Rule not applicable to divorce actions except in circumstances of actual emergency. Under this rule, restraining orders should not be issued in divorce actions except in circumstances of actual emergency and where it is clearly established that grounds exist for granting such extraordinary remedy. Simpson v. Simpson, 151 Colo. 88, 376 P.2d 55 (1962).

Only under extraordinary circumstances should third persons not involved in the marital difficulties of the parties to a divorce action, who are carrying on legitimate business transactions with one of the parties thereto, be restrained or enjoined from continuing business activities with such persons, even upon notice. Simpson v. Simpson, 151 Colo. 88, 376 P.2d 55 (1962).

Discretion rests with trial court to enter a restraining order without notice or bond, as may be just. Simpson v. Simpson, 151 Colo. 88, 376 P.2d 55 (1962).

In the judicial enforcement proceeding under the Pet Animal Care and Facilities Act, the normally applicable irreparable injury and posting of security requirements under the rule do not apply. The usually applicable discretion to postpone the effective date of agency action under the State Administrative Procedure Act, which the court may issue upon a finding of irreparable injury pending judicial review, does not apply to the statute. Kourlis v. District Court, El Paso County, 930 P.2d 1329 (Colo. 1997).

Rule 65.1. Security: Proceedings Against Sureties

Whenever these Rules require or permit the giving of security by a party, and security is given in the form of a bond or stipulation or other undertaking with one or more sureties, each surety submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court and irrevocably appoints the clerk of the court as his agent upon whom any papers affecting his liability on the bond or undertaking may be served. His liability may be enforced on motion without the necessity of an independent action. The motion and such notice of the motion as the court prescribes may be served on the clerk of the court, who shall forthwith mail copies to the sureties if their addresses are known.

Rule 66. Receivers

(a) When Appointed. A receiver may be appointed by the court in which the action is pending at any time:

(1) Before judgment, provisionally, on application of either party, when he establishes a prima facie right to the property, or to an interest therein, which is the subject of the action and is in possession of an adverse party and such property, or its rents, issues, and profits are in danger of being lost, removed beyond the jurisdiction of the court, or materially injured or impaired; or

(2) By or after judgment, to dispose of the property according to the judgment, or to preserve it during appellate proceedings; or

(3) In other cases where proper and in accordance with the established principles of equity.

(b) Oath and Bond; Suit on Bond. Before entering upon his duties, the receiver shall be sworn to perform them faithfully, and shall execute, with one or more sureties, an undertaking with the people of the state of Colorado, in such sum as the court shall direct, to the effect that he will faithfully discharge his duties and will pay over and account for all money and property which may come into his hands as the court may direct, and will obey the orders of the court therein. The undertaking, with the sureties, must be approved by the court, or by the clerk thereof when so ordered by the court, and may be sued upon in the name of the people of the state of Colorado, at the instance and for the use of any party injured.

(c) Dismissal of Receivership Action. An action in which a receiver has been appointed shall not be dismissed except by order of the court.

(d) Sole Claim for Relief; Service of Process; Notice.

(1) The appointment of a receiver may be the sole claim for relief in an action. The action shall be commenced by filing a complaint, or by service of a summons and a complaint, as provided in C.R.C.P. 3(a).

(2) If the receivership is requested in connection with a mortgage, trust deed or other lien on real property, the current owner of the property, as shown by the records of the clerk and recorder, and any other person then collecting the rents and profits as a result of that person's lien on the rents or profits, shall be named as defendants.

(3) If a receiver is appointed by the court ex parte, copies of the summons, complaint, and order appointing the receiver shall be served on the defendants without delay, as provided in C.R.C.P. 4 or as directed by the court. The court, in its order for appointment of the receiver, shall direct the receiver to provide written notice of the action to any persons in possession of the property or otherwise affected by the order.

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Law. 988 (1987).

Annotator's note. Since this rule is similar to § 180 of the former Code of Civil Procedure, which was supplanted by the Rules of Civil Procedure in 1941, relevant cases construing that section have been included in the annotations to this rule.

A receiver is an officer of the court. Casserleigh v. Malone, 50 Colo. 597, 115 P. 520 (1911); McClain v. Saranac Mach. Co., 94 Colo. 145, 28 P.2d 1009 (1934).

This rule does not authorize a receiver to practice law on behalf of the receivership estate in federal court. This rule makes a receiver accountable to the state court that appointed the receiver. In re Shattuck, 411 B.R. 378 (B.A.P. 10th Cir. 2009).

His possession of property in his official capacity is the possession of the court and not of the party at whose instance he is appointed. McClain v. Saranac Mach. Co., 94 Colo. 145, 28 P.2d 1009 (1934).

One who interferes with receivership property in the custody of the law, without permission of the court in whose custody it is, is guilty of contempt. Clear Creek Power Dev. Co. v. Cutler, 79 Colo. 355, 245 P. 939 (1926).

Receiver has only right and title of owner. A receiver holds the property coming into his hands by the same right and title as the person for whose property he is receiver, subject to liens, priorities, and equities existing at the time of his appointment. Tolland Co. v. First State Bank, 95 Colo. 321, 35 P.2d 867 (1934).

A stranger has right to have receiver institute suit to try title. While the court which appoints a receiver exercises general control over the property that comes into the possession of the receiver as such, this power of control does not deprive a stranger, who claims by paramount title, of the right to have a suit or proceeding instituted by the receiver to try the question of title. Pomeranz v. Nat'l Beet Harvester Co., 82 Colo. 482, 261 P. 861 (1927).

The better practice is for the receiver to bring an independent adverse suit in the tribunal where the defendant has the right to have the controversy decided. Pomeranz v. Nat'l Beet Harvester Co., 82 Colo. 482, 261 P. 861 (1927).

The plaintiffs have established their entitlement to an evidentiary hearing relative to the appointment of a receiver. It need not appear from the movant's request for appointment that any imminent insolvency result only from fraud. Diaz v. Fernandez, 910 P.2d 96 (Colo. App. 1995).

For the power of receiver to administer assets, see Flint v. Powell, 18 Colo. App. 425, 72 P. 60 (1903).

For the duties as to management of railroad property, see Frank v. Denver & Rio Grande Ry., 23 F. 757 (D. Colo. 1885).

A court cannot appoint a receiver to manage or operate a medical or retail marijuana business unless the receiver has the proper medical or retail marijuana license. Yates v. Hartman, 2018 COA 31, __ P.3d __.

Applied in State ex rel. Colo. Dept. of Health v. I.D.I., Inc., 642 P.2d 14 (Colo. App. 1981).

II. WHEN APPOINTED.

This rule does not apply to any case in which an action is not pending. Jones v. Bank of Leadville, 10 Colo. 464, 17 P. 272 (1887).

Action is "pending" under section (a) of this rule after it is commenced under C.R.C.P. 3, by either filing a complaint with the court or by the service of a summons. Johnson v. McCaughan, Carter & Scharrer, 672 P.2d 221 (Colo. App. 1983).

The plain intent of this rule is that there shall be a controversy between two or more adverse parties moved in the court, involving some conflicting and hostile claims to property that is, at least in part, the subject matter of the litigation in the mind of the general assembly it is necessary to this jurisdiction that there should be some party in all these proceedings who is adverse to the defendant and whose right to certain property are to be protected and adjudicated. Jones v. Bank of Leadville, 10 Colo. 464, 17 P. 272 (1887).

Appointment of receiver is discretionary. Whether a receiver will or will not be appointed upon a preliminary hearing is a matter which ordinarily rests in the sound discretion of a trial court. Melville v. Weybrew, 106 Colo. 121, 103 P.2d 7, cert. denied, 311 U.S. 695, 61 S. Ct. 140, 85 L. Ed. 450 (1940); Rigel v. Kaveny, 133 Colo. 556, 298 P.2d 396 (1956); Oman v. Morris, 28 Colo. App. 124, 471 P.2d 430 (1970).

There will be no interference with the exercise of that discretion by an appellate court, save in a clear case of abuse. Melville v. Weybrew, 106 Colo. 121, 103 P.2d 7, cert. denied, 311 U.S. 695, 61 S. Ct. 140, 85 L. Ed. 450 (1940); Oman v. Morris, 28 Colo. App. 124, 471 P.2d 430 (1970).

Court held not to have abused its discretion in making appointment. Riant Amusement Co. v. Bailey, 80 Colo. 65, 249 P. 7 (1926).

Courts have no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver except in a suit pending in which the receiver is desired, unless in cases of persons under disability which is a particular jurisdiction. Jones v. Bank of Leadville, 10 Colo. 464, 17 P. 272 (1887).

A minor may by his guardian or next friend procure the appointment of a receiver for the purpose of collecting the rents and profits of premises deeded. Hutchinson v. McLaughlin, 15 Colo. 492, 25 P. 317, 11 L.R.A. 287 (1890).

Courts of equity have no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver except in a pending action in which the receiver is desired. People ex rel. Daniels v. District Court, 33 Colo. 293, 80 P. 908 (1905).

Allegations of a complaint in a receivership proceeding held sufficient. Riant Amusement Co. v. Bailey, 80 Colo. 65, 249 P. 7 (1926).

Complaint held insufficient where indebtedness not alleged. In a proceeding by petition for the appointment of a receiver for the purpose of an accounting where there is no complaint alleging the indebtedness and no service of process, a court has no jurisdiction to enter a judgment. Paddack v. Staley, 13 Colo. App. 363, 58 P. 363 (1899).

The appointment of a receiver to impound assets of an estate to pay a claim that does not exist is a nullity. Wright v. Halley, 95 Colo. 148, 33 P.2d 966 (1934).

While courts have jurisdiction to appoint receivers for corporations, the power should be exercised with the utmost caution and only where a receiver is imperatively necessary to protect property rights. Eureka Coal Co. v. McGowan, 72 Colo. 402, 212 P. 521 (1922).

A receiver should not be appointed for a corporation in an action by a simple contract creditor to prevent the corporation from fraudulently disposing of its property, and putting beyond its power the ability to respond to a judgment sought to be obtained on an unsecured debt. International Trust Co. v. United Coal Co., 27 Colo. 246, 60 P. 621 (1900).

This rule does not give an equity court authority to appoint a receiver at the suit of an individual stockholder who complains of fraud in the management of the affairs of the corporation. People ex rel. Daniels v. District Court, 33 Colo. 293, 80 P. 908 (1905).

Receiver for corporation may be appointed when no board of directors to manage. Where the principal stockholders of a corporation are engaged in a contest over the control of the property, and the outstanding capital stock is so distributed that no board of directors can be elected to manage the affairs of the company, a receiver is properly appointed. Eureka Coal Co. v. McGowan, 72 Colo. 402, 212 P. 521 (1922).

This rule does not give an equity court authority to dissolve a corporation. People ex rel. Daniels v. District Court, 33 Colo. 293, 80 P. 908 (1905).

The appointment of a receiver for a corporation does not work its dissolution. Steinhauer v. Colmar, 11 Colo. App. 494, 55 P. 291 (1898).

Appointment of a receiver is authorized under appropriate circumstances without a pending request for dissolution of the company. A member of a limited liability company has a personal property interest in the company. Diaz v. Fernandez, 910 P.2d 96 (Colo. App. 1995).

Where equity will sustain a creditor's bill, it will also grant the aid of the ancillary remedies of injunction and receiver. Livingston v. Swofford Bros. Dry Goods Co., 12 Colo. App. 320, 56 P. 351 (1898).

The appointment of a receiver contrary to this rule is only an error, and not a jurisdictional question where it appears that the court had jurisdiction of the subject matter and parties. Riant Amusement Co. v. Bailey, 80 Colo. 65, 249 P. 7 (1926).

Improper appointment cannot be considered in contempt proceedings. In proceedings where a receiver is appointed to take charge of property, the improper appointment of the receiver cannot be considered in contempt proceedings based upon interference with the receivership property. Clear Creek Power & Dev. Co. v. Cutler, 79 Colo. 355, 245 P. 939 (1926).

Where there is no objection made by defendant to the appointment of a receiver, he is deemed to have acquiesced in the court's action. Oman v. Morris, 28 Colo. App. 124, 471 P.2d 430 (1970).

Rule 67. Deposit in Court

(a) By Party. In an action in which any part of the relief sought is a judgment for a sum of money or the disposition of a sum of money or the disposition of any other thing capable of delivery, a party, upon notice to every other party, and by leave of court, may deposit with the court all or any part of such sum or thing, to be held by the clerk of the court subject to withdrawal in whole or in part at any time thereafter upon order of the court.

(b) By Trustee. When it is admitted by the pleadings or examination of a party that he has in his possession or under his control any money or other things capable of delivery which, being the subject of litigation, is held by him as trustee for another party, or which belongs or is due to another party, upon motion, the court may order the same to be deposited in court or delivered to such party, upon such conditions as may be just, subject to the further direction of the court.

ANNOTATION

The Colorado Governmental Immunity Act specifies the amount of plaintiff's maximum recovery from public entities or public employees, and this rule establishes the procedure by which defendant may deposit an undisputed sum into the court registry. Rudnick v. Ferguson, 179 P.3d 26 (Colo. App. 2007).

Trial court did not err in permitting defendants to tender $150,000 into the court registry and in dismissing the case as moot without requiring defendants to confess judgment, admit their liability, or enter into a settlement with the plaintiffs. Rudnick v. Ferguson, 179 P.3d 26 (Colo. App. 2007).

Trial court has jurisdiction to decide city's motion pursuant to this rule to deposit funds with the court registry after the filing of a notice of appeal because the motion did not challenge the propriety of the judgment itself. The filing of a notice of appeal generally signifies that the trial court is divested of the authority to consider matters of substance, but trial courts retain jurisdiction to act on matters that are not relative to and do not affect the judgment on appeal. Thus, the city's deposit of funds into the court's registry was acceptable. Coors Brewing Co. v. City of Golden, 2013 COA 92, 411 P.3d 767.

A motion to deposit funds with the court registry pursuant to this rule is not a post-trial motion pursuant to C.R.C.P. 59. Coors Brewing Co. v. City of Golden, 2013 COA 92, 411 P.3d 767.

This rule permits a trial court to toll the accruing post-judgment interest as of the time the judgment creditor can gain access to the money deposited in the registry of the court. Coors Brewing Co. v. City of Golden, 2013 COA 92, 411 P.3d 767.

Rule 69. Execution and Proceedings Subsequent to Judgment

(a) In General. Except as provided in C.R.C.P. 103 or an order of court directing otherwise, process to enforce a final money judgment shall be by writ of execution.

(b) Proceedings for Costs. Costs finally awarded by order of court may be enforced in the same manner as any final money judgment. Costs awarded by an appellate court may be enforced in the same manner upon application by filing a remittitur or other order of the appellate court with the clerk of the trial court showing the award of costs.

(c) Debtor of Judgment Debtor; Debtor May Pay Sheriff. After issuance of a writ of execution against property, the judgment debtor or any person indebted to the judgment debtor may pay to the sheriff to whom the writ of execution is directed the amount necessary to satisfy the execution. The sheriff's receipt for the amount shall be a discharge for the amount so paid.

(d) Requirement That Judgment Debtor Answer Written Interrogatories. (1) At any time after entry of a final money judgment, the judgment creditor may serve written interrogatories upon the judgment debtor in accordance with C.R.C.P. 45, requiring the judgment debtor to answer the interrogatories. Within 21 days of service of the interrogatories upon the judgment debtor, the judgment debtor shall appear before the clerk of the court in which the judgment was entered to sign the answers to the interrogatories under oath and file them.

(2) If the judgment debtor, after being properly served with written interrogatories as provided by this Rule, fails to answer the served interrogatories, the judgment creditor may file a motion, with return of the previously served written interrogatories attached thereto, and request an order of court requiring the judgment debtor to either answer the previously served written interrogatories within 21 days in accordance with the provisions of (d)(1) of this Rule or appear in court at a specified time to show cause why the judgment debtor shall not be held in contempt of court for failure to comply with the order requiring answers to interrogatories; a copy of the motion, written interrogatories and a certified order of court shall be served upon judgment debtor in accordance with C.R.C.P. 45.

(e) Subpoena for Appearance of Judgment Debtor. (1) At any time after entry of a final money judgment, a judgment creditor may cause a subpoena or subpoena to produce to be served as provided in C.R.C.P. 45 requiring the judgment debtor to appear before the court, master or referee with requested documents at a specified time obtained from the court to answer concerning property. A judgment debtor may be required to attend outside the county where such judgment debtor resides and the court may make reasonable orders for mileage and expenses. The subpoena shall include on its face a conspicuous notice to the judgment debtor that provides: ''Failure to Appear Will Result in Issuance of a Warrant for Your Arrest.''

(2) If the judgment debtor, after being properly served with a subpoena or subpoena to produce as provided in C.R.C.P. 45, fails to appear, the court upon motion of the judgment creditor shall issue a bench warrant commanding the sheriff of any county in which the judgment debtor may be found, to arrest and bring the judgment debtor forthwith before the court for proceedings under this Rule.

(f) Subpoena for Appearance of Debtor of Judgment Debtor. At any time after entry of a final money judgment, upon proof to the satisfaction of the court, that any person has property of, or is indebted to a judgment debtor in any amount exceeding Five Hundred Dollars not exempt from execution, the court may issue a subpoena or subpoena to produce to such person to appear before the court, master or referee at a specified time and answer concerning the same. Service shall be made in accordance with C.R.C.P. 45, and the court may make reasonable orders for mileage and expenses.

(g) Order to Apply Property on Judgment; Contempt. The court, master, or referee may order any party or other person over whom the court has jurisdiction, to apply any property other than real property, not exempt from execution, whether in the possession of such party or other person, or owed the judgment debtor, towards satisfaction of the judgment. Any party or person who disobeys an order made under the provisions of this Rule may be punished for contempt. Nothing in this rule shall be construed to prevent an action in the nature of a creditor's bill.

(h) Witnesses. Witnesses may be subpoenaed to appear and testify in accordance with C.R.C.P. 45.

(i) Depositions. After entry of a final money judgment, the judgment creditor, upon order of court which may be obtained ex parte, may take the deposition of any person including the judgment debtor, in the manner provided in these Rules.

ANNOTATION

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Law reviews. For article, ''Supplementary Proceedings in Enforcement of Judgments'', see 27 Dicta 128 (1950). For article ''One Year Review of Civil Procedure'', see 35 Dicta 3 (1958).

Annotator's note. Since this rule is similar to § 265 et seq. of the former Code of Civil Procedure, which was supplanted by the Rules of Civil Procedure in 1941, relevant cases construing those sections have been included in the annotations to this rule.

This rule assumes the existence of valid judgment obtained over one properly made a party to the suit on the debt by service of process. Havens v. Hardesty, 43 Colo. App. 162, 600 P.2d 116 (1979).

This rule deals with supplemental proceedings available to a judgment creditor which enable him to enforce the collection of a judgment. Hudson v. Am. Founders Life Ins. Co., 160 Colo. 420, 417 P.2d 772 (1966).

Supplemental proceedings are for the purpose of making effectual a judgment rendered in the main or original action. Sweeney v. Cregan, 89 Colo. 94, 299 P. 1058 (1931).

Proceedings also for purpose of discovering what property is available to satisfy such. The purpose of supplementary proceedings in aid of execution is to discover what property the judgment debtor has that is subject to execution and to apply to the satisfaction of the judgment any such property that is in the hands of such debtor or any other person as well as due to the judgment debtor. Walker v. Staley, 89 Colo. 292, 1 P.2d 924 (1931).

Original proceeding considered as still pending. Jurisdiction of the defendant having been acquired in the original proceeding, that action is considered as still pending until the judgment rendered thereon is fully discharged. Hexter v. Clifford, 5 Colo. 168 (1879); Sweeney v. Cregan, 89 Colo. 94, 299 P. 1058 (1931).

This rule authorizes the court to act based upon its continuing jurisdiction over the defendant named in the underlying action. Havens v. Hardesty, 43 Colo. App. 162, 600 P.2d 116 (1979).

These proceedings are ancillary and auxiliary to the original action. Sweeney v. Cregan, 89 Colo. 94, 299 P. 1058 (1931).

Further proceedings to enforce a judgment should be presented to the court that entered it. Urbancich v. Mayberry, 124 Colo. 311, 236 P.2d 535 (1951).

A court does not have the authority, under this rule 69 or otherwise, to prevent the sale of property under execution to satisfy a judgment where the property in question is not included within any class of assets exempt from execution under the provisions of any exemption law. Jones v. District Court, 135 Colo. 468, 312 P.2d 503 (1957).

Levy upon property. A sheriff's sale of property to which defendant had no title and satisfaction based thereon were void and defendant's subsequent pledge of stock to secure the same judgment was valid. Ada Mechanical Servs., Inc., v. Goehring, 707 P.2d 1034 (Colo. App. 1985).

Applied in People v. Barbour, 639 P.2d 1065 (Colo. 1982); Lobb v. Hodges, 641 P.2d 310 (Colo. App. 1982); First Nat'l Bank v. District Court, 652 P.2d 613 (Colo. 1982).

II. PROCEEDINGS FOR COSTS.

Where both parties each have against the other a right of execution in the same case, the costs in the supreme court may be offset against those in the court below. Wallace Plumbing Co. v. Dillon, 73 Colo. 10, 213 P. 130 (1922) (decided under § 461 of the former Code of Civil Procedure, which was replaced by the Rules of Civil Procedure in 1941).

III. SUBPOENA FOR APPEARANCE OF JUDGMENT DEBTOR.

Law reviews. For article, ''Discoverability of Insurance Limits'', see 40 Den. L. Ctr. J. 272 (1963).

Annotator's note. Since section (d) of this rule is similar to §§ 265 and 266 of the former Code of Civil Procedure, which was supplanted by the Rules of Civil Procedure in 1941, relevant cases construing those sections have been included in the annotations to this rule.

Section (d) is constitutional. Sweeney v. Cregan, 89 Colo. 94, 299 P. 1058 (1931).

Even if defendant is deprived of his constitutional right against self-incrimination, it does not follow that this rule requiring his presence in court is unconstitutional and void. Sweeney v. Cregan, 89 Colo. 94, 299 P. 1058 (1931).

Section (d) does not purport to grant a judgment creditor such a right to require his debtor to answer questions which might subject the latter to a criminal prosecution. Sweeney v. Cregan, 89 Colo. 94, 299 P. 1058 (1931).

In addition, it must be presumed that every constitutional right of the debtor will be respected and safeguarded. Sweeney v. Cregan, 89 Colo. 94, 299 P. 1058 (1931).

Production of documents not privileged under fifth amendment. Judgment debtor can be required to produce automobile titles and recorded deeds to real estate, determined to be within the public domain, as well as tax returns that he filed, because there is no fifth amendment privilege as to such documents. Griffin v. Western Realty Sales Corp., 665 P.2d 1031 (Colo. App. 1983).

Section (d) is a method of discovery. Hudson v. Am. Founders Life Ins. Co., 160 Colo. 420, 417 P.2d 772 (1966).

It permits the judgment creditor to require a judgment debtor to appear before the court to answer questions concerning his assets. Hudson v. Am. Founders Life Ins. Co., 160 Colo. 420, 417 P.2d 772 (1966).

Section (d) takes the place of former bill of discovery. These ''supplemental proceedings'' are chiefly directed to discovery, and in this respect, they are to be regarded as taking the place of the former bill of discovery. Allen v. Tritch, 5 Colo. 222 (1880).

Service on attorney. Service on an attorney in accordance with the provisions of C.R.C.P. 5(b), does not satisfy the requirements of section (d). Stubblefield v. District Court, 198 Colo. 569, 603 P.2d 559 (1979).

Service of citation to appear under section (d) is proper if it complies with the provisions of C.R.C.P. (4)(e)(1). Stubblefield v. District Court, 198 Colo. 569, 603 P.2d 559 (1979).

Service on registered agent. Personal delivery of interrogatories on foreign corporation's registered agent constitutes effective service. Isis Litig., L.L.C., v. Svensk Filmindustri, 170 P.3d 742 (Colo. App. 2007).

A defendant is clearly guilty of contempt in refusing to be sworn and prematurely refusing to answer question to be propounded. Sweeney v. Cregan, 89 Colo. 94, 299 P. 1058 (1931).

IV. SUBPOENA FOR APPEARANCE OF DEBTOR OF JUDGMENT DEBTOR.

Annotator's note. Since section (e) of this rule is similar to § 268 of the former Code of Civil Procedure, which was supplanted by the Rules of Civil Procedure in 1941, relevant cases construing that section have been included in the annotations to this rule.

Section (e) is a method of discovery. Hudson v. Am. Founders Life Ins. Co., 160 Colo. 420, 417 P.2d 772 (1966).

It permits the court, upon proper proof, to examine a third person who is believed to hold property of, or owe a debt to the judgment debtor. Hudson v. Am. Founders Life Ins. Co., 160 Colo. 420, 417 P.2d 772 (1966).

Proceedings to compel the application of money or property in the hands of other parties to the satisfaction of the judgment are proceedings in the original action, and no notice to defendant is necessary. Hexter v. Clifford, 5 Colo. 168 (1879).

Other parties are entitled to their day in court. In supplementary proceedings in aid of execution, a court has no power to order a receiver to take possession of and sell property belonging to other parties without according them their day in court. Walker v. Staley, 89 Colo. 292, 1 P.2d 924 (1931).

Notice, affidavit, or other showing of indebtedness waived by insurers. In an action for damages where the parties and insurers stipulate for entry of judgment and for determination by the court of the issue of liability as between the insurers and provide for hearing in accordance with this rule, the trial court has jurisdiction to determine such issue, the stipulation being a waiver of notice, affidavit, or other showing of indebtedness pursuant to this rule. Traders & Gen. Ins. Co. v. Pioneer Mut. Comp. Co., 127 Colo. 516, 258 P.2d 776 (1953).

Where person, not a party to original action, appears pursuant to a subpoena under subdivision (e) and denies that he is obligated to or in possession of any property of a judgment debtor, trial court is precluded from proceeding further in a proceeding under this rule, and creditor's sole remedy is a creditor's bill. Equisearch, Inc. v. Lopez, 722 P.2d 426 (Colo. App. 1986) (decided under former rule); In re Livingston, 999 F. Supp. 1413 (D. Colo. 1998).

V. ORDER TO APPLY PROPERTY ON JUDGMENT; CONTEMPT.

Law reviews. For article, ''The Enforcement of Divorce Decrees in Colorado'', see 21 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 364 (1949). For comment on Urbancich v. Mayberry, appearing below, see 24 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 259 (1952). For article, ''The Nuts and Bolts of Collecting Support'', see 19 Colo. Law. 1595 (1990).

Annotator's note. Since section (f) of this rule is similar to §§ 270 and 271 of the former Code of Civil Procedure, which was supplanted by the Rules of Civil Procedure in 1941, relevant cases construing those sections have been included in the annotations to this rule.

Section (f) is an enforcement provision. Hudson v. Am. Founders Life Ins. Co., 160 Colo. 420, 417 P.2d 772 (1966).

It provides that, if certain prerequisites are met, the trial court may order property applied to the judgment. Hudson v. Am. Founders Life Ins. Co., 160 Colo. 420, 417 P.2d 772 (1966).

Including property held by court. Where a judgment debtor is ''discharged'' on a prior occasion from a citation issued pursuant to section (d) of this rule, such fact does not bar a judgment creditor from seeking to obtain, under the provisions of this section (f), known property held by a third person, including the court. Hudson v. Am. Founders Life Ins. Co., 160 Colo. 420, 417 P.2d 772 (1966).

It is not, however, adapted to reach disputed property of a judgment debtor, since no contested title to property can be determined. Allen v. Tritch, 5 Colo. 222 (1880); Walker v. Staley, 89 Colo. 292, 1 P.2d 924 (1931).

Where title to real property claimed to belong to a judgment debtor stands in the name of another, a creditor's suit is the proper proceeding to subject the property to the satisfaction of a judgment, and not supplementary proceedings in aid of execution. Walker v. Staley, 89 Colo. 292, 1 P.2d 924 (1931).

This rule does not contemplate that real property may be sold under an order of court made in a supplementary proceeding, even when title stands in the name of the judgment debtor. Walker v. Staley, 89 Colo. 292, 1 P.2d 924 (1931).

Rather, in such case, the judgment creditor may cause execution to be levied upon the property and it requires no order of court. Walker v. Staley, 89 Colo. 292, 1 P.2d 924 (1931).

The fact that the property sought is a trust fund interposes no obstacle in subjecting it to the satisfaction of a judgment when the fund was created by the debtor himself and the fund sought to be reached has risen from the sale of his own property. Hexter v. Clifford, 5 Colo. 168 (1879).

Contingent fees not yet earned cannot be reached in proceedings supplementary to execution. Walker v. Staley, 89 Colo. 292, 1 P.2d 924 (1931).

Remedy of contempt is specifically authorized to be exercised by the court which pronounced the judgment sought to be collected and not any other court. Urbancich v. Mayberry, 124 Colo. 311, 236 P.2d 535 (1951).

VI. WITNESSES.

Judgment debtor not within purview of C.R.C.P. 45. Although a judgment debtor may testify as a witness in a hearing under this rule, he is not a witness within the purview of C.R.C.P. 45 for the purposes of service of process. Stubblefield v. District Court, 198 Colo. 569, 603 P.2d 559 (1979).

Rule 70. Judgment for Specific Acts; Vesting Title

If a judgment directs a party to execute a conveyance of land or to deliver deeds or other documents or to perform any other specific act and the party fails to comply within the time specified, the court may direct the act to be done at the cost of the disobedient party by some other person appointed by the court and the act when so done has like effect as if done by the party. On application of the party entitled to performance, the clerk shall issue a writ of attachment against the property of the disobedient party to compel obedience to the judgment. The court may also in proper cases adjudge the party in contempt. If real or personal property is within the district, the court in lieu of directing a conveyance thereof may enter a judgment divesting the title of any party and vesting it in others and such judgment has the effect of a conveyance executed in due form of law. When any order or judgment is for the delivery of possession, the party in whose favor it is entered is entitled to a writ of execution or assistance upon application to the clerk.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For note, ''Decrees in Rem Under the New Rules'', see 13 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 140 (1941).

This rule does not apply in situation where party holding title to leases is willing to vest title and party held to have lawfully contracted for such leases is unwilling to take them. Schnier v. District Court, 696 P.2d 264 (Colo. 1985).

This rule offers relief only when there is noncompliance with an order issued by the court. The rule can not provide relief if there is no previous order for the action. In re Dauwe, 97 P.3d 369 (Colo. App. 2004).

A Colorado court may invoke its equitable authority under this rule to enforce a judgment for attorney fees awarded under 42 U.S.C. § 1983. Duran v. Lamm, 701 P.2d 609 (Colo. App. 1984).

A trial court has authority under this rule to enter a judgment divesting title of defendant to the subject property and vesting it in the claimants. AA Constr. Co. v. Gould, 28 Colo. App. 161, 470 P.2d 916 (1970).

Failure of the general assembly to act to satisfy a judgment sufficiently expressed its unwillingness to comply with the valid judgment of the trial court justifies invocation of this rule. Duran v. Lamm, 701 P.2d 609 (Colo. App. 1984).

Applied in Circle Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Norton, 28 Colo. App. 167, 471 P.2d 625 (1970).

Rule 71. Process in Behalf of and Against Persons Not Parties

When an order is made in favor of a person who is not a party to the action, he may enforce obedience to the order by the same process as if he were a party; and, when obedience to an order may be lawfully enforced against a person who is not a party, he is liable to the same process for enforcing obedience to the order as if he were a party.

ANNOTATION

Person who has advanced money on realty may be awarded lien. In an action to quiet title where the plaintiff names as defendants all ''persons who claim any interest in the subject matter of this action'', a person who has advanced money in connection with the realty has a sufficient interest to be a party and to be awarded a lien to secure such advance. Hahn v. Pitts, 118 Colo. 173, 193 P.2d 716 (1948).

CHAPTER 9

Court Administration

ANALYSIS BY RULE

CHAPTER 9

COURT ADMINISTRATION

Rule 77. Courts and Clerks

(a) Courts Always Open. Courts shall be deemed always open for the purpose of filing any pleading or other proper paper, of issuing and returning process, and of making and directing all interlocutory motions, orders, and rules. Each term shall be deemed open and continuous until the commencement of the next succeeding term.

(b) Proceedings in Court and Chambers. All trials upon the merits shall be conducted in open court and so far as convenient in a regular courtroom. All other acts or proceedings may be done or conducted in open court or by a judge in chambers, without the attendance of the clerk or other court officials and at any place within the state; but no hearing, other than on ex parte, shall be conducted outside the judicial district in which the action is pending without the consent of all parties affected thereby who are not in default.

(c) Clerk's Office and Orders by Clerk. The clerk's office with the clerk or a deputy in attendance shall be open at such hours and on such days as may be provided by law, and by local rule not in conflict with law. All motions and applications in the clerk's office for issuing process, for entering defaults or judgments by default, and for other proceedings which do not require allowance or order of the court are grantable of course by the clerk; but his action may be suspended or altered or rescinded by the court upon cause shown.

(d) Orders in Any County. Any ex parte order in any pending action may be entered by the court, or by any judge thereof in any county of the district, irrespective of the county in which said action is pending.

Rule 78. Motion Day

Each court may establish regular times and places, at intervals sufficiently frequent for the prompt dispatch of business, at which motions requiring notice and hearing may be heard and disposed of; but the judge at any time or place and on such notice, if any, as he considers reasonable may make orders for the advancement, conduct, and hearing of actions. To expedite its business, the court may make provision by rule or order for the submission and determination of motions without oral hearing, upon brief written statements of reasons in support and opposition. Trial courts may also provide by local rule for notices to set motions for hearing or for calling upon motions for hearing without prior setting.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, ''Court Administration and General Provisions: Rules 77-85'', see 23 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 599 (1951).

Rule 79. Records

(a) Register of Actions. The clerk shall keep a record known as the register of actions and shall enter therein those items set forth below. The register of actions may be in any of the following forms or styles:

(1) A page, sheet, or printed form in a book, case jacket, or separate file.

(2) A microfilm roll, film jacket, or microfiche card.

(3) Computer magnetic tape or magnetic disc storage, where the register of actions items appear on the terminal screen, or on a paper print-out of the screen display.

(4) Any other form or style prescribed by supreme court directive. A register of actions shall be prepared for each case or matter filed. The file number of each case or matter shall be noted on every page, film, or computer record whereon the first and all subsequent entries of actions are made. All papers filed with the clerk, all process issued and return made thereon, all costs, appearances, orders, verdicts, and judgments shall be noted chronologically in the register of actions. These notations shall be brief but shall show the nature of each paper filed or writ issued and the substance of each order or judgment of the court and of the returns showing execution of process. The notation of an order, or of the entry of judgment, shall show the date the order or judgment was ordered in open court, in chambers, or under the provisions of Rule 55 regarding default. When trial by jury has been demanded or ordered, the clerk shall enter the word jury on the page, film, or computer record assigned to that case.

(b) Copies of Civil Judgments and Orders. (Repealed effective September 4, 1974.)

(c) Indices; Calendars. The clerk shall keep suitable indices of all records as directed by the court. The clerk shall also keep, as directed by the court, calendars of all hearings and all cases ready for trial, which shall distinguish trials to a jury from trials to the court. Indices and calendars may be in any of the following forms or styles:

(1) A page or sheet in a book or separate file.

(2) A mechanical or hand-operated index machine or card file.

(3) Computer magnetic tape or magnetic disc storage, where the information appears on the terminal screen, or on a print-out of the screen display.

(4) Microfilm copies of 1, 2, and 3 above.

(5) Any other form or style prescribed by supreme court directive.

(d) Judgment Record. The clerk shall keep a judgment record in which a notation shall be made of every money judgment. The judgment record may be in any of the following forms or styles:

(1) A page, sheet, or printed form in a book, case jacket, or separate file.

(2) Computer magnetic tape or magnetic disc storage, where the judgment and subsequent transactions appear on the terminal screen, or on a paper print-out of the screen display.

(3) A microfilm copy of 1 and 2 above.

(4) Any other form or style prescribed by supreme court directive.

(e) Retention and Disposition of Records. The clerk shall retain and dispose of all court records, including those created under Rule 79(b) prior to its repeal, in accordance with instructions provided in the manual entitled, Colorado Judicial Department, Records Management.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, ''Notes on Proposed Amendments to Colorado Rules of Civil Procedure'', see 27 Dicta 165 (1950). For article, ''Court Administration and General Provisions: Rules 77-85'', see 23 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 599 (1951).

Although trial judge had power and obligation to assure that records and reporter's notes in dissolution of marriage action were preserved by the clerk for an extended period of time and to enter any order with respect to those records and notes, the trial court was not required to enter an order obligating itself to preserve such records. In re Smith, 757 P.2d 1159 (Colo. App. 1988).

The rules provide that a motion for a new trial must be filed not later than 10 days following the notation of judgment in the trial court's register of actions (or judgment docket). In re Gardella, 190 Colo. 402, 547 P.2d 928 (1976).

Relation back of judgment unconstitutional. Trial court's action in relating back matters decided on May 28 to the May 15 entry on the judgment docket had the effect of extinguishing the petitioner's right to appeal from the determinations made on May 28. Under these circumstances, the 10-day period of C.R.C.P. 59 expired before the remaining issues in the case had even been determined by the trial court. This result contravenes the right of appeal granted by the Colorado constitution. In re Gardella, 190 Colo. 402, 547 P.2d 928 (1976).

Admissibility of register in action upon bond of clerk. In an action upon the official bond of a clerk of the district court for fees collected and not paid over, where it appears that he made entries of fees collected by him in his register of actions such register is admissible in evidence and the entries therein are prima facie evidence against the clerk and also against the sureties on his bond. Cooper v. People ex rel. Bd. of Comm'rs, 28 Colo. 87, 63 P. 314 (1900) (decided under § 416 of the former Code of Civil Procedure, which was replaced by the Rules of Civil Procedure in 1941).

For purposes of timely filing of a motion for new trial under C.R.C.P. 59 a judgment is "entered" only upon notation in the judgment docket pursuant to C.R.C.P. 58(a)(3) and section (d) of this rule. City and County of Denver v. Just, 175 Colo. 260, 487 P.2d 367 (1971).

Entry of judgment effective on notation in register. Both C.R.C.P. 58(a)(3) and section (a)(4) of this rule clearly state that entry of a judgment is effective upon notation in the register of actions. Hebron v. District Court, 192 Colo. 346, 558 P.2d 997 (1977).

Then judgment becomes final, though not recorded in judgment record. Hebron v. District Court, 192 Colo. 346, 558 P.2d 997 (1977).

Applied in Dill v. County Court, 37 Colo. App. 75, 541 P.2d 1272 (1975); Poor v. District Court, 190 Colo. 433, 549 P.2d 756 (1976); Moore & Co. v. Williams, 657 P.2d 984 (Colo. App. 1982); Moore & Co. v. Williams, 672 P.2d 999 (Colo. 1983).

Rule 80. Reporter; Stenographic Report or Transcript as Evidence

Repealed February 14, 2019, effective immediately.

Cross references: For supreme court reporters and other employees of the supreme court, see § 13-2-111, C.R.S.

COMMENT

[1] C.R.C.P. 80 has been repealed as Chief Justice Directive 05-03 entitled, Management Plan for Court Reporting and Recording Services, addresses matters related to court reporters in District Court matters.

CHAPTER 10

General Provisions

ANALYSIS BY RULE

CHAPTER 10

GENERAL PROVISIONS

Rule 81. Applicability in General

(a) Special Statutory Proceedings. These rules do not govern procedure and practice in any special statutory proceeding insofar as they are inconsistent or in conflict with the procedure and practice provided by the applicable statute. Where the applicable statute provides for procedure under a former Code of Civil Procedure, such procedure shall be in accordance with these rules.

(b) Dissolution of Marriage and Legal Separation. These rules shall not govern procedure and practice in actions in dissolution of marriage and legal separation insofar as they may be inconsistent or in conflict with the procedure and practice provided by the applicable statutes.

(c) Appeals from County to District Court. These rules do not supersede the provisions of the statutes of this state now or hereafter in effect relating to appeals from final judgments and decrees of the county court to the district court.

Cross references: For application of the Colorado Rules of Civil Procedure to proceedings for dissolution of marriage or legal separation, see § 14-10-105, C.R.S.; for limitation on taking appeals by appellate court, see C.A.R. 1(b).

ANNOTATION

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Rev. 137 (1966).

Applied in Rogers Concrete, Inc. v. Jude Contractors, 38 Colo. App. 26, 550 P.2d 892 (1976); People in Interest of S.S.T., 38 Colo. App. 110, 553 P.2d 82 (1976); Fry Roofing Co. v. Dept. of Health, 191 Colo. 463, 553 P.2d 800 (1976); Rueda v. District Court, 194 Colo. 327, 575 P.2d 370 (1977); In re Blair, 42 Colo. App. 270, 592 P.2d 1354 (1979); West-Brandt Found., Inc. v. Carper, 199 Colo. 334, 608 P.2d 339 (1980); Judd Constr. Co. v. Evans Joint Venture, 642 P.2d 922 (Colo. 1982).

II. SPECIAL STATUTORY PROCEEDINGS.

Law reviews. For article, ''Again — How Many Times?'', see 21 Dicta 62 (1944).

There is a recognized distinction between "proceedings" and "special proceedings". Hewitt v. Landis, 75 Colo. 277, 225 P. 842 (1924); Sitler v. Brians, 126 Colo. 370, 251 P.2d 319 (1952) (decided under former C.R.C.P. 111).

This rule expressly provides that, where a matter is specifically covered by statute, the rules of civil procedure are inapplicable. Theobald v. District Court, 148 Colo. 466, 366 P.2d 563 (1961).

The rules of civil procedure do not apply where there is a special statutory proceeding which sets forth remedies. Brown v. Hansen, 177 Colo. 39, 493 P.2d 1086 (1972).

The rules of civil procedure do not govern the procedure and practice in any special statutory proceeding so far as they are inconsistent or in conflict therewith. Wright v. Tinsley, 148 Colo. 258, 365 P.2d 691 (1961); City of Westminster v. District Court, 167 Colo. 263, 447 P.2d 537 (1968); Durbin v. Bonanza Corp., 716 P.2d 1124 (Colo. App. 1986).

If a statute creates a special statutory procedure relating to a type of action then the rules of civil procedure by express exception do not apply. Dallas v. Fitzsimmons, 137 Colo. 196, 323 P.2d 274 (1958).

Mere amendment of pleadings cannot accomplish ends which are inconsistent with statutory procedures. Trustees of Mtg. Trust of Am. v. District Court, 621 P.2d 310 (Colo. 1980).

Thus, the rules of civil procedure are not applicable to "habeas corpus", which is special statutory proceeding, insofar as they are inconsistent with the applicable statute pertaining to the special statutory proceeding. Hithe v. Nelson, 172 Colo. 179, 471 P.2d 596 (1970).

Likewise, water adjudication proceedings are ''special statutory proceedings'' as contemplated under this rule. Colo. River Water Conservation Dist. v. Rocky Mt. Power Co., 174 Colo. 309, 486 P.2d 438 (1971), cert. denied, 405 U.S. 996, 92 S. Ct. 1245, 31 L. Ed. 2d 465 (1972); S.E. Colo. Water Cons. v. Ft. Lyon Canal Co., 720 P.2d 133 (Colo. 1986).

The proceedings prescribed by § 37-92-302 for adjudication of water rights are special proceedings, and their scope is governed by statute. State, Dept. of Natural Res. v. Southwestern Colo. Water Conservation Dist., 671 P.2d 1294 (Colo. 1983); Meyring Livestock Co. v. Wamsley Cattle Co., 687 P.2d 955 (Colo. 1984).

Annexation review is a special statutory proceeding. City of Westminster v. District Court, 167 Colo. 263, 447 P.2d 537 (1968).

Likewise, proceedings under marketing act. If the procedure and practice set forth in the marketing act under § 35-28-119 are in any particulars inconsistent or in conflict with the rules of civil procedure, the statute, and not the rules, would govern. People ex rel. Orcutt v. District Court, 164 Colo. 385, 435 P.2d 374 (1967).

Rehearing by the public utilities commission is a special statutory proceeding. Peoples Natural Gas Div. v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 698 P.2d 255 (Colo. 1985).

Statutory procedures detailing methods for district court review of public utilities commission decisions are special statutory proceedings and govern over conflicting rules of civil procedure. Silver Eagle Servs. v. P.U.C., 768 P.2d 208 (Colo. 1989).

Release proceedings are special statutory proceedings. In view of the detailed procedure prescribed by § 16-8-115 the release proceedings are special statutory proceedings governed by this rule. People v. District Court, 192 Colo. 225, 557 P.2d 414 (1976).

Historically, the supreme court has considered mental health proceedings to be special statutory proceedings. People v. District Court, 192 Colo. 225, 557 P.2d 414 (1976).

Under this rule the procedure in release hearings under § 16-8-115 is so inconsistent and in conflict with the rules of civil procedure as to make civil discovery rules inapplicable to release hearings. People v. District Court, 192 Colo. 225, 557 P.2d 414 (1976).

Based on §§ 16-8-115 through 16-8-117 and on the special nonadversary nature of a release inquiry, the participants in release proceedings do not have the broad right of discovery as provided in the rules of civil procedure. People v. District Court, 192 Colo. 225, 557 P.2d 414 (1976).

Proceedings under § 16-5-209 are special statutory proceedings not exempt from application of the rules of civil procedure because said section lacks adequate, exclusive, full, and complete procedures. Moody v. Larsen, 802 P.2d 1169 (Colo. App. 1990).

Provisions of the Torrens Title Registration Act govern service of process in case brought under the Torrens Act. Rael v. Taylor, 876 P.2d 1210 (Colo. 1994).

Applied in Boxberger v. State Hwy. Comm'n, 126 Colo. 526, 251 P.2d 920 (1952); Stull v. District Court, 135 Colo. 86, 308 P.2d 1006 (1957).

III. DIVORCE AND SEPARATE MAINTENANCE.

Law reviews. For article, ''What Divorce Statutes Are Now in Effect in Colorado?'', see 21 Dicta 68 (1944). For article, ''Comments on the Rules of Civil Procedure'', see 22 Dicta 154 (1945).

The rules of procedure do not govern procedure and practice in actions in divorce or separate maintenance where they may conflict with the procedure and practice provided by the applicable statutes. Moats v. Moats, 168 Colo. 120, 450 P.2d 64 (1969).

Where the divorce statutes are silent as to any method of procedure the rules govern. Myers v. Myers, 110 Colo. 412, 135 P.2d 235 (1943); Holman v. Holman, 114 Colo. 437, 165 P.2d 1015 (1946).

The rules of civil procedure apply to a divorce action, unless a contrary rule appears in the divorce statutes. Bacher v. District Court, 186 Colo. 314, 527 P.2d 56 (1974).

Applied in People ex rel. Stanko v. Routt County Court, 110 Colo. 428, 135 P.2d 232 (1943); Ingels v. Ingels, 29 Colo. App. 585, 487 P.2d 812 (1971).

IV. APPEALS.

Applied in Niles v. Shinkle, 119 Colo. 458, 204 P.2d 1077 (1949).

Rule 82. Jurisdiction Unaffected

These rules shall not be construed to extend or limit the jurisdiction of any court.

Repealed December 5, 1996, effective January 1, 1997.

Rule 86. Pending Water Adjudications Under 1943 Act

In any water adjudication under the provisions of article 9 of chapter 148, C.R.S. 1963, as amended, pending on August 12, 1971, in which any applicant files any statement of claim asking that his date of priority antedate any earlier decrees or adjudications, in order not to be forever barred the owners of affected rights must object and protest within the times and in the manner provided by the Water Right Determination and Administration Act of 1969; and the judge shall direct the clerk to publish once in a newspaper or newspapers of general circulation in the water division as set forth in said Act of 1969, within which the water district is incorporated, to provide, and which shall be, notice to all water users within the division. The language of such notice shall be substantially as follows:

''There has been filed in this proceeding a claim or claims which may affect in priority any water right claimed or heretofore adjudicated within this division and owners of affected rights must appear to object and protest as provided in the Water Right Determination and Administration Act of 1969, or be forever barred.''

Editor's note: Article 9 of chapter 148, C.R.S. 1963, was repealed concurrent with the enactment of the ''Water Right Determination and Administration Act of 1969'' (see L. 69, p. 1223, § 20), which act is now numbered as article 92 of title 37 (see C.R.C.P. 87).

Rule 87. Application of Following Water Rules

Rules 88 through 91 shall govern proceedings under article 92 of title 37, C.R.S. 1973.

Rule 88. Judgments and Decrees

(a) Record and Indices. The water clerk shall prepare and maintain books of all judgments and decrees in the sequence of their entry by the court, or shall keep microfilm or magnetic tape copies of the same. The water clerk shall prepare and maintain suitable indices of the judgments and decrees.

(b) Entry and Finality of Judgment. Immediately following the issuance of a judgment and decree the water clerk shall make an entry of record concerning the same, and the judgment and decree shall then be deemed final.

(c) Notice. A copy of such judgment and decree or notice thereof shall be given promptly to applicants and to any protestors and objectors, or their attorneys.

Rule 89. Notice When Priority Antedating an Adjudication Is Sought

Whenever a claimant makes application for the determination of a water right or a conditional water right and claims that his date of priority will antedate any earlier adjudication or claims a priority date earlier than the effective date of one or more priorities awarded by a previous decree or decrees within the water division in which the application is filed (except when provision for such antedation or earlier priority is made by statute), in order not to be forever barred, the owners of affected rights must object and protest within the times and in the manner provided by statute, and the water clerk shall include in the resume required by statute a specific notification in boldface type substantially as follows:

''The water right claimed by this application may affect in priority any water right claimed or heretofore adjudicated within this division and owners of affected rights must appear to object and protest within the time provided by statute, or be forever barred.''

COMMENT

Following the announcement on March 24, 1971, of United States v. District Court in and for the County of Eagle, 401 U.S. 520, 91 S. Ct. 998, 28 L. Ed. 2d 278 (1971), and United States v. District Court in and for Water Division Number 5, 401 U.S. 527, 91 S. Ct. 1003, 28 L. Ed. 2d 284 (1971). The Colorado Supreme Court appointed a water advisory committee for study and recommendations as to the necessity and possible content of rules of court as a result of the two United States Supreme Court opinions. An attempt was made to have the membership of this committee representative of the different interests that might be affected by proceedings conducted in the light of these opinions and United States v. District Court, 169 Colo. 555, 458 P.2d 760 (1969), which was affirmed by the first mentioned United States Supreme Court opinion. After conferences and study the committee established tentative guidelines and recommended that a 5-man briefing and drafting committee be appointed for performance under the guidelines. Accordingly, a briefing and drafting committee was appointed, consisting of the following attorneys: Kenneth Balcomb, Glenwood Springs, Colorado; Charles J. Beise, Denver, Colorado; Kenneth L. Broadhurst, Denver, Colorado; Gene Alan Erl, Washington, D.C.; and Donald H. Hamburg, Denver, Colorado, with Mr. Beise acting as chairman. Early in the work of the briefing and drafting committee, Messrs. Beise and Balcomb prepared a memorandum which is set forth later herein.

After the briefing and drafting committee completed its work, it submitted proposed rules to the entire water advisory committee which, after some revision, unanimously approved them and recommended their adoption by the Colorado Supreme Court. The seven water judges of the state (Fred Calhoun, Donald A. Carpenter, Richard E. Conour, C. H. Darrow, William S. Eakes, William L. Gobin and Don Lorenz) then studied and conferred with respect to the proposed rules. After some revision, the water judges recommended their adoption. Accordingly, the proposed rules were adopted substantially as recommended on August 12, 1971, as Rules 86 through 91, C.R.C.P.

While the Colorado Supreme Court does not comment nor pass upon the contents of the memorandum prepared by Messrs. Beise and Balcomb, it believes that the bench and bar will find value in it and, therefore, sets it forth in its entirety:

By and large the Colorado Rules of Civil Procedure are to apply in conformity with section 37-92-304(3), C.R.S. 1973, unless varied by the proposed rules.

Experience gained from the use of forms presently furnished indicated an insufficiency of information therein, requiring in many cases, statements of opposition and protests when, with additional information, the same would be unnecessary.

Recommendations regarding the duties of the water clerk in the treatment of files, decrees, and judgments are made for the sake of simplicity, uniformity, and permanency.

The proposed rule relating to publication of a claim of right on the part of any claimant to antedate in priority previous orders, decrees, and judgments of courts establishing priorities gave the committee the greatest trouble, but the committee is satisfied that the requirements of due process are met by the proposed rule.

Due process relates to the right to be heard, and this right is subject to reasonable limitations.

The type or kind of notice to be given to and the method of service thereof on other parties possibly affected by water adjudication proceedings has varied in Colorado as changes in water law have occurred. In the original statutes of 1879 and 1881, personal service in addition to publication and posting was required where possible, with mailing of notice where not possible.

In 1905 special supplementary adjudication proceedings became possible. Original adjudication proceedings in a water district still required the 1879-1881 service treatment,[1] but after 1905 the supplementary proceedings required only such notice as was required by the court. As a matter of practice this was generally confined to publication and posting. Countless decrees were entered in such special proceedings. All priorities so established and fixed are recognized in the present system of administration.

The 1943 law abolished special proceedings, and substituted general supplementary proceedings. It required by way of notice publication plus the mailing of the notice to those persons who had not theretofore adjudicated their claims according to the records of the state engineer and to all users who within the preceding calendar year had diverted water according to a list furnished by the water commissioner or division engineer.

The incompleteness and insufficiency of these lists as a means of reaching claimants of water rights is well recognized. Factually, it is impossible to reach all claimants by any means other than publication.

The salient feature of the previous statutory notice provisions to be noted here is that the requisite statutory publication, posting and mailing was confined to the district boundaries, and did not extend to the division of which the district was a part, even though the priority or priorities awarded related to and affected rights in the entire division.

In 1887 the legislature required the division engineers to treat priorities awarded in the districts on a division-wide basis. The claim was made in O'Neil v. Northern Colorado Irrigation District, 56 Colo. 545, 139 P. 536 (1914), that if retrospective effect was given this statute allowing curtailment of plaintiffs' priority awarded subsequent to 1887 in favor of defendants' priority entered before 1887 without notice to the plaintiff but in another water district within the division, it resulted in a taking of plaintiffs' property without due process of law. The challenge was made more than four years after entry of defendants' decree. The Court held the four year statute effectively barred the suit irrespective of the 1887 statute. This result was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States in an opinion by Mr. Justice Holmes, 242 U.S. 20, 37 S. Ct. 7, 61 L. Ed. 123 (1916).

We are not unmindful of the service of process requirement of due process in other types of litigation (condemnation) and have considered other cases very kindly furnished by interested members of and advisors to the committee as a whole. Neither are we unmindful of Rule 4 of our Rules of Civil Procedure which by the statute and the rule here under consideration would have no application to notice requirements in water courts. We believe O'Neil followed by Eagle County[2] and Darrow[3] control.

Mr. Justice Holmes in O'Neil held that due process requirements were met when a party, though not entitled to be heard in the first instance, was allowed by statute a reasonable time thereafter to be heard. This was predicated on the fact that a decree regarding water priorities was a public fact. The fact that rights might be lost by inaction on the part of a claimant was likewise considered immaterial by Mr. Justice Holmes because the rule of limitation applied to him was likewise consistently applied by Colorado Courts to all similar situations. Plaintiff in O'Neil could not have been misled by contradictory rulings regarding applications of the rule.

Eagle County, of course, holds that the McCarren Amendment allows joinder the United States in adjudication proceedings under the 1943 Act. Darrow goes even farther and says such joinder can effectively be made under other but dissimilar state adjudicatory procedures. The key is the presence of a state statute providing the procedure for adjudication. The procedural steps themselves are a matter of state concern and need only be equally and fairly applied.[4]

The Supreme Court of Colorado in its review in Eagle County held the trial court had the power to require the giving of whatever additional notice of the claim of right to antedate previous decrees it deemed necessary.

The 1969 Act gives notice by requiring publication of the resume in one or more newspapers within the division as will give general circulation to water claimants in each county in the division. We do not believe this requires publication in every county which has a newspaper, but rather requires publication in a newspaper of general circulation in such county even if published elsewhere in the division. Thus publication in but one newspaper in the division might be found by the water court to be sufficient general circulation to meet due process requirements. Under this 1969 Act a well owner seeking his actual date of priority without prejudice because of his failure to participate in earlier adjudications antedates prior decrees. The only notice required is publication. Personal service is not required. The proposed rule is consistent with this procedure.

The additional statutory requirement of mailing to those requesting a copy of the resume relates not to the jurisdiction of the court or due process, but is for informational purposes only.

The final and important safeguard regarding notice is met when the statute requires the referee to direct mailing to those he deems affected by a particular claim.

On the surface O'Neil dealt with a statute of limitations, and in Eagle County and Darrow the problem of notice was not directly involved. But in O'Neil the only notice which could have possibly reached the adjacent district, other than the important notice the statute itself gave, was the publication. The same is true in Eagle County. In Darrow, however, as the rule herein under consideration will require, the notice was given division wide, and this was more effective as notice in the area affected than any previous statutory notice requirements.

We thus conclude that publication once in a newspaper or newspapers of general circulation within the division as required by statute and the proposed rule meets the requirements of due process, because:

1. Three years is a reasonable time for anyone to establish the error, if any, in the decree and judgment.[5]
2. In this day and age of rapid communication and transit, many newspapers are in general circulation throughout the state and not just a division.
3. The system has been effectively in force and in operation for nearly two years with relation to well owners and is the accepted state method of giving notice.

Rule 90. Dispositions of Water Court Applications

(a) The water clerk shall receive and file all applications and number them upon payment of filing fees. The water clerk shall not accept for filing any application that is not accompanied by the required filing fee. Each application filed within each division shall be consecutively numbered, preceded by the year and the letters CW (e.g. 2009CW100) to identify such applications as concerning water matters. The applicant for a finding of reasonable diligence relating to a conditional water right and/or to make a conditional water right absolute shall include in the application a listing of the original and any other prior case numbers pertaining to the conditional water right included in the application; thereafter, the assigned case number for the application shall appear on any document, pleading, or other item in the case. Referee rulings and water court judgments and decrees shall include all relevant prior case numbers.

(b) The water clerk shall include in the resume all applications filed during the preceding month that substantially contain the information required by Rule 3 of the Uniform Local Rules for All State Water Court Divisions and the standard forms approved by the water judges under C.R.S. § 37-92-302(2)(a), which together provide the information sufficient for publication to the public and potential parties. The water clerk, in consultation with the referee pursuant to Rule 6 of the Uniform Local Rules For All State

[4] Ft. Lyon Canal Co. v. Arkansas Sugar Beet & Irrigated Land Co., 39 Colo. 332, 34 P. 278 (1907). At page 344 thereof the court said:

All persons are bound to take notice of a public law. The irrigation statutes are public, and apply to all persons taking water from the same source. The waters of the state belong to the public, and, as we said, in substance, in the original opinion, the state in its sovereign capacity had the right to provide a reasonable method whereby such rights might be adjudicated and settled, and to require claimants of such rights to present them in a prescribed manner, within a prescribed time, and unless the law in this respect was obeyed, that all claims not thus presented should be barred. That is what the statutes on the subject of the use of water for irrigation have provided. All persons are bound to take notice of these provisions.

[5] This limitation was increased from two to three years by the 1970 amendment, section 37-92-304(10), C.R.S. 1973.

Water Court Divisions, shall promptly refer to the water judge for consideration and disposition any application that does not substantially contain the information required by Rule 3 of the Uniform Local Rules For All State Water Court Divisions and the standard forms approved by the water judges under C.R.S. § 37-92-302(2)(a). Any such application shall not be published in the resume pending disposition by the water judge. The water clerk shall promptly inform the applicant that the application has been referred to the water judge and provide the applicant with a list of the required information that was not contained in the application.

(c) In determining whether or not to order publication of the application in the resume pursuant to C.R.S. § 37-92-302(3)(a), the water judge shall promptly review the application and shall employ an inquiry notice standard in conducting the review. Upon a finding that the application does not provide sufficient inquiry notice contemplated by Rule 3 of the Uniform Local Rules for All State Water Court Divisions and the standard forms approved by the water judges under C.R.S. § 37-92-302(2)(a) to justify publication, the water judge shall set a date pursuant to C.R.C.P. 41(b)(2) and C.R.C.P. 121, Section 1-10, by which date the application will be dismissed unless, prior to that date, a sufficient application is filed. The application will retain its original filing date unless and until the application is dismissed.

(d) For purposes of relation back of the filing date of a subsequent applicant's application for a water right or conditional water right pursuant to C.R.S. § 37-92-306.1, the subsequent application shall be filed within sixty days of the date the prior application is published in the resume.

(e) Upon request, the water clerk shall provide a prospective applicant or opposer with one copy of the form for the relevant application or statement of opposition. The standard forms for applications and statements of opposition may also be found in the ''Water Courts'' section of the Colorado Judicial Branch web page.

Editor's note: Amendments to this section, adopted February 19, 2009, are applicable to applications filed on or after July 1, 2009, but any portions thereof that can be adapted for use by the water judge or referee without prejudice to the parties may be utilized in existing cases.

Change of Judge; Place of Trial

ANALYSIS BY RULE

CHAPTER 11

CHANGE OF JUDGE; PLACE OF TRIAL

Rule 97. Change of Judge

A judge shall be disqualified in an action in which he is interested or prejudiced, or has been of counsel for any party, or is or has been a material witness, or is so related or connected with any party or his attorney as to render it improper for him to sit on the trial, appeal, or other proceeding therein. A judge may disqualify himself on his own motion for any of said reasons, or any party may move for such disqualification and a motion by a party for disqualification shall be supported by affidavit. Upon the filing by a party of such a motion all other proceedings in the case shall be suspended until a ruling is made thereon. Upon disqualifying himself, a judge shall notify forthwith the chief judge of the district who shall assign another judge in the district to hear the action. If no other judge in the district is available or qualified, the chief judge shall notify forthwith the court administrator who shall obtain from the Chief Justice the assignment of a replacement judge.

Annotator's note. Since this rule is similar to § 32 of the former Code of Civil Procedure, which was supplanted by the Rules of Civil Procedure in 1941, relevant cases construing that section have been included in the annotations to this rule.

Purpose of rule. The intent of the rule under which a judge should disqualify himself from a case if he has served as counsel for either of the parties is to insure a fair and impartial hearing of the issue involved. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Blanning, 29 Colo. App. 61, 479 P.2d 404 (1970).

Purpose of disqualification rule is to prevent judge with a ''bent of mind'' from presiding over action. Goebel v. Benton, 830 P.2d 995 (Colo. 1992).

Trial judge's duty to preside. In the absence of a valid reason for disqualification relating to the subject matter of the litigation, the trial judge has the duty of presiding over the case. Blades v. DaFoe, 666 P.2d 1126 (Colo. App. 1983), rev'd on other grounds, 704 P.2d 317 (Colo. 1985).

Upon reasonable inference of a ''bent of mind'' that will prevent judge from dealing fairly with party seeking recusal, it is incumbent on trial judge to recuse himself. Wright v. District Court, 731 P.2d 661 (Colo. 1987).

The requirements for disqualification of a judge are that he be interested or prejudiced, or related to counsel for any party, or has been counsel for or related to any party, as required by this rule. Fehr v. Hadden, 134 Colo. 102, 300 P.2d 533 (1956).

Generally, a judge's ruling on a legal issue cannot form the basis for recusal. Brewster v. Dist. Court, 811 P.2d 812 (Colo. 1991); People ex rel. S.G., 91 P.3d 443 (Colo. App. 2004).

Also, a judge's opinion formed against a party from evidence before the court in a judicial proceeding, even as to the guilt or innocence of a defendant, is generally not a basis for disqualification. People ex rel. S.G., 91 P.3d 443 (Colo. App. 2004).

What a judge learns in his or her judicial capacity usually cannot form the basis for disqualification. People ex rel. S.G., 91 P.3d 443 (Colo. App. 2004).

Disqualifying interest must relate to subject matter of suit. The interest of a judge upon which he may disqualify himself must necessarily relate to the subject matter of the litigation, or be of a pecuniary interest in the outcome of the litigation, and not as it might relate to a determination of the facts and legal questions presented. Primarily, it is the duty of a judge to sit in a case in the absence of a showing that he is disqualified. Kubat v. Kubat, 124 Colo. 491, 238 P.2d 897 (1951); Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Blanning, 29 Colo. App. 61, 479 P.2d 404 (1970).

Rule does not apply to ordinary transfer for convenience. This rule, providing for designation by the chief justice of a justice to try a cause wherein the trial judge is disqualified, has no application to the ordinary transfer of causes for convenience from one division to another in a district court having more than one judge. Smaldone v. People, 102 Colo. 500, 81 P.2d 385 (1938) (decided under former Supreme Court Rule 14C).

There should be a supporting affidavit to the motion to disqualify, in compliance with the rules. Kubat v. Kubat, 124 Colo. 491, 238 P.2d 897 (1951).

In all cases necessary material or pertinent facts should be set out. In case of the prejudice of the judge, his attention would be called to some forgotten or unknown circumstance. Justice requires that the judge should not be charged with prejudice while left in surprise at a cause he may not imagine, or may believe exists only in the imagination of the applicant, and without the necessary knowledge upon which to act in the exercise of that discretion to allow or deny the charge. Hughes v. People, 5 Colo. 436 (1880).

The law contemplates that, upon application for change of venue, facts shall be stated sufficient to inform the judge of the nature of the causes for the change, and their alleged foundation. Hughes v. People, 5 Colo. 436 (1880).

The facts are not to be set out beyond what is necessary where they involve the judicial acts or character of the judge. Hughes v. People, 5 Colo. 436 (1880).

Only question on motion is sufficiency of facts alleged. The motion and supporting affidavit speak for themselves and the only question involved is whether the facts alleged are sufficient to compel the judge to disqualify himself. Kovacheff v. Langhart, 147 Colo. 339, 363 P.2d 702 (1961).

Supporting affidavits insufficient to warrant recusal where the allegations, even if accepted as true, did not state actual facts and statements evidencing impartiality or bias. In re Goellner, 770 P.2d 1387 (Colo. App. 1989).

Motion and supporting affidavits are insufficient to require disqualification if only allege opinions or conclusions and are unsubstantiated by facts supporting reasonable inference of actual or apparent bias or prejudice. Goebel v. Benton, 830 P.2d 995 (Colo. 1992); In re Elmer, 936 P.2d 617 (Colo. App. 1997).

Reasonable question as to impartiality requires disqualification. Where one might reasonably question the trial judge's impartiality, it is improper for him to preside over the trial. Wood Bros. Homes v. City of Fort Collins, 670 P.2d 9 (Colo. App. 1983).

Trial judge must accept affidavits filed with motion to disqualify as true, even though judge believes that the statements contained in the affidavits are false or the meaning attributed to them by the party seeking recusal is erroneous. Wright v. District Court, 731 P.2d 661 (Colo. 1987).

Disqualification is within trial court's discretion. Whether to disqualify in a civil case is a matter within the discretion of the trial court, and its ruling will not be disturbed on appeal except for an abuse of discretion. In re Mann, 655 P.2d 814 (Colo. 1982); Hollemon v. Murray, 666 P.2d 1107 (Colo. App. 1982); Goebel v. Benton, 830 P.2d 995 (Colo. 1992).

Whether to disqualify himself in a civil case is a question within the discretion of the trial judge, and the judge's ruling on that issue will not be disturbed on appeal absent a showing of an abuse of that discretion. Colo. State Bd. of Agric. v. First Nat'l Bank, 671 P.2d 1331 (Colo. App. 1983).

Trial court's denial of motion for recusal constitutes an abuse of discretion and is reversible error when there was, at least, an appearance of bias or prejudice due to the existence of a professional relationship between the trial judge and an expert witness for defendants. Hammons v. Birket, 759 P.2d 783 (Colo. App. 1988).

It is judge's duty to pass only upon legal sufficiency of facts alleged in affidavit and when motion and supporting affidavits allege facts which demonstrate that judge had a ''bent of mind'', refusal of judge to disqualify himself constitutes abuse of discretion. Goebel v. Benton, 830 P.2d 995 (Colo. 1992).

Appearance of impropriety, not actual prejudice, is sufficient to warrant recusal. Where recusal is sought based upon the relationship of the judge to another person, it is the closeness of the relationship and its bearing on the underlying case that determines whether disqualification is necessary. People ex rel. A.G., 264 P.3d 615 (Colo. App. 2010), rev'd on other grounds, 262 P.3d 646 (Colo. 2011).

This rule does not require a hearing on a motion for change of judge on the grounds of prejudice. Brouwer v. District Court, 169 Colo. 303, 455 P.2d 207 (1969).

The parties do not require an opportunity to introduce evidence in support of a motion to have the trial judge disqualified. Kovacheff v. Langhart, 147 Colo. 339, 363 P.2d 702 (1961).

Nor does it require notice. There is no abuse of discretion in calling the motion to disqualify the trial judge up for hearing without notice where the parties to the action, and their attorneys, were present in response to the trial setting, and trial could not proceed until the motion was disposed of. The motion was directed against the judge, was self-explanatory, and notice to the parties could not have afforded the court any better opportunity to rule upon it. Brackett v. Cleveland, 147 Colo. 328, 363 P.2d 1050 (1961).

This rule does not fix the time when a motion should be filed. Aaberg v. District Court, 136 Colo. 525, 319 P.2d 491 (1957).

A motion to disqualify a trial judge should be filed promptly when grounds therefor are known and prior to taking any other steps in the case. Aaberg v. District Court, 136 Colo. 525, 319 P.2d 491 (1957); Dominic Leone Constr. Co. v. District Court, 150 Colo. 47, 370 P.2d 759 (1962).

Where defendant waited two years before filing a motion for recusal based on the judge's comments, motion was untimely. Estate of Binford v. Gibson, 839 P.2d 508 (Colo. App. 1992).

Where plaintiff waited until one year of legal proceedings had occurred before seeking recusal on grounds of comments made in an earlier case, motion was untimely. Holland v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 883 P.2d 500 (Colo. App. 1994).

Petitioner did not waive right to file a motion to disqualify judge when petitioner waited two months after the grounds for disqualification were known to file his motion. Johnson v. District Court, 574 P.2d 952 (Colo. 1984).

Court may deny motion to recuse if it is untimely. People ex rel. A.G., 264 P.3d 615 (Colo. App. 2010), rev'd on other grounds, 262 P.3d 646 (Colo. 2011).

Without an assertion of actual prejudice, counsel's failure to timely move for disqualification cannot be the basis of a valid claim for ineffective assistance of counsel. A party must show actual prejudice on the part of the judge, in that the result of the proceeding would have been different. People ex rel. A.G., 262 P.3d 646 (Colo. 2011).

Mother's allegation of prejudice was based upon the appearance of impropriety created by the judge's clerk's relationship to a material witness for the government. The mere allegation of prejudice is insufficient to satisfy the element of prejudice necessary to show that counsel's errors deprived the party of a fair trial. People ex rel. A.G., 262 P.3d 646 (Colo. 2011).

