We would like to welcome you to the inaugural issue of Nothing But Net - a magazine geared toward hardcore high school basketball recruiting enthusiasts.

It is our intention to bring to life in living color the top faces and stories of high school basketball as well as preview the college and NBA stars of tomorrow. We will also from time-to-time touch upon junior college and NCAA basketball as well as leave open the future possibility of writing about interesting pro topics like the NBA Draft.

This first issue will include our initial class-by-class national rankings (the top prospects from the 2012, 2013, 2014 and 2015 classes) as well as profile stories of a few high school stars like 2012 NBN Player of the Year Shabazz Muhammad and Grant Jerrett.

Our NBN website - www.nbnmagazine.com - will host the online version of our magazine as well as contain up-to-the-minute stories, columns, blogs and information about current and upcoming events.

We hope that you will make us a part of your circle of sources for high school basketball and look forward to improving our publication issue-by-issue.

Enjoy!

AARON GORDON

By Sean Ceglinsky

Gordon has made some significant progress, indeed. His road, however, had speed-bumps along the way.

One of the obstacles standing in the way of being known as his own man was for Gordon to gain a better understanding that he could be as athletically successful as his father Ed. Given time and effort, of course. The family's patriarch played basketball and football at San Diego State in the 1980's before a brief stint in the NFL with the New England Patriots.

The next deterrent was attempting to live up to the hype that comes along with being known as the younger brother of Drew Gordon. Also an Archbishop Mitty in Northern California product, his older sibling was a prized recruit following a standout four-year career on the prep circuit. He committed to UCLA and played two years for the Bruins. A transfer to New Mexico followed where his stock did some much-needed improving in the eyes of NBA scouts.

"There was a time when people had to no clue about who I was. They knew my brother and my family name though," Aaron Gordon said. "Things have changed. I feel like I'm starting to blow up. My time is now and I want to take advantage of this chance."

Rest assured, he's taking steps in the right direction. Never was that more evident than last season. As a junior, Gordon averaged 22.9 points and 12.8 rebounds per game to lift Archbishop Mitty to a second consecutive California Division II championship.

For his well-rounded efforts, he was named the state's Mr. Basketball and the state's Player of the Year by Cal-Hi Sports. He was the first underclassman to receive the honor since 2000 when Tyson Chandler from Compton (Calif.) Dominguez won as a junior. Jason Kidd duplicated the feat in 1991, also as a junior, with Alameda (Calif.) St. Joseph Notre Dame.

"I want to be No. 1 player in high school basketball, I'm not quite there yet, but I think that I can do it," Gordon said. "I'm not trying to be cocky or conceited, but I want to be the best. I want to show people that I can be the kid. That's my mentality right now."

In terms of being the nation's top prospect, Gordon is worthy a candidate. College coaches seem to be under the impression that Jabari Parker from Chicago (Ill.) Simeon is the best of the bunch. Perhaps rightfully so given his particularly impressive resume.

Nevertheless, the gurus from recruiting services such as ESPN, Rivals and Scout, appear to be on the same page and rank Gordon among the best around.

Despite a recent foot injury, Gordon is on the mend, nearly fully recovered, and he has a handful of scholarship offers on the table. Kansas and Kentucky are the most well-known programs interested in his services. Also, multiple schools in the Pac-12 Conference have been in contact with him at some point. Gordon does not have a leader, however. "Aaron had to deal with some different things coming up through the ranks, he hasn't had it as bad as some others, but there have been challenges," Kennedy said. "He's had a high-profile older brother and was forced to create a name for himself. Then, he was considered as the West Coast's best player. But not the nation's best. That's a title he wanted for himself."

"Thing about Aaron is: He has a motor that doesn't stop. When people underestimate him, that makes him work harder. Not many kids have that kind of makeup. He has a bright future ahead of him. We're talking about a kid with potential to play in the NBA."

It will be interesting to see if he fulfills his promise and plays professionally at some point down the road. In the meantime, Gordon no longer has to worry about living up to perceived lofty expectations. He has arrived. With his own identity.

Living in the proverbial shadows of family members, and peers for that matter, was an all too familiar way of going about business for Aaron Gordon in the not so distant past. Frustrated most times, with seemingly no end in sight, he stayed the course.

Despite the constant comparisons, sometimes fair or not, the 6-foot-7 senior forward from San Jose (Calif.) Archbishop Mitty High recently carved out his all-important niche on the national basketball landscape. Equally important during the whole process, Gordon developed into one of the country's premier prospects in the 2013 recruiting class.

"There has always been a lot of pressure on Aaron, even when he was still a raw talent," Archbishop Mitty coach Tim Kennedy said. "Give him credit though, he's been able to come a long way in a short period of time. That kid has something special in him."

CLIFTON ALEXANDER

By Sean Ceglinsky

One of the golden rules in the game of basketball is: Stop the ball. That's easier said than done when Cliff Alexander is in the open court and leading the fast-break. Opposing teams, in fact, have recently had a particularly difficult time finding a way to stop the high-profile 2014 prospect from Chicago (Ill.) Curie High both on and off the court.

For example, the 6-foot-9 and 240-plus pound center was dribbling across half-court earlier this year with his AAU team, D-Rose All-Stars. A direct path to the basket presented itself seconds later. And once Alexander spotted the opening down the heart of the lane, there was no stopping him from doing some serious damage. No way. No how.

He gathered himself at the top of the key, near the three-point arc, built momentum and took a couple big steps, one on each side of the free-throw line. Determined to finish strong at the goal, Alexander grabbed the ball with both hands and prepared to attack to the rim. What happened next might be difficult for some to believe.

He elevated, threw down a thunderous dunk and shattered the backboard. Small shards of glass flew through the air and rained down on his head and shoulders. The court was littered thereafter, of course. Accordingly, play was stopped as the clean-up crew went to work. Surprisingly, Alexander managed to survive the whole sequence with no thing more than a couple scratches after a undergoing a thorough evaluation from the training staff.

Stop the ball. It's a fundamental part of the game. Stop Cliff Alexander. It's not going to happen.

