On January 8 next year, the total wages of 100,000 The accrued salary of 300,000 monthly salaries has already been paid, so even if the payment is next month, you will need to recognize it as the cost for this month and fix your payment obligations at the same time.
Wage expense accounts use different accounts depending on the company, such as salary allowances and unpaid wages. Even in English accounts depending on the company, such as unpaid expenses and unpaid payments. I don't think there are many companies in Japan that use their unpaid and unpaid expenses in a strict sense, but there is no difference abroad as to whether the due date has come and the debt has been completed. Even if you don't have a payment deadline, you often use Payable if you're already required to receive money in the future.