Appearance for purpose other than to question authority waives objection. Where a party seeks to disqualify a judge for bias and prejudice, and at the same time asks for affirmative relief by motion for a change of venue, appearance before such judge for any other purpose than to question his authority to act, waives the right to object to his authority. Aaberg v. District Court, 136 Colo. 525, 319 P.2d 491 (1957).

Failure to comply with rule bars objections to judge on review. Where a party has failed to comply with this rule, the reviewing court will not entertain objections to a trial judge sitting in judgment of the acts of its own public administrator, which are not properly preserved in the proceeding below. Jones v. Estate of Lambourn, 159 Colo. 246, 411 P.2d 11 (1966).

Filing of motion to disqualify a trial judge suspends all other proceedings in the case until ruling is made thereon. Dominic Leone Constr. Co. v. District Court, 150 Colo. 47, 370 P.2d 759 (1962); Brouwer v. District Court, 169 Colo. 303, 455 P.2d 207 (1969).

A motion to disqualify the judge has the effect, as a matter of law, of suspending any further proceedings until the judge rules on the motion to disqualify. City of Trinidad v. District Court, 196 Colo. 106, 581 P.2d 304 (1978).

Judge is obligated to review motion. Because a motion to disqualify a judge has been made, judge is obligated to review the motion and decide its sufficiency, and judge does not have the authority to determine any other substantive matter pending before the court, including a motion for change of venue. Johnson v. District Court, 674 P.2d 952 (Colo. 1984).

Writ of mandamus proper for failure to rule on disqualification motion. The trial judge must initially rule on the disqualification motion, and if he fails to rule, a writ in the nature of mandamus is a proper remedy. City of Trinidad v. District Court, 196 Colo. 106, 581 P.2d 304 (1978).

Motion does not deprive court of jurisdiction. Where the trial court ruled upon a motion for change of judge, it did not lose jurisdiction to proceed. Brouwer v. District Court, 169 Colo. 303, 455 P.2d 207 (1969).

Procedural requirements for judge to disqualify himself. The power of a judge to disqualify himself may be exercised even though the proper procedural steps leading to disqualification have not been pursued by any party to the litigation. Beckord v. District Court, 698 P.2d 1323 (Colo. 1985).

Where the plaintiff failed to object to the appointment of a judge within the appropriate time period, the objection will be deemed waived and the plaintiff will be estopped to object. In re Fifield, 776 P.2d 1167 (Colo. App. 1989).

Adjudicating board abused its discretion by concluding that complainant waived his right to raise the issue of disqualification on the basis of implied waiver by conduct when unequivocal evidence of the intent to waive his right was absent. Venard v. Dept. of Corr., 72 P.3d 446 (Colo. App. 2003).

Mere friendship of a judge with an officer of a corporate party does not warrant disqualification unless the nature of the friendship creates an appearance of impropriety. Pierce v. United Bank of Denver, 780 P.2d 6 (Colo. App. 1989).

Once judge disqualifies himself from a case, he is without jurisdiction to rule on motions filed by the parties which involve an exercise of judicial discretion. Beckord v. District Court, 698 P.2d 1323 (Colo. 1985).

Judge should not appoint his own successor. When a judge is charged with bias and prejudice and sustains a motion so charging, or steps aside without ruling on the motion, proper procedure requires that he not select his successor or assign the case to another judge, but that he proceed in accordance with this rule. Aaberg v. District Court, 136 Colo. 525, 319 P.2d 491 (1957).

Proceeding with hearing without objection waives objection. Proceeding with a preliminary injunction hearing without objection, after being informed by the court that defense counsel had been appointed to a district commission for the evaluation of the performance of judges pursuant to § 13-5.5-104, is a waiver of the right to object. Bishop & Co. v. Cuomo, 799 P.2d 444 (Colo. App. 1990).

Purpose of disqualification requirement is to prevent a party from being forced to litigate a matter before a judge with a ''bent of mind.'' Goebel v. Benton, 830 P.2d 995 (Colo. 1992).

Applied in In re Johnson, 40 Colo. App. 250, 576 P.2d 188 (1977); Marks v. District Court, 643 P.2d 741 (Colo. 1982).

II. ILLUSTRATIVE CASES.

Filing of complaint with qualifications commission insufficient. To allow a litigant to file a letter critical of a trial judge or to inform the judge of the filing of a complaint with the judicial qualifications commission and later assert the judge's knowledge of the complaint as a basis for disqualification would encourage impermissible judge-shopping. In re Mann, 655 P.2d 814 (Colo. 1982).

Assistance of judge in preparation of arbitrator's findings not prejudicial. The participation of the trial judge in the preparation of the arbitrator's findings after reference of case did not disqualify him from rendering judgment, where it did not appear that such participation had been to the extent of creating prejudice in examining and determining issues of law which might be involved. Zelinger v. Mellwin Constr. Co., 123 Colo. 149, 225 P.2d 844 (1950).

Continuing jurisdiction over attack of decree is not sufficient ground. In a proceeding to attack an adoption decree before the same judge who granted the decree, the suggestion in a motion to disqualify the judge that he will undoubtedly be called as a witness is not ground for disqualification, since, in a matter of adoption proceedings, the judge who entered the adoption decree had a continuing jurisdiction and was the proper one to review or consider that judgment or decree when it was attacked. Kubat v. Kubat, 124 Colo. 491, 238 P.2d 897 (1951).

The initiation of an ex parte communication by a judge with a party in a dependency hearing regarding the adequacy of her attorney's representation was improper, but judge would not be disqualified where disqualification motion and affidavits failed to allege facts from which it might be inferred that the ex parte communication demonstrated a bias against the party or her attorney. S.S. v. Wakefield, 764 P.2d 70 (Colo. 1988).

Where the trial judge owned controlling shares of stock in a bank in which the plaintiff maintained substantial deposits, his pecuniary interest in the outcome of the litigation was such that he should have disqualified himself. Zoline v. Telluride Lodge Ass'n, 732 P.2d 635 (Colo. 1987).

Purchase of water from corporate defendant is not disqualifying interest. A motion to disqualify a trial judge on the ground of prejudice because the defendants in the case are socially and politically influential and because the judge is a water user of the corporate defendant, presents no sound basis for disqualification, where the company is a mutual nonprofit corporation and where no pecuniary advantage could possibly accrue to the trial court by his action. Fehr v. Hadden, 134 Colo. 102, 300 P.2d 533 (1956).

Previous service of judge as county attorney unrelated to action. No showing has been made that in his duty as county attorney 17 years prior to the institution of this action, the trial judge was in any manner concerned with the question of title to this property, or that the defendant's right to a fair and impartial hearing was in any manner affected by the refusal of the trial judge to disqualify himself. The trial judge was correct in refusing to disqualify himself. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Blanning, 29 Colo. App. 61, 479 P.2d 404 (1970).

Similarly, where judge appointed as attorney to represent inductees in quiet title action. In the absence of more positive representation than is usually performed by an attorney appointed to represent persons in or about to be inducted into military service in a quiet title action, it is questionable whether the mere appointment of an attorney and his subsequent approval of a quiet title decree disqualifies him later as judge to determine whether the decree is ''res judicata'' in another proceeding in which some of the parties are the same. Martinez v. Casey, 178 Colo. 62, 495 P.2d 216 (1972).

Partiality or appearance of bias or prejudice. Judge should have disqualified himself when affidavits filed reported actual events and statements which, if true, evidence partiality or the appearance of bias or prejudice against the petitioner on the part of the judge. Johnson v. District Court, 674 P.2d 952 (Colo. 1984).

Judge should have disqualified herself when she allowed marked personal feelings toward the contempt defendant to affect her judgment in the proceedings and after she referred the case to the district attorney for potential criminal prosecution. In re Estate of Elliott, 993 P.2d 474 (Colo. 2000).

Judge's Catholic faith insufficient to support a reasonable inference that he was biased and should recuse himself from case under this rule. A judge's particular religious affiliation, even though the same as that of the father in dissolution of marriage case and of the special advocate, did not create sufficient appearance of bias or bent of mind to require recusal. In re McSoud, 131 P.3d 1208 (Colo. App. 2006).

Appearance of impropriety was created by administrative adjudicator's position as a direct adversary of complainant's counsel in a similar, previous personnel matter. Thus, it was an abuse of discretion for board to allow administrative adjudicator to sit in on case. Venard v. Dept. of Corr., 72 P.3d 446 (Colo. App. 2003).

No appearance of impropriety was found and trial court's decision not to grant relief from summary judgment was proper. Giralt v. Vail Village Inn Assocs., 759 P.2d 801 (Colo. App. 1988), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 1042, 109 S. Ct. 868, 102 L. Ed. 2d 991 (1989).

Affidavit insufficient. Litinsky v. Querard, 683 P.2d 816 (Colo. App. 1984).

Refusal of judge to disqualify himself was error. Geer v. Hall, 138 Colo. 384, 333 P.2d 1040 (1959).

For actions of judge effectively disqualifying himself from case, see Beckord v. District Court, 698 P.2d 1323 (Colo. 1985).

Refusal of judge to disqualify himself was error where judge's ex parte communication with party significantly involved in provision of health care services to mentally ill, an issue of critical significance to judge's ultimate ruling on adequacy of state's remedial plan. Goebel v. Benton, 830 P.2d 995 (Colo. 1992).

The fact that the defendant had brought a civil action against the judge complaining of judicial conduct and defendant's conclusory statements that the judge was biased were insufficient to show that recusal was required. Moody v. Corsentino, 843 P.2d 1355 (Colo. 1993).

Legal rulings against a party on issues appropriately before the judge are not grounds for recusal, nor does the judge's direction to the clerk not to accept fax filings from the party support a reasonable inference of bias. Holland v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 883 P.2d 500 (Colo. App. 1994).

Imposition of discovery sanctions did not indicate bias where issues were appropriately before the judge and findings were based on the motions filed and the arguments of counsel. M Life Ins. Co. v. Sapers & Wallack Ins. Agency, Inc., 40 P.3d 3 (Colo. App. 2001).

Trial court judge erred by determining the relationship between his court clerk and the witness did not warrant judge's recusal. Where court clerk's daughter, as caseworker, was material witness in the case, absent waiver, judge abused his discretion by not recusing from the case. Judge's relationship with clerk and her relationship to witness created the appearance of impropriety. People ex rel. A.G., 264 P.3d 615 (Colo. App. 2010), rev'd on other grounds, 262 P.3d 646 (Colo. 2011).

Rule 98. Place of Trial

(a) Venue for Real Property, Franchises, and Utilities. All actions affecting real property, franchises, or utilities shall be tried in the county in which the subject of the action, or a substantial part thereof, is situated.

(b) Venue for Recovery of Penalty, etc. Actions upon the following claims shall be tried in the county where the claim, or some part thereof, arose:

(1) For the recovery of a penalty or forfeiture imposed by statute, except that when it is imposed for an offense committed on a lake, river, or other stream of water, situated in two or more counties, the action may be brought in any county bordering on such lake, river, or stream and opposite the place where the offense was committed;

(2) Against a public officer or person specially appointed to execute his duties, for an act done by him in virtue of his office, or against a person who by his command, or in his aid, does anything touching the duties of such officer, or for a failure to perform any act or duty which he is by law required to perform.

(c) Venue for Tort, Contract, and Other Actions. (1) Except as provided in sections (a), (b), and (c)(2) through (6) of this Rule, an action shall be tried in the county in which the defendants, or any of them, may reside at the commencement of the action, or in the county where the plaintiff resides when service is made on the defendant in such county; or if the defendant is a nonresident of this state, the same may be tried in any county in which the defendant may be found in this state, or in the county designated in the complaint, and if any defendant is about to depart from the state, such action may be tried in any county where plaintiff resides, or where defendant may be found and service had.

(2) Except as provided in subsection (3) of this section, an action on book account or for goods sold and delivered may also be tried in the county where the plaintiff resides or where the goods were sold; an action upon contract may also be tried in the county where the same was to be performed.

(3) (A) For the purposes of this Rule, a consumer contract is any sale, lease, or loan in which (i) the buyer, lessee, or debtor is a person other than an organization; (ii) the goods are purchased or leased, the services are obtained, or the debt is incurred, primarily for a personal, family, or household purpose; and (iii) the initial amount due under the contract, the total amount initially payable under the lease, or the initial principal does not exceed twenty-five thousand dollars.

(B) An action on a consumer contract shall be tried (i) in the county in which the contract was signed or entered into by any defendant; or (ii) in the county in which any defendant resided at the time the contract was entered into; or (iii) in the county in which any defendant resides at the time the action is commenced. If the defendant is a nonresident of this state, the same may be tried in any county in which the defendant may be found in this state, or in the county designated in the complaint, and if any defendant is about to depart from the state, such action may be tried in any county where plaintiff resides, or where defendant may be found and service had.

(C) In any action on a consumer contract if the plaintiff fails to state facts in the complaint or by affidavit showing that the action has been commenced in the proper county as described in this Rule, or if it appears from the stated facts that venue is improper, the court may, upon its own motion or upon motion of any party, dismiss any such action without prejudice; however, if appropriate facts appear in the record, the court shall transfer the action to an appropriate county. Any provision or authorization in any consumer contract purporting to waive any rights under subsection (3) of section (c) of this Rule is void.

(D) Any debt collector covered by the provisions of the Federal ''Fair Debt Collection Practices Act'' shall comply with the provisions of said Act set forth in 15 U.S.C. 1692(i) concerning legal actions by debt collectors, notwithstanding any provision of this Rule.

(4) An action upon a contract for services may also be tried in the county in which the services were to be performed.

(5) An action for tort may also be tried in the county where the tort was committed.

(6) An action in interpleader may also be tried in any county where a claimant resides.

(d) Venue for Injunction to Stay Proceedings. When any injunction shall be granted to stay a suit or judgment, the proceeding shall be had in the county where the judgment was obtained or the suit is pending.

(e) Motion to Change Venue; When Presented; Waiver; Effect of Filing. (1) Except for actions under section (c)(3), (f)(2), or (g) of this Rule, a motion to change venue shall be filed within the time permitted for the filing of motions under the defenses numbered (1) to (4) of section (b) of Rule 12, and if any such motion, or any other motion permitted by Rule 12, is filed within said time, simultaneously therewith. Unless so filed, the right to have venue changed is waived. A motion under sections (c)(3), (f)(2), or (g) of this Rule, shall be filed prior to the time a case is set for trial, or the right to have venue changed on said grounds is waived, unless the court, in its discretion, upon motion filed or of its own motion, finds that a change of venue should be ordered.

(2) If a motion to change venue is filed within the time permitted by section (a) of Rule 12 for the filing of a motion under the defenses numbered (1) to (4) of section (b) of Rule 12, the filing of such motion by a party under the provisions of subsection (1) of this section (e) alters his time to file his responsive pleading as follows: If the motion is overruled the responsive pleading shall be filed within 14 days thereafter unless a different time is fixed by the court, and if it is allowed the responsive pleading shall be filed within 14 days after the action has been docketed in the court to which the action is removed unless that court fixes a different time.

(3) Except as otherwise provided in an order allowing a motion to change venue, earlier ex parte and other orders affecting an action, or the parties thereto, shall remain in effect, subject to change or modification by order of the court to which the action is removed.

(f) Causes of Change. The court may, on good cause shown, change the place of trial in the following cases: (1) When the county designated in the complaint is not the proper county; (2) When the convenience of witnesses and the ends of justice would be promoted by the change.

(g) Change from County. If either party fears that he will not receive a fair trial in the county in which the action is pending, because the adverse party has an undue influence over the minds of the inhabitants thereof, or that they are prejudiced against him so that he cannot expect a fair trial, he may file a motion supported by an affidavit for a change of venue. The opposite party may file a counter motion and affidavit. If the motion is sustained the venue shall be changed.

(h) Transfers Where Concurrent Jurisdiction. All actions or proceedings in which district and county courts have concurrent jurisdiction, may, by stipulation of the parties and order of the court, be transferred by either court to such other court of the same county. Upon transfer, the court to which such cause is removed shall have and exercise the same jurisdiction as if originally commenced therein.

(i) Place Changed if All Parties Agree. When all parties assent, or when all parties who have entered their appearance assent and the remaining nonappearing parties are in default, the place of trial of an action in a district court may be changed to any other county in the district. The judgment entered therein, if any, shall be transmitted to the clerk of the district court of the original county for filing and recording in his office.

(j) Parties Must Agree on Change. Where there are two or more plaintiffs or defendants, the place of trial shall not be changed unless the motion is made by or with the consent of all the plaintiffs or defendants, as the case may be.

(k) Only One Change; No Waiver. In case the place of trial is changed the party securing the same shall not be permitted to apply for another change upon the same ground. A party does not waive his right to change of judge or place of trial if his objection thereto is made in apt time.

This rule determines place of trial or venue in courts of record of general jurisdiction. Slinkard v. Jordan, 131 Colo. 144, 279 P.2d 1054 (1955).

Statute fixing place where an action must be brought does not control place of trial. People ex rel. Bear Creek Dev. Corp. v. District Court, 78 Colo. 526, 242 P. 997 (1925) (decided under § 25 et seq. of the former Code of Civil Procedure, which was replaced by the Rules of Civil Procedure in 1941).

Bringing an action and trying it are two different matters. People ex rel. Bear Creek Dev. Corp. v. District Court, 78 Colo. 526, 242 P. 997 (1925); Caldwell v. District Court, 128 Colo. 498, 266 P.2d 771 (1953).

Where a statutory remedy provides for a jury trial and there are no change of venue provisions provided for in that statute, then the procedure to obtain a change of venue is governed by this rule of civil procedure. Brisbin v. Schauer, 176 Colo. 550, 492 P.2d 835 (1971).

The substance, not the form, of the action must control in ascertaining the proper venue. Jameson v. District Court, 115 Colo. 298, 172 P.2d 449 (1946).

In ascertaining the venue of an injunctive proceeding, the court should probe for the primary purpose of the suit. City & County of Denver v. Glendale Water & San. Dist., 152 Colo. 39, 380 P.2d 553 (1963).

Dismissal on basis of forum non conveniens limited. The power of a Colorado court to dismiss an action on the basis of forum non conveniens is severely limited. State Dept. of Hwys. v. District Court, 635 P.2d 889 (Colo. 1981).

Change of venue absent affidavit or hearing is abuse of discretion. The court abused its discretion when it ordered a change of venue in the absence of a supporting affidavit or an evidentiary hearing. Ranger Ins. Co. v. District Court, 647 P.2d 1229 (Colo. 1982).

Improper venue not a jurisdictional defect which can be raised for the first time on appeal. Where trial court made an express finding of proper venue and defendant did not contest venue at trial, appellate court refused to reverse on grounds of improper venue. Sisneros v. First Nat. Bank of Denver, 689 P.2d 1178 (Colo. App. 1984).

Denying such change of venue because remedy is sought pursuant to "habeas corpus" is incorrect. A trial court incorrectly bases its denial of a motion for change of venue on the belief that a change of venue is not available because the remedy sought arises pursuant to a writ of ''habeas corpus''. Brisbin v. Schauer, 176 Colo. 550, 492 P.2d 835 (1971).

This rule governs venue in habeas corpus proceedings. Evans v. District Court, 194 Colo. 299, 572 P.2d 811 (1977).

This rule does not apply to workers' compensation division-sponsored independent medical examination proceedings. Kennedy v. Indus. Claim Appeals Office, 100 P.3d 949 (Colo. App. 2004).

Venue subservient to jurisdiction, so trial court not deprived of subject matter jurisdiction by purported transfer to a foreign nation of an action involving property located in that nation. Sanctuary House, Inc. v. Krause, 177 P.3d 1256 (Colo. 2008).

Applied in In re Femmer, 39 Colo. App. 277, 568 P.2d 81 (1977); Gonzales v. District Court, 629 P.2d 1074 (Colo. 1981); In re U.M. v. District Court, 631 P.2d 165 (Colo. 1981); First Nat'l Bank v. District Court, 653 P.2d 1123 (Colo. 1982); Hollemon v. Murray, 666 P.2d 1107 (Colo. App. 1982).

II. VENUE FOR PROPERTY, FRANCHISES, AND UTILITIES.

Annotator's note. Since section (a) of this rule is similar to § 26 of the former Code of Civil Procedure, which was supplanted by the Rules of Civil Procedure in 1941, relevant cases construing that section have been included in the annotations to this rule.

The substance of the action, not the form, controls in determining the question of venue under section (a). Colo. Nat'l Bank v. District Court, 189 Colo. 522, 542 P.2d 853 (1975); Bd. of County Comm'rs v. District Court, 632 P.2d 1017 (Colo. 1981).

This section deals with a specified class of cases. Welborn v. Bucci, 95 Colo. 478, 37 P.2d 399 (1934).

Form of relief not determinative. Although the complaint prayed for a variety of relief, both legal and equitable, where the substance of the action directly affected the ownership of a ranch and sought to have declared the respective rights and interests of the petitioners and respondent in the ranch, the action should be tried where the ranch is located. Colo. Nat'l Bank v.

Action in personam is not an action dealing with property within the contemplation of section (a) of this rule. Denver Bd. of Water Comm'rs v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 187 Colo. 113, 528 P.2d 1305 (1974); Bd. of County Comm'rs v. District Court, 632 P.2d 1017 (Colo. 1981).

Its provisions are subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial as elsewhere provided. Denver & R. G. R. R. v. Cahill, 8 Colo. App. 158, 45 P. 285 (1896).

It has reference exclusively to actions in rem, where specific property is to be directly affected. Kirby v. Union Pac. Ry., 51 Colo. 509, 119 P. 1042, 1913B Ann. Cas. 461 (1911).

This provision is applicable to county courts as well as to district courts. Fletcher v. Stowell, 17 Colo. 94, 28 P. 326 (1891).

This provision is not restricted to real property. Jameson v. District Court, 115 Colo. 298, 172 P.2d 449 (1946).

It concerns actions affecting specific property and does not control in an action in which there is no issue as to title, lien, injury, quality, or possession, but which is concerned only with recovery of the purchase price. Craft v. Stumpf, 115 Colo. 181, 170 P.2d 779 (1946).

Language of this section is mandatory. Insofar as the designation of the venue is concerned, the language used in this section is mandatory. Pearse v. Bordeleau, 3 Colo. App. 351, 33 P. 140 (1893).

The word "affect", as used in this rule, is as broad a term as ''to determine a right or interest in''. Jameson v. District Court, 115 Colo. 298, 172 P.2d 449 (1946).

An action does not "affect" a utility under this section when the defendants are being sued, not as a utility, but in their proprietary or quasi-private capacities as parties to a contract; as such, petitioners are not entitled to relief under this section. City of Cripple Creek v. Johns, 177 Colo. 443, 494 P.2d 823 (1972).

This section deals with the situation where the lawsuit directly affects the construction or operation of the utility itself. City of Cripple Creek v. Johns, 177 Colo. 443, 494 P.2d 823 (1972).

Rule eliminates issue of where greater portion of property is found. Since an action may be brought in the county where a substantial portion of the property is located, the difficult question of where the greater portion of franchise is located is eliminated. People ex rel. City & County of Denver v. District Court, 80 Colo. 538, 253 P. 24 (1927).

Section applies to municipal corporations. The fact that defendant irrigation district happens to be a quasi-municipal or municipal corporation cannot abrogate the provision of this section as to venue. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 3 Colo. App. 137, 32 P. 346 (1893); Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 2 Colo. App. 412, 31 P. 183 (1892); North Sterling Irrigation Dist. v. Dickman, 66 Colo. 8, 178 P. 559 (1919).

Section 36-1-128, concerning venue for suits by the state board of land commissioners, does not conflict with this rule requiring all actions affecting property to be tried in the county in which the subject of the action or a substantial part thereof is situated. Dallas v. Fitzsimmons, 137 Colo. 196, 323 P.2d 274 (1958).

Section controls an action against an irrigation district. An action for an injury to lands by seepage from the ditch of an irrigation district is properly brought in the county in which the lands are situated. North Sterling Irrigation Dist. v. Dickman, 66 Colo. 8, 178 P. 559 (1919).

A sanitation district is a municipal utility, and being such, it should be sued in the county in which it was located. City & County of Denver v. Glendale Water & San. Dist., 152 Colo. 39, 380 P.2d 553 (1963).

Section contrives an action to cancel real estate mortgage. An action to cancel a real estate mortgage indemnifying a surety against loss on a contractor's bond, under this provision, was triable in the county where the property was situated, although the responsibility of the contractor was a question to be determined in another county. Allen v. Sterling, 76 Colo. 122, 230 P. 113 (1924).

An action to terminate lease and recover possession of real estate, upon the ground that covenants of the lease have been violated, is an action ''affecting'' real estate and is properly brought in the county in which the said real estate is located. Gordon Inv. Co. v. Jones, 123 Colo. 253, 227 P.2d 336 (1951).

Claim to quiet title to property. The proper venue for the claim to quiet the title to the property was laid in the county where it is located. Twin Lakes Reservoir & Canal Co. v. Bond, 156 Colo. 433, 399 P.2d 793 (1965).

Actions to determine county boundaries. The venue of an action to determine county boundaries is controlled by this section. People ex rel. Bd. of Comm'rs v. District Court, 66 Colo. 40, 179 P. 875 (1919).

Action on land use regulation not within scope of section (a). Where the relief sought is directed to the validity of county land use regulations and there is no issue as to title, lien, injury, quality or possession, property is not affected within the meaning of section (a). Bd. of County Comm'rs v. District Court, 632 P.2d 1017 (Colo. 1981).

In case when requested relief is directed to the validity and operative effect of H.B. 1041 land use regulations passed by county, there is no issue as to the title, lien, injury, quality, or possession of the property, franchises, or utilities within the meaning of section (a). Controlling venue issue turns on the residence of the governmental body that adopted the challenged land use regulations. Here, Pueblo county board passed the amended regulations in its official capacity, and the regulations address facilities planned to be located in Pueblo county and impacts that may occur there. That the city's planning for project features and water delivery in El Paso county may ultimately be impacted by such regulation does not mandate venue in El Paso county district court. Substance of city's complaint addresses the validity and enforceability of the Pueblo county board's adoption of the challenged H.B. 1041 regulation. Thus, venue is proper only in the Pueblo county district court under section (b)(2). City of Colo. Springs v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 147 P.3d 1 (Colo. 2006).

Likewise actions concerning water rights. An action to quiet title to a water right is triable in the county in which the water right is situated. People ex rel. City & County of Denver v. District Court, 80 Colo. 538, 253 P. 24 (1927).

A water right can be said to be ''situated'' under this section only at the point of diversion or at the place of use. Field v. Kincaid, 67 Colo. 20, 184 P. 832 (1919).

Actions for injury due to flooding. In view of this provision, an action for damages resulting from flooding plaintiff's land is triable in the county in which the subject of the action is situated. Twin Lakes Reservoir & Canal Co. v. Sill, 104 Colo. 215, 89 P.2d 1012 (1939).

An action to rescind a contract to sell timber is in substance an action to determine title to the timber, and thus must be tried in the county in which the timber or a substantial part of it is located. Jameson v. District Court, 115 Colo. 298, 172 P.2d 449 (1946).

Transitory, in personam actions are not subject to this section. This section does not apply to an action to restrain interference with the business of a railway company by unlawfully dealing in its nontransferable tickets. Such an action is a transitory action in personam. Kirby v. Union Pac. Ry., 51 Colo. 509, 119 P. 1042 (1911).

Railroad tickets do not have the characteristics of property as that term is used in this subdivision. At most a railroad ticket is mere evidence of a contract, a mere token to show that the person properly in possession of it has paid his fare. Kirby v. Union Pac. Ry., 51 Colo. 509, 119 P. 1042 (1911).

This section does not apply to an action on an oral contract for leasing sheep. This section dealing with specified classes of cases does not apply to an action on an oral contract for the leasing of sheep. Welborn v. Bucci, 95 Colo. 478, 37 P.2d 399 (1934).

Section not applicable to foreclosure proceedings. There is no requirement that foreclosure proceedings be filed in the county where the property affected is located. Hastings v. Security Thrift & Mtg. Co., 145 Colo. 36, 357 P.2d 919 (1960).

An action to recover the reasonable value of furniture, fixtures, and equipment of a restaurant and liquor sales business sold to defendant was not an action affecting property within section (a) of this rule. Craft v. Stumpf, 115 Colo. 181, 170 P.2d 779 (1946).

A dissolution of marriage action is not an action "affecting real property, franchises, or utilities" within the meaning of section (a). Brownell v. District Court ex rel. County of Larimer, 670 P.2d 762 (Colo. 1983).

Where defendants made no showing that ownership of land was disputed and did not seek any remedies pertaining directly to the property, the action was not an action ''affecting real property''. Sanctuary House, Inc. v. Krause, 177 P.3d 1256 (Colo. 2008).

III. VENUE FOR RECOVERY OF PENALTY.

Annotator's note. Since section (b) of this rule is similar to § 28 of the former Code of Civil Procedure, which was supplanted by the Rules of Civil Procedure in 1941, relevant cases construing that section have been included in the annotations to this rule.

This section deals with a specified class of cases. Welborn v. Bucci, 95 Colo. 478, 37 P.2d 399 (1934).

Its provisions are subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial as elsewhere provided. Denver & R. G. R. R. v. Cahill, 8 Colo. App. 158, 45 P. 285 (1896).

Consent of all defendants is not required for a motion to change venue under section (b)(2). 7 Utes v. District Court, 702 P.2d 262 (Colo. 1985).

An action to recover a penalty, whether it be one ex contractu or ex delicto, comes under the provisions of this section. Woodworth v. Henderson, 28 Colo. 381, 65 P. 25 (1901).

Claims for injunctive relief against public officers arise, within the meaning of section (b) of this rule, in the county in which the public body has its official residence and from which any action by the board pursuant to the injunction must emanate. Denver Bd. of Water Comm'rs v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 187 Colo. 113, 528 P.2d 1305 (1974).

The mere fact that public officers were named defendants, does not constitute an action against public officers within the meaning of section (b)(2). 7 Utes v. District Court, 702 P.2d 262 (Colo. 1985).

Section (b)(2) controls venue for all actions against public officers for acts done or the failure to perform acts in public office. Executive Dir. v. District Ct. for Boulder County, 923 P.2d 885 (Colo. 1996).

The language of section (b)(2) indicates that it is the official act, or failure to act, by the public officer that gives rise to the cause of action and establishes venue. Executive Dir. v. District Ct. for Boulder County, 923 P.2d 885 (Colo. 1996).

An action to set aside an order of a public official is sufficiently similar to an action for injunctive relief against public officers to be governed by the same venue rules. Farmers Cafe v. State Dept. of Rev., 752 P.2d 1064 (Colo. App. 1988).

"Some part" of plaintiffs' 42 U.S.C. § 1983 claim against public officers in Fremont county did not arise in Boulder county by virtue of plaintiffs' phone call from Boulder county, where the basis of plaintiffs' claim was that such public officers deprived plaintiffs by refusing visitation of prisoners at the department of corrections facility in Fremont county, not the visitation arrangement itself. It was the DOC's refusal in Fremont county to allow visitation that gave rise to the plaintiffs' claim and establishes venue in this case. Executive Dir. v. District Ct. for Boulder County, 923 P.2d 885 (Colo. 1996).

Section 18-4-405 establishes a statutory penalty requiring the case to be tried in the county where the claim arose. Ehrlich Feedlot, Inc. v. Oldenburg, 140 P.3d 265 (Colo. App. 2006).

An action to recover damages for personal injury is not an action to recover a penalty. An action to recover damages for personal injuries is not to recover a penalty simply because punitive damages were asked and awarded. Such an action is to recover compensatory damages; exemplary damages are only an incident, not the basis, of the cause of action. Robbins v. McAlister, 91 Colo. 505, 16 P.2d 431 (1932).

In case involving determination of proper venue for lawsuit concerning validity of H.B. 1041 land use regulations passed by county, venue is proper under section (b)(2) where the actions of the governing board giving rise to the dispute took place. Regardless of the potential impact outside the county, a claim involving the validity and effectiveness of regulations passed by a governing board must be heard in the county where the board acted to pass those regulations. Controlling venue issue turns on the residence of the governmental body that adopted the challenged land use regulations. Here, substance of city's complaint is directed at the official actions of the Pueblo county board, and the primary purpose of the lawsuit is to determine the validity of those actions as they apply to the city's water supply and storage project. Because issue here is the validity and enforceability of land use regulations adopted by Pueblo county board, venue is proper in Pueblo county where challenged official actions occurred. City of Colo. Springs v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 147 P.3d 1 (Colo. 2006).

IV. VENUE FOR TORT, CONTRACT, AND OTHER ACTIONS.

A. In General.

Annotator's note. Since section (c) of this rule is similar to § 29 of the former Code of Civil Procedure, which was supplanted by the Rules of Civil Procedure in 1941, relevant cases construing that section have been included in the annotations to this rule.

Purpose of section. The general assembly by these provisions intended to limit the right to bring actions in any court having competent jurisdiction and imposed a limitation as to the forum in which the action should be commenced. People ex rel. Lackey v. District Court, 30 Colo. 123, 69 P. 597 (1902).

The first sentence of this section is construed as a general rule, which is modified in particular instances by the succeeding sentences. Brewer v. Gordon, 27 Colo. 111, 59 P. 404 (1899).

General rule. The general rule is that personal actions, such as actions for breach of warranty, shall be tried in the county in which the defendants, or any of them, reside at the time of the commencement of the action, or in the county where plaintiff resides when service is made on the defendant in such county, unless the case is brought within some of the exceptions of this section. Lamar Alfalfa Milling Co. v. Bishop, 80 Colo. 369, 250 P. 689 (1926).

Section (c) applies only if sections (a) and (b) are not controlling. Denver Bd. of Water Comm'rs v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 187 Colo. 113, 528 P.2d 1305 (1974).

Section (c)(1) does not apply to motions made under subsection (b)(2). 7 Utes v. District Court, 702 P.2d 262 (Colo. 1985).

Section provides more than one proper county. The counties designated in the first sentence of this section are proper counties for the trial of all cases except those enumerated in the two preceding sections; but where the action is for goods sold and delivered, or upon a contract, or upon a note or bill of exchange, or for a tort, the county where the goods were sold, or the contract was to be performed, or the bill of exchange was made payable, or the tort was committed, is also a proper county for trial. Denver & R. G. R. R. v. Cahill, 8 Colo. App. 158, 45 P. 285 (1896).

Where trial may be lawfully had in either of two counties under this section, the selection rests with the plaintiff. Welborn v. Bucci, 95 Colo. 478, 37 P.2d 399 (1934).

Nonresidence of defendant is no objection to court's jurisdiction. Nonresidence of the defendant within the territorial jurisdiction of the court is no objection to the jurisdiction of the court of the cause, if actual jurisdiction of the person of such defendant is obtained by service of process within the territorial jurisdiction of such courts. Weiner v. Rumble, 11 Colo. 607, 19 P. 760 (1888).

Nonresident may be sued in county designated by complaint. In a suit for breach of contract, where the defendant is a nonresident, the proper county in which to institute the action is that ''designated in the complaint''. Great Am. Ins. Co. v. Scott, 89 Colo. 99, 299 P. 1051 (1931).

Where the defendant is a nonresident of Colorado, the action may be tried in the county designated in the complaint. International Serv. Ins. Co. v. Ross, 169 Colo. 451, 457 P.2d 917 (1969).

Once the district court determined that a change of venue was warranted under subsection (c), it has no jurisdiction over the cause of action except to order the change of venue. Millet v. District Court of El Paso County, 951 P.2d 476 (Colo. 1998).

Applied in City & County of Denver v. Glendale Water & San. Dist., 152 Colo. 39, 380 P.2d 553 (1963).

B. Actions on Contracts.

General rule. Actions on contracts are triable in the county in which the defendants or any of them reside at the commencement of the action, or in the county where the plaintiff resides, when service is had on the defendants in such county, or in the county where the contract is to be performed. Coulter v. Bank of Clear Creek County, 18 Colo. App. 444, 72 P. 602 (1903).

Contract action relating to real property. A contract action, seeking only damages and not claiming title to any property, is properly brought in Colorado even though the real property involved is located in Kansas. Centennial Petroleum, Inc. v. Carter, 529 F. Supp. 563 (D. Colo. 1982).

Action may be tried in county where contract is to be performed. One of the exceptions to the general rule of place of trial is that actions on contracts may be tried in the county in which the contract is to be performed, where by its terms it is to be performed at a particular place. Lamar Alfalfa Milling Co. v. Bishop, 80 Colo. 369, 250 P. 689 (1926).

This exception applies only where the contract is, by express terms, to be performed at a certain place. People ex rel. Bd. of Dirs. of Sch. Dist. No. 1 v. District Court, 66 Colo. 330, 182 P. 7 (1919); People ex rel. Tripp v. Fremont County Court, 72 Colo. 395, 211 P. 102 (1922).

The words in this section, ''the county in which the contract was to be performed'', refer to contracts which by their terms are to be performed at a particular place. Lamar Alfalfa Milling Co. v. Bishop, 80 Colo. 369, 250 P. 689 (1926); Kimberlin v. Rutliff, 93 Colo. 99, 23 P.2d 583 (1933).

Where a contract is silent as to place of performance the provision relative to the right of trial in the county where the contract is to be performed is not applicable. People ex rel. Burton v. District Court, 74 Colo. 121, 218 P. 1047 (1923); Kimberlin v. Rutliff, 93 Colo. 99, 23 P.2d 583 (1933).

Where there is no place of performance expressed in a contract, no change of venue can be granted on that ground. Enyart v. Orr, 78 Colo. 6, 238 P. 29 (1925).

Contract did not specify place of performance. The fact that a contract of guaranty was executed and dated in the county where suit was brought upon it does not make it a contract to be performed in that county so as to deprive the defendants of the right to remove the cause for trial to the county of their residence. Smith v. Post Printing & Publishing Co., 17 Colo. App. 238, 68 P. 119 (1902).

An indemnity bond given to a sheriff to indemnify him against damage for seizing personal property under a writ of attachment, which contains no provision making it payable in any particular county, is not a contract to be performed in the county wherein the attachment is levied within the meaning of this section providing that actions upon contracts may be tried in the county in which the contract was to be performed. Brewer v. Gordon, 27 Colo. 111, 59 P. 404 (1899).

Where place of performance of contract was changed by assignment of promissory note to California company, and payer was directed to mail its payments to San Diego rather than to Denver as originally stated in the note, venue was not proper in Denver. Trial court should have transferred case to Boulder county, where defendants resided. Resolution Trust Corp. v. Parker, 824 P.2d 102 (Colo. App. 1991).

The place where a cause of action for a breach of contract arises is generally — almost universally — the place where the contract is to be performed. Grimes Co. v. Nelson, 94 Colo. 487, 31 P.2d 488 (1934).

In determining the place of trial of an action for breach of warranty the question is, where were defendants required to perform the things they were to do under the contract. What plaintiff was to do, is not in the case. Lamar Alfalfa Milling Co. v. Bishop, 80 Colo. 369, 250 P. 689 (1926).

Action may be brought in county of defendant's residence. Personal actions on contracts which are silent as to place of performance, are triable in the county of defendant's residence.

Kimberlin v. Rutliff, 93 Colo. 99, 23 P.2d 583 (1933).

In an action on contract, no place of performance being expressly specified, the action should be tried in the county where defendant resides unless the case is brought within some of the exceptions of the rule. People ex rel. Burton v. District Court, 74 Colo. 121, 218 P. 1047 (1923).

Where the terms of the contract were not sufficient to indicate an intent to perform in the county of the plaintiff's residence the defendant was entitled to change of venue to its place of residence. Maxwell-Chamberlain Motor Co. v. Piatt, 65 Colo. 140, 173 P. 867 (1918).

An action upon a contract against a school district must be tried in the county of that district, unless the case is within one of the exceptions provided for in this section. People ex rel. Bd. of Dirs. of Sch. Dist. No. 1 v. District Court, 66 Colo. 330, 182 P. 7 (1919).

An action for breach of contract, which is silent as to the place of performance, must be regarded as a personal one and triable in the county of defendant's residence. Cliff v. Gleason, 142 Colo. 500, 351 P.2d 394 (1960).

Where it was sufficiently shown that the county in which the action was brought was the county in which the contract was to be performed, and was therefore the proper county for trial, the motion for change was correctly denied. Coulter v. Bank of Clear Creek County, 18 Colo. App. 444, 72 P. 602 (1903).

Generally, unless service is made in the county of plaintiff's residence, trial shall be in the county of defendant's residence. Regardless of residence and place of service, actions upon contract may be tried in the county in which the contract is to be performed. Grimes Co. v. Nelson, 94 Colo. 487, 31 P.2d 488 (1934); E. F. Gobatti Eng'r & Mach. Corp. v. Oliver Well Works, Inc., 111 Colo. 193, 139 P.2d 269 (1943).

Where, under the terms of an agency contract, plaintiff was required to and did confine his business activities within the limits of a specified county, his action was properly instituted in such county, and there was no error in the refusal of the court to change the venue to another county wherein the principal maintained its offices and where it was served with summons. Navy Gas & Supply Co. v. Schoech, 105 Colo. 374, 98 P.2d 860 (1940).

This rule permits actions on contract to be tried in the county where the contract is to be performed. Cliff v. Gleason, 142 Colo. 500, 351 P.2d 394 (1960).

Where a contract is entered into, and payment of the fee is to be made in Denver, the action is properly tried in Denver. Bamford v. Cope, 31 Colo. App. 161, 499 P.2d 639 (1972).

Under this section an action upon contract may be instituted and prosecuted in the county where the contract was to be performed. Even though defendant resides in another county he is not entitled to a change of venue. Gould v. Mathes, 55 Colo. 384, 135 P. 780 (1913).

This section does not make the trial mandatory in the county where the contract is to be performed. City of Cripple Creek v. Johns, 177 Colo. 443, 494 P.2d 823 (1972).

Rather, it merely makes such venue permissive by providing that the action may also be tried in the county in which the contract is to be performed at the election of the plaintiff. City of Cripple Creek v. Johns, 177 Colo. 443, 494 P.2d 823 (1972).

An action for breach of contract in which there are several defendants is properly brought in the county where one such defendant resides. City of Cripple Creek v. Johns, 177 Colo. 443, 494 P.2d 823 (1972).

Debt presumed payable where creditor resides. In an action on contract for the payment of money advanced by a bank, no other place of payment being stipulated, the debt is presumed to be payable at the bank, and the action was properly brought in the county of the creditor's residence under this section. People ex rel. Columbine Mercantile Co. v. District Court, 70 Colo. 540, 203 P. 268 (1921); Chutkow v. Wagman Realty & Ins. Co., 80 Colo. 11, 248 P. 1014 (1926).

Where the contract is silent as to the place of payment, the debtor is obliged to seek the creditor in the county of residence and his usual place of business or abode and make payment there. Unless an insurance policy contains a provision definitely fixing the place of payment elsewhere, the county of plaintiff's residence is a proper place for the trial of an action to collect thereon. Progressive Mut. Ins. Co. v. Mihoover, 87 Colo. 64, 284 P. 1025 (1930).

A breach of the contract does not abrogate this section as to the place of trial of an action thereon, nor spell anything as to what the contract says as to place of performance. Lamar Alfalfa Milling Co. v. Bishop, 80 Colo. 369, 250 P. 689 (1926).

Signers of bond must be sued in county of their residence where bond is silent as to place of payment. The signers of a bond must be sued in the county of their residence, or where some of them reside, unless the bond itself specifically provides that the place of performance is elsewhere. Brewer v. Gordon, 27 Colo. 111, 59 P. 404 (1899).

C. Tort Actions.

The general rule is that personal actions may be tried in either the county in which the defendant resides, or any of them reside, or in the county where the plaintiff resides when service is made on the defendants in such county. Denver Air Ctr. v. District Court, 839 P.2d 1182 (Colo. 1992); Magill v. Ford Motor Co., 2016 CO 57, 379 P.3d 1033.

Venue requirements must be satisfied for all defendants where the defendants did not act in concert or engage in the same tortious act. Spencer v. Sytsma, 67 P.3d 1 (Colo. 2003).

Rule authorizes prosecution of action in county in which defendant has its principle place of business and in which it was served with process. Combined Com. Corp. v. Pub. Serv. Co., 865 P.2d 893 (Colo. App. 1993).

Merely having a registered agent in a county does not mean the company resides there. So the action must be brought in the county where the plaintiff or defendant resides. Magill v. Ford Motor Co., 2016 CO 57, 379 P.3d 1033.

Section provides equally proper counties. In an action for a tort, the county where the defendant resides, and the county where the plaintiff resides and the defendant is served, and the county where the tort was committed, are equally proper counties for trial; and if the action is commenced in any one of those counties, the place of trial cannot be changed on the ground that the county designated is not the proper county. Denver & R. G. R. R. v. Cahill, 8 Colo. App. 158, 45 P. 285 (1896); Carlson v. Rensink, 65 Colo. 11, 173 P. 542 (1918).

Plaintiff must bring case within exception for place of tort to prevent change to defendant's residence. In an action for tort brought against a defendant in another county where the summons was served in the county in which defendant lived, it was incumbent upon plaintiff in resisting a motion for a change of venue to bring the case within the exception to this section that actions for torts can be brought in the county in which the tort was committed. Byram v. Piggot, 38 Colo. 70, 89 P. 809 (1906).

Where an action was brought in Logan county by a resident of that county against a resident of Weld county to recover damages for a tort committed in Morgan county, with service of summons in Logan county, a motion for change of place of trial from Logan county to Weld county was properly denied. Robbins v. McAlister, 91 Colo. 505, 16 P.2d 431 (1932).

Exemplary damages have no bearing upon question of venue. Where a plaintiff asks for both compensatory and exemplary damages in a tort action, exemplary damages is only an incident, not the basis, of the cause of action, and has no bearing upon the question of venue. Robbins v. McAlister, 91 Colo. 505, 16 P.2d 431 (1932).

Action for breach of warranty. In an action for the breach of the warranty where fraudulent misrepresentations inducing purchase were alleged and plaintiffs resided in Lincoln county, the action was properly brought in Lincoln county, both because that was the county where the contract was to be performed, and because of the character of the action as one of tort; and defendant was not entitled as of right to change the venue to the county of its residence. Denver Horse Importing Co. v. Schafer, 58 Colo. 376, 147 P. 367 (1915).

Action for conversion of machinery. In an action by a lessee of a mine against his lessors for damages for an alleged conversion of machinery and appliances, where the complaint charged the wrongful conversion by defendant of personal property belonging to plaintiff, the cause is properly brought in the county where defendants or any of them reside. Updegraff v. Lesem, 15 Colo. App. 297, 62 P. 342 (1900).

Action by receivers. The court's power of control in receivership proceedings does not deprive a stranger who claims by paramount title, of the right to have the suit or proceedings instituted by the receiver to try the question of title, determined as are other actions under the rules of civil procedure, in the appropriate court of the county where the defendant resides, and where process is served upon him, where the tort was committed in the county of the defendant's residence. Pomeranz v. Nat'l Beet Harvester Co., 82 Colo. 482, 261 P. 861 (1927).

D. Other Actions.

The word "goods", as used in section (c) of this rule, should not be restricted to merchandise sold in course of trade. The word should be given the broad meaning ordinarily ascribed to it and be held to include furniture and equipment. Craft v. Stumpf, 115 Colo. 181, 170 P.2d 779 (1946).

Action of guaranty distinguished from action for goods sold and delivered. An action by a publishing company against a party who contracted for a route for the circulation and sale of its paper and against other parties who guaranteed the contract of the circulator is an action upon the guaranty contract, and not an action for goods sold and delivered, and the provision authorizing an action for goods sold and delivered to be brought in the county where the plaintiff resides or where the goods were sold does not apply. Smith v. Post Printing & Publishing Co., 17 Colo. App. 238, 68 P. 119 (1902).

Action on partnership account may be brought in county where plaintiff resides. This section expressly authorizes an action by one partner against his copartner for the balance found due upon a settlement of the partnership affairs to be brought in the county where the plaintiff resides. Bean v. Gregg, 7 Colo. 499, 4 P. 903 (1884).

Actions on notes are triable in county where made payable. This section expressly provides that all cases, unless otherwise provided, shall be tried in the county of defendant's residence, unless service of summons is made upon defendant in the county where plaintiff resides, with an exception, among others, that actions upon notes or bills of exchange may be tried in the county where the same are made payable. Ashton v. Garretson, 37 Colo. 90, 85 P. 831 (1906).

This section applies to actions for divorce. The provisions of this section that in certain circumstances civil actions shall be tried in the county of the defendant's residence applies to actions for divorce. People ex rel. Lackey v. District Court, 30 Colo. 123, 69 P. 597 (1902).

This rule governs venue in dissolution of marriage proceedings. Brownell v. District Court ex rel. County of Larimer, 670 P.2d 762 (Colo. 1983).

On the question of venue in divorce actions, this section is controlling, notwithstanding statutory provisions concerning divorce actions and kindred matters. People ex rel. Stanko v. Routt County Court, 110 Colo. 428, 135 P.2d 232 (1943).

Petitioner and respondent in dissolution of marriage proceeding are equivalent of plaintiff and defendant. For the purpose of the venue requirements in this rule, the petitioner and respondent in a dissolution of marriage proceeding are the equivalent of a plaintiff and defendant, respectively. Brownell v. District Court ex rel. County of Larimer, 670 P.2d 762 (Colo. 1983).

The divorce act must be read in connection with this and following sections. In view of the fact that the divorce act provides the rules of civil procedure shall apply, except as expressly modified by its own provisions, the mandate of the act with respect to where actions for divorce shall be brought must be read in connection with this and the following section. People ex rel. Lackey v. District Court, 30 Colo. 123, 69 P. 597 (1902).

Residence of corporation is place where principal office is to be kept. The residence of a corporation is the place where, by the certificate of incorporation, its principal office is to be kept. Woods Gold Mining Co. v. Royston, 46 Colo. 191, 103 P. 291 (1909).

Thus, an action begun in the Mesa county of plaintiff's residence against a corporation resident of another county, summons in which is served in a third county, where the corporation carries on business, must, on proper application, be removed to the county in which the defendant has its residence. The fact that the corporation filed its certificate of incorporation in the county of its business, and failed to file one in the county where its office was to be kept, is immaterial. Woods Gold Mining Co. v. Royston, 46 Colo. 191, 103 P. 291 (1909).

A creditor of a corporation cannot take advantage of its failure to file the certificate of incorporation in the county where its principal office is to be kept, in order to prosecute an action against it in another county. Woods Gold Mining Co. v. Royston, 46 Colo. 191, 103 P. 291 (1909).

Action against foreign corporation. A corporation organized under the laws of New York was conducting business in Colorado, maintaining its principal office in the city of Denver. In an action instituted in another county, the process in which was served in Denver, it applied for a change of venue to the county of Denver, on the ground that its residence was in that county. Under this section the motion was properly denied, as the corporation was a resident of New York and a nonresident of Colorado within the meaning of this section. New York Life Ins. Co. v. Pike, 51 Colo. 238, 117 P. 899 (1911).

Undesignated action. An action for damnification brought by a mortgagor against an assuming grantee who failed to pay the mortgage debt, thus forcing the mortgagor to pay, is one of the undesignated actions under section (c), and a motion for change of venue to the county of defendant's residence was properly granted. Cave v. Belisle, 117 Colo. 180, 184 P.2d 869 (1947).

V. VENUE FOR INJUNCTION TO STAY PROCEEDINGS.

Annotator's note. Since section (d) of this rule is similar to § 162 of the former Code of Civil Procedure, which was supplanted by the Rules of Civil Procedure in 1941, relevant case construction of that section has been included in the annotations to this rule.

This section does not specify where action must be brought. This section, even giving to it the most strict and limited construction permissible, simply specifies, like the provision upon places of trial, the county in which the action may or shall be tried, subject to change of the place of trial, and not where it must or shall be brought. If commenced in another county, it is not a jurisdictional or fatal defect. Smith v. Morrill, 12 Colo. App. 233, 55 P. 824 (1898).

Proceedings after complaint and order tried in county of judgment. By the terms of this section, the proceedings to enjoin must be had in the county where the judgment was rendered. The proceedings referred to could be only those subsequent to the mere commencement of the suit by the filing of a complaint and to the issuance of a temporary restraining order. Smith v. Morrill, 12 Colo. App. 233, 55 P. 824 (1898).

Privilege of conducting proceedings where judgment rendered may be waived. The district court has jurisdiction to entertain an application for writ of injunction to restrain the enforcement of an invalid judgment rendered in another county, and in the absence of an application for change of venue seasonably made the parties waive their privilege to have the proceedings conducted in the county where the judgment was rendered. Smith v. Morrill, 12 Colo. App. 233, 55 P. 824 (1898).

VI. MOTION TO CHANGE VENUE.

Annotator's note. Since section (e) of this rule is similar to § 25 et seq. of the former Code of Civil Procedure, which was supplanted by the Rules of Civil Procedure in 1941, relevant cases construing those sections have been included in the annotations to this rule.

Doctrine of forum non conveniens has only limited application in Colorado courts, and except in most unusual circumstances the choice of a Colorado forum by a resident plaintiff will not be disturbed. McDonnell-Douglas Corp. v. Lohn, 192 Colo. 200, 557 P.2d 373 (1976).

The doctrine of forum non conveniens has little place in Colorado courts. Kelce v. Touche Ross & Co., 192 Colo. 202, 557 P.2d 374 (1976).

Venue motions to be filed together. Section (e)(1), of this rule, when read together C.R.C.P. 12, requires that all venue motions, except those based on sections (c)(3), (f)(2), and (g) of this rule, must be filed together. Bd. of Land Comm'rs v. District Court, 191 Colo. 185, 551 P.2d 700 (1976).

Where both parties to a dissolution case reside in a county outside of the judicial district where the case is filed, a directive or rule of court could properly authorize that court on its own motion to change venue, unless for good cause shown by the parties, or either of them, venue should be retained by the court in which the case is filed. Walsmith v. Lilly, 194 Colo. 270, 571 P.2d 1107 (1977).

Right to change venue waived by failure to make motion to change at proper time. Kirby v. Union Pac. Ry., 51 Colo. 509, 119 P. 1042 (1911).

The right of a defendant to a change of a place of trial upon the ground of residence is a personal privilege which may be waived by not applying in apt time. People ex rel. Lackey v. District Court, 30 Colo. 123, 69 P. 597 (1902); Burton v. Graham, 36 Colo. 199, 84 P. 978 (1906).

If, after a change of venue is granted, the resisting party elects to proceed to trial without further objection, he thereby waives any error in granting the change of venue. Smith v. Huber, 666 P.2d 1122 (Colo. App. 1983).

Change of venue not restricted by time of filing or consent of all parties. A discretionary change of venue under section (f)(2) is not restricted by the time of filing or by the necessity for the consent of all parties to the request. Tillery v. District Court, 692 P.2d 1079 (Colo. 1984).

Where enlargement of time not obtained. By failing to file motions for change of venue within 20 days after service of the summons and complaint as required by this rule, then, by not having obtained enlargement of the time from the court, the right to file over objection is lost. Town of Grand Lake v. District Court, 180 Colo. 272, 504 P.2d 666 (1972).

VII. CAUSES OF CHANGE.

A. In General.

Annotator's note. Since setion (f) of this rule is similar to § 31 of the former Code of Civil Procedure, which was supplanted by the Rules of Civil Procedure in 1941, relevant cases construing that section have been included in the annotations to this rule.

The duty of changing the place of trial is not devolved upon the court of its own motion. Fletcher v. Stowell, 17 Colo. 94, 28 P. 326 (1891).

Presumption is that suit is brought in proper county. It will be presumed that the county in which the suit was brought is the proper county for trial unless there should be a disclosure of something to the contrary; and the court commences the consideration of an application for a change of venue with the assumption of the existence of the necessary conditions requiring the retention of the case in that county, except insofar as the contrary may appear from the application. Adamson v. Bergen, 15 Colo. App. 396, 62 P. 629 (1900).

The change of venue is required to be made only "on good cause shown". These words plainly imply that a party considering himself aggrieved by the bringing of the action in a wrong county, or considering himself likely to be prejudiced by the trial thereof in the county where the action is pending, must apply to the court and show good cause therefor, in order to have the place of trial changed. Fletcher v. Stowell, 17 Colo. 94, 28 P. 326 (1891).

Inconvenience and expense not sufficient to change forum. Inconvenience and expense are inherent in all litigation and are insufficient to oust a resident plaintiff from his chosen forum. McDonnell-Douglas Corp. v. Lohn, 192 Colo. 200, 557 P.2d 373 (1976); Kelce v. Touche Ross & Co., 192 Colo. 202, 557 P.2d 374 (1976).

Burden of proof on motion to change venue is on party seeking change, but the party opposing must balance the showing made by the moving party. Cliff v. Gleason, 142 Colo. 500, 351 P.2d 394 (1960); Sampson v. District Court, 197 Colo. 158, 590 P.2d 958 (1979).

The burden of proof on a motion for change of venue is upon the party seeking the change. Ranger Ins. Co. v. District Court, 647 P.2d 1229 (Colo. 1982).

The substance, not the form, of the action must control in determining a motion for change of venue. Caldwell v. District Court, 128 Colo. 498, 266 P.2d 771 (1953); Bd. of County Comm'rs v. District Court, 632 P.2d 1017 (Colo. 1981).

Right to change of venue depends on conditions existing at the time of demand, and must be determined by conditions at the time the party claiming the right first appears in the action. Cliff v. Gleason, 142 Colo. 500, 351 P.2d 394 (1960).

Absent most unusual circumstances, choice of forum of resident plaintiff will not be disturbed. Kelce v. Touche Ross & Co., 192 Colo. 202, 557 P.2d 374 (1976).

Venue of joined claim should not be changed. Where the venue of one claim for relief is properly laid in the county in which it is brought, a court should not, except under extraordinary circumstances, change the venue of another claim properly joined with the first claim. Twin Lakes Reservoir & Canal Co. v. Bond, 156 Colo. 433, 399 P.2d 793 (1965).

Statute on place where trial must be brought is consistent with right of change. There is nothing in the statutory provisions concerning eminent domain proceedings inconsistent with the right of change of venue. The action must be brought in the county of the plaintiff municipality, but bringing an action and trying it are two different things. The statute as to place of trial means what it says, and its provisions are not jurisdictional. An action may be brought in a county where, if objection were made, it could not be tried. People ex rel. Bear Creek Dev. Corp. v. District Court, 78 Colo. 526, 242 P. 997 (1925).

The right to have the place of trial changed because the action is brought in an improper county is not jurisdictional. Kirby v. Union Pac. Ry., 51 Colo. 509, 119 P. 1042 (1911); Slinkard v. Jordan, 131 Colo. 144, 279 P.2d 1054 (1955).

Bringing an action in improper county is not a jurisdictional or fatal defect. If it were so regarded, a plea in abatement or to the jurisdiction of the court would be the proper remedy. Instead of this, this section expressly provides for a change of the place of trial. Fletcher v. Stowell, 17 Colo. 94, 28 P. 326 (1891).

The jurisdiction of courts of record is coextensive with the state, and where an action is brought in a county other than that in which it should be tried, the defendant's only remedy, if he objects to the venue, lies in an application to remove the case to the proper county. Denver & R. G. R. R. v. Cahill, 8 Colo. App. 158, 45 P. 285 (1896).

If an action for injunction under section (d) of this rule is commenced in another county from where it may be tried, it is not a jurisdictional or fatal defect. Smith v. Morrill, 12 Colo. App. 233, 55 P. 824 (1898).

The fact that an action is brought in a county other than the one in which the real property is situate does not affect the jurisdiction of the court to hear and determine the case unless the defendant moved to change the place of trial. Burton v. Graham, 36 Colo. 199, 84 P. 978 (1906).

The right is a mere personal privilege. Fletcher v. Stowell, 17 Colo. 94, 28 P. 326 (1891); Smith v. People, 2 Colo. App. 99, 29 P. 924 (1892); Pearse v. Bordeleau, 3 Colo. App. 351, 33 P. 140 (1893); Smith v. Morrill, 12 Colo. App. 233, 55 P. 824 (1898); Burton v. Graham, 36 Colo. 199, 84 P. 978 (1906); Kirby v. Union Pac. Ry., 51 Colo. 509, 119 P. 1042 (1911); Slinkard v. Jordan, 131 Colo. 144, 279 P.2d 1054 (1955).

The provision in section (c) that an action on a promissory note may be tried in the county where the same is made payable does not give a defendant sued elsewhere an absolute right to a change of venue, but, at best, only a privilege that may be waived. Reed v. First Nat'l Bank, 23 Colo. 380, 48 P. 507 (1897).

The right may be waived. Fletcher v. Stowell, 17 Colo. 94, 28 P. 326 (1891); Smith v. People, 2 Colo. App. 99, 29 P. 924 (1892); Reed v. First Nat'l Bank, 23 Colo. 380, 48 P. 507 (1897); Smith v. Morrill, 12 Colo. App. 233, 55 P. 824 (1898); People ex rel. Lackey v. District Court, 30 Colo. 123, 69 P. 597 (1902); Burton v. Graham, 36 Colo. 199, 84 P. 978 (1906); Kirby v. Union Pac. Ry., 51 Colo. 509, 119 P. 1042 (1911); Slinkard v. Jordan, 131 Colo. 144, 279 P.2d 1054 (1955).

Privilege waived by failure to appear. Fletcher v. Stowell, 17 Colo. 94, 28 P. 326 (1891).

Waiver through failure to apply for a change of venue to proper county. Forbes v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 23 Colo. 344, 47 P. 388 (1896).

The defendant entered a general appearance, indicating no intention whatever to exercise his right to have the place of trial changed, taking no steps to bring that matter to the attention of the court until 80 days thereafter, indicating submission of the case in all its phases to the court in which the action was brought. Hence, the defendant waived his right to a change of the place of trial. Burton v. Graham, 36 Colo. 199, 84 P. 978 (1906).

If the right to a change of venue is waived, it is not error for the trial court to refuse to change the place of trial. Burton v. Graham, 36 Colo. 199, 84 P. 978 (1906).

Right is not waived by answer and trial. Where a motion for change of venue filed by a defendant is denied, he may thereafter file an answer and proceed to trial without waiving the question of error based upon the denial of said motion, or the right, if any, to a change of venue. Colo. State Bd. of Exam'rs of Architects v. District Court, 126 Colo. 340, 249 P.2d 146 (1952).

Erroneous denial of motion may require reversal of judgment. The party who resists a motion for change of venue, to which his opponent is clearly entitled as a matter of right, does so at his peril. If the motion erroneously is denied and the moving party suffers adverse judgment, a reversal of the judgment with direction to change the venue would certainly follow. Colo. State Bd. of Exam'rs of Architects v. District Court, 126 Colo. 340, 249 P.2d 146 (1952); Denver & Rio Grande W. R. R. v. District Court, 141 Colo. 208, 347 P.2d 495 (1959).

Error in granting change of venue may be waived. Where plaintiffs, without objection, went to trial, they invested the court with full jurisdiction to proceed therein, waived the error in granting the change of venue, and cannot now be heard to urge that objection. Raymond v. Harrison, 27 Colo. App. 484, 150 P. 727 (1915).

Where a judge in vacation of his own motion ordered a cause transferred to the district court of another county, and the court to which the transfer was made had jurisdiction of the subject matter, and when the cause was called for trial the plaintiff appeared and consented to proceed with the trial, he waived objection to the order of the court transferring the case. Cheney v. Crandell, 28 Colo. 383, 65 P. 56 (1901).

A district court is without jurisdiction to transfer a cause involving a receivership while the case is pending in the supreme court. George Sparling Coal Co. v. Colo. Pulp & Paper Co., 88 Colo. 523, 299 P. 41 (1931).

Applied in Britto v. District Court, 176 Colo. 197, 489 P.2d 1304 (1971).

B. Sufficiency of Pleading.

A change of venue is not required under this section where no compelling reason has been shown to interfere with the discretion of the trial judge. City of Cripple Creek v. Johns, 177 Colo. 443, 494 P.2d 823 (1972).

Affidavits in support of motions for change of venue should state facts. Enyart v. Orr, 78 Colo. 6, 238 P. 29 (1925).

Application should negate every favorable hypothesis. An application to change the trial of a cause from one county to another should negate every hypothesis in favor of the county in which the action was commenced. Adamson v. Bergen, 15 Colo. App. 396, 62 P. 629 (1900).

Motion must negate allegation that contract was to be performed where action was brought. Where a complaint alleges that the contract upon which recovery is sought was to be performed in the county in which the action is brought, a motion to change the place of trial on the ground that defendant resides in another county and was served with summons there, and which fails to negate the allegation of the complaint that the contract was to be performed in the county where the action is brought is insufficient and is properly denied. Peabody v. Oleson, 15 Colo. App. 346, 62 P. 234 (1900); E. F. Gobatti Eng'r & Machinery Corp. v. Oliver Well Works, Inc., 111 Colo. 193, 139 P.2d 269 (1943).

In an action for the price of apples alleged to have been sold and delivered in the county in which the action was brought, an application for change of place of trial on the ground of the residence of defendant in another county, which fails to negate the allegation that the apples were sold and delivered in the county in which suit was brought was insufficient and was properly denied. Adamson v. Bergen, 15 Colo. App. 396, 62 P. 629 (1900).

Where plaintiff met the defendant's affidavit in support of a motion to change venue to county of defendant's residence with an affidavit alleging that the note was by its terms payable in the county where the action was brought, which is a proper county under section (c), and these statements were not controverted, the application to change the place of trial to the county of defendant's residence was properly denied. Coulter v. Bank of Clear Creek County, 18 Colo. App. 444, 72 P. 602 (1903).

Or that all defendants reside in county where action is brought. In an action against two defendants, an application to change the venue to another county on the ground that one of the defendants resides in the county to which the change is sought is insufficient unless it also negates the residence of the other defendant in the county in which the action is brought. Adamson v. Bergen, 15 Colo. App. 396, 62 P. 629 (1900).

To sustain a motion for change of place of trial for actions brought under section (c) of this rule, it must appear that no defendants reside where the suit is brought, where the motion is made on the ground that some of the defendants reside in another county. People ex rel. Tripp v. Fremont County Court, 72 Colo. 395, 211 P. 102 (1922).

It need not negate all exceptions in section (c). Upon motion to change the place of trial of a cause on the ground that defendant resides and was served with summons in the county to which the change was sought, it is not necessary that the application should negate all the exceptions provided in section (c) whereby such change is not required, if the complaint affirmatively shows that the cause does not come within any of the exceptions. Smith v. Post Printing & Publishing Co., 17 Colo. App. 238, 68 P. 119 (1902).

Application consistent with assumed jurisdiction fails. Application for change will be denied if the supposition of the jurisdiction of the court in which an action is brought is consistent with the statements made in the application. People ex rel. Columbine Mercantile Co. v. District Court, 70 Colo. 540, 203 P. 268 (1921).

In an action against two defendants, an application to change the place of trial which alleged that one of the defendants resided in the county to which the change was sought, and that the other defendant was not within the state, was insufficient, as an allegation that one of the defendants was not within the state at the time the application was made did not negate the fact of his residence in the county in which the action was brought, but was entirely consistent with such residence. Adamson v. Bergen, 15 Colo. App. 396, 62 P. 629 (1900).

There was no error in denying a motion for change of venue on the ground that all proper defendants were nonresidents of the county, where from the allegations of the complaint it appeared that the one defendant who resided in the county where the action was commenced was alleged to be a party to the contract and was therefore a proper party to the suit. Newland v. Frost, 83 Colo. 207, 263 P. 715 (1928).

C. When County Is Improper.

Right to change place of trial is controlled by this section. The right to change the place of trial of an action against a county is controlled by this section, which necessarily requires the change of the place of trial to the county designated as the place of trial by statute. Forbes v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 23 Colo. 344, 47 P. 388 (1896).

Venue in improper county will be changed on motion. Where the action is not brought in the proper county, the venue will be changed to the county where the cause is triable on application of the defendant. Coulter v. Bank of Clear Creek County, 18 Colo. App. 444, 72 P. 602 (1903).

When an action is brought in a county other than that in which it should be tried, the defendant may avail himself of his right to change the venue to the proper county. Ashton v. Garretson, 37 Colo. 90, 85 P. 831 (1906).

Upon sufficient application, the duty to change venue is mandatory. While the action may be brought in any county, at the election of the plaintiff, upon sufficient application by the defendant, made within the proper time, to change the place of trial of the cause on the ground that the county designated in the complaint is not the proper county, the duty of making the change becomes mandatory upon the court. Denver & R. G. R. R. v. Cahill, 8 Colo. App. 158, 45 P. 285 (1896).

Upon a proper showing that an action has been brought in a county other than that in which it should be tried, the duty of the court to grant the change is mandatory. Ashton v. Garretson, 37 Colo. 90, 85 P. 831 (1906).

The right of a defendant to a change of place of trial upon the ground of residence is one which, when the showing is in compliance with the rules, the court to which it is addressed must grant without discretion, unless it has been waived. People ex rel. Lackey v. District Court, 30 Colo. 123, 69 P. 597 (1902).

Where it is clear from the face of the pleading that the substance of an action is that of an action affecting not only a substantial part of the property which finally became the subject of the action, but all of the property, and that that property was located in a certain county, it is mandatory upon the trial court to grant the motion for change of venue as provided in this rule. Caldwell v. District Court, 128 Colo. 498, 266 P.2d 771 (1953).

A proper application for a change of venue from an improper county, timely made, leaves the trial court no alternative but to grant such application. City & County of Denver v. Glendale Water & San. Dist., 152 Colo. 39, 380 P.2d 553 (1963); Bd. of County Comm'rs v. District Court, 632 P.2d 1017 (Colo. 1981).

The court's jurisdiction is divested except for the purpose of making the order of removal to the proper county. Denver & New Orleans Constr. Co. v. Stout, 8 Colo. 61, 5 P. 627 (1884); Fletcher v. Stowell, 17 Colo. 94, 28 P. 326 (1891); Pearse v. Bordeleau, 3 Colo. App. 351, 33 P. 140 (1893); Denver & R. G. R. R. v. Cahill, 8 Colo. App. 158, 45 P. 285 (1896); Brewer v. Gordon, 27 Colo. 111, 59 P. 404 (1899); Ashton v. Garretson, 37 Colo. 90, 85 P. 831 (1906); Woods Gold Mining Co. v. Royston, 46 Colo. 191, 103 P. 291 (1909); People ex rel. Columbine Mercantile Co. v. District Court, 70 Colo. 540, 203 P. 268 (1921); Lamar Alfalfa Milling Co. v. Bishop, 80 Colo. 369, 250 P. 689 (1926); Bd. of County Comm'rs v. District Court, 632 P.2d 1017 (Colo. 1981).

When a party requests a change of venue upon a ground which entitles it to the change as a matter of right, the trial court loses all jurisdiction except to order the change. Ranger Ins. Co. v. District Court, 647 P.2d 1229 (Colo. 1982).