"Alexander has been on fire. He's near the top of our 2014 national rankings," said Van Coleman, the national recruiting analyst for Nothing But Net Magazine. "He's a physical specimen who can dominate the paint. There's a lot to like about him." Defensively, he blocks shots with the best in the business at the high school level. He can Windex the boards like Mr. Clean too. He has the ability to score on the blocks, with some much improved foot work on the offense end of the floor. He can finish with either hand in the post up. No longer just a drop-and-dunk player, he can kiss it off the glass or pop out and knock down the 10-to-12 footer which makes him as tough to stop as Elton Brand at the same point in his development. Cliff Alexander is a name we're going hear about for a while."

For those who have not seen Alexander shatter the aforementioned backboard, we suggest that you take a look. The video is all over YouTube. "Things happened so fast, I had the ball, saw a lane to the bucket, and the rest is history," Alexander said. "The only thing I was thinking about was dunking the ball and getting back on defense. The next thing you know, glass was everywhere. It was crazy.

"There has been a lot of hype surrounding me, but I want people to know that I'm more than a dunker. I feel like my game is starting to come together. I feel the most comfortable on defense, rebounding and blocking shots. My game on offense is getting better too. I have room for improvement, but being the best player in the country is my goal. I'm focused on that."

Alexander was about as focused as they come earlier this year at the Pangos All-American Camp in Long Beach (Calif.). In front of tons of scouts and multiple members of the media, he opened plenty of eyes during the three-day event and left a lasting impression on those who had presumably thought of him as one of those Internet sensations.

Ultimately, Alexander was named Most Outstanding Player. He became the first underclassmen to win the honor in the event's 10-year history.

Taking home the MOP award at the Pangos All-American Camp was significant considering the list of previous winners. Before careers in the NBA, James Harden, Brandon Jennings, Harrison Barnes and John Wall were the other individuals to take home the hardware.

"I loved the Pangos All-American Camp, it was a great experience and I felt like I made a good name for myself there," Alexander said. "I had the chance to see how I stack up against some of the best competition at one of the nation's best camps. I take a lot of pride in winning the MOP award too. I want to go back next year and defend my title."

He has proven to be unstoppable in the past. And chances are, if Alexander returns to the Pangos All-American Camp, he could duplicate the feat.

In the meantime, college coaches and scouts alike figure to keep a close eye on him. Alexander has scholarship offers from 10 schools, most notably Michigan State, Illinois, Indiana and Ohio State. Also, powerhouses Kansas and Kentucky are interested.

Remember, he's young, only entering his junior year. By the time his senior season rolls around, there's a distinct possibility Alexander will have many college options. It wouldn't be the least bit surprising if most of the top schools in the country offer him. "This has been a fun year, people know about me, they know my name now, things have been going good for me," Alexander said. "If I work hard, I can accomplish my goals. I think that once I set my mind on something, I feel like I can't be stopped."

GRANT JERRETT

By Sean Ceglinsky

At 6-foot-9 and 220-plus pounds, Grant Jerrett looks the part.

Make no mistake, most observers agree that he possesses the all-important size necessary to make a major impact each and every time he steps on the basketball court. There is more to Jerrett than merely an ideal frame for the game though. Much more, in fact.

A well-rounded interior game separated the former La Verne (Calif.) Lutheran High standout from most of his peers. A deft touch from the perimeter, especially for a post player, will likely make the Arizona-bound Jerrett a match-up problem for opposing bigs once he adjusts to college life with the Wildcats. Offensively, signs point to him being the total package.

On the defensive end of the floor, Jerrett is capable of getting the job done too. An unrelenting will to grab seemingly every rebound from counterparts in his general vicinity is a valuable asset. Blocking shots and stepping in passing lanes for steals comes naturally. "Grant gets better with each day, with every practice, every game, every jumper, every rebound. He's a special player," La Verne Lutheran coach Eric Cooper said. "The best is yet to come. Once he realizes that he can dominate games, everybody better watch out for him."

Jerrett caught the eye of many of the nation's top colleges during his career at La Verne Lutheran. He received the most attention from schools in the Pac-12 Conference, however. That fact most likely led to his commitment to the Wildcats in late November of 2010.

There was, however, a time when he wasn't a household name.

Jerrett played varsity ball all four years at La Verne Lutheran. His first season, unfortunately, was cut a tad bit short when he broke his foot on two different occasions.

He took a big step forward as a sophomore, no pun intended. Jerrett put himself on the map with more than respectable averages 18 points and 10 rebounds per game.

"Everything happens for a reason, I'm just thankful all of those injuries are behind me and I'm healthy now," Jerrett said. "I feel stronger than ever, which is a good thing because I know I have a big target on my back nowadays. I'm always up for the challenge though."

That was blatantly obvious as a junior with the Trojans. Jerrett was unstoppable, at times, and averaged 18 points, 10 rebounds and more than three blocks every night.

There was little, or no, drop-off this past season. As a senior with the focus on him, Jerrett averaged 22 points, 10 rebounds and three blocks per game. Not too shabby. "Grant was our leader," said junior point guard Eric Cooper Jr., a good prospect in his own right who is receiving his share of recruiting interest. "He was factor every time we went down the floor. When we needed a big bucket, I looked in his direction because he has delivered so many times for us in the past. He was the kind of teammate you wanted around."

Jerrett was also force to be reckon with on the AAU circuit. As a freshman, he worked himself into the rotation for traditional powerhouse Belmont Shore, not an easy task. Nevertheless, Jerrett played alongside DeAndre Daniels and Cezar Guerrero, both of whom have since moved onto college. Daniels is with UConn nowadays and Guerrero has found his niche at Oklahoma State.

"Grant is the most skilled front-court player I've ever coached," said Belmont Shore coach Dinos Trigonis.

Jerrett was considered the top prospect in the greater Los Angeles area, well ahead of Gabe York from Orange Lutheran (Calif.), Woodland Hills (Calif.) Taft's Anthony January and a pair of players from Santa Ana (Calif.) Mater Dei, Katin Reinhardt and Xavier Johnson.

On the national level, Jerrett's name was mentioned in the same sentence as Las Vegas (NV) Bishop Gorman's Shabazz Muhammad, Chesterton (IN) Brewster Academy's Mitch McGary, and Arlington (TX) Grace Preparatory Academy's Isaiah Austin, among others.

"What else can you say about Grant? He gets the job done, bottom line, and all the credit he receives is worthy," Cooper Sr. said. "He has the game to match the size. In some ways, he reminds me of Kevin McHale, long and lean with plenty of tools. Grant is his own man. He has a bright future ahead of him. We were happy to have him around for a few years."

