Royal Ballet of Cambodia

This is a part of my project “The Eternal Gesture”, which is a transmedia projects including a documentary, an app, a website, and the communication of the social medias for the Royal Ballet of Cambodia.

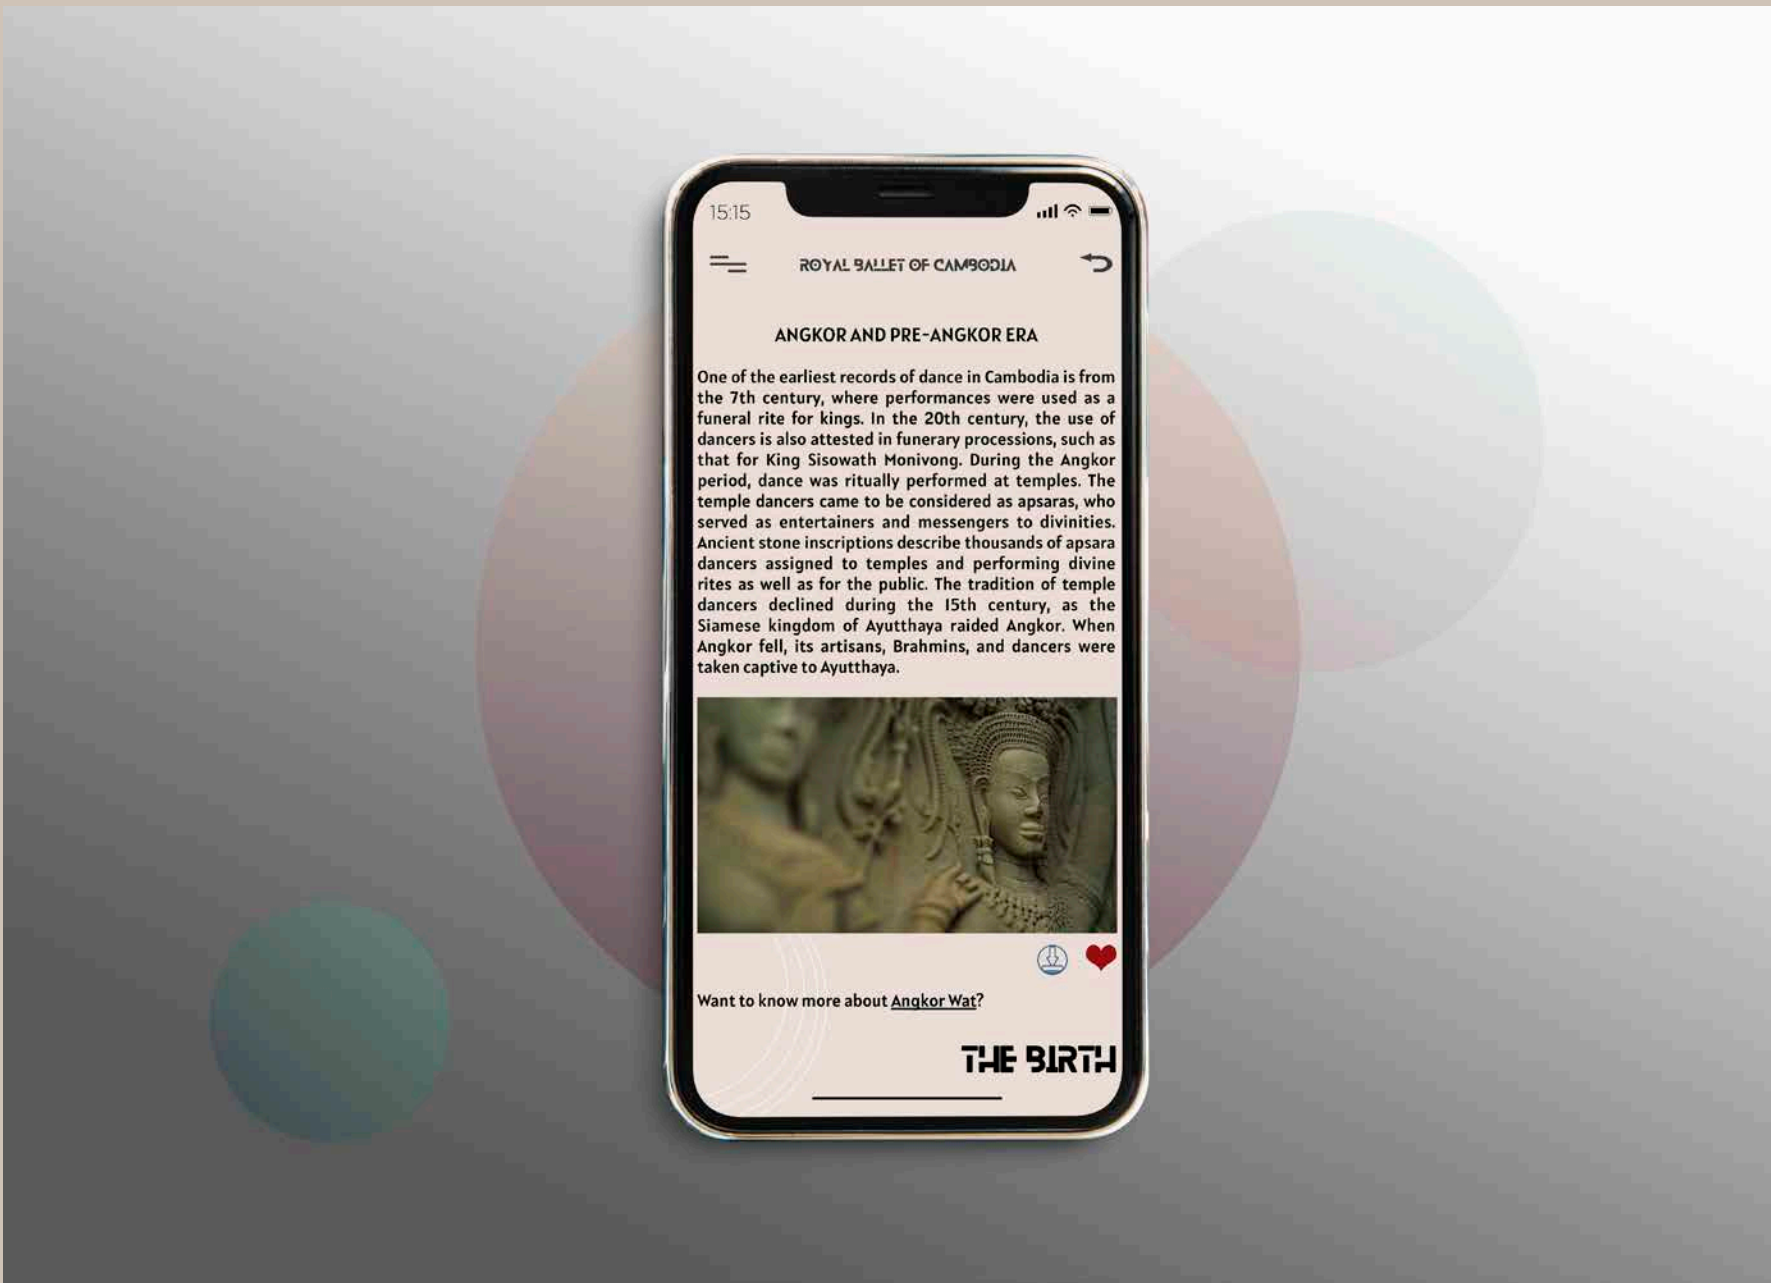

ROYAL BALLET
OF CAMBODIA

Smartphone App

The application will have as its first mission to (re)discover the history of the Royal Ballet of Cambodia. In addition to this, the application will also have an explanatory part of what composes the Ballet, namely the characters, the choreographies, the musical instruments, the costumes and gestures. It is therefore an educational application. All this will be enhanced with videos and photos. We hope that at the end of its experience, the user will have a broad knowledge of the Royal Ballet and what it represents.

A «like» system will be set up so that the user can save the images and photos he or she likes and create his or her own virtual museum. Also, we have a community part where the user can share its own art about the Ballet. The Gallery will only be unlocked progressively as the user is exploring the History of the Ballet. But the application does not stop there. We want this tool to be a real communication device for the Royal Ballet. As a result, we are adding a news section to the application, which will also include an agenda to keep you informed of upcoming dates for the Royal Ballet. We are also thinking of adding a system for redirecting tickets to the online ticketing of events. To ensure that smartphone users do not miss anything, a push notification system will be installed and will alert them as soon as new news is online.

APSARA

Apsara represent an important motif in the stone bas-reliefs of the Angkorian temples in Cambodia (8th–13th centuries AD), however all female images are not considered to be apsara. In harmony with the Indian association of dance with apsaras, Khmer female figures that are dancing or are poised to dance are considered apsara; female figures, depicted individually or in groups, who are standing still and facing forward in the manner of temple guardians or custodians are called devatas.

GESTURES

Hand gestures in Khmer classical dance are called kbach (meaning "style"). These hand gestures form a sort of alphabet and represent various things from nature such as fruit, flowers and leaves. They are used in different combinations and transitions with accompanying movement of the legs and feet to convey different thoughts and concepts. The way gestures are presented, the position of the arm, and the position of the hand relative to the arm can affect their meaning. Gestures are performed in different manners depending on the character type.
