Ensemble To Dance Thursday

By JIM BATTERSON Associate Editor

The Zachary Solov Ballet Ensemble will open the 1961-62 Artists Series in Wait Chapel Thursday.

The new ballet ensemble of ten dancers, which is presently on its second North American tour, is to put on the first of five major performances in the Artists Series.

Two other performances, both by Indian artists, also have been incorporated into the series. The first of these, by sitarist Ravi Shankar, was held Oct. 4.

Ballet Director

The director of the ballet, Zachary Solov, is a past choreographer of the Metropolitan Opera Ballet, and a dancer in his own right.

He was born in Philadelphia, where he made his-debut as an entertainer at the age of ten on a children's program every Sunday

He studied ballet under Catherine Littlefield and at the age of 14 made his first appearance as a ballet dancer with her company. Danced With Balanchine

Shortly thereafter he was engaged by George Balanchine as a member of the American Ballet for its good neighbor tour of South America and later he danced with Balanchine in the New Opera Company season in New York.

World War II marked the beginning of a four-year army career for Solov, but he was able to continue his career in dancing and choreography in the Army Special

After the war he joined the Ballet Theater in London as a soloist and toured with them there and abroad before returning to New York to perform in the Broadway revue 'Along Fifth Avenue.'

In 1951 he was appointed choreographer of the Metropolitan Opera Ballet, in which capacity he continued until being asked by S. Hurok, New York producer, to direct the ballet.

Leading Male

The leading male in the ensemble is Michael Maule, who for two years worked under Solov as foremost dancer of the Metropolitan

A native of South Africa, he has also been a principal dancer in the New York City Ballet, and a guest artist with London's Festival Bal-

He was recently acclaimed by John Martin of the New York Times as "far and away the best classical dancer the Metropolitan A New Look Into The Old Opera Ballet has had.'

Maule will be teamed in the performance here with Irina Borowska, noted ballerina of the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo.

The questions "Is Christianity dead?" and "Will science and theology doom mankind?" were discussed last Wednesday night at the Wesley Foundation. This is the first of four debates on the future of Christianity.

Mr. Timothy Murphy, instructor of philosophy at the College, defended the position that Christianity is completely ineffectual for modern man, and its "death rattles" are now being heard. He further stated that the church itself has become a machine, interested only in materialism, and that one need not look far to see examples of this.

Dr. McLeod Bryan, associate professor of religion at the College, maintained that Christianity is not dead; rather that it has not reached maturity and is still in the stage of infancy. He said that while it is true that Christianity lacks vitality, it still has the power to awaken men to the challenges of society and aid him in a diagnosis of his

The Purpose Of Chapel?

Bi-weekly chapel services, in the program makes of worship a farce manner in which they are conducted at present, contain some striking incongruities.

For example, week before last the order of service for one of the chapel periods included (after announcements) a devotional period. The devotional service consisted of scripture reading, a hymn and a prayer.

The program after the devotional: An Ugly Man Contest! One of the candidates in the contest impersonated a prophet and read exhortations from Genesis I in a manner which candidly revealed student attitude toward "compulsory worship."

Although both the devotional period and the Ugly Man Contest are in themselves good, they do not belong on the same agenda.

The same is true of last Tuesday's program. In one breath the students murmured "... amen" at the end of the devotional and in the next they were cheering lustily, "Give 'em Hell. Deacs!" The inappropriateness is ob-

Tomorrow we will go to chapel and, after the introductory devotional, the candidates for Miss Demon Deacon will be presented and the student body will select its homecoming queen. The clash is not so striking here, but an obvious inconsistency exists between a devotional and a homecoming queen

The heart of these inconsistencies lies in the question, "What is the purpose of chapel?" Our need to evaluate the purpose of the bi-weekly chapel services is evident.

The accepted definition of "chapel" contains worship at the center of its meaning. Yet "compulsory chapel" is in itself a contradiction in terms. Worship cannot be compulsory.

So long as chapel services are compulsory, to include a devotional in the

Including a devotional in a compulsory chapel is paying lip service to a form of organized religion which the College in no other part of its program condones.

The contradiction involved in the present chapel services could be eliminated in a number of ways.

As long as the College feels it necessary to have a compulsory meeting of all students twice weekly, why not call these gatherings assemblies rather than chapel services, and eliminate any form of worship from the program?

Lectures, discussions, and debates concerning religion could still be included in some of the programs, but worship in any form should not be made compulsory.

In addition the College could engage a professional lyceum service to provide programs for these bi-weekly assemblies. This would not only provide us with consistently good assembly programs; it would also free the chaplain for his more natural purposes, such as student counseling and conducting voluntary worship services.