If an action involving real estate is brought in the wrong county, the court cannot retain jurisdiction after motion in apt time by the defendant to change the place of trial to the county in which it ought to have been commenced. Smith v. People, 2 Colo. App. 99, 29 P. 924 (1892).

Where an application for a change of place of trial is made by a defendant based upon a ground which entitles him to the change as a matter of right, the court is ousted of jurisdiction to proceed further with the cause other than to enter the order of removal. People ex rel. Lackey v. District Court, 30 Colo. 123, 69 P. 597 (1902).

When an application, sufficient in form, uncontradicted, and supported by allegations in the plaintiff's complaint itself, is made for a change of place of trial, the court has jurisdiction of the cause only for purpose of removal to the proper county. Cliff v. Gleason, 142 Colo. 500, 351 P.2d 394 (1960).

The court's retention of the case after motion for change constitutes reversible error. Byram v. Piggot, 38 Colo. 70, 89 P. 809 (1906).

All subsequent proceedings therein are void. Brewer v. Gordon, 27 Colo. 111, 59 P. 404 (1899); Woodworth v. Henderson, 28 Colo. 381, 65 P. 25 (1901); Cliff v. Gleason, 142 Colo. 500, 351 P.2d 394 (1960).

Further proceedings in a trial court after an erroneous denial of a proper motion for change of venue are a nullity and void. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. District Court, 632 P.2d 1017 (Colo. 1981).

The county court having lost jurisdiction of the cause by reason of a proper application for a change of place of trial, the authority of the district court, when the cause came to it by appeal, extended no further upon the resubmission of the motion than to order a change of venue to the proper county. Failing to do that, all of its acts in entertaining and determining motions and rendering final judgment are absolutely void. Pearse v. Bordeleau, 3 Colo. App. 351, 33 P. 140 (1893).

Prohibition lies to prevent court from proceeding further. Where a defendant in a divorce suit made application for a change of place of trial to the county of his residence under circumstances which entitled him to the change as a matter of right, and the application was denied, the supreme court will issue a writ of prohibition to prevent the court denying the change from proceeding further in the cause and directing that all proceedings had in excess of jurisdiction be quashed and that an order be entered removing the cause to the proper county, notwithstanding the fact that the erroneous action of the court in denying the change of venue was reviewable on appeal or writ of error. People ex rel. Lackey v. District Court, 30 Colo. 123, 69 P. 597 (1902).

In an action in one county by a firm of architects against a school district of a second county for services rendered in the building of a school house, the contract not specifying the place of performance or payment, a motion for a change of venue having been denied by the district court, prohibition was granted. People ex rel. Bd. of Dirs. of Sch. Dist. No. 1 v. District Court, 66 Colo. 330, 182 P. 7 (1919).

In an action on contract where no place of performance is specified, it appearing that defendant was entitled to have the case tried in the county of his residence, prohibition is allowed against trial in another county. People ex rel. Burton v. District Court, 74 Colo. 121, 218 P. 1047 (1923).

Where the venue is proper in either of two counties, then a change of venue cannot properly be granted from either unless some other provision requiring the change arises. City of Cripple Creek v. Johns, 177 Colo. 443, 494 P.2d 823 (1972).

Where an action on an accident insurance policy might be commenced under section (c) either in the county of the defendant's residence, when service is had there, or in the county where the contract was to be performed, either county was the proper one, and from neither can a change of venue be properly granted. Progressive Mut. Ins. Co. v. Mihoover, 87 Colo. 64, 284 P. 1025 (1930).

In an action for a tort, the county where the defendant resides, and the county where the plaintiff resides and the defendant is served, and the county where the tort was committed, are equally proper counties for trial; and if the action is commenced in any one of those counties, the place of trial cannot be changed on the ground that the county designated is not the proper county. Denver & R. G. R. R. v. Cahill, 8 Colo. App. 158, 45 P. 285 (1896); Carlson v. Rensink, 65 Colo. 11, 173 P. 542 (1918).

The provision in section (c) that suit may be brought on a contract where it is to be performed does not give the defendant, if served with summons elsewhere, an absolute right to a change of venue to the county in which it is to be performed; for, notwithstanding this provision, an action on such contract may be tried in the county in which the defendant resides at the commencement of the action, or in the county where the plaintiff resides when service is made on the defendant in such county. Bales v. Cannon, 42 Colo. 275, 94 P. 21 (1908).

Although proper for the plaintiff to bring the action in the county of defendant's residence, he was not obliged to do so. He had a right to bring it in the county where the contract was to be performed under section (c) of this rule, and having done so, there was no error in denying the motion for a change of venue. Gould v. Mathes, 55 Colo. 384, 135 P. 780 (1913).

Under section (c) of this rule, in an action for the price of goods sold, it is the privilege of the plaintiff to designate the county of his residence as the place of trial. An application for a change of venue, in such case, solely upon the ground that such county is not the proper county, should be denied. Raymond v. Harrison, 27 Colo. App. 484, 150 P. 727 (1915).

Where the plaintiffs claimed under a decree adjudicating water rights first entered in one county, and the defendants under a decree entered in a second county, the subject matter of the action was situated in both counties, both counties were proper for venue under section (a) of this rule, and the defendant's petition for change of the place of trial was properly denied. Field v. Kincaid, 67 Colo. 20, 184 P. 832 (1919).

Refusal to order change was error. Where an action involving the title to real estate was brought in a different county from the one in which the land was located, it was reversible error to refuse to change the place of trial to the county where the land was located, upon motion seasonably made by defendant. Campbell v. Equitable Sec. Co., 12 Colo. App. 544, 56 P. 88 (1899).

When a defendant files a motion for a change of venue on the grounds that neither the plaintiff nor the Colorado defendants reside in the county in which the action was filed and that the tort underlying the action did not occur there, it was error not to grant the defendant's motion. Denver Air Center v. District Court, 839 P.2d 1182 (Colo. 1992).

Proper to refuse change of venue. In an action by a lessee of a mine against his lessors for damage for an alleged conversion of machinery and appliances placed by the lessee for the purpose of working the mine, where the complaint charged the wrongful conversion by defendants of personal property belonging to plaintiff, the venue will not be changed to the county in which the mine is located on the ground that it involved an interest in real estate, since if it should be determined that the subject matter of the action is real estate, no recovery could be had under the complaint. Updegraff v. Lesem, 15 Colo. App. 297, 62 P. 342 (1900).

D. When Convenience and Justice Are Promoted.

Section (f)(2) is directed to a change of venue which contemplates that venue is properly placed in the court in which the motion is filed. Brownell v. District Court ex rel. County of Larimer, 670 P.2d 762 (Colo. 1983).

Change for convenience or justice is discretionary. A motion to change the place of trial, on grounds of convenience or justice, is addressed to the sound discretion of the court. De Wein v. Osborn, 12 Colo. 407, 21 P. 189 (1888); Denver & R. G. R. R. v. Cahill, 8 Colo. App. 158, 45 P. 285 (1896); Enyart v. Orr, 78 Colo. 6, 238 P. 29 (1925); Lamar Alfalfa Milling Co. v. Bishop, 80 Colo. 369, 250 P. 689 (1926).

A motion to change venue based on the convenience of the parties lies in the sound discretion of the trial court. Bd. of Land Comm'rs v. District Court, 191 Colo. 185, 551 P.2d 700 (1976).

A motion for change of venue on the ground of convenience of witnesses is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court, whose decision will be accepted as final on review unless an abuse of discretion is apparent. Evans v. District Court, 194 Colo. 299, 572 P.2d 811 (1977); Sampson v. District Court, 197 Colo. 158, 590 P.2d 958 (1979); In re Agner, 659 P.2d 53 (Colo. App. 1982); Weston v. Mincomp Corp., 698 P.2d 274 (Colo. App. 1985).

An application for a change of venue in a will contest, for the convenience of witnesses, is within the discretion of the trial court. Miller v. Weston, 25 Colo. App. 231, 138 P. 424 (1914), aff'd, 67 Colo. 534, 189 P. 610 (1920).

A motion for change of venue for the convenience of the witnesses in a divorce proceeding is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court. Bacher v. District Court, 186 Colo. 314, 527 P.2d 56 (1974).

Burden of proof on motion to change venue for convenience. While the movant, under section (f), must show, through affidavit or evidence, the identity of the witnesses, the nature, materiality and admissibility of their testimony, and how the witnesses would be better accommodated by the requested change in venue, the party opposing the change must at least balance the showing made by the moving party; otherwise, the motion should be granted. State Dept. of Highways, v. District Court, 635 P.2d 889 (Colo. 1981).

The decision of the court on the question will be accepted upon review as final. De Wein v. Osborn, 12 Colo. 407, 21 P. 189 (1888); Denver & R. G. R. R. v. Cahill, 8 Colo. App. 158, 45 P. 285 (1896); Enyart v. Orr, 78 Colo. 6, 238 P. 29 (1925); Great Am. Ins. Co. v. Scott, 89 Colo. 99, 299 P. 1051 (1931); Keohane v. Wilkerson, 859 P.2d 291 (Colo. App. 1993), aff'd, 882 P.2d 1293 (Colo. 1994).

Unless an abuse of discretion is apparent. De Wein v. Osborn, 12 Colo. 407, 21 P. 189 (1888); Denver & R. G. R. R. v. Cahill, 8 Colo. App. 158, 45 P. 285 (1896); Enyart v. Orr, 78 Colo. 6, 238 P. 29 (1925); Great Am. Ins. Co. v. Scott, 89 Colo. 99, 299 P. 1051 (1931); Keohane v. Wilkerson, 859 P.2d 291 (Colo. App. 1993), aff'd, 882 P.2d 1293 (Colo. 1994).

The determination of the trial court will not be disturbed if no abuse of the discretion appears. Miller v. Weston, 25 Colo. App. 231, 138 P. 424 (1914), aff'd, 67 Colo. 534, 189 P. 610 (1920).

It is unlike the cases where the ground alleged is one of absolute right. Enyart v. Orr, 78 Colo. 6, 238 P. 29 (1925).

The filing of this motion does not deprive the court of jurisdiction except to order the change. Enyart v. Orr, 78 Colo. 6, 238 P. 29 (1925).

Section (f)(2) requires showing of identity, testimony, and accommodation. When a motion for a change of venue is made under section (f)(2), the movant must show, through affidavit or evidence, the identity of the witnesses, the nature, materiality and admissibility of their testimony, and how the witnesses would be better accommodated by the requested change in venue. Sampson v. District Court, 197 Colo. 158, 590 P.2d 958 (1979); Tillery v. District Court, 692 P.2d 1079 (Colo. 1984).

The court must of necessity rely largely on the good faith of the affidavits or other evidence of what the testimony at the trial will be. Enyart v. Orr, 78 Colo. 6, 238 P. 29 (1925).

Application properly denied. There was no abuse of discretion or error in denying the application for a change of venue demanded upon the ground of the convenience of witnesses where it appeared from the affidavits filed that the expense and inconvenience to plaintiff occasioned by the change and consequent delay would have been great, and where it appeared also that no sufficient excuse was given for not interposing the motion at an earlier moment. Bean v. Gregg, 7 Colo. 499, 4 P. 903 (1884).

The allegation that the convenience of witnesses, and the ends of justice, would be subserved by the change of venue was not supported where the defendant in his affidavit named 11 witnesses who were stated to be able to prove that the plaintiff fairly lost the race and wager on which he put up the money in the complaint mentioned, which matter was not and could not become an issue in the case, and evidence of it, if offered, would not have been admissible. Corson v. Neatheny, 9 Colo. 212, 11 P. 82 (1886).

Retention of court file by original court. In a case in which the change of venue is discretionary with the original court, the original court should retain the court file for ten days to allow for reconsideration of the order changing venue, before forwarding the file to the receiving court. After ten days, the original court loses jurisdiction to reconsider its order changing venue. Therefore, a motion for the original court to reconsider or vacate its initial discretionary order must be filed during the ten days before the original court forwards the case file to the receiving court. Tillery v. District Court, 692 P.2d 1079 (Colo. 1984).

The existence of prejudice justifying a change of venue is a question of fact within the discretion of the trial court. The movant bears the burden of establishing such prejudice by affidavit or evidence. Keohane v. Wilkerson, 859 P.2d 291 (Colo. App. 1993), aff'd, 882 P.2d 1293 (Colo. 1994).

Although all parties did not stipulate to the change of venue, the facts stipulated to by a majority of the defendants provided sufficient good cause for change. Moreover, defendants did not allege prejudice to their substantial rights, so procedural flaws, if any, would constitute harmless error. Keohane v. Wilkerson, 859 P.2d 291 (Colo. App. 1993), aff'd, 882 P.2d 1293 (Colo. 1994).

VIII. CHANGE FROM COUNTY.

Annotator's note. Since section (g) of this rule, is similar to §§ 31 through 33 of the former Code of Civil Procedure, which was supplanted by the Rules of Civil Procedure in 1941, relevant cases construing those sections have been included in the annotations to this rule.

Where a jury trial is granted, the right to a fair and impartial jury is a constitutional right which can never be abrogated. Brisbin v. Schauer, 176 Colo. 550, 492 P.2d 835 (1971).

If a community is prejudiced against a citizen, or if other circumstances are likely to deny him a fair and impartial jury trial, then a change of venue must be granted. Brisbin v. Schauer, 176 Colo. 550, 492 P.2d 835 (1971).

The burden of establishing that undue prejudice in the community exists is on the party seeking the change. Powell v. City of Ouray, 32 Colo. App. 44, 507 P.2d 1101 (1973).

Whether community prejudice against a party exists is a question of fact that may be developed at "voir dire". Powell v. City of Ouray, 32 Colo. App. 44, 507 P.2d 1101 (1973).

Feeling of inhabitants immaterial where trial is by court. The fact that the issues between defendants and the landowners are of such magnitude that strong local feeling and bitter prejudices will be engendered is of no consequence, the cause being a chancery cause, triable to the court. If the trial judge should imbibe any of the local feeling, a change of venue could be granted, or the judge of another district called in. People ex rel. Walpert v. Rogers, 12 Colo. 278, 20 P. 702 (1888).

Petition should set out facts. In a petition for change of venue, in respect to the prejudice of inhabitants of the county, sufficient facts, beyond the bare allegation of prejudice, should be set out by the petitioner, from which the court may be able to judge of the probable truth or falsity of the averments. De Walt v. Hartzell, 7 Colo. 601, 4 P. 1201 (1884).

Denial of motion was not abuse of discretion. Where an application for a change of venue on the ground of prejudice of the inhabitants of the county was supported by the affidavits of the applicant and six residents of the county, and counter affidavits were filed by 10 citizens of the county who stated that they had never heard of the controversy between the parties and denied that the inhabitants of the county were prejudiced, it was not an abuse of discretion of the trial court to deny the application. Doll v. Stewart, 30 Colo. 320, 70 P. 326 (1902).

Denial of motion for change of venue on the ground of prejudice of the inhabitants was not prejudical error. Western Wood Prods. v. Tittle, 79 Colo. 473, 246 P. 791 (1926).

This rule presupposes that the action is pending in the county where venue for trial is properly laid. Evans v. District Court, 194 Colo. 299, 572 P.2d 811 (1977).

It is for the trial court to consider the facts and grant or deny the motion for change of venue. Powell v. City of Ouray, 32 Colo. App. 44, 507 P.2d 1101 (1973).

Where a motion for change of venue is not supported by an affidavit as required, it is properly denied as not complying with this rule. Powell v. City of Ouray, 32 Colo. App. 44, 507 P.2d 1101 (1973).

Section is mandatory only when party brings case within provisions. This section providing for a change of venue where the inhabitants of the county wherein the action is pending are prejudiced against the applicant is only mandatory upon the court where the party applying has brought himself within its provisions. Roberts v. People, 9 Colo. 458, 13 P. 630 (1886).

This is true although no counter affidavits are filed. Daugherty v. People, 78 Colo. 43, 239 P. 14 (1925).

Motion directed to discretion of court. The granting or refusing a motion for change of venue on the ground of prejudice of the inhabitants is within the sound discretion of the trial court. Doll v. Stewart, 30 Colo. 320, 70 P. 326 (1902); Fitzhugh v. Nicholas, 20 Colo. App. 234, 77 P. 1092 (1904); Nordloh v. Packard, 45 Colo. 515, 101 P. 787 (1909).

Ruling is reviewable for manifest abuse of discretion. Unless there is a manifest abuse of such discretionary power, the action of the trial court in refusing such application is not reviewable. Power v. People, 17 Colo. 178, 28 P. 1121 (1892); Michael v. Mills, 22 Colo. 439, 45 P. 429 (1896); Doll v. Stewart, 30 Colo. 320, 70 P. 326 (1902); Powell v. City of Ouray, 32 Colo. App. 44, 507 P.2d 1101 (1973).

Matters not per se contemptuous may be set forth in a petition for a change of venue without subjecting the petitioner to punishment for contempt. Mullin v. People, 15 Colo. 437, 24 P. 880 (1890).

IX. TRANSFERS WHERE CONCURRENT JURISDICTION.

Where a cause of which the district court would have had original jurisdiction is brought to it by appeal from the county court, and the parties proceed to trial without objection predicated upon the absence of jurisdiction in the county court, all defects in the jurisdiction of the county court are waived. Brown's Estate v. Stair, 25 Colo. App. 140, 136 P. 1003 (1913).

Transferor court can still accept notices and filings. Since after the change of venue order in the case of filing of an answer or of a notice to dismiss the power of the court to act is not invoked, the clerk of the transferor court can accept notices and filings. Alexander v. Morrison-Knudsen Co., 166 Colo. 118, 444 P.2d 397 (1968), cert. denied, 393 U.S. 1063, 89 S. Ct. 715, 21 L. Ed. 2d 706 (1969).

X. PLACE CHANGED IF ALL PARTIES AGREE.

A subsequent intervenor must abide with a change of venue agreed upon by original parties to an action. North Kiowa-Bijou Mgt. Dist. v. Ground Water Comm'n, 180 Colo. 314, 505 P.2d 377 (1973).

Location of default hearing proper. An action filed in the county having proper venue, where the defendant was in default, could be heard in an adjoining county for the convenience of the court and of counsel under the provisions of section (i), and the default judgment entered subsequent to this hearing was neither irregular, erroneous, nor void. Orebaugh v. Diskocil, 145 Colo. 484, 359 P.2d 671 (1961).

XI. PARTIES MUST AGREE ON CHANGE.

Consent is not a mere acquiescence; it is not a vacant or neutral attitude, it is affirmative in its nature. Kirchhof v. Sheets, 118 Colo. 244, 194 P.2d 320 (1948).

Statement that venue is immaterial does not constitute consent to change. A motion for change of venue is properly overruled when made by one defendant, when another defendant states that venue is immaterial, since this statement does not constitute consent to the codefendant's motion. Kirchhof v. Sheets, 118 Colo. 244, 194 P.2d 320 (1948).

Action by two of five defendants in filing answers to the complaint clearly demonstrated their acquiescence in the choice of venue by petitioner and such action foreclosed any favorable consideration of the request by the remaining defendants for a change of venue. Howard v. District Court, 678 P.2d 1020 (Colo. 1984).

XII. ONLY ONE CHANGE; NO WAIVER.

This section has no application in an action for divorce. People ex rel. Stanko v. Routt County Court, 110 Colo. 428, 135 P.2d 232 (1943).

Change based on error of court does not violate section. There was no violation of section (k) of this rule, which allows only one change of venue on a particular ground, where further change of venue was ordered based on error of court. Liber v. Flor, 160 Colo. 7, 415 P.2d 332 (1966).

What is considered "apt time" must be determined by the circumstances of each particular case in which the question arises. It would be impossible to formulate a rule which would serve as a guide in all cases. People ex rel. Lackey v. District Court, 30 Colo. 123, 69 P. 597 (1902); Burton v. Graham, 36 Colo. 199, 84 P. 978 (1906).

Application for the change of the venue was not in apt time. Miller v. Weston, 25 Colo. App. 231, 138 P. 424 (1914), aff'd, 67 Colo. 534, 189 P. 610 (1920).

ELECTIONS

Rule 100. Contested Elections

(a) Statement of Contest; Where Filed. Any qualified elector wishing to contest the election of any person to the office of presidential elector, supreme court justice, court of appeals judge, district, or county judge, shall within 35 days after the canvass of the secretary of state, in case of a presidential elector, supreme court justice, court of appeals judge, or district judge, file in the office of the secretary of state a written statement of his intention to contest; and where the contest is for the office of county judge, such statement shall be filed in the office of the county clerk of the proper county within 35 days after the canvass by the county board of canvassers, which statement shall set forth: (1) The name of the contestor; (2) the name of the contestee; (3) the office; (4) the time of the election; (5) the particular cause of contest. The statement shall be verified by the affidavit of the contesting party.

(b) Trial. The contestor, or some one in behalf of the person for whose benefit the contest is made, shall, within 35 days after the filing of the statement of contest, file a complaint in the office of the clerk of the supreme court, if the contest relates to a presidential elector or supreme court justice, or in the office of the clerk of the court of appeals, if the contest relates to a court of appeals judge, or in the office of the clerk of the district court in the proper county, if the contest relates to a district or county judge. Upon the filing of such complaint the clerk shall issue summons. When the case is at issue, the court shall hear and determine the same in a summary manner, without the intervention of a jury.

Editor's note: Judges of courts of record, except Denver county judges, are appointed to office pursuant to section 20 of article VI and are elected pursuant to section 25 of article VI of the state constitution.

ANNOTATION

Annotator's note. Since section (b) of this rule supplanted rule 87 of the former Supreme Court Rules, cases construing that rule have been included in the annotations to this rule.

Election contests, for whatever office, necessarily are and must be summary. Gunson v. Baldauf, 88 Colo. 436, 297 P. 516 (1931).

The method of procedure to be followed depends upon the office sought to be contested. Gunson v. Baldauf, 88 Colo. 436, 297 P. 516 (1931).

The sufficiency of a complaint may be questioned by motion. Gunson v. Baldauf, 88 Colo. 436, 297 P. 516 (1931).

The incorporation of the notice of contest in contestor's petition, without further allegation of facts, does not constitute a statement of the grounds of contest as required by this rule and by logical pleading. Sparks v. Eldred, 78 Colo. 55, 239 P. 730 (1925).

SEIZURE OF PERSON OR PROPERTY

Rule 101. Arrest and Exemplary Damages

Repealed May 29, 1986, effective January 1, 1987.

Rule 102. Attachments

(a) Before Judgment. Any party, at the time of filing a claim, in an action on contract, express or implied, or in an action to recover damages for tort committed against the person or property of a resident of this state, or at any time after the filing but before judgment, may have nonexempt property of the party against whom the claim is asserted (hereinafter defendant), attached by an ex parte order of court in the manner and on the grounds prescribed in this Rule, unless the defendant shall give good and sufficient security as required by section (f) of this Rule. No ex parte attachments before judgment shall be permitted other than those specified in this Rule.

(b) Affidavit. No writ of attachment shall issue unless the party asserting the claim (hereinafter plaintiff), his agent or attorney, or some credible person for him shall file in the court in which the action is brought an affidavit setting forth that the defendant is indebted to the plaintiff, or that the defendant is liable in damages to the plaintiff for a tort committed against the person or property of a resident of this state, stating the nature and amount of such indebtedness or claim for damages and setting forth facts showing one or more of the causes of attachment of section (c) of this Rule.

(c) Causes. No writ of attachment shall issue unless it be shown by affidavit or testimony in specific factual detail, within the personal knowledge of an affiant or witness, that there is a reasonable probability that any of the following causes exist:

(1) The defendant is a foreign corporation without a certificate of authority to do business in this state.

(2) The defendant has for more than four months been absent from the state, or the whereabouts of the defendant are unknown, or the defendant is a nonresident of this state, and all reasonable efforts to obtain in personam jurisdiction over the defendant have failed. Plaintiff must show what efforts have been made to obtain jurisdiction over the defendant.

(3) The defendant conceals himself or stands in defiance of an officer, so that process of law cannot be served upon him.

(4) The defendant is presently about to remove his property or effects, or a material part thereof, from this state with intent to defraud, delay, or hinder one or more of his creditors, or to render process of execution unavailing if judgment is obtained.

(5) The defendant has fraudulently conveyed, transferred, or assigned his property or effects, or a material part thereof, so as to hinder or delay one or more of his creditors, or to render process or execution unavailing if judgment is obtained.

(6) The defendant has fraudulently concealed, removed, or disposed of his property or effects, or a material part thereof, so as to hinder or delay one or more of his creditors, or to render process of execution unavailing if judgment is obtained.

(7) The defendant is presently about to fraudulently convey, transfer, or assign his property or effects, or a material part thereof, so as to hinder or delay one or more of his creditors, or to render process of execution unavailing if judgment is obtained.

(8) The defendant is presently about to fraudulently conceal, remove, or dispose of his property or effects, or a material part thereof, so as to hinder or delay one or more of his creditors, or to render process of execution unavailing if judgment is obtained.

(9) The defendant has departed or is presently about to depart from this state, with the intention of having his property or effects, or a material part thereof, removed from the state.

(d) Plaintiff to Give Bond. Before the issuance of a writ of attachment the plaintiff shall furnish a bond that complies with the requirements of C.R.C.P. 121, § 1-23, in an amount set by the court in its discretion, not exceeding double the amount claimed, to the effect that if the defendant recover judgment, or if the court shall finally decide that the plaintiff was not entitled to an attachment, the plaintiff will pay all costs that may be awarded to the defendant, and all damages defendant may sustain by reason of the wrongful suing out of the attachment. The defendant may require the sureties to satisfy the court that each, for himself, is worth the amount for which he has become surety over and above his just debts and liabilities, in property located in this state and not by law exempt from execution.

(e) Court Issues Writ of Attachment. After the affidavit and bond are filed as aforesaid and testimony had as the court may require, the court may issue a writ of attachment, directed to the sheriff of a specified county, commanding him to attach the lands, tenements, goods, chattels, rights, credits, moneys, and effects of said defendant, of every kind, or so much thereof as will be sufficient to satisfy the claim sworn to, regardless of whose hands or possession in which the same may be found.

(f) Contents of Writ and Notice. The writ shall direct the sheriff to serve a copy of the writ on the defendant if found in the county, and to attach and keep safely all the property of the defendant within the county, not exempt from execution, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's claim, the amount of which shall be stated in conformity with the affidavit. The writ shall also inform the defendant of his right to traverse and to have a hearing to contest the attachment. If the defendant's property is or may be located in more than one county, additional or alias writs may be issued contemporaneously. If the defendant deposit the amount of money claimed by the plaintiff or give and furnish security by an undertaking, approved by the sheriff, of a corporate surety company or of at least two sureties in an amount sufficient to satisfy such claim, the sheriff shall take such money or undertaking in lieu of the property. Alias writs may issue at any time to the sheriffs of different counties.

(g) Service; How Made. The writ of attachment shall be served in like manner and under the same conditions as are provided in these rules for the service of process. Service shall be deemed completed upon the expiration of the same period as is provided for service of process.

(h) Execution of Writ. The sheriff to whom the writ is directed and delivered shall execute the same without delay as follows:

(1) Real property standing upon the records of the county in the name of the defendant shall be attached by filing a copy of the writ, together with a description of the property attached, with the recorder of the county.

(2) Real property, or any interest therein belonging to the defendant, and held by any person, or standing upon the records of the county in the name of any other person but belonging to the defendant, shall be attached by leaving with such person or his agent, if either be found in the county, a copy of the writ and a notice that such real property (giving a description thereof), and any interest therein belonging to the defendant, are attached pursuant to such writ, and filing a copy of such writ and notice with the recorder of the county.

(3) Personal property shall be attached by taking it into custody.

(i) Return of Writ. The sheriff shall return the writ of attachment within 21 days after its receipt, with a certificate of his proceedings endorsed thereon, or attached thereto, making a full inventory of the property attached as a part of his return upon the writ.

(j) Execution of Writ on Sunday or Legal Holiday. If an affidavit or testimony is received stating that it is necessary to execute the writ of attachment on Sunday or on a legal holiday, to secure property sufficient to satisfy the judgment to be obtained, and if the court is so satisfied, the court shall endorse on the writ an order to the officer directing the writ to be executed on such day.

(k) No Final Judgment Until 35 Days After Levy.

(1) Creditors. No final judgment shall be rendered in a cause wherein an attachment writ has been issued and a levy made thereunder, until the expiration of 35 days after such levy has been made; and any creditor of the defendant making and filing within said

35-day period an affidavit and undertaking, as hereinbefore required of the plaintiff, together with his complaint setting forth his claim against the defendant, shall be made a party plaintiff and have like remedies against the defendant to secure his claim, as the law gives to the original plaintiff.

(2) Judgment Creditors. Any other creditor whose claim has been reduced to judgment in this state may upon motion filed within said 35 days be made a party and have like remedies against the attached property. Such judgment creditor shall not be required to make or file an affidavit, undertaking or complaint, or have summons issue, provided, that any such judgment creditor may be required to prove to the satisfaction of the court that his judgment is bona fide and not in fraud of the rights of other creditors.

(l) Dismissal by One Creditor Does Not Affect Others. After any additional creditor has been made a party to the action, as hereinbefore provided, a dismissal by the first or any subsequent attaching creditor of his cause of action, or proceedings in attachment, shall not operate as a dismissal of the attachment proceedings as to any other attaching creditor; but the remaining creditors may proceed to final judgment therein the same as though no such dismissal had been made.

(m) Final Judgment Prorated; When Creditors Preferred. The final judgment in said action shall be a several judgment, wherein each creditor named as plaintiff shall have and recover of the defendant the amount of his claim or demand, as found by the court to be due, together with his costs; and the money realized from the attachment proceedings, after paying all costs taxed in the attachment action, shall be paid to the participating creditors in proportion to the amounts of their several judgments; and any surplus moneys, if any, shall be paid to the defendant by order of the court, upon proof thereof. Provided, when the property is attached while the defendant is removing the same or after the same has been removed from the county, and the same is overtaken and returned, or while same is secreted by the defendant, or put out of his hands, for the purpose of defrauding his creditors, the court may allow the creditor or creditors through whose diligence the same shall have been secured a priority over other attachments or judgment creditors.

(n) Traverse of Affidavit. (1) The defendant may, at any time before trial, by affidavit, traverse and put in issue the matters alleged in the affidavit, testimony, or other evidence upon which the attachment is based and if the plaintiff shall establish the reasonable probability that any one of the causes alleged in the affidavit exists, said attachment shall be sustained, otherwise the same shall be dissolved. A hearing on the defendant's traverse shall be held within 7 days from the filing of the traverse and upon no less than two business days' notice to the plaintiff. If the debt for which the action is brought is not due and for that reason the attachment is not sustained, the action shall be dismissed; but if the debt is due, but the attachment nevertheless is not sustained, the action may proceed to judgment after the attachment is dissolved, as in other actions where no attachment is issued.

(2) A plaintiff who fails to prevail at the hearing provided by this section is liable to the defendant for any damages sustained as a result of the issuance of process, costs, and reasonable attorney's fees. A claim for damages under this subsection may be brought as part of the existing action, and the defendant shall be permitted to amend his answer and any counterclaim for this purpose.

(o) Amendment of Affidavit. If at the hearing of issues formed by the traverse it shall appear that the evidence introduced does not prove the cause or causes alleged in the affidavits, but the evidence does tend to prove another cause of attachment in existence at the time of the issuance of the writ, then on motion the affidavits may be amended to conform to proof the same as pleadings are allowed to be amended in cases of variance.

(p) Intervention; Damages. Any third person claiming any of the property attached, or any lien thereon or interest therein, may intervene under the provisions of Rule 24, and in case of a judgment in his favor may also recover such damages as he may have suffered by reason of the attachment of the property.

(q) Perishable Property May Be Sold. Where property taken by writ of execution or attachment, or seized under order of court, is in danger of serious and immediate decay or waste, or likely to depreciate rapidly in value pending the determination of the issues, or, where the keeping of it will be attended with great expense, any party to the action may apply to the court, upon due notice, for a sale thereof, and, thereupon the court may, in its discretion, order the property sold in the manner provided for in said order and the proceeds of said sale shall, thereupon, be deposited with the clerk to abide the further order of the court.

(r) Application of Proceeds; Satisfaction of Judgment. If judgment is recovered by the plaintiff or any intervenor, on order of court, all funds previously deposited with the clerk, or in the hands of the sheriff, shall be first applied thereto. If any balance remain due, execution shall issue and be delivered to the sheriff who shall sell so much of the attached property as may be sufficient to satisfy the judgment. Sales shall be conducted as in cases of sales on execution. If there is a personal judgment and after such sale the same is not satisfied in full, the sheriff shall thereupon collect the balance as upon an execution in other cases.

(s) Balance Due; Surplus. Whenever the judgment shall have been paid, the sheriff, upon demand, shall deliver over to the defendant the attached property remaining in his hands, and any proceeds of the property attached unapplied on the judgment.

(t) Procedure When Judgment is For Defendant. If the defendant recover judgment against the plaintiff, any undertaking received in the action, all the proceeds of sales, all money collected by the sheriff, and all the property attached remaining in the sheriff's hands shall be delivered to the defendant, the writ of attachment shall be discharged, and the property released therefrom.

(u) Defendant May Release Property; Bond. The defendant may at any time before judgment have released to him any money in the hands of the clerk or any property in the hands of the sheriff, by virtue of any writ of attachment, by executing the undertaking provided in section (v) of this Rule. All the proceeds of sales, all money collected by the sheriff, and all the property attached remaining in the sheriff's hands shall thereupon be released from the attachment and delivered to the defendant upon the delivery and approval of the undertaking.

(v) Conditions of Bond; Liability of Sheriff. Before releasing the attached property to the defendant, the sheriff shall require and approve an undertaking executed by the defendant to the plaintiff either of a corporate surety company or with at least two sureties in such sum as may be fixed by the sheriff in not less than the value of the property, to the effect that in case the plaintiff recover judgment in the action, and the attachment is not dissolved, defendant will, on demand, redeliver such attached property so released to the proper officer, to be applied to the payment of the judgment, and that in default thereof the defendant and sureties will pay to the plaintiff the full value of the property so released. If a sheriff shall release any property held by him under any writ of attachment without taking a sufficient bond, he and his sureties shall be liable to the plaintiff for the damages sustained thereby.

(w) Application to Discharge Attachment. The defendant may also, at any time before trial, move that the attachment be discharged, on the ground that the writ was improperly issued, for any reason appearing upon the face of the papers and proceedings in the action. If on such application it shall satisfactorily appear that the writ of attachment was improperly issued, it shall be discharged.

(x) New Bond; When Ordered; Failure to Furnish. If at any time where an attachment has been issued it shall appear to the court that the undertaking is insufficient, the court shall order another undertaking, and if the plaintiff fails to comply with such order within 21 days after the same shall be made, all or any writs of attachment issued therein shall be quashed. The additional undertaking shall be executed in the same manner as the original, and the sureties therein shall be jointly and severally liable with those in the original undertaking.

(y) New Trial; Appeal and Writs of Certiorari. Motions for new trial may be made in the same time and manner, and shall be allowed in attachment proceedings, as in other actions. Appeals from the county court to the district court and writs of certiorari may be taken and prosecuted from any final judgment or order in such proceedings as in other civil cases. Any order by which an attachment is released or sustained is a final judgment.

Constitutionality. Attachment procedure specified in this rule comports with the requirements of the due process clause of the fourteenth amendment. Bernhardt v. Commodity Option Co., 187 Colo. 89, 528 P.2d 919 (1974), cert. denied, 421 U.S. 1004, 95 S. Ct. 2406, 44 L. Ed. 2d 673 (1975).

1975 modified rule not retroactive. In view of the substantial modifications made to this rule by its repeal and reenactment and in view of the fact that the supreme court has not indicated otherwise, the new rule has no retroactive effect. Inwood Indus., Inc. v. Priestley, 37 Colo. App. 78, 545 P.2d 732 (1975), aff'd, 191 Colo. 543, 560 P.2d 822 (1976).

But the supreme court neither approved nor disapproved of this holding and, therefore, the holding of the court of appeals has no precedential effect. Inwood Indus., Inc. v. Priestley, 191 Colo. 543, 560 P.2d 822 (1976).

Remedy of attachment was unknown at common law and existed only by reason of statute or rules of procedure enacted pursuant to statutory authority. Rocky Mt. Oil Co. v. Central Nat'l Bank, 29 Colo. 129, 67 P. 153 (1901); Worchester v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 172 Colo. 352, 473 P.2d 711 (1970).

It is in derogation of the common law and must be strictly followed. Any failure to conform to prescribed procedures, all being necessary and mandatory, is fatal and the writ is of no validity. Weiss v. Ahrens, 24 Colo. App. 531, 135 P. 987 (1913); Jayne v. Peck, 155 Colo. 513, 395 P.2d 603 (1964); Rencher v. District Court, 160 Colo. 523, 418 P.2d 289 (1966).

It is a special remedy at law, except in some states where it is authorized in chancery. Dygert v. Clem, 26 Colo. App. 286, 143 P. 823 (1914).

This rule controls as there is no statute empowering attachment in Colorado. Crist v. United Underwriters, Ltd., 230 F. Supp. 136 (D. Colo. 1964), aff'd, 343 F.2d 902 (10th Cir. 1965).

Foreign corporation was found to be a "resident" of this state for purposes of section (a) where it was authorized to, and did, conduct business in this state and had three offices here. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. v. Kornegay, 2012 COA 140, 292 P.3d 1111.

"Residence", as distinguished from "citizenship", "domicile", and "legal residence" of a corporation, discussed in Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. v. Kornegay, 2012 COA 140, 292 P.3d 1111.

Insurer's obligation to defend and indemnify a nonresident insured defendant is nonexempt property subject to attachment for the purposes of establishing quasi in rem jurisdiction. Baker v. Young, 798 P.2d 889 (Colo. 1990).

Personal liability cannot be imposed upon defendant's insured through a quasi in rem action against the insurance policy. Synan v. Haya, 15 P.3d 1117 (Colo. App. 2000).

Plaintiff did not sustain his burden of proof that defendant intended to hinder him from collecting on a judgment, when defendant demonstrated he had sufficient funds to pay a judgment excluding proceeds from the pending sale. Haney v. Castle Meadows, Inc., 816 F. Supp. 655 (D. Colo. 1993).

Applied in In re Harms, 7 B.R. 398 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1980); In re Tarletz, 27 B.R. 787 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1983); Crow-Watson Props., Inc. v. Carrier, 719 P.2d 365 (Colo. App. 1986).

II. AFFIDAVIT.

The 1975 revised rule requires that the affidavit set forth specific facts supporting the grounds of attachment. Inwood Indus., Inc. v. Priestley, 37 Colo. App. 78, 545 P.2d 732 (1975), aff'd, 191 Colo. 543, 560 P.2d 822 (1976).

A sufficient affidavit is a jurisdictional requirement and a court has no authority to issue a writ of attachment without it. Mentzer v. Ellison, 7 Colo. App. 315, 43 P. 464 (1896); Axelson v. Columbine Laundry Co., 81 Colo. 254, 254 P. 990 (1927); Markle v. Dearmin, 117 Colo. 45, 184 P.2d 495 (1947).

The affidavit must state the grounds for attachment positively. Colo. Vanadium Corp. v. Western Colo. Power Co., 73 Colo. 24, 213 P. 122 (1923).

An affidavit for attachment which alleges that the defendant is indebted for ''goods, wares, and merchandise sold by the plaintiff to the defendant'', states the nature of the action sufficiently. Plummer v. Struby-Estabrooke Mercantile Co., 23 Colo. 190, 47 P. 294 (1896).

But an affidavit stating that ''the debt is for farm products, house rent, household furniture'', and other necessaries for the debtor and his family does not state grounds for attachment under this rule. Markle v. Dearmin, 117 Colo. 45, 184 P.2d 495 (1947).

This requirement is not satisfied by allegations on information and belief merely. Colo. Vanadium Corp. v. Western Colo. Power Co., 73 Colo. 24, 213 P. 122 (1924).

An affidavit which fails to state definitely the nature of the demand is defective. Leppel v. Beck, 2 Colo. App. 390, 31 P. 185 (1892).

But not so defective as to render the proceeding absolutely void because of section (q) (now section (o)) of this rule permitting amendment. Leppel v. Beck, 2 Colo. App. 390, 31 P. 185 (1892).

Affidavit must contain an allegation of indebtedness and also one or more grounds of attachment. It is indispensable that the affidavit for attachment contain an allegation of indebtedness from the defendant, and also some one or more of the grounds upon which the statute authorizes an attachment. If either allegation is absent from the affidavit, there is no power to issue the writ. Axelson v. Columbine Laundry Co., 81 Colo. 254, 254 P. 990 (1927); Gibson v. Gagnon, 82 Colo. 108, 257 P. 348 (1927).

It cannot be attacked by a third person in a collateral proceeding. Where the affidavit is not attacked by the defendant in the attachment proceedings, nor does the record disclose that he contemplated interposing any defense whatever to the proceedings, the affidavit cannot be attacked by a third party in a collateral proceeding but must be raised between the parties to the suit. Leppel v. Beck, 2 Colo. App. 390, 31 P. 185 (1892).

Nor can it be attacked for the first time in an appellate court. Rice v. Hauptman, 2 Colo. App. 565, 31 P. 862 (1892).

The burden is upon plaintiff to prove by a preponderance of the evidence the allegations in the affidavit. First Nat'l Bank v. Poor, 94 Colo. 314, 29 P.2d 713 (1934).

The affidavit stands as a pleading, not alone in cases commenced originally by attachment, but where sued out in aid of an action the affidavit answers to the complaint in that proceeding, and hence is so far a pleading that it is properly brought up by the record without being included in the statement required by the code. Goss v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 4 Colo. 468 (1878).

A material allegation in an allegation must be taken to be true unless denied. Wehle v. Kerbs, 6 Colo. 167 (1882).

III. CAUSES.

A. In General.

The words, "in an action", used in this section are not used to denote an action pending, but rather as introductory to the words describing the kind of action, to wit, ''an action on contract, express or implied'', in which the plaintiff may have the property of the defendant attached. So the words, ''at the time of issuing the summons'', in this section, meant precisely what they said as to the time when the writ of attachment might issue. When we consider that the chief utility of an attachment consists in the writ being served in time to prevent a delinquent debtor from placing his property beyond the reach of the creditor, it would be unfortunate, indeed, if the writ could not issue until the debtor should have notice of the proceedings by the service of the summons. Schuster v. Rader, 13 Colo. 329, 22 P. 505 (1889).

Whether one seeks restitution or damages does not change the underlying basis for his action, whether contract or tort. Crist v. United Underwriters, Ltd., 230 F. Supp. 136 (D. Colo. 1964), aff'd, 343 F.2d 902 (10th Cir. 1965).

This rule refers only to those contracts existing within the intention of the parties making them. Crist v. United Underwriters, Ltd., 230 F. Supp. 136 (D. Colo. 1964), aff'd, 343 F.2d 902 (10th Cir. 1965).

The phrase "implied contract" within the meaning of this rule is not inclusive of contracts implied in law. Crist v. United Underwriters, Ltd., 230 F. Supp. 136 (D. Colo. 1964), aff'd, 343 F.2d 902 (10th Cir. 1965).

When the cause of attachment is that the action is for the price of value of an article or thing sold and delivered, which, according to the contract of sale, was to be paid for on delivery, there must be a concurrence of three facts in addition to that of indebtedness: (1) The thing must have been delivered, (2) there must have been no credit given, and (3) the contract to pay on delivery must be unconditional. If there has been a credit of ever so short a time beyond the delivery, or if the payment depends upon any condition whatever, as a demand, the contract does not come within the operation of the statute. Miller v. Godfrey & Co., 1 Colo. App. 177, 27 P. 1016 (1891).

An attaching creditor does not occupy the status of a bona fide purchaser for value, and attachment can only operate upon the right and title of a debtor existing at the time of the levy. Nisbet v. Federal Title & Trust Co., 229 F. 644 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 241 U.S. 669, 36 S. Ct. 553, 60 L. Ed. 1229 (1916).

Private right of action arising under section 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 cannot be characterized as one ''on contract''. Crist v. United Underwriters, Ltd., 230 F. Supp. 136 (D. Colo. 1964), aff'd, 343 F.2d 902 (10th Cir. 1965).

B. Grounds.

Grounds for attachment changed. The grounds for attachment under the former rule, namely, that defendant refused to pay the value of goods upon delivery, has been eliminated from the revised rule. Inwood Indus., Inc. v. Priestley, 37 Colo. App. 78, 545 P.2d 732 (1975), aff'd, 191 Colo. 543, 560 P.2d 822 (1976).

Action by resident defendant will not sustain attachment before judgment. Crist v. United Underwriters, Ltd., 230 F. Supp. 136 (D. Colo. 1964), aff'd, 343 F.2d 902 (10th Cir. 1965).

Temporary absence from state. A finding of the trial court that a defendant in an attachment suit was a resident of the state so as to defeat an attachment based on the ground of nonresidence is supported by evidence which shows that defendant had been a resident of the state for a number of years, that he had gone out of the state and was absent from the state when the attachment was sued out, and where defendant and his wife testified that he had only temporarily left the state to accept a three-months job of work, leaving his household goods in the state. Newlon-Hart Grocer Co. v. Peet, 18 Colo. App. 147, 70 P. 446 (1902).

Intent may be proved by circumstances as well as by direct evidence. First Nat'l Bank v. Poor, 94 Colo. 314, 29 P.2d 713 (1934).

The question of intent is for the jury to determine. First Nat'l Bank v. Poor, 94 Colo. 314, 29 P.2d 713 (1934).

Where intent is doubtful, it is proper to receive testimony of person making the conveyance. Where the fraudulent intent is not a conclusive legal presumption from the facts, the party who made the conveyance is a competent witness as to what his purpose actually was. If, from the evidence, the intent is doubtful, as he is the only person who could know with certainty, what, in fact, it was, it is proper to interrogate him in relation to it, and a refusal to permit him to answer the question would be error. Curran v. Rothschild, 14 Colo. App. 497, 60 P. 1111 (1900).

Testimony not proper where the intent appears upon the face of the transaction. Where the intent of the party appears upon the face of the transaction, or where the undisputed facts are irreconcilable with a lawful purpose, his testimony as to what his motives really were would be without effect and should not be received. Curran v. Rothschild, 14 Colo. App. 497, 60 P. 1111 (1900).

Fraudulent intent should not be equated with secretive actions for purposes of section (c). Chaffin, Inc. v. Wallain, 689 P.2d 684 (Colo. App. 1984).

The giving of a mortgage was not sufficient of itself to prove an intent on the part of the defendants to hinder or delay the plaintiff in the collection of its debt. Such intent must be apparent from all the facts and circumstances in evidence before an attachment can be sustained on the ground alleged. If a mortgage is given with such intent, the property of the mortgagor is subject to attachment, even though the mortgagor had no purpose eventually to defeat the creditor in the collection of his demand, and even though the debt secured by the mortgage is a valid and subsisting liability. First Nat'l Bank v. Poor, 94 Colo. 314, 29 P.2d 713 (1934).

Where the transaction results in the hindering or delaying of creditors, it is for the court to say whether it was fraudulent or not. When a party has intentionally executed an assignment or conveyance of his property, which must hinder or defraud his creditors of their just demands, the question whether the conveyance is fraudulent or not necessarily becomes a question of law, and not of fact. Curran v. Rothschild, 14 Colo. App. 497, 60 P. 1111 (1900).

It is not necessary to show that transfer was made with a dishonest motive. To justify an attachment on the ground that the debtor has transferred his property so as to hinder or delay his creditors, it is not necessary to show that the transfer was made with a dishonest motive or with a purpose to cheat creditors and deprive them of the power ever to realize on their claims. If a debtor assigns or transfers his property for the purpose of hindering or delaying his creditors in the collection of their claims, his act is fradulent within the meaning of the law and will justify an attachment although he may intend that eventually the proceeds of the property shall be applied to the payment of their claims, and honestly believes that by preventing them from sacrificing his property they will ultimately realize more money. Curran v. Rothschild, 14 Colo. App. 497, 60 P. 1111 (1900); Kalberer v. Wilmore, 65 Colo. 411, 177 P. 147 (1918).

An honest transfer of property by a husband to his wife in satisfaction of a prior obligation cannot be made on the basis of a proceeding in attachment. City of Loveland v. Kearney, 14 Colo. App. 463, 60 P. 584 (1900).

Attachment lies for goods or money embezzled or stolen, or obtained by other species of frauds. Harden Farms, Inc. v. Amato, 160 F. Supp. 401 (D. Colo. 1958).

The wrongful conversion of funds by an officer constitutes fraudulently contracting an obligation which will sustain an attachment. Harden Farms, Inc. v. Amato, 160 F. Supp. 401 (D. Colo. 1958).

Misappropriation by an agent of a principal's money in a fraudulent way results in a breach of duty subjecting the agent to an action either ex delicto or assumpsit. In such a case the party injured may elect to sue upon the implied contract and waive the action ex delicto. Harden Farms, Inc. v. Amato, 160 F. Supp. 401 (D. Colo. 1958).

IV. THE WRIT.

A. In General.

The 1975 revised rule would invalidate the writ obtained by plaintiff because it was issued by the clerk of the district court and not by the court itself, and because the writ failed to advise defendant of his right to traverse. Inwood Indus., Inc. v. Priestley, 37 Colo. App. 78, 545 P.2d 732 (1975), aff'd, 191 Colo. 543, 560 P.2d 822 (1976).

A failure to pursue the requirements of the rule is almost universally held fatal to a levy. Graham v. Reno, 5 Colo. App. 330, 38 P. 835 (1894).

Where lien is preserved and continued in force. Where a writ of attachment was levied on real estate of a debtor and judgment entered without service of either the attachment writ or summons, but afterwards, on discovering the error, the judgment was set aside and a new judgment entered, after personal service of an alias summons and of a copy of the attachment writ, the lien acquired at the commencement of the action by the levy of the writ was preserved and continued in force. Raynolds v. Ray, 12 Colo. 108, 20 P. 4 (1888).

Defendants who obtained a favorable verdict in a tort case but did not assert a counterclaim may not use a writ under section (a) to attach the property of plaintiffs to recover their statutory costs. Section (a) authorizes a court to issue a writ of attachment only for the party bringing the claim, which would be a plaintiff or a defendant who has asserted a counterclaim. Hiner v. Johnson, 2012 COA 164, 310 P.3d 226.

Trial court properly discharged defendants' writ of attachment as it was improperly issued because: (1) Although section (a) uses the term ''any party'', it qualifies the term by limiting it to the party filing a claim ''in an action on contract . . . or an action to recover damages for tort''; (2) defendants failed to assert a counterclaim; and, (3) without a basis for the court to issue a writ of attachment, the writ of attachment was improperly issued; therefore, the trial court properly discharged the writ under section (w). Hiner v. Johnson, 2012 COA 164, 310 P.3d 226.

Plaintiffs not entitled to damages, attorney fees, and costs under the rule because sections (d) and (n)(2) do not authorize courts to make such awards to plaintiffs unless defendants have asserted a counterclaim. Section (d) only provides the basis for a defendant to recover costs and damages if the defendant recovers judgment or the court determines that the plaintiff was not entitled to the writ of attachment. Section (n)(2) only provides a basis for a defendant to recover damages if the plaintiff does not prevail at the hearing on a traverse of an affidavit accompanying a writ of attachment. Neither section of the rule includes a reciprocal statement that plaintiffs, in cases in which defendants do not assert a counterclaim, are entitled to damages. Hiner v. Johnson, 2012 COA 164, 310 P.3d 226.

B. Service.

Where possible personal service must be made before the court acquires jurisdiction. The mere levy of an attachment does not give the court jurisdiction to determine the question of indebtedness and condemn the attached property to pay the same. Where a defendant resides in this state, and there is no question but that he can be personally served, the service is complete when a copy of the writ is served upon him, and the property levied upon. Then, and not until then, does the court acquire jurisdiction to finally hear and determine the same. Thompson v. White, 25 Colo. 226, 54 P. 718 (1898).

Where there was no personal service on the defendant, the mere levy of an attachment did not give the court jurisdiction to determine the question of indebtedness and condemn the attached property to pay the same. Great W. Mining Co. v. Woodmas of Alston Mining Co., 12 Colo. 46, 20 P. 771 (1888).

Service by publication is permissible under section (g), which incorporates applicable rules for service of process. Hancock v. Boulder County Pub. Trustee, 920 P.2d 854 (Colo. App. 1995).

Jurisdiction of persons acquired by service of process or by appearance and of the property by attachment. If, when property is attached, there is no service of summons upon the defendant and no appearance by him to the action, the proceeding is purely in rem. The jurisdiction of the court is confined to the property attached, and, if the attachment fails, there is nothing for the court to adjudicate. It can render no judgment of any kind. If the defendant is served with summons, or appears to the action, the proceeding is both in personam and in rem. The court has jurisdiction of the person by virtue of service of its process, or of appearance; and of the property by virtue of the attachment. But the court acquired no jurisdiction of the property merely by virtue of its jurisdiction of the person. Mentzer v. Ellison, 7 Colo. App. 315, 43 P. 464 (1896).

Service of writ is required to enable the debtor to deposit the money sued for and prevent the lien. The service of the attachment writ is required for the purpose of enabling the debtor to deposit the money sued for, and thus prevent the lien from taking effect; or, if the lien already exists, thus to secure its dissolution; and also to enable him, in case he shall see fit so to do, to traverse and put in issue the matters stated in the affidavit of attachment. In a majority of cases, the levy of the writ will either precede or be made simultaneously with the service thereof. In some cases, the officer may serve the writ before he makes the levy, and in such cases the section provides that, if the amount of the claim be deposited, the levy shall not be made. Raynolds v. Ray, 12 Colo. 108, 20 P. 4 (1888).

The lien does not become effective until the writ is properly and completely served. By filing a copy of the writ of attachment, together with a description of the property to be attached, with the recorder of the county, a valid levy is made, and a valid lien upon the property is thereby created. By the levy under a writ of attachment before the service thereof, the plaintiff acquires a provisional lien upon the property levied on; but, before a valid judgment can be rendered by which the attachment lien is preserved and made effective, there must be proper service of the summons and the writ of attachment. Thompson v. White, 25 Colo. 226, 54 P. 718 (1898).

In the absence of a general appearance by defendant, an attachment lien does not become valid and effective and enforceable until the attachment writ is properly and completely served. Thompson v. White, 25 Colo. 226, 54 P. 718 (1898).

Proper service includes delivery of a copy of the writ to defendant and filing a copy with the recorder; and no judgment establishing the lien, or ordering a sale of the property, is valid without such service, or without a general appearance, if that does away with the necessity for service. Thompson v. White, 25 Colo. 226, 54 P. 718 (1898).

Mere filing of certificate is ineffective as to subsequent purchasers. Under this section a writ of attachment is not effectually levied upon lands unless a copy of the writ, with a description of the lands taken, is filed with a recorder in the county. The mere filing of a certificate of the levy is without effect as to subsequent purchasers. Weiss v. Ahrens, 24 Colo. App. 531, 135 P. 987 (1913).

Where defendant dies before copy of writ delivered to him. In an action against a resident defendant where an attachment had been levied upon real estate by filing a copy of the writ together with a description of the property with the recorder, but the defendant died before a copy of the writ was delivered to him, the attachment lien could not be perfected by service upon the executrix of the deceased defendant, nor by her general appearance in the action. Thompson v. White, 25 Colo. 226, 54 P. 718 (1898).

A writ directed to the sheriff of a county cannot be executed by the sheriff of any other county, and cannot be executed by the sheriff to whom it is issued outside of his own county. McArthur v. Boynton, 19 Colo. App. 234, 74 P. 540 (1903).

Use of a private process server, instead of the sheriff, to serve a writ on a defendant incarcerated in another state complied with the requirements of this rule. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. v. Kornegay, 2012 COA 140, 292 P.3d 1111.

Dismissal of the action error. Where a motion of a defendant raises only the question of the sufficiency of service in an attachment proceeding, dismissal of the action is error, since failure to obtain proper service does not warrant dismissal of a cause of action. Aero Spray, Inc. v. Ace Flying Serv., Inc., 139 Colo. 249, 338 P.2d 275 (1959).

C. Execution.

Execution of this writ serves as a lien on specified property throughout the duration of the litigation, thus securing for the plaintiff the practicality of benefiting from any judgment he might be awarded. Bernhardt v. Commodity Option Co., 187 Colo. 89, 528 P.2d 919 (1974), cert. denied, 421 U.S. 1004, 95 S. Ct. 2406, 44 L. Ed. 2d 673 (1975).

A valid levy of a writ of attachment may be made on real estate and a valid lien acquired by indorsing thereon a description of the property attached and filing a copy of such writ, so indorsed, in the recorder's office of the county wherein the real estate is situated. The levy of the writ creates a provisional lien; but, before a valid judgment can be rendered which will preserve and make the lien effective, there must be service of the writ and summons on the defendant. Raynolds v. Ray, 12 Colo. 108, 20 P. 4 (1888).

Personal property capable of manual delivery can be attached only by being taken into custody by the officer. An attempted levy of an attachment upon personal property, capable of manual delivery, where the property was left in the custody of the defendant, and was not separated from defendant's other property, was not such levy as would give the attaching creditor or the officer any right in the property. Gottlieb v. Barton, 13 Colo. App. 147, 57 P. 754 (1899); Nichols v. Chittenden, 14 Colo. App. 49, 59 P. 954 (1899).

Taking physical custody of tax lien certificates was not necessary where county treasurers of counties in which property was located were served with writs of garnishment in aid of attachment. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. v. Kornegay, 2012 COA 140, 292 P.3d 1111.

This rule, C.R.C.P. 103, and § 4-8-112 may be harmonized so that stock certificates may be reached by a creditor either by actual physical seizure, by a writ of attachment, if actually seized, or by serving the person who possesses the certificate with a writ of garnishment. Moreland v. Alpert, 124 P.3d 896 (Colo. App. 2005).

Where failure to sue out writ is excusable. Where defendant and his wife both were nonresidents, absconders, and he was a fugitive from justice, and neither had an agent in Colorado on whom service or execution of the writ of attachment could be made, had a writ of attachment been sued out by the creditor, it was impossible to execute it as required by this section because all the required steps essential to a valid levy must be taken or no valid seizure can be made. Failure, therefore, of plaintiff to sue out a writ of attachment was excusable. No seizure or levy upon the property by or under an attachment was possible in this state, and the only remedy, if any, left to the creditor was that invoked by him, a creditor's suit, by which, in this state, as generally, an equitable lien may be procured, or an equitable levy made. Shuck v. Quackenbush, 75 Colo. 592, 227 P. 1041 (1924).

When sheriff's duties are terminated. This section provides that real estate ''shall be attached by filing a copy of the writ, together with a description of the property attached with the recorder of the county''. The sheriff's duties are terminated when those acts are performed and he can exercise no further agency or control. The lien created by the attachment, whatever may be its character, is in the attaching creditor, and he only can release or discharge it. Barton v. Continental Oil Co., 5 Colo. App. 341, 38 P. 432 (1894).

Wherever the wrongful levy of a writ is the gravamen of a suit, the burden must of necessity be with the plaintiff to show that in fact a levy was made, unless it concerns personalty, and there be some circumstances of dispossession or disturbance of the owner's rights which will sustain a suit. Graham v. Reno, 5 Colo. App. 330, 38 P. 835 (1894).

An attack by a third person upon a void levy is not an attack upon the judgment. Where an insufficient and void levy of an attachment upon lands is made and the plaintiff in the action recovers judgment, and one not a party to that action institutes a suit in equity to set aside, as a cloud upon his title, such void and insufficient levy, the latter action is not an attack upon the judgment in the former. Weiss v. Ahrens, 24 Colo. App. 531, 135 P. 987 (1913).

Seizure of property of nonresident as a condition precedent to jurisdiction is a judicial requirement. The rule requiring the seizure of property within the state belonging to a nonresident defendant, as a condition precedent to the exercise of jurisdiction, is a judicial, and not a statutory requirement. Van Wagenen v. Carpenter, 27 Colo. 444, 61 P. 698 (1900).

Jurisdiction is aided by the same presumptions as in cases of personal service. The jurisdiction of a court of general jurisdiction in attachment proceedings is general, and its actions therein are aided by the same presumptions as in cases of personal service, and where jurisdiction is obtained in a case by attachment of the property of a nonresident, a judgment rendered therein and the property sold under a special execution, a sheriff's deed thereunder is sufficient to establish ownership in the purchaser. Van Wagenen v. Carpenter, 27 Colo. 444, 61 P. 698 (1900).

Upon a collateral attack, it will be conclusively presumed that everything necessary to be done was done, unless the contrary appears from the record. Van Wagenen v. Carpenter, 27 Colo. 444, 61 P. 698 (1900).

The return of the officer upon a writ of attachment is the record of the levy, and is the legal evidence of the fact that the levy was made. It cannot be proved by parol evidence. Gottlieb v. Barton, 13 Colo. App. 147, 57 P. 754 (1889).

Sheriff is not entitled to costs for making out the inventory. The making of an inventory of attached property is not a matter necessarily involving the expenditure of money out of pocket, and the sheriff is not entitled to costs therefor in addition to the statutory fees prescribed by statute for serving and otherwise executing attachment writs. Cramer v. Oppenstein, 16 Colo. 495, 27 P. 713 (1891).

V. NO FINAL JUDGMENT UNTIL 30 DAYS AFTER LEVY.

Purpose of provision. The plain purpose of this section is to permit creditors to prorate the proceeds of attached property, not to permit them to establish rights in a strange and unusual way. The provision simply makes it possible for all creditors to put themselves in a position of equality, in respect to the satisfaction, out of the property attached, of claims properly asserted and regularly adjudicated; and it is a matter of administrative policy and convenience that all creditors intervening are, upon application, named as plaintiffs in one general proceeding for the purpose of determining and adjudicating their respective rights. Trinidad Nat'l Bank v. Jamieson House Furnishing Co., 60 Colo. 356, 153 P. 441 (1915).

The "like remedies" secured to an intervening attachment creditor by this subdivision are no more or less than such means as were available to the original plaintiff to establish and secure his claim, that is to say, upon the filing of affidavit, undertaking and complaint, with application to be made a party plaintiff in the original proceeding, the intervening creditor merely places his claim, in point of time of action, and for the purpose of proration, upon an equal basis with that of the original plaintiff, and should enforce his rights by the same legal modes as were available to the one first to act, but it certainly was not intended thereby to put an intervening creditor in a better position than he who first attached, and the section grants no privilege which obviates taking the steps ordinarily requisite to jurisdiction in order to recover a valid judgment upon a claim properly established. Trinidad Nat'l Bank v. Jamieson House Furnishing Co., 60 Colo. 356, 153 P. 441 (1915).

Creditors making themselves co-plaintiffs cannot assert any right superior to that of their co-plaintiff. Where in an attachment suit other creditors come in and make themselves co-plaintiffs with the original plaintiff in the attachment suit for the purpose of pro rata distribution of the attached fund as provided in this subdivision, such creditors thereby preclude themselves from asserting any right in the case superior to that of their co-plaintiff. Rouse v. Wallace, 10 Colo. App. 93, 50 P. 366 (1897).

Where petition comes too late. Petition for intervention comes too late where, before it was presented, judgment had been entered, execution issued, and levy and sale had thereunder. Hartner v. Davis, 100 Colo. 464, 68 P.2d 456 (1937).

VI. TRAVERSE OF AFFIDAVIT.

The denial of grounds for attachment should be clear and specific. The plaintiffs set forth in the affidavits in aid of the writs of attachment the nature of the indebtedness, part of which was based on services rendered by the plaintiffs. A denial that the debt was owed was sufficient to put in issue the question whether services had been rendered for which payment was due at the time the services were rendered. Barbary v. Benz, 169 Colo. 408, 457 P.2d 389 (1969).

A "verified traverse" by the defendant's attorney, without an accompanying affidavit by a person with knowledge of the facts and containing merely a general denial that the defendant was about to transfer property fraudulently, is not sufficient. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. v. Kornegay, 2012 COA 140, 292 P.3d 1111.

The separate traversing affidavit is not a pleading so as to permit a traverse, by an officer of a corporation, upon information and belief. An officer or an attorney of a corporation, who undertakes to traverse an affidavit in attachment, is presumed to know what his corporation did and must make his affidavit positively. Colo. Vanadium Corp. v. Western Colo. Power Co., 73 Colo. 24, 213 P. 122 (1923).

When the grounds of an attachment have been traversed and there is no evidence to sustain any one of them, the attachment should be dissolved. Mount Lincoln Coal Co. v. Lane, 23 Colo. 121, 46 P. 632 (1896).

A traverse of an affidavit which does not deny the allegations as of the time stated in the affidavit is not good. Where traverse is in present tense in saying that the grounds of attachment are false but does not relate to the time in the past when the attachment was made, this section is not complied with. Colo. Vanadium Corp. v. Western Colo. Power Co., 73 Colo. 24, 213 P. 122 (1897).

The traverse affidavit must speak and deny as of the date on which the affidavits in support of attachment are filed in order to specifically put in issue the causes for attachment set forth in the affidavits. Barbary v. Benz, 169 Colo. 408, 457 P.2d 389 (1969).

In the absence of a traverse, the court is not required to investigate the truth of the affidavit. This section does not require an investigation of the truth of the allegations of the affidavit, or that the court shall make any finding or order concerning either the attachment or the property attached. These matters are merely incidental to the action and, there being no issue as to them, the court does not appear to have any duty appertaining thereto to perform. Brown v. Tucker, 7 Colo. 30, 1 P. 221 (1883).

Waiver of order dissolving attachment. Where defendant, having obtained an order dissolving an attachment, afterwards stipulated that the issues in the main cause, as well as those framed upon the traverse of the affidavit in attachment should be tried at the same time, he thereby waived the order dissolving the attachment, and all rights thereunder. Reyer v. Blaisdell, 26 Colo. App. 387, 143 P. 385 (1914).

If the prescribed procedure for release of attached property is not invoked, the levy remains in force. Collins v. Burns, 16 Colo. 7, 26 P. 145 (1891).

Lien becomes absolute if the ground for it is not successfully traversed. Under this rule an attachment plaintiff is in reality, and for many purposes, an incumbrancer. It is quite true the lien which he acquires is contingent rather than inchoate, and dependent not only upon a compliance with the rule which provides for its issue, but also upon the subsequent recovery of a judgment and proof of a cause of action on which he had a right to sue when he commenced his action. In this sense, it is contingent; in another, it is absolute, or becomes absolute, if the ground for it is not successfully traversed and the plaintiff ultimately succeeds. Day v. Madden, 9 Colo. App. 464, 48 P. 1053 (1897).

Where the statements of the affidavit are regularly traversed by the defendant without the court's attention being called to its supposed defects, and the issues are found against him upon the trial; or, if the amount of actual damage proved by the plaintiff be less than the amount averred in the affidavit, the judgment will not be reversed on such grounds. De Stafford v. Gartley, 15 Colo. 32, 24 P. 580 (1890).

VII. INTERVENTION.

This rule is not intended to put an intervening creditor in a better position than he who first attached, and the rule grants no privilege which obviates taking the steps ordinarily requisite to jurisdiction in order to recover a valid judgment upon a claim properly established. Consolidated Fin. Corp. v. Thorp, 168 Colo. 144, 450 P.2d 320 (1969).

Jurisdiction does not depend upon the record of the permission to intervene. Permission is presumed where nothing to the contrary appears and the court has assumed jurisdiction. Grove v. Foutch, 6 Colo. App. 357, 40 P. 852 (1895).

VIII. DEFENDANT MAY RELEASE PROPERTY; BOND.

Trial court may set the amount of a bond at zero, effectively waiving the bond requirement, if the court determines that the plaintiff can respond in damages if necessary. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. v. Kornegay, 2012 COA 140, 292 P.3d 1111.

Judgment against the attaching creditor releases the property, restores proceeds, if any, and dissolves the writ. Vigil v. Pacheco, 95 Colo. 405, 36 P.2d 766 (1934).

This rule authorizes parties whose property has been attached to obtain a bond releasing the property attached, but assuring the creditor if judgment is obtained, that the property will be returned to the sheriff for final action. Phoenix Assurance Co. v. Hughes, 367 F.2d 526 (10th Cir. 1966).

Bond releases property from officers' custody but does not dissolve the attachment lien. Chittenden v. Nichols, 31 Colo. 202, 72 P. 53 (1903).

Enforceable undertaking. An undertaking given by the defendant with sureties for the purpose of releasing money in the hands of a garnishee is enforceable where, by reason of its execution, the money was in fact paid over by the garnishee to the defendant. Schradsky v. Dunklee, 9 Colo. App. 394, 48 P. 666 (1897).

Where person is estopped from controverting validity of undertaking. When a person signs an incomplete undertaking and delivers the same to another for a particular purpose and with ostensible authority to fill in any needed matter to make it effective, and it is accepted in its completed form by the obligee, he is estopped from controverting its validity to the prejudice of the obligee. Palacios v. Brasher, 18 Colo. 593, 34 P. 251 (1893).

Property in the hands of the sheriff. The sheriff has no authority to accept an undertaking for the release of money garnisheed, nor to execute a release for money in the hands of a garnishee, such property not being ''in the hands of the sheriff''. Nevertheless, where parties, through the instrumentality of an undertaking executed by them, procure money from the garnishee, they having thus received the benefit of the undertaking, cannot be heard to deny its binding obligation upon themselves upon the happening of the contingencies therein provided for. Abbot v. Williams, 15 Colo. 512, 25 P. 450 (1890).

Lien not affected by redelivery bond. When property has been lawfully levied upon under proper process, and taken into possession by a sheriff, the lien thereby created is not affected by any subsequent levy or surrender of possession under a redelivery bond, but whatever becomes of the property after such levy, it is subject at all times to the lien created by the first levy. Curry v. Equitable Sur. Co., 27 Colo. App. 175, 148 P. 914 (1915).

This does not apply to money in the hands of a garnishee. Phoenix Assurance Co. v. Hughes, 367 F.2d 526 (10th Cir. 1966).

Neither officer nor plaintiff can refuse to accept property on account of damage. Where attached property has been released on a redelivery bond and the identical property is returned to the sheriff, it is the right of the bondsmen to have the property sold and the proceeds applied on the judgment and neither the officer nor the plaintiff can refuse to accept the return of the property on account of damage or diminution in value, nor is the plaintiff estopped by such acceptance to sue upon the bond for damage to the property resulting from use by the defendant after it has been released to him under the bond. Creswell v. Woodside, 15 Colo. App. 468, 63 P. 330 (1900).

Defective complaint. In a suit against the sureties on a redelivery bond given by defendant to plaintiff in an attachment suit to release the property attached, a complaint which fails to allege that demand was made on the defendant in the attachment suit for the return of the property released is fatally defective. It is not sufficient to allege that demand was made on the sureties in the bond. Murray v. Ginsberg, 10 Colo. App. 63, 48 P. 968 (1897).

