included are: The relationship between the IMF and the member countries; The role of external finance in the development effort; and, the factors influencing the flows and pattern of foreign investment in the rapidly changing world environment. The course will be conducted with special reference to the problems and challenges facing the Caribbean States.

The course will therefore focus on three main areas. (1) The Introduction: Financial aspects of the open economy; The relationship between trade and finance; The balance of payments and approaches to adjustments; The foreign exchange market; Determination of exchange rates; Exchange rate regimes and policies. (2) The International Monetary System: The Bretton Woods Agreement - background, objectives and subsequent development; The post-1973 international monetary arrangements; Issues relating to the IMF and finally, (3) Issues and Problems in Development Finance which include: Private foreign investment - role in development, changing forms, the transnational corporation; Public external borrowing - role, debt servicing problems, sources of finance; and Foreign aid - trends and issues.

INRL 5004: INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS OF THE CARIBBEAN

This course seeks to locate the Caribbean States emerging from colonial rule in the post-World War Two period as new actors in the international environment. It will relate this phenomenon of post-war emergence to the experience of the "older" states of the Northern Caribbean – the Greater Antilles of Cuba, Haiti, Dominican Republic and Haiti. It will discuss the changing nature of the regional and international environment in the period since the initial independence of the Commonwealth Caribbean states. It will also seek to discuss and analyse how these states have initiated a search for identity, development and status in the contemporary global system, these three aspects being seen as the core of their external relations activity.

Topics covered include:

- The Caribbean in the international system
- Regional integration experiences in the Caribbean
- Contemporary international problems and issues of the Caribbean area
- The Caribbean and its relations with new main international and regional actors.

INRL 5005: POLITICAL ECONOMY OF INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT AND ORGANISATION

This course introduces students to global development from an international economy perspective. It examines the way economic and political factors interact to explain development challenges and policy. It provides an overview of, and principal issues and concepts in the field of international political economy. The course further exposes students to the main debates and theoretical approaches to international development, particularly those relating to global poverty and inequality within and between countries - the North – South divide. The various ways in which development is measured are outlined and critiqued. The course delves into the causes and assessment of the measures which have been advanced to address the above development challenges over time. The development strategies of the diverse approaches to development are also outlined. The course examines how the global political economy and domestic politics are mutually impacting and in turn shape international development policy. Subsequently, the course assesses the role of civil society in international development processes in general before examining the impact of globalisation on development processes. The course also discusses global governance and development by looking at the policy and practice of the United Nations, the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund (IMF) in relation to development problems/issues, policy and strategies. Finally, the course concludes with reflections on the way forward for international development by examining emerging and/or potential challenges and solutions.

INRL 5006: INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS OF LATIN AMERICA

The main objective of this course is to provide substantive understanding about Latin America in the international system and to familiarize students with the major political, economic and social issues related to the formulation and articulation of the foreign policies of Latin American states. The course also aims to promote the development of a critical perspective in relation to the region's participation and role in the global system as well as to introduce students to some of the major theoretical approaches in the field of international relations which are relevant to the study of the region.

Some of the topics covered include:

- i. The historical role of Spain and Portugal in shaping the political culture in Latin America
- ii. The traditional and contemporary role of the military in Latin America

- iii. The influence of the Catholic Church in Latin American political development
- iv. The contemporary hemispheric political and economic reconfigurations and the 'new regionalisms'.

INRL 5007: INTERNATIONAL TRADE AND ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

The objective of this course is to familiarize students with some basic concepts in the field of international trade in order to facilitate the teaching of trade policy issues. This course examines the link between international trade and economic development, particularly as this relates to issues and problems confronting developing nations in a liberalized trading environment. The course will utilize various trade theories to understand and assess the effectiveness of trade policy choices and their impacts on development. It also considers other strategic options within the wider international political economy (IPE) framework that may enable countries to enhance development via trade.

INRL 5008: METHODOLOGY & THEORY OF INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

The purpose of this course is to introduce students to the conceptualisation, understanding and application of theory in International Relations. The course is divided into two parts. The first deals with approaches to analysis within the discipline, ontology and epistemology, methodology and so on. This prepares students, firstly, for the main coursework essay which invites them to reflect on issues of what constitutes IR is and how 'do' the discipline, and, secondly, it gives students the necessary grounding with which to examine, understand and analyse the varied theoretical approaches which we address in the second part of the course: from classical theories like idealism and liberalism, to the alternatives which emerged in the post-war period like structural realism and critical theories like Marxism and Dependency Theory, as well as contemporary critical approaches like post-structuralism and feminism. The course ends with a plenary session in which students have to apply their theoretical knowledge to a real-world problem; this year it is a theoretical justification for intervention, or otherwise, in Syria in light of the Assad regime's use of chemical weapons. In sum, this course should provide students with a broad introductory appreciation of IR theory, and consequently the theoretical tools which they require for success in the remainder of the PGDip programme.

INRL 5009: THEORY AND PRACTICE OF DIPLOMACY

The objective of this course is to provide participants with a theoretical understanding of diplomacy and practical diplomatic skills. It will explore and analyse the various concepts of Diplomacy and will address the evolution of diplomacy in the context of the current international system.

The course covers eleven subject areas: Concepts and Theory of Diplomacy; The History and Evolution of Diplomacy; Foreign Policy, Formulation and Implementation; Administration of Foreign Policy; Types of Diplomacy; Communication and Diplomatic Documents; Diplomatic Relations; Privileges and Immunities; Consular Relations; Protocol; Negotiations; and the Application of Information Technology to Diplomacy.
