Rab Carrington built his company on two things: A deep understanding of what climbers and mountaineers need, and a commitment to practical gear that works. It's this down to earth, honest approach that still informs the design and testing process linking us firmly to that modest beginning in 1980's Sheffield. Those same qualities of innovation, integrity and function have endured, remaining at the heart of the Rab® brand today.

Montane has become synonymous with lightweight and breathable clothing and equipment. We were the first to push the limits of single layer mountain clothing and then, later realising the true value of windproof clothing. This was probably the most innovative piece of windproof garment design since Fridtjof Nansen, whilst planning the first crossing of Greenland, realised that windproofing was the secret to moving quickly and comfortably in the mountains.

CRAGHOPPERS

Back in 1965 when Craghoppers hit upon the idea of turning a passion for travel into a bona fide business, they felt like they were embarking on an exciting and at times perilous trip into the unknown. Their perseverance paid off and they are now recognised as a global outdoor and adventure travel specialist. The world may have moved on over the last 50 years but their mission remains the same – to create comfortable and practical clothing ranges to help our customers stay on the trail as long as possible.

Gosh, is it really that long ago that we were making duffels and packs for the Pentagon?

It seems just like yesterday. Maybe that's because our military roots still run strong through everything we do. Because even though we've come a long way when it comes to design, we still like to build our bags and luggage to the same, life-saving standards as we did over 60 years ago.
