1-DAY WORKSHOP LISTENING TO THE MUSEUM

How Sound and Sonic Culture Impact the Museum Experience

LISTENING TO THE MUSEUM

is a one-day workshop introducing participants to the fundamentals of sonic experience within a museum context. Via talks, handouts, group listening activities and discussions, attendees will take away the basics of soundwalking, sound mapping, and museological object resonance in order to better understand how physical, creative, and conceptual listening practices can enhance the museum experience.

INTENDED AUDIENCE

This workshop is suitable for museum staff or adult museum visitors. No prior knowledge of sound studies is required.

MATERIALS PROVIDED

Printed/PDF Handouts including notes on workshop topics and worksheets for in-class activities.

ENROLLMENT RESTRICTIONS

Enrollment should be limited to 15 participants per day-long workshop. Activities include moving through the museum's galleries and sitting or standing for extended periods.

AVAILABLE FROM

Audio Tour: The 4'33'' Museum

by John Kannenberg

15 countries. 27 cities. 50 museums. Nearly 4 hours of audio.

A box set collection of field recordings made in museums around the world for more than a decade. Each recording is four minutes and thirty three seconds long, as a nod to John Cage's famous 'silent piece,' since museums have a reputation for being silent – but if these recordings are anything to go by, they are most certainly anything but. Includes the digital album of 50 recordings plus a 74-page full-colour book with liner notes, photographs, and an essay about collecting. Part guide book, part memoir, the book enhances the listening experience by providing further information about the recording sessions at each of the museums in the collection.

A Deck of Portable Sound Cards™

This specially curated deck of 50 Portable Sound Cards™ featuring waveforms of fifty different sounds selected from the Museum of Portable Sound's Permanent Collection Galleries. Each deck also includes three additional cards: an introductory text and a two-card index of the 50 sounds. Great source material for studying the integral role that sounds play within human culture, making you able to hold the culture of sound in your hands.

Hearing Enlightenment

by John Kannenberg

Documents a day-long public performance that resulted in a sound piece presenting the acoustic environment of the British Museum's Enlightenment Galleries in 49 minutes of faint traces and echoes – a metaphor for the Enlightenment era's attempts to 'collect and display the world' in early museums, inevitably missing more than they included, and silencing more voices than they made heard.