Jerrett, on the other hand, is far from happy. Or so it would seem. It appears as if he still has something to prove. The goal is to be successful at the next level.

Step one starts when he arrives on Arizona's campus. "I liked everything about the Wildcats, the school, the coaches, just everything about the place," Jerrett said. "In the end, I think the decision was easy for me."

In terms of his decision, and whether it was the right or wrong choice, only time will tell. This much is certain: Jerrett has the size and skill set to make a difference.

TYLER DORSEY

By Sean Ceglinsky

Sophomore slump? Don't count on it. Tyler Dorsey displayed glimpses of immense potential as freshman last season at a small school in Los Angeles (Calif.). The debut on the varsity level was so impressive that it didn't take long for his name to be mentioned among nation's premier prospects in his class.

An encore effort from Dorsey as a sophomore is expected, only this time around it will be at Bellflower (Calif.) St. John Bosco after a transfer. And based on his well-rounded skill set and mature approach to the game given his relative inexperience, signs point to the 6-foot-4 and 175-pound underclassmen being capable of living up to the constant hype currently surrounding him.

"Yeah, I have heard some of the talk, but I try not to worry about it all," Dorsey said. "My only focus is working hard on the court, that's it, and letting things fall into place."

Mission accomplished. He did just that: Let things fall into place in his audition at the prep level as a ninth-grader at Los Angeles (Calif.) Ribet Academy. For those searching for proof of a breakout effort, one need not look any further than the statistics Dorsey delivered.

The numbers, after all, never lie. He averaged 22 points per game, to go along with nine rebounds, six assists and three steals a season ago. Again, the numbers never lie.

"I know he was young, but honestly, I didn't worry about Tyler when he was on the floor," Ribet Academy coach William Middlebrooks said. "He was under some pressure, in some big games in some big environments, and I think he handled himself. He didn't play like a freshman, not in my book. This kid is going places. He has a bright future ahead of him."

Playing at a major NCAA Division

I program appears to be Dorsey's destiny. That is, three years from now, following what figures to be a standout effort on the prep circuit.

Dorsey already has a handful of scholarship offers on the table, mostly from schools on the West Coast. Pac-12 Conference teams such as Arizona, Oregon State and USC have shown the most interest thus far. Also worth mentioning, UConn is one of his potential suitors.

"I want to be known as one of the nation's best players, that's my goal, that what I'm working for."

Tyler Dorsey

Apparently, college coaches aren't the only ones enamored with Dorsey. Recruiting services such as ESPN, Rivals and Scout seem to think he possesses plenty of upside.

Dorsey has done nothing to tarnish his growing reputation on the AAU scene. His Belmont Shore coach, Dinos Trigonis, said: "Tyler is the most talented freshman guard that I've ever coached." The statement is all the more impressive considering Trigonis has worked with NBA guards such as Brandon Jennings, DeMar DeRozan, Julian Stone and Darius Morris in the not so distant past.

Dorsey could be heading in a similar direction. Given time and development, of course.

"I want to be a McDonald's All-American when I'm a senior," Dorsey said. "I want to be known as one of the nation's best players, that's my goal, that what I'm working for."

So far, so good. Give his success as a freshman, as well as his high ceiling, there's reason to believe that Dorsey will take the next step in his development as a sophomore.

PLAYER OF THE YEAR
SHABAZZ MUHAMMAD

SHABAZZ MUHAMMAD

Meet the NBN National Player of the Year

By Sean Ceglinsky

With his head seemingly on a swivel, Shabazz Muhammad dribbles up the court, both eyes constantly surveying the floor in front of him as a pesky opponent attempts to make things as difficult as possible as he advances the ball.

The one-time Las Vegas (Nev.) Bishop Gorman High star and soon-to-be UCLA freshman uses a one-bounce dribble to the left and a quick crossover move back to the right side to free up some much-needed space. Seconds later, Muhammad is driving down the lane into the heart of a defense that is quickly collapsing around him.

When you're considered one of the nation's premier prospects around, as he is, attention is something that simply comes with the territory.

Amid all of the confusion, Muhammad collects himself with a disciplined jump

"Shabazz Muhammad is the No. 1 player in the country and his signing is huge for our program here."

Bruins Coach

stop at the free-throw line and a short jumper presents itself.

On the wing, he catches a glimpse of his teammate making a diving cut directly to the basket. Out of the corner of his eye stands another teammate, this one positioned well beyond the 3-point arc and patiently waiting for a potential kick-out pass.

A well-placed bounce pass underneath is an option. That is, until the defense recovers in time to erase the passing lane. A quick rotation to deny an opportunity for a perimeter shot leaves Muhammad with an all-important choice to make.

No problem, however. He lives for these situations. Fully aware of his surroundings, Muhammad lofts up a little floater in the lane. The hand in his face and defender draped all over his hip offer little, or no, resistance. The shot falls, of course.

Another bucket for Muhammad. Another difficult decision made with relative ease.

Another fundamentally sound play by one of the best in the business.

The scenario has played out more than a few times during a decorated prep career. Never was that more evident than this past season when he was on top of his game from start to finish. And based on his well-rounded efforts as a senior, Muhammad was the unanimous choice as the inaugural Nothing But Net Magazine Player of the Year.

The accolade was one of many the 6-foot-5 and 200-plus pound lefty has recently received. Being named player of the year by ESPN and Parade Magazine were among the other honors. Muhammad was also selected most valuable player of the McDonald's All-American Game, Jordan Brand Classic and Pangos All-American Camp.

The list goes on and on. Few resumes are better.

Muhammad, however, is not concerned with the past. Similar to the way he approaches the game when the ball is in his hands and the defense is geared toward stopping him, his eyes are focused on what lies ahead. No need to look behind. None whatsoever.

Given his upside, his future appears limitless.

The first order of business is adjusting to college life at UCLA. Helping to restore some of the Bruins lost tradition is the ultimate goal. "I think it's a challenge, knowing how bad they were these last two years, it's a challenge to get them back up to the top knowing they're the leaders in championships with 11," Muhammad said.

Signs point to him being more than capable of changing the culture at UCLA. At the very least, take a step, or two, in the right direction.

"He's a special, special talent and has so many attributes that will help our team," Bruins coach Ben Howland said after receiving a commitment from Muhammad. "He's physically strong right now to be an impact player right away."

