Oakwood Avenue Community School Art Display at Board of Education

Oakwood Avenue Community School's art teacher, Ms. Helen Kwon arranged a colorful display of art completed by students from Kindergarten to Grade 7. The students recreated artist Gustav Klimt's Tree of Life and Portrait of Adele Bloch-Bauer in varying sizes, textures and styles. Also displayed were collages titled "Sleeping Child" and art depicting ancient civilizations.

The Supervisor of Visual and Performing Arts Donna Sinisgalli welcomed families and staff members who were in attendance to celebrate the students' art. She introduced Interim Superintendent Ronald C. Lee who stated how proud the district is when visitors comment on the exhibits at the board office. Principal Denise White thanked her parents and staff for their support and congratulated the students for their artistry and effort.

Attorney Edward Marable Visits Oakwood Avenue Community School

Submitted by Ms. Pamela Venable, School Counselor, Oakwood Avenue Community School

Attorney Edward Marable, former Orange councilmember, began the Tuesday morning assembly, with the 5th through 7th grade students, by sharing that he and his siblings attended Oakwood Avenue Community School (OACS) when they were children. His siblings joined him to share some of their experiences of having their mother come to the school to address their teachers' concerns. They let the audience know how grateful they were for their parent's involvement in their academic and social life.

Mr. Marable, shared with the audience that some may try to write you off as a failure, however, it is important to take the necessary steps to prove to yourselves that you are great and will always be great.

He told them how critical family is for success. No matter the makeup of a family, remember to “represent them well” by attending school and making every effort to demonstrate good manners and respect your teachers. Don’t follow the lead of negative classmates and take the risk to say something to a classmate who is being disrespectful.

He encouraged students to stand out and be a positive leader and not follow negative people. Respect your body reject drugs and alcohol. We know that there is a possibility for violent behaviors to be witnessed in many communities however, always want better for you. Know that joining a gang increases the chance for danger. Mr. Marable ended by letting the students know that he looks forward to returning and working with them as a role model who lives in Orange, and is thankful for the Friendship House and other programs that “helped my siblings and me.”

October Board of Education Meeting

At the October Monthly Board of Education Meeting, Interim Superintendent of Schools Ronald C. Lee asked for a moment of silence for the deceased, Ms. Pamela Willis, a former staff member, for her 27 years of service to the Orange Public School District. He also sadly announced the untimely passing of Rosa Parks Community School’ secretary, Ms. Paulette Edwards.

After the respectful pause, Oakwood Avenue Community School opened the program with the flag salute and several performances. The Kindergarten students sang “Chop, Chop, Chippity Chop” and “Had a Little Rooster,” to the delight of the audience. They were followed by the Oakwood Avenue Garden Presentation prepared by the garden committee, highlighting the crops grown in the space adjacent to the school building. The After School Chorus then sang “Blackbird.” Principal Denise White thanked her staff and parents for their support and attendance.

Parent of the Month

Ms. Felicia Waters, grandmother of Kevon Smith, is Oakwood Avenue Community School's parent of the month. From the very beginning, Ms. Waters has been a strong advocate for her grandchild. She instilled in Kevon a desire to do well, which helped him to be successful in first grade. He experienced growth in reading, was brilliant at math and was a class leader, in large part due to Ms. Waters. She always made sure he completed whatever was sent home. Also, knowing that he didn't have any playmates at home, Ms. Waters enrolled him in the after school program at Oakwood and always participated in school events, so he could be around children his own age. She has continued that trend. Recently, Oakwood had a volunteer sign up to help beautify our school. It was conducted after school for a week and Kevon was there every day. In addition to being a fighter for her grandchild, ensuring that he receives the best education possible, she is also down to earth, very approachable and a funny, kind person. Ms. Pamela Venable, school counselor, said, "It was a pleasure working with her last year. She helped to make the year very productive! I thank her for that."

Other Presentations:

Also, at the meeting Dr. Terri Russo, director of curriculum and instruction, presented the 2018 PARCC results, displayed on the district website. Mr. Frank Tafur, supervisor of guidance, presented the H.I.B. Violence and Vandalism Report.

Ernst & Young (EY) Innovation Day Challenge

Submitted by Glenn Gamble, Tereasa Venable - Business Educators, Orange Preparatory Academy and Orange High School

On October 5, more than thirty volunteers from EY, led by Audit Partner Mike Kacsmar converged on the Orange High School Media Center to help students create and develop new/innovative business plans anchored in artificial intelligence. This opportunity was made possible by Networking for Teaching Entrepreneurship (NFTE), a phenomenal educational partner!

This event is a component of the EY – Future Work Now – Getting Back to Human / World Series of Innovation 2018 Global Campaign (<https://vimeo.com/291184601>). This initiative emphasizes the fact that "new mindsets and diversity are defining the future of work" (https://www.ey.com/en_gl/workforce/how-new-mindsets-and-diversity-are-defining-the-future-of-work). The program also focuses on the changing workforce and economy where "gigs" are the emerging type of employment (<https://www.ey.com/gl/en/services/people-advisory-services/the-gig-economy-transforming-the-workforce>).

These developments are highlighted to help future entrepreneurs navigate the nuances of emerging markets, directing them to become anchored in digital fluency as the core of four categories and twelve subset of skills:

- Think: Mind Clarity – 360 Thinking – Intellectual Innovation
- Navigate: Embracing Disruption – Resilience – Leading with Purpose
- Connect: Virtual Leadership – Super Connector – Inspiration
- Relate: Balancing Technology and Human – Empathy – Culturally Connected

Joining the EY Team was Peter Johnson, NFTE Northeast Development Director and Liliana Pichardo, Program Manager, NFTE, NY Metro (pictured left). NFTE entrepreneurship resources have been blended into OHS Introduction to Business curriculum. The CTE team and Mr. Jahmel Drakeford, CTE supervisor, also attended and collaborated with the leaders from EY and NFTE.

The event ended with a pizza party hosted by EY and pledges to come back and assist students to submit solid business plans for the competition. Scholarships and national recognition are on the table for Orange High School students to grab! Orange administrators, faculty and staff are always committed to the success of students with the anticipation of achieving a national presence in the EY Innovation Challenge!
