FROM THE PODIUM

Has it really been fourteen months since the COVID-19 pandemic changed our world? I can't decide if that time has gone quickly or slowly...perhaps both. Whatever the case, we have all had to reimagine our personal world both professionally and personally. I truly hope that you are safe, healthy, and have been able to maintain a positive outlook for your students. This is a time when we have to give ourselves some grace and leeway, and certainly the same applies to our students. We are ALL having a tough time, or at least some days when we question, wonder, and dream of what things used to be like and how much we took for granted.

At the moment we are hopeful of a return to some sense of normalcy for the coming fall as many of our institutions prepare for a "back to normal" school year. What will our ensembles look like? Will we still have to use mitigations? No one can say for sure, and one thing we've had to learn over the last year or so is to be resilient. I expect the fall will require our resiliency once again. But we must meet the challenges, because no less than the future of our art form is at stake! There is no giving up.

Whatever the future holds, CBDNA is poised to take the challenges head on. Until then, please take some time to breathe and get away from work for a bit. I suspect we will need all our energy in the coming months.

Mark Spede
National President, CBDNA

COMMISSIONS/PREMIERES

Talitha Cumi - Sydney Kjerstad

Sydney Kjerstad, a New York/Colorado composer specializing in writing music for video games, was commissioned by Carthage College as part of the 150th Anniversary of Carthage Women Celebration to compose a work for double woodwind quintet. The resulting "Talitha Cumi" was premiered on May 15, 2020 in virtual format by the chamber winds group AMATI, led by conductor James Ripley. The Facebook event included introductory remarks, relating the background of the biblical story of Jesus raising the daughter of Jarius with the words "Talitha Cumi", or "Little Girl, Arise". The four-minute selection uses motives based on the spoken text rhythm rather than any overt programmatic narrative.

NEWS

Carthage College was able to invite three outstanding female composers for the 150th Anniversary to contribute to the celebration. Earlier in the year, the Wind Orchestra premiered Judy Bozone's "Rise Up!", and Jocelyn Hagen's "Shieldmaiden", both of which were very well received. Hagen's work was premiered in Japan during the January 2020 tour of the Wind Orchestra.

DISSERTATIONS

Developing Successful Conductors: A Survey of Feedback Methods for Undergraduate Instrumental Conducting Courses

LaToya Alexandra Webb

Submitted to the Graduate Faculty of Auburn University in partial fulfillment of the requirements for the Degree of Doctor of Philosophy, August 8, 2020

Few studies have explored feedback methods in undergraduate instrumental conducting courses. The purpose of this quantitative study was to investigate the various methods of verbal (spoken/written) and nonverbal feedback and to compare and contrast instructors' perceptions of feedback based on their attributes, school, and course characteristics. Undergraduate instrumental conducting instructors from the College Band Directors National Association (CBDNA), "Conducting Pedagogy" listserve, and the Historically Black Colleges and Universities National

Band Directors Consortium (HBCU-NBDC) professional members' email list ( $N = 109$ ), completed a web-based Qualtrics survey titled "Undergraduate Conducting Feedback" developed from previous studies (Boardman, 2000; Marrs, 2016; Rowe & Wood, 2008). The survey addressed five constructs: School Characteristics, Course Characteristics, Methods of Feedback, Perceptions of Feedback, and Demographic Profile.

The following research questions were devised to gain further understanding of undergraduate instrumental conducting courses and the various types of verbal and nonverbal feedback.

1. What is the relationship between the types of feedback and class time?
2. What is the relationship between the demographic information and the perceptions of feedback?
3. Does class size, allotted class time, and years of experience teaching undergraduate instrumental conducting predict perceptions of feedback?
4. Based on the different methods of provided feedback, what are the most frequently used course activities in undergraduate instrumental conducting courses?

Both descriptive statistics and various parametric inferential statistical analysis tests were used to describe and generalize about undergraduate instrumental conducting instructors. Pearson correlation results indicated no significant relationships between verbal and nonverbal feedback and allotted class time. A series of one-way MANOVA analyses revealed instructors' perceptions of feedback. No significant differences were found for gender, academic title, primary instrument, highest degree earned, institution type, or U.S. region. However, a significant difference was found among instructors' perceptions of nonverbal feedback based on race. Multiple regression analyses determined if class size, allotted class time, and years of experience teaching undergraduate instrumental conducting predicted instructors' perceptions of feedback. Allotted class time was a significant predictor of instructors' perceptions of written feedback. Instructors indicated using "conducting peers" as a course activity more frequently in combination with verbal (spoken/written) and nonverbal feedback.

Recommendations for future research include studying undergraduates' perceptions of their conducting instructor's verbal and nonverbal feedback concerning frequency and effectiveness. Another recommendation includes providing conducting workshops and symposiums offering guidance on useful and meaningful verbal and nonverbal feedback. The last recommendation includes encouragement for instructors to seek additional opportunities to learn and become more comfortable with various tools for providing feedback.
