A Message From The Pastor

Critical thinking, it seems, is going the way of cursive writing. Apparently, there's not much use for either today. Today's computers are able to print words as one speaks. They will even sign your name for you. So, why bother using a pen? This is the Internet Age as well, and there are a plethora of online "experts," "pundits," "journalists," and social media sensation wannabees that are quite willing and more than happy to think critically for you. So, why bother thinking about things too much? The thought police might well pull over the rare critical thinker today: What did I do, Officer? Buddy, I believe you've had a little bit too much to think! In the seminary, we didn't just learn about Church teaching in order to regurgitate it on a Sunday morning like some winged fowl feeding its young. We learned about it in order to consume it and digest it. It was to become part of us and who we were that we might live it, proclaim it, and apply it to our world – especially on a Sunday morning.

This necessarily involved critical thinking. Theology and critical thinking go hand in hand. Baseball players have their pre-game pepper and seminarians have theological discussions. I loved batting that ball around – most of the time. Sometimes discussions got intense. There was one tense discussion that I was intending to forgo. Things were getting a little too heated. My classmate, Rick, was at an impasse. He deflected. Well, I wonder what Gene thinks? My other classmates sighed. Low blow, Rick! Amazingly, the professor bought the deflection. I was dragged into the debate.

Soon, Rick and I were going at it verbally. Nice. I don't even remember what the topic was. It was the debate that I remember. Rick and I came out of it still friends and on speaking terms. Nice deflection, you @$%! More recently, I was doing some critical thinking and reflection of my own without having been dragged into it. The Church recently celebrated the Feast Day of Saint Mary Magdalene. It was she to whom the Risen Lord first appeared. The Church thus names her Apostle to the Apostles. She so longed for the Lord. She so longed for the One Who forgave all her sins. It was she that remained at the foot of the Cross with the Lord's Mother and the Beloved Disciple. Here's where critical thinking meets theology in speculation. It would seem that Our Risen Lord should logically appear first to the woman that gave birth to Him. This would certainly be appropriate for the Immaculate One. As His sufferings were hers as well (remember Simeon's prophecy), perhaps so also His Resurrection in some way known but to her. Mother and Son were always as one in life, in suffering, in being without sin, and so maybe, in Resurrection, too. Mary Magdalene, on the other hand, had great sin forgiven and she longed for her Lord. Could it be said, that as Immaculate Mary gave birth to Jesus in this world, Forgiven Mary gave birth to His Resurrection? I'm not sure – but, I would love to bat that theological ball around and hear the pros and cons of that debate. It would sure be interesting. And how about this: if all of us have a guardian angel, would not this also be true of the Mother of Jesus? Would it have been Gabriel or Michael assigned to this task, or would there have been an angel especially so dedicated? And what was his name? In fact, it seems that Mary Immaculate would not only have had a special guardian angel in this world, but a whole legion of angels guarding her against the wiles of the Evil One. Again, it would be an interesting theological discussion to have. Theology aside, I believe that we need to encourage critical thinking anew in our world today. We need to encourage that uniquely human ability to reflect and ponder. We have to learn anew how to engage in discussion and debate civilly and with reason agreeing at times to simply disagree and take up the discussion again another day.

If we cannot reason together; if we cannot think critically together, then in the end, we will wind up at war with those that criticize our thinking. Yes, Officer, I have had just a little bit too much to think! What do you think?

Peace!

Fr. Wilson