Return of property in damaged condition constitutes a breach of the bond. Where property, released from an attachment under a forthcoming bond, is damaged from use by the defendant after the execution of the bond, its return to the officer in such damaged condition is not a return of substantially the same property and constitutes a breach of the bond. Creswell v. Woodside, 15 Colo. App. 468, 63 P. 330 (1900).

Measure of damages in such a case. In an action by an attachment plaintiff upon a redelivery bond where the property had been returned to the officer in a damaged condition resulting from use by the attachment defendant, the measure of plaintiff's damage was the diminution in value of the goods between the date of their release and the date of their return to the attaching officer, not to exceed the unpaid residue of the judgment. Creswell v. Woodside, 15 Colo. App. 468, 63 P. 330 (1900).

Where attached property has been released on a redelivery bond and after judgment sustaining the attachment the property is returned to the officer and the property is regularly and fairly sold as provided by statute and the proceeds applied on the judgment, as between the parties, the selling price is conclusive of the value thereof, and in an action by an attachment plaintiff upon a redelivery bond for damage to the property from use by the defendant after the execution of the bond, an instruction that undertakes to charge plaintiff with the value of the property returned regardless of the amount it brought at the sale is erroneous, and the fact that the plaintiff was the purchaser at the sale is of no significance. Creswell v. Woodside, 15 Colo. App. 408, 63 P. 330 (1900).

Bond not required to be executed under seal. A bond to release attached property is not required to be executed under seal, and if so executed the liability of the obligors is in no manner affected thereby. To authorize an agent to sign his principal's name to such bond, it is not necessary that such authority be under seal, and parol evidence is sufficient to establish such authority, or to establish a ratification of an unauthorized signing. Lynch v. Smyth, 25 Colo. 103, 54 P. 634 (1898).

Where attachment improperly issued. Looking to the affidavit and complaint, where there is no express or implied contract between the appellant and appellee, it follows that the attachment was improperly issued and should have been discharged under the motion. Goss v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 4 Colo. 468 (1878).

IX. NEW TRIAL; APPEAL.

An order in attachment proceedings dissolving the writ and releasing the property is a final judgment. Kopff v. Judd, 134 Colo. 330, 304 P.2d 623 (1956); Wilson v. Kirkbride, 899 P.2d 323 (Colo. App. 1995).

Time for filing notice of appeal began to run upon the denial of plaintiffs' rule 59 motion. Wilson v. Kirkbride, 899 P.2d 323 (Colo. App. 1995).

When a final judgment is entered, party adversely affected who wishes to appeal must file a motion for new trial as prescribed under C.R.C.P. 59(f) just as in the review of any other final judgment. Kopff v. Judd, 134 Colo. 330, 304 P.2d 623 (1956).

Procedure. Steps necessary to effectively prosecute error to the usual judgment in civil actions also are essential to validate an appeal to a final judgment in attachment proceedings. Kopff v. Judd, 134 Colo. 330, 304 P.2d 623 (1956).

Where final judgment sustaining writ of attachment was not questioned in a prior proceeding on error, in which the judgment on the merits was reversed, and thus became a final judgment binding upon the parties, reversal did not reopen the question of the validity of the attachment proceedings. Burt Chevrolet, Inc. v. Barth, 144 Colo. 180, 355 P.2d 538 (1960).

Rule 103. Garnishment

This rule sets forth the exclusive process for garnishment. There shall be five (5) types of writs: (1) Writ of Continuing Garnishment, (2) Writ of Garnishment with Notice of Exemption and Pending Levy, (3) Writ of Garnishment for Support, (4) Writ of Garnishment — Judgment Debtor Other Than Natural Person, and (5) Writ of Garnishment in Aid of Writ of Attachment.

SECTION 1

WRIT OF CONTINUING GARNISHMENT
(ON EARNINGS OF A NATURAL PERSON)

(a) Definitions.

(1) ''Continuing garnishment'' means the exclusive procedure for withholding the earnings of a judgment debtor for successive pay periods for payment of a judgment debt other than a judgment for support as provided in subsection (c) of this rule.

(2) ''Earnings'' shall be defined in section 13-54.5-101 (2), C.R.S., as applicable.

(b) Form of Writ of Continuing Garnishment and Related Forms. A writ of continuing garnishment shall be in the form and content of Appendix to Chapters 1 to 17A, Form 26, C.R.C.P. It shall also include at least one (1) ''Calculation of Amount of Exempt Earnings'' form to be in the form and content of Appendix to Chapters 1 to 17A, Form 27, C.R.C.P. Objection to the calculation of exempt earnings shall be in the form and content of Appendix to Chapters 1 to 17A, Form 28, C.R.C.P.

(c) When Writ of Continuing Garnishment Issues. After entry of judgment when a writ of execution can issue, a writ of continuing garnishment against earnings shall be issued by the clerk of the court upon request of the judgment creditor. (3) At such hearing, if the judgment giving rise to such claim has been satisfied against property or earnings of the judgment debtor, the court shall hear and summarily try and determine whether the amount of the judgment debtor's earnings paid to the judgment creditor was correctly calculated and whether the judgment debtor's property sold as upon execution was exempt. If the court finds earnings to have been miscalculated of if property is found to be exempt, the court shall enter judgment in favor of the judgment debtor for the amount of the over-garnished earnings or such exempt property or the value thereof which judgment shall be satisfied by payment to the clerk of the court or the return of exempt property to the judgment debtor within three (3) business days.

(a) Time for Filing of Traverse. The judgment creditor, plaintiff in attachment or intervenor in attachment, may file a traverse of an answer to any form of writ provided by this rule provided such traverse is filed within the greater time period of 21 days from the date such answer should have been filed with the court or 21 days after such answer was filed with the court. The failure to timely file a traverse shall be deemed an acceptance of the answer as true.

(b) Procedure.

(1) Within the time provided, the judgment creditor, plaintiff in attachment, or intervenor in attachment, shall state, in verified form, the grounds of traverse and shall mail a copy of the same to the garnishee in accordance with C.R.C.P. 5.

(2) Upon application of the judgment creditor, plaintiff in attachment, or intervenor in attachment, the traverse shall be set for hearing before the court at which hearing the statements in the traverse shall be deemed admitted or denied.

(3) Upon hearing of the traverse, if the court finds the garnishee liable to the judgment debtor or defendant in the attachment or in the possession or control of personal property of the judgment debtor or defendant in attachment at the time of service of the writ:

(A) The court shall enter judgment in favor of the judgment debtor or defendant in attachment against the garnishee for the use and benefit of the judgment creditor, plaintiff in attachment or intervenor in attachment, if the garnishee was liable to the judgment debtor or defendant in attachment;

(B) The court shall order the garnishee to deliver the personal property to the sheriff to be sold as upon execution in the same manner as section 4(f)(2) of this rule, if the garnishee was in the possession or control of personal property of the judgment debtor or defendant in attachment and may enter any order necessary to protect the interests of the parties. Provided, however, in the event that the garnishee no longer has possession or control over the personal property, the court may either enter a judgment for the value of such property at the time of the service of the writ or enter any order necessary to protect the interests of the parties or both.

(4) If a garnishee is under subpoena to appear for a hearing upon a traverse and such subpoena shall have been issued and served in accordance with C.R.C.P. 45, and shall fail to appear, the court shall thereupon enter such sanctions as are just, including, but not limited to, contempt of court, issuance of a bench warrant, reasonable attorney fees and the cost and expense of the judgment creditor, plaintiff in attachment or intervenor in attachment.

(5) At any hearing upon a traverse, the court shall make such orders as to reasonable attorney fees, costs and expense of the parties to such hearing as are just.

SECTION 9

INTERVENTION
(ALL FORMS OF GARNISHMENT)

Any person who claims an interest in any personal property of any description of a judgment debtor or defendant in attachment which property is the subject of any answer made by a garnishee, may intervene as provided in C.R.C.P. 24 at any time prior to entry of judgment against the garnishee.

SECTION 10

SET-OFF BY GARNISHEE
(ALL FORMS OF GARNISHMENT)

Every garnishee shall be allowed to claim as a set-off and retain or deduct all demands or claims on the part of the garnishee against any party to the garnishment proceedings, which the garnishee might have claimed if not summoned as a garnishee, whether such are payable or not at the time of service of any form or writ provided for by this rule.

GARNISHEE NOT REQUIRED TO DEFEND CLAIMS OF THIRD PERSONS (ALL FORMS OF GARNISHMENT)

(a) Garnishee With Notice. A garnishee with notice of the claim of a third person in any property of any description of a judgment debtor or defendant in attachment which is the subject of any answer made by the garnishee in response to any form of writ provided for by this rule shall not be required to defend on account of such claim, but shall state in such answer that the garnishee is informed of such claim of a third person.

(b) Court to Issue Summons. When such an answer has been filed, the clerk of the court, upon application, shall issue a summons requiring such third person to appear within the time specified in C.R.C.P. 12 to answer, set up, and assert a claim or be barred thereafter.

(c) Delivery of Property by Garnishee.

(1) If the answer states that the garnishee is informed of the claim of a third person, the garnishee may at any time pay to the clerk of the court any garnished amount payable at the time of the service of any writ provided for by this rule, or deliver to the sheriff any property the garnishee is required to hold pursuant to any form of writ provided for in this rule.

(2) Upon service of the summons upon such third person pursuant to C.R.C.P. 4, the garnishee shall thereupon be released and discharged of any liability to any person on account of such indebtedness to the extent of any amount paid to the clerk of the court or any property delivered to the sheriff.

RELEASE AND DISCHARGE OF GARNISHEE (ALL FORMS OF GARNISHMENT)

(a) Effect of Judgment. A judgment against a garnishee shall release and discharge such garnishee from all claims or demands of the judgment debtor or defendant in attachment to the extent of all sums paid or property delivered by the garnishee pursuant to such judgment.

(b) Effect of Payment. Payment by a garnishee of any sums required to be remitted by such garnishee pursuant to Sections 1(k)(2) or 3(g)(2) of this rule shall release and discharge such garnishee from all claims or demands of the judgment debtor to the extent of all such sums paid.

(c) Release by Judgment Creditor or Plaintiff in Attachment. A judgment creditor or plaintiff in attachment may issue a written release of any writ provided by this rule. Such release shall state the effective date of the release and shall be promptly filed with the clerk of the court.

GARNISHMENT OF PUBLIC BODY (ALL FORMS OF GARNISHMENT)

Any writ provided for in this rule wherein a public body is designated as the garnishee, shall be served upon the officer of such body whose duty it is to issue warrants, checks or money to the judgment debtor or defendant in attachment, or, such officer as the public body may have designated to accept service. Such officer need not include in any answer to such writ, as money owing, the amount of any warrant or check drawn and signed prior to the time of service of such writ.

ANNOTATION

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Law reviews. For article, ''Seizure of Person or Property: Rules 101-104'', see 23 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 603 (1951). For article, ''One Year Review of Civil Procedure and Appeals'', see 39 Dicta 133 (1962).

Garnishment is a deprivation of defendant's property, or right to the use of his property. Bernhardt v. Commodity Option Co., 187 Colo. 89, 528 P.2d 919 (1974), cert. denied, 421 U.S. 1004, 95 S. Ct. 2406, 44 L. Ed. 2d 673 (1975).

The whole object of garnishment is to reach effects or credits in the garnishee's hands, and to subject them to the payment of such judgment as the plaintiff may recover against the defendant. It results necessarily that there can be no judgment against the garnishee until judgment against the defendant shall have been recovered. McPhee v. Gomer, 6 Colo. App. 461, 41 P. 836 (1895).

Garnishment is strictly a statutory remedy. Troy Laundry & Mach. Co. v. City & County of Denver, 11 Colo. App. 368, 53 P. 256 (1898); Black v. Plumb, 94 Colo. 318, 29 P.2d 708, 91 A.L.R. 133 (1934).

The remedy of garnishment was unknown at common law and exists only by reason of statute or rules of procedure enacted pursuant to statutory authority. Worchester v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 172 Colo. 352, 473 P.2d 711 (1970).

Garnishment proceedings cannot be sustained if they go beyond statute. State v. Elkins, 84 Colo. 409, 270 P. 875 (1928).

Garnishment proceedings fall under the equity arm of a court, the purpose being to summarily reach ordinarily nonleviable evidences of debt, to prevent the loss or dissipation of such assets, to determine the ownership of such funds, and to provide for the equitable distribution thereof, such being triable by the court and not by a jury. Worchester v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 172 Colo. 352, 473 P.2d 711 (1970); Great Neck Plaza, L.P. v. Le Peep Restaurants, LLC, 37 P.3d 485 (Colo. App. 2001).

Writ of garnishment must be specific as to debtor. Berns, Clancy & Associates v. Bank of Boulder, 717 P.2d 1022 (Colo. App. 1986).

When garnishment proceeding considered "determined". A garnishment proceeding may not be considered ''determined'' until decisions regarding the rights of parties to the action can be made, and nothing but ministerial functions remain to be done. Nolan v. District Court, 195 Colo. 6, 575 P.2d 9 (1978); In re Seay, 97 Bankr. 41 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1989).

Until the time for filing an exemption under § 13-54-106 expires, the garnishment proceedings are not determined. Nolan v. District Court, 195 Colo. 6, 575 P.2d 9 (1978); In re Seay, 97 Bankr. 41 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1989).

This rule has no provision for release of cash. This rule relates to garnishment and has no provision similar to C.R.C.P. 102 for release of cash in the hands of a garnishee. Phoenix Assurance Co. v. Hughes, 367 F.2d 526 (10th Cir. 1966).

Attorneys' fees not permitted in garnishment. Neither this rule nor any other section or rule permits award of attorneys' fees for the garnishee in a garnishment. Commercial Claims, Ltd. v. First Nat'l Bank, 649 P.2d 736 (Colo. App. 1982).

This rule creates an exception to the American rule in garnishment actions; hence, the trial court was authorized to make an award of attorney fees. Hoang v. Monterra Homes (Powderhorn) LLC, 129 P.3d 1028 (Colo. App. 2005), rev'd on other grounds sub nom. Hoang v. Assurance Co. of Am., 149 P.3d 798 (Colo. 2007).

This rule is not applicable to spendthrift provisions of a will. Brasser v. Hutchison, 37 Colo. App. 528, 549 P.2d 801 (1976).

Funds under the control of a trustee subject to spendthrift provisions cannot be garnisheed. Brasser v. Hutchison, 37 Colo. App. 528, 549 P.2d 801 (1976).

The intent of congress that social security benefits be exempt from seizure is not undercut or in any way compromised by this rule. Ortiz v. Valdez, 971 P.2d 1076 (Colo. App. 1998).

Amendment of answer. Although this section is silent as to whether answers filed to a writ of garnishment may be amended, the guiding principle is that where the adverse party has not changed his position based on the original answer, the court, in its discretion should freely grant amendments. Brown v. Schumann, 40 Colo. App. 336, 575 P.2d 443 (1978).

Where the inability to amend would entirely foreclose the requesting party's case, and where the opposing party could show no prejudice to his case from the proposed amendment (other than the ''prejudice'' of having the garnishment determined on its merits), and where no prejudice to the court itself was evident from the record, the trial court abuses its discretion in ignoring the garnishee's amended answer. Brown v. Schumann, 40 Colo. App. 336, 575 P.2d 443 (1978).

Pending appellate review does not convert a judgment to a contingent liability or to a debt owing in the future. Shawn v. 1776 Corp., 787 P.2d 183 (Colo. App. 1989).

Stay of further garnishment proceedings until garnished judgments were no longer subject to stays of execution is the proper procedure and fully protects the interests of both garnishee and garnishor. Shawn v. 1776 Corp., 787 P.2d 183 (Colo. App. 1989).

A liability is not contingent merely because the garnishee disputes whether it breached its contract with the debtor. Walk-In Med. Centers, Inc. v. Breuer Capital Corp., 778 F. Supp. 1116 (D. Colo. 1991).

Unless a notice of garnishment properly runs with an accurate and sufficiently specific description against the individual to whom the garnishee may be indebted, a garnishee is totally unaffected by the notice served upon him. Anderson Boneless Beef v. Sunshine Health Care Center, Inc., 852 P.2d 1340 (Colo. App. 1993).

Applied in Stone v. Chapels for Meditation, Inc., 33 Colo. App. 346, 519 P.2d 1233 (1974).

II. PROVISIONS APPLICABLE TO ALL FORMS OF GARNISHMENTS.

A. When Writ Issues.

Annotator's note. Since section (b) of this rule was similar to § 129 of the former Code of Civil Procedure, which was supplanted by the Rules of Civil Procedure in 1941, relevant cases construing that section have been included in the annotations to this rule.

Before the turn of the century it was impossible to seize a debt owed by a nonresident garnishee to a principal defendant where the court had no jurisdiction over the situs of the debt. Garrett v. Garrett, 30 Colo. App. 167, 490 P.2d 313 (1971).

Under the present rule for garnishment, a court has jurisdiction for garnishment of a debt upon obtaining jurisdiction over the garnishee. Garrett v. Garrett, 30 Colo. App. 167, 490 P.2d 313 (1971).

Writ of garnishment can only be issued after issuance of a writ of attachment. Bernhardt v. Commodity Option Co., 187 Colo. 89, 528 P.2d 919 (1974), cert. denied, 421 U.S. 1004, 95 S. Ct. 2406, 44 L. Ed. 2d 673 (1975).

However, a proceeding by garnishment, though an independent suit, is auxiliary to the main suit. McPhee v. Gomer, 6 Colo. App. 461, 41 P. 836 (1895).

A judgment is hypothetical when taken in advance of a judgment in the main suit, as it is dependent upon a judgment subsequently obtained. McPhee v. Gomer, 6 Colo. App. 461, 41 P. 836 (1895).

The issuance of a post-judgment writ of garnishment without a writ of execution is one alternative authorized by C.R.C.P. 69(a). Warner/Elektra/Atlantic Corp. v. B & R Record & Tape Merchandisers, Inc., 40 Colo. App. 179, 570 P.2d 1320 (1977).

When the creditor and debtor have already participated in a complete hearing on the merits of the debt, as is the case with post-judgment garnishment, there is no due process advantage to be gained by forcing the garnishor to file an additional writ. Warner/Elektra/Atlantic Corp. v. B & R Record & Tape Merchandisers, Inc., 40 Colo. App. 179, 570 P.2d 1320 (1977).

When the principal judgment has been obtained, the validity of the judgment against the garnishee depends upon the validity of the judgment against the defendant. McPhee v. Gomer, 6 Colo. App. 461, 41 P. 836 (1895).

Without jurisdiction of the defendant and a judgment against him, a judgment against the garnishee is void, and its payment will not protect the garnishee. McPhee v. Gomer, 6 Colo. App. 461, 41 P. 836 (1895).

Garnishment is proper only after a valid judgment has been entered. W. Med. Prop. Corp. v. Denver Opportunity, Inc., 482 F. Supp. 1205 (D. Colo. 1980).

If the debtor could bring an immediate action to recover the debt from the garnishee, then the debt is due and payable within the meaning of the rule. Martinez v. Dixon, 710 P.2d 498 (Colo. App. 1985); Flanders Elec. v. Davall Controls & Eng., 831 P.2d 492 (Colo. App. 1992).

In the absence of statute, if the assessment or demand has not been previously made in accordance with law, the garnishee is not liable. Universal Fire Ins. Co. v. Tabor, 16 Colo. 531, 27 P. 890 (1891).

Garnishee cannot be placed in a worse position than if defendant enforced his own claim. In the absence of fraud between defendant and a garnishee, the latter cannot be placed, through garnishment proceedings, in a worse position than if defendant's claim were enforced by defendant himself. Universal Fire Ins. Co. v. Tabor, 16 Colo. 531, 27 P. 890 (1891).

Writ of garnishment impounds all moneys held by garnishee and owing to the judgment debtor as of the date the writ is served. Graybar Elec. Co. v. Watkins Elec. Co., 626 P.2d 1157 (Colo. App. 1980), rev'd on other grounds, 662 P.2d 1064 (Colo. 1983).

The trial court obtains jurisdiction over all the monies held by garnishee which are owing to the judgment debtor on the date of the service of the writ of garnishment. Martinez v. Dixon, 710 P.2d 498 (Colo. App. 1985).

A sheriff is not required to make diligent search for other property of defendant before writ may issue. E.I. Du Pont De Nemours & Co. v. Lednum, 82 Colo. 472, 260 P. 1017 (1927).

An indebtedness only can be made the subject of garnishment, and, in order that a liability may be an indebtedness within the meaning of the law, it must arise out of contract. Lewis v. City & County of Denver, 9 Colo. App. 328, 48 P. 317 (1897).

Garnishment applies only to contracts and not to tort actions. The controlling characteristic of the remedy by garnishment is that the liability of the garnishee must originate in, and be dependent on, contract. A right of action for a tort is not, therefore, the subject of garnishment in most jurisdictions. A claim in tort, not reduced to judgment, is not a debt within the meaning of the statutes in reference to garnishment. And the rule is the same where as between the tortfeasor and the person to whom the wrong was done the latter might at his option either hold the tortfeasor to his liability in tort, or, waiving the tort, treat him as his debtor, since the creditor of the wronged person is not at liberty to exercise this option in his place and so evade the general rule as to garnishment of claims in tort by substituting therefor a liquidated claim ''quasi ex contractu''. Black v. Plumb, 94 Colo. 318, 29 P.2d 708 (1934).

A court should dismiss the action when it appears beyond question that the action sounds in tort. Donald Co. v. Dubinsky, 74 Colo. 128, 219 P. 209 (1923); Black v. Plumb, 94 Colo. 318, 29 P.2d 708 (1934).

A tort claim cannot be adjudicated in a garnishment procedure, for to do so compels the garnishee to enter into combat with an adversary other than its own and do battle with one who had never had any contract relation with him. Steen v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., 157 Colo. 99, 401 P.2d 254 (1965).

Since there is nothing in an insurance policy, either expressly or impliedly, making a garnisher privity in contract with an insured, a stranger to the insurance policy involved, as a garnisher, can have no claim against the company, as garnishee, unless and until such transpires. Steen v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., 157 Colo. 99, 401 P.2d 254 (1965).

Where one, for a valuable consideration, has assumed the obligation of another, he may be held liable as garnishee, and it is not necessary that the garnishee hold tangible real or personal property of the debtor, for the assumption of the debts of another when in proper form is a right, credit, or chose in action required to be reported in garnishment proceedings. Field Family Constr. Co. v. Ryan, 145 Colo. 598, 360 P.2d 110 (1961).

Larimer County Bank & Trust Co., 75 Colo. 451, 226 P. 293 (1924).

A plaintiff in garnishment does not stand in the position of a purchaser in good faith and for value, but is in no better position than a purchaser or assignee with notice. Collins v. Thuringer, 92 Colo. 433, 21 P.2d 709 (1933).

A garnishment proceeding cannot displace prior valid and bona fide existing right and claims against the debt or property involved. Collins v. Thuringer, 92 Colo. 433, 21 P.2d 709 (1933).

For example, an attorney's lien is prior and superior to any right acquired by a plaintiff in such proceedings. Collins v. Thuringer, 92 Colo. 433, 21 P.2d 709 (1933).

Garnishment under executions is properly subordinated to garnishment under writs of attachment theretofore served on the same creditor, although the latter are, as a precautionary measure, again served on the same date as that issued under the writ of execution. Larimer County Bank & Trust Co. v. Colo. Rubber Co., 79 Colo. 4, 243 P. 622 (1926).

A creditor accepting provisions of assignment cannot reach funds of sale through garnishment. If a creditor accepts, and acts under, the provisions of an assignment for the benefit of creditors, he may not thereafter repudiate his acceptance and claim property in the hands of the trustee for the satisfaction of his debt or reach funds derived from the sale thereof by proceedings in garnishment. McMullin v. Keogh-Doyle Meat Co., 96 Colo. 298, 42 P.2d 463 (1935).

Contingent liabilities are not garnishable. Flanders Elec. v. Davall Controls & Eng., 831 P.2d 492 (Colo. App. 1992).

B. Service of Writ.

Annotator's note. Since section (c) of the prior version of this rule was similar to § 130 of the former Code of Civil Procedure, which was supplanted by the Rules of Civil Procedure in 1941, relevant cases construing that section have been included in the annotations to this rule.

Creditor must proceed in state where employment services rendered. The state in which services were rendered and in which the employer and employee reside is the situs of a chose and action for wages, and a creditor of the employee, who would reach the fund by garnishment, must proceed in that state. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. R. v. Maggard, 6 Colo. App. 85, 39 P. 985 (1895).

The fact that the employer is a railroad company operating a line through different states does not change this rule. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. R. v. Maggard, 6 Colo. App. 85, 39 P. 985 (1895).

Where an order for a widow's allowance and service of garnishment summons affecting the same are made on the same day, they are presumptively at the same time. Isbell-Kent-Oakes Dry Goods Co. v. Larimer County Bank & Trust Co., 75 Colo. 451, 226 P. 293 (1924).

Content of summons not prescribed. This section contains no provision that the court set forth any particular matters in the summons. Security State Bank v. Weingardt, 42 Colo. App. 219, 597 P.2d 1045 (1979).

Writ of garnishment served upon garnishee is insufficient if it fails to provide due process notice that a judgment could be entered against the garnishee based solely upon amount of judgment previously entered if garnishee fails to respond. Don J. Best Trust v. Cherry Creek Nat. Bank, 792 P.2d 303 (Colo. App. 1990).

A writ of garnishment pursuant to this rule and C.R.C.P. 403 provides a judgment creditor with an efficient mechanism for garnishing property to satisfy a proper judgment, provides the judgment debtor with an expedited procedure to protect his or her exempt property, and affords the judgment debtor significantly more process than is required by the United States and Colorado Constitutions. Ortiz v. Valdez, 971 P.2d 1076 (Colo. App. 1998).

C. Jurisdiction.

Garnishment cannot be extended by construction to cases which are not within both its letter and spirit, although it is true that the garnishment statutes of Colorado specifically require that they shall be liberally construed so as to promote their objects. This applies, however, only to the enforcement of the remedy after jurisdiction has attached; it does not permit courts to enlarge or extend by implication the scope of the statutes, so as to bring within their jurisdiction any cases except those to which the statutes manifestly and clearly apply. As to this, the rule of strict construction prevails, the statutes being in derogation of the common law. Troy Laundry & Mach. Co. v. City & County of Denver, 11 Colo. App. 368, 53 P. 256 (1898); Black v. Plumb, 94 Colo. 318, 29 P.2d 708 (1934).

Where a garnishee is doing business within Colorado, service of a writ of garnishment upon it at its place of business properly brings it within the jurisdiction of the court in a garnishment proceeding. Garrett v. Garrett, 30 Colo. App. 167, 490 P.2d 313 (1971).

Where it is claimed that the court does not have jurisdiction, but there was a judgment and execution in the main cause, regularly obtained, a return of the writ of garnishment, showing due service, gives the court jurisdiction over the garnishee. E.I. Du Pont De Nemours & Co. v. Lednum, 82 Colo. 472, 260 P. 1017 (1927) (decided under § 135 of the former Code of Civil Procedure, which was replaced by the Rules of Civil Procedure in 1941).

A garnishment can reach only such property as belongs to the debtor. Denver Joint Stock Land Bank v. Moore, 93 Colo. 151, 25 P.2d 180 (1933); People ex rel. J.W., 174 P.3d 315 (Colo. App. 2007).

This rule shows an intent that every sort of interest of the debtor might be garnished. Bank of Grand Junction v. Bank of Vernal, 81 Colo. 483, 256 P. 660 (1927).

The assertion by a garnishee of a jurisdictional defense to a judgment for which he is sought to be held is not a collateral but a direct attack upon the judgment. Tabor v. Bank of Leadville, 35 Colo. 1, 83 P. 1060 (1905).

Dormancy of judgment in foreign state does not defeat rights of creditor under this rule. Ryan v. Duffield, 899 P.2d 378 (Colo. App. 1995).

Rather than reviving a judgment lien obtained in a foreign state and subsequently recorded in Colorado, garnishments created new and separate liens against the estate of the judgment debtor. Further, the garnishments were not an effort by the judgment creditor to maintain an action in Colorado that could not be maintained in the foreign state, but instead were ancillary to the judgment previously obtained. Ryan v. Duffield, 899 P.2d 378 (Colo. App. 1995).

D. Objection of Judgment Debtor — Exemptions.

Law reviews. For note, ''A Discussion of Garnishment and Its Exemptions'', see 27 Dicta 453 (1950).

Absence of a creditor-debtor relationship between judgment debtor and garnishee and the existence of an agreement between such parties which specifically negated garnishee's assumption of any of judgment debtor's liability precluded judgment creditors' proceeding against garnishee. Coin Serv. Investors, Inc. v. Grooms, 743 P.2d 42 (Colo. App. 1987).

Garnishee is entitled to an evidentiary hearing concerning the validity of the garnished debt in order to afford due process to the garnishee. Maddalone v. C.D.C., Inc., 765 P.2d 1047 (Colo. App. 1988).

Failure to comply with a court order does not supercede requirement to set a hearing. The court may not sanction a party for his or her failure to comply with a court order by refusing to set a hearing on an objection or claim of exemption. The setting of a hearing is mandatory, not discretionary. Borrayo v. Lefever, 159 P.3d 657 (Colo. App. 2006).

Husband in post-dissolution garnishment proceeding received a proper hearing under subsection 6(c)(4) where trial court conducted a timely and thorough hearing at which it heard argument and received evidence in the form of exhibits from the interested parties and at which the husband's counsel neither requested the opportunity to call witnesses nor objected to the proceeding. In re Gedgaudas, 978 P.2d 677 (Colo. App. 1999).

E. Answer.

A garnishee's answer is made with reference to the facts existing at the time of the service of a writ of garnishment. Bragdon v. Bradt, 16 Colo. App. 65, 64 P. 248 (1901).

If, at that time, the garnishee owes the defendant a debt, or has personal property of the defendant in his possession or under his control, he must so answer and abide the judgment of a court. Bragdon v. Bradt, 16 Colo. App. 65, 64 P. 248 (1901).

If, at that time, he is not indebted to the defendant, or has not in his possession or under his control, any property of the defendant, he is entitled to a discharge. Bragdon v. Bradt, 16 Colo. App. 65, 64 P. 248 (1901).

Garnishee is not answerable for effects of the defendant coming into his hands, or indebtedness accruing from him to the defendant, after the garnishment. Bragdon v. Bradt, 16 Colo. App. 65, 64 P. 248 (1901).

It is only where the answer of a garnishee shows that he is indebted to the defendant, has personal property in his possession or under his control belonging to the defendant, or where his answer denying indebtedness to the defendant or possession of his property is successfully controverted that a judgment against him is lawful. Bragdon v. Bradt, 16 Colo. App. 65, 64 P. 248 (1901).

In order to charge him upon his answer, it must contain a clear admission of a debt due to, or the possession of attachable property of the defendant. Bragdon v. Bradt, 16 Colo. App. 65, 64 P. 248 (1901).

Where his answer is a substantial denial of indebtedness, or possession of attachable property belonging to the defendant, he is entitled to a judgment of discharge, unless the force of the denial is overcome by other statements in the answer or unless the answer is shown to be untrue. Bragdon v. Bradt, 16 Colo. App. 65, 64 P. 248 (1901).

A delivery by the garnishee to the sheriff can be ordered only where the answer admits possession in the garnishee of property belonging to the defendant or where, upon a trial of issue joined upon the answer, such possession is found. Bragdon v. Bradt, 16 Colo. App. 65, 64 P. 248 (1901).

"Supplemental answer" held no answer at all where time to answer exhausted. Bragdon v. Bradt, 16 Colo. App. 65, 64 P. 248 (1901).

Note properly turned over to sheriff. Where a note in the hands of a garnishee is held pending the result of litigation on final determination of which the note inures to the benefit of the judgment creditor, it is properly turned over to the sheriff with the order that he make disposition of it in the manner required by law. Union Deposit Co. v. Driscoll, 95 Colo. 140, 33 P.2d 251 (1934).

A contingent liability is not garnishable. When a garnishee alleges a contingent liability in his answer to the writ of garnishment, the proper procedure is to allow the garnishor to traverse the garnishee's answer, followed by a trial on the issues framed. Haselden Langley Constructors, Inc. v. Graybar Elec. Co., 662 P.2d 1064 (Colo. 1983).

Payment to creditor's attorneys is payment to creditor. Where money is deposited in court by the garnishee in garnishment proceedings, payment of the fund to attorneys for the garnisheeing creditor is payment to the creditor, and an order to repay part of the fund is proper. Hahnewald v. Schlapfer, 82 Colo. 313, 260 P. 105 (1927).

Default for failure of garnishee "to answer or pay" only applies if guarnishee fails to answer or pay any nonexempt earnings. People ex rel. J.W., 174 P.3d 315 (Colo. App. 2007).

F. Traverse of Answer.

Annotator's note. Since sections (m) and (n) of the prior version of this rule were similar to §§ 144 and 145 of the former Code of Civil Procedure, which was supplanted by the Rules of Civil Procedure in 1941, relevant cases construing those sections have been included in the annotations to this rule.

Previously, an order denying a motion to discharge a garnishee for failure of plaintiff to traverse answer of garnishee within required period was not appealable as a "final judgment, decree or order" where no final judgment was entered and garnishee specifically saved right to further challenge court's jurisdiction and nothing in record indicated that court had passed on garnishee's answer. Steel v. Revielle, 102 Colo. 271, 78 P.2d 980 (1938).

Still garnishee cannot take advantage of his own delay. A garnishee, by its own delay having made it impossible for the plaintiff to file the traverse within the time allowed by this section, is in no position to complain, since he cannot take advantage of a situation brought about by his own neglect. Stollins v. Shideler, 91 Colo. 40, 11 P.2d 562 (1932).

A traverse stating only conclusions of law and not facts is insufficient. Day v. Bank of Del Norte, 76 Colo. 223, 230 P. 785 (1924).

The answer of the garnishee and the traverse of the plaintiffs are the only pleadings provided by this rule, and make up the issues in garnishment proceedings. General Accident Fire & Life Assurance Corp. v. Mitchell, 120 Colo. 531, 211 P.2d 551 (1949).

Any new matter pleaded in the traverse is deemed to be denied or avoided. General Accident Fire & Life Assurance Corp. v. Mitchell, 120 Colo. 531, 211 P.2d 551 (1949).

Where the garnishee has no opportunity to plead to a reply without further pleading, he can avail himself of any defense he might have to the new matter set up in the affidavit. Jones v. Langhorne, 19 Colo. 206, 34 P. 997 (1893).

A partner may set up nonjoinder of copartner as a defense. Where a partner is sued individually for a firm debt he is usually required to plead the nonjoinder of his copartners in order that he may avail himself of this defense, but this general rule has no application to garnishment proceedings under this rule. Jones v. Langhorne, 19 Colo. 206, 34 P. 997 (1893).

Subsection 8(b)(5) provides authority pursuant to § 13-16-122 (1)(h) to make an award of attorney fees making § 13-17-101 et seq. inapplicable. United Bank v. State Treasurer, 797 P.2d 851 (Colo. App. 1990).

An award of attorney fees under this rule is at the trial court's discretion. United Guar. Residential Ins. Co. v. Dimmick, 916 P.2d 638 (Colo. App. 1996).

An award of attorney fees, costs, and expenses under section 8(b)(5) is limited to those fees, costs, and expenses incurred to prepare and file the traverse and prosecute the traverse proceeding. L & R Exploration Venture v. CCG, LLC, 2015 COA 49, 351 P.3d 569.

G. Intervention.

Annotator's note. Since section 9 of this rule is similar to § 146 of the former Code of Civil Procedure, which was supplanted by the Rules of Civil Procedure in 1941, relevant cases construing that section have been included in the annotations to this rule.

This section 9 is not mandatory, and thus, one asserting rights to property which is the subject of garnishment proceedings is free to ignore those garnishment proceedings and file an independent action to enforce those rights. El Paso County Bank v. Charles R. Milisen & Co., 622 P.2d 594 (Colo. App. 1980).

In garnishment proceedings, intervention is governed by this rule which provides that a party shall proceed in accordance with C.R.C.P. 24. Capitol Indus. Bank v. Strain, 166 Colo. 55, 442 P.2d 187 (1968).

Allegations of the petition in intervention held sufficient to make out a prima facie case for intervening assignee. Denver Joint Stock Land Bank v. Moore, 93 Colo. 151, 25 P.2d 180 (1933).

With denial of right of intervention constituting reversible error. Where, in a garnishment proceeding, a third party files a petition in intervention claiming the property involved, he is entitled to have his claim tried and determined, and a denial of that right constitutes reversible error. Burnett v. Jeffers, 88 Colo. 613, 299 P. 18 (1931).

Where in due time. Where the intervention is before the judgment against the garnishee and it cannot be said that the garnishment proceedings have then been determined, the intervention, therefore, is in due time. Hahnewald v. Schlapfer, 82 Colo. 313, 260 P. 105 (1927).

It is error for a trial court to quash a garnishment where the writ of garnishment is issued in accordance with this rule and the answer and return of the garnishee are made within the time prescribed by rule when the regularity of the garnishment proceeding is not attacked and a motion to quash is based wholly upon a claimed right to intervene; but the intervenor tacitly recognizes the validity of the proceedings by having filed its motion to intervene therein. Capitol Indus. Bank v. Strain, 166 Colo. 55, 442 P.2d 187 (1968).

An intervention by definition involves third parties, and such strangers to the original garnishment proceeding, by asserting ownership of the disputed property, necessarily put their ownership status, and all related questions, at issue. Great Neck Plaza, L.P. v. Le Peep Restaurants, 37 P.3d 485 (Colo. App. 2001).

Applied in Susman v. Exchange Nat'l Bank, 117 Colo. 12, 183 P.2d 571 (1947).

H. Set-off.

Law reviews. For article, ''Setoff and Security Interests In Deposit Accounts'', see 17 Colo. Law. 2108 (1988).

Annotator's note. Since section (p) of the prior version of this rule was similar to § 147 of the former Code of Civil Procedure, which was supplanted by the Rules of Civil Procedure in 1941, relevant cases construing that section have been included in the annotations to this rule.

By this section a garnishee is allowed to retain or deduct out of the property or credits of the defendant in his hands all demands against the defendant of which he could have availed himself had he not been summoned as garnishee. Tabor v. Bank of Leadville, 35 Colo. 1, 83 P. 1060 (1905).

Garnishee may plead as a defense or set-off whatever he might have pleaded were the suit directly against him by his own creditor. Sauer v. Town of Nevadaville, 14 Colo. 54, 23 P. 87 (1890); Tabor v. Bank of Leadville, 35 Colo. 1, 83 P. 1060 (1905).

Garnishee is not to be placed in a worse position. Under no circumstances shall a garnishee, by the operation of the proceedings against him, be placed in any worse condition than he would be if the defendant's claim against him were enforced by the defendant himself. Tabor v. Bank of Leadville, 35 Colo. 1, 83 P. 1060 (1905); Day v. Bank of Del Norte, 76 Colo. 223, 230 P. 785 (1924).

Bank receiver was entitled to set-off compensation due him. Where an attempt is made in a garnishment proceeding to make a bank receiver liable for a judgment against the bank, such receiver is entitled to plead as a defense or set-off the compensation due him by the bank even though his appointment as such was void. Tabor v. Bank of Leadville, 35 Colo. 1, 83 P. 1060 (1905).

A garnisheed bank may apply the amount on deposit to the credit of a debtor to the payment of his note to it although not due. Day v. Bank of Del Norte, 76 Colo. 223, 230 P. 785 (1924).

Agreement after service of writ would be void. An agreement by a garnishee to apply upon or deduct from credits of the defendant in his possession, a loan made by him to the defendant after service of the writ would be void and could not be enforced by any party thereto. Day v. Bank of Del Norte, 76 Colo. 223, 230 P. 785 (1924).

Garnishee bank is entitled to claim set-off against debtor's account for moneys owed to bank even though moneys were not due at time of service of writ of garnishment. Colo. Nat. Bank - Arvada v. Greaney, 720 P.2d 611 (Colo. App. 1986).

Landlord's lien. A lease may create a valid landlord's lien, enforceable under section 8 of this rule as a set-off. Beneficial Fin. Co. v. Bach, 665 P.2d 1034 (Colo. App. 1983).

The rights and liabilities of a garnishee are to be determined as of the date of the garnishment and not upon a state of facts that existed theretofore or thereafter. Day v. Bank of Del Norte, 76 Colo. 223, 230 P. 785 (1924).

It is unreasonable to require a garnishee to claim a set-off immediately upon service of the writ of garnishment; the more reasonable approach allows a garnishee the same time period to claim set-off as allowed to file its answers to the garnishment interrogatories. Colo. Nat. Bank - Arvada v. Greaney, 720 P.2d 611 (Colo. App. 1986); Flanders Elec. v. Davall Controls & Eng., 831 P.2d 492 (Colo. App. 1992).

It is the responsibility of the trial court to determine the amounts and reasonableness of set-offs, and, absent an abuse of discretion, its decision will not be overturned. Flanders Elec. v. Davall Controls & Eng., 831 P.2d 492 (Colo. App. 1992).

Law firm had statutory charging lien on settlement proceeds. State's lien for child support did not have priority over charging lien. State was entitled to net settlement proceeds after deduction of attorney fees. A garnishment can only reach property that belongs to the debtor. People ex rel. J.W., 174 P.3d 315 (Colo. App. 2007).

I. Claims of Third Persons.

Annotator's note. Since section (i) and (j) of the prior version of this rule were similar to §§ 138 and 141 of the former Code of Civil Procedure, which was supplanted by the Rules of Civil Procedure in 1941, relevant cases construing these sections have been included in the annotations to this rule.

This section puts burden on claimant not only to assert an interest in the property but also to establish the extent of his interest. Security State Bank v. Weingardt, 42 Colo. App. 219, 597 P.2d 1045 (1979).

When a garnishee in his answer states that a third party claims property in his possession belonging to the debtor, it is the duty of the court to issue a citation or summons to said party requiring him to appear and set up his claim. Burnett v. Jeffers, 88 Colo. 613, 299 P. 18 (1931).

However, this rule refers to answers in good faith, so if a garnishee knows the truth he must tell it and if he tells a falsehood, at least if he tells it for a fraudulent purpose, he must pay damages. International State Bank v. Trinidad Bean & Elevator Co., 79 Colo. 286, 245 P. 489 (1926).

Payment to one other than judgment debtor held improper. Where garnishee-defendant, after answering writ of garnishment, discovers that a contract between it and judgment debtor requires that payments be made jointly to debtor and another, the garnishee-defendant then pays the latter part of the sum which it admitted in its answer was due and owing the judgment debtor, and he files an amended answer to that effect, such payment is improper without a release of garnishment or order of court. Welbourne Dev. Co. v. Affiliated Clearance Corp., 28 Colo. App. 313, 472 P.2d 684 (1970).

It is not essential that notice of an assignment be given in advance to a garnishee, although in the absence of knowledge or notice the latter would be protected against double payment. Denver Joint Stock Land Bank v. Moore, 93 Colo. 151, 25 P.2d 180 (1933).

If, during the pendency of garnishment proceedings, it is established that an assignment of the subject-matter antedating the garnishment was actually executed, the absence of previous notice to the garnishee would be immaterial, and a judgment creditor would not be entitled to notice as such. Denver Joint Stock Land Bank v. Moore, 93 Colo. 151, 25 P.2d 180 (1933).

A creditor is entitled to a fund owing defendant by his employer as against the claims of another creditor of which he had no notice where the claims of which said other creditor are not based on a contract sufficient to bind the fund. This being determined, then the only further action within the jurisdiction of the trial court is, on application, to order a judgment against the employer in favor of the defendant for the use of the plaintiff pursuant to the terms of this section. Meyer v. Delta Market, 98 Colo. 421, 57 P.2d 3 (1936).

Once a third-party claimant has conceded that the disputed property may be garnished by a creditor, the claimant is thereafter estopped from claiming the proceeds of the garnishment unless there is an agreement otherwise. Securities Investor Protection Corp. v. Goldberg, 893 F.2d 1139 (10th Cir. 1990).

Applied in Susman v. Exchange Nat'l Bank, 117 Colo. 12, 183 P.2d 571 (1947).

J. Release and Discharge.

A judgment in the principal proceeding is presumptively valid while lodged in an appellate court for review. Zurich Ins. Co. v. Bonebrake, 137 Colo. 37, 320 P.2d 975 (1958).

Such judgment when not superseded by virtue of a failure to furnish the required bond leaves a judgment creditor in the position to take usual steps to enforce collection of his judgment, precisely as if supersedeas has not been granted. Zurich Ins. Co. v. Bonebrake, 137 Colo. 37, 320 P.2d 975 (1958).

The reversal of a judgment upon which a garnishment is based leaves nothing to sustain the judgment against the garnishee. Zurich Ins. Co. v. Bonebrake, 137 Colo. 37, 320 P.2d 975 (1958).

If the original judgment is reversed, a judgment in garnishment is deprived of a basis and falls with it. Zurich Ins. Co. v. Bonebrake, 137 Colo. 37, 320 P.2d 975 (1958).

The existence of a valid judgment is a jurisdictional prerequisite to garnishment relief. Zurich Ins. Co. v. Bonebrake, 137 Colo. 37, 320 P.2d 975 (1958).

Where the judgment in the main case has been reversed, then, if it is made the basis of a garnishment, it must follow that a judgment in the garnishment proceeding cannot stand alone and must be reversed. Zurich Ins. Co. v. Bonebrake, 137 Colo. 37, 320 P.2d 975 (1958).

Since garnishee's liability is not established. Where the case which found garnishee's liability is reversed and remanded for new trial, the garnishee's liability is not established, and garnishment should be vacated. Mitchell v. Am.

Family Mut. Ins. Co., 179 Colo. 372, 502 P.2d 79 (1972).

Applied in E.I. Du Pont De NeMours & Co. v. Lednum, 82 Colo. 472, 260 P. 1017 (1927).

K. Disbursement of Funds.

Court approval not required. Subsection 2(h) requires the clerk to disburse funds to the judgment creditor without further application or order. The fact that the judgment debtor had applied for a stay had no effect on the clerk's authority to release the garnished funds. Ryan v. Duffield, 899 P.2d 378 (Colo. App. 1995).

III. SPECIFIC FORMS OF GARNISHMENT.

Law reviews. For article, ''The Nuts and Bolts of Collecting Support'', see 19 Colo. Law. 1595 (1990).

Past-due child support payments in themselves constitute debt. Colo. State Bank v. Utt, 622 P.2d 584 (Colo. App. 1980).

Amount defendant admittedly owed for past-due child support may be garnished by bank which held judgment against former wife. Colo. State Bank v. Utt, 622 P.2d 584 (Colo. App. 1980).

Foreclosure sale excess proceeds may be garnished. TCF Equip. Fin. v. Pub. Trustee, 2013 COA 8, 297 P.3d 1048.

Law firm had statutory charging lien on settlement proceeds. State's lien for child support did not have priority over charging lien. State was entitled to net settlement proceeds after deduction of attorney fees. A garnishment can only reach property that belongs to the debtor. People ex rel. J.W., 174 P.3d 315 (Colo. App. 2007).

C.R.C.P. 102, this rule, and § 4-8-112 may be harmonized so that stock certificates may be reached by a creditor either by actual physical seizure, by a writ of attachment, if actually seized, or by serving the person who possesses the certificate with a writ of garnishment. Moreland v. Alpert, 124 P.3d 896 (Colo. App. 2005).

Rule 104. Replevin

(a) Personal Property. The plaintiff in an action to recover the possession of personal property may, at the time of the commencement of the action, or at any time before trial, claim the delivery of such property to him as provided in this Rule.

(b) Causes, Affidavit. Where a delivery is claimed, the plaintiff, his agent or attorney, or some credible person for him, shall, by verified complaint or by complaint and affidavit under penalty of perjury show to the court as follows:

(1) That the plaintiff is the owner of the property claimed or is entitled to possession thereof and the source of such title or right; and if plaintiff's interest in such property is based upon a written instrument, a copy thereof shall be attached;

(2) That the property is being detained by the defendant against the plaintiff's claim of right to possession; the means by which the defendant came into possession thereof, and the specific facts constituting detention against the right of the plaintiff to possession;

(3) A particular description of the property, a statement of its actual value, and a statement to his best knowledge, information and belief concerning the location of the property and of the residence and business address, if any, of the defendant;

(4) That the property has not been taken for a tax assessment or fine pursuant to a statute; or seized under an execution against the property of the plaintiff; or if so seized, that it is by statute exempt from seizure.

(c) Show Cause Order; Hearing within 14 Days. The court shall without delay, examine the complaint and affidavit, and if it is satisfied that they meet the requirements of section (b), it shall issue an order directed to the defendant to show cause why the property should not be taken from the defendant and delivered to the plaintiff. Such order shall fix the date and time for the hearing thereof. The hearing date shall be not more than 14 days from the date of the issuance of the order and the order must have been served at least 7 days prior to the hearing date. The plaintiff may request a hearing date beyond 14 days, which request shall constitute a waiver of the right to a hearing not more than 14 days from the date of issuance of the order. Such order shall inform the defendant that he may file affidavits on his behalf with the court and may appear and present testimony in his behalf at the time of such hearing, or that he may, at or prior to such hearing, file with the court a written undertaking to stay the delivery of the property, in accordance with the provisions of section (j) of this rule, and that, if he fails to appear at the hearing on the order to show cause or to file an undertaking, plaintiff may apply to the court for an order requiring the sheriff to take immediate possession of the property described in the complaint and deliver same to the plaintiff. The summons and complaint, if not previously served, and the order shall be served on the defendant and the order shall fix the manner in which service shall be made, which shall be by service in accordance with the provisions of Rule 4, C.R.C.P., or in such manner as the court may determine to be reasonably calculated to afford notice thereof to the defendant under the circumstances appearing from the complaint and affidavit.

(d) Order for Possession Prior to Hearing. Subject to the provisions of section 5-5-104, C.R.S. 1973, and upon examination of the complaint and affidavit and such other evidence or testimony as the court may thereupon require, an order of possession may be issued prior to hearing, if probable cause appears that any of the following exist:

(1) The defendant gained possession of the property by theft.

(2) The property consists of one or more negotiable instruments or credit cards.

(3) By reason of specific, competent evidence shown, by testimony with the personal knowledge of an affiant or witness, the property is perishable, and will perish before any noticed hearing can be had, or that the defendant may destroy, dismantle, remove parts from, or in any way substantially change the character of the property, or the defendant may conceal or remove the property from the jurisdiction of the court to sell the property to an innocent purchaser.

(4) That the defendant has by contract voluntarily and intelligently and knowingly waived his right to a hearing prior to losing possession of the property by means of a court order.

Where an order of possession has been issued prior to hearing under the provisions of this section, the defendant or other persons from whom possession of said property has been taken, may apply to the court for an order shortening time for hearing on the order to show cause, and the court may, upon such application, shorten the time for hearing, and direct that the matter shall be heard on not less than forty-eight hours' notice to the plaintiff.

(e) Bond. An order of possession shall not issue pursuant to section (d) of this rule until plaintiff has filed with the court in an amount set by the court in its discretion not to exceed double the value of the property a written undertaking executed by plaintiff and such surety as the court may require for the return of the property to the defendant, if return thereof be ordered, and for the payment to the defendant of any sum that may from any cause be recovered against the plaintiff.

(f) Temporary Order to Preserve Property. Under the circumstances described in section (b) of this Rule, or in lieu of the immediate issuance of an order of possession under any circumstances described in section (d) of this Rule, the court may, in addition to the issuance of the order to show cause, issue such temporary orders, directed to the defendant, prohibiting or requiring such acts with respect to the property as may appear to be necessary for the preservation of the rights of the parties and the status of the property.

(g) Order for Possession after Hearing; Bond; Directed to Sheriff. Upon the hearing on the order to show cause, which hearing shall be held as a matter of course by the court, the court shall consider the showing made by the parties appearing, and shall make a preliminary determination of which party, with reasonable probability, is entitled to possession, use, and disposition of the property pending final adjudication of the claims of the parties. If the court determines that the action is one in which a pre-judgment order of possession should issue, it shall direct the issuance of such order and may require a bond in such amount and with such surety as the court may determine to protect the rights of the parties. Failure of the defendant to be present or represented at the hearing on the order to show cause shall not constitute a default in the main action. The order of possession shall be directed to the sheriff within whose jurisdiction the property is located.

(h) Contents of Possession Order. The order of possession shall describe the specific property to be seized, and shall specify the location or locations where there is probable cause to believe the property or some part thereof will be found. It shall direct the sheriff to seize the same as it is found, and to retain it in his custody. There shall be attached to such order a copy of the written undertaking filed by the plaintiff, and such order shall inform the defendant that he has the right to except to the sureties or to the amount of the bond upon the undertaking or to file a written undertaking for the redelivery of such property as provided in section (j).

Upon probable cause shown by further affidavit or declaration by the plaintiff or someone in his behalf, filed with the court, an order of possession may be endorsed by the court, without further notice, to direct the sheriff to search for the property at another specified location or locations and to seize the same if found.

The sheriff shall forthwith take the property if it be in the possession of the defendant or his agent, and retain it in his custody; except that when the personal property is then occupied as a dwelling [such as but not limited to a mobile home], the sheriff shall take constructive possession of the property and shall remove its occupants and take the property into his actual custody at the expiration of 10 days after the issuance of the order of possession, or at such earlier time as the property shall have been vacated.

(i) Sheriff May Break Building; When. If the property or any part thereof is in a building or enclosure, the sheriff shall demand its delivery, announcing his identity, purpose, and the authority under which he acts. If it is not voluntarily delivered, he shall cause the building or enclosure to be broken open in such manner as he reasonably believes will cause the least damage to the building or enclosure, and take the property into his possession. He may call upon the power of the county to aid and protect him, but if he reasonably believes that entry and seizure of the property will involve a substantial risk of death or serious bodily harm to any person, he shall refrain from seizing the property, and shall forthwith make a return before the court from which the order issued, setting forth the reasons for his belief that such risk exists. The court may make such orders and decrees as may be appropriate.

The sheriff shall, without delay, serve upon the defendant a copy of the order of possession and written undertaking by delivering the same to him personally, if he can be found or to his agent from whose possession the property is taken; or, if neither can be found, by leaving them at the usual place of abode of either with some person of suitable age and discretion; or if neither has any known place of abode, by mailing them to the last known address of either.

(j) When Returned to Defendant; Bond. At any time prior to the hearing on the order to show cause, or before the delivery of the property to the plaintiff, the defendant may require the return thereof upon filing with the court a written undertaking, in an amount set by the court in its discretion not to exceed double the value of the property and executed by the defendant and such surety as the court may direct for the delivery of the property to the plaintiff, if such delivery be ordered, and for the payment to the plaintiff of such sum as may for any cause be recovered against the defendant. At the time of filing such undertaking, the defendant shall serve upon the plaintiff or his attorney, in the manner provided by Rule 5, C.R.C.P., a notice of filing of such undertaking, to which a copy of such undertaking shall be attached, and shall cause proof of service thereof to be filed with the court. If such undertaking be filed prior to hearing on the order to show cause, proceedings thereunder shall terminate, unless exception is taken to the amount of the bond or the sufficiency of the surety. If, at the time of filing of such undertaking, the property shall be in the custody of the sheriff, such property shall be redelivered to the defendant 7 days after service of notice of filing such undertaking upon the plaintiff or his attorney.

(k) Exception to Sureties. Either party may, within two business days after service of an undertaking or notice of filing and undertaking under the provisions of this Rule, give written notice to the court and the other party that he excepts to the sufficiency of the surety or the amount of the bond. If he fails to do so, he is deemed to have waived all objections to them. When a party excepts the court shall hold a hearing to determine the sufficiency of the bond or surety. If the property be in the custody of the sheriff, he shall retain custody thereof until the hearing is completed or waived. If the excepting party prevails at the hearing, the sheriff shall proceed as if no such undertaking had been filed. If the excepting party does not prevail at the hearing, or the exception is waived, he shall deliver the property to the party filing such undertaking.

(l) Duty of Sheriff in Holding Goods. When the sheriff has taken property as provided in this Rule, he shall keep it in a secure place and deliver it to the party entitled thereto, upon receiving his fees for taking and his necessary expenses for keeping the same, after expiration of the time for filing of an undertaking for redelivery and for exception to the sufficiency of the bond, unless the court shall by order stay such delivery.

(m) Claim by Third Person. If the property taken is claimed by any other person than the defendant or plaintiff, such person may intervene under the provisions of Rule 24, C.R.C.P., and in the event of a judgment in his favor, he may also recover such damages as he may have suffered by reason of any wrongful detention of the property.

(n) Return; Papers by Sheriff. The sheriff shall return the order of possession and undertakings and affidavits with his proceedings thereon, to the court in which the action is pending, within 21 days after taking the property mentioned therein.

(o) Precedence on Docket. In all proceedings brought to recover the possession of personal property, all courts, in which such actions are pending, shall, upon request of any party thereto, give such actions precedence over all other civil actions, except actions to which special precedence is otherwise given by law, in the matter of the setting of the same for hearing or trial, and in hearing or trial thereof, to the end that all such actions shall be quickly heard and determined.

(p) Judgment. In an action to recover the possession of personal property, judgment for the plaintiff may be for the possession or the value thereof in case a delivery cannot be had, and damages for the detention. If the property has been delivered to the plaintiff, and the defendant claims a return thereof, judgment for the defendant may be for a return of the property, or the value thereof in case a return cannot be had, and damages for taking and withholding the same. The provisions of Rule 13, C.R.C.P., shall apply to replevin actions.

ANNOTATION

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Law reviews. For article, ''Seizure of Person or Property: Rules 101-104'', see 23 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 603 (1951).

Annotator's note. Since this rule is similar to §§ 85 through 96 and § 247 of the former Code of Civil Procedure, which was supplanted by the Rules of Civil Procedure in 1941, relevant cases construing those sections have been included in the annotations to this rule.

At common law replevin lay where there was an unlawful taking, and detinue where there was an unlawful detention. Denver Onyx & Marble Mfg. Co. v. Reynolds, 72 F. 464 (8th Cir. 1896).

This rule superseded the common-law action. The remedy provided by this rule supersedes the common-law action of replevin, whether in the cepit or in the detinet, and all the ancient learning relating to these distinctions became obsolete upon the adoption of the rule. Denver Onyx & Marble Mfg. Co. v. Reynolds, 72 F. 464 (8th Cir. 1896).

Purpose of prejudgment hearing. This rule clearly contemplates that the conflicting legal and equitable claims of the parties will be fully adjudicated in a trial on the merits. The prejudgment hearing serves the far narrower purpose of ensuring that a replevin defendant's constitutionally guaranteed property rights will not be jeopardized by unduly summary claim and delivery proceedings. Jack Kent Cadillac, Inc. v. District Court, 198 Colo. 403, 601 P.2d 626 (1979); Metro Nat. Bank v. District Court, 676 P.2d 19 (Colo. 1984).

Although a district court sits as a court of general jurisdiction in an action to replevy personal property, its powers are more limited where, in a prejudgment hearing on an order to show cause, the only issue to be decided is ''which party, with reasonable probability, is entitled to possession, use, and disposition of the property pending final adjudication of the claims of the parties''. Jack Kent Cadillac, Inc. v. District Court, 198 Colo. 403, 601 P.2d 626 (1979).

Order to show cause required for jurisdiction of possessory rights in property. A court conducting a hearing under this rule lacks jurisdiction unilaterally to affect possessory rights in any property not brought within its purview by a duly issued order to show cause. Jack Kent

The only issue to be determined in an action in replevin is ownership and right of possession. Amarillo Auto Auction, Inc. v. Hutchinson, 135 Colo. 320, 310 P.2d 715 (1957).

To maintain action, plaintiff's right to the possession of the property must be exclusive. Hoeffer v. Agee, 9 Colo. App. 189, 47 P. 973 (1897).

The vendee of an automobile under a conditional sales contract executed and valid in another state who has feloniously been deprived of possession of said automobile may recover the same from an innocent Colorado purchaser for value. Avis Rent-A-Car Sys. v. Woelfel, 155 Colo. 207, 393 P.2d 551 (1964).

Replevin for an undivided interest in property cannot be maintained. Hoeffer v. Agee, 9 Colo. App. 189, 47 P. 973 (1897).

Defendant must have actual or constructive possession. Appellant sought to recover from appellee-defendant the physical possession of a stock certificate upon allegation that he had purchased such shares from appellee, that such certificate had been delivered to him, that appellee had later surreptitiously regained possession and had continued to withhold possession of the stock notwithstanding demand. The undisputed evidence indicated that appellee had neither actual nor constructive possession of the subject stock certificate at the time the action was commenced, a prerequisite in an action in the nature of replevin. Brennan v. Sellers, 357 F.2d 150 (10th Cir.), cert. denied, 385 U.S. 828, 87 S. Ct. 61, 17 L. Ed. 2d 64, reh'g denied, 385 U.S. 984, 87 S. Ct. 531, 17 L. Ed. 2d 445 (1966).

Plaintiff may recover damages for taking of property or judgment for its value. Under this rule the action for the recovery of personal property lies, by one entitled to the possession, against one wrongfully holding the possession, whether the possession was acquired in good or bad faith. In the action, the plaintiff may, if he maintained his suit, recover damages for the taking or detention of the property, and, if the property cannot be returned, judgment for its value. Denver Onyx & Marble Mfg. Co. v. Reynolds, 72 F. 464 (8th Cir. 1896); Roblek v. Horst, 147 Colo. 55, 362 P.2d 869 (1961).

Adjustment of equities not authorized by jurisdiction over property and parties. Jurisdiction over the parties and the subject matter does not authorize the trial court to enter whatever remedial orders it deems necessary to adjust the equities between the parties. Jack Kent Cadillac, Inc. v. District Court, 198 Colo. 403, 601 P.2d 626 (1979).

Since court had jurisdiction over the subject matter and over the person in a replevin action, and the person did not avail himself of opportunity to contest replevin action in that court but instead filed alternative actions in other courts and such other courts refused to disturb the replevin order, such person waived his right to contest the validity of the order in the replevin action in a subsequent action. Flickinger v. Ninth District Prod. Credit, 824 P.2d 19 (Colo. App. 1991).

Restrictions of Governmental Immunity Act apply to replevin action for car seized by police. Denver v. Desert Truck Sales, Inc., 837 P.2d 759 (Colo. 1992).

II. PLEADING: COMPLAINT AND AFFIDAVIT.

Commencement of action. No writ of replevin may be issued under this rule until an action in claim and delivery is commenced by the filing of a complaint which alleges the right of the plaintiff to the possession of personal property, and claims the delivery thereof. Gentry v. United States, 101 F. 51 (8th Cir. 1900).

Facts alleged in counterclaim and demand for return of all certificates held by plaintiff bank constitute a claim for replevin. Together with a ''verified complaint for replevin'' incorporating the answer, counterclaim, cross-claim, and third-party complaint, and sworn to by the defendant, the requirements of section (e) of this rule are met. Metro Nat. Bank v. District Court, 676 P.2d 19 (Colo. 1984).

The complaint must allege ownership. In an action to recover possession of personal property, the complaint must allege ownership, either general or special, otherwise the complaint will be bad on demurrer. Baker v. Cordwell, 6 Colo. 199 (1882); Reavis v. Stockel, 120 Colo. 82, 208 P.2d 94 (1949).

Plaintiff has the burden of affirmatively establishing his own title and right of immediate possession to the property in question. Bill Dreiling Motor Co. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins., 28 Colo. App. 318, 472 P.2d 153 (1970).

Complaint may be amended to conform to proof concerning ownership of property. In an action in replevin, in the disclosed circumstances, it is held that there was no abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court in permitting the plaintiff to amend its complaint to conform to the proof concerning ownership of certain of the property involved. Thomas v. First Nat'l Bank, 97 Colo. 474, 51 P.2d 589 (1935).

Defective affidavit. If affidavit is defective, the appellant is not in a condition to avail himself of any defects. Conly v. Friedman, 6 Colo. App. 160, 40 P. 348 (1895).

Allegations of value are binding on plaintiff. In a replevin action, allegations of the value of the property in the affidavit and sworn complaint are binding on plaintiffs. Startzell v. Bowers, 88 Colo. 135, 292 P. 601 (1930).

Where the seizure was wrongful, demand prior to the commencement of suit is unnecessary. Bartels v. Arms, 3 Colo. 72 (1876); Smith v. Jensen, 13 Colo. 213, 22 P. 434 (1889); Farncomb v. Stern, 18 Colo. 279, 32 P. 612 (1893).

Demand is only required when it is necessary to terminate the defendants' right of possession or to confer that right on the plaintiff. Lamping v. Keenan, 9 Colo. 390, 12 P. 434 (1884).

The only reason why demand is necessary in any case, is to give the defendant an opportunity to surrender without being put to costs; and while this is eminently proper, the object of the rule is fully accomplished, and the plaintiff sufficiently punished for his neglect by judgment against him for costs, without being compelled to surrender his goods. Denver Live Stock Comm'n Co. v. Parks, 41 Colo. 164, 91 P. 1110 (1907).

No proof of demand is necessary where the defendant claims ownership and right of possession. Hennessey v. Barnett, 12 Colo. App. 254, 55 P. 197 (1898); Denver Live Stock Comm'n Co. v. Parks, 41 Colo. 164, 91 P. 1110 (1907); Scott v. Bohe, 81 Colo. 454, 256 P. 315 (1927).

Nor where it is clear that it would have been unavailing. Scott v. Bohe, 81 Colo. 454, 256 P. 315 (1927).

A demand made after the beginning of the action but prior to the execution of the writ is sufficient. Denver Live Stock Comm'n Co. v. Parks, 41 Colo. 164, 91 P. 1110 (1907).

In replevin, fraud need not be specially pleaded. Sopris v. Truax, 1 Colo. 89 (1868).

Upon a general denial a defendant may show absolute title in himself or a third party but not a special property. Mason Tire Sales Co. v. Mason Tire & Rubber Co., 73 Colo. 42, 213 P. 117 (1923).

A party from whom personal property has been taken pursuant to a replevin order is entitled, upon voluntary dismissal of the action by the opposing party, to return of the property or its value unless the opposing party can establish its right to retain possession of the property. The burden of establishing the right to the property should remain on the party who initially obtained the replevin order. Where no trial is held, a plaintiff should not be permitted simply to retain the property without making a showing to establish its right to possession and without affording the defendant an opportunity to demonstrate that the property was wrongfully taken. Prefer v. PharmNetRx, LLC, 18 P.3d 844 (Colo. App. 2000).

III. BOND.

A defendant in a replevin action can recover from the surety, on the latter's bond, damages he has incurred as a result of the seizing of the property in his possession, without the requirement of showing an original judgment in his favor for the return of the property or in the alternative for damages in the event return is not possible. Denver Truck Exch., Inc. v. Globe Indem. Co., 162 Colo. 398, 426 P.2d 772 (1967).

The property must be returned in like good order and condition as when replevied. Trindle v. Register Printing & Publ'g Co., 58 Colo. 81, 143 P. 282 (1914).

A verdict for the plaintiff fixing the total value of the goods, not valuing any item separately, is conclusive upon the defendant, and his surety in the redelivery bond. Trindle v. Register Printing & Publ'g Co., 58 Colo. 81, 143 P. 282 (1914).

Bond covers only claims of possession and loss thereof. The language in section (e), ''any sum that may from any cause be recovered'', viewed in context, does not apply to claims unrelated to possession or the loss of the property at issue. White v. Jackson, 41 Colo. App. 433, 586 P.2d 243 (1978).

A defendant in a replevin action under this rule is entitled to recover from the surety whatever damages he has incurred as a result of the seizing of property in his possession; however, where he has lost his lien and the owner becomes entitled to possession, he suffers no damages as a result of the replevin. White v. Jackson, 41 Colo. App. 433, 586 P.2d 243 (1978).

IV. JUDGMENT.

Judgment to be for return of entire property when in the hands of the other party. Horn v. Citizens Sav. & Com. Bank, 8 Colo. App. 535, 46 P. 838 (1896); Jones v. Messenger, 40 Colo. 37, 90 P. 64 (1907); Duffy v. Wilson, 44 Colo. 340, 98 P. 826 (1908).

If possession cannot be had, judgment is for full value of property. Tucker v. Parks, 7 Colo. 62, 1 P. 427 (1883); Horn v. Citizens Sav. & Com. Bank, 8 Colo. App. 535, 46 P. 838 (1896); Jones v. Messenger, 40 Colo. 37, 90 P. 64 (1907); Duffy v. Wilson, 44 Colo. 340, 98 P. 826 (1908).

It is unimportant that the thing to be recovered cannot be identified. It is suggested that replevin will not lie for the sheep, because they cannot be identified. That is unimportant under this rule. If replevin will not lie, trover will, and under this rule, action for possession, with the alternative recovery of the property or the value thereof in such a case as this, is equivalent practically to the two together. The plaintiff states the ultimate facts and has such judgment as they justify. If the chattels cannot be delivered, their value must be paid, and the judgments in that respect are right. To hold otherwise would be to revert to the common-law forms of action now happily abolished. Clay, Robinson & Co. v. Martinez, 74 Colo. 10, 218 P. 903 (1923).

Defendant cannot complain of a judgment for the return of the property only. A judgment for the plaintiff, in an action of replevin should be in the alternative for the possession of the property, or the value thereof in case a delivery cannot be had; but, since this is for the protection of the plaintiff, the defendant cannot complain of a judgment for the return of the property only. Copeland v. Kilpatrick, 38 Colo. 208, 88 P. 472 (1906).

A judgment must be for the possession of the entire property to be operative. Jones v. Messenger, 40 Colo. 37, 90 P. 64 (1907); Duffy v. Wilson, 44 Colo. 340, 98 P. 826 (1908).

Value of property is basis for judgment. Only on evidence as to the value of property taken in replevin is there basis for judgment. Viles v. Jackson, 105 Colo. 68, 94 P.2d 1085 (1939).

Rule is satisfied by a finding of the total aggregate value of all the chattels wrongfully withheld. Stevenson v. Lord, 15 Colo. 131, 25 P. 313 (1890); Copeland v. Kilpatrick, 38 Colo. 208, 88 P. 472 (1906).

There is no need that the judgment should declare the separate value of each item of the recovery. Copeland v. Kilpatrick, 38 Colo. 208, 88 P. 472 (1906); Duffy v. Wilson, 44 Colo. 340, 98 P. 826 (1908).

A judgment in the alternative is not required where it would be useless. Where the goods in question have been consumed by defendant and therefore cannot possibly be delivered, it is proper to accept a finding of guilty, assessing the value. To require an alternative judgment would be a useless formality. Barnard v. Corlett, 62 Colo. 226, 161 P. 156 (1916); Denver Truck Exch., Inc. v. Globe Indem. Co., 162 Colo. 398, 426 P.2d 772 (1967).

Proof of facts under allegations determines relief. In a proper case the court may award a money judgment, without its being in the alternative, even though technically it was designated an action in replevin. Melnick v. Bowman, 102 Colo. 384, 79 P.2d 368 (1938).

