1.1 INTRODUCTION

The survey is a recognized and accepted part of the modern society. It is one of the means by which society keeps it informed, away from bringing under central situations of increasing size and complexity of obtaining perceptive and standard of comparison. A survey gives an oversight of a field and is thus distinguishing from a sort of study which consists of a microscopic examination of a turf ; it is a map rather than a detailed plan. The survey must be planned before a start is made.

1.2 PURPOSE OF THE LITERATURE SURVEY

The literature review plays a very important role in the research process. It is a source from where research ideas are drawn and developed into concepts and finally theories. It also provides the researcher a bird's eye view about the research done in that area so far. Depending on what is observed in the literature review, a researcher will understand where his/her research stands. Here in this literature survey, all primary, secondary and tertiary sources of information were searched.

The study of literature on ----- (your topic name) in general and in the field of library and information science particular revealed several efforts made by the scholars in different discipline.

The purpose of the literature survey is to collect a lot of number of journal's article about a particular topic like as I have collected --- (number) articles of “----- -----(your topic name)” with abstract. The main aim of this collection is to provide a guideline and brief information of researcher, user and other person who want information about this topic.

1.3 OBJECTIVES OF THE LITERATURE SURVEY

The main objective of the Literature survey is to:

- (i) know who writes, what and where about (your topic name);
- (ii) identify the tools and sources of (your topic name), and
- (iii) prepare the relevant bibliographic entries with abstract of the related topic.

1.4 SCOPE OF THE STUDY

The literature survey is conducted for the period 20-- - 20-- . It includes the articles of journals, which are subscribed by the Central Library, University of Delhi, Delhi. A search has been conducted on the terms “----- (your topic related keywords”, “-----”, in LISA, Emerald, LISTA, Science Direct, EBSCO and other database to complete review of literature for the proposed study, including search on e-journals websites. In addition to above searches, bibliography of journal article are also reviewed for more sources as well as websites and consulted various eminent experts.

