CommonSenseMedia.org

Reviews and ratings for digital media, including movies, tv, books and games.

As an educator, I am excited about the accessibility to information that technology offers. As a parent with three children, I experience frustration trying to constantly monitor my children’s access to age-appropriate online content. I find myself spending an increasing amount of time trying to ensure my children are experiencing age-appropriate content on their digital devices.

“I experience frustration trying to constantly monitor my children’s access to age appropriate online content.”

THE GOOD NEWS is that companies and nonprofits, such as Commonsensemedia.org, have acknowledged the need to keep children safe online so resources to help parents are becoming more available. I have gathered a list of a few of the resources that I use to help with the task of monitoring our children’s digital world. They offer general Advice for Parents, ratings on the topics linked below, as well as parental guides for things like YouTube, SnapChat, Fortnite and more.

Movies

Reviews for movies, TV and Youtube to help guide decision making.

Books

Besides reviews “Best of Lists” are offered which include by age, topic and awards.

Apps & Games

Many curated lists help narrow down the endless selection of available apps.

Many new routers support parental controls which help block inappropriate content.

Supplemental devices like Disney Circle add filtering capabilities to your current network.

Services like Open DNS have options which block inappropriate content on your network.
