INAUGURATION TRIVIA & QUIZ

AARP Bulletin 12/2016

"Hail to the Chief," played by the U. S. Marine Band, was first featured at Martin Van Buren's 1837 inauguration. The Marine Band, "The President's Own" (a nickname coined by Thomas Jefferson), was formed in 1798 and has played at every inauguration since Jefferson's in 1801.

The vice president had a separate swearing in ceremony and delivered his own inaugural address inside the Senate chamber until 1937.

The Bible used in Abraham Lincoln's inauguration in 1861 was used by Barack Obama in 2009. Starting in 1953 with Dwight Eisenhower's first inauguration, the bipartisan Joint Congressional Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies has hosted a luncheon in the Capitol for the president, vice president (and their spouses), congressional leaders, inaugural committee members, and invited guests. Only in 1977, when Jimmy Carter was inaugurated, has the event not been held.

- B. James Monroe
- C. John Quincy Adams

3. Which future president lost his hat at Zachary Taylor's inauguration?

LEADER DOG BUS TRIP 10/26 TO 28/16

Lion Lynn Stimmel

This month, the story concludes with the life cycle of a Leader Dog.

Lifecycle of a Leader Dog

Volunteers raise about 500 puppies a year. There are just over 100 dogs in the breeding program; many volunteer breeders are "empty nesters" who live within four hours of the campus.

VILLAGES

- Designed to reduce stress through visual stimulation and dog-dog or human-dog interaction
- Housing suites are large enough to cohabitate dogs
  - 255 suites can house 400 dogs
- Open area for pack play and enrichment with staff/volunteers
- Large glass overhead doors to outside can be opened during nice weather and allow dogs to see outside
- Lots of natural light from glass overhead door and multiple skylights
- Volunteers working with dogs:
  - 32 dog care assistants
(run dogs, clean, work alongside canine care staff)
  - 94 canine support assistants
(enrichment, petting, grooming)

The females are bred twice a year starting when they are about a year old and will have four litters in two years. They will be neutered at about 3½ to 4½ years of age. The dogs are brought to the LDB campus for breeding. The staff breeders decide on the best genetics match, looking to decrease defects and enhance good traits. The breeds used are golden Labradors, black Labs, German shepherds, golden retrievers, and a cross of Labs and goldens.

After breeding, the females return home to whelp the litters; in other programs the puppies delivered in kennels. At six weeks old, the puppies return to LDB for a week-long veterinary check-up, microchipping, and evaluation.

After a successful check-up, the puppies are placed with volunteer puppy raisers and will remain in these homes for about a year, receiving socialization and basic obedience training. There currently are puppy raisers in 20 different U. S. states and in Canada. The puppies we saw on Thursday were going home with puppy raising families the next day. The puppies are named at age seven to eight weeks by the raiser family; before that time, they are called by their collar color. The dog's name may be changed later, particularly if matched with a foreign client who has trouble saying the name.

Prison Program

Approximately 13 years ago, at the suggestion of an Iowa Lion, LDB started accepting volunteer puppy raisers in minimum-security men's prisons; currently approximately 100 puppies being raised in prisons. LDB only works with Levels 1 and 2 inmates (with Level 5 being the worst of the worst), in minimum-security prisons that are more like a college dormitory than a jail. The program has not expanded to women's prisons because those facilities house Levels 1 through 5 inmates and women inmates tend to be more aggressive.

Puppies raised by the inmates have a 60 to 65% success rate, while puppies raised outside have about a 45% success rate. Part of that success could be due to the inmate raisers have more time and no outside distractions. The entire prison population is taught how to deal with the puppies or the entire facility can be placed on hold until the necessary corrections are made. Of the inmate raisers, very few return to prison; those who do are mostly for parole violations, not a repeat crime. The program teaches inmates to work on teams and to work with their frustration in a positive manner. The program is now in 10 prisons in four states (Iowa, Michigan, Minnesota, and Wisconsin), with a goal of 17 facilities; when that goal is reached, 50% of the puppies will be raised in prisons.

