BOB CLARK
Supervisory Archivist

The papers of Ernest Cuneo reflect his active life as a lawyer, newspaperman, author, and intelligence liaison.

Cuneo was born in East Rutherford, New Jersey in 1906. His first newspaper experience was as editor of the school newspaper at East Rutherford High School and a stringer for the Passaic Daily News. He was also a star athlete in high school and later played football at Columbia University and for a professional team in Brooklyn. During college vacations he worked for the New York Daily News.

After he was graduated from law school, Cuneo became law secretary to Fiorello LaGuardia, then a congressman from New York. In this capacity, he was involved in briefing LaGuardia for the Seabury investigation of judicial malpractice and in the investigation of fraudulent bankruptcies. In 1936, James Farley appointed him associate general counsel of the Democratic National Committee.

When World War II began, General William Donovan, head of the Office of Strategic Services [OSS], appointed Cuneo liaison officer between the OSS, British Intelligence, the FBI, the Department of State, and the White House. While working with Donovan and head of British Intelligence, Sir William Stephenson, Cuneo became acquainted with Stephenson's aide, Ian Fleming. A close friendship developed between the two men. Fleming later credited Cuneo with more than half the plot for Goldfinger and all of the basic plot of Thunderball. For his service during the war, Cuneo was decorated by Italy, Great Britain, and the City of Genoa.

As a lawyer, Cuneo was an authority on libel and constitutional law, especially in the freedom of the press. He represented Walter Winchell during Winchell's most influential period. In his later years, although he continued to practice law, Cuneo was more involved in the newspaper business and in writing. He served as president of the North American Newspaper Alliance and was later editor-at-large of the Saturday Evening Post. For a number of years he wrote a syndicated column, "Take It or Leave It," which appeared three times a week. The success of the column led to an offer to take over the "National Whirligig," the original "news behind the news" column which appeared five days a week. Cuneo also wrote several books including The Dynamics of World History, Science and History, and Life with Fiorello.

Cuneo, who died in March 1988, was married to Margaret Watson who predeceased him in 1976. The couple had two children, Sandra and Jonathan.