Howland should consider himself lucky to have landed Muhammad. He did, after all, hold scholarship offers from several powerhouse programs before picking UCLA in mid-April. Muhammad could have played anywhere in the country.

The final list of potential suitors included Duke and Kentucky. Apparently, the Bruins were the best possible fit for Muhammad.

"Shabazz Muhammad is the No. 1 player in the country and his signing is huge for our program here," Howland said. "I'm just so excited because he is a “We’ve been recruiting Shabazz for three years now, so this was a long process and we felt good about it for quite a long time. He brings so many skills to the table. He is very athletic and is a very strong and explosive player who is a very good passer and scorer and is an outstanding shooter. He will be a very special player for us.”

Whether that happens, or not, remains to be seen. One thing is fairly certain: Muhammad proved to be a special player at the high school level.

Success didn’t happen overnight though.

It took time for him to hone his craft.

He battled for playing time as a freshman at Bishop Gorman, and eventually, worked himself into the lineup for the Gaels. As expected, Muhammad took a step forward during his sophomore season. No one could have predicted what happened next.

Muhammad started to make a name for himself on the national level after a breakout effort as junior. As the go-to-

He did not disappoint as a senior. His scoring average approached the 27-point-per-game plateau. As a result, college coaches and recruiting services, alike, kept a close eye on his every move. Muhammad was on the map and wasn't going anywhere.

"A player like Shabazz doesn't come around very often, he's a special player, a big-time talent," Bishop Gorman coach Grant Rice said during the season.

With the added attention, both on off the court from the likes of opposing players and coaches along with the media, Muhammad has not missed a beat. With his head seemingly on a swivel, both eyes remain focused on the prize. In this case, of course, it's carrying the torch of being named the inaugural Nothing But Net Magazine.

FRENEMIES

Bitter Rivals. Better Friends.

By Frank Burlison

Basketball logic would seem to dictate that, on all fronts, Katin Reinhardt and Gabe York should share something approaching the fiercest of rivalries, on and off the court:

*Each was rated among the elite basketball backcourt players in the nation for the 2011-12 season and were strong candidates for the 2012 McDonald's All-American team, as well as the California State Player of the Year.

*Both attended Orange County parochial schools that are members of, arguably, the toughest athletic league – the Trinity League – in the California Interscholastic Federation section (the Southern Section).

Reinhardt graduated from mega-power Mater Dei in Santa Ana, while York is now an alum of Orange Lutheran, located about 11 miles north just off the 55 Freeway from Mater Dei's campus.

Mater Dei's boys' basketball program has lost just one game to a league opponent since the Trinity League was formed in 2006. That opponent was Orange Lutheran when the Lancers – including York – stunned the Monarchs and Reinhardt, 59-56, on Jan. 7 of 2011. The Monarchs dropped the hammer, 84-61, three weeks later during the return engagement in Santa Ana.

Mater Dei swept the Lancers in their two Trinity League meetings this past season but each went on to win Southern Section crowns (Mater Dei in the I-AA Division, Orange Lutheran in I-A). So, now you understand why Reinhardt and York are such "bitter rivals", right?

Only both would say you're misreading the situation. The two immensely gifted hoopsters – each with near-laser focus on comparable goals – are actually buddies! "I would say that we're really good friends, to be honest," Reinhardt said matter-of-factly last season. "We talk a lot, off the court, and have hung out a few times together."

Oh, there is a "rivalry" of sorts. "There is definitely a 'friendly' rivalry during the games," York chimed in. "We both want to win all of our games so, when our teams play it's obviously going to be pretty intense and serious. But we're never disrespectful to one another. We've hung out a few times outside of basketball. There's no 'hatred' at all. We're very friendly away from the court."

With York playing on his team's varsity as a freshman and Reinhardt as a Mater Dei junior varsity performer as a freshman, they didn't really get on speaking terms until they were sophomores. "We knew who each other was, but we really didn't 'know' each other (as freshmen)," Reinhardt explained. That spring, they played in an all-star game together in Mission Viejo and acknowledged one another, Reinhardt added. Later, they played at the same Dinos Trigonis-run event in the Long Beach area "and we started talking a lot more," York said.

There was another Trigonis event in the spring of 2011 – pitting some of Southern California's best juniors – "and we guarded each other for a few possessions," Reinhardt remembered. Then, in June of last year, they both attended the NBA Players Association Camp at the University of Virginia (in Charlottesville) "and we hung out and did a lot of stuff together there," Reinhardt added.

Like most hoops followers who have watched them play, with their high school teams as well as on the camp and travel ball circuit, they've developed deep appreciation for their respective games and skills. "He is so explosive," Reinhardt said of the 6-foot-3 York. "His jumping ability is amazing. He gets off the floor so fast and that makes it so tough to bother his (jump) shot."

Reinhardt doesn't play the game nearly as "vertically" as does York but it doesn't mean that the two-time All-Southern Section from Orange Lutheran, who signed with the

"There is definitely a 'friendly' rivalry during the games." -Gabe York

University of Arizona during the November signing period, isn't as impressed with his Mater Dei counterpart.

"He can do so many things with the ball at 6-5," York said of Reinhardt, who will be a freshman at UNLV this fall. "He has a very smooth (jump) shot. Watching him you want to go out and work that much harder on getting better."

Long Beach-based ESPN Recruiting Insider Joel Francisco has probably watched each of the guards more than any other evaluator in the country. "Getting buckets inside and out is easy when you can catapult to the rim or convert mid-range jumpers on a consistent basis," Francisco said of York.

As for Reinhardt "he can score at will, off the dribble, from anywhere on the floor," he said. "If his scoring opportunity is negated by a defense or a defender, he is apt to deliver on-the-money passes – often of the spectacular variety."

Even if they had not developed a friendly relationship, York thinks he would still have a pretty good clue about what has motivated Reinhardt to work as hard as he has to make the steady progress he has while at Mater Dei. "From my point of view, we both have the same goal and want to get to the same place," he said.

"Everyone wants to get to the NBA. We're not going to settle for anything less. We both work so hard on our games – that's what we're about. And it's great that we got to play against them (in league) with such a high level of competition."

As for that "rivalry", the "Mater Dei-Orange Lutheran" aspect of it may have been retired upon their respective graduations.

Of course, they'd both love to start another aspect of that rivalry, say, during a game in Tucson or Las Vegas – or, better yet, in the NCAA Tournament.

