History & Traditions

Midway University, formerly the Kentucky Female Orphan School, was the dream of Dr. Lewis Letig Pinkerton, a young physician and minister of the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ). Together with James Ware Parrish, the Midway Christian Church elder who raised the funds necessary to open the school, they joined with other progressive thinkers to launch a revolutionary educational experiment. In antebellum Kentucky, the few girls who received formal education were taught to read only because it was considered necessary for their role as mothers. When they reached adulthood, they would read the Bible to their children. Female orphans were rarely offered even this meager amount of schooling. Without education or parental support and concern, the most many could hope for was a lifetime of drudgery as a maid or laborer.

The liberal arts curriculum and career preparation proposed by Dr. L. L. Pinkerton was a comprehensive solution to this tragic situation, and the benefits reached far beyond the individual girls who attended the school. Dr. L. L. Pinkerton's dream became a reality as Midway-educated teachers went forth to share their learning with youngsters throughout the state and region. In the years since its inception, the institution has evolved to meet the educational needs of women, and now men, while preserving the goals and standards of its founders.

Today, Midway University has achieved its goal of excellence in education, providing advanced instruction in a broad range of subjects based upon a strong liberal arts curriculum. The campus and programs have grown with the school's enrollment, yet many of the traditional ideals Midway was founded on have remained constant. The university's affiliation with the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ) remains strong and many members of the student body are active members of Christian Church congregations.

On May 12, 2016, the Midway University Board of Trustees voted to become fully coeducational in all its undergraduate programs by fall 2016. Daytime programs and the residential campus had been solely for women since the school's founding and operated as a Women's College. Evening and online undergraduate programs and graduate programs all have been co-ed since their inception.

Alma Mater (School Song)

Original words by Lucy Peterson, 1906-1962

Sung to the tune of Adeste Fideles

Here banded together, dear Old Alma Mater,
Secure in our heritage by those gone before.
Led by its vision and the hopeful future;
We trust in its wise guidance, and heed its voice of wisdom,
We sing now to its glory, its glory proclaim!

Then go forth from these doors, dear Alma Mater send us, All ready to sharpen us where're we may be,
Strong in self-knowledge, wise in understanding
We trust in its wise guidance, and heed its voice of wisdom,
We sing now to its glory, its glory proclaim!
