

PART I PAPER 8

BRITISH ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL HISTORY, 1050-c. 1500

2020-21

READING LIST FOR STUDENTS & SUPERVISORS

Man's head, fourteenth century, a carving in Prior Crauden's chapel (1320s), Ely cathedral

Part I Paper 8 2020-21

The period covered by this paper was one of dramatic change in British economic and social life. The twelfth and thirteenth centuries were a time of marked economic development and creativity, and saw the expansion of agricultural output, towns, trade and industry. Famine and plague followed in the fourteenth century, leading to a very different era of stagnation and social upheaval in the later middle ages. Overall, it is now generally agreed that the period studied in this course laid essential foundations for Britain's exceptional economic trajectory in later centuries. This course aims to provide students with a sense of the broader trends of the period 1050-1500, as well as the chance to look in depth at important problems and debates. By the end of the course students will also be able to reflect on the exciting challenges involved in studying the society and economy of an era before censuses, government statistics, and printing.

Paper 8 is made up of 24 topics, such as 'The Black Death', 'Town life', and 'War and society'. Students, in consultation with their supervisors, can choose which of these topics they wish to study for weekly supervisions. The 24 topics represent a mix of economic and social history. Across Michaelmas and Lent terms, there will be two series of introductory lectures, followed by lectures on each of the 24 topics. The Part I Tripos examination paper for Paper 8 will feature 24 questions, that is, one corresponding to each of the 24 topics. (Paper 8 took this format for the first time in the Tripos exam in 2017.) This reading list specifies a number of themes or debates (usually three) under each topic. The relevant lecture will engage heavily with these themes or debates. When doing their supervision essays, students are advised to focus on one or more of these themes/debates. One or more of the themes or debates will normally form the focus of each examination question.

Using this reading list

This list is divided into two parts, each containing 16 sections, giving 32 sections in all. The first part concerns British economic history, the second British social history. The 32 sections correspond to the 32 lectures on this paper scheduled for Michaelmas and Lent Terms. For both economic and social history, there are four Introductory lectures. These will discuss key concepts, trends, sources, historical debates and methods. The aim of these introductory lectures is to provide essential background to the 12 'topic' lectures which follow in each series. They are intended to be especially helpful for students who are new to medieval history and/or economic and social history. The reading lists for the four Introductory lectures are deliberately kept relatively short and include only the more essential items. The reading lists for the 24 Topics are usually longer. It is intended that students will be able, with guidance from their supervisors, to select from these lists when preparing weekly essays on particular topics. In some of the 'Topic' lectures, an additional reading list will be distributed, which will contain further items not in this list.

*NOTE ON ONLINE READING, SEPTEMBER 2020:

This reading list has been revised September 2020 in preparation for the 2020-21 academic year, during which Faculty teaching will be largely online, and physical access to libraries will be restricted. All items in the list currently available online, either as e-books via IDiscover, or as e-journals (via an e-journal search, or elsewhere online e.g. JSTOR) are noted as such, by highlighting and the inclusion of the words 'e-journals' or 'e-book', or similar. NB only digital items available to read outside the library are marked in the list. Where a key piece of reading is only available as a physical copy in libraries, an attempt has been made to identify an online alternative. Some items have already been scanned and made available to students in the 'Reading – scanned items' folder in the Paper 8 Moodle. These are marked ['Moodle'] in the list below. Further items – those marked '[to scan]' have been earmarked for scanning. The list will be updated when the requested scanning is complete. In the meantime, please check Moodle to see whether the item is available as a scan. Overall the online reading provision for Paper 8 is relatively good, since for most topics there are plenty of journal articles published online.

GENERAL WORKS

These books are likely to be of use for the whole paper. They cover the 8 introductory themes, as well as most of the 24 topics (many of these general works are mentioned again below, where relevant). Older works, i.e. those published before 1990, do not take account of the latest research. If read with this in mind, however, they remain very valuable, since they frequently engage with ongoing debates.

3. Models of economic change

The use of models and theories to explain the developments identified in the overview of trends: Malthusian or population-resources models; class-conflict based models; commercialisation models.

4. Debates, sources and methods

What sources and methods have been used to write the history of the medieval British economy, and how have these changed over time? Chronological and spatial distribution of surviving sources; local case studies versus larger scale investigations.

Primary sources

English Historical Documents volumes 2-4 (edited by D. Douglas, H. Rothwell, and A.R. Myers, respectively), sections on 'land and people' or 'economy and society', for examples of the written sources used to write the economic history of this period. [e-book, via Idiscover - databases]

Discussions of the primary sources

- Britnell, R.H., Britain and Ireland 1050-1530: Society and economy (2004), chapters 13 and 23
- Campbell, B., 'A unique estate and a unique source: the Winchester Pipe Rolls in perspective', in Britnell, R., ed., The Winchester Pipe Rolls and Medieval English Society (2003)
-  Clanchy, M., From Memory to Written Record. England 1066-1307 (3rd edition, 2012) [e-book via UL catalogue] – on the huge growth in writing in this period, especially royal documents.
- Duby, G., Rural Economy and Country Life in the Medieval West (1968) –good collection of documents useful for comparisons of England and France.
- *Dyer, C., 'Documentary evidence: problems and enquiries', in G. Astill and A. Grant, eds., The Countryside of Medieval England (1988); and see other essays in the book e.g. that by Grant for use of material evidence.
- Dyer, C., An Age of Transition? Economy and Society in England in the Later Middle Ages (2005) [e-book]– shows that some sources - especially manorial sources - become scarcer and less detailed for the fifteenth century, while new types of sources such as wills then become available.