And you can safely assume both would gladly make it "Rivalry – the NBA years", as well.

"I would say that we're really good friends, to be honest." - Katin Reinhardt

PANGOS ALL-AMERICAN CAMP

From Humble Beginnings to one of the Nation's Best

By Frank Burlison

It made its debut in June of 2003 and registered a blip on the high school/camp/grassroots hoops radar:

A high school basketball camp was held in the Southern California community of Anaheim – so far west into Orange County that three-court Warrior Center couldn't be referred to as "near Disneyland".

It was called the "Pangos All-American Camp" and those who asked – or cared – were told that Pangos was the name of an athletic apparel company based in Asia.

Events sponsored by Nike, Reebok and adidas ruled the high school hoops summer camp scene. Pangos? Seemingly it was a camp that was going to be dominated by aspiring "All-Americans" who only wished they could get invitations to those prestigious events fronted by the major "shoe companies".

Fast forward more than eight years and the only camps carrying more weight with players and recruiting analysts than the Pangos event – the brainchild of Dinos Trigonis – have "NBA" (as in "NBA Players Association Camp") and "LeBron" (as in the Nike-affiliated LeBron James Skills Academy) attached to their names.

And Trigonis' camp – which still has Pangos in its moniker although there is no such apparel company in existence any longer – has become a near-“must attend” event, for both players and recruiting “gurus”.

It’s now considered the event that unofficially tips off the two-month “summer season”.

“The kids go to Dinos’ camp knowing that, if they perform well, it may lead to an invitation to the NBA Camp or a Nike Skills (Academy) spot”

ESPN Sr. College Basketball Recruiting Analyst Dave Telep

Back-to-back sessions of the camp (2010/’11) camps highlighted by the likes of Shabazz Muhammad and Andre Drummond (2011), Anthony Davis and LeBryan Nash (2010), Harrison Barnes (2009), John Wall (2008) and Brandon Jennings and DeMar DeRozan (2007) have seen to that.

Wall was the first pick in the 2010 NBA Draft, while Davis earned that honor in the most recent draft just a few months after leading the University of Kentucky Wildcats to the NCAA championship.

Jennings and DeRozan are well-established “future all-stars” after three seasons in the NBA after being lottery selections by Milwaukee and Toronto, respectively, in 2009.

Drummond (by Detroit) and Barnes (by Golden State) were lottery selections this past June.

Muhammad (the consensus National Player of the Year at Las Vegas Bishop Gorman last spring) is a top contender for National Freshman of the Year honors at UCLA this coming season while Nash will be one of the top sophomore forwards in the country at Oklahoma State. "From a national perspective, it's certainly become a 'must-see event,'" Scout.com national recruiting analyst Evan Daniels said. "It's no longer just a 'West Coast' camp – there are some of the best players from the West, Midwest, South and East."

"All of those guys didn't get a chance to get invited to a national camp. There was nothing really like it in the West so I knew there was an opportunity it could be successful."

Dinos Trigonis

The camp has bounced around the Southern California since its debut in Orange County, with a couple of stops in the Galen Center (USC), as well as Long Beach (Cabrillo High) and, in June of 2011, Cal State Dominguez Hills (in Carson). It returned to Cabrillo High last June.

It's not the gymnasium that's the lure, although a first-ever visit to Southern California – home to beaches, Hollywood, more beaches and, of course, Disneyland – has to be enticing for a lot of players.

The trip now also includes an opportunity to compete against some of the best players in the country and all that opportunity encompasses.

"The kids go to Dinos' camp knowing that, if they perform well, it may lead to an invitation to the NBA Camp or a Nike Skills (Academy) spot," ESPN Sr. College Basketball Recruiting Analyst Dave Telep suggested.

"So it's ingrained into the building process toward a great summer. I really appreciate the work Dinos puts into the event. He does a good job of keeping out the guys who aren't good enough and giving the 'next man up' a chance to show what he can do."

Trigonis, who grew up in the Southland community of Long Beach – host to more well-known athletes per capita, in every sport, than, possibly any other city in America – and initially made an impact on the hoops scene with his Belmont Shore program, spends much of the year prepping for the June event that has become the jewel of his basketball resume.

"Memorial Weekend signals the end of the 'spring' season," Trigonis said, setting up his next suggestion perfectly.

"And my event is looked upon the start of the 'summer' season – it's sort of like the Australian Open (the opening event on the Grand Slam of Tennis in January)."

Trigonis didn't have much trouble attracting many of California's – and the rest of the West's – best prospects in the early years.

Current NBA players James Harden, Austin Daye and Russell Westbrook all got their first "national" exposure during the camps.

"All of those guys didn't get a chance to get invited to a national camp," Trigonis said. "There was nothing really like it in the West so I knew there was an opportunity it could be successful." Trigonis believes the 2007 camp – held in the-then new Galen Center – was the turning point in the evolution of the event into true "national" camp.

"I think the turning point was the camp at USC with Brandon (Jennings)," he said.

"That kick-started it. Brandon went to be (rated) No. 1 (in the national class). That inspired the top, 'elite' guys to start coming."

Sure enough, Trigonis received an e-mail from a high school junior from Iowa once spring a few years ago.

"He wanted to know how you got 'invited' to the camp," Trigonis said, laughing. "A lot of kids send videos, stats or articles that have been written about them. He signed the e-mail 'Harrison Barnes.'"

Trigonis responded to the e-mail immediately. "I wrote 'Are you the Harrison Barnes from Ames High?'" he said.

"He wrote me back 'Yes, I am.' And I responded 'then you don't have to worry about an invitation.'"

"There is no doubt that the Pangos Camp has become one of the top three individual events of the summer."

Recruiting Analyst
Van Coleman

Joel Francisco, another Long Beach resident and the West Coast Recruiting "Insider" for ESPN.com, is a veteran of all the Trigonis events.

"He does so much diligent work and networking throughout the year," Francisco said of Trigonis, a graduate of the Temple law school who is as passionate about progressive politics as he is progressive basketball.

"He does such a good job with all of the 'All-Frosh/Soph Camps' he runs across the country that I expect him to lute elite-level talent to every event he runs."

Long-time Iowa-based recruiting analyst Van Coleman (Hot 100 Hoops) has the Pangos Camp on his "absolutely don't miss" list of things to do every June.

He believes any high school hoopster who aspires to being placed on the same plateau as the elite prospects in the country should have a similar check list.