Puppy counselors oversee 15 to 20 raisers and have monthly contacts with all raisers. The volunteer raisers are given a timeline of tasks to cover weekly, with 19 standards on which to focus; these weekly goals end at about 4 months.

After about a year, the dogs are returned to campus for two to five weeks of orientation and evaluation. The volunteer puppy raisers families take pictures at the German Shepherd statue when they receive the puppies and when they turn them back in. If the raisers live a long distance away, LDB will try to pair them with a new puppy the same day they turn one in.

The raiser families get updates after turning the dog in, after 2 weeks, 5 weeks, and 13 weeks. The next contact will be if the dog is issued to a client (those letters went out the day before our visit).

Volunteers at LDB work with the dogs, whether playing, walking, or just sitting. About two weeks after our visit, the raisers will come and meet the clients, spend time with them, bring gifts for them and/or the dogs.

If the puppy is not assigned, it may be a "career change dog." Starting on February 1, 2016, the process changed. Previously, if a dog didn't make the cut, the raiser had the first option to take it; now LDB first will see if an alternate career can be found due to the time and money spent on training the animal. LDB works with court advocates, therapy dogs, PTSD organizations, etc.; if no program can be found, the puppy raiser is given the opportunity to adopt.

Formal training with LDB instructors lasts for 16 weeks and covers four levels of training (foundation, basic, intermediate, advanced). Foundation and basic are about the client making choices; intermediate and advanced are about the dog making choices. Despite all the efforts and training, some dogs will make it through the training and then make it clear they don't want to serve. Each month 44 dogs are returned to campus for training, creating 10 classes a year. Ideally, trainers want the dogs at age 14 months; if the dog is 16 months old or older, they have bonded too much with the raiser family.

Clients train on campus for 26 days; the number of clients served is based on the number of available instructors. The one requirement is that the clients demonstrate (through a submitted video) that they can travel safely with a white cane. Due to space constraints, the largest class can be 24 clients. Each experienced instructor oversees three to four clients; apprentice instructors oversee one or two. Clients will go for several days without a dog, until the final match is made by their instructor. There are usually more dogs than clients; the extra animals are called "holdovers" which are often the cream of the crop.

Once the dog graduates, it belongs to the client. After the client and dog return home, they often remain together for up to eight to nine years, with some dogs going on 16 years. When a dog retires, the client may adopt if the dog can live as a pet in their situation, it can go to a family member or friend, or be returned to LDB. If returned to LDB, the puppy raiser will be notified and may adopt at that point. A retired dog not taken by the puppy raiser may be eligible for a career change or may be taken by people who make a donation to the program in order to give the dog a new home.

NEW YEAR'S LUCK

www.hallmark.com 1/4/14

Hoppin' John, a humble concoction of stewed black-eyed peas, pork, and rice has come to represent good luck for the year to come. The dish was a staple of slaves in the Carolinas. Possibly the earliest appearance of the dish by the name Hopping John was in an 1847 cookbook called The Carolina Housewife. No one knows for sure how the name originated, but one reasonable suggestion is that it's a corruption of the French-Caribbean words pois á pigeon (pigeon pea, a relative of the black-eyed pea), which sounds like PWAH-PEE-JOHN.

In many cultures, beans and other legumes are thought to bring good luck because of their resemblance to coins, which mean the promise of wealth. Pigs, too, are lucky because they symbolize prosperity.

And to play it absolutely safe, serve collard greens on the side, because they symbolize green, folding money.

Certain foods also guarantee good fortune in the coming year. Here's what people in other countries eat for luck:

Holland — doughnuts

Japan — Soba noodles

Italy — sausage and lentils

Spain — 12 grapes, one at each stroke of the clock at midnight

Sicily — lasagna

Norway — rice pudding with one lucky almond hidden in it

Greece — St. Basil's cake, a sweet yeast bread with a coin baked inside