Perhaps at some future date when the building program of the College is more nearly complete the assemblies could be held in a more suitable place than Wait Chapel. Thus the incongruity of holding such programs as ugly man contests and cheering sessions in the place of worship could be elimi-

At any rate, as long as these biweekly assemblies remain compulsory, they should not be called "chapel," nor should they contain "devotionals." To do so would be to perpetuate a contradiction foreign to the very nature and tradition of Wake Forest

(All letters to the editor must be signed; names will be withheld on request.)

To The Editor:

Your editorial of October 16 took to task everything and everyone from the Baptist Convention to the campus police. However one may feel, it seems that it would be better not only to gripe but also to propose some positive cure.

For instance, in your comments about the library, you implied that the closing of the library at certain hours is deplorable. I wonder if you had thought that in order to keep a library open, one must have people on duty. Of course, the ideal situation would be that the facilities would be available to all students at all hours; but when students do not or will not abide by the simple rule of checking out a book, and some students do not, someone must be there to proctor the behavior. Your editorial would have been more effective had you suggested that the library could be operated under the honor system and that the students abide by the

The last paragraph was interesting Your statement of "mature adults," was, to say the least, quite intriguing. Since when do "mature adults" break whiskey bottles on sidewalks to prove they have consumed the contents; since when do "mature adults" throw toilet paper in trees, drive cars on other people's lawns, shout like caged animals at all hours of the night, play record players at the highest volume at 4:15 a. m., toss firecrackers at any hour, day or night, stick chewing gum on anything anywhere, or throw paper indiscriminately on public grounds, et cetera? "Mature adults" enter college to learn, not leer; study, not "suds;" liberate their minds, not practice liberality of morals. Have I expressed myself?

You used the word "most." Most means more than half, a majority. In order to anticipate any answer that the infractions of simple rules of human behavior metioned above are the doing of a minority, may I remind you that in a democratic organization the majority should rule? It follows that the majority of "most" of the students should control the more vociferous minority. But why be an Idealist? When this happens and the student body proves it can control itself and practice maturity, then, per chance. the administration and the Convention will see fit to alter policy.

Frank H. Andrews Graduate Student

To The Editor: In the publication of October 14, 1961, there appeared an editorial consisting of a series of complaints with regard to new or revised rules on campus. The last paragraph of the editorial in question stated that as "mature adults" the students should be allowed the freedom of their own decisions. It was quite bewildering, after reading what sounded like the comments of a resentful, depraved adolesent, to have it ascribed to a mature

Such immature reasoning would not come from a really mature adult. The author of this article might have perceived his own warped motives had he said to himself, in effect, "Just why am I

By LEWIS M. MORGAN

What does the writer of a "bout du doigt" column do at press time after a busy, depressing week distinguished by its depravity of reflection? He renames his column "bout du orteil" and proceeds amidst the apocalyptic applause of the momentarily confused, who shyly cram fresh tags of "affected, public groping, and pie in the sky" back into bluejean pockets. So I. shall ramble a bit this week.

Several days ago I squelched my obsession to leave visionary memories of Babcock lake undisturbed and proceeded to the old site of occasional reading, partying, and ice scating.

I mention this visit in a valiant attempt to satisfy the editor, who took me on her knee the other day write about things more related to Shying away from a discussion of the sprinkler system, which I'm confident we all agree does more than its share in maintaining impassable sidewalks, I bravely begin at the lake, which is undeniably closer to Wake Forest than boats at life's end and marble spheres (pardon the assumption that you made it through the last column).

Anyway, after suffering the acute impression of a very different lake upon my dusty mem-here? I'm sure it's not to learn how to drink another man under the table, or to play pranks, or learn all the high spots in Winston-Salem where there is excitement or entertainment.

In reality, I am here to prepare myself for a chosen vocation. It is going to be up to me as an individual and as a part of society, to ultimately contribute something of myself, however great or small, to the future generations. To accomplish this purpose, I had better concentrate my energies toward intellectual and spiritual enlighten-

If there are rules and regulations concerning drinking and other unacademic pursuits, they were not set up to deprive me of fun and relaxation, but to provide me with a strong background upon which to build my entire life. If I am the mature adult that I believe myself to be. I will accept and live by these rules graciously."

Here are a few ideas in hopes that some of the pseudomature adults will profit. First, concerning the closing hours of the Library . . . If the early hours of the evening would be used for study in the library rather than carousing, then by 11 p. m. one would be ready to close books and get some rest.