"There is no doubt that the Pangos Camp has become one of the top three individual events of the summer (with the NBA and LeBron camps)," Coleman said, "and a 'must attend' event for any player who wants an opportunity to become a McDonald's All-American."

CLASS of 2012 RANKINGS

TOP 200 BY VAN COLEMAN

Now that the 2012 season is over and the post-season all-star games have ended, its time to take our last look at the top players in the Class of 2012. Their has been a huge amount of movement within the rankings as talents like Mitch McGary, Marcus Smart, Anthony Bennett, Danuel House, Tyler Lewis along with foreign import Steven Adams made major moves up the rankings during the 2011-12 season. Plus, we had a shuffling near the top of the rankings, as post summer No.2 Andre Drummond, re-classified and signed with Connecticut.

But his spot wasn't open for long as 6-10 Nerlens Noel, re-classified from the 2013 class to join the Class of 2012 and move right into that vacated number two spot. But, one thing has remained constant over the season as Shabazz Muhammad stayed at the top of our rankings with his stellar play at the City of Palms and Hoophall Classic, and during post season play ending with a 35-point record breaking performance at the Nike Hoop Summit. He may not be the top pro prospect in the class, as Noel and Austin seem to excite the pro scouts with their length and long-term potential, but he is the top performer night in and night out at the high school level playing an aggressive national schedule that Bishop Gorman has faced across the country through out the season; and with his great all-star game play held off the challenge of Noel, Anderson, and Austin down the stretch to hold the top spot, and that is why Muhammad is our No. 1 player in the Class of 2012!

Right behind Muhammad, the No. 2 spot, has been an enigma, with the departure of Drummond, the rise and slide of Mitch McGary, then the re-classification of Nerlens Noel, that in our mind, has finally answered "Who will be No. 2 behind Muhammad?" As Noel is a shot blocking machine a la Greg Oden (2006), Dwight Howard (2004) and Alonzo Mourning (1988). He is very raw offensively, but this year he has started to shown signs of becoming an offensive threat this season. He is far from complete, but the pro scouts salivate when he attacks the ball on defense or off the boards. According to most he is the number one pro prospect in the Class of 2012! Right behind him in the No. 3 spot is multi-skilled point forward 6-9 Kyle Anderson, who has led St. Anthony's into national title contention with his versatility and leadership. He is an excellent passer who can run the break or create off dribble drive. He is a unique package and tough match-up for opposing defenses. Checking in at No. 4 is the resurgent big man, 7-0 Isaiah Austin who has played with the aggression needed to make him a threat on the blocks to go with his face-up skills. He, like Noel can dominate on defense and is right behind Noel on the pro scouts future wish list. Rounding out our top five is fast rising wing forward Anthony Bennett who has been an offensive force for Findlay Prep this winter. He has range to three, can attack rim with dribble drive or dominate glass with his bounce and length.

The second five is headed by a new comer to the rankings, as well as the USA , in 7-0 post man Steven Adams who is attending prep school at Notre Dame Prep. He averaged 22 points and 18 boards to dominate play in the paint at the Adidas Nations event last August. He has continued that play at Notre Dame Prep. He is followed by at No. 7 by Kaleb Tarczewski is a physical rebounder and low block scorer who can control boards or score on the blocks at college level. The No. 8 slot goes to multi-skilled combo guard Marcus Smart who has the tools to light you up on offensive end or be a stopper on defensive end of the court. At No. 9 is Cameron Ridley, a low block scorer who also has the ability to patrol the paint and make it hard for his opponents to score in the paint. Rounding out the top ten is long and skilled face-up power forward Grant Jerrett who really blew up last July playing for Belmont Shore. He has developed an aggressive style this winter, that will make him tough to handle once he hits the collegiate hardwood.

If you couple them with the overall depth at the center and power forward spots it gives the class of 2012 one-half of the equation to what normally makes a very strong class, but unfortunately as good as the post spots are, the point guard spot's lack of top end depth brings the Class of 2012 back to average or slightly above average at best. The point position improved this summer into the season, but we don't rate a point until number twenty nationally and only include three pure floor leaders among our top thirty. That lack of depth was the story of this class in its final analysis. So with that in mind, here's our regular season ending look at the Top 200 prospects in the Class of 2012:

CLASS OF 2013 RANKINGS

TOP 150 BY VAN COLEMAN

The nation's top junior and our number one prospect is 6-8 wing man Jabari Parker, from Chicago, Illinois. Simeon and the Mac Irvin Fire, who starred for the Team USA U16 squad this past summer. He flat out just played his way to the top displaying a much improved jumper that has drawn comparisons to Paul Pierce! He is a hard worker who will continue to build his game this summer and is going to be tough to knock out of the top spot.

He is followed closely by a former No. 1, and current No. 2 rated 6-9 Julius Randle from Prestonwood Christian School in Texas . He is a versatile and skilled four man who can flat out dominate on offensive end. He has excellent facing skills and can also create opportunities for his teammates with his passing ability.

Behind him, there has been some major changes, caused by people leaving the class, as our former No. 3 prospect Nerlens Noel who moved to the Class of 2012 No. 2 spot. While former No. 7 rated wing 6-5 Chris Thomas has moved on to junior college at Chipola CC in Florida . So the new No. 3 is one of the most versatile front court players in the class in 6-7 Aaron Gordon, he can play either spot up front, but is at his best attacking the hoop off the dribble from the wing. He can score with jumper off the dribble and has tools to make plays on both ends of the court. A definite winner at the next level!

At No. 4 is talented combo guard, 6-5 Andrew Harrison who has tools to dominate game in both the open court or offensively from three, to the rim. He has tools to play either guard spot in college and will make an immediate impact at the next level. Rounding out our top five is one of the fastest risers in the class in 6-9 power forward Chris Walker. This long and lanky insider can block shots, start break off the glass and finish with highlights on other end.