Return and damages must be claimed in the answer. To authorize a judgment in a replevin suit, for the return of the property to the defendant or for its value, or for damage for its detention, the return and the damages must be claimed in the answer. And where the answer did not claim a return of the property or damage for its detention a judgment for its return and for damages for its detention was unwarranted and must be regarded as void. Gallup v. Wortmann, 11 Colo. App. 308, 53 P. 247 (1898).

Measure of damages. When neither fraud, malice, or wilful wrong in the taking or detention of the goods is alleged, the measure of damages is the value of the goods at the time of the taking or illegal detention. Barnard v. Corlett, 62 Colo. 226, 161 P. 156 (1916).

Damages for unlawful taking and detention. A party to a replevin action who is ultimately adjudged to have the right to possession is also entitled to damages for the unlawful taking and detention of the chattel. Roblek v. Horst, 147 Colo. 55, 362 P.2d 869 (1961).

Damages cannot be defeated by mere misnomer or bad form. While defendant's demands (other than for return of the property) are denominated ''further answer'', ''cross complaint'', and ''separate and further cause of action'', all are in fact for damages for wrongful taking and detention, recoverable under this section. They are not to be defeated by mere misnomer or bad form. Ellison v. Young, 71 Colo. 385, 206 P. 802 (1922).

Part of judgment awarding damages for indebtedness and attorney fees held void. In an action in replevin to secure possession of mortgaged property because of default in payment of the secured indebtedness, a judgment, insofar as it awards the property to plaintiff and for costs, may be valid, but void as to that part purporting to award damages for the indebtedness and for attorney fees. French v. Commercial Credit Co., 99 Colo. 447, 64 P.2d 127 (1936).

Judgment must be limited to ascertainment of whether there was any indebtedness. In an action in replevin by the holder of a chattel mortgage to obtain possession of the mortgaged property because the debtor was in default in payment of the secured note, the court has no jurisdiction to try the issue of indebtedness except to the point of ascertaining whether there was any indebtedness at all, and its judgment must be so limited. French v. Commercial Credit Co., 99 Colo. 447, 64 P.2d 127 (1936).

The amount of the judgment recovered by defendant is conclusive in a subsequent suit upon the replevin bond. Cantril v. Babcock, 11 Colo. 143, 17 P. 296 (1887); Denver Truck Exch., Inc. v. Globe Indem. Co., 162 Colo. 398, 426 P.2d 772 (1967).

Unauthorized use by bailee gives bailor the right of immediate possession. A use of the chattel of the bailee in a manner unauthorized by the contract of bailment gives the bailor the right of immediate possession, and he may maintain trover or replevin. Clay, Robinson & Co. v. Martinez, 74 Colo. 10, 218 P. 903 (1923).

Real Estate

CHAPTER 14

REAL ESTATE

Rule 105. Actions Concerning Real Estate

(a) Complete Adjudication of Rights. An action may be brought for the purpose of obtaining a complete adjudication of the rights of all parties thereto, with respect to any real property and for damages, if any, for the withholding of possession. The court in its decree shall grant full and adequate relief so as to completely determine the controversy and enforce the rights of the parties. The court may at any time after the entry of the decree make such additional orders as may be required in aid of such decree.

(b) Record Interest; Actual Possession Requires Occupant Be Party. No person claiming any interest under or through a person named as a defendant need be made a party unless his interest is shown of record in the office of the recorder of the county where the real property is situated, and the decree shall be as conclusive against him as if he had been made a party; provided, however, if such action be for the recovery of actual possession of the property, the party in actual possession shall be made a party.

(c) Disclaimer Saves Costs. If any defendant in such action disclaims in his answer any interest in the property or allows judgment to be taken against him without answer, the plaintiff shall not recover costs against him, unless the court shall otherwise direct, provided that this section shall not apply to a defendant primarily liable on any indebtedness sought to be foreclosed or established as a lien.

(d) Execution of Quitclaim Deed Saves Costs. If a party, 21 days or more before bringing an action for obtaining an adjudication of the rights of another person with respect to any real property, shall request of such person the execution of a quitclaim deed to such property and shall also tender to such person $20.00 to cover the expense of the execution and delivery of a deed and if such person shall refuse or neglect to execute and deliver such deed, the filing by such person of a disclaimer shall not avoid the imposition upon such person of the costs in the action afterwards brought.

(e) Set-off for Improvements. Where a party or those under whom he claims, holding under color of title adversely to the claims of another party, shall in good faith have made permanent improvements upon real property (other than mining property) the value of such improvements shall be allowed as a set-off or as a counterclaim in favor of such party, in the event that judgment is entered against such party for possession or for damages for withholding of possession.

(f) Lis Pendens.

(1) Filing and Notice. A notice of lis pendens may be recorded as provided by statute.

(2) Determination of Effect on Real Property. Any interested person may petition the court in the action identified in the notice of lis pendens for a determination that a judgment on the issues raised by the pleadings in the pending action will not affect all, or a designated part, of the real property described in the notice of lis pendens, or a specifically described interest therein. After a hearing on such petition, the court shall make findings of fact and enter an order setting forth the description of the property as contained in the recorded notice of lis pendens and the description of the portion thereof or the interest therein, if any, the title to which will not be affected by judgment on the issues then pending in the action. Such order shall be a final judgment as to the matters set forth therein and if the order includes the determination required by Rule 54(b) as to its finality apart from remaining issues, it shall be appealable only as a separate judgment of that date.

(3) Disclaimer. Nothing in this Rule 105(f) shall be construed so as to preclude any party litigant from disclaiming an interest in all or any part of the real property affected by such notice of lis pendens, by filing with the court an instrument so indicating, containing a reference to the notice of lis pendens by its recording data sufficient to locate it in the records of the clerk and recorder. The filing of such instrument with the court then having jurisdiction shall bar any further claims of said party to such real property in said action.

(4) Repealed, effective April 1, 1993.

(g) Description of Real Property. In any proceeding for the recovery of real property or an interest therein, such property shall be designated by legal description.

COMMITTEE COMMENT

The previous provisions of Rule 105(f)(1) and (4) have been superseded by the passage of House Bill 92-1038, now C.R.S. § 38-35-110 (1992). The statute sets out the circumstances under which a lis pendens may be recorded, states the legal effect of the recording as a matter of substantive law, and provides for the release of the effect of a lis pendens in certain circumstances. The statute clarifies certain issues that had arisen in interpreting the former rule. Subsections (2) and (3) have been retained, as they provide procedures for the removal of the effect of a lis pendens during the course of litigation, an area of concern which is not addressed by the statute, and which is strictly procedural in nature.

Purpose of this rule is to provide for a complete adjudication of the rights of all parties so that the controversy may be ended. Maitland v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 701 P.2d 617 (Colo. App. 1984).

It is clear from the language of this rule that a C.R.C.P. 105 proceeding should completely adjudicate the rights of all parties to the action claiming interests in the property. Even if a counterclaim is not pled, or an issue is not raised in the pleadings but is apparent from the evidence, the court should reach the issue to give full relief. Keith v. Kinney, 961 P.2d 516 (Colo. App. 1997).

This rule does not change the substantive law, which is firmly established in all actions regarding possession of real property. Fastenau

v. Engel, 129 Colo. 440, 270 P.2d 1019 (1954); Martini v. Smith, 42 P.3d 629 (Colo. 2002).

This rule was not intended to permit courts to quiet title in defaulting defendants. Osborne v. Holford, 40 Colo. App. 365, 575 P.2d 866 (1978).

Substance and not form determines the nature of an action relating to real estate, since the adoption of section (a). Vogt v. Hansen, 123 Colo. 105, 225 P.2d 1040 (1950).

Whether or not an action was one for possession of land depends on the fact of possession, and not on the form of the action. Vogt v. Hansen, 123 Colo. 105, 225 P.2d 1040 (1950).

Plaintiffs must rely on the strength of their own title in suits to quiet title, and not on the weakness or supposed weakness of their adversaries. Fastenau v. Engel, 129 Colo. 440, 270 P.2d 1019 (1954); Morrissey v. Achziger, 147 Colo. 510, 364 P.2d 187 (1961); Sch. Dist. No. Six v. Russell, 156 Colo. 75, 396 P.2d 929 (1964).

A plaintiff, in an action to quiet title to lands, must rely on the strength of his own title thereto; and when it affirmatively appears that such plaintiff's rights have terminated, he is in no position to question the legality of the title claimed by others. Sch. Dist. No. Six v. Russell, 156 Colo. 75, 396 P.2d 929 (1964).

Plaintiff in an action to quiet title must show title in himself. Buell v. Redding Miller, Inc., 163 Colo. 286, 430 P.2d 471 (1967).

No necessity for either party to show possession. In an action brought for the purpose of obtaining a complete adjudication of the rights of all parties thereto with respect to real property it is not necessary for the plaintiff to allege and prove that he had possession of the real estate in question. Possession of the property in controversy in either party is wholly immaterial under this rule. Siler v. Inv. Sec. Co., 125 Colo. 438, 244 P.2d 877 (1952).

In actions brought under this rule, possession is not essential to maintain or defend such an action. An adjudication of the rights of the parties, whether of ownership or possession, may be made by the court. Lamberson v. Thomas, 146 Colo. 539, 362 P.2d 180 (1961).

Plaintiff does not have to prove possession of the property involved in order to prevail. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Blanning, 29 Colo. App. 61, 479 P.2d 404 (1970).

When party in possession must be joined. Section (b) of this rule requires that a party in possession must be joined if the plaintiff seeks to recover actual possession of the subject property. Ginsberg v. Stanley Aviation Corp., 193 Colo. 454, 568 P.2d 35 (1977).

If the subject property is a public road that has been used as such, a disclaimer filed under the provisions of this rule by the county in control of the road cannot operate to vacate the road. Rather, the county must follow the mandates of the vacation statute. Martini v. Smith, 42 P.3d 629 (Colo. 2002).

A plaintiff not in possession must show superior title. Under this rule a plaintiff who is not in possession of real estate cannot challenge the title of a defendant in possession thereof without establishing in himself a title superior to that under which defendant occupies the land. Likewise, a defendant in an action to quiet title may effectually resist a decree against himself by showing simply that the plaintiff is without title, since if the plaintiff has no title he cannot complain that someone else, also without title, asserts an interest in the land. Fastenau v. Engel, 129 Colo. 440, 270 P.2d 1019 (1954).

In a case where defendant is in possession, plaintiff must rely on the strength of his own title, not upon the weakness of defendant's title in order to recover. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Blanning, 29 Colo. App. 61, 479 P.2d 404 (1970).

Rights of parties considered in filing of complaint. In an action to quiet title the pertinent date fixing the rights of the parties is the date upon which the complaint is filed. No muniment of title acquired thereafter is admissible in evidence and a plaintiff cannot bolster a claim to title by acquisition of title papers subsequent to the institution of an action, unless, by supplemental pleadings, issues are framed based upon the subsequently acquired instrument. Fastenau v. Engel, 129 Colo. 440, 270 P.2d 1019 (1954).

Ejectment cannot be supported by a title acquired after action commenced nor can a defective title be aided by conveyances made pending suit. Fastenau v. Engel, 129 Colo. 440, 270 P.2d 1019 (1954).

Burden of proof. Monetary reparation cannot be based upon mere speculation, but on the other hand such need not be proven with mathematical certainty. It is sufficient if the plaintiff establishes by a preponderance of the evidence that he has in fact suffered damage or that his rights have been infringed and that his evidence in this regard provides a reasonable basis for a computation of the damage so sustained. Difficulty in proof of damages does not in and of itself destroy the right of recovery. Riggs v. McMurtry, 157 Colo. 33, 400 P.2d 916 (1965).

Plaintiff's burden of proof was to establish title to the property in question by the presentation of competent evidence. The evidence presented by plaintiff was primarily in the form of a stipulated set of facts establishing the chain of title. Under these circumstances, the trial court correctly concluded that plaintiff had established a prima facie case establishing his right to ownership of the property in question. Plaintiff was entitled to relief under this section, unless defendant could come forward with evidence to rebut plaintiff's title to the property.

Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Blanning, 29 Colo. App. 61, 479 P.2d 404 (1970).

Courts will not invoke equitable defenses to destroy legal rights where statutes of limitations are applicable. Jacobs v. Perry, 135 Colo. 550, 313 P.2d 1008 (1957).

The defense of laches is not available in a quiet title action. Jacobs v. Perry, 135 Colo. 550, 313 P.2d 1008 (1957).

Where defendant acquired a defective treasurer's deed in 1956 to the property in question, but never made use of, nor improved the property in any manner during the intervening period of time, nor expended any sums of money on it, delay, if any, has not worked to defendant's detriment in any manner, and hence dependant is not in a position to complain of delay in the bringing of this action. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Blanning, 29 Colo. App. 61, 479 P.2d 404 (1970).

Effect of failure to raise issue of damages in quiet title action. Under this rule providing for a complete adjudication of rights of the parties litigant, together with damages, if any, it was essential that any damage claims be asserted in the quiet title action and upon failure to do so, damages could not be an issue in a condemnation action. Dillinger v. North Sterling Irrigation Dist., 135 Colo. 95, 308 P.2d 606 (1957).

When evidence should be submitted to jury. In an action for the adjudication of the right to possession of real estate and for damages for alleged wrongful trespass brought under this rule, it was held that, where there are a number of fact issues and the evidence is in conflict, the evidence should be submitted to the jury for determination. Klipp v. Grusing, 119 Colo. 111, 200 P.2d 917 (1948).

Finding supported by evidence upheld on review. The controverted issue as to the nature of gypsiferous deposits was an issue of fact and there being competent evidence to support the trial court's finding that this is a placer deposit, its determination of the matter must be upheld on review. Gypsum Aggregates Corp. v. Lionelle, 170 Colo. 282, 460 P.2d 780 (1969).

Applied in Ginsberg v. Stanley Aviation Corp., 37 Colo. App. 240, 551 P.2d 1086 (1975); Mohler v. Buena Vista Bank & Trust Co., 42 Colo. App. 4, 588 P.2d 894 (1978); Atchison, T & S.F. Ry. v. North Colo. Springs Land & Imp. Co., 659 P.2d 702 (Colo. App. 1982).

II. SCOPE OF RELIEF.

The manifest intent of section (a) of this rule is to provide "a complete adjudication of the rights of all parties". Hopkins v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 193 Colo. 230, 564 P.2d 415 (1977).

This rule provides for a complete adjudication of all the rights of the parties in interest. Merth v. Hobart, 129 Colo. 546, 272 P.2d 273 (1954).

This rule has reference to a judgment finally determining the rights of all parties. Broadway Roofing & Supply, Inc. v. District Court, 140 Colo. 154, 342 P.2d 1022 (1959).

Where neither party has satisfactorily established title, equity and this rule direct that a complete adjudication of right be made. Hanson v. Dilley, 160 Colo. 371, 418 P.2d 38 (1966).

Equitable relief for improvements. Where the powers of the court were invoked to settle a boundary dispute and the rights of the parties with respect to improvements mistakenly built upon the land, there being no bad faith on the part of any of the parties, it was the duty of the court to grant such equitable relief as the situation required. Pull v. Barnes, 142 Colo. 272, 350 P.2d 828 (1960).

Where an adjoining owner had in good faith erected improvements on adjoining land, believing it to be his own, he should be granted the right to remove same if feasible and if not, then given an equitable lien on the property for the value thereof. Pull v. Barnes, 142 Colo. 272, 350 P.2d 828 (1960).

Courts will not enforce racial restrictive covenants. The trial court's refusal to recognize the vested interest in defendant and to enforce forfeiture of the property for failure to comply with a racial restrictive covenant did not deprive defendant of property without just compensation and without due process of law. Courts will not enforce such covenants and an action for damages will not lie for violations thereof. Capitol Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Smith, 136 Colo. 265, 316 P.2d 252 (1957).

Removal of restrictive covenants. Sitting as a court of equity the trial court has the power to remove or cancel restrictive covenants as clouds on the title. Such power may be exercised when it is shown that the restrictive covenants no longer serve the purpose for which they were imposed and are no longer beneficial to those claiming under them. Zavislak v. Shipman, 147 Colo. 184, 362 P.2d 1053 (1961); Cole v. Colo. Springs Co., 152 Colo. 162, 381 P.2d 13 (1963).

Documents that reasonably designate land burdened by easements were not, as a matter of law, invalid because of vagueness. If, on remand, the easements are not determined to be otherwise unenforceable or invalid, their location will need to be fixed by the agreement of the parties or, if necessary, by the court. Stevens v. Mannix, 77 P.3d 931 (Colo. App. 2003).

Due-on-sale clause is not unreasonable restraint on alienation and does not require a case-by-case factual determination by trial courts whenever an effort is made to enforce a due-on-sale clause. Bakker v. Empire Sav.,

Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 634 P.2d 1021 (Colo. App. 1981).

Enforcement of restrictions in lease. The law gives the lessor the right to impose restrictions in the lease on the right to assign or sublet the leased premises, and these restrictions may be enforced by forfeiture of the lease and reentry. Union Oil Co. v. Lindauer, 131 Colo. 138, 280 P.2d 444 (1955).

An action to terminate a lease of real property may be instituted under this rule. Union Oil Co. v. Lindauer, 131 Colo. 138, 280 P.2d 444 (1955).

Determination of adverse possession. In making a determination of the boundaries of the property to which the defendants have acquired title by actual occupancy and adverse possession, and quieting defendants' title thereto, the trial court is to determine the land necessarily appurtenant to the cabin, taking into consideration the location and nature of the property, and the uses to which the property lends itself, the uses made of the property by the defendants, and the evidence of visible occupation of the property by the defendants which would give notice of their exclusive and adverse claim to the owner and the public. Anderson v. Cold Spring Tungsten, Inc., 170 Colo. 7, 458 P.2d 756 (1969).

The possession necessary to establish title to property by adverse possession need not always be personal possession by the adverse claimant but, in some circumstances, may be established by the conduct of another whom the adverse claimant has authorized. Holland v. Sutherland, 635 P.2d 926 (Colo. App. 1981).

Court cannot quiet title in favor of defaulting party even when evidence presented by an appearing party supports the defaulting party's title interests. Reser v. Aspen Park Ass'n, 727 P.2d 378 (Colo. App. 1986).

Legal title to disputed parcel in foreclosure of deed of trust action not acquired since the documents showed parties' intent to extinguish prior deed of trust on disputed parcel. Colo. Nat'l Bank-Exch. v. Hammar, 764 P.2d 359 (Colo. App. 1988).

Court may not amplify deed by construction of contract. A decree adjudging the defendants to be the owners of the lake, together with incidental rights thereto, is tantamount to a conveyance of the lake. It is an amplification of the deed by decree, something a court may not do under the guise of construing a contract. A court cannot rewrite a contract and thereby change its terms when it is plain, clear, and unambiguous. Alexander Dawson, Inc. v. Fling, 155 Colo. 599, 396 P.2d 599 (1964).

Effect of decree following old terminology for quieting title. In an action for reformation of a mortgage and a sheriff's deed issued on its foreclosure, so as to include a parcel inadvertently omitted, the decree in form followed the old terminology for quieting title, and it was urged that the court could not quiet title in the plaintiff, since he held no title thereto. However, it was held that this contention was without merit, since the action was specifically an action for reformation, setting out properly the basis of the claim and complying sufficiently with this rule, as an action to obtain an adjudication of the rights of the parties with respect to real estate. Stubbs v. Standard Life Ass'n, 125 Colo. 278, 242 P.2d 819 (1952).

Minor improvements deemed not "taking". The placing of a few minor improvements on property does not necessarily constitute a ''taking'' of possessions. Holland v. Sutherland, 635 P.2d 926 (Colo. App. 1981).

Vendor's action under this rule involved the same subject matter as vendor's prior boundary line action. Therefore the subsequent action was barred by res judicata. Agee Revocable Trust v. Mang, 919 P.2d 908 (Colo. App. 1996).

Because license for recreational use of property is not an interest in the land, trial court did not err in not defining the scope of the license in quiet title action brought under this rule. Bolinger v. Neal, 259 P.3d 1259 (Colo. App. 2010).

III. COSTS.

Partial disclaimer ineffective. In an action where defendant disclaimed as to part of the premises and claimed title and right of possession as to the remainder, in case of judgment for plaintiff, defendant is not entitled to have part of the cost assessed against plaintiff. Relender v. Riggs, 20 Colo. App. 423, 79 P. 328 (1905) (decided under § 276 of the former Code of Civil Procedure).

Defendant with claim for taxes may save costs. Where a defendant disclaims title and sets up its outlays on account of taxes legally assessed, which should have been paid by the plaintiff, and asks for judgment accordingly, the cost is properly a charge against the plaintiff under this section. Empire Ranch & Cattle Co. v. Lanning, 49 Colo. 458, 113 P. 491 (1911) (decided under § 276 of the former Code of Civil Procedure).

Attorneys' fees are proper measure of damages in action for slander of title. Sussex Real Estate Corp. v. Sbrocca, 634 P.2d 999 (Colo. App. 1981).

Defendant who successfully opposed plaintiff's motion to amend quiet title decree to delete portion pertaining to title interests of defaulting defendants was not entitled to award of attorney fees. Reser v. Aspen Park Ass'n, 727 P.2d 378 (Colo. App. 1986).

IV. LIS PENDENS.

Annotator's note. Since section (f) of this rule is similar to § 38 of the former Code of Civil Procedure, which was supplanted by the Rules of Civil Procedure in 1941, relevant cases construing that section have been included in the annotations to this rule.

Purpose of recording lis pendens notice is to give notice of the pendency of an action to persons who may subsequently acquire or seek to acquire rights in the property. King v. W.R. Hall Transp. & Storage Co., 641 P.2d 916 (Colo. 1982).

Expired lis pendens did not provide constructive notice of the terms of the judgment of underlying lawsuit. This rule is designed to give party to suit sufficient time to file notice of appeal or to record transcript of judgment in county where property is situated, but is not intended not to extend constructive notice period beyond thirty days. Maddalone v. Wilson, 764 P.2d 403 (Colo. App. 1988) (decided under rule in effect prior to 1981 amendment).

Lis pendens brings the subject matter of the litigation within the control of the court, and renders the parties powerless to place it beyond the power of the final judgment. Powell v. Nat'l Bank of Commerce, 19 Colo. App. 57, 74 P. 536 (1903).

Third parties cannot thereafter interfere with the property. In an action involving the title to real property, the effect of filing a lis pendens is to prevent interference by third parties with the property during the pendency of the action. Shuck v. Quackenbush, 75 Colo. 592, 227 P. 1041 (1924).

Purchaser from one litigant takes subject to rights of other parties in the action. The general rule as to lis pendens is that a person who acquires an interest in property involved in litigation, pendente lite and from a party litigant, takes subject to the rights of the other parties to the suit as finally adjudicated. Powell v. Nat'l Bank of Commerce, 19 Colo. App. 57, 74 P. 536 (1903).

Proper subject of lis pendens. Where a complaint clearly shows that an action relates to the possession, use, or enjoyment of real property, it is, therefore, the proper subject of the filing of a lis pendens. Clopine v. Kemper, 140 Colo. 360, 344 P.2d 451 (1959).

The filing of a notice of lis pendens is proper if claimant shows that the underlying action relates to a right to possession, use, or enjoyment of real property. Salstrom v. Starke, 670 P.2d 809 (Colo. App. 1983).

Notice of lis pendens is properly filed in any case in which affirmative relief is claimed affecting the title to real property. Central Allied Profit Sharing v. Bailey, 759 P.2d 849 (Colo. App. 1988).

The notice of lis pendens and not the pleadings gives constructive notice of pending litigation affecting interests in realty. Clopine v. Kemper, 140 Colo. 360, 344 P.2d 451 (1959), overruling Central Sav. Bank v. Smith, 43 Colo. 90, 95 P. 307 (1908).

Constructive notice as of day notice is recorded. A notice of lis pendens which refers to a complaint seeking divorce and a division of property, or seeking separate maintenance and an equitable interest in property, is constructive notice as of the day notice of lis pendens is recorded. Clopine v. Kemper, 140 Colo. 360, 344 P.2d 451 (1959).

No notice to grantee under prior recorded deed. Notice of the pendency of a suit involving title to land, filed after the recording of a conveyance, is no notice to the grantee in such conveyance. Dalander v. Howell, 22 Colo. App. 386, 124 P. 744 (1912).

"Affecting the title to real property" to be expansively interpreted. An expansive interpretation of the language ''affecting the title to real property'', as found in section (f), serves to further the policy that successful completion of suits involving rights in real property should not be thwarted by permitting transfers of such property before such suits are resolved. Cooper v. Flagstaff Realty, 634 P.2d 1013 (Colo. App. 1981).

A proceeding by a creditor to set aside a conveyance as fraudulent pursuant to § 38-10-117 clearly falls within actions affecting the title to real property. Crown Life Ins. Co. v. April Corp., 855 P.2d 12 (Colo. App. 1993).

Litigation of promise to grant deed of trust affects title. Insofar as a case involves litigation of a promise to grant a deed of trust applying to a specific parcel of real property, it is one ''affecting'' title to that real property within the meaning of section (f). Cooper v. Flagstaff Realty, 634 P.2d 1013 (Colo. App. 1981).

Description of property allowing proper indexing is sufficient. The lis pendens notice contains a brief description of the property affected thereby. It is sufficient in this respect if it enables proper indexing against the proper section and block numbers. Clopine v. Kemper, 140 Colo. 360, 344 P.2d 451 (1959).

Failing to file lis pendens notice does not relieve persons who have actual notice of the pendency of the action. Buckhorn Plaster Co. v. Consol. Plaster Co., 47 Colo. 516, 108 P. 27 (1910).

Lis pendens will give notice of wife's claim against property of husband. A wife has an equitable interest in the property of her husband. In an action for separate maintenance, praying that she be awarded specific property, lis pendens duly filed is notice of her claim against that property. Tinglof v. Askerlund, 96 Colo. 27, 39 P.2d 1039 (1934); Clopine v. Kemper, 140 Colo. 360, 344 P.2d 451 (1959).

Summary judgment as to certain defendants does not release lis pendens. Under C.R.C.P. 54(b), this rule, and § 38-40-110, a lis pendens remains in full force and effect until final judgment or until final disposition of a case, and where a summary judgment dismissing the action and releasing lis pendens as to certain defendants is granted, with no determination that there is no just reason for delay in disposing of the action as to such defendants, such summary judgment is not final for any purpose and the lis pendens is not released. Broadway Roofing & Supply, Inc. v. District Court, 140 Colo. 154, 342 P.2d 1022 (1959).

Release of property from notices of lis pendens held valid. Peoples Bank & Trust Co. v. Packard, 642 P.2d 57 (Colo. App. 1982).

Disclaimer of interest under section (f)(3) is an absolute bar to future claims to interests in property pursuant to the terms of the disclaimer, regardless of the precise legal theory or reasons that led to making the disclaimer, absent fraud or duress. Vail/Arrowhead, Inc. v. District Court, 954 P.2d 608 (Colo. 1998).

An action need not be brought under this rule as a precondition to making an effective disclaimer of interest under section (f)(3). Vail/Arrowhead, Inc. v. District Court, 954 P.2d 608 (Colo. 1998).

Adequate remedy to contest release of lis pendens on appeal. Meaker v. District Court, 134 Colo. 151, 300 P.2d 805 (1956).

Continuation of lis pendens pending appeal conditioned on posting bond held valid in Wellman v. Travelers Ins. Co., 689 P.2d 1151 (Colo. App. 1984).

Motion to quash lis pendens denied since Colorado law makes no provision for the cancellation of a notice of lis pendens by any court at any time, but instead provides by section (f) of this rule that the notice shall expire automatically. McGregor v. McGregor, 101 F. Supp. 848 (D. Colo. 1951), aff'd, 201 F.2d 528 (10th Cir. 1953).

Damages for filing in suit maliciously brought. If a suit is brought maliciously and without probable cause, and notice of lis pendens filed therein, liability would attach for such filing, for any damages occasioned thereby. Johnston v. Deidesheimer, 76 Colo. 559, 232 P. 1113 (1926); Westfield Dev. v. Rifle Inv. Assoc., 786 P.2d 1112 (Colo. 1990).

Proceeding to enforce adherence to criteria with respect to construction of improvements is one wherein affirmative relief is claimed affecting the title to real property within the meaning of this rule. Hammersley v. District Court, 199 Colo. 442, 610 P.2d 94 (1980).

Filing of notice of lis pendens provides only a qualified privilege with respect to a claim based on intentional interference with a contract and applies only when the one who interferes has, or honestly believes he has, a legally protected interest and, in good faith, asserts or threatens to assert such claim through proper means. Westfield Dev. v. Rifle Inv. Assoc., 786 P.2d 1112 (Colo. 1990).

Lis pendens expired with the dismissal of plaintiff's appeal. A subsequent settlement between the parties did not resurrect the lis pendens and thus was not binding on the interests of a third party which had filed an interest on the property during the pendency of the lis pendens. Perry Park Country Club, Inc. v. Manhattan Savings Bank, 813 P.2d 841 (Colo. App. 1991).

Neither filing a foreclosure action nor recording a lis pendens prevented the United States from releasing its own tax lien, thereby losing its priority over the owners' interests. U.S. v. Winchell, 793 F. Supp. 994 (D. Colo. 1992).

V. DESCRIPTION OF REAL PROPERTY.

A divorce action no longer has to describe the property affected. Clopine v. Kemper, 140 Colo. 360, 344 P.2d 451 (1959).

Judgment must fix boundary lines with certainty. A judgment decree involving the right to possession of real property must definitely and sufficiently describe it in order that an officer charged with the duty of executing a writ of possession may go upon the premises, and, without exercising any judicial functions whatever, ascertain with certainty the boundary lines fixed by the judgment. Calvin v. Fitzsimmons, 129 Colo. 420, 270 P.2d 748 (1954); Thompson v. Clarks, Inc., 162 Colo. 506, 427 P.2d 314 (1967).

The judgment and decree must be so definite and specific in defining the proper location of the boundary lines that all the parties affected thereby may comply with the judgment in every respect. Calvin v. Fitzsimmons, 129 Colo. 420, 270 P.2d 748 (1954); Thompson v. Clarks, Inc., 162 Colo. 506, 427 P.2d 314 (1967).

Court may adopt most definite of two repugnant descriptions. Where there are two repugnant descriptions in a deed, the trial court will look into the surrounding facts and will adopt the description which is most definite and certain and which in the light of the surrounding circumstances can be said to effectuate most clearly the intention of the parties. Wallace v. Hirsch, 142 Colo. 264, 350 P.2d 560 (1960).

Monuments control over monument calls. In a conveyance of interest in land, whether by ordinary deed or by dedication, if the description of the land be fixed by ascertainable monuments and by courses and distances, the well-settled general rule is that the monuments will control the courses and distances if they be inconsistent with the monument calls. Wallace v. Hirsch, 142 Colo. 264, 350 P.2d 560 (1960).

Where a conveyance is made with reference to an official map or plat, the map or plat

Rule 105.1. Spurious Lien or Document

(a) Petition; Contents, Order to Show Cause. Any person whose real or personal property is affected by a spurious lien or spurious document, as defined by law, may file a petition in the district court in the county in which the lien or document was recorded or filed, or in the district court for the county in which affected real property is located, for an order to show cause why the lien or document should not be declared invalid. The petition, which may also be brought as a counterclaim or a cross-claim in a pending action, shall set forth a concise statement of the facts upon which the petition is based, shall be supported by the affidavit of the petitioner or the petitioner's attorney, and shall be accompanied by a copy of the lien or document as recorded or filed in the public records. The order to show cause may be granted ex parte and shall:

(1) Direct any lien claimant and any person who recorded or filed the lien or document to appear as respondent before the court at a time and place certain not less than 14 days nor more than 21 days after service of the order to show cause why the lien or document should not be declared invalid and why such other relief provided for by statute should not be granted;

(2) State that if the respondent fails to appear at the time and place specified, the lien or document, if found by the court to be spurious, will be declared invalid and released; and

(3) State that the court shall award costs, including reasonable attorney fees, to the prevailing party.

(b) Notice; Service. The petitioner shall issue a notice to respondent setting forth the time and place for the hearing on the show cause order, which hearing shall be set not less than 14 days nor more than 21 days from service of the show cause order, and shall advise respondent of the right to file and serve a response as provided in section (c), including a reference to the last day for filing a response and the addresses at which such response must be filed and served. The notice shall contain the return address of the petitioner or the petitioner's attorney. The notice and a copy of the petition and order to show cause shall be served by the petitioner on the respondent not less than 14 days prior to the date set for the hearing, by (1) mailing a true copy thereof by first class mail to each respondent at the address or addresses stated in the lien or document and (2) filing a copy with the clerk of the district court and delivering a second copy to the clerk of the district court for posting in the clerk's office, which shall be evidenced by the certificate of the petitioner or petitioner's agent or attorney. Alternatively, the petitioner may serve the petition, notice, and show cause order upon each respondent in accordance with Rule 4, or, in the event the claim is brought as a counterclaim or cross-claim in a pending action in which the parties have appeared, in accordance with Rule 5.

(c) Response; Contents; Filing and Service. Not less than 7 days prior to the date set for the hearing, the respondent shall file and serve a verified response to the petition, setting forth the facts supporting the validity of the lien or document and attaching copies of all documents which support the validity of the lien or document. Service of such response shall be made in accordance with Rule 5(b).

(d) Hearing; Decree; Hearing Dispensed With If No Response Filed. If, following a hearing on the order to show cause, the court determines that the lien or document is a spurious lien or a spurious document, the court shall make findings of fact and enter an order and decree declaring the spurious lien or document and any related notices of lis pendens invalid, releasing the recorded or filed spurious lien or spurious document, and entering a monetary judgment in the amount of the petitioner's costs, including reasonable attorney fees, against the respondent and in favor of the petitioner. If, following the hearing on the order to show cause, the court determines that the lien or document is not a spurious lien or document, the court shall issue an order so finding and enter a monetary judgment against the petitioner and in favor of the respondent in the amount of the respondent's costs, including reasonable attorney fees. If necessary, the court may in its discretion continue the hearing on the show cause order for further proceedings and trial. If no response is filed and served by the respondent within the time permitted by section (c), the court shall examine the petition and, if satisfied that venue is proper and that the lien or document is spurious, the court shall dispense with the hearing and forthwith enter the order, which shall be a final judgment for purposes of appeal. If the petition has been personally served upon the respondent in accordance with Rule 4(e) or (g), the court shall enter judgment in favor of petitioner and against the respondent for the petitioner's costs, including reasonable attorney fees.

(e) Docket Fee. A docket fee in the amount specified by law shall be paid by the petitioner. The respondent shall pay, at the time of the filing of the response, a docket fee in the amount specified by law for a defendant or respondent in a civil action under section 13-32-101(1)(d), C.R.S.

ANNOTATION

Because a lis pendens can be a spurious document, trial court may award attorney fees and costs for a spurious lis pendens. Shyanne Props., LLC v. Torp, 210 P.3d 490 (Colo. App. 2009).

Defendants' petition for removal of a lis pendens as a spurious document constituted a counterclaim, even though it was not denominated as such, because defendants filed the petition in a pending action and not in a separate proceeding. Therefore, defendants were not required to pay a docket fee and properly served their petition under C.R.C.P. 5 using an electronic filing system. Shyanne Props., LLC v. Torp, 210 P.3d 490 (Colo. App. 2009).

Trial court had jurisdiction to award attorney fees and costs to defendants for a spurious lis pendens. Because plaintiff did not refute that the lis pendens was spurious at the show cause hearing, trial court had jurisdiction to enter judgment in favor of defendants and against plaintiff for defendants' costs and attorney fees. Shyanne Props., LLC v. Torp, 210 P.3d 490 (Colo. App. 2009).

Trial court abused its discretion in awarding attorney fees without holding an evidentiary hearing on the reasonableness and necessity of the attorney fees requested by defendants. If a party requests a hearing concerning an award of fees, the trial court must hold a hearing. Shyanne Props., LLC v. Torp, 210 P.3d 490 (Colo. App. 2009).

Rule creates an exception to the priority rule, which requires the second of two actions with the same parties and subject matter to be stayed until the first action is finally determined. Under the express language of the rule, a party challenging the validity of a recorded document may file the petition as a counterclaim or cross-claim, or the party may institute a separate proceeding. Battle N., LLC v. Sensible Hous. Co., 2015 COA 83, 370 P.3d 238.

This rule and § 38-35-204, both governing spurious lien proceedings, conflict with, and thus control over, the more general rules of pleading. Therefore, the trial court did not err when it concluded that banks could not raise their counterclaims and third-party claim in the spurious lien action and dismissed them without prejudice. Fiscus v. Liberty Mort. Corp., 2014 COA 79, 373 P.3d 644, aff'd on other grounds, 2016 CO 31, 379 P.3d 278.

Remedial Writs and Contempt

CHAPTER 15

REMEDIAL WRITS AND CONTEMPT

Rule 106. Forms of Writs Abolished

(a) Habeas Corpus, Mandamus, Quo Warranto, Certiorari, Prohibition, Scire Facias and Other Remedial Writs in the District Court. Special forms of pleadings and writs in habeas corpus, mandamus, quo warranto, certiorari, prohibition, scire facias, and proceedings for the issuance of other remedial writs, as heretofore known, are hereby abolished in the district court. Any relief provided hereunder shall not be available in the superior or county courts. In the following cases relief may be obtained in the district court by appropriate action under the practice prescribed in the Colorado Rules of Civil Procedure:

(1) Where any person not being committed or detained for any criminal or supposed criminal matter is illegally confined or restrained of his liberty;

(2) Where the relief sought is to compel a lower judicial body, governmental body, corporation, board, officer or person to perform an act which the law specially enjoins as a duty resulting from an office, trust, or station, or to compel the admission of a party to the use and enjoyment of a right or office to which he is entitled, and from which he is unlawfully precluded by such lower judicial body, governmental body, corporation, board, officer, or person. The judgment shall include any damages sustained;

(3) When any person usurps, intrudes into, or unlawfully holds or exercises any office or franchise, the district attorney of the proper district may and, when directed by the governor so to do, shall bring an action against such person in the name of the people of the state, but if the district attorney declines so to do, it may be brought upon the relation and complaint of any person. The Rule heretofore existing requiring leave of court to institute such proceedings is hereby abolished. When such an action is brought against a defendant alleged to have usurped, intruded into, or who allegedly unlawfully holds or exercises any public office, civil or military, or any franchise it shall be given precedence over other civil actions except similar actions previously commenced. The judgment may determine the rightful holder of the office or franchise;

(4) Where any governmental body or officer or any lower judicial body exercising judicial or quasi-judicial functions has exceeded its jurisdiction or abused its discretion, and there is no plain, speedy and adequate remedy otherwise provided by law:

(I) Review shall be limited to a determination of whether the body or officer has exceeded its jurisdiction or abused its discretion, based on the evidence in the record before the defendant body or officer.

(II) Review pursuant to this subsection (4) shall be commenced by the filing of a complaint. An answer or other responsive pleading shall then be filed in accordance with the Colorado Rules of Civil Procedure.

(III) If the complaint is accompanied by a motion and proposed order requiring certification of a record, the court shall order the defendant body or officer to file with the clerk on a specified date, the record or such portion or transcript thereof as is identified in the order, together with a certificate of authenticity. The date for filing the record shall be after the date upon which an answer to the complaint must be filed.

(IV) Within 21 days after the date of receipt of an order requiring certification of a record, a defendant may file with the clerk a statement designating portions of the record not set forth in the order which it desires to place before the court. The cost of preparing the record shall be advanced by the plaintiff, except that the court may, on objection by the plaintiff, order a defendant to advance payment for the costs of preparing such portion of the record designated by the defendant as the court shall determine is unessential to a complete understanding of the controversy; and upon a failure to comply with such order, the portions for which the defendant has been ordered to advance payment shall be omitted from the record. Any party may move to correct the record at any time.

(V) The proceedings before or decision of the body or officer may be stayed, pursuant to Rule 65 of the Colorado Rules of Civil Procedure.

(VI) Where claims other than claims under this Rule are properly joined in the action, the court shall determine the manner and timing of proceeding with respect to all claims.

(VII) A defendant required to certify a record shall give written notice to all parties, simultaneously with filing, of the date of filing the record with the clerk. The plaintiff shall file, and serve on all parties, an opening brief within 42 days after the date on which the record was filed. If no record is requested by the plaintiff, the plaintiff shall file an opening brief within 42 days after the defendant has served its answer upon the plaintiff. The defendant may file and serve an answer brief within 35 days after service of the plaintiff's brief, and the plaintiff may file and serve a reply brief to the defendant's answer brief within 14 days after service of the answer brief.

(VIII) The court may accelerate or continue any action which, in the discretion of the court, requires acceleration or continuance.

(IX) In the event the court determines that the governmental body, officer or judicial body has failed to make findings of fact or conclusions of law necessary for a review of its action, the court may remand for the making of such findings of fact or conclusions of law.

(5) When judgment is recovered against one or more of several persons jointly indebted upon an obligation, and it is desired to proceed against the persons not originally served with the summons who did not appear in the action. Such persons may be cited to show cause why they should not be bound by the judgment in the same manner as though they had been originally served with the summons, and in his answer any such person may set up any defense either to the original obligation or which may have arisen subsequent to judgment, except a discharge from the original liability by the statute of limitations.

(b) Limitations as to Time. Where a statute provides for review of the acts of any governmental body or officer or judicial body by certiorari or other writ, or for a proceeding in quo warranto, relief therein provided may be had under this Rule. If no time within which review may be sought is provided by any statute, a complaint seeking review under subsection (a)(4) of this Rule shall be filed in the district court not later than 28 days after the final decision of the body or officer. A timely complaint may be amended at any time with leave of the court, for good cause shown, to add, dismiss or substitute parties, and such amendment shall relate back to the date of filing of the original complaint.

Purpose of rule. Under the former Code of Civil Procedure complaints apparently setting out facts sufficient for relief were held demurrable because the actions sought special writs. It was because of this result that this rule was adopted abolishing forms of writs and the special forms of pleadings formerly required. Berryman v. Berryman, 115 Colo. 281, 172 P.2d 446 (1946).

The rationale behind section (b) requires that the challenging party have had notice and an opportunity to be heard in a proceeding, subject to certiorari review, which is judicial or quasi-judicial in character. Julesburg Sch. Dist. No. RE-1 v. Ebke, 193 Colo. 40, 562 P.2d 419 (1977).

The substantive aspects of remedial writs are preserved, and relief in the same nature as was formerly provided in such proceedings may be granted under the Rules of Civil Procedure in accordance with precedents established under the former practice. Leonhart v. District Court, 138 Colo. 1, 329 P.2d 781 (1958); People ex rel. Mijares v. Kniss, 144 Colo. 551, 357 P.2d 352 (1960).

Rule operates only on procedure. The present Rules of Civil Procedure, and particularly this rule, operate on or with respect to matters of procedure. Enos v. District Court, 124 Colo. 335, 238 P.2d 861 (1951).

Section (a) does not preclude a court from initiating a proceeding by means other than institution of a civil action. Pena v. District Court, 681 P.2d 953 (Colo. 1984).

This rule preempts municipal provisions for review. Local ordinance provisions may not control the filing of a petition seeking review under section (a)(4). Gold Star Sausage Co. v. Kempf, 653 P.2d 397 (Colo. 1982); Sky Chefs v. City & County of Denver, 653 P.2d 402 (Colo. 1982).

The 30-day time limit in section (b) preempts a municipal code's 20-day time limit for seeking review. Gold Star Sausage Co. v. Kempf, 653 P.2d 397 (Colo. 1982); Sky Chefs v. City & County of Denver, 653 P.2d 402 (Colo. 1982).

Despite a municipal code's requirement of verification, a proceeding for review under this rule may be initiated without a verified petition because this rule does not so require. Gold Star Sausage Co. v. Kempf, 653 P.2d 397 (Colo. 1982).

A municipal requirement that a bond be posted before a proceeding under this rule may be commenced is invalid. Sky Chefs v. City & County of Denver, 653 P.2d 402 (Colo. 1982).

This rule and C.A.R. 21 are to be construed together. Solliday v. District Court, 135 Colo. 489, 313 P.2d 1000 (1957).

Certiorari complaint not amendable under C.R.C.P. 15(c). Because invoking the relation-back doctrine of C.R.C.P. 15(c) to amend a certiorari complaint filed pursuant to this rule would undermine the important public policies of expediting resolution of challenges to zoning and annexation proceedings and of removing municipal planning and individual properties from a cloud of uncertainty, when the original complaint fails to state a claim for relief, said rule 15(c) has no application to the proceedings or to any further pleadings which may be filed. Richter v. City of Greenwood Vill., 40 Colo. App. 310, 577 P.2d 776 (1978).

"District court" refers to state and not federal courts. City of Colo. Springs v. Blanche, 761 P.2d 212 (Colo. 1988).

This rule applies only to relief sought in the district courts against inferior courts, administrative boards, and officials. Gen. Aluminum Corp. v. Arapahoe County Dist. Court, 165 Colo. 445, 439 P.2d 340 (1968).

It does not apply to original proceedings. Lucas v. District Court, 140 Colo. 510, 345 P.2d 1064 (1959).

This rule does not apply to original proceedings in the supreme court. Nolan v. District Court, 195 Colo. 6, 575 P.2d 9 (1978).

Rule to show cause limited to exceptional cases. A superior tribunal should exercise great caution and circumspection before issuing a rule to show cause to an inferior tribunal, and then only when such court is satisfied that the ordinary remedies provided by law are not applicable or are inadequate. Only in exceptional cases or classes of cases should applications of this character be allowed. Leonhart v. District Court, 138 Colo. 1, 329 P.2d 781 (1958).

Party must exhaust available administrative remedies before seeking judicial review pursuant to this rule or district court lacks jurisdiction to hear the case. This doctrine cannot be circumvented by seeking declaratory relief. City & County of Denver v. United Air Lines, Inc., 8 P.3d 1206 (Colo. 2000).

"Quasi-judicial action" defined. A quasi-judicial action, reviewable under section (a)(4), is generally characterized by the following factors: (1) A local or state law requiring that notice be given before the action is taken; (2) a local or state law requiring that a hearing be conducted before the action is taken; and (3) a local or state law directing that the action results from the application of prescribed criteria to the individual facts of the case. Baldauf v. Roberts, 37 P.3d 483 (Colo. App. 2001).

Administrative segregation actions by department of corrections are quasi-judicial actions reviewable under section (a)(4) of this rule. Baldauf v. Roberts, 37 P.3d 483 (Colo. App. 2001).

Action by the department of corrections that affects a protected liberty interest of an inmate falls within the realm of reviewable quasi-judicial activity, and review is appropriate. Fisher v. Colo. Dept. of Corr., 56 P.3d 1210 (Colo. App. 2002).

Department of corrections' (DOC) classification of inmate as sex offender is a quasi-judicial action subject to review under this rule. Vondra v. Colo. Dept. of Corr., 226 P.3d 1165 (Colo. App. 2009).

Prison officials engage in quasi-judicial action when they decide to limit an inmate's ability to file future grievances. Brooks v. Raemisch, 2016 COA 32, 371 P.3d 738.

Section (a)(4) review is sufficient for purposes of assuring that university's and regents' actions were functionally equivalent to the judicial process and therefore merited quasi-judicial immunity. Churchill v. Univ. of Colo. at Boulder, 293 P.3d 16 (Colo. App. 2010), aff'd, 2012 CO 54, 285 P.3d 986, cert. denied 569 U.S. 904, 133 S. Ct. 1724, 185 L. Ed. 2d 785 (2013).

District attorney can appeal district court's order under section (a)(4) based on court's alleged abuse of discretion. Hotsenpiller v. Morris, 2017 COA 95, __ P.3d __.

Reviewing court must apply abuse of discretion or made without justification or jurisdiction standard when reviewing DOC classification of inmate as sex offender. If the evidence is conflicting, the hearing panel's findings are binding on appeal. Vondra v. Colo. Dept. of Corr., 226 P.3d 1165 (Colo. App. 2009).

Review pursuant to C.R.C.P. 57 is more appropriate than review pursuant to this rule in the context of a quasi-judicial proceeding where a declaratory judgment is requested and this rule does not provide an adequate remedy. Constitutional questions and challenges to the overall validity of a statute or ordinance are more properly reviewed under C.R.C.P. 57. Native Am. Rights Fund, Inc. v. City of Boulder, 97 P.3d 283 (Colo. App. 2004).

District attorney may appear on his or her own behalf or on behalf of a county court and a county court judge who are named defendants in an action brought under section (a)(4) of this rule. It would make little sense to prohibit the district attorney from appearing or representing the county court or its judge when the people of the state are, in practice, the real parties in interest as to the county court's ruling, nor is there any basis to disqualify the district attorney. Huang v. County Court of Douglas County, 98 P.3d 924 (Colo. App. 2004).

Constitutional violation is not a prerequisite to review. Section (a)(4) did not require that inmate allege a protected liberty interest or a violation of due process to challenge an administrative segregation action by the department of corrections. Baldauf v. Roberts, 37 P.3d 483 (Colo. App. 2001).

Where no statute provides a different limitations period, a claim seeking review under section (a)(4) that is filed more than 28 days after the governmental body or officer's final decision must be dismissed. Auxier v. McDonald, 2015 COA 50, 363 P.3d 747.

Plaintiff did not give adequate notice in the original complaint that he sought relief against municipal commission under section (a)(4). As a result, the court properly treated plaintiff's section (a)(4) claim against the planning commission in the amended complaint as a new claim. Absent an exception allowing such a claim to be brought for the first time more than 28 days after the planning commission's final decision, the court properly dismissed the claim. Auxier v. McDonald, 2015 COA 50, 363 P.3d 747.

Review under section (a)(4) must be taken within 30 days of the date of the action for which review is sought and failure to comply with the 30-day limitations period divests the district court of subject matter jurisdiction to hear the action. Crawford v. State Dept. of Corr., 895 P.2d 1156 (Colo. App. 1995); Baker v. City of Dacono, 928 P.2d 826 (Colo. App. 1996).

A litigant invokes district court jurisdiction and commences section (a)(4) review by e-filing a section (a)(4) complaint with the district court by the 28-day jurisdictional deadline; a section (a)(4) complaint is deemed to have been filed on the date it is transmitted to the e-system provider; and a section (a)(4) complaint that is not filed in the district court by the 28-day jurisdictional deadline must be dismissed for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. Maslak v. Town of Vail, 2015 COA 2, 345 P.3d 972.

The fact that litigants e-filed their section (a)(4) complaint with a district court other than the one they intended did not deprive the intended county district court of its subject matter jurisdiction over the action. This rule does not state that district court jurisdiction over a section (a)(4) action is limited to the district court where a section (a)(4) complaint is originally filed, nor does it state that district court jurisdiction over a section (a)(4) action is limited to the district court where venue is proper. Maslak v. Town of Vail, 2015 COA 2, 345 P.3d 972.

A clerk's rejection of a section (a)(4) complaint does not, and cannot, alter the fact that the complaint had been "filed" in the district court on the date that it was transmitted to the e-system provider. The rejection also does not, and cannot, alter the fact that the litigants had invoked district court jurisdiction — including that of the intended county district court — on the date that they e-filed their complaint with the other district court. A clerk's rejection of a complaint under a chief justice directive rejection list cannot deprive a court of jurisdiction because the rejection list is administrative and is not a jurisdictional rule. Granting district court clerks discretionary authority under a chief justice directive to determine the district court's subject matter jurisdiction over an e-filed section (a)(4) action would render the filing rules set forth in C.R.C.P. 121 § 1-26(4) and (5) and section (a)(4) of this rule meaningless. Maslak v. Town of Vail, 2015 COA 2, 345 P.3d 972.

Submitting a section (a)(4) complaint to the correct court pursuant to another district court clerk's e-filing rejection notice instructions did not constitute the filing of an entirely new and entirely separate action for purposes of invoking district court jurisdiction within section (b)'s 28-day jurisdictional window. Maslak v. Town of Vail, 2015 COA 2, 345 P.3d 972.

Since defendant did not appeal his sex offender classification in a timely manner, the parole board had the authority to impose sex offender conditions and treatment as part of defendant's parole. Similarly, the trial court lacked jurisdiction to consider defendant's claims regarding his parole conditions since the claims were based upon his classification as a sex offender. People v. Jones, 222 P.3d 377 (Colo. App. 2009).

Trial court properly determined that it lacked jurisdiction to hear claims for review of planning commission's June 8, 2005 final decision to issue a building permit. Section (a)(4) of this rule provides for district court review of final, quasi-judicial decisions of a governmental entity; however, such claims must be filed within 30 days after the challenged decision was rendered. If the claims are not timely filed, the district court lacks jurisdiction to hear them under section (b) of this rule. Here, because plaintiffs did not file their complaint until August 23, 2005, they exceeded the 30-day deadline. JJR 1, LLC v. Mt. Crested Butte, 160 P.3d 365 (Colo. App. 2007).

Plaintiffs' claim for declaratory relief asserting that planning commission did not provide sufficient notice to them of a permit review meeting was also properly dismissed under rule. Because section (a)(4) of this rule is the exclusive remedy for reviewing quasi-judicial decisions, all claims that effectively seek such review (whether framed as claims under section (a)(4) of this rule or not) are subject to the 30-day deadline under section (b). Thus, claims for declaratory relief under C.R.C.P. 57 that seek review of quasi-judicial decisions must be filed within 30 days. JJR 1, LLC v. Mt. Crested Butte, 160 P.3d 365 (Colo. App. 2007).

Although plaintiffs' claim against town for monetary damages under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 seeks review of quasi-judicial decisions, it also requests a "uniquely federal remedy" and, therefore, is not subject to the filing deadline of section (b). Because facial challenges seek review of quasi-legislative actions rather than quasi-judicial actions, they are also not subject to the filing deadline of section (b). JJR 1, LLC v. Mt. Crested Butte, 160 P.3d 365 (Colo. App. 2007).

Since action pursuant to section (a)(4) can only be commenced pursuant to C.R.C.P. 4, C.R.C.P. 6(e) cannot apply to extend the time. Cadnetix Corp. v. City of Boulder, 807 P.2d 1253 (Colo. App. 1991).

The time restriction in section (b) deals only with certiorari or other writs taken from quasi-judicial proceedings. Julesburg Sch. Dist. No. RE-1 v. Ebke, 193 Colo. 40, 562 P.2d 419 (1977).

Section (b) of this rule has to be read together with the balance of the rule. Vigil v. Indus. Comm'n, 160 Colo. 23, 413 P.2d 904 (1966).

When so examined in connection with section (a)(2) and section (4), it is clear that section (b) must be so interpreted as not to defeat the limitations in section (a)(2) and section (4). Vigil v. Indus. Comm'n, 160 Colo. 23, 413 P.2d 904 (1966).

Strict adherence to section (b) required. Strict adherence to the deadline imposed by section (b) of this rule is required. Civil Serv. Comm'n v. District Court, 186 Colo. 308, 527 P.2d 531 (1974); Danielson v. Zoning Bd. of Adjustment, 807 P.2d 541 (Colo. 1991).

Twenty-eight-day filing deadline in subsection (b) is constitutionally applied in the municipal ballot initiative context. Because proponents of a municipal initiative failed to challenge the city clerk's finding that they had not collected sufficient valid signatures for placement of the initiative on the ballot within 28 days, the district court lacked subject matter jurisdiction to hear the challenge. The state may impose reasonable limits on the exercise of a constitutional right, and pro se parties must comply with procedural rules to the same extent as parties represented by attorneys. Adams v. Sagee, 2017 COA 133, 410 P.3d 800.

A claim for relief pursuant to section (a)(4) does not prevent the complaint from being amended as to other claims. Krupp v. Breckenridge Sanitation Dist., 1 P.3d 178 (Colo. App. 1999).

Failure to join indispensable parties within 30 days not fatal. As a result of the 1981 amendment to section (b), the failure to join indispensable parties within the 30-day time limit established by section (b) need no longer result in dismissal. Tri-State Generation & Transmission Co. v. City of Thornton, 647 P.2d 670 (Colo. 1982).

Failure to file a claim for judicial review within thirty days is not jurisdictionally fatal when such claim is combined with a claim for declaratory judgment. Section (b) does not prevent the district court from considering a declaratory judgment claim that challenges the constitutionality of a city's zoning ordinance even though judicial review is barred for failure to file a timely claim. Danielson v. Zoning Bd. of Adjustment, 807 P.2d 541 (Colo. 1991).

But the district court may not exercise jurisdiction where claimant failed to challenge in the district court proceedings the facial constitutionality of a city's zoning ordinance. The district court may not raise the constitutional issue on its own motion. Danielson v. Zoning Bd. of Adjustment, 807 P.2d 541 (Colo. 1991).

Section (b) of this rule is controlling on actions to review rezoning divisions of county commissioners. Hidden Lake Dev. Co. v. District Court, 183 Colo. 168, 515 P.2d 632 (1973).

Where the concerned parties in a rezoning determination have notice of a public hearing in which they may participate, it is not unfair to require that they litigate their challenge, be it constitutional or statutory, within the time limits established in section (b). Snyder v. City of Lakewood, 189 Colo. 421, 542 P.2d 371 (1975).

Under section (b), a county's final decision in a subdivision approval process took place when the board of county commissioners voted publicly to approve the subdivisions, even though the approval was subject to conditions. 3 Bar J Homeowners Ass'n, Inc. v. McMurry, 967 P.2d 633 (Colo. App. 1998).

When a written resolution is revised, it is the date of adoption of the revised version that constitutes the point of administrative finality for purposes of section (b). Here, the ''point of administrative finality'' was May 15, 1997, the date the revised resolution was signed. Thus, the 30-day period under section (b) did not begin to run until that date, and plaintiffs' complaint was thus timely filed on Monday, June 16, 1997. Wilson v. Bd. of County Comm'rs of Weld County, 992 P.2d 668 (Colo. App. 1999).

Section (b) may prevent town board from reconsidering own action. Where the town board permitted its grant of the variance to stand long after the 30-day review period under section (b) had expired, plaintiffs were entitled to, and did, rely on the variance, and, absent a change of circumstances, the board was without authority to reconsider. Andreatta v. Kuhlman, 43 Colo. App. 200, 600 P.2d 119 (1979).

Ordinances that contemplated later legislative action for purposes of meeting the conditions precedent required by the city charter were not final action under section (b). Therefore, judicial review was premature. Pub. Serv. Co. v. City of Boulder, 2016 COA 138, 410 P.3d 680.

A planning board's recommendation on a proposed rezoning application is not appealable because it is not a final decision reviewable under section (a)(4). The planning board's recommendation is only an intermediate step in the city's review process, which concludes with the city council's decision to approve or deny the proposed rezoning amendment. Under the city zoning code, the planning board does not sit as a quasi-judicial decision-maker nor are its recommendations an exercise of quasi-judicial function. Whitelaw v. Denver City Council, 2017 COA 47, 405 P.3d 433.

Unilateral action taken by a school board in refusing to grant teachers longevity increments in salary for one school for year fell outside the scope of section (b) of this rule. Julesburg Sch. Dist. No. RE-1 v. Ebke, 193 Colo. 40, 562 P.2d 419 (1977).

Petition stating grounds for relief not limited to remedy under this rule. A plaintiff who has misconceived his remedy and is seeking relief to which he is not entitled under the law should not have his petition dismissed. The remedy provided by this rule is not exclusive, and, if under the allegations of the petitions he is entitled to any relief, the court upon a hearing may grant him the relief to which he is entitled regardless of the prayer in the petition. The question, therefore, is not whether a plaintiff in a case at bar is asking for the proper remedy, but whether under his pleadings he is entitled to any remedy. Regennitter v. Fowler, 132 Colo. 489, 290 P.2d 223 (1955).

Where a review of the record made by the board of adjustment would be wholly inadequate to provide a remedy for plaintiff, the remedy provided by this rule is not exclusive. If a plaintiff elects so to do, an action should proceed upon the issues made by the pleadings as in other cases independent of this rule. Regennitter v. Fowler, 132 Colo. 489, 290 P.2d 223 (1955); Morris v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 150 Colo. 33, 370 P.2d 438 (1962).

No deprivation of due process. Standard of review provided by this rule did not deny due process to owner of building challenging safety code application. Van Sickle v. Boyes, 797 P.2d 1267 (Colo. 1990).

The determinative date for review under this rule was when the final decision was rendered and not the date upon which the decision was received. Crawford v. State Dept. of Corr., 895 P.2d 1156 (Colo. App. 1995).

Thirty-day limitations period under section (b) is jurisdictional and begins to run at the point of administrative finality, which occurs when the action complained of is complete, leaving nothing further for the agency to decide. Cadnetix Corp. v. Boulder, 807 P.2d 1253 (Colo. App. 1991); Baker v. Dacono, 928 P.2d 826 (Colo. App. 1996); 3 Bar J Homeowners Ass'n., Inc. v. McMurry, 967 P.2d 633 (Colo. App. 1998); Carney v. Civil Serv. Comm'n, 30 P.3d 861 (Colo. App. 2001).

Because plaintiff's original complaint did not seek review under section (a)(4), his amended complaint seeking such relief did not relate back to the original complaint. The district court, therefore, correctly dismissed as untimely the section (a)(4) claim set forth in the amended complaint. Section (b) permits a plaintiff to add, dismiss, or substitute parties in order to correct or complete a claim previously asserted under section (a)(4), but the plaintiff may not amend the complaint to seek review under section (a)(4) if such relief was not timely requested in the original complaint. If the complaint does not satisfy the criteria specified in section (a)(4), it is not a timely complaint within the meaning of section (b). Auxier v. McDonald, 2015 COA 50, 363 P.3d 747.

For purposes of judicial review of actions of the civil service commission pursuant to section (a)(4), the final decision of the commission was rendered on the date of certification and publication of the eligibility register, not on the date the commission announced that the promotional examination would contain a personnel record evaluation (PRE) component. The injury of which plaintiffs complain was not complete until the examination results were published and certified, which was the point of administrative finality. Carney v. Civil Serv. Comm'n, 30 P.3d 861 (Colo. App. 2001).

Action filed by nonexistent corporation is a nullity. A nonprofit corporation's lawsuit is void ab initio when it was filed after expiration of the 30-day period but before the secretary of state accepted and filed amended articles of incorporation. Therefore, no good cause can be shown to allow substitution of parties. Black Canyon Citizens Coalition, Inc. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs of Montrose County, 80 P.3d 932 (Colo. App. 2003).

Court's review under section (a)(4) is on a de novo basis, based on the record made before the lower tribunal. Feldewerth v. Joint Sch. Dist. 28-J, 3 P.3d 467 (Colo. App. 1999); Carney v. Civil Serv. Comm'n, 30 P.3d 861 (Colo. App. 2001).

Court's scope of review regarding sentence imposed by county court judge is strictly limited to whether the judge exceeded his jurisdiction or abused his discretion. Held that where the county judge immediately imposed sentence based on representations that defendant met the criteria for immediate sentencing under § 42-4-1301 and discovered later that defendant did not meet those criteria, county judge did not exceed his jurisdiction or abuse his discretion in resentencing the defendant. Walker v. Arries, 908 P.2d 1180 (Colo. App. 1995).

Notwithstanding C.R.C.P. 54(d), § 13-16-111 allows a prevailing plaintiff in an action under section (a)(4) of this rule to recover costs against the state, its officers, or agencies. Branch v. Colo. Dept. of Corr., 89 P.3d 496 (Colo. App. 2003).

II. HABEAS CORPUS.

This rule abolishes the special forms previously considered necessary and peculiar to the writ of habeas corpus, and relief may now be obtained either by an action or by a motion under the new practice set up in the Rules of Civil Procedure. Rogers v. Best, 115 Colo. 245, 171 P.2d 769 (1946).

Habeas corpus is a civil action, and the proceedings are governed by the rules of civil procedure. Schauer v. Smeltzer, 175 Colo. 364, 488 P.2d 899 (1971).

The application of this rule is limited to affording relief where any person not being committed or detained for any criminal or supposed criminal matter is illegally confined or restrained of his liberty. Wright v. Tinsley, 148 Colo. 258, 365 P.2d 691 (1961).

Person denied parole can seek judicial review only as provided by section (a)(2) of this rule. In re Question Concerning State Judicial Review, 199 Colo. 463, 610 P.2d 1340 (1980).

Acts of parole board are not reviewable. Administrative acts of the parole board, being definitely a matter of grace, and not a matter of right, are not such a function as is reviewable by the courts by habeas corpus, certiorari, or mandamus. Berry v. State Bd. of Parole, 148 Colo. 547, 367 P.2d 338 (1961), cert. denied, 370 U.S. 927, 82 S. Ct. 1569, 8 L. Ed. 2d 507 (1962).

Decision of state board of parole to grant or deny parole is clearly discretionary since parole is a privilege, and no prisoner is entitled to it as a matter of right. In re Question Concerning State Judicial Review, 199 Colo. 463, 610 P.2d 1340 (1980).

Actions reviewable only when board failed to exercise its statutory duties. It is only when the Colorado state board of parole has failed to exercise its statutory duties that the courts of Colorado have the power to review the board's actions. In re Question Concerning State Judicial Review, 199 Colo. 463, 610 P.2d 1340 (1980).

Certification of sanity unavailable through habeas corpus. For a patient confined in the state penitentiary after being found not guilty of murder by reason of insanity and transferred from the state hospital as a dangerous patient, the remedy available to obtain a judicial determination of a claimed restoration to sanity and present mental condition is formerly prescribed by statute and provided that the superintendent of the state hospital must first certify to the committing court that the defendant is sane. Habeas corpus was an inappropriate form of relief to obtain this certification. Pigg v. Patterson, 370 F.2d 101 (10th Cir. 1966).

III. MANDAMUS.

Annotator's note. Since section (a)(2) of this rule is similar to § 342 of the former Code of Civil Procedure, which was supplanted by the Rules of Civil Procedure in 1941, relevant cases construing that section have been included in the annotations to this rule.

A. In General.

The substantive aspects of mandamus proceedings are preserved even though this rule "abolishes the special form of pleading", writ and name of the remedy theretofore known as mandamus, and relief of the same nature as was formerly provided in mandamus actions may be granted in accordance with precedents established under the old practice. North Poudre Irrigation Co. v. Hinderlider, 112 Colo. 467, 150 P.2d 304 (1944); Hall v. City & County of Denver, 117 Colo. 508, 190 P.2d 122 (1948); Ahern v. Baker, 148 Colo. 408, 366 P.2d 366 (1961).

Mandamus lies to compel performance of official act. Under section (a)(2) of this rule, when a board or person charged with performing an official duty fails or refuses to act, mandamus will lie to compel performance. Sheeley v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 137 Colo. 350, 325 P.2d 275 (1958).

Section (a)(2) permits the granting of relief to compel an "inferior tribunal, corporation, board, officer or person" to perform some required duty or act. Vigil v. Indus. Comm'n, 160 Colo. 23, 413 P.2d 904 (1966).

It is not an ordinary action or proceeding available as matter of right, and the courts are invested with a sound discretion as to its issuance. Hall v. City & County of Denver, 117 Colo. 508, 190 P.2d 122 (1948).

Relief is narrowly interpreted. Relief in the nature of mandamus to compel a public official to perform an act is narrowly interpreted. Brown v. Barnes, 28 Colo. App. 593, 476 P.2d 295 (1970).

Three-part test for mandamus. There is a three-part test which must be satisfied by a plaintiff before mandamus will be issued by the court: (1) The plaintiff must have a clear right to the relief sought; (2) the defendant must have a clear duty to perform the act requested; and (3) there must be no other available remedy. Gramiger v. Crowley, 660 P.2d 1279 (Colo. 1983).

Test applied in White v. Rickets, 684 P.2d 239 (Colo. 1984); Mahon v. Harst, 738 P.2d 1190 (Colo. App. 1987); Asphalt Specialties, Co. v. City of Commerce City, 218 P.3d 741 (Colo. App. 2009); Gandy v. Raemisch, 2017 COA 110, 405 P.3d 480.

It is maintainable only when there is no other adequate legal remedy. Hall v. City & County of Denver, 117 Colo. 508, 190 P.2d 122 (1948); Julesburg Sch. Dist. No. Re-1 v. Ebke, 193 Colo. 40, 562 P.2d 419 (1977).

In cases where adequate relief may be had by an action for damages, an action under section (a)(2) will not lie as a general rule. Bell v. Thomas, 49 Colo. 76, 111 P. 76 (1910); Hall v. City & County of Denver, 117 Colo. 508, 190 P.2d 122 (1948).

Mandamus will not lie where there is another specific and adequate mode of relief available to the parties. Potter v. Anderson, 155 Colo. 25, 392 P.2d 650 (1964).

Since mandamus is available only when no other adequate remedy is available, in a case where a developer's plan met the requirements of the city zoning ordinance, and the city was acting in a quasi-judicial capacity in approving or denying the developer's plan, the proper remedy available to the developer was certiorari under section (a)(4) and not mandamus under section (a)(2), and the developer was not entitled to damages. Sherman v. Colo. Springs Planning Comm'n, 763 P.2d 292 (Colo. 1988).

Mandamus is not appropriate unless all alternative forms of relief have been exhausted. When administrative remedies are provided by statute or ordinance, the procedure outlined in the statute must be followed if the contested matter is within the jurisdiction of the administrative authority. Egle v. City & County of Denver, 93 P.3d 609 (Colo. App. 2004).

If a plaintiff fails to exhaust administrative remedies or to establish that an exception to the exhaustion requirement excuses the failure to do so, the district court may lack subject matter jurisdiction over the action. Exhaustion is unnecessary when: (1) It is clear beyond a reasonable doubt that further administrative review by the agency would be futile because the agency will not provide the relief requested; or (2) the agency lacks the authority or capacity to determine the matters in controversy. Here, trial court correctly held plaintiffs had complete, adequate, and speedy administrative remedies to challenge zoning department's decision to approve issuance of certificate of occupancy and building department's issuance of that certificate, and the trial court did not err in dismissing complaint. Egle v. City & County of Denver, 93 P.3d 609 (Colo. App. 2004).

Where an action is based on a breach of contract, mandamus is not the exclusive remedy. Julesburg Sch. Dist. No. RE-1 v. Ebke, 193 Colo. 40, 562 P.2d 419 (1977).

In the case of ministerial officers, there is an exception to the general rule, and they may be compelled to exercise their functions according to law, even though the party has another remedy against them. An action will lie, although the party may have also a remedy upon the official bond of the ministerial officer. Bell v. Thomas, 49 Colo. 76, 111 P. 76 (1910).

Mandamus will not lie to enforce duties generally, or to control and regulate a general course of official conduct for a long series of continuous acts to be performed under varying conditions. Ahern v. Baker, 148 Colo. 408, 366 P.2d 366 (1961).

Unless a party has a clear legal right to compel the action sought, he cannot maintain an action. Civil Serv. Comm'n v. People ex rel. Beates, 88 Colo. 319, 295 P. 920 (1931); Hertz Drive-Ur-Self Sys. v. Doak, 94 Colo. 200, 29 P.2d 625 (1934).