Hence, it would not be such a temptation to sleep through eight o'clock classes. How delighted the professors of eight o'clock classes would be to see the students as wide awake then as they are between the hours of 7 p. m. and midnight! Furthermore, Chapel programs have been provided neither as a study hall, nor for any other activities reserved for those hours. But, if one will listen actively and attentively, there is surely some value to be accrued therein. You know, Wake Forest doesn't have to have the reputation of having the most inattentive audiencesit is we, the students, who have built that reputation. When we speak of maturity from setting grasshopper traps. Impressed by the novelty, I stopped to talk.

Having communicated to him with some difficulty that my job was being a student, I learned from him that he had been supplying some Japanese firm with grasshopper wings for some ten years. He seemed quite happy and content with this arrangement, and I proceeded to seek out whatever deficiencies might have resulted in this unrealistic state of mind. Thanks to occasional bells, buzzes, and screaks, he was not fully unaware of Wake Forest and had somehow developed a wonderfully perceptive concept of what "an academic community" means. As I listened to him enthusiastically exound on his communications with Japan, we moved to the water.

Glancing into the water I noticed an old balloon trembling on the surface, strangly inflated and tightly corked. Noticing this gave me a sudden pregnant feeling, and I began to flip through my fresher memories for something that might identify me with the old man.

Though he seemed harmless enough, I couldn't seem to begin with anything more important than my excessive honesty at a recent faculty interview.

I really wanted to tell him who I was, but I didn't care to embarrass either of us, and the interview didn't really seem like too bad a starting point.

Just as I had formulated a good transition from Japan to the faculty interview, I half heard, half felt a slight hum in the trees. Noticing a sudden wet warmth in his eye, I begin to speak, when a massive sheet of screeching grasshoppers fell upon him, throwing him to the ground and forcing the cork from the nearby balloon.

He threw up his arms and tried desperatly to speak, but they swarmed down his throat and carried him away like a parched morsel of grass.

Despite the emotional shock of this experience, I continued to enjoy the daily comparison of Wake Forest contemporaries, who are convinced to varying degrees that they, or at least someone, knows what's going on. But that's another story.

here on out, let us not use the term loosely. Let us apply it to those who realize and accept the responsibility of being mature adults. Certainly it is not being mature to simply label ourselves such and the proceed to act like irresponsible children. Please keep these things in mind next time you are tempted to voice immature complaints!

In regard to the letters published in your issue of Oct. 16 regarding food service, the College has a food committee composed of the treasurer and the dean ex-officio, the Slater manager, Dr. J. W. A meeting of the committee will be held in the near future. Students who have comments concerning the food service are asked to

One of our most prominent scholars has suggested a fool-proof method by which a student can travel to any place in the world for only three cents. Simply purchase three-penny postcard and on it tell how primitive and backward the living conditions are here at Wake Forest.

It will undoubtedly fall into the hands of the wrong person (the dean's office has spies everywhere), and it will result in a strong protest from someone, probably the chapel committee. You will then promptly be handed your passport and told to on your way. Living Conditions?

If you are having any trouble getting emotional about the backward living conditions, permit me to suggest that you try eating in the cafeteria. Things were backwards to start with, and they have been getting worse every day.

The only things that have been going forward are the prices, and they had been going up at an allarming rate of speed. This surely can be explained satisfactorily by someone, but I am still wondering why we can't at least have spoons with which to eat these high-priced, Grade-A, super-special delicacies. Quiet Study

While Off-Beat is in a critical mood, I also would like to sound a week-late protest against the closing of the East Lounge at night. Students do need a quiet place for those all-night cramming sessions before the big test.

But in defense of my friends, the campus police, I must say that these arch-villains do not usually put the poor students out into the cold night to sit on ladders and hang from light poles in order to complete their studies. More often than not, any student who can politely ask permission to remain and study, is permitted to do so. Why Here?

The early closing of the East Lounge may help to contribute to the flunk-out ratio of students, but I think that I have found the real

By RICHARD FILIPPI Entertainment Columnist

The fierce lust of a young pool shark to become the nation's alltime champion is the theme of Robert Rosen's film version of Walter Tevis' novel. "The Hustler." The film, which is playing at the Carolina, stars Paul Newman, Jackie Gleason, Piper Laurie, George Scott, and Myron McCormick. It was shot against the authentic backgrounds of New York City's ed by "the shadowy terrain of the varied levels of life, its multiple underworlds, its fashionable and pseudoelegant society, and the daily flux of that great melting pot.

FRANK HOWARD COMPLIMENTS DEACONS—

On Clemson football coach Frank Howard's television show two Sundays back, the Atlantic Coast Conference's "football baron" had nothing but compliments to bestow upon the Wake Forest Demon Deacons who the day before had rudely defeated his Tigers in "Death Valley" for the first time since 1949.