The second five is headed by skilled wing scorer James Young from Troy, MI High who can knock down perimeter three or create highlights off the dribble at the rim in traffic. He has all the tools to be a big scorer at the next level. In at No. 7 is the other half of the dynamic twins, 6-5 Aaron Harrison, who joins his brother in the top ten after a big summer where he has been on fire offensively. he has range to arc and can create drive with either hand and finishes with strength in traffic. At No. 8 is one of the nation's top lead guards in 6-1 Kasey Hill from Montverde Academy who can light it up offensively or run the show in the half court game with best in the country. At No. 9 is another fast riser who blew up over the spring in 6-5 swing man Keith Frazier who can score from three or run the break, taking it off the glass and hit open man with pass in transition game. He is an excellent defender on the wing too! Rounding out the top ten is 6-9 Isaiah Hicks from Raleigh , NC Body of Christ who has the length to dominate around the hoop and quicks and handle to take it end to end in transition. He will give the Tarheels a solid future replacement for John Henson.

The class has lots of depth, so average or better is our first look projection, but it will depend on the continued development of big men like Johnathan Williams, Bee Jay Anya, Kennedy Meeks, Thomas Hamilton, Bobby Portis, Jimmy Taylor, Austin Colbert, and Moses Kingsley to raise its overall stock. It has good depth at the point, but it needs Solomon Poole, Kasey, Nate Britt, Anthony Barber, and others to join Hill among the nation's elite to continue to see the Class of 2013's stock continue to rise.

So with that in mind, here is our Pre-Summer look at the Top 150 prospects in the Class of 2013:

NBN National Top 150

CLASS OF 2014 RANKINGS

TOP 100 BY VAN COLEMAN

The Spring is done and we are getting ready for summer play, so its time to take a Pre-Summer look at the rising junior in the Class of 2014. The class of 2014 didn't see any change at the top, as the No. 1 spot still belongs to 6-7 Canadian wingman Andrew Wiggins who has been prepping at Huntington Prep in West Virginia.

He is a gifted ball handler with explosive quicks and bounce. He can flat out dominate game on the offensive end, scoring from arc to the rim, and if doubled up he will hit the open teammate with the pass. He needs to continue to develop his jumper from beyond the arc, as he is getting a strong challenge from two skilled big men. In the No.2 spot is skilled, 6-10 low block scorer Jahlil Okafor from Chicago Whitney Young and the Mac Irvin Fire. He has great hands, quick feet on the blocks, and touch to score from rim to twelve feet. Right behind him, at No.3, is the fastest rising player in the top ten, in 6-9 Cliff Alexander who has been on fire and was rated our top prospect at both the Top 100 and Pangos All-American Camp. He is a physical low post scorer and shot blocker who gets it done on both ends. In at No.4 is another wide-bodied 6-10 low block monster in Dakari Johnson who had to sit this past winter due to transfer to Montverde Academy. He is just an overpowering low block score who physically overmatches most defenders on the blocks. He should be a hungry player this spring, ready to get back on the court! Moving up to No.5 is long and athletic combo forward Noah Vonleh from New Hampton Prep. He has been impressive when we've seen him scoring from the perimeter and making highlights at the rim.

Heading the second five is the top floor general in the class in 6-1 Tyus Jones. The Howard Pulley and Apple Valley, MN point showed he can run the show against the best in the EYBL, then has had a record breaking season for Apple Valley to establish himself as a top floor general! Right behind him is his main competitor for best floor leader in our No.7 rated rising junior 6-5 combo guard Emmanuel Mudiay who has been running the show for top ten rated Grace Prep this past winter. He has the ability to score from arc or off the dribble and could push Jones for top point in the class this coming spring and summer. In the No.8 spot is versatile combo forward Trey Lyles, the 6-8 forward has all the tools to be a big-time scorer from arc or on the blocks. At No.9 is high scoring big guard Theo Pinson from Oak Ridge Military who can light up opponents off the dribble or with fast improving jumper from around the perimeter. Rounding out the top ten is one of last summer's fastest rising bigs in 6-9 power forward Chris McCullough who can score on blocks with touch, pop and knock down jumper or hit open man with pass.

It's too early to judge this class overall, as it is definitely a work in progress. But, if talents like Justise Winslow, Craig Victor, Kevon Looney, Trayvon Reed, Khadeem Lattin, Joel Barry, Leron Black, Ray Kasongo, and a number of others continue to rise and improve it could become a strong class. So with that in mind, here is our pre-summer look at the Top 100 prospects in the Class of 2014:

NBN National Top 100

Andrew Wiggins

Jahlil Okafor

Tyus Jones

Chris McCullough

Rank	Player	Hgt	Pos	City, State School	Comments
1.	Andrew Wiggins	6-7	WF	Huntington, WV Prep	Explosive wing scorer can dominate game off the dribble and finish with highlights in traffic or make big play on "D"
2.	Jahlil Okafor	6-10	C	Chicago, IL Whitney Young	Physical low block scorer who has great hands and quick feet on the blocks. He has tools to dominate glass
3.	Cliff Alexander	6-9	C/PF	Chicago, IL Curie	Fast rising big man has a lot of raw edges, but he's really come on "O", but he is dominating round hoop to go with "D"
4.	Dakari Johnson	6-10	C	Montverde, FL Academy	Man among boys physically he is still a little raw, but can flat out finish on blocks and dominate paint defensively
5.	Noah Vonleh	6-7	W/PF	New Hampton, NH School	Skilled combo can face and knock down jumper off the dribble, roll to the blocks and finish with length around the rim
6.	Tyus Jones	6-1	PG	Apple Valley, MN High	Top pure point in the glass, has explosive first step off the dribble, can finish in traffic or deliver rock to open man
7.	Emmanuel Mudiay	6-3	W/PG	Arlington, TX Grace Prep	Long and athletic combo is making transition to point and has shown he can really pass rock. He uses shot to set up drive
8.	Trey Lyles	6-8	205	Indianapolis, IN Arsenal Tech (Indiana)	This skilled combo was one consistent performer this spring, he can score from arc to the rim & has tools score off dribble
9.	Theo Pinson	6-5	WG	Oak Ridge, NC Military	Explosive scorer can create dribble drive with either hand and finish with length. Stock rises as shot continues to fall

CLASS OF 2015 RANKINGS

TOP 50 BY VAN COLEMAN

Although, they are just wrapping up their first season of high school and spring ball on the AAU circuit, a number of the nation's top freshman have made an impression on us with their play this past year for their high school and AAU teams. That play is the basis of these rankings, since it is mostly based on eyes on performance at high school events, and camps last summer featured middle school or entering high school talent.

So, we know this list is going to have major changes over the next year, but for now here's our first cut look at the Class of 2015's Top 50 as the high school season winds down and we get ready to start their first full blown summer evaluation period.

