ASSISTANT DIRECTOR'S NOTE

"There have been a few times in my life where I've thought about taking a stand but I'm not a hero. Is that a cop out? Maybe so. It's hard sometimes to tell what is really worth it."

On April 15, 2015, Fun Home became the first musical on Broadway to feature a lesbian protagonist. On June 26, 2015, the U.S. Supreme Court legalized same sex marriage in all fifty states. It was truly a year of acceptance, which is exactly what Fun Home is all about as we present it here, six years later, on the Nebraska Wesleyan McDonald stage. Based on the graphic memoir of the same name, cartoonist Alison Bechdel looks back on her past and tries to piece together the circumstances surrounding her father's death while recounting her own journey of self-discovery. Throughout both the graphic novel and the musical, Alison learns to accept not just her sexuality, but also what she cannot control; to accept that some questions can never be answered, and to accept that the past is just that: the past. She learns to hold on to not only the bad memories but the good ones as well. Like Alison, I hope that audiences can learn from this story how to accept themselves and who they are now, as well as who they used to be. I hope that Fun Home can show you that it is always worth it to live your life as you are and as truly, as bravely, and as freely as playing airplane.

- Shannon Chinn, Directing BFA student, Assistant Director

DIRECTOR'S NOTE

So much of what we do as educators and artists is tied directly to the purposeful lyrics sung early on in Fun Home by both Alison Bechdel and her father Bruce: "I want to know what's true, dig deep into who and what and why and when, until now gives way to then." Particularly in the performing arts and humanities, we're endlessly driven to study, investigate and, above all, try to understand history, whether it is global, national, societal, cultural or, very often, personal. In many ways, this relatively quiet story of a middle-class family in rural Pennsylvania touches all of those boundaries, and we're exploring it during a time in our own history when it can be a balm to escape into the past.

When this school year started, there was a lot of uncertainty about whether our vibrant musical theatre program would be able to provide opportunities for musical performances at all. Thankfully, through meticulous care and caution, we were able to present a fantastic cabaret of new songs in the fall called Fresh Voices in O'Donnell Auditorium, and we are finally premiering our first musical production in our newly renovated McDonald Theater with Fun Home. All of this has only been possible through the disciplined efforts of our students, staff and faculty, of course, but also by the truly inspiring support and guidance of the NWU administrators who were able to see the possibilities and help us mitigate the risks when so few other universities would attempt either.

Knowing that singing unmasked on stage is one of those risks, we not only continued to take the same precautions we've implemented all season, like masked rehearsals, frequent breaks, temperature checks and semi-weekly testing, but we also took the opportunity to reimagine this production in a way that has yielded unexpected rewards. We knew it would be important to keep singers stationary and distanced from one another on stage, but we also wanted to bring these gorgeous songs to life with visually compelling stage pictures. To that end, we created a six-member, all-female group of masked and gloved dancers and movers whom we've labeled the Memory Ensemble, and their performances and fantastic student-choreographed dance routines have illuminated themes and moments in the story that I never could have predicted. Their inclusion may be the only thing about the pandemic for which I'm grateful.

The graphic novel Fun Home altered what the literary world thought a memoir could be, and the musical version disrupted the theatre world in the same way. We hope our production can demonstrate that, under the right conditions, even as we endure what is hopefully the late stages of this pandemic, the conventional wisdom of what can and cannot be done on stage is also false. Because, like Alison and Bruce, we want to know what's true and we hope you find as much truth in this story as we have.

Thank you for joining us and enjoy the show!

- Ryan Kathman, Assistant Professor of Acting/Directing, Fun Home Director