"There are no alibis about it," stated the winningest coach in the ACC. "They (Wake Forest) just whupped us and whupped us good. Wake Forest was really up, and they were an inspired team."

After opening remarks about the game with Wake Forest, Howard began to narrate the films of the game, but his disappointment over the defeat was evident.

"Usually at the beginning of a game in "Death Valley", those Tigers come down that carpet at the east end of our stadium with a grim, fierce look and a ferocious growl on their lips," stated Howard, "but yesterday the most they could manage was a weak 'me-ow.' "

As Howard viewed the films of the game along with thousands of TV viewers, he continually bemoaned the fact that Wake Forest had seemingly little trouble moving the ball against the big beefy Clemson line. "Look at those Deacons knock our boys off the line; their line got the jump of us all day."

When the Deacons got the ball inside the Clemson 20 on the first series of downs, however, Howard's voice began to brighten. "This play coming up is the Wake Forest play that I like best, the fumble play," he stated. "Only they didn't run it quite enough."

Later on in his show, Howard took time out frequently to compliment several individual Deacon gladiators. After a fine gain by Wake quarterback Chuck Reiley, Howard had this to say: "That gentleman was an entirely different player than he was several years ago in our stadium. He called a mighty fine game and played one too."

Howard also had high praise for halfback Alan White, especially concerning his 59 yard jaunt through the middle of the Clemson line which put the finishing touches on the Tigers.

In the Deacon forward wall, Howard complimented Bill Carlisle, Paul Martineau, and Bill Shendow.

The Clemson football coach was particularly impressed with the play of center Carlisle. Carlisle, incidentally, is a South Carolina boy. He originally hails from Anderson, South Carolina, but he now resides in Aiken, S. C.

Toward the last part of the show, the commentator of the program asked Howard if he knew about the new addition to Wake football coach Bill Hildebrand's family. "Yes, I heard about the good news just before the game and congratulated Hildebrand on it prior to the start of the game. When I congratulated him, however, I had no idea that things were going to turn out the way they did."

"Hildebrand oughta name that boy Frank Howard Hildebrand after the way we treated them Saturday," he added.

But Coach Hildebrand obviously didn't follow Howard's goodnatured advice. Instead, the Hildebrands named their new son Paul Victor Hildebrand. The Paul is in honor of one-time Wake Forest football coach Paul Amen, and the Victor is a family name. Could perhaps Victor also stand for the monumental victory which Hildebrand's Deacons worked over the Clemson Tigers?

PAT WILLIAMS BECOMES PROPHET—

The Deacons' successful encounter with Clemson two weeks back has made writer Pat Williams an accurate prophet. In Williams' fine story on Alan White ('Alan White Shines As Deacon Halfback'), he states that if Wake Forest should win some games before the close ceedings.

The story was written on the Thursday before the Saturday of the Clemson game. On Saturday the Deacons went on to beat the Tigers, 17-13, and Alan White scored the final Wake touchdown on a 59 yard run, thus proving Williams an excellent prognosticator.

Incidentally White's touchdown in the Clemson game was the first that he had ever scored in varsity competition for Wake Forest. The last touchdowns he had scored while at Wake Forest were in his freshman year in frosh competition.

White's 83 yards rushing in nine carries in the Clemson game catapulted him from sixth place in the ACC individual rushing race to second place. In 24 rushes White has now gained 186 yards for a 7.8 yard average. Only one other player in the ACC has as high an average. Ernie Arizzi of Maryland. Arizzi also holds a 7.8 yard

Deacs Host Virginia the DEACS In Homecoming Game

The University of Virginia Cavaliers invade Bowman Gray Stadium Saturday to provide Homecoming entertainment against the Wake Forest Deacons.

The Atlantic Coast Conference contest will be but the eighth meeting between the two schools. Virginia holds a 4-3 edge in the series but Wake Forest has won the last two years.

Football interest has hit a new nigh on the Charlottesville campus and the Cavaliers will not be at all similar to the team which lost ill ten of their games last year. One reason for Virginia's optimism and renewed confidence is head coach Bill Elias, fresh from a year at George Washington. There the young mentor brought the foundering Colonials a winning season and was named Southern Conference Coach of the Year.

Elias has instilled this enthusiasm in the Cavaliers. Thus far this season, Virginia has won more games than they had in three previous seasons.

22 Lettermen

Harriers Lose

A strong Virginia Tech crosscountry squad sent the Wake Forest contingent down to a 21-37 defeat Wednesday. It was the second setback against Deacs' three wins. The home-team loss came with the Gobbler's possession of third, fourth, and fifth places. Wake sophomore, George Adams, put in his bid at 23:56, with classmate Dave Turner only a second behind.
