Rotary Community Corps

A Rotary Community Corps (RCC) is a team of non-Rotarian men and women who are committed to their community's long-term development and self-sufficiency. An RCC is sponsored by a Rotary club and, like Rotaract and Interact clubs, is one of Rotary's partners in service. The main principle of the program is to enable RCC members to personally address and solve problems in the area where they work or live.

Sponsoring an RCC is a great way to initiate and implement enduring service projects. RCCs carry out create and sustainable solutions to address a wide array of community issues such as lack of safe water, hunger, pollution, illiteracy, and inadequate housing. An RCC works with its sponsoring Rotary club to consult with the local community, identify needs, and plan, implement, monitor, and evaluate a service project. Every community's needs are different, but what unites RCC members is the idea that no problem is too large to solve.

PROGRAM GOALS

All RCCs share four major goals:

- To encourage individuals to take responsibility for the improvement of their village, neighborhood, or community.
- To recognize the dignity and value of all useful occupations
- To mobilize self-help activities and collective work to improve the quality of life.
- To encourage the development of human potential to its fullest, within the context of the local culture and community

RCC HISTORY

The RI Board of Directors officially adopted the RCC program in 1988, following its introduction in 1985 by M.A.T. Caparas, who was then RI president-elect. The RCC was envisioned as an organization of community members who wish to improve the places where they live or work. Until 1999, RCCs were referred to as either Rotary Village Corps or Rotary Community Service Corps.

Today, the RCC program continues to grow worldwide, with more than 6,700 corps in over 75 countries and geographical areas.