No one is entitled to mandamus whose right is not clear and unquestionable. Sturner v. James A. McCandless Inv. Co., 87 Colo. 23, 284 P. 778 (1930); Barghler v. Farmers' Irrigation Co., 87 Colo. 605, 290 P. 288 (1930).

When the right claimed is doubtful, action will not lie. People ex rel. Foley v. Stapleton, 98 Colo. 354, 56 P.2d 931 (1936).

An action lies only where the petitioner has a clear legal right to have the respondent perform a clear legal duty. Heimbecher v. City & County of Denver, 97 Colo. 465, 50 P.2d 785 (1935).

The general rule is that a writ of mandamus will not be issued with respect to the making or enforcement of police regulations except to enforce a clear legal right or to compel the performance of a clear legal duty. Ahern v. Baker, 148 Colo. 408, 366 P.2d 366 (1961).

Mandamus will not issue in doubtful cases. Potter v. Anderson, 155 Colo. 25, 392 P.2d 650 (1964).

Action lies to compel clear legal duty. Where a petition shows that there is neither a clear legal right in the petitioner nor a clear legal duty corresponding thereto, relief is properly denied. Roper v. Indus. Comm'n, 93 Colo. 250, 25 P.2d 725 (1933).

An action lies only when on the one side there is a clear legal right to demand the doing of a certain thing, and on the other side a clear legal duty to do it. Schneider v. People ex rel. Grant, 95 Colo. 300, 35 P.2d 498 (1934).

An action lies to compel the performance of an act which the law specially enjoins as a duty resulting from an office, trust, or station. Bd. of Trustees v. Endner, 18 Colo. App. 65, 70 P. 152 (1902); Statton v. People ex rel. Burr, 18 Colo. App. 85, 70 P. 157 (1902); Colo. Pub. Welfare Bd. v. Viles, 105 Colo. 62, 94 P.2d 713 (1939).

Mandamus is only justified when a state agency has failed to perform a statutory duty or to adhere to its statutory responsibility. Peoples Natural Gas Div. v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 626 P.2d 159 (Colo. 1981).

The one bringing the action must show a clear legal right to demand the performance of a certain act as well as a clear legal duty on the part of the officer to do the thing demanded. Ahern v. Baker, 148 Colo. 408, 366 P.2d 366 (1961).

An action compelling an officer to act will lie only when that officer fails to perform an official duty. Where there is no duty to act, an action in the nature of mandamus cannot be sustained. People ex rel. Garrison v. Lamm, 622 P.2d 87 (Colo. App. 1980).

Mandamus will not issue to coerce an official to perform acts which it is not his official duty to perform. Potter v. Anderson, 155 Colo. 25, 392 P.2d 650 (1964).

Mandamus is an extraordinary remedy. It may be used to compel the performance by a public officer of a plain legal duty devolving upon him by virtue of his office or which the law enjoins as a duty resulting from the office. Potter v. Anderson, 155 Colo. 25, 392 P.2d 650 (1964).

Relief in the nature of mandamus will be granted only in cases where the act is administrative in nature and a clear legal duty exists under a statute to perform this act. Brown v. Barnes, 28 Colo. App. 593, 476 P.2d 295 (1970).

Mandamus is appropriate if the decision-maker has grossly abused its discretion and if the damage suffered by the petitioner cannot be cured by means of an appeal, while matters relating to the discovery of evidence are usually reviewable only on an appeal. Peoples Natural Gas Div. v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 626 P.2d 159 (Colo. 1981).

Action for the performance of a purely ministerial duty involving no discretionary right or the exercise of judgment is proper. Lindsey v. Carlton, 44 Colo. 42, 96 P. 997 (1908); Hall v. City & County of Denver, 117 Colo. 508, 190 P.2d 122 (1948).

Mandamus does not lie to compel the performance of a trust sought which is discretionary or involves the exercise of judgment. Lindsey v. Carlton, 44 Colo. 42, 96 P. 997 (1908).

Mandamus has its function in those cases where the duty of the public officer or board is purely ministerial and not discretionary. Ahern v. Baker, 148 Colo. 408, 366 P.2d 366 (1961).

If the act sought to be compelled is one involving the exercise of discretion on the part of the official, or requiring a choice between alternative courses of action, then relief in the nature of mandamus will be denied. Brown v. Barnes, 28 Colo. App. 593, 476 P.2d 295 (1970).

Mandamus only to compel officer to perform ministerial function. Relief in the nature of mandamus will be granted only in cases where a clear legal duty exists for an administrative officer to perform a ministerial act. Menchetti v. Wilson, 43 Colo. App. 19, 597 P.2d 1054 (1979); Sherman v. City of Colo. Springs Planning Comm'n, 680 P.2d 1302 (Colo. App. 1983); Reynolds v. City Council of Longmont, 680 P.2d 1350 (Colo. App. 1984).

Mandamus is improper if the court must give directions about the manner in which administrative discretion is to be exercised. Peoples Natural Gas Div. v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 626 P.2d 159 (Colo. 1981).

Mandamus will not lie to compel a quasi-judicial tribunal to exercise its discretion in a particular way. Peoples Natural Gas Div. v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 626 P.2d 159 (Colo. 1981).

Approval of requests for money from county general fund is discretionary function of boards of county commissioners, not a ministerial act. Tisdel v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 621 P.2d 1357 (Colo. 1980).

Adoption of budgetary items is legislative, not judicial, in character. Tisdel v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 621 P.2d 1357 (Colo. 1980).

Mandamus will be allowed where a statute prescribes no remedy for the refusal to perform a duty made imperative thereby, or in case of doubt whether there be another effectual remedy. Bell v. Thomas, 49 Colo. 76, 111 P. 76 (1910).

Where there is a conflict between a statute and a rule, the former must govern; rules of court can neither abridge, enlarge, nor modify substantive rights of a litigant. Sherman v. Colo. Springs Planning Comm'n, 729 P.2d 1014 (Colo. App. 1986), aff'd, 763 P.2d 292 (Colo. 1988).

Where rule provides that the ''judgment shall include any damages sustained'' but a statute makes available the doctrine of sovereign immunity as a defense to such damage award, the statute governs, and damages are not recoverable. Sherman v. Colo. Springs Planning Comm'n, 729 P.2d 1014 (Colo. App. 1986), aff'd, 763 P.2d 292 (Colo. 1988).

Action cannot usurp the functions of an appeal. Lindsey v. Carlton, 44 Colo. 42, 96 P. 997 (1908).

Action will not lie from the district court to compel the county court to enter a judgment in a divorce proceeding different from the judgment which had been rendered, this being an attempt to review, annul, and modify such judgment, and to usurp the functions of an appeal to such judgment, and also an attempt to control the discretion and judgment of the county court. Linsdey v. Carlton, 44 Colo. 42, 96 P. 997 (1908).

Action will not lie against a court unless it be clearly shown that such court has refused to perform some manifest duty. Lindsey v. Carlton, 44 Colo. 42, 96 P. 997 (1908).

Action will not lie when the interests of third parties who are not before the court are involved. Sturner v. James A. McCandless Inv. Co., 87 Colo. 23, 284 P. 778 (1930); Barghler v. Farmers' Irrigation Co., 87 Colo. 605, 290 P. 288 (1930); Hertz Drive-Ur-Self Sys. v. Doak, 94 Colo. 200, 29 P.2d 625 (1934).

Action will not lie to compel the commission on judicial discipline or its executive director to investigate a complaint alleging judicial misconduct or to compel the governor to investigate a complaint of alleged judicial misconduct. The district court lacks subject matter jurisdiction to compel such investigations. Higgins v. Owens, 13 P.3d 837 (Colo. App. 2000).

Failure to join indispensable parties jurisdictional error. Failure to join indispensable parties within 30 days after the final action of a tribunal is a jurisdictional defect requiring dismissal of the entire action. Smith v. County of El Paso, 42 Colo. App. 316, 593 P.2d 979 (1979).

Failure to join all indispensable parties in action under this rule within the 30-day time limit prescribed by the rule is a jurisdictional defect which requires dismissal of the action. Dahman v. City of Lakewood, 44 Colo. App. 261, 610 P.2d 1357 (1980).

Failure to join nonindispensable parties not error. Permissive joinder and permissive intervention can only be effected within 30 days after the final action taken by the tribunal; however, failure to join parties who are not indispensable is not a jurisdictional error, and therefore does not require dismissal of the suit. Smith v. County of El Paso, 42 Colo. App. 316, 593 P.2d 979 (1979).

City council is indispensable party to suit brought seeking review of denial of rezoning petition and failure to join it is a jurisdictional defect requiring dismissal. Dahman v. City of Lakewood, 44 Colo. App. 261, 610 P.2d 1357 (1980).

Naming municipality is not substitute for naming city council in an action seeking review of denial of rezoning petition. Dahman v. City of Lakewood, 44 Colo. App. 261, 610 P.2d 1357 (1980).

Relief inappropriate where board does act. Where a board does act, denying a license, as opposed to failing to act, mandamus is not appropriate. Sheeley v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 137 Colo. 350, 325 P.2d 275 (1958).

A proceeding cannot be maintained in anticipation of an omission to perform a duty or because the relator fears there will be an omission, but there must be shown an actual failure or refusal to perform the duty before an action can be maintained to compel its performance. Orman v. People, 18 Colo. App. 302, 71 P. 430 (1903).

Proceeding not appropriate to compel a ministerial officer not to act. Judgment in an action may be that a ministerial officer — where there is a clear legal duty — shall perform, or where the duty does not appear, that he need not perform, but never that he shall not perform. If the latter judicial direction is given it must be by a judgment entered in an equitable action for injunction. Brownlow v. Wunch, 102 Colo. 447, 80 P.2d 444 (1938).

Petition insufficient. The use of such words as ''compel'', and the prayer that the trial court ''order'' the secretary of state ''to perform'' in a specified manner in the enforcement of the liquor code ''as a duty resulting from his office'' in a complaint to bring action under this rule is not sufficient to invoke the issuance of a writ of mandamus. Ahern v. Baker, 148 Colo. 408, 366 P.2d 366 (1961).

Trial court was justified in drawing a distinction between the writ of mandamus and proceedings under section (a)(4) of this rule. Hall v. City & County of Denver, 117 Colo. 508, 190 P.2d 122 (1948).

POME standard for consideration of motion to dismiss claim for abuse of process based on first amendment right to petition. Trial court should consider whether the petitioning activities on the part of the party being sued for abuse of process were not immunized from liability by the first amendment because: (1) Those activities are devoid of factual support or, if supportable in fact, have no cognizable basis in law; (2) the primary purpose of the petitioning activities is to harass the other party or to effectuate some other improper objective; and (3) those petitioning activities have the capacity to have an adverse effect on a legal interest of the other party. Protect Our Mountain Environment (POME) v. District Court, 677 P.2d 1361 (Colo. 1984) (decided prior to 1981 amendment).

Standard extended to case under section (a)(2) in Concerned Members v. District Court, 713 P.2d 923 (Colo. 1986); Ware v. McCutchen, 784 P.2d 846 (Colo. App. 1989).

Relief in the nature of mandamus may be appropriate when it is alleged that a sheriff or chief of police has refused to accept applications for concealed weapons permits from private investigators who are not current or retired law enforcement officers and the sheriff or police chief has thereby breached a statutory duty to conduct a background check on each applicant. Miller v. Collier, 878 P.2d 141 (Colo. App. 1994).

A request for extraordinary relief in the form of mandamus under this rule is improper to challenge arbitrary action by the department of revenue in revoking a person's driver's license, even though petition was filed on the basis that the department refused to conduct a revocation hearing. The State Administrative Procedure Act provides the proper mechanism for seeking relief based on arbitrary action by an executive agency. Dept. of Rev. v. District Court, 802 P.2d 473 (Colo. 1990).

Money damages are not available in a proceeding under this rule. Accordingly, plaintiffs could not seek such damages in an action brought under rule and did not have a remedy at law. Sundheim v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 904 P.2d 1337 (Colo. App. 1995), aff'd, 926 P.2d 545 (Colo. 1996); Fortner v. Cousar, 992 P.2d 697 (Colo. App. 1999).

Applied in Local 1 v. Metro Wastewater Reclamation, 876 P.2d 82 (Colo. App. 1994).

B. Illustrative Cases.

Action lies to compel the performance of a single act. People ex rel. City & County of Denver v. District Court, 81 Colo. 163, 255 P. 447 (1927).

Action may also be invoked to require the execution of a series of acts. People ex rel. City & County of Denver v. District Court, 81 Colo. 163, 255 P. 447 (1927).

To compel the issuance of a building permit which has been denied on the ground that the construction of the proposed building would infringe the zoning ordinances of the city would be improper. Hedgcock v. People ex rel. Arden Realty & Inv. Co., 98 Colo. 522, 57 P.2d 891 (1936).

An action in the nature of mandamus is a proper remedy to require a building inspector to issue a building permit. Mahnke v. Coughenour, 170 Colo. 61, 458 P.2d 747 (1969).

To compel ousted officer to deliver papers to appointee. Where an ousted secretary of an irrigation district refused to turn over the books and papers to the regular appointee, an action to compel delivery is proper. Kepley v. People ex rel. Everson, 76 Colo. 233, 230 P. 804 (1924).

To compel justice of peace to issue writ of commitment. Where a justice of the peace tried and convicted a defendant and sentenced him to imprisonment in the county jail, his duty to issue a writ of commitment was mandatory, and upon his refusal to issue such writ when demanded, action would lie to compel him to issue the writ. It was immaterial that time had elapsed since the sentence and before the writ was demanded which exceeded the length of the term of sentence. Mann v. People, 16 Colo. App. 475, 66 P. 452 (1901).

To compel revocation of unlawful order of suspension. An action under section (a)(2) lies to enforce the revocation of an order of suspension unlawfully entered against a police officer who was holding his position under civil service. Bratton v. Dice, 93 Colo. 593, 27 P.2d 1028 (1933).

Mandamus would be proper if an effort were being made to compel the civil service commission to reinstate an aggrieved employee. Turner v. City & County of Denver, 146 Colo. 336, 361 P.2d 631 (1961).

To compel audit for services. An acting public official is entitled to an audit of his claim for services rendered in his official capacity, and an action will lie to compel such audit. McNichols v. People ex rel. Hershey, 92 Colo. 469, 22 P.2d 131 (1933).

Courts will direct an officer to proceed and exercise the discretion vested in him by law. Refusal of a city auditor to approve a demand, because of claimed want of authority, amounts to a refusal to act, and an action will lie to compel action where he is vested with authority. People ex rel. Hershey v. McNichols, 91 Colo. 141, 13 P.2d 266 (1932).

To compel determination of tax. When a tax assessor refuses to perform a purely ministerial function which the law imposes, performance may be enforced by mandamus. Bohen v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 109 Colo. 283, 124 P.2d 606 (1942).

The statute is mandatory as to the requirement that a gift tax shall be determined upon proper application. The inheritance tax commissioner has no discretion in that ministerial duty and mandamus was the proper course to compel him as a public official to act. Tasher v. Trentaz, 165 Colo. 97, 437 P.2d 529 (1968).

To compel filling of vacancies. Where city charter provides for the appointment of at least two justices of the peace, any vacancy in such offices to be filled by the mayor, mandamus would lie to compel the mayor to fill any vacancy, at least to the number of two, as a mandatory public duty required by the charter. McNichols v. City & County of Denver, 109 Colo. 269, 124 P.2d 601 (1942).

To compel approval of home care application. The plaintiff completed those things required of her under the statute and under the rules, but the affirmative action by the state board of education requiring that it give its approval and make its recommendation was not done. Absent the rule which the board had no authority to promulgate, the plaintiff's application could be processed. The trial court should have directed that the board complete plaintiff's application for home care. Flemming v. Colo. State Bd. of Educ., 157 Colo. 45, 400 P.2d 932 (1965).

To grant prisoner a free transcript. Defendant is caught in a vicious circle — unable to put into a petition the matters and things which are required, and being denied a transcript because he has not asserted any of those grounds. The district court is ordered to grant the prisoner's petition for a free transcript of the proceedings at the time of the court acceptance of his plea of guilty as well as of the trial in which the determination of the degree of the offense was made. Sherbondy v. District Court, 170 Colo. 114, 459 P.2d 133 (1969).

Right of school board to demand performance of school district. Section 27-11-103 clearly requires that the ''school district shall provide to the community incorporated board'' a sum of money determined by a stated formula; therefore, the clear right of a school board to demand performance, and the clear legal duty on a school district to act, makes this a proper case for disposition by mandamus. Denver Ass'n for Retarded Children v. Sch. Dist. No. 1, 188 Colo. 310, 535 P.2d 200 (1975).

Mandamus was the appropriate remedy, rather than a motion under section (a)(4) of this rule, to address a school district board of education's action in not renewing a probationary teacher's employment contract. Although the school board has broad discretion in determining whether to renew employment contracts for probationary teachers, that discretion is limited by § 22-32-110 (4)(c), which prohibits the board from using as grounds for nonrenewal any actions taken by the probationary teacher in good faith and in compliance with the school district's discipline policy. Since there is no remedy provided if the school board violates this prohibition, the probationary teacher's action in seeking mandamus was appropriate. McIntosh v. Bd. of Educ. of Sch. Dist. No. 1, 999 P.2d 224 (Colo. App. 2000).

Court erred when it dismissed plaintiff's claim for mandamus relief where the executive director of the department of corrections failed to perform his duty, prescribed by § 24-60-2301, to perform the final review and determination of plaintiff's application for transfer to the Canadian penal system. Gandy v. Raemisch, 2017 COA 110, 405 P.3d 480.

Action will not lie to test rule of procedure in workmen's compensation case. This remedy may not be invoked in a workmen's compensation case for the purpose of testing the meaning or validity of a mere rule of procedure when the commission which framed it has seen fit to disregard it. Roper v. Indus. Comm'n, 93 Colo. 250, 25 P.2d 725 (1933).

Nor to compel appointment by civil service commission. A person who stands second on a civil service eligible list for appointment to a clerical position cannot compel his appointment in the absence of a showing that the person standing first had been tendered and refused the appointment or had failed to make demand therefor upon request of relator. Civil Serv. Comm'n v. People ex rel. Beates, 88 Colo. 319, 295 P. 920 (1931).

Nor to control discretion of mayor as to appointments. Under city charter, authorizing mayor to appoint justices of the peace, the discretion of the mayor as to whom he appoints, except as it may be limited by the charter, cannot be controlled by mandamus. McNichols v. City & County of Denver, 109 Colo. 269, 124 P.2d 601 (1942).

Nor to compel appropriations. Action does not lie to compel a city council to make an appropriation for civil service commission expense. Schneider v. People ex rel. Grant, 95 Colo. 300, 35 P.2d 498 (1934).

Nor to compel school board to allow claims. It is the duty of a school board to disallow invalid claims, according to its judgment, and courts cannot control that judgment by proceedings under section (a)(2). Sorensen v. Echternacht, 74 Colo. 91, 218 P. 1046 (1923).

Nor to test title to office. When a person is in actual possession of an office under an election or commission, and exercising its duties under color of right, his title to the office cannot be tried or tested under section (a)(2). Henderson v. Glynn, 2 Colo. App. 303, 30 P. 265 (1892); City Council v. People ex rel. Ferguson, 19 Colo. App. 399, 75 P. 603 (1903).

Nor to compel admission of claimant to occupied office. When an office is already filled by an actual incumbent, exercising the functions of the office de facto, and under color of right, an action will not lie to compel the admission of another claimant. City Council v. People ex rel. Ferguson, 19 Colo. App. 399, 75 P. 603 (1903).

Nor to compel discretionary hearing. The effect of a mandamus to determine the scope of insurance coverage would be to require the commissioner to find that the filing is defective, and that the public interest requires hearings on this matter. These are matters within the discretionary function of the commissioner and therefore cannot be compelled under section (a)(2) of this rule. Brown v. Barnes, 28 Colo. App. 593, 476 P.2d 295 (1970).

Nor to compel hearing where none is provided by statute. The statutes providing for the procedures that must be followed prior to the issuance of a liquor license do not require a hearing, no hearing; after issuance is in any manner provided for in the statutes and, therefore, mandamus may not issue. Potter v. Anderson, 155 Colo. 25, 392 P.2d 650 (1964).

Nor to compel enforcement of police or criminal laws by police officers generally, such as the keeping of places of business open for the sale of liquors on Sundays or holidays. Ahern v. Baker, 148 Colo. 408, 366 P.2d 366 (1961).

A public officer will not be compelled by mandamus to enforce liquor laws, since it would entail the ordering of a discretionary authority. Ahern v. Baker, 148 Colo. 408, 366 P.2d 366 (1961).

Nor to compel municipal board empowered with discretionary procedures. Where an advisory board is given discretion in preparing recommendations of salaries for certain municipal employees to a city council, section (a)(2) cannot be invoked to compel the board to revise its procedures for preparing those recommendations. Reeve v. Career Serv. Bd., 636 P.2d 1307 (Colo. App. 1981).

Action does not lie to compel the department of corrections to place an inmate in community corrections if the inmate is under a detainer. Rivera-Bottzeck v. Ortiz, 134 P.3d 517 (Colo. App. 2006).

Relief unavailable where certiorari remedy was not utilized. Where there is other adequate relief available to the parties by review of the action of the local licensing authority by certiorari under section (a)(4), providing therein for stay of execution of the issuing of the license pending review, but that remedy was not sought, and the license issued, mandamus will not lie. Potter v. Anderson, 155 Colo. 25, 392 P.2d 650 (1964).

Mandamus is an inappropriate form of relief to obtain certification of sanity for a patient confined in the state penitentiary after being found not guilty of murder by reason of insanity and transferred from the state hospital as a dangerous patient. The remedy available to obtain a judicial determination of a claimed restoration to the superintendent's good faith and discretion in sanity and present mental condition is prescribed by a statute. Pigg v. Patterson, 370 F.2d 101 (10th Cir. 1966).

Allegations sufficient to state a claim of relief. Assertion by petitioner that parole board had acted pursuant to § 16-13-203 when it ordered petitioner transferred to a different facility and that the department of corrections was required to comply with that order alleged both a right and a duty owed to him by the department of corrections. Therefore, petition contained sufficient allegations to state a claim for relief in mandamus under this rule. White v. Rickets, 684 P.2d 239 (Colo. 1984).

Mandamus relief under section (a)(2) is available to challenge the parole board's actions if it has failed to exercise its statutory duties. Although plaintiff did not expressly seek mandamus relief pursuant to section (a)(2), the gravamen of his complaint was that the parole board's failure to consider any events or circumstances prior to plaintiff's incarceration was in direct violation of statutory guidelines for parole. Under these circumstances, the trial court had jurisdiction to address the merits of the complaint. Fraser v. Colo. Bd. of Parole, 931 P.2d 560 (Colo. App. 1996).

Mandamus relief under section (a)(2) is available to compel a school district and the school district board of education to perform a state statutory duty. Denver Classroom v. City & County of Denver, 2015 COA 71, 412 P.3d 721, rev'd on other grounds, 2017 CO 30, 407 P.3d 1220.

Court applied three-part test to determine whether petitioners have established the elements of their claim for mandamus against the school district and school district board of education. The court considered whether petitioners had a clear right to relief, whether the school district and school district board of education had a clear duty under the statute, and whether the petitioners had another available remedy under the statute. Denver Classroom v. City & County of Denver, 2015 COA 71, 412 P.3d 721, rev'd on other grounds, 2017 CO 30, 407 P.3d 1220.

IV. QUO WARRANTO.

A. In General.

Law reviews. For article, ''The Misuse of Judicial Flexibility in Quo Warranto Cases'', see 10 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 239 (1938).

Annotator's note. Since section (a)(3) of this rule is similar to § 321 of the former Code of Civil Procedure, which was supplanted by the Rules of Civil Procedure in 1941, relevant cases construing that section have been included in the annotations to this rule.

Common-law writ. The writ of quo warranto was originally a prerogative writ of the crown against one who usurped any office, franchise, or liberty of the crown and was also used in the case of nonuse or long neglect of a franchise or misuse or abuse thereof. At common law it served the function of testing title to public and corporate offices. Burns v. District Court, 144 Colo. 259, 356 P.2d 245 (1960).

Rule substituted for common law and code. Former provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure were a substitute for the original common-law quo warranto remedy and retained the purpose and scope of that which it supplanted. These code provisions were superseded by this rule. People ex rel. Mijares v. Kniss, 144 Colo. 551, 357 P.2d 352 (1960).

Purpose of relief. Traditionally, quo warranto was directed against one charged with usurping an office, to inquire by what authority he claims to hold such office, in order to adjudge his right thereto. Its purpose was to protect the interest of the public and not to protect or promote private rights. People ex rel. Mijares v. Kniss, 144 Colo. 551, 357 P.2d 352 (1960).

The various procedural changes do not affect the basic purposes for which the writ of quo warranto was originally designed. People ex rel. Mijares v. Kniss, 144 Colo. 551, 357 P.2d 352 (1960).

The traditional concept of quo warranto relief is prevailing under this rule. People ex rel. Mijares v. Kniss, 144 Colo. 551, 357 P.2d 352 (1960).

Section (a)(3) does not enlarge or abridge substantive rights. This section is not a statute and does not, and cannot, have the force and effect of a statute, and cannot enlarge or abridge substantive rights. Enos v. District Court, 124 Colo. 335, 238 P.2d 861 (1951).

If section (a)(3) enlarges the scope of quo warranto by making relief thereunder obtainable by persons who had no access to such accommodation before, the supreme court would bestow jurisdiction upon trial courts which they did not have in the past. This would constitute a legislative act beyond its authority. The supreme court will not so encroach upon the legislative domain. People ex rel. Mijares v. Kniss, 144 Colo. 551, 357 P.2d 352 (1960).

Substantial elements of relief remain the same. While the procedural pattern has been simplified, the substance of what constitutes the basis of quo warranto relief remains the same. In order to prevail, proof of the substantive elements authorizing such relief should be of the same kind, quality, and quantity as would have warranted a favorable judgment under the older forms. People ex rel. Mijares v. Kniss, 144 Colo. 551, 357 P.2d 352 (1960).

The substance of the relief determines the character of the action; the name given an extraordinary writ such as quo warranto is unimportant. Burns v. District Court, 144 Colo. 259, 356 P.2d 245 (1960).

"Any person" in the first sentence is characterized by the following words ''such person'' and the context thereof. People ex rel. Mijares v. Kniss, 144 Colo. 551, 357 P.2d 352 (1960).

A proceeding under section (a)(3) is the exclusive method by which to try title to public office. People ex rel. Barton v. Londoner, 13 Colo. 303, 22 P. 764, 6 L.R.A. 444 (1889); Bd. of Comm'rs v. Gould, 6 Colo. App. 44, 39 P. 895 (1895); Wason v. Major, 10 Colo. App. 181, 50 P. 741 (1897); State R. R. Comm'n v. People ex rel. Denver & R. G. R. R., 44 Colo. 345, 98 P. 7 (1908); Roberts v. People ex rel. Duncan, 81 Colo. 338, 255 P. 461 (1927); Bd. of Comm'rs v. Wharton, 82 Colo. 466, 261 P. 4 (1927).

It is a general rule that when the statute provides a remedy to test the right to exercise a franchise or office, it is exclusive of all other remedies. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. R. v. People, 5 Colo. 60 (1879).

Thus, title to office cannot be tested by section (a)(2). Where a party is in actual possession of an office under an election or commission, and exercising its duties under color of right, his title to the office cannot be tried or tested by a proceeding under section (a)(2). City Council v. People ex rel. Ferguson, 19 Colo. App. 399, 75 P. 603 (1904).

Title to office cannot be tested in a suit brought to recover a salary. Bd. of Comm'rs v. Wharton, 82 Colo. 466, 261 P. 4 (1927).

Title to an office cannot be tried in a collateral proceeding. Bd. of Comm'rs v. Gould, 6 Colo. App. 44, 39 P. 895 (1895).

Distinction between proceeding under this section and election contest. A proceeding by the people for the purpose of trying the incumbent's title to office, regardless of the claimant's right, is not an ''election contest'' within the meaning of this phrase as employed in § 12 of art. VII, Colo. Const. Statutes passed by the general assembly in obedience to the constitutional mandate relating to contested elections do not deprive the courts of jurisdiction to inquire into usurpations and unlawful holdings of office or petitioners of a remedy in quo warranto. People ex rel. Barton v. Londoner, 13 Colo. 303, 22 P. 764 (1889).

A proceeding to oust a party from an office cannot be converted into a statutory election contest. People ex rel. Stidger v. Horan, 34 Colo. 304, 86 P. 252 (1905).

The right to the official salary is not to be determined in a proceeding under section (a)(3), but is to be determined in other proceedings. Capp v. People ex rel. Walker, 64 Colo. 58, 170 P. 399 (1918).

General assembly may limit time to challenge recreation district. The general assembly may validly limit the period within which the constitutionally guaranteed remedy of quo warranto is available to challenge the validity of a recreation district, unless the time is so unreasonably short as to destroy the substance of the remedy. Burns v. District Court, 144 Colo. 259, 356 P.2d 245 (1960).

Cause of action limited to parties named and served. Where relators did not bring the quo warranto action as a class action, nor did they name and serve as parties the other numerous school districts in the state, their cause of action must be limited to action against the captioned respondents who were named and served. People ex rel. Cory v. Colo. High Sch. Activities Ass'n, 141 Colo. 382, 349 P.2d 381 (1960).

Corporation, not stockholder, is indispensable party. The requirements of this rule do not set forth the parties who are indispensable to a quo warranto proceeding, but provide a framework under which the state, or a shareholder if the state refuses to act, may review the propriety of a challenged election. While the legality of an issuance of stock could not be adjudicated adversely to the absent holder, yet his right to vote could be passed upon notwithstanding his absence insofar as was necessary to determine the result of the particular election that was under review. The corporation, however, is an indispensable party. State ex rel. Gentles v. Barnholt, 145 Colo. 259, 358 P.2d 466 (1961).

B. Franchises and Offices.

Law reviews. For comment on People ex rel. Mijares v. Kniss (cited below), see 38 Dicta 361 (1961).

Office defined. An office is an employment on behalf of the government in any station or public trust, not transient, occasional, or incidental. People ex rel. Denver & R. G. R. R. v. Garfield County Court, 59 Colo. 52, 147 P. 329 (1915).

Franchise defined. A franchise is defined as a particular privilege conferred upon individuals by grant from the government. Franchises are usually conferred upon corporations for the purpose of enabling them to do certain things. Franchises are vested in the corporate entity. Londoner v. People ex rel. Barton, 15 Colo. 246, 25 P. 183 (1890); Grant v. Elder, 64 Colo. 104, 170 P. 198 (1918).

Where it is alleged that the purpose of the challenged group is to render services to the public and that its operations are so permeated with the public interest as to be such that everyone may not engage therein as a matter of right, and that the exercise of such authority requires, or may require, a specific grant of privilege from the general assembly, a franchise is involved. People ex rel. Cory v. Colo. High Sch. Activities Ass'n, 141 Colo. 382, 349 P.2d 381 (1960).

A franchise is involved in a situation where public high school districts voluntarily join together to perform jointly a public function through a public or quasi-public body that is operating independently of statutory authority. People ex rel. Cory v. Colo. High Sch. Activities Ass'n, 141 Colo. 382, 349 P.2d 381 (1960).

An "office or franchise" can be deemed to exist where there has been no legislative act or constitutional provision authorizing the creation of one. People ex rel. Mijares v. Kniss, 144 Colo. 551, 357 P.2d 352 (1960).

Unless an existing statute is inconsistent with an amendment to the state constitution, then the statute continues in force subsequent to the adoption and effective date of the amendment. People ex rel. Union Trust Co. v. Superior Court, 175 Colo. 391, 488 P.2d 66 (1971).

The statute which established the superior court was never inconsistent with the constitutional provisions that judicial power shall be vested in a supreme court, district courts, and others. Therefore, the statute was not automatically repealed by enactment of new constitutional provision. People ex rel. Union Trust Co. v. Superior Court, 175 Colo. 391, 488 P.2d 66 (1971) (decided prior to abolition of superior courts).

The right of a county judge to hold office is dependent upon the validity of the proceedings by which he was appointed, but such right cannot be determined in an injunctive proceeding, because the exclusive means of determining whether a person unlawfully holds any office is by a writ in the nature of quo warranto. McCamant v. City & County of Denver, 31 Colo. App. 287, 501 P.2d 142 (1972).

This rule relates to public offices. People ex rel. Mijares v. Kniss, 144 Colo. 551, 357 P.2d 352 (1960).

It does not authorize a contest over private office in a quo warranto action. People ex rel. Mijares v. Kniss, 144 Colo. 551, 357 P.2d 352 (1960).

It was not in contemplation of this remedy that the district attorney, either on his own motion or at the behest of the governor or the request of the individual, should intervene in the governance of an unincorporated society. People ex rel. Mijares v. Kniss, 144 Colo. 551, 357 P.2d 352 (1960).

The provisions of this rule may not be utilized by members of a labor union to dislodge other members from offices which they hold in the organization, the application of the rule and the remedy being limited to public officers. People ex rel. Mijares v. Kniss, 144 Colo. 551, 357 P.2d 352 (1960).

Section (a)(3) was not intended to give private person right to redress his own wrongs. Section (a)(3) was not intended to give a private person the right to question the corporate existence of another, in order to protect his own rights or redress his own wrongs, unless it may be in that class of cases where the title to an office is involved, or some similar question is presented. If the law officer should refuse, the private relator could proceed and institute an action to remedy a public wrong. In the latter case, however, it must appear that the object aimed at is a public one, and is the protection of the interests and the maintenance of the welfare of the people. People ex rel. Union Pac. Ry. v. Colo. E. Ry., 8 Colo. App. 301, 46 P. 219 (1896); State R. R. Comm'n v. People ex rel. Denver & R. G. R. R., 44 Colo. 345, 98 P. 7 (1908); People ex rel. Weisbrod v. Lockhard, 26 Colo. App. 439, 143 P. 273 (1914), aff'd, 65 Colo. 558, 178 P. 565 (1919).

When the action is brought to protect private rights, it should not be maintained. This remedy is for the protection of the interests of the public as contradistinguished from private rights, and when the object of a proceeding is the protection of the latter, the action should not be maintained. State R. R. Comm'n v. People ex rel. Denver & R. G. R. R., 44 Colo. 345, 98 P. 7 (1930).

An action lies to try right of those lawfully elected directors of private corporations. The phrase ''any franchise'' in section (a)(3) includes the powers and rights conferred upon a private corporation, and an action lies to try the right of those lawfully elected directors of a private corporation and wrongfully prevented from acting. Grant v. Elder, 64 Colo. 104, 170 P. 198 (1918).

An action in quo warranto is authorized with respect to corporations, which are creatures of statute. State ex rel. Gentles v. Barnholt, 145 Colo. 259, 358 P.2d 466 (1961).

An action lies to test the title of the office of a director of an irrigation district. Lockhard v. People ex rel. Hasselbush, 80 Colo. 31, 250 P. 152 (1926).

Action to determine the validity of a high school activities association. In a proper case quo warranto is a suitable method to test the validity of the Colorado high school activities association activities. People ex rel. Cory v. Colo. High Sch. Activities Ass'n, 141 Colo. 382, 349 P.2d 381 (1960).

A club organized in violation of law may be dissolved under section (a)(3). A club organized ostensibly as a social club, but in fact with the sole purpose to dispense intoxicating liquors, in violation of law and local ordinances, may be dissolved by a proceeding under section (a)(3). Canon City Labor Club v. People ex rel. Jamieson, 21 Colo. App. 37, 121 P. 120 (1912).

Action may not be used to test the regularity of the appointment of commissioners to hold an incorporation election for a town, as such commissioners are not public officers. Commissioners appointed under the statute to hold an election upon the question whether a town shall become incorporated are not public officers. People ex rel. Denver & R. G. R. R. v. Garfield County Court, 59 Colo. 52, 147 P. 329 (1915).

However, when the town is declared formed the validity of the proceeding may be tested under section (a)(3). People ex rel. Denver & R. G. R. R. v. Garfield County Court, 59 Colo. 52, 147 P. 329 (1915).

The writ of quo warranto is a proper proceeding to attack the legal existence of a quasi-municipal corporation. Burns v. District Court, 144 Colo. 259, 356 P.2d 245 (1960).

This section provides a proper remedy in cases involving incorporations of towns and cities. Wiltgen v. Berg, 164 Colo. 139, 435 P.2d 378 (1967).

C. Who May Bring Action.

As a general rule, prosecutions for public wrongs must be instituted by the state through properly authorized agents, while the individual can only sue for injuries peculiarly affecting him. People ex rel. Byers v. Grand River Bridge Co., 13 Colo. 11, 21 P. 898 (1889).

If the defendant corporation has violated the law, either by doing some forbidden act or by neglecting to do some act enjoined upon it, it is not every person who may call it to account for such violation. People ex rel. Byers v. Grand River Bridge Co., 13 Colo. 11, 21 P. 898 (1889).

Exception where agent neglects or refuses to bring action. The provision permitting an action to be brought by a purely private party, upon the neglect or refusal of the district attorney to bring such action, must be construed with reference to this general rule. People ex rel. Byers v. Grand River Bridge Co., 13 Colo. 11, 21 P. 898 (1889).

Where by statute authority is given to a particular officer, its exercise by any other officer is forbidden by implication. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. R. v. People, 5 Colo. 60 (1879).

Under § 32-6-107 providing for the election and organization of metropolitan recreation districts, quo warranto is available only to the people on relation of the attorney general. Burns v. District Court, 144 Colo. 259, 356 P.2d 245 (1960).

District attorney is proper officer to determine whether public interest is involved. Under section (a)(3), the district attorney is the proper officer to determine in the first instance whether the public interest is involved, and whether or not a franchise, as contemplated by that provision, is properly an issue. People v. Painless Parker Dentist, 85 Colo. 304, 275 P. 928, cert. denied, 280 U.S. 566, 50 S. Ct. 25, 74 L. Ed. 620 (1929).

Refusal of district attorney to bring action is sufficient to authorize action by private parties. It was alleged and proven that the district attorney upon request made by relators and their attorneys and upon complaint being submitted to him, refused to prosecute the proceedings, and under the circumstances in this case such refusal was sufficient to authorize the court to permit the prosecution upon the relation of such private parties without the aid or sanction of the district attorney. Canon City Labor Club v. People ex rel. Jamieson, 21 Colo. App. 37, 121 P. 120 (1912).

Where there is no allegation in the complaint that the district attorney has declined to institute an action under this rule, nothing in the complaint discloses that the claimant has any special interest separate and apart from that held by the general public, and the complaint fails to allege the violation of any of claimant's rights which the law recognizes and for which a remedy is provided, such an action may not be maintained by a private citizen. McCamant v. City & County of Denver, 31 Colo. App. 287, 501 P.2d 142 (1972).

In order to support an action by the people for redress of a wrong, that wrong must appear to have been done to the people. People ex rel. Union Pac. Ry. v. Colo. E. Ry., 8 Colo. App. 301, 46 P. 219 (1896).

The provisions which give permission to a private party to bring the action and also to have the right of one other than the incumbent adjudicated, do not turn the proceeding from one to protect the public interests into one to safeguard the purely private rights of the relator. State R. R. Comm'n v. People ex rel. Denver & R. G. R. R., 44 Colo. 345, 98 P. 7 (1908).

Person is not disqualified because of having been opposing candidate for office in question. One possessing the qualifications of "freeholder, resident and elector" is not disqualified from acting as plaintiff in the proceedings by reason of having been the opposing candidate for the office in question. People ex rel. Barton v. Londoner, 13 Colo. 303, 22 P. 764 (1889).

A certain degree of interest on the part of plaintiffs in the proceedings is generally deemed requisite; and the officious intermeddling by parties having absolutely no interest, either as taxpayers or voters, is disfavored. People ex rel. Barton v. Londoner, 13 Colo. 303, 22 P. 764 (1889); Canon City Labor Club v. People ex rel. Jamieson, 21 Colo. App. 37, 121 P. 120 (1912).

A plaintiff must have some interest in the matter before he would be entitled to institute such proceedings. People ex rel. Byers v. Grand River Bridge Co., 13 Colo. 11, 21 P. 898 (1899); People ex rel. Weisbrod v. Lockhard, 26 Colo. App. 439, 143 P. 273 (1914), aff'd, 65 Colo. 558, 178 P. 565 (1919).

Any person making a sufficient showing of a special interest in the business of the corporation and its property is a proper party. State ex rel. Gentles v. Barnholt, 145 Colo. 259, 358 P.2d 466 (1961).

Resident electors and taxpayers of a city are competent plaintiffs in such case. Canon City Labor Club v. People ex rel. Jamieson, 21 Colo. App. 37, 121 P. 120 (1912).

A taxpayer may act as relator in quo warranto proceedings against one claiming to exercise a public office. People ex rel. Cory v. Colo. High Sch. Activities Ass'n, 141 Colo. 382, 349 P.2d 381 (1960).

A private citizen and taxpayer is undoubtedly interested in the duties required of public officials authorized to levy taxes or to expend the proceeds of taxation, and has a standing to maintain quo warranto proceedings in a matter of public interest in which he has a special interest by reason of being a contributor to the public funds. People ex rel. Cory v. Colo. High Sch. Activities Ass'n, 141 Colo. 382, 349 P.2d 381 (1960).

Stockholders, officers, and corporations are suitable plaintiffs. In the absence of express provisions, proceedings to determine the title to office and to oust persons who are illegally in possession may be instituted by the corporation, by officers who have the legal title to the office, or by stockholders. State ex rel. Gentles v. Barnholt, 145 Colo. 259, 358 P.2d 466 (1961).

Where the proceedings involve the entire control of the corporation, the grievance alleged is not just that accruing to an individual, but one common to the entire corporate body, and suit may be brought by one or more stockholders affected. State ex rel. Gentles v. Barnholt, 145 Colo. 259, 358 P.2d 466 (1961).

Claim for damages is not sufficient interest to authorize suit to dissolve corporation. The fact that the plaintiff owns land which the defendant corporation has appropriated without compensation does not give him such an interest as enables him to maintain the action to dissolve the corporation. His interest is not one in which the public is concerned, being merely a right to sue for damages. People ex rel. Byers v. Grand River Bridge Co., 13 Colo. 11, 21 P. 898 (1889).

Private persons may maintain proceedings to dissolve corporation organized for illegal purpose. If private persons may institute and maintain proceedings to oust the mayor of a great city, to prohibit the regents of the state university from exercising certain powers claimed by them, there is no good reason why such private persons may not, by like permission of the court, institute and maintain proceedings to dissolve a corporation alleged to have been organized mala fide for the sole purpose of carrying on some business in defiance of the laws of the state and the ordinances of the city, and to the detriment of the public welfare. Canon City Labor Club v. People ex rel. Jamieson, 21 Colo. App. 37, 121 P. 120 (1912).

Action to try the validity of contested corporate elections. Where the validity of a corporate election is in dispute, and it involves nothing but the title to the board of directors, in the absence of a statute created specially for the specific purpose of trying the validity of contested corporate elections, a proceeding under section (a)(3) is an appropriate remedy, and private individuals elected, but wrongfully prevented from acting upon the board by the intruders, may apply to the district attorney, and, if he fails to act, may bring an action themselves in the name of the people to oust the usurpers from exercising the franchises and to install the relators. Grant v. Elder, 64 Colo. 104, 170 P. 198 (1918).

A private person is not entitled to maintain an action to oust a corporation of its franchise. Under license from the city the defendant corporation had, at great expense, constructed a line of telephone occupying with its structures the public streets. Since the city had accepted and was still accepting valuable services from defendant and had taken no step to revoke the license, a private citizen was not entitled to maintain an action to oust defendant of the franchise, especially as the municipality had the power of revocation, and the like power was vested in the inhabitants through the initiative. Mountain States Tel. & Tel. Co. v. People ex rel. Wilson, 68 Colo. 487, 190 P. 513 (1920).

V. CERTIORARI OR PROHIBITION.

A. In General.

Law reviews. For article, ''One Year Review of Civil Procedure'', see 34 Dicta 69 (1957). For article, ''One Year Review of Civil Procedure and Appeals'', see 36 Dicta 5 (1959). For article, ''Land Use Decisionmaking: Legislative or Quasi-judicial Action'', see 18 Colo. Law. 241 (1989).

Annotator's note. Since section (a)(4) of this rule is similar to §§ 331 through 341 of the former Code of Civil Procedure, which was supplanted by the Rules of Civil Procedure in 1941, relevant cases construing those sections have been included in the annotations to this rule.

This rule provides for writs in the nature of certiorari or prohibition. Eveready Freight Serv., Inc. v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 131 Colo. 172, 280 P.2d 442 (1955); Colo. State Bd. of Med. Exam'rs v. District Court, 138 Colo. 227, 331 P.2d 502 (1958).

The adoption of this rule altered procedural aspects only of the remedy previously known as certiorari. Colo. State Bd. of Exam'rs of Architects v. Marshall, 136 Colo. 200, 315 P.2d 198 (1957).

The substantive aspects remain the same. Colo. State Bd. of Exam'rs of Architects v. Marshall, 136 Colo. 200, 315 P.2d 198 (1957).

Proceedings authorized by section (a)(4) of this rule are extraordinary in nature, and may not be employed as a substitute for prescribed appellate procedures. Kirbens v. Martinez, 742 P.2d 330 (Colo. 1987).

Section (a)(4) does not confer any legally protected interest for purposes of establishing standing. Rather, the rule establishes procedures for seeking review when standing otherwise independently exists. Reeves v. City of Fort Collins, 170 P.3d 850 (Colo. App. 2008).

An order of the district court refusing to issue a citation to show cause directed to the county court is proper under section (a)(4) and does not imply any determination by the court of the merits of the case. Since there is nothing in the record to establish any final judgment in favor of either party, appellate review is unavailable. Milburn v. El Paso County Ct., 859 P.2d 909 (Colo. App. 1993).

Purpose of action is to review the action of an inferior tribunal, board, or officer who, in exercising judicial functions, has exceeded the jurisdictional or grossly abused the discretion which the law reposes in such tribunal or officer, and no review is allowed, nor, in the judgment of the court, any plain, speedy, and adequate remedy. Union Pac. Ry. v. Bowler, 4

Colo. App. 25, 34 P. 940 (1893); Union P. R. R. v. Wolfe, 26 Colo. App. 567, 144 P. 330 (1914); Nisbet v. Frincke, 66 Colo. 1, 179 P. 867 (1919).

The function of a proceeding under this rule is to review the action of an inferior tribunal which has allegedly exceeded its jurisdiction or abused its discretion. Kornfeld v. Perl Mack Liquors, Inc., 193 Colo. 442, 567 P.2d 383 (1977).

The purpose of an action brought under section (a)(4) is to determine if an inferior tribunal, exercising judicial or quasi-judicial functions, has exceeded its jurisdiction or abused its discretion. Garland v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 660 P.2d 20 (Colo. App. 1982).

Standard for challenging inferior tribunal. A superior court should exercise great caution and circumspection before issuing a rule to show cause to an inferior tribunal, and then only when such court is satisfied that the ordinary remedies provided by law are not applicable or are inadequate. Only in exceptional cases or classes of cases should applications of this character be allowed. Kirbens v. Martinez, 742 P.2d 330 (Colo. 1987).

The purpose of prohibition is to prevent usurpation or unwarranted assumption of jurisdiction on the part of an inferior tribunal. Colo. State Bd. of Med. Exam'rs v. District Court, 138 Colo. 227, 331 P.2d 502 (1958).

A writ of prohibition is a proper method of challenging the jurisdiction of a trial court. County Court v. Ruth, 194 Colo. 352, 575 P.2d 1 (1977); Empiregas, Inc. of Pueblo v. Pueblo County Court, 713 P.2d 937 (Colo. App. 1985).

Relief under section (a)(4) is appropriate to contest a lower court's order of criminal contempt. Jordan v. County Court, 722 P.2d 450 (Colo. App. 1986).

Prohibition defined. Prohibition is commonly defined as a writ to prevent the exercise by a tribunal possessing judicial powers of jurisdiction over matters not within its cognizance, or exceeding its jurisdiction in matters of which it has cognizance. Bustamante v. District Court, 138 Colo. 97, 329 P.2d 1013 (1958).

Relief in the nature of prohibition is discretionary. There is a wide discretion vested in a district court to which a petition is addressed seeking relief in the nature of prohibition. Justice Court v. Coleman, 137 Colo. 12, 320 P.2d 336 (1958).

Grant of prohibition should not be reversed except for abuse of discretion. In a proceeding in a district court seeking relief in the nature of prohibition against enforcement of a judgment of a justice of the peace, where the complaint alleges facts sufficient to authorize the court, in the exercise of a sound discretion, to grant the relief sought, the judgment of the district court will not be disturbed in the absence of a showing of an abuse of such discretion. Justice Court v. Coleman, 137 Colo. 12, 320 P.2d 336 (1958).

A writ of certiorari will not issue as a matter of right, but only upon good cause shown, as for an abuse of discretion. People ex rel. Kimball v. Crystal River Corp., 131 Colo. 163, 280 P.2d 429 (1955).

Although an order to show cause is usually granted on an ex parte application for a writ of certiorari to the trial court or judge, it is not allowed as a matter of right or as a matter of course, but is a matter within the discretion of that court. The very right to issue a rule to show cause legally presupposes a judicial discretionary authority. Berry v. State Bd. of Parole, 148 Colo. 547, 367 P.2d 338 (1961), cert. denied, 370 U.S. 927, 82 S. Ct. 1569, 8 L. Ed. 2d 507 (1962).

Certiorari is the continuing of a prior action, a form of appellate review. North Glenn Sub. Co. v. District Court, 187 Colo. 409, 532 P.2d 332 (1975).

Relief available for exceeding jurisdiction or abuse of discretion. This rule limits the issuance of certiorari and prohibition to cases where an inferior tribunal exercising judicial or quasi-judicial functions has exceeded its jurisdiction or abused its discretion, and where there is no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy. Eveready Freight Serv., Inc. v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 131 Colo. 172, 280 P.2d 442 (1955); Colo. State Bd. of Med. Exam'rs v. District Court, 138 Colo. 227, 331 P.2d 502 (1958); Turner v. City & County of Denver, 146 Colo. 336, 361 P.2d 631 (1961); People ex rel. Orcutt v. District Court, 167 Colo. 162, 445 P.2d 887 (1968); State Farm v. City of Lakewood, 788 P.2d 808 (Colo. 1990).

The license authority rulings are subject to certiorari review by the courts, and, if its action in refusing a license is found to be arbitrary or capricious, a court has the authority, and the duty, to order the license to issue. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Salardino, 136 Colo. 421, 318 P.2d 596 (1957); Morris-Schindler, LLC v. City & County of Denver, 251 P.3d 1076 (Colo. App. 2010).

Prohibition lies to prevent an inferior tribunal, whether it has judicial or quasi-judicial powers, from usurping a jurisdiction with which it is not legally vested. Leonhart v. District Court, 138 Colo. 1, 329 P.2d 781 (1958).

Prohibition may issue to prevent a court from proceeding against the express prohibition of a statute or where an adequate and exclusive remedy to obtain certain relief is provided by statute and the inferior court proceeds by another remedy. Bustamante v. District Court, 138 Colo. 97, 329 P.2d 1013 (1958).

A writ of prohibition is proper, not only in cases where the lower tribunal has no legal authority to act at all, but also in cases wherein such inferior tribunal, although having general jurisdiction over a particular class of cases, has exceeded such jurisdiction in the particular case. Bustamante v. District Court, 138 Colo. 97, 329 P.2d 1013 (1958).

Whenever the question is whether a public board or commission has exceeded its jurisdiction or abused its discretion, certiorari is the proper remedy to secure a review of its action. Holly Dev., Inc. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 140 Colo. 95, 342 P.2d 1032 (1959).

The various licensing authorities have discretionary power in granting or denying licenses and their actions will not be disturbed on review unless arbitrary or capricious. Quedens v. J. S. Dillon Co., 146 Colo. 161, 360 P.2d 984 (1961).

When a trial court exceeds its jurisdiction in a statutory proceeding, a writ of prohibition is the appropriate remedy. Evans v. District Court, 182 Colo. 93, 511 P.2d 471 (1973).

Misinterpretation or misapplication of governing law by an agency is an alternative ground for finding an abuse of discretion under section (a)(4). District properly determined that correctional hearing officer abused discretion by failing to document that inmate had knowingly and voluntarily waived right to remain silent during administrative hearing as required by agency regulation. Gallegos v. Garcia, 155 P.3d 405 (Colo. App. 2006).

Proper remedy under this rule for abuse of discretion by prison hearing officer is to remand the case for a new hearing, rather than to expunge the inmate's disciplinary conviction. Gallegos v. Garcia, 155 P.3d 405 (Colo. App. 2006).

No abuse of discretion. There is no evidence that the department of corrections officer violated any of the department's regulations related to the inmate grievance, and the inmate failed to show how he was prejudiced by any of the actions by the department of corrections officer. Alward v. Golder, 148 P.3d 424 (Colo. App. 2006).

No authority to consider constitutional issues. Procedures afforded by this rule are available to review the decision of a local licensing authority in suspending a license, but does not provide authority for consideration of constitutional issues. Two G's, Inc. v. Kalbin, 666 P.2d 129 (Colo. 1983).

Constitutional challenges are not within scope of review under section (a)(4). Price Haskel v. Denver Dept. of Excise & Licenses, 694 P.2d 364 (Colo. App. 1984).

Stay of proceedings only against inferior tribunals. The provisions of section (a)(4) do not provide for a stay order against any party which is not "an inferior tribunal". PII of Colo., Inc. v. District Court, 197 Colo. 239, 591 P.2d 1316 (1979).

Relief granted only against tribunal. Since a proceeding under this rule is properly brought against the inferior tribunal and the rule to show cause issues only against the tribunal, the relief may be granted, if at all, against the tribunal only. Kornfeld v. Perl Mack Liquors, Inc., 193 Colo. 442, 567 P.2d 383 (1977).

Discretionary powers of district court. The issuance of a citation to show cause under this rule lies within the district court's broad discretionary powers. The district court may dismiss a complaint filed pursuant to this rule if the complaint is defective on its face or if no relief can be granted. Info. Please, Inc. v. District Court, 194 Colo. 42, 568 P.2d 1162 (1977).

Where district court failed to issue the required citation to show cause to the county court, the court of appeals exceeded its jurisdiction by reaching the issue and ordering that a writ of prohibition issue. County Court v. Ruth, 194 Colo. 352, 575 P.2d 1 (1977).

For purpose of standing for district court review, no relief can be afforded if person suffers injury in fact, but not from violation of a legally protected right. Brown v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 720 P.2d 579 (Colo. App. 1985).

If there is illegal search and seizure, a defendant has plain, speedy, and adequate remedy by motion to suppress and for return of property, and prohibition will not lie in district court to bar further related proceedings in county court. Seccombe v. District Court, 180 Colo. 420, 506 P.2d 153 (1973).

This rule provides a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy of review of a decision of the conservation board as to the sufficiency of a petition, by virtue of which rule the district court is authorized to determine whether or not the board had jurisdiction or abused its discretion. Friesen v. People ex rel. Fletcher, 118 Colo. 1, 192 P.2d 430 (1948).

Where it is contended that the county court was without or exceeded its jurisdiction, or abused its discretion, section (a)(4) provides a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy. People ex rel. Wilson v. Blake, 128 Colo. 111, 260 P.2d 592 (1953).

Although the Denver city charter does not spell out a procedure for judicial review of the orders of the civil service commission of Denver, a remedy nevertheless exists through the extraordinary writs, provision for which is found in § 9 of art. VI, Colo. Const. Turner v. City & County of Denver, 146 Colo. 336, 361 P.2d 631 (1961).

This rule's relief is not an exclusive remedy, declaratory judgment being available to obtain review of matters not reviewable by certiorari. Corper v. City & County of Denver, 36 Colo. App. 118, 536 P.2d 874 (1975), aff'd, 191 Colo. 252, 552 P.2d 13 (1976).

The validity of zoning ordinances has been challenged by certiorari review under section (a)(4), and declaratory relief under C.R.C.P. 57, and on occasion, these forms of relief have been pursued simultaneously. Snyder v. City of Lakewood, 189 Colo. 421, 542 P.2d 371 (1975).

Declaratory judgment may be proper remedy. As a general rule, judicial review by way of section (a)(4) is the exclusive remedy for one challenging a rezoning determination on a parcel of property. Where persons have not had prior notice of a rezoning hearing and have not participated in it, certiorari review is not always an effective remedy and a hearing de novo under a declaratory judgment is a proper and effective remedy. Norby v. City of Boulder, 195 Colo. 231, 577 P.2d 277 (1978).

The district court may consider a declaratory judgment claim that challenges the constitutionality of a city's zoning ordinance even though judicial review claim is barred for failure to file a timely claim in accordance with section (b). Danielson v. Zoning Bd. of Adjustment, 807 P.2d 541 (Colo. 1991).

But the district court may not exercise jurisdiction where claimant failed to challenge in the district court proceedings the facial constitutionality of a city's zoning ordinance and the district court may not raise the constitutional issue on its own motion. Danielson v. Zoning Bd. of Adjustment, 807 P.2d 541 (Colo. 1991).

Where no hearing was held by the board before it made its decision, section (a)(4) of this rule is clearly not plaintiffs' exclusive remedy. Ebke v. Julesburg Sch. Dist. No. RE-1, 37 Colo. App. 349, 550 P.2d 355 (1976), aff'd on other grounds, 193 Colo. 40, 562 P.2d 419 (1977).

Requirements of C.R.C.P. 65 not applicable. While C.R.C.P. 65 provides that no restraining order or preliminary injunction shall issue except upon giving security by the applicant, that no order or injunction shall issue without notice, except under certain situations, and that an early hearing shall be provided, no such conditions appear in section (a)(4) of this rule. PII of Colo., Inc. v. District Court, 197 Colo. 239, 591 P.2d 1316 (1979).

This rule does not require the submission of an affidavit or verification of the complaint in order to perfect an action for review. U-Tote-M of Colo., Inc. v. City of Greenwood Vill., 39 Colo. App. 28, 563 P.2d 373 (1977).

A complaint neither verified nor accompanied by an affidavit suffices to initiate a proceeding for review, and a citation to show cause need not thereafter issue as such orders presuppose a judicial discretional authority. U-Tote-M of Colo., Inc. v. City of Greenwood Vill., 39 Colo. App. 28, 563 P.2d 373 (1977).

The request for an order to certify the record was not necessary to the perfection of plaintiff's action. U-Tote-M of Colo., Inc. v. City of Greenwood Vill., 39 Colo. App. 28, 563 P.2d 373 (1977).

Orders to certify the record are not issued under section (a)(4) of this rule merely as a matter of course. U-Tote-M of Colo., Inc. v. City of Greenwood Vill., 39 Colo. App. 28, 563 P.2d 373 (1977).

Neither section (a)(4) of this rule nor any other pertinent rule of procedure requires a plaintiff to request certification of the record. U-Tote-M of Colo., Inc. v. City of Greenwood Vill., 39 Colo. App. 28, 563 P.2d 373 (1977).

Plaintiff's failure to request an order certifying the record within 30 days of the city council's decision denying his beverage license application did not require dismissal of the complaint, since plaintiff was only required to ''apply for review'' within the prescribed 30-day period. U-Tote-M of Colo., Inc. v. City of Greenwood Vill., 39 Colo. App. 28, 563 P.2d 373 (1977).

Distinction between judicial and administrative acts. The test for distinguishing judicial and quasi-judicial acts from administrative acts is to determine whether the function under consideration involves the exercise of discretion and requires notice and hearing. If these elements are present the ''finding'' is generally a quasi-judicial act; if any of them are absent, it is generally an administrative act. Hoffman v. City of Fort Collins, 30 Colo. App. 123, 489 P.2d 355 (1971); Van Pelt v. State Bd. for Cmty. Colls. & Occupational Educ., 195 Colo. 316, 577 P.2d 765 (1978).

Act of dismissing probationary firefighters is administrative where the only limitation on dismissal is approval by the civil service commission, the civil service commission's approval is not based on preexisting legal standards or policy considerations, and there is no right to appeal dismissal. Chellsen v. Pena, 857 P.2d 472 (Colo. App. 1992).

Quasi-judicial action decides rights and liabilities based upon past or present facts. City & County of Denver v. Eggert, 647 P.2d 216 (Colo. 1982).

The action of an agency will be deemed quasi-judicial for section (a)(4) purposes if: (1) A state or local law requires that the body give adequate notice to the community before acting; (2) a state or local law requires that the body conduct a public hearing pursuant to notice at which time concerned citizens must be given an opportunity to be heard and present evidence; and (3) a state or local law requires the body to make a determination by applying the facts of a specific case to certain criteria established by law. City & County of Denver v. Eggert, 647 P.2d 216 (Colo. 1982).

Quasi-judicial action generally involves a determination of rights, duties, or obligations of specific individuals by applying legal standards or policy considerations to facts developed at a hearing conducted for purpose of resolving interests in question. State Farm v. City of Lakewood, 788 P.2d 808 (Colo. 1990); Carpenter v. Civil Serv. Comm'n, 813 P.2d 773 (Colo. App. 1990).

Quasi-legislative action reflects public policy relating to matters of permanent or general character, is not normally restricted to identifiable persons or groups, and is usually prospective in nature. In addition, such action requires the balancing of questions of judgment and discretion, is of general application, and concerns an area usually governed by legislation. State Farm v. City of Lakewood, 788 P.2d 808 (Colo. 1990).

Absence of notice and public hearing requirement is not determinative of the nature of the action. The nature of the decision and the process by which it is reached is the predominant consideration in determining whether an action is quasi-judicial. Carpenter v. Civil Serv. Comm'n, 813 P.2d 773 (Colo. App. 1990).

Although the board of county commissioners of Boulder county provided notice and public hearings, the board's actions in adopting a rezoning resolution were quasi-legislative in nature based on the prospective nature and broad impact of the resolution. Therefore, landowner is not entitled to relief under section (a)(4). Jafay v. Bd. of County Comm'rs of Boulder County, 848 P.2d 892 (Colo. 1993).

Where city council was acting in a legislative capacity when it approved an ordinance requiring relocation underground of overhead electricity and communications facilities by owners and operators at their own cost, telecommunications provider was not entitled to certiorari review under section (a)(4). US West Commc'ns v. City of Longmont, 924 P.2d 1071 (Colo. App. 1995), aff'd on other grounds, 948 P.2d 509 (Colo. 1997).

The fixing of the time and manner of payment of restitution for all prisoners by the director of the department of corrections pursuant to statute is not a judicial or quasi-judicial action on the part of the department or the correctional facility, therefore, the district court lacked jurisdiction to hear prisoner's complaint and did not err in dismissing the complaint on that basis. Jones v. Colo. Dept. of Corr., 53 P.3d 1187 (Colo. App. 2002).

Test applied in Stuart v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 699 P.2d 978 (Colo. App. 1985).

Commission's denial of applicant's appeal of disqualification from employment was quasi-judicial action even though regulations did not require a formal hearing on the appeal. Carpenter v. Civil Serv. Comm'n, 813 P.2d 773 (Colo. App. 1990).

Act must be judicial to be reviewable. Where the state board of land commissioners wrongfully canceled a lease of state school lands on the ground that the rent was delinquent, when in fact it was not, and executed a lease thereof to another party, the act was not judicial in its nature and is not subject to review under section (a)(4). State Bd. of Land Comm'rs v. Carpenter, 16 Colo. App. 436, 66 P. 165 (1901).

When the civil service commission of Denver is acting in a quasi-judicial capacity, certiorari is the proper remedy for review of its decision. Turner v. City & County of Denver, 146 Colo. 336, 361 P.2d 631 (1961).

Incorporation proceedings are judicial in nature and the district court could entertain an action enforcing priority of jurisdiction with respect to dual actions involving the same subject matter and substantially the same parties. Wiltgen v. Berg, 164 Colo. 139, 435 P.2d 378 (1967).

Under this rule, certiorari is available only upon exercise of a "judicial or quasi-judicial" function. Hoffman v. City of Fort Collins, 30 Colo. App. 123, 489 P.2d 355 (1971).

Where the charter of a city establishes a civil service commission and provides for hearing and review of dismissals by the manager of safety, these charter provisions clearly place the commission in a quasi-judicial position and bring its decisions within the purview of this rule. Hoffman v. City of Fort Collins, 30 Colo. App. 123, 489 P.2d 355 (1971).

Although the supreme court has repeatedly stated that zoning and rezoning are legislative matters, an ordinance prescribing standards and procedures for obtaining a rezoning establishes a quasi-judicial, rather than a legislative, procedure by: (1) Providing for notice and hearing; and (2) setting forth the criteria to be taken into account by the planning commission in arriving at its decision, and therefore, an alleged abuse of discretion by the commission is reviewable under this rule. Kizer v. Beck, 30 Colo. App. 569, 496 P.2d 1062 (1972).

It cannot be legislative or executive. The court does not review an order, action, or proceeding, unless it be judicial in its nature, and not legislative or merely ministerial. State Bd. of Land Comm'rs v. Carpenter, 16 Colo. App. 436, 66 P. 165 (1901); Colo.-Ute Elec. Ass'n v. Air Pollution Control Comm'n, 41 Colo. App. 393, 591 P.2d 1323 (1978), rev'd on other grounds sub nom. CF&I Steel Corp. v. Colo. Air Pollution Control Comm'n, 199 Colo. 463, 610 P.2d 85 (1980).

Sections (a)(2) and (a)(4) of this rule are inapplicable to challenges of legislative actions. Cherokee Water & Sanitation v. El Paso, 770 P.2d 1339 (Colo. App. 1988).

The fact-finding function of the board of county commissioners' proceeding under the county housing authority act was the exercise of a legislative directive and not a quasi-judicial proceeding reviewable under this rule. The board finds the facts but passes no judgment thereon; it is given no judicial power. Smith v.

Waymire, 29 Colo. App. 544, 487 P.2d 599 (1971).

If the act of removal is executive, not judicial or quasi-judicial, it is not reviewable by certiorari. Hoffman v. City of Fort Collins, 30 Colo. App. 123, 489 P.2d 355 (1971).

Where the subject of a declaratory judgment action is the review of an executive or administrative decision, section (a)(4) is neither the appropriate nor the exclusive remedy by which a declaration of rights could be obtained. Bonacci v. City of Aurora, 642 P.2d 4 (Colo. 1982).

If the law makes no provisions for hearing, but gives power to remove and only requires that reasons therefor be stated in writing and filed, and if the officer desires, he may be given an opportunity to explain, the removal act is "executive" so far as the right to review by certiorari is concerned. Hoffman v. City of Fort Collins, 30 Colo. App. 123, 489 P.2d 355 (1971).

From the explicit wording of this rule, certiorari will not apply for review of the propriety of legislative action. Kizer v. Beck, 30 Colo. App. 569, 496 P.2d 1062 (1972).

A challenge to legislation and the governmental legislative conduct is not available in proceedings to review quasi-judicial governmental acts pursuant to section (a)(4). Liquor & Beer Licensing Ad. Bd. v. Cinco, 771 P.2d 482 (Colo. 1989).

City's decision to exterminate prairie dogs in a city park was administrative, not quasi-judicial, and was not subject to judicial review under section (a)(4). Prairie Dog Advocates v. City of Lakewood, 20 P.3d 1203 (Colo. App. 2000).

The career service board's decision to demote an employee because she did not have the level of education required by the city's personnel policy was administrative rather than quasi-judicial in nature. The employee, therefore, was not entitled to judicial review of the board's action under section (a)(4). Bourgeron v. City & County of Denver, 159 P.3d 701 (Colo. App. 2006).

Quasi-legislative action is prospective in nature, is of general application, and requires the balancing of questions of judgment and discretion. City & County of Denver v. Eggert, 647 P.2d 216 (Colo. 1982).

A master plan that established land use policies, was prospective in nature and general in character, and had not been applied against plaintiff's property is legislative in nature. Condiotti v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 983 P.2d 184 (Colo. App. 1999).

Judicial review of quasi-legislative action is more limited than that of quasi-judicial action; thus, a court may not substitute its opinion for that of a school board. Bruce v. Sch. Dist. No. 60, 687 P.2d 509 (Colo. App. 1984).

It may be maintained if remedy is not plain and adequate. People ex rel. L'Abbe v. District Court, 26 Colo. 386, 58 P. 604 (1899); Union P. R. R. v. Wolfe, 26 Colo. App. 567, 144 P. 330 (1914); State Civil Serv. Comm'n v. Cummings, 83 Colo. 379, 265 P. 687 (1928).

Whenever there is no direct remedy provided for review, the writ of certiorari lies, even though some other remedy can be conceived as possible in the future. Holly Dev., Inc. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 140 Colo. 95, 342 P.2d 1032 (1959).

Whether the amendment could operate retrospectively was at least doubtful even to a prudent lawyer making a realistic evaluation of possible remedies. Considering the presence of this dilemma it cannot be said that a plain, speedy, and adequate legal remedy existed. Toland v. Strohl, 147 Colo. 577, 364 P.2d 588 (1961).

If the remedy is inadequate, it is no remedy, and gives to a court of record in a proceeding under this rule the same right, and imposes upon it the same duty, to grant relief as if no right of review existed. Union P. R. R. v. Wolfe, 26 Colo. App. 567, 144 P. 330 (1914).

Expense of trial may not be used as grounds for prohibition. Seccombe v. District Court, 180 Colo. 421, 506 P.2d 153 (1973).

The fact that proceedings may be expensive and may result in ultimate reversal of the trial court for error, affords insufficient basis for resort to proceedings in the nature of prohibition. Leonhart v. District Court, 138 Colo. 1, 329 P.2d 781 (1958).

Delay and expense do not ordinarily render appeal inadequate. The delay and expense of an appeal or other available remedy ordinarily furnish no sufficient reasons for holding that the remedy by appeal is not adequate or speedy, although there are many instances in which the expense and delay of an appeal have, in part at least, impelled the superior court to grant prohibition. Prinster v. District Court, 137 Colo. 393, 325 P.2d 938 (1958).

The court may quash or refuse to quash the proceeding complained of. No rights growing out of such proceeding can be enforced. State Civil Serv. Comm'n v. Cummings, 83 Colo. 379, 265 P. 687 (1928).

It has no power to correct a mistake of fact or erroneous conclusion from the facts, made by the inferior tribunal. State Bd. of Med. Exam'rs v. Spears, 79 Colo. 588, 247 P. 563 (1926).

Court will not restrain mere error. A writ of prohibition never issues to restrain a lower tribunal from committing mere error in deciding a question properly before it. Prinster v. District Court, 137 Colo. 393, 325 P.2d 938 (1958).

Although "good cause" was not specifically alleged as the basis for amending the complaint, the district court did not abuse its discretion when it granted motion to avoid piece-meal litigation. Neighbors For A Better Approach v. Nepa, 770 P.2d 1390 (Colo. App. 1989).