Heading our first cut look in the top spot is 6-10 power forward and face-up big man Karl Townes from Metuchen, NJ St. Joseph's. He caught our eye this winter with some dominating play in the paint including his solid mid-range jumper and ability to pass off face-up. He is an excellent shot blocker who loves to compete on the glass.. Right behind him is a real physical specimen in 6-6 KeJuan Johnson from Atlanta. he has been among the elite in the class since we first saw him as a sixth grader at John Lucas IMSC camp over two years ago. He played versus 17-Under competition last summer and showed a developing wing game, something he will have to have to remain at this lofty level and challenge for the top spot. Right behind him, at number three, is a physical power forward in 6-8 Mickey Mitchell from Arlington, TX Grace Prep He is a tireless rebounder and defender who can score around hoop or from beyond the arc with his jumper. At number four is fast rising scorer in 6-4 Malik Newman from Jackson, MS. He can play both guard spots and can light it up from three or make highlights at rim Rounding out the top five is the fastest rising talent in the top ten, and that is high scoring point guard, 5-10 Marcus Lovett from Burbank, CA who reminds us in many ways of another great California point guard Brandon Jennings. He can flat out takeover the game on the offensive end and has the competitive desire to challenge for the top spot in the class before all is done

Leading the second five is 6-4 combo guard Tyler Dorsey who can run the break or light it up from the arc or off the dribble on offensive end. He has all the tools to become a point in college. Right behind him at number seven, is long and active big man, 6-11 Stephen Zimmerman from Las Vegas Gorman, who as he adds weight and strength could challenge for the top spot nationally in the future . Up next at number eight nationally is another fast rising big man in 6-8 big man Horace Spencer from Philadelphia. He has shown an advanced skill set that let's him dominate on the offensive end of the court. At number nine is 6-8 Diamond Stone from Milwaukee, WI. He is a solid shot blocker and low block scorer who has a huge upside and is expected to grow another couple inches. Rounding out the top ten is fast rising 6-9 post man Ivan Rabb from Oakland, CA who has all the tools to become a dominating low block scorer and shot blocker.

Knocking on the door and looking for a spot in the top ten are talents like 6-9 Broderick Jones, 6-9 Jared Reuter, 6-9 Skal Labissiere, , 6-2 Austin Grandstaff, 6-1 Perry Dozier, 6-5 Kealon. Lawson, 6-3 Isaiah Briscoe and a trio of fast rising point guards in 6-0 Allonzo Trier, 5-8 Justin Jennifer and 5-8 Jerron Love. They are just some of the players who will be looking to move as we expand our rankings in the future. Of course we will, as we mentioned above, will change immensely as we see more of the rising freshman class. So with that in mind, here is our end of season, first cut look, at the Top 50 prospects in the freshmen, Class of 2015:

NBN National Top 50

Steven Zimmerman

Rank	Player	Hgt	Pos	City, State School	Comments

LAS VEGAS FAB 48

By Frank Burlison

Las Vegas has long since been known as the center of July activity on the high school grass roots hoops scene, dating to the days in the 1980's and 90's when college coaches and fans trudged up and down the hallway separating the gymnasiums in the UNLV Physical Education complex.

And 2010 may shortly become known as the year that Bishop Gorman High School – as the primary site of the “Fab 48” – was established as the capital of that same July prep basketball “universe”.

After Dinos Trigonis (head of the Belmont Shore Basketball program and CEO of all those Pangos events, including the All-American Camp), Grant Rice (the well respected coach at Bishop Gorman) and Gary Charles (director of New York's Long Island Panthers) brainstormed and came up the fabulous notion of the event, the “Fab 48” momentum started gaining rapidly.

The first year’s finale featured the heavily favored Drew Gooden (Oakland) Soldiers against an underdog Iowa Barnstormers club that scored a couple of big upsets to get to the title clash.

And the Soldiers’ crew – including Nick Johnson, Josiah Turner, Brandon Ashley, Kyle Wiltjer and Jabari Brown – ended that Iowa stretch of upsets, with not only Gooden looking on but another well known NBA player sitting in the bleachers.

I’m sure you’ve heard of the fellow – LeBron James, who once played for the Oakland program early in his Akron (Ohio) prep career.

The following July’s event was capped by the surprising performance of another underdog.

And this time “underdog” came out on top all the way down the line.

The Kansas City 76ers, with the defense of a junior-to-be – Ismail Wainright – limiting the effectiveness of the most hyped player from the 2013 class, Jabari Parker, stunned the Chicago-based Mac Irvin Fire in the tournament quarterfinals.

That was followed with a semifinal decision over Grass roots Canada and then another eyebrow-raiser in the final, toppling Team Breakdown of Florida to take some pretty Fab (48) hardware back home to Kansas City.

With two floors in the “main gym” and another in the auxiliary gym located just steps away, recruiters, media-types and hoops fans, in general, have three tantalizing options dangled in front of them simultaneously.

Finding court side and bleacher seats for any of those options is always going to be a challenge, though, because the Fab 48 has become such a “don’t miss it!” stop for college coaches and recruiting analysts and scouting service directors from coast to coast. “It’s a ‘must stop’ for any coach or media-type,” ESPN.com West Coast recruiting analyst and Long Beach (Calif.)-based Joel Francisco said matter-of-factly.

Van Coleman echoes Francisco’s sentiments precisely. “It’s become a ‘must-see’ event on a national level during the July evaluation period,” the Iowa-based recruiting guru said.

“Putting an event’s top 48 teams into a “super pool format”, with all games being played at one facility, has made it one of the summer’s most productive events, for both coaches and national scouts.”

In just its first two years, elite players that have earned Fab 48 all-tourney honors include Jabari Parker, Brandon Ashley & Grant Jerrett (Arizona), Kyle Anderson (UCLA), Amile Jefferson (Duke), JP Tokoto (North Carolina), DeAndre Daniels (UConn), Tony Wroten (Washington/Memphis Grizzlies) and Maurice Harkless (St. John’s/Philly 76’ers).

NBA players that have attended the Fab 48 to support the teams they sponsor include Deron Williams, Drew Gooden, Danny Granger, DeMar DeRozan, Earl Watson, John Wall, Rafer Alston and Paul George.

With the sold out field of 352 teams participating in the high school division in 2012, the Fab 48 firmly retained its grip as the capital of the July prep basketball universe.
