Reflection -

In our second week of Lent, let us again continue with words from Pope Emeritus Benedict XVI, "Luke is the only one of the Evangelists who begins his account by indicating the purpose of Jesus' ascent: He "went up on the mountain to pray" (Lk 9:28). It is in the context of Jesus' prayer that he now explains the event that the three disciples are to witness: "And as he was praying, the appearance of his face was altered, and his clothes became dazzling white" (Lk 9:29). The Transfiguration is a prayer event; it displays visibly what happens when Jesus talks with his Father: the profound interpenetration of his being with God, which then becomes pure light. In his oneness with the Father, Jesus is himself "light from light." The reality that he is in the deepest core of his being, which Peter tried to express in his confession- that reality becomes perceptible to the senses at this moment: Jesus' being in the light of God, his own being-light as Son.

At this point Jesus' relation to the figure of Moses as well as the differences between the two become apparent: "As he came down from the mountain, Moses did not know that the skin of his face shone because he had been talking with God" (Ex 34:29-35). Because Moses has been talking with God, God's light streams upon him and makes him radiant. But the light that causes him to shine comes upon him from the outside, so to speak. Jesus, however, shines from within; he does not simply receive light, but he himself is light from light. Yet, Jesus' garment of white light at the Transfiguration speaks of our future as well. In apocalyptic literature, white garments are an expression of heavenly beings-the garments of angels and of the elect. In this vein the Apocalypse of John-the Book of Revelation-speaks of the white garments that are worn by those who have been saved. But it also tells us something new: The garments of the elect are white because they have washed themselves in the blood of the Lamb (Rev. 7:14); this means that through Baptism they have been united with Jesus' Passion, and his passion is the purification that restores to us the original garment lost through our sin. Through Baptism we are clothed with Jesus in light and we ourselves become light."

Consider this second week of Lent the gift of your Baptism and all that Our Heavenly Father has procured for you through this great gift. He has given you His life and Light. It is through the Sacraments (especially Eucharist) and prayer that we allow this light to shine more brightly as we become more unified with His Will.