Restraint from final adjudication within court's jurisdiction not appropriate. Prohibition may never be used to restrain a trial court having jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject matter from proceeding to a final conclusion. Prinster v. District Court, 137 Colo. 393, 325 P.2d 938 (1958).

Prohibition of statutory functions of executive department. A district court does not have jurisdiction to prohibit a branch of the executive department from carrying out its statutory functions. Colo. State Bd. of Med. Exam'rs v. District Court, 138 Colo. 227, 331 P.2d 502 (1958); Chonoski v. State Dept. of Rev., 699 P.2d 416 (Colo. App. 1985).

A claim that the statute under which an executive department is proceeding is unconstitutional will not clothe the judiciary with power to interfere with or control such department in advance of its taking final action. Colo. State Bd. of Med. Exam'rs v. District Court, 138 Colo. 227, 331 P.2d 502 (1958); People ex rel. Orcutt v. District Court, 167 Colo. 162, 445 P.2d 887 (1968); Colo. Dept. of Rev. v. District Court, 172 Colo. 144, 470 P.2d 864 (1970).

Power to stay orders is modifiable by statute. While the courts have power to issue stay orders in certiorari proceedings, statutes may modify or abrogate that power. In the annexation statutes it is clear that the general assembly intended to preclude the issuance of a stay order pending appeal of the annexation proceedings. In this respect they were not legislating on procedure but declaring by substantive law a legal status. City of Westminster v. District Court, 167 Colo. 263, 447 P.2d 537 (1968).

Where the general assembly, in the interest of public safety, has provided a reasonable limitation upon the right to secure postponement of the effective date of suspension of a driver's license by the director of revenue, requiring a showing of irreparable injury, the courts have no power to nullify by procedural rule the limitations so imposed, the function of the courts being limited to a review of the acts of the director. Theobald v. District Court, 148 Colo. 466, 366 P.2d 563 (1961).

Review of denial of license does not stay new application. Where a party applied for a liquor license which was denied, a proceeding to review such denial under this rule does not operate to stay the hand of the licensing officer in receiving and acting upon the application of another party for a license to operate at the same location. Cronin v. Ward, 144 Colo. 192, 355 P.2d 655 (1960).

When (1) a statute, rule, or regulation requires that an individual or entity obtain a license to perform a certain activity, (2) the requirement of the license is valid, and (3) there are judicial remedies to challenge an alleged wrongful refusal of that license, the person or entity may not disregard the licensing requirements, but instead must suspend engaging in the activity for which the license is required pending judicial resolution of the alleged wrongful denial. Here, plaintiffs knew that the city council had affirmed the city's denial of their renewal application and, aware that a preliminary injunction had not been granted, chose to continue to operate their business without the proper license. Because the ordinance was valid, plaintiffs cannot assert wrongful denial as a defense to operating their business without a valid license. Fortner v. Cousar, 992 P.2d 697 (Colo. App. 1999).

Determination by trial court that plaintiff's license had been wrongfully denied was not the equivalent of granting plaintiffs a license. Therefore, trial court properly determined that plaintiffs were not licensed for the period between the city council's denial of their license and trial court's reversal in their favor on procedural grounds. Fortner v. Cousar, 992 P.2d 697 (Colo. App. 1999).

Section provides for civil action. Section (a)(4) clearly contemplates the application of C.R.C.P. 2 providing for one form of civil action since it requires a complaint which must be filed and summons issued and served as in other actions. Colo. State Bd. of Exam'rs of Architects v. Marshall, 136 Colo. 200, 315 P.2d 198 (1957).

Other rules of civil procedure, when pertinent, apply to proceedings under this rule. Colo. State Bd. of Exam'rs of Architects v. Marshall, 136 Colo. 200, 315 P.2d 198 (1957).

The time limit for a section (a)(4) action is that specified by applicable statute or, if there is none, then not later than 30 days from the final decision complained of. Norby v. City of Boulder, 195 Colo. 231, 577 P.2d 277 (1978); Sullivan v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 692 P.2d 1106 (Colo. 1984).

Pleading requirements of section (a)(4) must yield to conflicting statutory procedures codified in § 40-6-115 of the Public Utilities Law. Silver Eagle Servs. v. P.U.C., 768 P.2d 208 (Colo. 1989).

Compliance with time limitation of section (b) required. Any challenge to an agency action under section (a)(4) must be perfected within the 30-day limitation of section (b) of this rule. Civil Serv. Comm'n v. District Court, 186 Colo. 308, 527 P.2d 531 (1974); Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Carter, 193 Colo. 225, 564 P.2d 421 (1977); Smith v. County of El Paso, 42 Colo. App. 316, 593 P.2d 979 (1979); Thorne v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 638 P.2d 69 (Colo. 1981).

The failure to bring a section (a)(4) proceeding within 30 days of the enactment of the city rezoning ordinance is a jurisdictional defect under section (b). Snyder v. City of Lakewood, 189 Colo. 421, 542 P.2d 371 (1975); Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Carter, 193 Colo. 225, 564 P.2d 421 (1977).

Failure to bring the requisite certiorari action within 30 days as provided by section (b) of this rule is a jurisdictional defect. Lorenz v. City of Littleton, 38 Colo. App. 16, 550 P.2d 884 (1976); Gold Star Sausage Co. v. Kempf, 653 P.2d 397 (Colo. 1982); Sullivan v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 692 P.2d 1106 (Colo. 1984).

Where the time for perfecting the review of a rezoning decision, pursuant to section (a)(4) had expired at the time indispensable parties were added as parties defendant, the failure of the plaintiffs to perfect their petition for certiorari review within 30 days constituted a fatal defect which required that the complaint be dismissed, since the requirements of section (b) must be construed as a statute of limitation. Westlund v. Carter, 193 Colo. 129, 565 P.2d 920 (1977).

Failure to pursue timely remedies bars declaratory judgment action. Plaintiff's failure to pursue remedies provided in § 24-4-106, judicial review under the administrative procedure act, and section (a)(4) of this rule in a timely manner bars a declaratory judgment action. Greyhound Racing Ass'n v. Colo. Racing Comm'n, 41 Colo. App. 319, 589 P.2d 70 (1978).

Failure to file a claim for judicial review within 30 days is not jurisdictionally fatal when such claim is combined with a declaratory claim. Section (b) does not prevent the district court from considering a declaratory judgment claim that challenges the constitutionality of a city's zoning ordinance even though judicial review is barred for failure to file a timely claim. Danielson v. Zoning Bd. of Adjustment, 807 P.2d 541 (Colo. 1991).

But the district court may not exercise jurisdiction where claimant failed to challenge in the district court proceedings the facial constitutionality of a city's zoning ordinance. The district court may not raise the constitutional issue on its own motion. Danielson v. Zoning Bd. of Adjustment, 807 P.2d 541 (Colo. 1991).

Plaintiff need not cause district court to issue citation in 30 days. Perfection of an appeal under this rule does not require that the plaintiff cause the district court to issue a citation within the same 30-day period. Info. Please, Inc. v. District Court, 194 Colo. 42, 568 P.2d 1162 (1977).

Necessity for calling attention to lack of jurisdiction. Order in the nature of a writ of prohibition will not be issued to an inferior court unless the attention of the court whose proceedings it is sought to arrest first has been called to the lack of jurisdiction alleged, unless extraordinary circumstances are present. Justice Court of Precinct No. 1 v. People ex rel. Harvey, 109 Colo. 287, 124 P.2d 934 (1942).

Prohibition will not issue where the attention of the inferior tribunal has not been called to its alleged lack of jurisdiction, since one summoned can appear specially in the court or quasi-judicial agency to move that process be quashed as to him. The court in such cases is vested with power to determine whether it has jurisdiction. City of Thornton v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 154 Colo. 431, 391 P.2d 374 (1964).

Prohibition will not issue where the attention of the inferior tribunal has not been called to its alleged lack of jurisdiction. Town of Vail v. District Court, 163 Colo. 305, 430 P.2d 477 (1967).

Joinder of all of petitioner's claims in one action required. When an action is timely filed under section (a)(4), public policy requires the joinder of all of the petitioner's claims in one action. Powers v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 651 P.2d 463 (Colo. App. 1982).

This includes constitutional claims. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Sundheim, 926 P.2d 545 (Colo. 1996).

Lack of jurisdiction for failure to join parties. This rule provides a 30-day limitation for filing an action for certiorari. Because an appeal must be perfected—as well as commenced—within the time period established, and part of the perfection of an appeal requires the joinder of indispensable parties, an amendment to a complaint seeking to add a party as indispensible to the action, filed after the time limitation for filing, was too late. City & County of Denver v. District Court, 189 Colo. 342, 540 P.2d 1088 (1975).

Standard for determining whether party must be joined. The correct standard for determining whether a party must be joined in a section (a)(4) action is that the appropriate municipal body to be joined is the inferior tribunal which made the decision being contested, and not some other municipal body. Gold Star Sausage Co. v. Kempf, 653 P.2d 397 (Colo. 1982).

Failure to join all indispensable parties in a C.R.C.P. 106 action within the time limit prescribed by the rule is a jurisdictional defect which requires dismissal of the action. Norby v. City of Boulder, 195 Colo. 231, 577 P.2d 277 (1978).

An action brought under section (a)(4) must be ''perfected'' as well as filed within the 30-day limit. Tri-State Generation & Transmission Co. v. City of Thornton, 647 P.2d 670 (Colo. 1982).

Indispensable parties must be correctly joined. Perfection of a challenge to an agency action includes the correct joinder of indispensable parties as required by C.R.C.P. 19. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Carter, 193 Colo. 225, 564 P.2d 421 (1977).

Failure to join party in petition for review is not jurisdictionally fatal. Since a section (a)(4) petition may be amended to add parties, where the defendant does not protest or show prejudice, the failure to join a party as a named party defendant in the petition for review is not jurisdictionally fatal. Soon Yee Scott v. City of Englewood, 672 P.2d 225 (Colo. App. 1983).

The person whose rezoning application is challenged is an indispensable party to that proceeding. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Carter, 193 Colo. 225, 564 P.2d 421 (1977).

Motion for new trial necessary before review. Proceedings under this rule are subject to C.R.C.P. 59 requiring a motion for new trial or an order dispensing therewith and such requirements apply whether the reviewing court acts as a trial court or as an appellate tribunal in reviewing the actions of a quasi-judicial tribunal. Colo. State Bd. of Exam'rs of Architects v. Marshall, 136 Colo. 200, 315 P.2d 198 (1957).

Under this rule it is necessary in actions in the nature of certiorari to move for a new trial. Walter v. Walter, 136 Colo. 405, 318 P.2d 221 (1957).

Lack of adequate appeal must be alleged. Carlton v. Carlton, 44 Colo. 27, 96 P. 995 (1908).

Taxpayers have standing to question scope of board powers. As taxpayers it is clear the relators have standing to question the legality of expenditures of public funds and to enjoin such expenditures if they are proved to be unconstitutional or without legal authority; they also have the right to question other acts of the school district that are alleged to be beyond the scope of its powers. People ex rel. Cory v. Colo. High Sch. Activities Ass'n, 141 Colo. 382, 349 P.2d 381 (1960).

This section makes no distinction between an aggrieved individual and a municipal corporation which seeks review in the interest of the public as a whole. Turner v. City & County of Denver, 146 Colo. 336, 361 P.2d 631 (1961).

Section (a)(4) provides a taxpayer a right of review in a state court from a proceeding in an inferior tribunal. Local 1497, Nat'l Fed'n of Fed. Employees v. City & County of Denver, 301 F. Supp. 1108 (D. Colo. 1969), appeal dismissed, 396 U.S. 273, 90 S. Ct. 561, 24 L. Ed. 2d 464 (1970).

Trial court's dismissal of petition for prohibition or mandamus was affirmed where plaintiffs, who brought the action in their official capacities as members of the board of county commissioners to protest state-ordered reappraisals of properties in the county, have neither standing nor legal authority to maintain this action; taxpayers who are adversely affected may have judicial review. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Love, 172 Colo. 121, 470 P.2d 861 (1970).

A competitor is not a person substantially aggrieved by the district court action, which would give him a right to seek review under section (a)(4) of this rule. Woda v. City of Colo. Springs, 40 Colo. App. 173, 570 P.2d 1318 (1977).

The certification of the record is an official act of the inferior tribunal and is not necessarily contingent upon certification of the transcript of the proceedings by a certified shorthand reporter. Civil Serv. Comm'n v. Doyle, 174 Colo. 149, 483 P.2d 380 (1971).

In certain circumstances, a court, even in a certiorari proceeding, should order a remand to an administrative agency on clear-cut issues involving documentary evidence. Johnston v. City Council, 177 Colo. 223, 493 P.2d 651 (1972).

Action of municipal legislative body quasi-judicial. In order to support a finding that the action of a municipal legislative body is quasi-judicial and thus subject to review by certiorari, all of the following factors must exist: (1) A state or local law requiring that the body give adequate notice to the community before acting; (2) a state or local law requiring that the body conduct a public hearing, pursuant to notice, at which time concerned citizens must be given an opportunity to be heard and present evidence; and (3) a state or local law requiring the body to make a determination by applying the facts of a specific case to certain criteria established by law. Snyder v. City of Lakewood, 189 Colo. 421, 542 P.2d 371 (1975).

Rezoning quasi-judicial. Enactment of a rezoning ordinance by the legislative body of a city, governed by both state zoning statutes as well as the municipal code, pursuant to statutory criteria, after notice and a public hearing, constitutes a quasi-judicial function subject to certiorari review. Snyder v. City of Lakewood, 189 Colo. 421, 542 P.2d 371 (1975).

Although early decisions viewed the enactment of rezoning ordinances as a legislative function, more recent decisions have held such activity to be a quasi-judicial function and reviewable under section (a)(4). Snyder v. City of Lakewood, 189 Colo. 421, 542 P.2d 371 (1975).

Rezoning procedures are reviewed under section (a)(4) of this rule as quasi-judicial activities. Corper v. City & County of Denver, 36 Colo. App. 118, 536 P.2d 874 (1975), aff'd, 189 Colo. 421, 552 P.2d 13 (1976).

The amendment of a general zoning ordinance is a quasi-judicial act reviewable under this rule. Corper v. City & County of Denver, 191 Colo. 252, 552 P.2d 13 (1976).

Exclusive when entire zoning ordinance not challenged. Section (a)(4) is now an exclusive remedy to challenge a rezoning determination where the entire general zoning ordinance is not challenged and where a review of the record would be an adequate remedy. Snyder v. City of Lakewood, 189 Colo. 421, 542 P.2d 371 (1975); Corper v. City & County of Denver, 191 Colo. 252, 552 P.2d 13 (1976); Higby v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 689 P.2d 635 (Colo. App. 1984).

Certiorari relief is the exclusive remedy for allegedly invalid rezoning. Gold Run, Ltd. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 38 Colo. App. 44, 554 P.2d 317 (1976).

Section (a) of this rule is the exclusive process to challenge a rezoning determination as to specific property. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Carter, 193 Colo. 225, 564 P.2d 421 (1977).

Section (a)(4) of this rule provides the exclusive remedy for challenging a rezoning determination of specific land. Westlund v. Carter, 193 Colo. 129, 565 P.2d 920 (1977).

This rule provides the exclusive remedy for challenging a rezoning determination and the time limitations for certiorari review. Info. Please, Inc. v. District Court, 194 Colo. 42, 568 P.2d 1162 (1977).

Exclusive where specific amendatory zoning ordinance challenged. Where plaintiff was challenging a specific amendatory ordinance as applied to the property of the defendants and not the general zoning ordinance of the city, his exclusive remedy was to bring an action for certiorari review under section (a)(4), and, thus, his initial complaint seeking a declaratory judgment and injunctive relief was properly dismissed. Lorenz v. City of Littleton, 38 Colo. App. 16, 550 P.2d 884 (1976).

Where denial of variance challenged. Where denial of a variance from a county building code requirement was challenged, then a section (a)(4) proceeding was the exclusive remedy. Van Huysen v. Bd. of Adjustment, 38 Colo. App. 9, 550 P.2d 874 (1976).

Property owners can maintain claim under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 against planning board for violations of federal constitutional rights even though this rule purports to be the exclusive remedy for challenging zoning decisions since the owners are seeking monetary damages under that claim and not declaratory or injunctive relief. Sclavenitis v. Cherry Hills Bd. of Adjustment, 751 P.2d 661 (Colo. App. 1988).

A § 1983 damage claim exists separately from an action for reviewing a quasi-judicial decision made by a government entity and, accordingly, the § 1983 claim is not required to be filed within the 30-day rule set forth in this rule. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Sundheim, 926 P.2d 545 (Colo. 1996).

Plaintiff's claim for permanent injunction moot and judgment dismissing action proper when plaintiff failed to seek temporary or preliminary injunctive relief in connection with challenge to zoning ordinance which authorized construction of facility, coupled with actual completion of facility during pending litigation. Zoning Bd. of Adjustment v. DeVilbiss, 729 P.2d 353 (Colo. 1986).

City and zoning administrators are proper parties to bring decision of board of adjustment before district court and ultimately appeal to court of appeals. City & County of Denver v. Bd. of Adjustment, 31 Colo. App. 324, 505 P.2d 44 (1972).

Judicial review of denial of rezoning of land is properly limited to review of record of proceedings before county planning commission and county commissioners. Famularo v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 180 Colo. 333, 505 P.2d 958 (1973).

Where the zoning body has established requirements governing a particular use and the developer has met those requirements, the zoning body exceeded its jurisdiction when, using its discretion, it rejected the developer's plan. Sherman v. City of Colo. Springs Planning Comm'n, 680 P.2d 1302 (Colo. App. 1983); Sherman v. Colo. Springs Planning Comm'n, 763 P.2d 292 (Colo. 1988).

And where developer's plan met the requirements of the city zoning ordinance, and the city's action in approving or denying the developer's plan was quasi-judicial in nature, the proper remedy available to the developer was certiorari under section (a)(4) and not mandamus under section (a)(2), and the developer was not entitled to damages. Sherman v. Colo. Springs Planning Comm'n, 763 P.2d 292 (Colo. 1988).

The weighing of evidence and the determination of fact are functions of the rezoning board and are not matters for consideration upon appellate review. Coleman v. Gormley, 748 P.2d 361 (Colo. App. 1987).

Approval by city council of initial petition for formation of special district within boundaries of city was legislative in nature and action not reviewable pursuant to this rule. State Farm v. City of Lakewood, 788 P.2d 808 (Colo. 1990).

Zoning board's approval of rezoning application was final only when board executed and approved development plan and filing deadline commenced on that date. Luck v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 789 P.2d 475 (Colo. App. 1990).

A zoning ordinance amendment is not subject to review pursuant to this rule where the amendment is of general application, may be enacted by initiative, and is subject to referendum. Russell v. City of Central, 892 P. 2d 432 (Colo. App. 1995).

Board exceeded its jurisdiction and acted arbitrarily and capriciously where it approved a special review land use that was dependent on the validity of an ordinance. Russell v. City of Central, 892 P.2d 432 (Colo. App. 1995).

Whatever form a final decision may take in any given context, a party whose property interests are adversely affected by it may not, in the absence of timely notice of the decision, be deprived of review for failing to seek it in a timely manner. Citizens for Resp. Growth v. RCI Dev. Ptr., 252 P.3d 1104 (Colo. 2011).

The loss of a right to judicial review for failure to timely file in the absence of adequate notice would clearly violate due process of law. By including the disposition of two related applications in the written resolution it was required to formally adopt to approve land developer's 1041 application, the board of county commissioners made clear its intent to supersede, or finalize, the earlier oral adoption of all three applications. Where the ripeness of neither the planned unit development application nor the preliminary subdivision plat application was disputed, the complaint seeking judicial review of both was timely filed. Citizens for Resp. Growth v. RCI Dev. Ptr., 252 P.3d 1104 (Colo. 2011).

Section (a)(4) held improperly applied in wrongful discharge, outrageous conduct, and civil rights action against town. Wilson v. Town of Avon, 749 P.2d 990 (Colo. App. 1987).

District court does not have jurisdiction under this rule to review an interlocutory order of a state administrative agency, absent a showing of irreparable harm from such order. T & S Leasing v. District Court, 728 P.2d 729 (Colo. 1986).

Since municipal court rules became effective on April 1, 1970, the argument that there is no established procedure in the municipal courts is therefore moot. Municipal Court v. Brown, 175 Colo. 433, 488 P.2d 61 (1971).

Motion for new trial not required. A motion for new trial to secure appellate review of a district court's judgment in a proceeding under this rule is not required where the hearing in the district court did not involve controverted issues of fact. Cline v. City of Boulder, 35 Colo. App. 349, 532 P.2d 770 (1975).

The administrative and judicial review provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act of Colorado are complete, definitive, and organic, without the need of supplementation from other legislative acts or the procedural relief afforded by C.R.C.P. 16. Gardner v. Friend, 849 P.2d 817 (Colo. App. 1992).

Denial of a non-conforming use application and denial of a variation application were final decisions for purposes of this rule and judicial review was the exclusive remedy for review of such decisions. A petition for review was, therefore, subject to the 30-day filing deadline. Buck v. Park, 839 P.2d 498 (Colo. App. 1992).

But, where the decision of the commission was merely a recommendation to the city council and the city council had responsibility for the final decision, the decision of the commission was not final agency action and was not appealable. Buck v. Park, 839 P.2d 498 (Colo. App. 1992).

A temporary civil protection order issued by a county under § 13-14-104.5 (1)(a) is not a final decision for purposes of review under section (a)(4) of this rule. Martin v. Arapahoe County Court, 2016 COA 154, 405 P.3d 356.

Absent a showing of prejudice, the premature filing of an appeal does not preclude the court from addressing the case on its merits. Save Park County v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 969 P.2d 711 (Colo. App. 1998), aff'd on other grounds, 990 P.2d 35 (Colo. 1999).

Certiorari review is not appropriate to review the decision of a sheriff or a chief of police denying an application for a concealed weapons permit. Miller v. Collier, 878 P.2d 141 (Colo. App. 1994).

The scope of this rule includes prison disciplinary proceedings. Mariani v. Colo. Dept. of Corr., 956 P.2d 625 (Colo. App. 1997).

Applied in Shearer v. Bd. of Trustees of Firemen's Pension Fund, 121 Colo. 592, 218 P.2d 753 (1950); Rothwell v. Coffin, 122 Colo. 140, 220 P.2d 1063 (1950); Bacon v. Steigman, 123 Colo. 62, 225 P.2d 1046 (1950); Berger v. People, 123 Colo. 403, 231 P.2d 799, cert. denied, 342 U.S. 837, 72 S. Ct. 62, 96 L. Ed. 633 (1951); Mardi, Inc. v. City & County of Denver, 151 Colo. 28, 375 P.2d 682 (1962); Fort Collins-Loveland Water Dist. v. City of Fort Collins, 174 Colo. 79, 482 P.2d 986 (1971); North Kiowa-Bijou Mgt. Dist. v. Ground Water Comm'n, 180 Colo. 313, 505 P.2d 377 (1973); City of Lakewood v. District Court, 181 Colo. 69, 506 P.2d 1228 (1973); Ross v. Fire & Police Pension Ass'n, 713 P.2d 1304 (Colo. 1986); Gallagher v. County Court, 759 P.2d 859 (Colo. App. 1988).

B. Extent of Review.

Scope of review strictly limited. The scope of review granted to the district court in a proceeding under section (a)(4) of this rule is strictly limited. City of Colo. Springs v. District Court, 184 Colo. 177, 519 P.2d 325 (1974).

It is beyond the scope of this rule to challenge administrative regulations on the grounds that such rules are vague and overbroad. Mariani v. Colo. Dept. of Corr., 956 P.2d 625 (Colo. App. 1997).

In an appeal from a judgment entered in a proceeding under this rule, the court of appeals is in the same position as the district court concerning the review of the county court proceeding. Empiregas, Inc. of Pueblo v. County Court, 713 P.2d 937 (Colo. App. 1985).

In reviewing a local board of adjustment's decision pursuant to section (a)(4) of this rule, the court of appeals calls into question the decision of the board itself, not the district court's determination on review. The review is based solely on the record that was before the board, and the decision must be affirmed unless there is no competent evidence in the record to support it such that it was arbitrary or capricious. The court considers whether the board abused its discretion or exceeded its jurisdiction, as well as whether it applied an erroneous legal standard. City & County of Denver v. Bd. of Adjustment, 55 P.3d 252 (Colo. App. 2002); Lieb v. Trimble, 183 P.3d 702 (Colo. App. 2008).

This rule limits the issuance of orders in the nature of prohibition to cases where an inferior tribunal has exceeded its jurisdiction or abused its discretion in exercising judicial or quasi-judicial functions, and where there is no plain, speedy, or adequate remedy. Banking Bd. v. District Court, 177 Colo. 77, 492 P.2d 837 (1972).

In other words the scope of review is limited to the inquiry as to whether jurisdiction has been exceeded, discretion abused, or authority regularly pursued. City Council v. Hanley, 19 Colo. App. 390, 75 P. 600 (1904); Graeb v. State Bd. of Med. Exam'rs, 55 Colo. 523, 139 P. 1099 (1913); Chenoweth v. State Bd. of Med. Exam'rs, 57 Colo. 74, 141 P. 132 (1914); Thompson v. State Bd. of Med. Exam'rs, 59 Colo. 549, 151 P. 436 (1915); State Bd. of Med. Exam'rs v. Noble, 65 Colo. 410, 177 P. 141 (1918); State Bd. of Med. Exam'rs v. Boulls, 69 Colo. 361, 195 P. 325 (1920); State Bd. of Med. Exam'rs v. Brown, 70 Colo. 116, 198 P. 274 (1921); White v. Andrew, 70 Colo. 50, 197 P. 564 (1921); Dilliard v. State Bd. of Med. Exam'rs, 69 Colo. 575, 196 P. 866 (1921); Doran v. State Bd. of Med. Exam'rs, 78 Colo. 153, 240 P. 335 (1925); State Bd. of Med. Exam'rs v. Spears, 79 Colo. 588, 247 P. 563 (1926); Bd. of Comm'rs v. Dunlap, 83 Colo. 360, 265 P. 94 (1928); Pub. Utils. Comm'n v. City of Loveland, 87 Colo. 556, 289 P. 1090 (1930); State Bd. of Dental Exam'rs v. Savelle, 90 Colo. 177, 8 P.2d 693 (1932); Pub. Utils. Comm'n v. Erie, 92 Colo. 151, 18 P.2d 906 (1933); City & County of Denver v. People ex rel. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 129 Colo. 41, 266 P.2d 1105 (1954).

The court can review the action of the state board of medical examiners only upon the question of jurisdiction or great abuse of discretion. White v. Andrew, 70 Colo. 50, 197 P. 564 (1921).

The remedy is restricted in its inquiry to jurisdictional questions and to a manifest abuse of discretion. State Civil Serv. Comm'n v. Cummings, 83 Colo. 379, 265 P. 687 (1928).

Under section (a)(4) the court is limited to a determination of questions of jurisdiction and abuse of discretion. Hawkins v. Hunt, 113 Colo. 468, 160 P.2d 357 (1945); Shupe v. Boulder County, 230 P.3d 1269 (Colo. App. 2010).

A review of the action of the state board of health in revoking a license for the operation of a chiropractic sanitarium was held to be limited to the inquiry as to whether jurisdiction has been exceeded, discretion abused, or authority regularly pursued. Spears Free Clinic & Hosp. for Poor Children v. State Bd. of Health, 122 Colo. 147, 220 P.2d 872 (1950).

The sole matter before a trial court under the record is governed by this rule and limits the inquiry to a determination of whether the licensing authority has exceeded its jurisdiction or abused its discretion. Bacher v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 136 Colo. 67, 314 P.2d 607 (1957).

Under this rule the function of the district court is to determine whether the respondent authorities have exceeded their jurisdiction or abused their discretion. La Junta Easy Shops, Inc. v. Hendren, 164 Colo. 55, 432 P.2d 754 (1967).

The breadth of the district court's review does not extend further than to determine whether the inferior tribunal has exceeded its jurisdiction or abused its discretion. City of Colo. Springs v. District Court, 184 Colo. 177, 519 P.2d 325 (1974).

An appellate court's review under section (a)(4) is limited to a determination of whether the governmental body or officer has exceeded its jurisdiction or abused its discretion, based on the evidence in the record before the defendant body or officer. Since the question is whether there is adequate support for the decision reached by the administrative tribunal, the appellate court is in the same position as the district court in reviewing an administrative decision under section (a)(4). Ad Two, Inc. v. City & County of Denver, 9 P.3d 373 (Colo. 2000); Covered Bridge, Inc. v. Town of Vail, 197 P.3d 281 (Colo. App. 2008).

Review of a prison disciplinary decision is limited to whether the prison officials exceeded their jurisdiction or abused their discretion. Under this standard, the decision of the prison officials must be upheld if there is "some evidence" to support it. Washington v. Atherton, 6 P.3d 346 (Colo. App. 2000).

Consideration of evidence relevant to jurisdiction proper. In determining whether the board had exceeded its jurisdiction or abused its discretion, the trial court properly gave consideration to evidence of material facts which could not escape notice, and did not substitute the decision of the board. Bd. of Adjustment v. Abe Perlmutter Constr. Co., 131 Colo. 230, 280 P.2d 1107 (1955).

The merits of the case are not involved. On proceedings to review an order of an administrative body the only questions presented are: Did the board exceed its jurisdiction, or abuse its discretion? The merits of the controversy are not involved. State Bd. of Med. Exam'rs v. Noble, 65 Colo. 410, 177 P. 141 (1918).

It brings up no issue of law or fact not involved in the question of jurisdiction. Under no circumstances can the review be extended to the merits. Upon every question except the mere question of power, the action of the inferior tribunal is final and conclusive. State Bd. of Med. Exam'rs v. Brown, 70 Colo. 116, 198 P. 274 (1921).

Whether a decision on the merits is right or wrong is not within the issue. State Bd. of Med. Exam'rs v. Brown, 70 Colo. 116, 198 P. 274 (1921); State Bd. of Med. Exam'rs v. Spears, 79 Colo. 588, 247 P. 563, 54 A.L.R. 1498 (1926).

It does not settle disputed facts. The object of the proceeding is not to settle or determine disputed facts, but to investigate and correct errors of law of a jurisdictional nature, and abuses of discretion. Doran v. State Bd. of Med. Exam'rs, 78 Colo. 153, 240 P. 335 (1925).

A district court could not, in proceedings to determine whether a justice of the peace exceeded his jurisdiction, determine disputed questions of fact. Toland v. Strohl, 147 Colo. 577, 364 P.2d 588 (1961).

Mere irregularities are not reviewable. Phillips County Court v. People ex rel. Chicago, B. & Q. R. R., 55 Colo. 258, 133 P. 752 (1913).

Mere disagreement with a ruling is not sufficient showing of abuse of discretion to require issuance of a writ of prohibition. Bristol v. County Court, 143 Colo. 306, 352 P.2d 785 (1960).

Judgment of lower court will not be rejudged on merits. While power is vested in the courts to review the proceedings of all inferior jurisdictions to correct jurisdictional errors, they will not rejudge their judgments on the merits. The correctional power extends no further than to keep them within the limits of their jurisdiction, and to compel them to exercise it with regularity. Bd. of Aldermen v. Darrow, 13 Colo. 460, 22 P. 784 (1889); State Bd. of Land Comm'rs v. Carpenter, 16 Colo. App. 436, 66 P. 165 (1901).

The district court has no jurisdiction to review the action of a city council in a matter of contest of election of its members, and to determine whether the action of the council in such contested election was justified by the evidence. City Council v. Hanley, 19 Colo. App. 390, 75 P. 600 (1904).

Section (a)(4) not substitute for available statutory review. A party cannot substitute proceedings seeking declaratory and injunctive relief under section (a)(4) for an available avenue of plain, speedy and adequate review prescribed by the general assembly. Claskey v. Klapper, 636 P.2d 682 (Colo. 1981).

Review pursuant to C.R.C.P. 57 is appropriate where section (a)(4) relief is unavailable because the challenged action is legislative or because review of the record is an insufficient remedy. Grant v. District Court, 635 P.2d 201 (Colo. 1981).

The court acted within its discretion in dismissing a claim for declaratory relief under C.R.C.P. 57, because the review provided under this rule had already considered all the issues in that claim. Denver Center for Performing Arts v. Briggs, 696 P.2d 299 (Colo. 1985).

Section (a)(4) cannot be substituted for an appeal. When a county court overruled defendant's motion to vacate the judgment, it had jurisdiction over the subject matter and over the person of the defendant and exercised that jurisdiction regularly. It may be that it ought to have vacated the judgment and that it committed error in not doing so, but this is a matter to be determined by appeal and not by a proceeding under section (a)(4). Pierce v. Hamilton, 55 Colo. 448, 135 P. 796 (1913).

The words "abuse of discretion" in section (a)(4) do not mean such an abuse of discretion as may be committed by a court in overruling a motion to vacate a judgment when the action of the court may be reviewed on appeal, for otherwise an action would lie to review the action of a county court in refusing to set aside a default and vacate a judgment taken thereon in almost any case. Pierce v. Hamilton, 55 Colo. 448, 135 P. 796 (1913).

"Abuse of discretion" does not entail only acts in excess of jurisdiction, and this section is not therefore limited solely to a determination of whether the inferior tribunal exceeded its jurisdiction. Ragsdale v. County Court, 39 Colo. App. 341, 567 P.2d 817 (1977).

Thus, claim of unconstitutionality is not considered. The question of constitutionality of a statute under which the executive department is proceeding is a matter to be raised on appeal after the executive has performed its function. Colo. State Bd. of Med. Exam'rs v. District Court, 138 Colo. 227, 331 P.2d 502 (1958); People ex rel. Orcutt v. District Court, 167 Colo. 162, 445 P.2d 887 (1968); Colo. Dept. of Rev. v. District Court ex rel. County of Adams, 172 Colo. 144, 470 P.2d 864 (1970).

Where the only question before the Colorado courts was the validity of an ordinance, and plaintiff could obtain relief only if the ordinance were held to be invalid, and where his allegations were adequate for this purpose, and that was the issue upon which the case was tried and decided, this rule was not applicable. Heron v. City of Denver, 251 F.2d 119 (10th Cir. 1958).

Contentions of unconstitutionality under this rule provide no basis for jurisdiction in the district court under this rule. People ex rel. Orcutt v. District Court, 167 Colo. 162, 445 P.2d 887 (1968).

De novo review was impermissible under this rule. Hessling v. City of Broomfield, 193 Colo. 124, 563 P.2d 12 (1977).

A trial de novo of the issues in a municipal court cannot be had under the certiorari provisions of this rule. Serra v. Cameron, 133 Colo. 115, 292 P.2d 340 (1956).

In a certiorari proceeding, the reviewing court is to ascertain from the record of the lower tribunal alone whether the inferior tribunal regularly pursued its authority, and thereupon pronounce judgment accordingly. Johnston v. City Council, 177 Colo. 223, 493 P.2d 651 (1972).

In the absence of some showing of facts, either in the petition for review or in the supporting affidavits, which would tend to indicate that the city council's action was arbitrary or an abuse of discretion, the district court's review under section (a)(4) of this rule is limited to the record before it. City of Colo. Springs v. District Court, 184 Colo. 177, 519 P.2d 325 (1974).

Reviewing court on certiorari review of an administrative body's decision is limited to what appeared of record. Ford Leasing Dev. Co. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 186 Colo. 418, 528 P.2d 237 (1974).

District court review under this rule proceeding is limited to the record. Cline v. City of Boulder, 35 Colo. App. 349, 532 P.2d 770 (1975).

In a certiorari proceeding pursuant to section (a)(4), the district court's review is limited to a review of the record before it and introduction of new testimony is not appropriate. Hazelwood v. Saul, 619 P.2d 499 (Colo. 1980).

In reviewing a decision pursuant to this rule, an appellate court must review the decision of the agency rather than the decision of the district court; review of an agency's findings of fact is limited to whether the agency had competent evidence on which to base its decision. Save Park County v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 969 P.2d 711 (Colo. App. 1998), aff'd on other grounds, 990 P.2d 35 (Colo. 1999).

The reviewing court must also determine whether an agency misconstrued or misapplied the law; the agency's interpretation of its own regulations must be reviewed to ensure that it does not amend its regulations in the guise of interpreting them. Save Park County v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 969 P.2d 711 (Colo. App. 1998), aff'd on other grounds, 990 P.2d 35 (Colo. 1999).

Taking testimony is unnecessary for review. In the course of hearing under a writ of certiorari, this section sets up the correct procedure. Essentially it is a review proceeding of an inferior tribunal and thus testimony is not in order. Toland v. Strohl, 147 Colo. 577, 364 P.2d 588 (1961).

District court on its own motion may not order a remand to supplement the record where the evidence had been presented on all issues necessary for a determination of the validity of the action taken and the record is complete. Cline v. City of Boulder, 35 Colo. App. 349, 532 P.2d 770 (1975); Garland v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 660 P.2d 20 (Colo. App. 1982).

Court cannot interfere with commission's findings if supported by competent evidence. The scope of review in certiorari proceedings, and the authority of courts to interfere with the findings of tribunals vested with exclusive jurisdiction to determine particular issues has been judicially defined. The reviewing court cannot consider whether the commission's findings are right or wrong, substitute its judgment for that of the commission, or interfere in any manner with the commission's findings if there is any competent evidence to support the same. State Civil Serv. Comm'n v. Hazlett, 119 Colo. 173, 201 P.2d 616 (1948).

The lawful determination of a properly constituted authority will not be interfered with when the record discloses competent evidence on which it is based, and the action of the inferior tribunal appears to be neither arbitrary nor capricious. Marker v. City of Colo. Springs, 138 Colo. 485, 336 P.2d 305 (1959).

Where civil service commission, acting in a quasi-judicial capacity, reviews record of proceedings before city manager of safety for purpose of determining whether police officers were properly discharged, and the evidence before the manager substantiated the charge and supported his findings and conclusions, the commission is bound by the manager's supported findings and may not adopt different conclusions to hold a de novo trial without expressly determining that the findings are not supported by the evidence, or that errors of law have occurred. Turner v. City & County of Denver, 146 Colo. 336, 361 P.2d 631 (1961).

The authority of the court and the scope of its review in certiorari proceedings is limited to a determination of whether there is any competent evidence to support the decision of the inferior tribunal. Civil Serv. Comm'n v. Doyle, 162 Colo. 1, 424 P.2d 368 (1967); Cooper v. Civil Serv. Comm'n, 43 Colo. App. 258, 604 P.2d 1186 (1979); Carney v. Civil Serv. Comm'n, 30 P.3d 861 (Colo. App. 2001).

While the reviewing court can determine that a portion of the test established by the civil service commission was arbitrary and capricious, the court cannot determine the remedy. Determination of a remedy is left to the commission. Carney v. Civil Serv. Comm'n, 30 P.3d 861 (Colo. App. 2001).

The proper function of a district court under this rule is to affirm a city council where there is ''any competent evidence'' to support the council's decision. Bauer v. City of Wheat Ridge, 182 Colo. 324, 513 P.2d 203 (1973).

A court subjecting a rezoning decision of a city zoning authority to this rule review must uphold the decision unless there is no competent evidence to support it. Corper v. City & County of Denver, 191 Colo. 252, 552 P.2d 13 (1976); Pub. Emp. Ret. Ass'n v. Stermole, 874 P.2d 444 (Colo. App. 1993); City of Colo. Springs v. Givan, 897 P.2d 753 (Colo. 1995); IBC Denver II, LLC v. City of Wheat Ridge, 183 P.3d 714 (Colo. App. 2008).

An administrative finding of fact must be upheld on review under section (a)(4) where competent evidence supports it in the record. Denver Ctr. for Performing Arts v. Briggs, 696 P.2d 299 (Colo. 1985); Elec. Power Res. v. City & County of Denver, 737 P.2d 822 (Colo. 1987); Fedder v. McCurdy, 768 P.2d 711 (Colo. App. 1989); Neighbors For A Better Approach v. Nepa, 770 P.2d 1390 (Colo. 1989).

Record must clearly show abuse of discretion. To authorize a court finding that a municipal zoning board has grossly abused its discretion in failing to restrict an owner in the use of his property, the record should clearly show such abuse when the complaint is made by those who seek a benefit to their own properties by the imposition of restrictions on others. Bd. of Adjustment v. Handley, 105 Colo. 180, 95 P.2d 823 (1939).

In a proper case for the issuance of the writ, the extent of the review by the district court should have been to ascertain from the record whether the county court regularly pursued its authority. Morefield v. Koehn, 53 Colo. 367, 127 P. 234 (1912).

The determination of whether there is competent evidence to support a lower tribunal's decision is made upon examination of the record of administrative proceedings, including a transcript of the testimony and other evidence before the inferior tribunal. Civil Serv. Comm'n v. Doyle, 162 Colo. 1, 424 P.2d 368 (1967).

Abuse of discretion means there is no competent evidence to support the decision. Ross v. Fire & Police Pension Ass'n, 713 P.2d 1304 (Colo. 1986); Bentley v. Valco, Inc., 741 P.2d 1266 (Colo. App. 1987).

A petition for certiorari showing on its face that no relief could be granted, was properly dismissed without further inquiry. Berry v. State Bd. of Parole, 148 Colo. 547, 367 P.2d 338 (1961), cert. denied, 370 U.S. 927, 82 S. Ct. 1569, 8 L. Ed. 2d 507 (1962).

In order for a court to set aside a decision of an administrative body on certiorari review, there must be no competent evidence to support the decision. Ford Leasing Dev. Co. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 186 Colo. 418, 528 P.2d 237 (1974).

Court review of agency decision under this rule limited to matters contained within the record of the proceeding before the agency. Fedder v. McCurdy, 768 P.2d 711 (Colo. App. 1989).

Burden of providing record on petitioner. In appealing an administrative decision to the district court, the burden of providing an adequate record is upon the administrative agency on the order to show cause from the district court. Civil Serv. Comm'n v. Doyle, 174 Colo. 149, 483 P.2d 380 (1971).

Burden of proof on petitioner. A party seeking to invoke prohibition to restrain county court from proceeding in a pending action has the burden of establishing facts justifying its application. Bristol v. County Court, 143 Colo. 306, 352 P.2d 785 (1960).

A zoning ordinance is presumed to be valid, and one assailing it bears the burden of overcoming that presumption, and the courts must indulge every intendment in favor of its validity. Huneke v. Glaspy, 155 Colo. 593, 396 P.2d 453 (1964).

Petitioners must show substantial prejudice in a rezoning decision by the city council acting as a quasi-judicial decision-maker to overcome a presumption of integrity, honesty, and impartiality. Whitelaw v. Denver City Council, 2017 COA 47, 405 P.3d 433.

When a city council relies on competent evidence to determine that rezoning is in compliance with justifying circumstances, its decision is not demonstrated to be arbitrary and capricious. Whitelaw v. Denver City Council, 2017 COA 47, 405 P.3d 433.

One claiming the invalidity of a rezoning ordinance has the burden of establishing its invalidity beyond a reasonable doubt. Corper v. City & County of Denver, 191 Colo. 252, 552 P.2d 13 (1976).

Before relief can be granted under section (a)(4), the plaintiff must prove that the inferior tribunal lacked jurisdiction or abused its discretion. Clary v. County Court, 651 P.2d 908 (Colo. App. 1982).

Threshold showing required to avoid strict application of rule requiring record review only. The burden is on the person seeking review to show that either there are imperfections in the record as well as resulting prejudice or that members of the board improperly considered evidence not before the board or that members engaged in improper conduct affecting the result of the board. Whelden v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 782 P.2d 853 (Colo. App. 1989).

Incomplete record leaving nothing to review requires reversal. Imperfection of a determination of an administrative board which leaves no avenue for a court to take in reviewing the matter, and which furnishes no basis upon which to resolve whether the board may or may not be sustained, requires reversal. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Salardino, 136 Colo. 421, 318 P.2d 596 (1957).

In absence of record, taking testimony on jurisdiction not improper. A district court could hardly determine whether a justice of the peace exceeded his jurisdiction when it has no record before it. In the circumstances, the court's action in hearing testimony bearing on the issue of jurisdiction alone was not improper. Toland v. Strohl, 147 Colo. 577, 364 P.2d 588 (1961).

Civil service commission disciplinary decision upheld unless gross abuse of discretion. The discipline imposed by a civil service commission is a matter peculiarly within its area of expertise, and will not be interfered with by the courts in the absence of a gross abuse of discretion. Ramirez v. Civil Serv. Comm'n, 42 Colo. App. 383, 594 P.2d 1067 (1979).

Review of quasi-judicial action. Decision of a hearing officer for the Denver career service board is sustained when it is shown that the findings are supported by ''any competent evidence''. Jimerson v. Prendergast, 697 P.2d 804 (Colo. App. 1985); Mayerle v. Civil Serv. Comm'n, 738 P.2d 1198 (Colo. App. 1987); Getsch v. Hawker, 748 P.2d 1304 (Colo. App. 1987).

Role of a district court on review of a rezoning application is to affirm the findings of fact of a city council if there is ''any competent evidence'' in the record to support the findings. Dillon Cos. v. City of Boulder, 183 Colo. 117, 515 P.2d 627 (1973).

Ex parte exchanges may not arbitrarily be screened from appellate scrutiny. Ex parte exchanges between an advocate and an adjudicatory tribunal may not arbitrarily be screened from appellate scrutiny. Peoples Natural Gas Div. v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 626 P.2d 159 (Colo. 1981).

Appellate court is in same position as district court when reviewing an administrative decision under this rule. The appropriate consideration for an appellate court is whether there is adequate evidentiary support for the decision reached by the administrative tribunal, not whether there is adequate evidentiary support for the lower court's decision on reviewing the record. City of Colo. Springs v. Givan, 897 P.2d 753 (Colo. 1995); Whitelaw v. Denver City Council, 2017 COA 47, 405 P.3d 433.

An administrative body's decision may be reversed only if there is no competent evidence to support the decision. McCann v. Lettig, 928 P.2d 816 (Colo. App. 1996).

"No competent evidence" means that there is an absence of evidence in the record to support the ultimate decision of the administrative body, and hence, the decision can only be explained as an arbitrary and capricious exercise of authority. McCann v. Lettig, 928 P.2d 816 (Colo. App. 1996).

"No competent evidence" means that the ultimate decision of the administrative body is so devoid of evidentiary support that it can only be explained as an arbitrary and capricious exercise of authority. Cruzen v. Career Serv. Bd. of City & County of Denver, 899 P.2d 373 (Colo. App. 1995); Bd. of County Comm'rs of Routt County v. O'Dell, 920 P.2d 48 (Colo. 1996); Carney v. Civil Serv. Comm'n, 30 P.3d 861 (Colo. App. 2001); Whitelaw v. Denver City Council, 2017 COA 47, 405 P.3d 433.

Court of appeals should not have reweighed the evidence in section (a)(4) action merely because the evidence considered by the board was documentary in nature. The competent evidence standard of review should have governed. Bd. of Comm'rs of Routt County v. O'Dell, 920 P.2d 48 (Colo. 1996).

A complete written transcript of the evidentiary phase of a proceeding before an agency is not required in order for the court to conduct a meaningful review of that agency's actions. Whether a review of an agency's actions is meaningful depends on whether the record contains sufficient competent evidence to support its decision. Martinez v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 992 P.2d 692 (Colo. App. 1999).

Meaningful review requires that there be a record that accurately and fully reflects the evidence relied upon and the findings of fact and conclusions of law from the agency's proceedings, so that a reviewing court is able to determine, upon the state of the record before it, whether the agency's actions were arbitrary and capricious. Martinez v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 992 P.2d 692 (Colo. App. 1999).

It is not unduly burdensome to require the plaintiff to produce an affidavit containing sufficient allegations and evidence to raise questions concerning whether competent evidence had been presented in support of an agency's decision. Martinez v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 992 P.2d 692 (Colo. App. 1999).

Scope of review on appeal is limited to determining whether the tribunal exceeded its jurisdiction or abused its discretion. Coates v. City of Cripple Creek, 865 P.2d 924 (Colo. App. 1993); Abbott v. Bd. of County Comm'rs of Weld County, 895 P.2d 1165 (Colo. App. 1995); McCann v. Lettig, 928 P.2d 816 (Colo. App. 1996).

Review of the decision of an administrative law judge is limited to a determination of whether the ALJ exceeded his or her jurisdiction or abused his or her authority. City & County of Denver v. Fey Concert Co., 960 P.2d 657 (Colo. 1998).

Section (a)(4)(I) does not provide the judicial standards of review of a decision of the public utilities commission; the controlling standards of a district court's review of a public utilities commission decision are provided in § 40-6-115. Ace West Trucking v. P.U.C., 788 P.2d 755 (Colo. 1990).

Inappropriate application of section (a)(4)(I) not reversible error. District court's use of incorrect standard of review of a decision of the public utilities commission did not constitute reversible error where record as a whole demonstrated that the court could not have otherwise resolved the issues applying the correct standard of review. Ace West Trucking v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 788 P.2d 755 (Colo. 1990).

The proceedings authorized by section (a)(4) cannot be substituted for regular appellate procedures and this rule may not be used to review pretrial evidentiary rulings. People v. Adams County Court, 793 P.2d 655 (Colo. App. 1990).

The trial court's scope of review in proceeding under this rule was strictly limited to determining whether the board for the fire and police pension association, in conducting a hearing under the Board's rules, exceeded its jurisdiction or abused its discretion. Pueblo v. Fire & Police Pension Ass'n, 827 P.2d 597 (Colo. App. 1992).

In reviewing action of administrative agency, court may consider whether agency's hearing officer misconstrued or misapplied law in making a determination as to abuse of discretion. Stamm v. City & County of Denver, 856 P.2d 54 (Colo. App. 1993).

When interpreting an ordinance, a court may review its other provisions in order to construe the disputed section in context. Humana, Inc. v. Bd. of Adjustment, 537 P.2d 741 (Colo. 1975); Abbott v. Bd. of County Comm'rs of Weld County, 895 P.2d 1165 (Colo. App. 1995).

The construction of an ordinance by administrative officials charged with its enforcement should be given deference by the courts and if there is a reasonable basis for the administrative agency's application of the law, the decision may not be set aside on review. Abbott v. Bd. of County Comm'rs of Weld County, 895 P.2d 1165 (Colo. App. 1995); Covered Bridge, Inc. v. Town of Vail, 197 P.3d 281 (Colo. App. 2008).

The court may not set aside an administrative board's interpretation of the law if it is supported by a reasonable basis. Lieb v. Trimble, 183 P.3d 702 (Colo. App. 2008); Covered Bridge, Inc. v. Town of Vail, 197 P.3d 281 (Colo. App. 2008).

Appeals involving sufficiency of the evidence determinations are generally discouraged. People v. Holder, 658 P.2d 870 (Colo. 1983); Abbott v. County Ct. in & for County of Grand, 886 P.2d 730 (Colo. 1994).

Judicial review of prison disciplinary proceedings must take into account the correctional setting of the proceeding and state's interest in safe and efficient operation of its prison system. Review of a prison disciplinary decision is limited to whether the prison officials exceeded their jurisdiction or abused their discretion. A reviewing court must uphold the decision of the prison officials if the decision is supported by some evidence in the record. The scope of judicial review in this type of case is very limited. Thomas v. Colo. Dept. of Corr., 117 P.3d 7 (Colo. App. 2004).

C. Illustrative Cases.

Challenge must await exercise of statutory duties. In an action by package liquor licensees to compel the secretary of state to prohibit other licensees from making deliveries to customers, there was nothing upon which certiorari can operate where there are no proceedings before the secretary of state for the court to review, where there is no complaint of excess of jurisdiction, and the secretary of state not having acted at all, cannot be said to have abused his discretion. Ahern v. Baker, 148 Colo. 408, 366 P.2d 366 (1961).

After the agriculture commissioner has determined the amount of the assessment and called for collection, if payment is not forthcoming, then the commissioner may file a claim for collection of the assessment. It is at such time that the corporate respondents have a full and complete opportunity to challenge the assessment. Until the commissioner makes a determination of the amount of the assessment, the judiciary has no jurisdiction to interfere where the commissioner is merely exercising his statutory duties. People ex rel. Orcutt v. District Court, 167 Colo. 162, 445 P.2d 887 (1968).

Restricted statutory review was not adequate remedy at law. Where by the terms of the ordinance there could be no dispute but that the Denver board of adjustment, having resort solely to the terms of the ordinance, would be bound to find that the building permit was in error, and in any further "appeal" under the ordinance prescribed certiorari procedure, the court would be confined to a review of the record upon that same restricted issue under section (a) of this rule, and likewise could only affirm that the permit did not comply with the ordinance terms, plaintiff did not have an "adequate remedy at law" by an ordinance-appeal since the board was powerless, because of its restricted jurisdiction to reverse the revocation of the permit on the grounds of equitable estoppel due to advanced construction or to do anything other than affirm that the permit did not comply with the requirements of the ordinance. City & County of Denver v. Stackhouse, 135 Colo. 289, 310 P.2d 296 (1957).

Failure to exhaust statutory review bars remedy under rule. A claimant who fails to seek a review of an industrial commission order in the district court within the 20-day period specified by § 8-53-107 is thereafter barred from asking judicial review and cannot obtain what amounts to similar relief by asserting a right under section (a)(2) and section (4). Vigil v. Indus. Comm'n, 160 Colo. 23, 413 P.2d 904 (1966).

Not applicable where breach of contract alleged. Section (a)(4) of this rule, review in the nature of certiorari, is applicable where a party is attacking an action taken by a board. However, that rule is directed to an action against the board for exceeding its jurisdiction or abusing its discretion, but permits relief only where there is no ''plain, speedy, and adequate remedy'', and thus does not apply where the plaintiffs allege a breach of a preexisting contract. Ebke v. Julesburg Sch. Dist. No. RE-1, 37 Colo. App. 349, 50 P.2d 355 (1976), aff'd on other grounds, 193 Colo. 40, 562 P.2d 419 (1977).

Neither district court nor court of appeals can properly review county court's finding of probable cause in a proceeding under this rule. Zaharia v. County Court ex rel. County of Jefferson, 673 P.2d 378 (Colo. App. 1983).

District court may not review a county court's finding that no probable cause exists. Gallagher v. Arapahoe County Court, 772 P.2d 665 (Colo. App. 1989), cert. denied, 778 P.2d 1370 (Colo. 1989).

District court review of county court judge's denial of motion to recuse is proper under section (a)(4). Kane v. County Court Jefferson County, 192 P.3d 443 (Colo. App. 2008).

Action does not lie to the collector of taxes, either to review his action, or any prior action upon which his own is based, and it would be an anomalous practice to convert an action brought against a county treasurer to restrain the collection of a void tax into an action against the board of county commissioners to review its proceedings in levying the tax, even though, in a proper case, this remedy is appropriate. Insurance Co. of N. Am. v. Bonner, 24 Colo. 220, 49 P. 366 (1897).

No action to compel warrants for moral obligation. Where a city charter forbade the auditor to disburse city funds except in payment of legal obligations, an action could not be maintained to compel him to issue warrants as directed by the city council for the payment of a mere moral obligation. Cross v. McNichols, 118 Colo. 442, 195 P.2d 975 (1948).

District court has jurisdiction to enjoin city from requiring railroads to pay for viaduct construction. Where a city manager is directed to recommend a bill for an ordinance requiring the construction of a viaduct and apportioning the cost as he deems proper and reasonable among the railroads, although relief under this rule is inappropriate insofar as the manager may make changes in his plan for the viaduct or in his apportionment of costs, the district court has jurisdiction to declare that the city is proceeding without authority and to enjoin it from proceeding to require the railroads to pay for construction of the viaduct. Denver & R. G. W. R. R. v. City & County of Denver, 673 P.2d 354 (Colo. 1983).

District court could not entertain city's action under this rule as the city was required to file appeal of county court's dismissal of traffic prosecution pursuant to municipal court rule rather than seek review in district court. City & County of Denver v. Harrell, 759 P.2d 847 (Colo. App. 1988).

Jurisdiction to restrain county judge under disqualification. Where motions were filed in county court to set aside judgments rendered by a former county judge before a presiding county judge who had acted as counsel for the judgment debtors, the presiding judge was disqualified to act on such motions, and it was his duty to certify the matter to the district court, and refusing to do so the district court had jurisdiction by writs of prohibition and certiorari to restrain the county judge from setting aside said judgments and to order him to certify the proceedings to the district court. People ex rel. Brown v. District Court, 26 Colo. 226, 56 P. 1115 (1899).

Judgments of justices of the peace may be reviewed by a proceeding under section (a)(4) from the county court where no appeal is provided by statute. Loloff v. Heath, 31 Colo. 172, 71 P. 1113 (1903).

Review of decision of state board of health. An action under § 13-45-113, providing for a review in the district court of a decision of the state board of health, is a statutory action and not controlled by this rule. Grimm v. State Bd. of Health, 121 Colo. 269, 215 P.2d 324 (1950).

Certiorari lies to state board of public welfare. The appropriate proceeding to review a determination of the state board of public welfare directing payment of benefits to a resident of a federal military reservation is certiorari. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Donoho, 144 Colo. 321, 356 P.2d 267 (1960).

Interlocutory orders in eminent domain reviewable. In eminent domain proceedings, where an order for temporary possession was clearly interlocutory, and an appeal would not lie to review the same, complainants had no plain, speedy or adequate remedy at law, and certiorari will lie. Swift v. Smith, 119 Colo. 126, 201 P.2d 609 (1948); Potashnik v. Pub. Serv. Co., 126 Colo. 98, 247 P.2d 137 (1952).

The proper proceeding for relief from an interlocutory order in eminent domain actions is by certiorari, when directed to an endangered fundamentally substantive and substantial right. Town of Glendale v. City & County of Denver, 137 Colo. 188, 322 P.2d 1053 (1958).

Prison board proceedings reviewable. This section is an authorization to test the legality of the prison board proceedings in the state courts whereby good time credits were forfeited by the prison board following the return of the appellant to prison after an escape. Henry v. Patterson, 363 F.2d 443 (10th Cir. 1966).

Discretionary release of dangerous patient from state penitentiary reviewable. For a patient confined in the state penitentiary after being found not guilty of murder by reason of insanity and transferred from the state hospital as a dangerous patient, petitioner is entitled to attack the superintendent's good faith and discretion in failing to initiate the statutory proceedings to certify the patient sane by resort to the procedures outlined in Parker v. People (108 Colo. 362, 117 P.2d 316 (1941)) or in section (a)(4) of this rule. Pigg v. Patterson, 370 F.2d 101 (10th Cir. 1966).

Administrative acts of parole board not reviewable. The action of a parole board is type of administrative decision not reviewable by certiorari. Berry v. State Bd. of Parole, 148 Colo. 547, 367 P.2d 338 (1961), cert. denied, 370 U.S. 927, 82 S. Ct. 1569, 8 L. Ed. 2d 507 (1962).

The referral of an inmate for placement in a community corrections program is not reviewable under section (a)(4). Rivera-Bottzeck v. Ortiz, 134 P.3d 517 (Colo. App. 2006).

The dismissal of personnel under home rule charter not reviewable. Where the city charter of a home rule city does not provide for a civil service system, the charter places authority in the city manager for hiring and firing police department personnel, and there are no provisions in the charter for hearing or review of dismissals ordered by the city manager, the district court has no jurisdiction to review the city manager's action in dismissing a police officer on certiorari. Hoffman v. City of Fort Collins, 30 Colo. App. 123, 489 P.2d 355 (1971).

Whether county court abused its discretion in failing to allow a plaintiff to recall witnesses at a preliminary hearing is properly before district court. Zaharia v. County Court ex rel. County of Jefferson, 673 P.2d 378 (Colo. App. 1983).

Quasi-judicial acts of city council are properly reviewable. When deciding upon the proper form of judicial review, acts of a city council which had the earmarks of quasi-judicial proceedings, i.e., notice to individual landowners, hearings, and decision-making by the application of facts to specified criteria established by law, were properly reviewed under section (a)(4). Margolis v. District Court, 638 P.2d 297 (Colo. 1981).

Ordering cessation of waste disposal at landfill is quasi-judicial. In ordering the cessation of hazardous waste and sewage sludge disposal at a landfill, the county commissioners were adjudicating the rights and obligations of only the parties involved, which is quasi-judicial action. City & County of Denver v. Eggert, 647 P.2d 216 (Colo. 1982).

Sale of real estate by city council not a judicial or quasi-judicial action subject to review because there is no state or local law requiring city council to apply certain criteria before selecting a buyer. Walsenburg Sand & Gravel Co. v. City Council of Walsenburg, 160 P.3d 297 (Colo. App. 2007).

Individual or public may exercise remedy from civil service orders. Certiorari from an order of the civil service commission of Denver is available on behalf of an aggrieved employee, and the public, the city and county of Denver, acting through its proper officers in the public interest, may exercise the remedy extended to individuals even though specific provision is not made therefor in the charter. The rules of civil procedure are broad enough to cover this condition. Turner v. City & County of Denver, 146 Colo. 336, 361 P.2d 631 (1961).

Plaintiffs' complaint for breach of contract should not have been dismissed based on exclusivity of review under this section because the board of county commissioners, who denied the plaintiffs' claim was not acting as a quasi-judicial body. Montez v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 674 P.2d 973 (Colo. App. 1983).

It is the nature of the decision rendered by the governmental body and the process by which that decision was reached that is the predominant consideration in determining whether the body has exercised a quasi-judicial function, and not the existence of a legislative scheme mandating notice and a hearing. Cherry Hills Resort Dev. Co. v. City of Cherry Hills Vill., 757 P.2d 622 (Colo. 1988); Widder v. Durango Sch. Dist. No. 9-R, 85 P.3d 518 (Colo. 2004).

If the governmental decision is likely to adversely affect the protected interests of specific individuals, and if a decision is to be reached through the application of preexisting legal standards or policy considerations to present or past facts, then the governmental body appears to be acting in a quasi-judicial capacity. Cherry Hills Resort Dev. Co. v. City of Cherry Hills Vill., 757 P.2d 622 (Colo. 1988); Widder v. Durango Sch. Dist. No. 9-R, 85 P.3d 518 (Colo. 2004).

A school district's decision about whether to terminate an employee who claims that he acted in good faith and in compliance with a conduct and discipline code involves a determination of the rights, duties, or obligations of specific individuals on the basis of presently existing standards to past or present facts. Widder v. Durango Sch. Dist. No. 9-R, 85 P.3d 518 (Colo. 2004).

Dual incorporation subject to jurisdiction. The county court was acting improperly in allowing both incorporations to proceed simultaneously, and it was proper for the district court to entertain an action to enforce this priority of jurisdiction, and to enter its order staying proceedings. Wiltgen v. Berg, 164 Colo. 139, 435 P.2d 378 (1967).

Court cannot prohibit duties where statute provides for review. Where the state board of medical examiners is proceeding pursuant to its statutory authority, a trial court has no authority to issue an absolute writ prohibiting the board from performing the duties imposed upon it by law, where a statute provides for reconsideration by the board of any orders issued by it and court review of any action taken in revoking a physician's license. Colo. State Bd. of Med. Exam'rs v. District Court, 138 Colo. 227, 331 P.2d 502 (1958).

Court lacks jurisdiction to compel stay in violation of statute. No discretion is afforded the annexing municipality. Section 31-8-118 (1), providing that judicial review shall not stay the application of annexation ordinances, is mandatory and therefore, absent a finding of inapplicability or unconstitutionality, the district court lacks jurisdiction to order the city to disobey the clear mandate of the statute. City of Westminster v. District Court, 167 Colo. 263, 447 P.2d 537 (1968).

No abuse of discretion where commissioner had not yet acted. There could be no abuse of discretion by the agriculture commissioner in conducting a hearing, for he had not yet acted when the order in the nature of prohibition was issued by the district court. The only basis which would support the district court's action would be that the commissioner lacked jurisdiction to proceed, and it is clear that there could be no such finding for the reason that the commissioner did and does have jurisdiction — sole and exclusive original jurisdiction. People ex rel. Orcutt v. District Court, 167 Colo. 162, 445 P.2d 887 (1968).

By holding a suspension hearing upon being advised that gambling activities had occurred on the licensed premises in violation of statute and departmental rule and regulation, the director of revenue was proceeding within his power, authority, and jurisdiction. The director had not yet acted in any manner whatsoever to the prejudice of the rights of the licensees. The trial court's rule prohibiting the director from proceeding with the hearing presumed that respondents' constitutional rights might be violated because a criminal proceeding had been previously commenced. No court can presume public officers will, in the performance of their duties, conduct their offices in an unlawful manner so as to deprive affected persons of their constitutional rights. The writ of prohibition was prematurely invoked in the trial court by respondents. People ex rel. Heckers v. District Court, 170 Colo. 533, 463 P.2d 310 (1970).

Eminent domain order was not abuse of discretion. In a proceeding in the nature of prohibition brought pursuant to this rule, the trial court was held not to have exceeded its jurisdiction or abused its discretion in denying motion to dismiss condemnation proceedings and in finding that the parties to the condemnation proceedings had failed to reach an agreement as to the purchase price of the land thereby giving the trial court jurisdiction over such proceedings. Old Timers Baseball Ass'n v. Housing Auth., 122 Colo. 597, 224 P.2d 219 (1950).

Denial of pension not supported by evidence. The firemen's pension fund board of trustees did not exceed its jurisdiction nor abuse its discretion in denying the application for retirement and pension where the findings were based on conflicting evidence. Hubbard v. Pueblo Firemen's Pension Fund, 150 Colo. 495, 374 P.2d 492 (1962).

Decision of zoning authority not beyond its jurisdiction. The district court correctly determined that the board of adjustment did not exceed its jurisdiction or abuse its discretion when it allowed homeowner to repair stock car in his garage. A reviewing court should not lightly find an abuse of discretion where a zoning authority refuses to restrict an owner's use of his property upon the complaint of persons seeking to benefit their own property by imposing restrictions on another's use of his property. Shumate v. Zimmerman, 166 Colo. 488, 444 P.2d 872 (1968).

The director of the building department lawfully issued the permit in conformance with the practice and ordinances in effect at the time of the application; that the director's letter attempting to limit the height of the contemplated structure, and thus give effect to the height limitations of the ''mountain view ordinance'' adopted after the permit was issued, was based upon a strained and unrealistic interpretation of the nature of the permit. The permittee justifiably changed his position in reliance on the permit to his detriment, thus, in ordering the director to recognize the construction permit as a general building permit, not foundation permit, the board of appeals was acting within its delegated jurisdiction, and in so doing it did not abuse its discretion. Crawford v. McLaughlin, 172 Colo. 366, 473 P.2d 725 (1970).

The record shows that proper notice was given, that full public hearings were held, and that all of the procedural aspects required by ordinance and due process of law were followed meticulously by the city. The hearings did not produce any unanimity of opinion as to the desirability of the rezoning, but there was more than ample support in the evidence to warrant the council's conclusion that the intent and aims of the ordinance were well met by the proposed plan of the church. Plaintiffs, on the other hand, fell far short of showing that they had been deprived of any reasonable use of their property by operation of the zoning ordinance. As a matter of law the city council did not act unreasonably, arbitrarily, or abuse its discretion. Moore v. City of Boulder, 29 Colo. App. 248, 484 P.2d 134 (1971).

Sufficient standards in county zoning resolution for denial of special use. Where a county zoning resolution sets out general standards for granting or denying a special use, which include the requirements that the proposed use: (1) Will be in harmony and compatible with the character of the surrounding areas and neighborhood; (2) will be consistent with the county comprehensive plan; (3) will not result in an over-intensive use of land; (4) will not have a material adverse effect on community capital improvement programs; (5) will not require a level of community facilities and services greater than that which is available; (6) will not result in undue traffic congestion or traffic hazards; (7) will not cause significant air, water, or noise pollution; (8) will be adequately landscaped, buffered, and screened; and (9) will not otherwise be detrimental to the health, safety, or welfare of the present or future inhabitants of the county; and also provides that if a special use is granted, the commissioners may impose such conditions and safeguards as are necessary to insure compliance with these standards, these provisions provide sufficient standards for the denial of a special use. C & M Sand & Gravel v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 673 P.2d 1013 (Colo. App. 1983).

Rezoning decision. The determination of whether a council reasonably applied statutory criteria in exercising its statutory power to rezone involves a consideration of whether the council abused its discretion or exceeded the bounds of its jurisdiction and is properly resolved in a certiorari proceeding under section (a)(4). Snyder v. City of Lakewood, 189 Colo. 421, 542 P.2d 371 (1975).

Landowner with land adjacent to or in vicinity of rezoned land may proceed under this rule. A landowner has standing to challenge a rezoning and then to seek review of the zoning authority's action under section (a)(4) if his land is adjacent to or in the vicinity of the land being rezoned, even though he may not live within the territory of the zoning authority. City of Thornton v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 42 Colo. App. 102, 595 P.2d 264 (1979), aff'd, 629 P.2d 605 (Colo. 1981); Whitelaw v. Denver City Council, 2017 COA 47, 405 P.3d 433.

Plain language of zoning code authorizes zoning authorities of municipality, including planning commission, to review and deny the development plan of a permitted use. Because zoning code can and does grant such authority to the planning commission, the commission was authorized to deny a permitted use by means of the review criteria and, in doing so, did not abuse its discretion or exceed its jurisdiction. City of Colo. Springs v. Securcare Self Storage, Inc., 10 P.3d 1244 (Colo. 2000).

City properly denied property owner's subdivision application, and district court properly rejected property owner's challenge to denial under section (a)(4). "Geologic condition" or "natural hazard", as used in the city's zoning code, includes threats of flooding and mud flows from a diverted natural waterway. Evidence in the record supports city's conclusion that the subject parcel was threatened by flooding and mud flow, which required mitigation. City rightly concluded that relevant provision of the code allows subdivision approval to be conditioned on mitigation of public safety risks. This flooding risk potentially endangers public health, safety, and welfare. The risk remains intertwined with both the geologic feature of the area and natural events, although water would overflow from a diversionary structure built by the city. City properly denied application because flooding risk from diverted creek required mitigation of the geologic conditions and natural hazards threatening the subject property for which the application did not provide. Alpenhof, LLC v. City of Ouray, 2013 COA 9, 297 P.3d 1052.

In connection with section (a)(4) proceeding, trial court abused its discretion when it failed to adopt reasonable interpretation by county board of adjustment (BOA) of county land use code (code) and when it ordered a remand to the BOA for additional findings based on court's own interpretation of those provisions. BOA did not abuse its discretion when it ruled that a lapse provision in the code did not apply to a special use permit because the permit had been issued before the provision's enactment. The BOA had adopted the construction of the code provided by the director of the county's land use department, which is a reasonable construction of the code provisions especially in light of the record. Sierra Club v. Billingsley, 166 P.3d 309 (Colo. App. 2007).