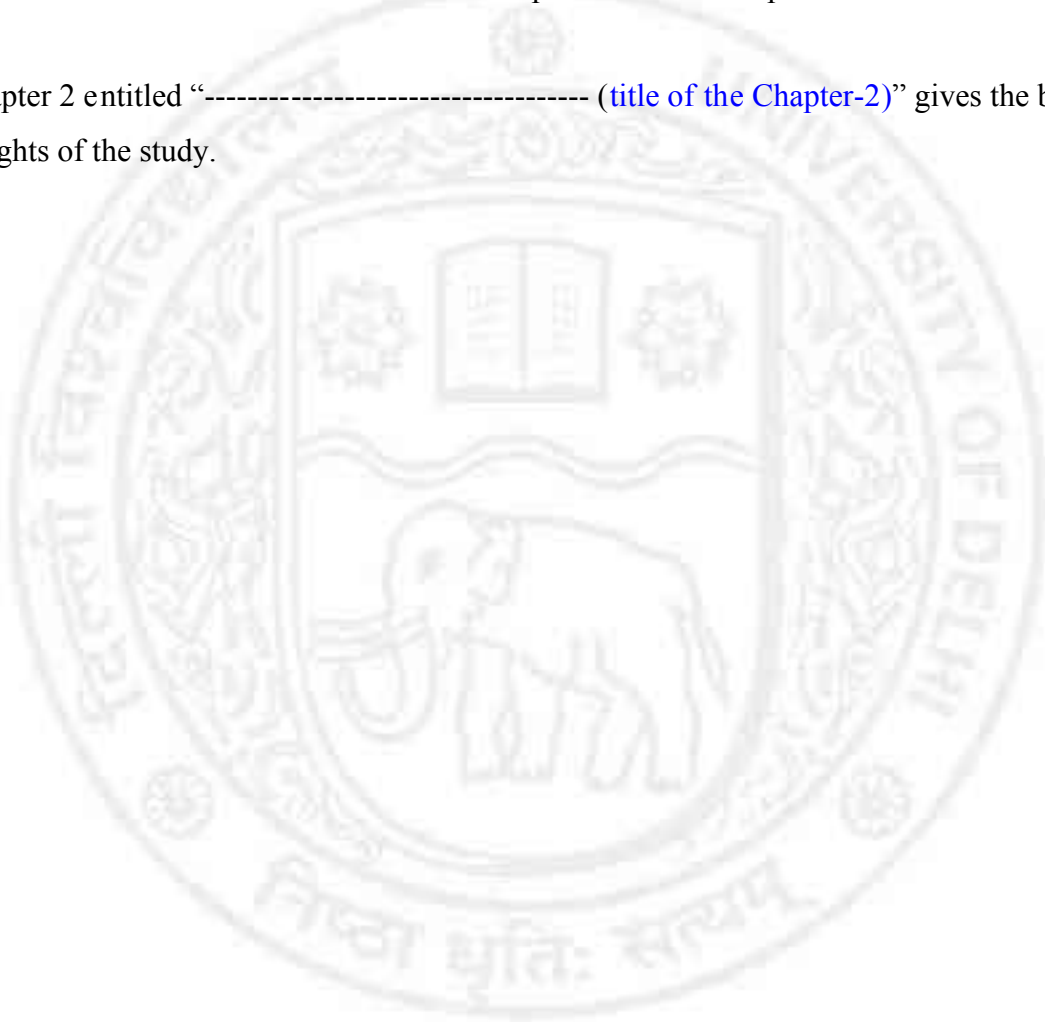

1.5 METHODOLOGY

For preparing of this literature survey I have taken a lot of steps for collecting the articles about the (your topic name). First Sir/madam, told us about the what is literature survey and what are the steps involved for preparing it. He had given me the topic –“(your topic name)” for the survey. I went to the department library and central library for collecting articles from journals on my assigned topic. I also consulted electronic resources for collecting articles such as Emerald, JCCC@UGC Infonet, Open-Jgate, Directory of Open Access Journals (DOAJ), etc. After the verification of the entries of the articles by the supervisor my last was the preparation of the report.

1.6 ARRANGEMENT OF ENTRIES

All the entries of the literature survey are arranged alphabetically by surname of the author according to Modern Language Association of America (MLA) handbook for writers of research papers, 7th edition. The prescribed style is used throughout the literature survey report including within the text. All the bibliographical entities including review with abstract and without abstract are presented in the report.

Chapter 2 entitled “----- (title of the Chapter-2)” gives the brief insights of the study.

BIBLIOGRAPHY WITH ABSTRACT

1. Aitta, M. R., Kaleva, S. and Kortelainen , T. “Heuristic evaluation applied to library web services.” New Library World 109.1/2 (2008): 25-45.

Abstract: The purpose of the paper is to present usability heuristics for the evaluation of public library web services. The applied heuristics are divided into three categories: heuristics critical from the usability viewpoint; heuristics concerning major problems; and heuristics connected to minor usability problems but still important and concerning conventions of web design. The use of the heuristics and the results they give are evaluated to provide a basis for their use in future.

2. Allard, A. “Library managers and information in world 2.0.” Library Management 30.1-2 (2009): 57-68.

Abstract: The purpose of this paper is to provide library managers with the ability to recognize and address World 2.0 information issues to enhance their ability to develop management plans for the future. This paper explores what World 2.0 means to library managers in three ways. Three information dimensions are identified using models to examine World 2.0 in a historical context. An analysis is conducted of the different generations of users in World 2.0 including their diverse attitudes, beliefs, experiences and skills and how these influence their engagement with the information environment. Four key characteristics of Web 2.0 are identified through an analysis of Web 2.0 in relation to World 2.0. Key findings in this paper are that: three dimensions of information in World 2.0 exist and can be used by library managers to help them understand the challenges and to facilitate the construction of strategic management plans that address them. Generational and organizational perspectives of World 2.0 can influence how libraries engage Web 2.0, and should be considered when library managers make -
