DEFINITIONS

Managerial / Management Accounting

- It is concerned with providing information to managers that is, people inside an organization that direct and control its operations. (Seal, Willie. (2006). Management accounting. 2nd ed. London: McGraw-Hill.)
- It includes both historical and estimated data used by management in conducting daily operations, planning future operations, and developing overall business strategies. The characteristics of managerial accounting are influenced by the varying needs of management. (Warren, Carl S. (2002). Managerial accounting. Australia: Thomson.)
- It is a process of preparing management accounts that provide accurate and timely key financial and statistical information required by managers to make day-to-day and short-term decisions. Unlike financial accounting (which produces annual reports mainly for external stakeholders such as creditors, investors, and lenders) management accounting generates monthly or weekly reports for the firm's internal audiences such as department managers and the chief executive officer. These reports typically show the amount of available cash, sales revenue generated, amount of orders in hand, state of accounts payable and accounts receivable, outstanding debts, raw material and in-process inventory, and may also include trend charts, variance analysis, and other statistics. It is also called managerial accounting. (<http://www.businessdictionary.com/definition/management-accounting.html>)
