When you spend $100 at an independent business, $55 dollars will recirculate in the community.

Whereas, if you spent the same $100 at a chain, only $14 would recirculate.

To put it another way,
see below...

For every $100 spent at local business.

For every $100 spent at non-local business.

STATS FROM INDIE IMPACT STUDY SERIES: LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY FALL 2012
CIVIC ECONOMICS SURVEY OF INDEPENDENT BUSINESSES

THE FRESHEST PARTY IN TOWN.

A KENTUCKY FARMERS' MARKET NEAR YOU.

It's fresh, locally grown food; good people; great music; and times you'll hold onto forever – with a healthy portion of hometown pride thrown in for good measure. It's all at a Kentucky farmers' market near you. And we hope to see you there.

The Louisville Independent Business Alliance proudly presents our members to you—over 900 strong—in this Buy Local Guide. The organizations you find within represent an incredible variety of businesses that you just can't find anywhere else in the whole wide world! They make a huge contribution to our community character and sense of place. More than that, they have an incredible impact on our local economy—employing over 14,000 people and keeping more money circulating locally. (Our Louisville study showed that for every $100 spent, $55 is reinvested locally, whereas only $14 stayed when spent at a national chain.)

So keep your money close to home! A market shift of just 10% to local, independent businesses would retain an additional $416 million in the regional economy every year!

Message from Agriculture Commissioner Ryan Quarles

Friends,

Weclome to the summer edition of the Louisville Independent Business Alliance Buy Local Guide. The Kentucky Department of Agriculture is honored to sponsor this directory of local businesses to fill your every need.

Several Kentucky Proud members are featured in the guide this year. Kentucky Proud is the official state agricultural marketing program. The Kentucky Proud brand represents products grown, raised, processed, or manufactured in the Commonwealth of Kentucky.

Why not make your summer a Kentucky Proud summer by visiting one of the Kentucky Proud vendors in this guidebook?

Happy shopping!

Sincerely,

Ryan Quarles

Agriculture Commissioner, Commonwealth of Kentucky

A Hometown Favorite Returns to Its Local Roots

by Rachel Reynolds

Hadley Pottery Company, one of Louisville's gems, has been creating handcrafted American pottery since 1940. We've all likely seen Hadley's blue hand-painted dishes and collectibles, but many of us may not know the long, storied history of this one-of-a-kind business.

Hadley Pottery had been owned locally for decades until a group of investors from St. Louis bought the company in 2009. To everyone's delight, current co-owner Jerry Day purchased Hadley in June 2018 and returned the company to its local roots. Day's mother, father and grandfather worked at Hadley, and he himself has been an employee at the company for 45 years. The company is where Day's parents met. Following in his dad's footsteps, Day's 38-year-old son Josh now works there and is co-owner, too.

The company was started by Mary Alice Hadley, a talented artist who was born in 1911 into a local family of clay tile makers. Due to the abundance of ancient clay deposits in the region, Louisville has been a center of pottery-making for generations.

By the late 1930s, Mary Alice Hadley was making dishes for her houseboat on the Ohio River. She worked at Louisville Pottery with Perry Day, Jerry's granddad, until she struck out on her own in 1940 to launch Hadley Pottery, taking Day's grandfather with her as the first employee of her new company. Perry Day worked at Hadley Pottery for decades, then his son, Tom Day, worked at Hadley for 50 years, and now his grandson, Jerry Day, is co-owner of Hadley Pottery. Jerry Day joined Hadley when he was 17 years old. He is now 62. Jerry's son, Josh Day, joined the company in 1998. Josh is the fourth generation of Days to work at the company. Jerry's sister, Judy, and her husband, Mark Snyder, are also longtime employees of Hadley.

In 1944, Mary Alice Hadley's husband, George, purchased a building in the Butchertown area of Louisville as a birthday present for his wife. The building, constructed in 1848, had been home to a wool mill, a candle factory and a cordage mill. For 75 years now, the building has served as the production location, factory salesroom and offices of Hadley Pottery.

"When I bought the company last year, Hadley Pottery became local again," Jerry Day says with pride. "Butchertown is growing all around us. We were one of the first and have been here a long time."

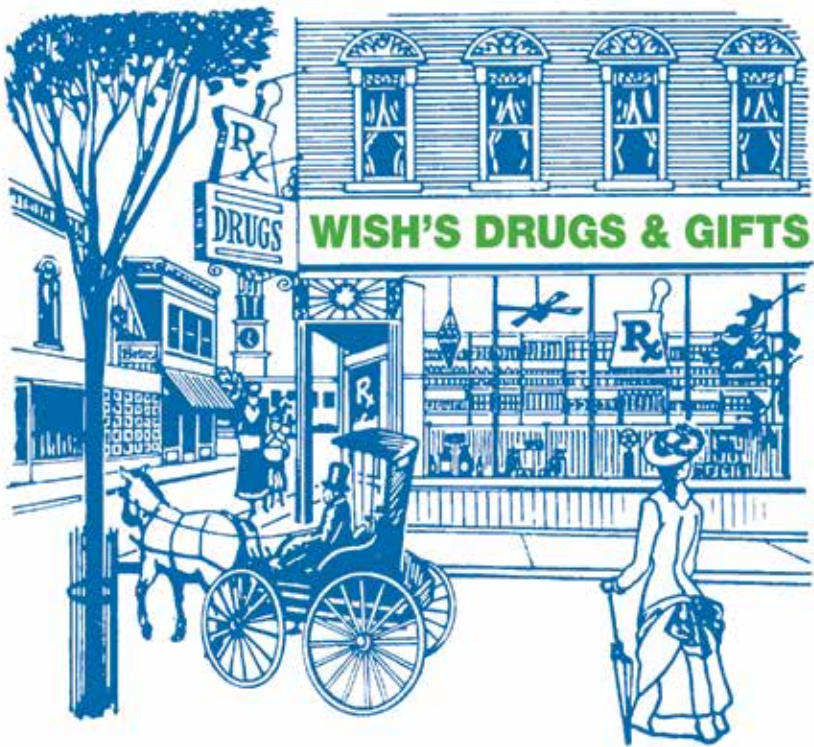

The company makes its clay from scratch, forms its own molds and mixes its own colors for the plates, bowls, mugs, canister sets, flower pots, piggy banks and other novelty items it makes.

"We have customers come here in summer from all over the country," Day says. Hadley Pottery is currently sold in roughly 300 shops across the nation and is also for sale on the Internet.

Hadley Pottery Company epitomizes what it is to be "local." Its deep roots are anchored in Louisville and the company grew as the city grew. Jerry Day knew that he couldn't let the company go under when the St. Louis investors decided to sell.

"It was either we save it or it doesn't get saved," Day says. Louisville is certainly grateful to the Day family and its commitment to keeping it local.