5. England in 1086: economy and society

Themes and debates:

- How much can Domesday Book (DB) tell us about the size and distribution of England's population in 1086?
- How much can DB tell us about the level of England's economic development in 1086?
- How much does DB reveal about the social impact of the Norman Conquest?

Primary sources

7. Landlords and estate management c.1350-c.1500

Themes and debates:

- What were the problems facing landlords in this period and how severe were they?
- How far did landlords innovate in their approach to estate management?
- Did large and small landlords act in the same way?

General and introductory:

8. Agriculture: landlords and peasants

Themes and debates:

- How far did peasant agriculture differ from that of landlords?
- To what extent were medieval farmers capable of technical innovation?
- To what extent is it possible to discern distinctive regional farming systems in this period?

10. The Black Death and later fourteenth-century epidemics

Themes and debates:

1. To what extent was mortality in the Black Death and subsequent fourteenth-century plague outbreaks similar for all social groups and regions?
2. How successful was legislation to deal with labour shortages after the Black Death?
3. Were the effects of the Black Death (including mortality levels) exaggerated by contemporaries?

11. Population stagnation: the later middle ages

Themes and debates:

- What are strengths and weaknesses of the available primary sources for population trends after 1350?
- Can we determine the chronological, social and spatial incidence of epidemic disease after c. 1390?
- How can we best characterize the relationship between population and economy in the fifteenth century?

14. Towns, markets and trade 1050-c.1350

Themes and debates:

- How extensive was urban growth in this period and how should we account for it?
- How great an impact did overseas trade have on the wider economy?
- What was the relative importance of informal and formal trade and marketing?

15. Towns, markets and trade c.1350-c.1500

Themes and debates:

- To what extent did the role of markets and marketing change in this period?
- In what ways did changes in the textile industry affect the fortunes of towns?
- Did British towns suffer economic decline in this period?

16. Money and credit

Themes and debates:

-In what ways did the supply of money change between 1150 and 1500 and how did these changes affect the economy?

-How important was credit and in what ways did this change over time?

-To what extent was the economy in this period completely 'monetized'?

SOCIAL HISTORY

1. The structure of medieval society: contemporary theories

Medieval ideas about society in their wider European context; the scriptural and philosophical bases for these ideas; views about society as a hierarchy, especially the concept of the three orders; contemporary vocabulary used to describe social groups; the relationship between elite and clerical theories of social hierarchy and order, and social reality.

Medieval social thought in the wider European context:

5. The monasteries and religious orders in English society c.1066-1215

Themes and debates:

-Why were so many religious houses founded in the twelfth century and why did the rate of foundation decline towards the end of that century?

-How is the popularity of the friars in the thirteenth century to be explained?

European Context

6. Church, parish and people 1050-1300

Themes and debates:

- How much can be known about the religion of 'ordinary believers' in the period c.1050 to c.1215?
- What was the role of the saints in twelfth- and thirteenth-century religious culture?
- When, and why, did the parish emerge as the focus of lay religious practice?

7. Church, parish and people 1300-1500

Themes and debates:

-Was the adaptability of the late medieval church to the needs of the laity its chief source of strength?

-Was provision for the souls of the dead the defining characteristic of late medieval lay piety?

8. Heresy and heterodoxy 1300-1500

Themes and debates:

- Was Lollardy ever a serious threat to the late medieval Church?
- How sharp was the dividing line between 'Lollards' and 'orthodox' believers?
- Does the term 'heterodoxy' rather than 'orthodoxy' or 'heresy' best describe the beliefs of late medieval parishioners?

9. Town life

Themes and debates:

- what distinguished town life from its rural counterpart?
- is the term 'oligarchy' a useful one for understanding medieval British towns?
- to what extent did the structure of urban society change between the 12th and 15th centuries?

12. Education, language and literacy

Themes and debates:

- Evolution of levels of and types of literacy; their impact on society (social structures, political culture, religion).
- 'School revolution' and the development of universities; their social impact; education of the laity vs. education of the clergy; education of women.
- A multilingual society: shifting balance between French, English and Latin; the emergence of Middle English as a written language.

13. Art, architecture and society

Themes and debates:

- what were the most significant changes in artistic and architectural style and output in this period?
- What social role did art and architecture play in this period?
- how significant were the effects of artistic patronage?

14. Popular rebellion and resistance, c.1250-c.1450

Themes and debates:

- To what extent does 'class conflict' serve as an accurate description of popular rebellion and resistance, 1250-c.1451?
- How far is it possible to distinguish political and economic causes of popular rebellion and resistance?
- To what extent was the 1381 rising a wholly exceptional instance of English social revolt in this period?