Even assuming withholding by county land use official of copy of e-mail was in violation of Colorado Open Records Act (CORA), neither CORA nor section (a)(4) contains any provision that would authorize remand for reconsideration of determination by BOA that lapse provision contained in county land use code did not apply to special use permit in light of withholding copy of e-mail. Moreover, inclusion of withheld e-mail in administrative record of BOA was irrelevant to court's determination under section (a)(4). Even if the appropriate remedy were to remand for inclusion of e-mail in BOA's administrative record, document would not affect conclusion that BOA did not abuse its discretion when it ruled lapse provision did not apply to permit. Because BOA determined lapse provision did not apply, e-mail's assertion that special use had lapsed was irrelevant. Sierra Club v. Billingsley, 166 P.3d 309 (Colo. App. 2007).

Standing to challenge annexation lacking under this rule. Standing to challenge zoning and standing to challenge annexation are quite different matters; proceedings of the former may be, and proceedings of the latter may not be, attacked under this rule. City of Thornton v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 42 Colo. App. 102, 595 P.2d 264 (1979), aff'd, 629 P.2d 605 (Colo. 1981).

Finding of temporary disability unsupported by evidence is arbitrary. There is credible evidence in the record showing a permanent disability status; there is no evidence whatsoever to support the pension board's supplemental finding of a temporary disability status. The board in making its award on a temporary disability basis rather than on a permanent disability basis exercised its discretion arbitrarily and capriciously. Putnam v. Trustees of Police Pension Bd., 170 Colo. 278, 460 P.2d 778 (1969).

Refusal to hear jurisdiction question was abuse. In an action against nonresident defendants who are served with process by service upon an alleged agent, where one defendant moves to quash the service and the other defendant moves to dismiss the action, granting a motion to strike the motion to quash and the motion to dismiss is an abuse of discretion under this rule, since it denies such defendants a right to be fully heard on the question of the court's jurisdiction of the person. Bardahl Mfg. Corp. v. District Court, 134 Colo. 112, 300 P.2d 524 (1956).

To favor one applicant over another is discriminatory and suggests the exercise of an unwarranted and uncontrolled discretion on the part of the licensing authority. Thus, the issuance of a license to another person in an area shortly after applicant's application was rejected on the ground that the needs of the neighborhood were satisfied is arbitrary. Geer v. Presto, 135 Colo. 536, 313 P.2d 980 (1957).

Prohibition issues where accused is charged with offense outside court's jurisdiction. The general rule is that the writ of prohibition may not be used to test the sufficiency of an information; but this is subject to qualification, recognized in almost every jurisdiction, that where the accusation is not merely defective or technically insufficient, nor merely demurrable or subject to a motion to quash or set aside, but is elementary and fundamentally defective in substance, so that it charges a crime in no manner or form, an accused is entitled to have a writ of prohibition issue, or where it appears that the information charges an offense not within the jurisdiction of a trial court. Bustamante v. District Court, 138 Colo. 97, 329 P.2d 1013 (1958).

Regulations by county commissioners designed to depress property values with a view to future acquisition thereof may form the basis of a cause of action for compensation on the theory of inverse condemnation against the public entity initiating the regulation. Hermanson v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 42 Colo. App. 154, 595 P.2d 694 (1979).

Where a decision of a county board of adjustment is challenged, that board is the ''inferior tribunal'' that is the subject of a section (a)(4) proceeding. Benes v. Jefferson County Bd. of Adjustment, 36 Colo. App. 131, 537 P.2d 753 (1975).

In an action challenging the legality of a special assessment by a city council, judicial review is obtained and is limited to certiorari under this rule. City & County of Denver v. District Court, 189 Colo. 342, 540 P.2d 1088 (1975).

Where city code of home-rule city did not specify nature of review from special assessment, it is appropriate that review be had under section (a)(4), which is specifically authorized where there is no available plain, speedy, or adequate remedy. Orchard Court Dev. Co. v. City of Boulder, 182 Colo. 361, 513 P.2d 199 (1973).

Section (a)(4), is a proper vehicle for judicial review of special assessments levied under Boulder's home-rule powers. Cline v. City of Boulder, 35 Colo. App. 349, 532 P.2d 770 (1975).

Attacks on application of historical preservation ordinance. An allegation that the vagueness of an historical preservation ordinance is indicated by the fact that it does not show which design the historical commission will approve is not a facial constitutional attack, but rather a challenge upon the application of the ordinance, which must be brought under this rule. South of Second Assocs. v. Georgetown, 196 Colo. 89, 580 P.2d 807 (1978).

Refusal of city to issue multiple licenses under state law was ultra vires. Where the state fermented malt beverages act permits a licensee to hold multiple licenses, the city of Denver may not prohibit the issuance of more than one license. When a city is vested with authority to administer a statute and adopt regulations to enforce it, regulation must be within the perimeter of the statute. In prohibiting what it could only regulate, the city acted ultra vires. Big Top, Inc. v. Schooley, 149 Colo. 116, 368 P.2d 201 (1962).

Residents of neighborhood affected by liquor licensing decision may seek judicial review. Residents of a neighborhood affected by the granting of a liquor license, by virtue of that fact alone, have a strong interest in insuring that the liquor licensing procedure is fairly and properly administered, and are persons who may seek judicial review of liquor licensing decisions under this rule. Norris v. Grimsley, 41 Colo. App. 231, 585 P.2d 925 (1978).

Operator of competing liquor store lacks standing to appeal liquor licensing decision of a local authority, either under § 12-47-101 or as a person ''substantially aggrieved'' by the disposition of the case in the lower court pursuant to this rule, since economic injury from lawful competition does not confer standing to question the legality of a competitor's operations. Norris v. Grimsley, 41 Colo. App. 231, 585 P.2d 925 (1978).

Default judgment exceeded court's discretion and authority. The grant of a default judgment for failure of the civil service commission to timely request an extension of time for filing the record on review exceeded its discretion and authority when at the time of the hearing in the lower court on the motion for default, the record had been lodged and the merits of the case had been put in issue. Civil Serv. Comm'n v. Doyle, 162 Colo. 1, 424 P.2d 368 (1967).

Grant of discovery was abuse of discretion. Where no facts were presented which tended to indicate that the city council's zoning decision was irregular, invalid, arbitrary, and capricious or the result of an abuse of discretion, the district court abused its discretion under section (a)(4) of this rule by granting discovery. City of Colo. Springs v. District Court, 184 Colo. 177, 519 P.2d 325 (1974).

Civil service commission order justified relief. Refusal by the civil service commission to restore a former policeman to his previous position on the police force of Denver after his honorable discharge from the armed forces of the United States because he volunteered when he was in no immediate danger of being drafted was an abuse of discretion as contemplated by this rule and hence the district court had jurisdiction to reinstate him. Hanebuth v. Patton, 115 Colo. 166, 170 P.2d 526 (1946).

Where civil service commission specifically upheld findings of police chief that police officer was guilty under disciplinary charges that demonstrated a direct disregard for the public good and purposes of the police department, the commission's decision to suspend the officer rather than to discharge him as police chief had ordered was an invasion of authority delegated to police chief by city charter and constituted an abuse of discretion. Thomas v. City & County of Denver, 29 Colo. App. 442, 487 P.2d 591 (1971).

Because the civil service commission failed to tell the applicant why she was disqualified from employment, the applicant could not submit reasons and documentation in support of her appeal. The commission's denial of her appeal was, therefore, an abuse of discretion. Carpenter v. Civil Serv. Comm'n, 813 P.2d 773 (Colo. App. 1990).

Civil service commission decision not arbitrary, capricious, or without justification where commission deemed an assault committed by the plaintiff involved the use of force, was a misdemeanor crime of violence barring possession of a firearm under federal law, and plaintiff was thus subject to disqualification from employment as a police officer. Even though the municipal assault statute was broad enough to be violated without the use of physical force, it is appropriate to look at the charging documents as a whole to determine the precise crime of which the defendant was convicted. Ward v. Tomsick, 30 P.3d 824 (Colo. App. 2001).

Where zoning ordinance authorizes continuance, in separate provisions of both nonconforming uses and nonconforming structures and allows for change of nonconforming use to another nonconforming use but contains no provision relating to change of nonconforming structure to another nonconforming structure, any use change is required to be effected within existing structures or not at all, and board of adjustment has no authority to grant permit to allow razing of nonconforming greenhouse and construction on the site of four apartment buildings as more restrictive nonconforming structures. City & County of Denver v. Bd. of Adjustment, 31 Colo. App. 324, 505 P.2d 44 (1972).

Setting of salaries is a legislative function, and the establishment of prevailing rates as an incident to fixing salaries is a quasi-legislative rather than a judicial or quasi-judicial function. Denver Police Protective Ass'n v. City & County of Denver, 665 P.2d 150 (Colo. App. 1983).

Vacating a roadway is a legislative act, and is not subject to review under this rule. Sutphin v. Mourning, 642 P.2d 34 (Colo. App. 1981).

Review of water ratemaking proceeding. Because a water ratemaking proceeding is a legislative action, section (a)(4) is not the proper vehicle for review of a ratemaking order of the county commissioners. Talbott Farms, Inc. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 43 Colo. App. 131, 602 P.2d 886 (1979).

Decisions by college or its president not subject to review under section (a)(4). Van Pelt v. State Bd. for Cmty. Colls. & Occupational Educ., 195 Colo. 316, 577 P.2d 765 (1978).

Private hospital board not inferior tribunal. A private hospital board is not a public agency and, therefore, not an ''inferior tribunal'' within the scope of section (a)(4). Even v. Longmont United Hosp. Ass'n, 629 P.2d 1100 (Colo. App. 1981); Green v. Lutheran Med. Ctr. Bd. of Dirs., 739 P.2d 872 (Colo. App. 1987).

Actions of municipal advisory board not reviewable. Actions by an advisory board reporting to a city council in an effort to set salaries of certain municipal employees are not subject to review under section (a)(4). Reeve v. Career Serv. Bd., 636 P.2d 1307 (Colo. App. 1981).

County board of commissioners' actions were quasi-legislative and not quasi-judicial and therefore not subject to judicial review under the arbitrary and capricious standard of section (a)(4). Dill v. Bd. of County Comm'rs of Lincoln County, 928 P.2d 809 (Colo. App. 1996).

Defense attorney's conduct in contesting court's refusal to allow withdrawal of guilty plea based on sentencing not contemplated in plea agreement was zealous representation of the client and did not constitute contempt because it did not create an obstruction which hindered the performance of the court's judicial duty. Jordan v. County Court, 722 P.2d 450 (Colo. App. 1986).

Trial court applied proper standard of review. In considering decision of board of adjustment, the trial court found competent evidence in the record to support the board's decision and that there was a reasonable basis for the agency's application of the law. Platte River Environ'l Conservation Org. v. Nat'l Hog Farms, Inc., 804 P.2d 290 (Colo. App. 1990).

Trial court did not err in reviewing PERA board's decision under section (a)(4) where it was held that PERA trustees' fiduciary duties did not prevent them from performing quasi-judicial functions in determining member's eligibility for disability benefits, and thereby did not exceed its jurisdiction nor were certain board rules ultra vires. Tepley v. Pub. Emp. Retirement Ass'n, 955 P.2d 573 (Colo. App. 1997).

District court does not have jurisdiction to review a county court's finding of probable cause pursuant to this section. Defendant may seek extraordinary relief under C.A.R. 21. Abbott v. County Ct. in & for County of Grand, 886 P.2d 730 (Colo. 1994).

Review pursuant to this rule is available for nonfactual procedural matters in preliminary hearing. Abbott v. County Ct. in & for County of Grand, 886 P.2d 730 (Colo. 1994).

Action for review for an abuse of discretion under section (a)(4) of this rule was not appropriate where the statute limited the school district board of education's discretion in determining whether to renew a probationary teacher's employment contract. Section 22-32-110 (4)(c), prohibits the board from using as grounds for nonrenewal any actions taken by the probationary teacher in good faith and in compliance with the school district's discipline policy. Since there is no remedy provided if the school board violates this prohibition, the probationary teacher's action in seeking mandamus, rather than review of an abuse of discretion, was appropriate. McIntosh v. Bd. of Educ. of Sch. Dist. No. 1, 999 P.2d 224 (Colo. App. 2000).

District court has the authority to review an action of a board of education for an abuse of discretion under this rule and § 22-33-108. Nichols ex rel. Nichols v. DeStefano, 70 P.3d 505 (Colo. App. 2002), aff'd by an equally divided court, 84 P.3d 496 (Colo. 2004).

Applied in Protect Our Mountain v. District Court, 677 P.2d 1361 (Colo. 1984); Montoya v. Career Serv. Bd., 708 P.2d 478 (Colo. App. 1985); Fisher v. County Court, 718 P.2d 549 (Colo. App. 1986); Krupp v. Breckenridge Sanitation Dist., 1 P.3d 178 (Colo. App. 1999); Stor-N-Lock Partners # 15 v. City of Thornton, 2018 COA 65, __ P.3d __.

VI. OTHER WRITS.

Law reviews. For article, ''One Year Review of Contracts'', see 34 Dicta 85 (1957).

Annotator's note. Since section (a)(5) of this rule is similar to §§ 255 through 260 of the former Code of Civil Procedure, which was supplanted by the Rules of Civil Procedure in 1941, relevant case construction of those sections have been included in the annotations to this rule.

Remedy is exclusive. The method provided by section (a)(5), whereby partners not served in an action against a partnership may be made individually liable on the judgment rendered therein against the partnership, is exclusive. Blythe v. Cordingly, 20 Colo. App. 508, 80 P. 495 (1905).

Section (a)(5) does not provide an "alternate, cumulative remedy" to § 13-50-105 that a party may elect in lieu of naming a defendant during the pendency of an action where a corporate respondent was a member of the partnership whose identity was known by plaintiff but not named in the original action based upon a friendship with plaintiff's counsel. Gutrich v. LaPlante, 942 P.2d 1266 (Colo. App. 1996), aff'd sub nom. Gutrich v. Cogswell & Wehrle, 961 P.2d 1115 (Colo. 1998).

Section (a)(5) may provide relief in the context of partnership law when: (1) The plaintiff could not have determined the existence or status of individual partners despite reasonable attempts to ascertain their identities; (2) the plaintiff could not bring about personal jurisdiction in the original action; or (3) some other reason beyond the plaintiff's control prevented the plaintiff from naming and serving the individual partners. Gutrich v. Cogswell & Wehrle, 961 P.2d 1115 (Colo. 1998).

Show cause rule remedies nondisclosure of partnership interest. Although application to add an additional party was not made at the time of the trial when the facts appeared, no injury could obtain by requiring the wife to show cause why she is not liable to answer under this judgment. Had she and her husband properly demeaned themselves concerning the matter of revealing to the public by proper affidavit the status of their partnership business interests, she would no doubt have been made a party defendant in the original action. The judgment creditor had a right to rely upon the record at the time of filing his action. To now deny plaintiff the right to discover the true interest entering into the judgment would be to reward people for misrepresentation and nondisclosure to the injury and detriment upon a relying public. Womack v. Grandbush, 134 Colo. 1, 298 P.2d 735 (1956).

Creditor entitled to rule against active partner not of record. Where a husband and wife were active partners in an enterprise, but the public records did not disclose that the wife had an interest therein, a creditor who obtains a judgment against the husband on a partnership obligation in an action to which the wife was not made a party is entitled to a rule on the wife under section (a)(5) to show cause why she should not be held to answer for the judgment. Womack v. Grandbush, 134 Colo. 1, 298 P.2d 735 (1956).

When judgment may be rendered. The only judgment which can be rendered against a copartnership on a firm debt or obligation is one against the copartnership jointly, and the partners summoned or appearing, whether the summons is served upon all or one or more of the defendants. Blythe v. Cordingly, 20 Colo. App. 508, 80 P. 495 (1905).

Partnership interest of nonparty subject to judgment lien. A judgment against one partner is not effective against another partner not made a party to the action, nor against the partnership where the partnership was not sued, except that the partnership interest of the partner sued is subject to the judgment lien to the extent of such interest and such partner's interest therein may be sold on execution. Womack v. Grandbush, 134 Colo. 1, 298 P.2d 735 (1956).

Section (a)(5) permits a trial court to issue a show-cause order, analogous to a writ of scire facias, to partners who were neither named nor served originally in an action against the partnership. Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Wells Plaza Ltd. P'ship, 826 P.2d 427 (Colo. App. 1992).

Section (a)(5) was designed to provide relief, previously available under the writ of scire facias, as a post-judgment remedy permitting a creditor to collect on an existing yet unsatisfied judgment. It is not a substitute for maintaining an action where remedies are available to a person under statutory provisions. Gutrich v. Cogswell & Wehrle, 961 P.2d 1115 (Colo. 1998).

Because the fire and police pension association is not an agency of state government, the standard of review of a decision of the association is not whether there is "substantial evidence" under § 24-4-106 (7), of the State Administrative Procedure Act, but rather, whether there is "no competent evidence" under section (a)(4) to support the decision. Pueblo v. Fire & Police Pension Ass'n, 827 P.2d 597 (Colo. App. 1992).

This rule merely abolished the form and not the substance of remedial writs such as the writ of ne exeat. A district court still possesses the authority to issue a writ in the nature of ne exeat, which is designed to prevent a person from leaving the court's jurisdiction. In re People ex rel. B.C., 981 P.2d 145 (Colo. 1999).

Rule 106.5. Correctional Facility Quasi-Judicial Hearing Review

(a) Scope. This rule applies to every action brought by an inmate to review a decision resulting from a quasi-judicial hearing of any facility of the Colorado Department of Corrections ("CDOC") or any private facility in Colorado involving a CDOC inmate for events that occurred at the facility. To the extent this rule does not cover procedures in such cases, the parties shall follow C.R.C.P. 106(a)(4). All other provisions of C.R.C.P. 106(a)(4) shall apply except where modified by this Rule 106.5. The provisions of C.R.C.P. 106(b) and C.R.C.P. 5 shall govern all cases brought under this Rule 106.5.

(b) Designation of Defendant. Only the Executive Director of the CDOC and the Warden of the facility shall be named as Defendants and shall be listed as such. The District Court shall dismiss any other Defendant.

(c) Venue. All actions under this rule shall be filed in the district court in the county in which the quasi-judicial agency action occurred, even if the inmate is no longer assigned to that facility at the time the complaint is filed.

(d) Service of Process.

(1) If the inmate does not qualify for in forma pauperis status, the rules relating to service of process set forth in C.R.C.P. 4(e)(10) shall apply, but only the Warden, the Executive Director of the Department of Corrections, and the Attorney General shall be served.

(2) If the inmate files a motion to proceed in forma pauperis status and that motion is granted, service of process shall be accomplished in the following manner: The clerk of the District Court shall scan the complaint and serve it by electronic means on the Attorney General, the Executive Director of the Department of Corrections, and the Warden of the Facility (or the designee of each of these officials), along with a notice indicating the fact of the inmate's filing and the date received by the Court. Each person notified shall send an acknowledgment by electronic means indicating that the specified official has received the electronic notice and the scanned copy of the complaint.

(e) Response of Defendant. Within 21 days after the date on which the Attorney General sends acknowledgment that it has received the notice and complaint from the Clerk of the District Court, the Defendants shall file either (1) an answer to the complaint and a certified copy of the record as explained below, or (2) a motion in response to the complaint.

(f) Notice to Submit Record. The facility shall file the certified record and affidavit of certification directly to the Court no later than the deadline to file an answer or motion as indicated above. This obligation to submit the record shall not apply if the Attorney General notifies the Warden within 14 days of the electronic service that a motion to dismiss the complaint for lack of subject matter jurisdiction has been filed, in which event the filing of the record shall be suspended pending disposition of the motion.

(g) Contents of the Record. The certified record submitted by the Warden to the District Court shall contain all material related to the proceeding at the facility to permit the Court to address the issues raised in the complaint. The record shall include the Notice of Charges, the Disposition of Charges, the Offender Appeal Form, all exhibits offered at the hearing, and the current applicable version of the Code of Penal Discipline. If any part of the proceeding was recorded, a copy of the recording shall be provided.

(h) Cost of the Record. The cost of preparation of the record shall initially be paid by the Warden but, upon the filing of the certified record with the Court, the Warden shall immediately deduct the cost of preparation of the record, including the recording, from the inmate's account. If there are insufficient funds in that account, the Warden shall apply a charge to that account. In no event shall the filing of the record be delayed because the inmate has no assets and no means by which to pay the cost of certification of the record.

(1) If counsel for the Defendants files a motion to dismiss, the inmate shall have 14 days after service of the motion to file a brief in response, and the defense counsel shall have 14 days after service of the response to file a reply.

(2) If the defense counsel files an answer and the Warden files the certified record, the inmate shall have 42 days following notice of filing of the record in which to file a brief. In this event, the brief shall set forth the reasons why the inmate believes that the District Court should rule that the Warden has exceeded his or her jurisdiction or abused his or her discretion. The inmate must set forth in the brief specific references to the record that support the inmate's position. Defense counsel shall have 35 days after service of the brief to file a response and the inmate shall have 14 days after service of the response to file a reply.

(j) Time Periods. The parties shall follow the time periods set forth above unless the Court, on motion and for good cause shown, enters an order altering those time periods.

(k) Promulgation of Rule. A copy of this Rule 106.5 shall be made available in the law library of every facility operated by the Colorado Department of Corrections and every private prison in Colorado that houses CDOC inmates.

Source: Entire rule added and effective February 7, 2008; (e), (f), and (i) amended and adopted December 14, 2011, effective January 1, 2012, for all cases pending on or filed on or after January 1, 2012, pursuant to C.R.C.P. 1(b).

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, ''Judicial Review of Prison Quasi-Judicial Hearings Under Rule 106.5,'' see 44 Colo. Law. 37 (Dec. 2015).

Because private prison lacks authority to make a final determination on a disciplinary action that affects the liberty of an inmate, timely filing of an appeal is measured from the date of the private prisons monitoring unit's decision and not the date of the warden's decision. Geerdes v. Colo. Dept. of Corr., 226 P.3d 1261 (Colo. App. 2010).

This rule does not apply to actions seeking review of parole board decisions. It is not a mechanism for obtaining judicial review of parole board decisions. Moore v. Exec. Dir. of Colo. Dept. of Corrs., 2018 COA 99, 440 P.3d 1163.

This rule applies only to review of quasi-judicial decisions over which the department of corrections' executive director and the prison warden have ultimate authority. Moore v. Exec. Dir. of Colo. Dept. of Corrs., 2018 COA 99, 440 P.3d 1163.

Rule 107. Remedial and Punitive Sanctions for Contempt

(a) Definitions. (1) Contempt: Disorderly or disruptive behavior, a breach of the peace, boisterous conduct or violent disturbance toward the court, or conduct that unreasonably interrupts the due course of judicial proceedings; behavior that obstructs the administration of justice; disobedience or resistance by any person to or interference with any lawful writ, process, or order of the court; or any other act or omission designated as contempt by the statutes or these rules.

(2) Direct Contempt: Contempt that the court has seen or heard and is so extreme that no warning is necessary or that has been repeated despite the court's warning to desist.

(3) Indirect Contempt: Contempt that occurs out of the direct sight or hearing of the court.

(4) Punitive Sanctions for Contempt: Punishment by unconditional fine, fixed sentence of imprisonment, or both, for conduct that is found to be offensive to the authority and dignity of the court.

(5) Remedial Sanctions for Contempt: Sanctions imposed to force compliance with a lawful order or to compel performance of an act within the person's power or present ability to perform.

(6) Court: For purposes of this rule, ''court'' means any judge, magistrate, commissioner, referee, or a master while performing official duties.

(b) Direct Contempt Proceedings. When a direct contempt is committed, it may be punished summarily. In such case an order shall be made on the record or in writing reciting the facts constituting the contempt, including a description of the person's conduct, a finding that the conduct was so extreme that no warning was necessary or the person's conduct was repeated after the court's warning to desist, and a finding that the conduct is offensive to the authority and dignity of the court. Prior to the imposition of sanctions, the person shall have the right to make a statement in mitigation.

(c) Indirect Contempt Proceedings. When it appears to the court by motion supported by affidavit that indirect contempt has been committed, the court may ex parte order a citation to issue to the person so charged to appear and show cause at a date, time and place designated why the person should not be punished. The citation and a copy of the motion, affidavit and order shall be served directly upon such person at least 21 days before the time designated for the person to appear. If such person fails to appear at the time so designated, and it is evident to the court that the person was properly served with copies of the motion, affidavit, order, and citation, a warrant for the person's arrest may issue to the sheriff. The warrant shall fix the date, time and place for the production of the person in court. The court shall state on the warrant the amount and kind of bond required. The person shall be discharged upon delivery to and approval by the sheriff or clerk of the bond directing the person to appear at the date, time and place designated in the warrant, and at any time to which the hearing may be continued, or pay the sum specified. If the person fails to appear at the time designated in the warrant, or at any time to which the hearing may be continued, the bond may be forfeited upon proper notice of hearing to the surety, if any, and to the extent of the damages suffered because of the contempt, the bond may be paid to the aggrieved party. If the person fails to make bond, the sheriff shall keep the person in custody subject to the order of the court.

(d) Trial and Punishment. (1) Punitive Sanctions. In an indirect contempt proceeding where punitive sanctions may be imposed, the court may appoint special counsel to prosecute the contempt action. If the judge initiates the contempt proceedings, the person shall be advised of the right to have the action heard by another judge. At the first appearance, the person shall be advised of the right to be represented by an attorney and, if indigent and if a jail sentence is contemplated, the court will appoint counsel. The maximum jail sentence shall not exceed six months unless the person has been advised of the right to a jury trial. The person shall also be advised of the right to plead either guilty or not guilty to the charges, the presumption of innocence, the right to require proof of the charge beyond a reasonable doubt, the right to present witnesses and evidence, the right to cross-examine all adverse witnesses, the right to have subpoenas issued to compel attendance of witnesses at trial, the right to remain silent, the right to testify at trial, and the right to appeal any adverse decision. The court may impose a fine or imprisonment or both if the court expressly finds that the person's conduct was offensive to the authority and dignity of the court. The person shall have the right to make a statement in mitigation prior to the imposition of sentence.

(2) Remedial Sanctions. In a contempt proceeding where remedial sanctions may be imposed, the court shall hear and consider the evidence for and against the person charged and it may find the person in contempt and order sanctions. The court shall enter an order in writing or on the record describing the means by which the person may purge the contempt and the sanctions that will be in effect until the contempt is purged. In all cases of indirect contempt where remedial sanctions are sought, the nature of the sanctions and remedies that may be imposed shall be described in the motion or citation. Costs and reasonable attorney's fees in connection with the contempt proceeding may be assessed in the discretion of the court. If the contempt consists of the failure to perform an act in the power of the person to perform and the court finds the person has the present ability to perform the act so ordered, the person may be fined or imprisoned until its performance.

(e) Limitations. The court shall not suspend any part of a punitive sanction based upon the performance or non-performance of any future acts. The court may reconsider any punitive sanction. Probation shall not be permitted as a condition of any punitive sanction. Remedial and punitive sanctions may be combined by the court, provided appropriate procedures are followed relative to each type of sanction and findings are made to support the adjudication of both types of sanctions.

(f) Appeal. For the purposes of appeal, an order deciding the issue of contempt and sanctions shall be final.

ANNOTATION

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Law. 79 (Jan. 2012).

Annotator's note. Since C.R.C.P. 107, is similar to §§ 166 and 356 through 369 of the former Code of Civil Procedure, which was supplanted by the Rules of Civil Procedure in 1941, relevant cases construing those sections have been included in the annotations to this rule.

This rule applies to both civil and criminal contempt. In re Stone, 703 P.2d 1319 (Colo. App. 1985).

As part of its inherent authority to issue orders that are necessary for the performance of judicial functions, a court has the power to enforce obedience to its orders through contempt sanctions. People v. McGlotten, 134 P.3d 487 (Colo. App. 2005).

The power to punish for contempt is a judicial power within the meaning of the constitution, and it belongs exclusively to the courts except in cases where the constitution confers such power upon some other body. People v. Swena, 88 Colo. 337, 296 P. 271 (1931).

A finding of contempt is within the discretion of the trial court, and its ruling will not be disturbed on appeal absent an abuse of discretion. In re Gomez, 728 P.2d 747 (Colo. App. 1986); In re Roberts, 757 P.2d 1108 (Colo. App. 1988).

Nothing in this rule or the forcible entry and detainer (FED) statute precludes the remedy of contempt in an FED action under appropriate circumstances. Hartsel Springs Ranch v. Cross Slash Ranch, 179 P.3d 237 (Colo. App. 2007).

A finding of contempt can be brought under this rule and proved with evidence other than jury deliberation, provided the prosecution can show beyond a reasonable doubt the following elements: (1) The prospective juror knowingly and willfully gave an untruthful answer or deliberately failed to disclose information during voir dire in response to a specific question asked; (2) the purpose of the juror's untruthful answer or nondisclosure was to gain acceptance on the jury and to obstruct the administration of justice; and (3) the juror's untruthful answer or nondisclosure did obstruct the administration of justice. People v. Kriho, 996 P.2d 158 (Colo. App. 1999).

Court must make findings in both types of contempt procedures. For contempt in the presence of the court, the judgment must recite the facts constituting the contempt. For contempt out of the presence of the court, the judgment must include, among other considerations, a finding that the court's order has not been complied with. In re McGinnis, 778 P.2d 281 (Colo. App. 1989).

The power to punish for contempt is inherent in all courts. Allen v. Bailey, 91 Colo. 260, 14 P.2d 1087 (1932).

Jurisdiction to punish contempt rests solely in contemned court; no court can try a contempt against another. Gonzales v. District Court, 629 P.2d 1074 (Colo. 1981).

A court's right of self-preservation is not limited by statutory enumeration of causes of contempts. Hughes v. People, 5 Colo. 436 (1880).

The power to punish for contempt should be used sparingly, with caution, deliberation, and due regard to constitutional rights; it should be exercised only when necessary to prevent actual, direct obstruction of, or interference with, the administration of justice. In re People in Interest of Murley, 124 Colo. 581, 239 P.2d 706 (1951); Conway v. Conway, 134 Colo. 79, 299 P.2d 509 (1956).

Intent to interfere with administration of justice not required for contempt finding; rather, the intent is a guide to be used by the trial court in exercising its discretion to punish. In re Stone, 703 P.2d 1319 (Colo. App. 1985).

This rule does not purport to limit the application of contempt to parties, officers of the court, or those subject to direct orders. Rather, the rule defines contempt broadly to include any conduct by any person that obstructs or interferes with judicial proceedings. In re Lopez, 109 P.3d 1021 (Colo. App. 2004).

Correction officials are officers of the court whose compliance with a mittimus directing them to take custody of a juvenile could be enforced by a contempt proceeding. People in Interest of S.C., 802 P.2d 1101 (Colo. App. 1989).

Judge conducting a settlement conference has the same authority to impose sanctions as the trial judge for conduct related to the settlement conference which interferes with the functions of the court. Halaby, McCrea & Cross v. Hoffman, 831 P.2d 902 (Colo. 1992).

Language in this rule authorizing district court to sanction an "officer of the court" does not include a judge who is presiding over the same case in which the alleged contempt has taken place. People v. Proffitt, 865 P.2d 929 (Colo. App. 1993).

A remedial contempt order only describes the means by which the contempt can be purged and the sanctions that will be in effect until the contempt is purged. Other than costs and reasonable attorney fees, a trial court is without authority to require, as a remedial sanction, monetary payments that do not force compliance with or performance of a court order. Sec. Investor Prot. Corp. v. First Entm't Holding Corp., 36 P.3d 175 (Colo. App. 2001).

Attorney fees can be awarded under section (d)(2) only as a component of remedial sanctions; however, under section (a)(1)(5), a remedial sanction must include a purge clause. Where the contemnor commits a one-time violation, incapable of being purged, attorney fees may not be assessed as a remedial sanction. Thus, a punitive sanction, such as a fine or imprisonment, is the only avenue for punishment. No remedial sanction was imposed, nor could one have been. The CAT scan contempt constituted a one-time violation of a 2007 order committed over a year before father even raised the issue with the court. By that time, mother could not undo what she had done. In re Webb, 284 P.3d 107 (Colo. App. 2011).

A pro se attorney litigant is not necessarily precluded from an attorney fee award under either section (d)(2) of this rule or § 13-17-102 in a contempt proceeding. Wimmershoff v. Finger, 74 P.3d 529 (Colo. App. 2003).

Not error for defendants' counsel to have been permitted to prosecute the contempt proceedings. Conduct that is found to be offensive to the authority and dignity of the court pursuant to this rule is not criminal conduct, and contempt is not a statutory criminal offense. The power to impose punitive sanctions for such conduct is an inherent and indispensable power of the court. It is not derived from statute and exists independent of legislative authority. Eichhorn v. Kelley, 111 P.3d 544 (Colo. App. 2004).

Lack of an express grant of authority in the Colorado Rules for Magistrates to award attorney fees on review does not divest or otherwise curtail the district court's already existing authority to make such an award under section (d)(2). In re Naekel, 181 P.3d 1177 (Colo. App. 2008).

Applied in Catron v. Catron, 40 Colo. App. 476, 577 P.2d 322 (1978); Cavanaugh v. State, Dept. of Soc. Servs., 644 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1982); People v. Coyle, 654 P.2d 815 (Colo. 1982); Menin v. County Court, 697 P.2d 398 (Colo. App. 1984).

II. DEFINITION.

A. In General.

Contempt consists as well in the manner of the person committing it as in the subject-matter of its foundation. Matters which, if true, would in their very nature be scandalous may be presented, hinted at, or brought to the attention of the court in so respectful a manner that no judge would ever think to construe a contempt therefrom; while, on the other hand, it is easy to see when, under the guise and pretense of setting out privilege and necessary matters, circumstances are detailed, and scandalous and insulting charges and innuendos are made and insinuated upon pretended ''information and belief'' in manner that bears the unmistakable earmarks of malice and deliberate contempt. Hughes v. People, 5 Colo. 436 (1880).

The question of contempt does not depend on intention, although, where the contempt was intended, this is an aggravating feature which goes to the gravamen of the offense. Hughes v. People, 5 Colo. 436 (1880); In re People in Interest of Murley, 124 Colo. 581, 239 P.2d 706 (1951).

Rule is applicable to criminal contempt. This rule clearly includes a definition encompassing, and procedures governing, both civil and criminal contempt. People v. Razatos, 699 P.2d 970 (Colo. 1985).

Distinction between civil and criminal contempts. Contempts of court are civil where they consist in the disobedience of some judicial order entered for the benefit or advantage of another party to the proceeding and criminal where there are acts disrespectful to the court or its process, or obstructing the administration of justice, or tending to bring the court into disrepute. Wyatt v. People, 17 Colo. 252, 28 P. 961 (1892).

Two types of civil contempt are recognized: One, consisting of a present refusal to perform an act in the power of the person to perform, which normally constitutes injury to others for whose benefit it is required; the other, conduct which is derogatory to the authority or dignity of the court. In the former case, the court may order the respondent imprisoned, not for a definite time, but until he performs the act which he is commanded and is able to perform; in the latter case, the court may order punishment to vindicate the dignity of the court by fine or imprisonment, or both, which should be definite as to amount and time, regardless of subsequent compliance with the court order. In the former case, the court must, upon hearing, make a finding both of the facts constituting contempt and of a present duty and ability to perform; in the latter case, the court must make a finding of facts constituting misbehavior and that the conduct is offensive to the authority and dignity of the court. In re People in Interest of Murley, 124 Colo. 581, 239 P.2d 706 (1951).

Rules for civil contempt may guide, but do not control, procedures for prosecuting criminal contempt. People v. Tyer, 796 P.2d 15 (Colo. App. 1990).

B. Misbehavior.

There is no exact rule to define such contempts; but any disorderly conduct calculated to interrupt the proceedings; any disrespect or insolent behavior toward the judges presiding; any breach of order, decency, decorum, either by parties and persons connected with the tribunal, or by strangers present; or, a fortiori, any assault made in view of the court is punishable in this summary way. Hughes v. People, 5 Colo. 436 (1880).

Contempt by press. Courts have the inherent power to summarily convict and punish for a contempt of court those responsible for articles published in reference to a cause pending when such articles are calculated to interfere with the due administration of justice in such cause. Neither the statutes nor the constitution present any barrier to the exercise of such powers, and the power to punish summarily in such cases is essential to the very existence of a court, since the contrary rule would place it in the power of a vicious person to so conduct himself as to prevent any kind of a trial. Cooper v. People ex rel. Wyatt, 13 Colo. 337, 22 P. 790 (1889).

The press may without liability to punishment for contempt challenge, in the interest of the public good, the conduct of judges and other court officers and also of parties, jurors, and witnesses in connection with causes that have been wholly determined. It may also fairly and reasonably review and comment upon court proceedings from day to day as they take place. Cooper v. People ex rel. Wyatt, 13 Colo. 337, 22 P. 790 (1889).

C. Disobedience of Court Orders.

Law reviews. For article, "The Enforcement of Divorce Decrees in Colorado", see 21 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 364 (1949).

Refusal to obey an order of court entered in connection with a criminal investigation is a criminal contempt. Mainland v. People, 111 Colo. 198, 139 P.2d 366 (1943).

In order for court to enter punitive order in a criminal contempt proceeding, the court must find that the alleged contemner's behavior constitutes noncompliance with the court order and that such conduct is offensive to the authority and dignity of the court. Griffin v. Jackson, 759 P.2d 839 (Colo. App. 1988).

Where an order of the court is made in a civil action, its violation constitutes a civil, not a criminal, contempt. Zobel v. People ex rel. Kyle, 49 Colo. 142, 111 P. 846 (1910).

Disobedience of a lawful order made by the court for the benefit of a private litigant comes clearly within this rule. Zobel v. People ex rel. Kyle, 49 Colo. 142, 111 P. 846 (1910).

Contempt of supreme court rule is punishable and enforceable by lower court before whom contempt occurred. Wooden v. Park Sch. District, 748 P.2d 1311 (Colo. App. 1987).

A person who has actual notice of an injunctive order violates it at his peril. People ex rel. Darby v. District Court, 19 Colo. 343, 35 P. 731 (1894).

Contempt proceedings are equally available to enforce a judgment determining the property rights of the parties to a divorce proceeding, as are orders for the payment of alimony, counsel fees, and other costs. Harvey v. Harvey, 153 Colo. 15, 384 P.2d 265 (1963).

Court may exercise power of contempt to enforce orders entered in a dissolution of marriage proceeding. Gonzales v. District Court, 629 P.2d 1074 (Colo. 1981).

A district court which has entered a decree of dissolution possesses continuing in personam and subject matter jurisdiction to enforce its child support orders by punishing a noncomplying obligor for contempt of court. Gonzales v. District Court, 629 P.2d 1074 (Colo. 1981).

There is a distinction between a contempt proceeding and an action to collect accrued alimony or support installments. Hauck v. Schuck, 143 Colo. 324, 353 P.2d 79 (1960).

One who refuses to pay money belonging to an estate into court in compliance with a judicial order is guilty of civil contempt. Munson v. Luxford, 95 Colo. 12, 34 P.2d 91 (1934).

Where the contempt order is based on the failure of the husband to obtain drug counseling, the order is remedial in nature and the trial court must specify how the husband may purge himself of that contempt. In re Zebedee, 778 P.2d 694 (Colo. App. 1988).

Post-dissolution contempt proceeding to enforce permanent orders is remedial in nature if the court's order imposes remedial sanctions such as an attorney fees award, a requirement to pay amounts due plus arrearages, and the initial suspension of a sentence to imprisonment, but the order does not contain language concerning vindication of the court's authority and dignity. In re Lodeski, 107 P.3d 1097 (Colo. App. 2004).

Court reporters may be held in contempt for failing to produce transcripts in a timely manner. People v. McGlotten, 134 P.3d 487 (Colo. App. 2005).

Constructive contempt. Where a court having jurisdiction has ordered the payment of money into the registry of the court and the person to whom the order is directed fails to make the payment as commanded and contempt proceedings are instituted, the alleged contempt is constructive or indirect. Urbancich v. Mayberry, 124 Colo. 311, 236 P.2d 535 (1951).

The violation of the term of a decree in a quiet-title action is not contempt of court unless the decree contained a mandatory or prohibitive provision. McMullin v. City & County of Denver, 125 Colo. 231, 242 P.2d 240 (1952).

Interference with a water commissioner in the discharge of his official duties does not constitute contempt of court within this rule declaring disobedience to any lawful writ, order, rule, or process issued by the court to be a contempt, since he is not an officer of the court in which the decree of priorities is entered under which he is distributing water, being appointed by the governor and, to a certain extent, being under the control and direction of the irrigation division engineer and the state engineer. Roberson v. People ex rel. Soule, 40 Colo. 119, 90 P. 79 (1907).

No contempt where one is unable to comply with court order. There was insufficient evidence, as a matter of law, to support the conclusion of the judge that the respondents had neglected or refused to comply with the writs of habeas corpus, which was the contempt with which they were charged, where the respondents could not produce children in court against the wishes of the mother, who had continuous control and custody. Eatchel v. Lanphere, 170 Colo. 545, 463 P.2d 457 (1970).

A mittimus issued by the district court ordering corrections officials to take custody of state prisoners is not a basis for contempt where the corrections officials lack the ability to admit the prisoners. People v. Lockhart, 699 P.2d 1332 (Colo. 1985).

Correction officials were guilty of contempt for disobeying a mittimus directing them to take custody of a juvenile, where their duty to take custody of the juvenile was statutorily mandated and adequate funds would have been available throughout the juvenile's period of commitment to enable the officials to take custody of the juvenile. Under such circumstances, the existence of a blanket administrative policy of refusing admittance to such juveniles, which was instituted because the department was running out of money, is not a defense. People in Interest of S.C., 802 P.2d 1101 (Colo. App. 1989).

Insufficient basis for contempt and abuse of trial court's discretion where attorney made a single comment, "Sir, it does not.", to the judge concerning a reference in the Code of Professional Responsibility. The test is whether or not the comment constitutes an obstruction of the court's administration of justice or operates to bring the judiciary into disrespect or disregard. Hill v. Boatright, 890 P.2d 180 (Colo. App. 1994), aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds sub nom. Boatright v. Derr, 919 P.2d 221 (Colo. 1996).

Record does not support judge's finding that defense counsel violated the court's previous rulings. Therefore, the court abused its discretion in finding defense counsel in contempt. People v. Jones, 262 P.3d 982 (Colo. App. 2011).

Contempt of a court order does not supercede requirement to set a hearing pursuant to § 13-54.5-109 (1)(a). The court may not sanction a party for his or her failure to comply with a court order by refusing to set or by suspending a hearing on an objection or claim of exemption. The setting of a hearing is mandatory, not discretionary. Borrayo v. Lefever, 159 P.3d 657 (Colo. App. 2006).

Bankruptcy stay applicable to civil contempt action for post-divorce enforcement of separation agreement. The nature of the contempt action is determined by review of the purpose and character of the sanctions imposed against the contemnor. Where the contemnor had the ability to request reconsideration of the jail time once payment was made; the sanctions were designed to force payment to a third party, not to uphold the dignity of the court; the court imposed attorney fees for the enforcement proceeding; and the court's primary consideration was the impact on third parties, the contempt action was remedial in nature. In re Weis, 232 P.3d 789 (Colo. 2010).

Contemnor cannot turn an enforcement action into a criminal matter outside of the automatic bankruptcy stay simply by requesting punitive sanctions. In re Weis, 232 P.3d 789 (Colo. 2010).

Arbitrator's award is not a "court order" for purposes of contempt statute. Where neither party petitioned the district court for an order confirming the award, the court erred in finding husband guilty of indirect contempt for failing to comply with arbitrator's order to take the parties' children to therapy. In re Leverett, 2012 COA 69, 318 P.3d 31.

III. DIRECT CONTEMPT.

In the absence of statutory regulation, courts may deal with matter of contempt in a summary manner. Guiraud v. Nevada Canal Co., 79 Colo. 289, 245 P. 485 (1926).

This rule permits summary punishment of a contemner for acts committed in the court's presence. DeMott v. Smith, 29 Colo. App. 531, 486 P.2d 451 (1971).

The summary contempt power may be used to punish acts or conduct which take place in the immediate presence of the court and are witnessed by the trial judge. Losavio v. District Court, 182 Colo. 180, 512 P.2d 266 (1973).

The summary contempt power is necessary to insure and preserve decorum in the courtroom. People v. Ellis, 189 Colo. 378, 540 P.2d 1082 (1975).

The summary contempt power is ample to prevent disruption and provides the trial judge with the power to punish contemptuous conduct which occurs in his presence. People v. Ellis, 189 Colo. 378, 540 P.2d 1082 (1975).

Design of contempt power. The power of a judge to punish contempt committed in his presence is not designed to protect his own dignity or person, but to protect the rights of litigants and the public by ensuring that the administration of justice shall not be thwarted or obstructed. Losavio v. District Court, 182 Colo. 180, 512 P.2d 266 (1973).

Summary punishment for contempt is permitted because a court could not properly administer justice if disturbances within the courtroom could not be suppressed by immediate punishment. Losavio v. District Court, 182 Colo. 180, 512 P.2d 266 (1973).

Punishment for contempt can only be imposed summarily when a direct contempt is committed; that is, when the judge has personal knowledge of the act which has disrupted court proceedings or demonstrated the contemner's disrespect for the court. Losavio v. District Court, 182 Colo. 180, 512 P.2d 266 (1973).

Summary punishment for contempt of court must be strictly confined to those instances where the contemptuous conduct occurs in open court and is seen or heard by the trial judge. Losavio v. District Court, 182 Colo. 180, 512 P.2d 266 (1973); Dooley v. District Court, 811 P.2d 809 (Colo. 1991).

Attorney's alleged lack of preparation for a hearing was indirect, not direct, contempt, and therefore summary punishment was improper. Dooley v. District Court, 811 P.2d 809 (Colo. 1991).

Fact that judge ordered a hearing two days after occurrence of allegedly contemptuous behavior was evidence that judge considered the contempt indirect rather than direct. Dooley v. District Court, 811 P.2d 809 (Colo. 1991).

A court may hold a person in direct contempt only when the court has either given prior warning that a person's behavior, if repeated, will constitute contempt and the contemnor persists in such behavior or the person's conduct is so extreme that no warning is necessary. People v. Aleem, 149 P.3d 765 (Colo. 2007).

If conduct amounts to a direct contempt committed in the presence of the court, the record must show, with reference to the matter allegedly constituting the contempt, what actually happened with particularity. Pittman v. District Court, 149 Colo. 380, 369 P.2d 85 (1962).

Where full evidentiary hearing not necessary. Where the judge is aware of the contemptuous conduct from personal observation, where no lawful justification exists for the contemptuous behavior, and where the penalty is not of the type that can be mitigated by any evidence offered, a full-fledged evidentiary hearing is not necessary and summary procedure is appropriate. People v. Lucero, 196 Colo. 276, 584 P.2d 1208 (1978).

Where a judgment does not recite the facts constituting the contempt, the judgment is not properly supported. Handler v. Gordon, 108 Colo. 501, 120 P.2d 205 (1941).

This rule requires the order of commitment to recite the facts only where summary punishment is inflicted. Shore v. People, 26 Colo. 516, 59 P. 49 (1899); Eykelboom v. People, 71 Colo. 318, 206 P. 388 (1922).

Cases of criminal contempt are not within the provisions of this rule requiring the order of commitment to recite the facts only where summary punishment is inflicted. Eykelboom v. People, 71 Colo. 318, 206 P. 388 (1922).

For cases of criminal contempt for refusal to answer to grand jury question analogized to this rule, see Smaldone v. People, 158 Colo. 7, 405 P.2d 208 (1965), cert. denied, 382 U.S. 1012, 86 S. Ct. 616, 15 L. Ed. 2d 527 (1966); see also Salardino v. People, 158 Colo. 12, 405 P.2d 211 (1965), cert. denied, 382 U.S. 1012, 86 S. Ct. 617, 15 L. Ed. 2d 527 (1966); Quintana v. People, 158 Colo. 14, 405 P.2d 212 (1965), cert. denied, 382 U.S. 1013, 86 S. Ct. 618, 15 L. Ed. 2d 527 (1966); Smaldone v. People, 158 Colo. 16, 404 P.2d 276 (1965); Smaldone v. People, 158 Colo. 21, 404 P.2d 279 (1965); Tomeo v. People, 158 Colo. 26, 404 P.2d 287 (1965).

Trial judge has power to punish summarily for contempt any lawyer who in his presence willfully contributes to disorder or disruption in the courtroom. Losavio v. District Court, 182 Colo. 180, 512 P.2d 266 (1973).

Voluntary appearance in court subjects one to contempt power of court. Where defendant was served an unsigned copy of summons and default judgment was therefore rendered invalid, defendant's voluntary appearance in court submitted him nevertheless to the jurisdiction of the court and would support a contempt judgment where he was found to have committed perjury in the presence of the court. Brown v. Amen, 147 Colo. 468, 364 P.2d 735 (1961).

Contempt sentence of contemnor who has left the court will be upheld. Where the contempt is a direct one made in the presence of the court and the court proceeds at once to try the contemnor and sentence him, such sentence will be upheld, though made after the contemnor has left the presence of the court. Shotkin v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. R., 124 Colo. 141, 235 P.2d 990 (1951), cert. denied, 343 U.S. 906, 72 S. Ct. 638, 96 L. Ed. 1325 (1952).

Refusal of witness receiving immunity to supply grand jury testimony. A witness who, despite receiving immunity, persists before a trial court judge in refusing on fifth amendment grounds to supply grand jury testimony, commits contempt ''in the presence of the court'' and may be punished summarily. People v. Lucero, 196 Colo. 276, 584 P.2d 1208 (1978).

A court has the right to punish one summarily for contempt for manifest perjury committed in the court's presence where it knows judicially that his testimony was false. Eykelboom v. People, 71 Colo. 318, 206 P. 388 (1922); Murer v. Rogowski, 29 Colo. App. 235, 480 P.2d 853 (1971).

In order that perjury may be a contempt of court it must appear that: (1) The alleged false answers had an obstructive effect, (2) that there existed judicial knowledge of the falsity of the testimony, and (3) that the question was pertinent to the issue. Handler v. Gordon, 111 Colo. 234, 140 P.2d 622 (1943).

Perjurious statements do not by themselves substantially obstruct or halt a trial or demonstrate contempt for the judicial process if the court cannot judicially know that the testimony is false without the presentation of collateral evidence to establish such falsity. Murer v. Rogowski, 29 Colo. App. 235, 480 P.2d 853 (1971).

Where the trial court's finding of perjury is based on collateral evidence introduced by a party to impeach the other party's testimony, and not upon anything inherently incredible or self-contradictory in the other party's testimony itself, such perjury does not have the effect of substantially obstructing or halting the judicial process, and thus a contempt finding would be in error. Murer v. Rogowski, 29 Colo. App. 235, 480 P.2d 853 (1971).

Where a party is using delaying tactics in his request for continuance, the court should deny request rather than holding him in contempt. Altobella v. Priest, 153 Colo. 309, 385 P.2d 585 (1963).

Facts would not support a finding of direct contempt, where no warning was given at the time defendant allegedly made offensive statement to the court, and the primary factual foundation consisted of the defendant's responses to the courts questions. People v. Ellis, 189 Colo. 378, 540 P.2d 1082 (1975).

Facts supported finding of direct contempt when defendant admittedly made offensive statement during the course of proceedings even though obscenity was directed toward counsel for the People and merely overheard by the court. There was no abuse of discretion by the trial court given the fact that the defendant admitted it was inappropriate and an affront to the dignity of the court and its proceedings, and given the fact that defendant was an attorney admitted to the Bar. People v. Holmes, 967 P.2d 192 (Colo. App. 1998).

Oral stipulations rescinded. Behavior was not direct contempt punishable by summary proceedings, where all respondent did was to rescind a previous oral stipulation entered into in open court by directing her attorney to repudiate the stipulation. Ealy v. District Court, 189 Colo. 308, 539 P.2d 1244 (1975).

Provision in this rule that judgments shall be "final" refers only to extent of review. Cooper v. People ex rel. Wyatt, 13 Colo. 337, 22 P. 790 (1889).

IV. INDIRECT CONTEMPT.

Law reviews. For article, ''The Nuts and Bolts of Collecting Support'', see 19 Colo. Law. 1595 (1990).

Contempt, which does not occur in the presence of the court, is either criminal or civil, depending on the purpose and character of the sanctions sought to be imposed in the citation. People v. Razatos, 699 P.2d 970 (Colo. 1985); Groves v. District Court, 806 P.2d 947 (Colo. 1991).

A delay in trial caused by counsel's preparation of jury instructions should have been evaluated as indirect contempt rather than direct contempt because the court did not observe or hear any of the offending behavior. The order for sanctions was set aside because none of the procedures for a hearing and the imposition of sanctions was followed by the trial court. Martinez v. Affordable Hous. Network, Inc., 109 P.3d 983 (Colo. App. 2004), rev'd on other grounds, 121 P.3d 1201 (Colo. 2005).

This rule is applicable to civil contempt for violating an injunction. Shore v. People, 26 Colo. 516, 59 P. 49 (1899).

Those to be adjudged in contempt must be subject to court's jurisdiction. Where contempt citations were issued to officers of home for the mentally defective because they had refused admission of child ordered there by court, said officials were parties to no proceeding and had not submitted themselves to jurisdiction of court and consequently were not amenable to its commands. People ex rel. Dunbar v. County Court, 128 Colo. 374, 262 P.2d 550 (1953).

A court which acquires personal jurisdiction over party in divorce proceedings has continuing "in personam" jurisdiction to modify child support orders and to enforce original custody orders through exercise power of contempt; therefore, personal service on party out of state is sufficient and party's failure to appear does not deprive court of jurisdiction or power to punish for contempt. Brown v. Brown, 31 Colo. App. 557, 506 P.2d 386 (1972), modified, 183 Colo. 356, 516 P.2d 1129 (1974).

Compliance with the procedure governing contempt matters is essential before jurisdiction to punish for contempt attaches. Urbancich v. Mayberry, 124 Colo. 311, 236 P.2d 535 (1951).

The procedural provisions of section (c) are not exclusive. In re Peper, 38 Colo. App. 177, 554 P.2d 727 (1976).

There is no fixed procedural formula for contempt proceedings; rather the polestar in determining the validity of contempt procedures is whether due process of law is accorded. In re Peper, 38 Colo. App. 177, 554 P.2d 727 (1976).

Section (c) does not mandate a conference with opposing counsel before filing a motion for an indirect contempt citation, although doing so could be useful, or even advisable. In re Cyr, 186 P.3d 88 (Colo. App. 2008).

The provision in this rule, requiring an affidavit of facts constituting contempt, is designed to meet actual contemptuous acts committed out of the presence of the court; it has no application to contempt committed in the immediate presence of the court. Jensen v. Jensen, 96 Colo. 151, 40 P.2d 238 (1935).

A constructive contempt must be brought to the court's attention by affidavit; this affidavit must state facts which, if established, would constitute a contempt, and if it does not do so the court is without jurisdiction to proceed. Wyatt v. People, 17 Colo. 252, 28 P. 961 (1892).

This provision as to affidavits is simply declaratory common-law practice, and the rule concerning the materiality of the affidavit should prevail to the same extent in the absence of statute. Wyatt v. People, 17 Colo. 252, 28 P. 961 (1892).

The affidavit must contain an averment that the charges were false as well as malicious. Fort v. Coop. Farmers' Exch., Inc., 81 Colo. 431, 256 P. 319 (1927).

It is not necessary that the affidavit charging the offense set forth the evidence by which the general declarations therein are to be established; general declarations or ultimate facts only are required. Guiraud v. Nevada Canal Co., 79 Colo. 289, 245 P. 485 (1926); In re Roberts, 757 P.2d 1108 (Colo. App. 1988).

If the petition and affidavit state facts which if true show that a contempt was committed, the court acquires jurisdiction, otherwise not. Fort v. People ex rel. Coop. Farmers' Exch., Inc., 81 Colo. 420, 256 P. 325 (1927).

Where affidavit fails to state facts showing contempt, court is without jurisdiction. When an affidavit is presented as a basis of a proceeding for contempt, the court must, in the first instance, examine the same, and, if the facts presented do not show that a contempt has been committed, the court will be without jurisdiction to proceed; but if the facts are sufficient, the court may take jurisdiction, and its subsequent orders will not be reviewed for mere errors. Cooper v. People ex rel. Wyatt, 13 Colo. 337, 22 P. 790 (1889).

Notice of charge required. A contempt sanction may not be imposed until the alleged contemner has received notice of the charge, including the nature of the act of contempt that he is alleged to have committed. Griffin v. Jackson, 759 P.2d 839 (Colo. App. 1988); Dooley v. District Court, 811 P.2d 809 (Colo. 1991).

Right to notice of purpose of hearing. Under section (c), a defendant has the right to have notice of the purpose of the hearing and to have an opportunity to be heard. Wright v. District Court, 192 Colo. 553, 561 P.2d 15 (1977).

Essential to due process in contempt proceedings is the right of one to know that the purpose of the hearing is the ascertainment of whether he is guilty of contempt. In re Peper, 38 Colo. App. 177, 554 P.2d 727 (1976).

A judgment of contempt entered without affidavit, notice, or hearing is void for want of jurisdiction. Pomeranz v. Class, 82 Colo. 173, 257 P. 1086 (1927).

Direct criminal contempts are punishable summarily without affidavit, notice, rule to show cause, or other process. Shotkin v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. R., 124 Colo. 141, 235 P.2d 990 (1951), cert. denied, 343 U.S. 906, 72 S. Ct. 638, 96 L. Ed. 1325 (1952).

Jurisdiction over a criminal contempt charge was not lost because it was initiated by the filing of a verified information rather than by the citation procedure under this rule, which would have been the better practice. People v. Barron, 677 P.2d 1370 (Colo. 1984).

Motion may be included in affidavit. An affidavit containing a statement equivalent to a motion for the issuance of a citation is a sufficient "motion supported by affidavit"; the fact that the motion is included in the affidavit instead of being presented as a separate document does not invalidate it. Shapiro v. Shapiro, 115 Colo. 501, 175 P.2d 387 (1946).

Court must issue a citation in order to obtain jurisdiction. To obtain jurisdiction to punish for contempt based on interference with the execution of legal process or the administration of justice, it is necessary for the trial court to issue a citation commanding the respondents to show cause why they should not be held in contempt for interfering with the execution of legal process or obstructing the administration of justice. Where this is not done, the trial court has no power to punish for contempt based on the grounds of interference and obstruction. Eatchel v. Lanphere, 170 Colo. 545, 463 P.2d 457 (1970).

The accused can be convicted of no contempt other than that charged in the citation, since the citation for contempt plays a very important role in enabling the person charged to understandingly shape his course and prepare his defense. Eatchel v. Lanphere, 170 Colo. 545, 463 P.2d 457 (1970); Wright v. District Court, 192 Colo. 553, 561 P.2d 15 (1977); Dooley v. District Court, 811 P.2d 809 (Colo. 1991).

Where contempt citation alleged only that attorney failed to prepare for hearing, court's findings referring to attorney's habits in courtroom and in his preparation and filing of motions and briefs could not stand. Dooley v. District Court, 811 P.2d 809 (Colo. 1991).

Even though the citation did not include all of the grounds for contempt that were specified in the verified motion attached to the citation, the court held that the issues specified in the motion could be raised as grounds for contempt because the husband received full notice of them through the motion and was not denied due process. In re Lamutt, 881 P.2d 445 (Colo. App. 1994).

Citation for failing to appear in court as directed is specific enough. A citation reciting that one is to appear on a certain day to show cause why he should not be adjudged in contempt in accordance with an attached court order citing him for contempt for failure to appear in court as directed is specific enough to enable him either to defend or explain in mitigation his absence from court. Harthun v. District Court, 178 Colo. 118, 495 P.2d 539 (1972).

Hearing necessary for out-of-court contempt. In those cases where the judge did not personally observe the contemptuous conduct, a hearing is necessary to find the facts, and the hearing enables the judge to ascertain the facts of the occurrence and permits the defendant to explain his behavior and offer evidence to mitigate the penalty. People v. Lucero, 196 Colo. 276, 584 P.2d 1208 (1978).

A hearing is essential to due process. When it is clear that matters happened outside the presence of the court, it is necessary to hold a hearing on the contempt charge, for a procedure which accords with due process of law is essential. Harthun v. District Court, 178 Colo. 118, 495 P.2d 539 (1972).

A situation, involving a possible indirect contempt, requires, as a minimum, notice of the charge, the right to be represented by counsel, a hearing, the right to call and confront witnesses, and specific findings by the court. Losavio v. District Court, 182 Colo. 180, 512 P.2d 266 (1973).

Due process is a sham when a judge is both prosecutor and judge in an indirect contempt case. Harthun v. District Court, 178 Colo. 118, 495 P.2d 539 (1972).

Procedure held violative of provisions of this rule. Where the only citation served upon the defendant was that which commanded him to appear before the court ''for examination upon oath on the matter of said complaint and to abide by the orders of this court entered upon said hearing''; at the time he appeared he was not informed by the citation that he was being subjected to proceedings in contempt; no order of the court had as yet been entered requiring any act on his part; on the date of his appearance, the court at one and the same time, entered the order requiring the performance of an act within 30 days, and erroneously adjudged that a warrant for the imprisonment might issue at the expiration of that time if the act commanded was not performed; this procedure was in violation of the mandatory provisions of this rule. Urbancich v. Mayberry, 124 Colo. 311, 236 P.2d 535 (1951).

Failure of defendant to appear as ordered by the court may constitute an indirect contempt of court. As an indirect contempt, the procedure prescribed by sections (c) and (d) must be followed. People v. Madonna, 651 P.2d 378 (Colo. 1982).

Attorney's appearance by telephone rather than in person at court hearing constituted indirect contempt instead of direct contempt. Attorney did nothing during telephone call to disrupt court proceedings and attorney's alleged violation was her failure to appear at a scheduled hearing. In re Johnson, 939 P.2d 479 (Colo. App. 1997).

An alleged assault by a third party could in no way constitute contempt by defendant either within or without the presence of the court, even if he ''instigated'' or was indirectly involved in the attack, such behavior (occurring in front of the courthouse, outside of the judge's view) would in no event be punishable under the summary procedures of this rule. Duran v. District Court, 190 Colo. 272, 545 P.2d 1365 (1976).

Rule held not complied with. McMullin v. City & County of Denver, 125 Colo. 231, 242 P.2d 240 (1952).

V. TRIAL AND PUNISHMENT.

Law reviews. For note, ''Trial by Jury in Contempt Cases'', see 2 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 115 (1930). For article, ''Expediting Court Procedure'', see 10 Dicta 113 (1933).

Two types of civil contempt are provided for by section (d). Marshall v. Marshall, 35 Colo. App. 442, 536 P.2d 845 (1975), modified, 191 Colo. 165, 551 P.2d 709 (1976).

The first type of civil contempt consists of a present refusal to perform an act in the power of the person to perform, normally constituting injury to others for whose benefit the act is required. Where such contempt is found, a court may enter a remedial order to enforce obedience consisting of an imposition of imprisonment, not for a definite time, but only until respondent performs the act which he is commanded and is able to perform. However, before a court can make a finding of contempt which would justify a remedial order, it must make findings which are supported by evidence that there is a refusal to perform the act in question, that there is a present duty to perform such act, and that there is a present ability to perform. Marshall v. Marshall, 35 Colo. App. 442, 536 P.2d 845 (1975), modified, 191 Colo. 165, 551 P.2d 709 (1976); In re Hartt, 43 Colo. App. 335, 603 P.2d 970 (1979).

To justify punishment for civil contempt consisting of a refusal to perform a required act for the benefit of others, the trial court must upon hearing make a finding both of the facts constituting contempt and of the present duty and ability to perform. Marshall v. Marshall, 191 Colo. 165, 551 P.2d 709 (1976).

There must be two findings of present duty and ability to pay: one which supports the contempt finding, and a second which justifies the imposition of a remedial order. In re Hartt, 43 Colo. App. 335, 603 P.2d 970 (1979).

The second type of civil contempt consists of conduct derogatory to the authority or dignity of the court. For such contempt, the court may enter a punitive order to vindicate its dignity, imposing a fine or imprisonment, or both, but that punishment should be definite as to amount and time, regardless of subsequent compliance with the court order. The court must, however, make findings of fact which are supported by evidence that respondent's conduct constitutes misbehavior and that such conduct is offensive to the authority and dignity of the court. Furthermore, before a court may consider the issue of contempt which would support a punitive order the citation issued to the respondent must state that punishment may be imposed to vindicate the dignity of the court. Marshall v. Marshall, 35 Colo. App. 442, 536 P.2d 845 (1975), modified, 191 Colo. 165, 551 P.2d 709 (1976).

Requirement of finding that conduct offends court's dignity constitutionally grounded. Although there is no fixed procedural formula for contempt proceeding, the requirement that there be an explicit finding by the trial court that the contemner's conduct offends the dignity of the court is grounded in constitutional principles. Lobb v. Hodges, 641 P.2d 310 (Colo. App. 1982).

Finding need not be in exact language of rule. Although a trial court need not make a finding in the exact language of section (d), i.e., "to vindicate the dignity of the court," nevertheless, the language used must be sufficient to comply with the rule. Lobb v. Hodges, 641 P.2d 310 (Colo. App. 1982).

Contempt proceedings should accord due process. Although there is no fixed procedural formula for contempt proceedings, so that technical nicety is not required, courts should improvise a procedure which accords with due process of law. Essential to due process in contempt proceedings is the right of one to know that the purpose of a hearing is the ascertainment of whether he is guilty of contempt. Austin v. City & County of Denver, 156 Colo. 180, 397 P.2d 743 (1964).

A court violates an attorney's due process rights if the court does not provide reasonable notice of the charges and an opportunity to be heard when it delays final adjudication and sentencing on a contempt charge until after the trial that created the contempt situation. People v. Jones, 262 P.3d 982 (Colo. App. 2011).

Fifth amendment protection against self-incrimination operates in a contempt proceeding. Griffin v. Western Realty Sales Corp., 665 P.2d 1031 (Colo. App. 1983); People v. Razatos, 699 P.2d 970 (Colo. 1985).

Sixth amendment right to be present at trial applies to criminal contempt proceedings. The conclusions and findings made by a presiding disciplinary judge when the respondent was not present were rejected by the court. While the record indicated that respondent had proper notice of the hearing, it contained no affirmative waiver of his right to be present, and no findings that respondent knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily waived his right to be present and participate at the hearing. In re Bauer, 30 P.3d 185 (Colo. 2001).

Although punitive contempt is not a common law or statutory crime, the possibility of incarceration associated with such proceedings is sufficient to require recognition and protection of the rights afforded to criminal defendants, including the right not to be called as a witness. In re Alverson, 981 P.2d 1123 (Colo. App. 1999).

Magistrate's error of requiring father to take the stand to invoke the privilege on a question by question basis after magistrate had been informed that father would assert the privilege violated father's fifth amendment right not to be called as a witness, and because the magistrate error was not harmless beyond a reasonable doubt, it required reversal of the contempt order. In re Alverson, 981 P.2d 1123 (Colo. App. 1999).

Petitioner is entitled to detailed notice and an opportunity to be heard before a contempt sanction can be imposed against her. Ealy v. District Court, 189 Colo. 308, 539 P.2d 1244 (1975); Wright v. District Court, 192 Colo. 553, 561 P.2d 15 (1977); People in Interest of S.C., 802 P.2d 1101 (Colo. App. 1989).

Defendant's due process rights were not violated when trial court entered judgment in the amount of accrued fines under contempt order without conducting an additional hearing. Due process entitles contemnor to an evidentiary hearing only if, in response to county's motion, he raised a genuine issue of material fact as to whether he complied with original order. Court's November 2003 contempt order put defendant on notice that remedial fines would accrue until he had complied with original July 2003 order, and county's motion in April 2006 put defendant on notice that fines had accrued for noncompliance with original order and that county had asked court to enter judgment in that amount. Defendant's response to county's motion failed to raise genuine issues of material fact that required trial court to conduct an evidentiary hearing. Bd. of County Comm'rs for Larimer v. Gurtler, 181 P.3d 315 (Colo. App. 2007).

Where a jail sentence may be imposed in a contempt proceeding, the alleged contemnor, if indigent, is entitled to the appointment of counsel. If a husband cited for contempt for failure to make child support payments to his former wife was refused legal services by at least two private attorneys because he was unable to pay requested fee, he was entitled to have his assets examined and considered by court in determining eligibility for court-appointed counsel under supreme court indigency guidelines. In re Wyatt, 728 P.2d 734 (Colo. App. 1986).

The question of whether there was any willful intent to interfere with the administration of justice requires a notice and hearing as a prerequisite to a judgment of contempt. District Att'y v. District Court, 150 Colo. 136, 371 P.2d 271 (1962).

When a trial court renders judgment "regardless of intent", it commits error in failing to determine intent because willful intent to inconvenience and delay the court is essential to a finding of contempt where an attorney fails to appear. Harthun v. District Court, 178 Colo. 118, 495 P.2d 539 (1972).

It is error for a judge who cites one for indirect contempt to also act as trial judge and prosecutor in a later hearing on the charge. Harthun v. District Court, 178 Colo. 118, 495 P.2d 539 (1972).

It is proper to ask a fellow judge to take his place. Where conditions do not make it impracticable, or where the delay may not injure public or private right, a judge called upon to act in a case of contempt in which he is involved may, without flinching from his duty, properly ask that one of his fellow judges take his place. Harthun v. District Court, 178 Colo. 118, 495 P.2d 539 (1972).

A person is entitled to have a different judge hear a contempt proceeding than the judge who issued the contempt charge if there is actual bias or the appearance of bias. The appearance of bias may be shown by a running controversy between the judge and the accused. People v. Jones, 262 P.3d 982 (Colo. App. 2011).

Where the contempt is charged by affidavit and the contemner makes no denial thereof, the court need not examine witnesses, in the absence of a request therefor by the accused. Zobel v. People ex rel. Kyle, 49 Colo. 142, 111 P. 846 (1910).

In any event, the right of trial by jury does not extend to cases of contempt. Cooper v. People ex rel. Wyatt, 13 Colo. 337, 22 P. 790 (1889).

Statutory provisions relating to change of venue have no application to proceedings to punish contempts unless such proceedings are expressly included in the written law. Guiraud v. Nevada Canal Co., 79 Colo. 289, 245 P. 485 (1926).

One charged with contempt of court has no right to a change of venue. Guiraud v. Nevada Canal Co., 79 Colo. 289, 245 P. 485 (1926).

The doctrine of laches is applicable to enforcement procedures for contempt. Hauck v. Schuck, 143 Colo. 324, 353 P.2d 79 (1960).

An accused can be convicted of no contempt other than that charged in the citation. Harthun v. District Court, 178 Colo. 118, 495 P.2d 539 (1972).

An order for attorney's fees is an adjunct of a finding of guilty of contempt, and so an award of attorney's fees by the trial court must be set aside if the judgment of contempt cannot stand. Eatchel v. Lanphere, 170 Colo. 545, 463 P.2d 457 (1970).

Awards of reasonable attorneys' fees to the person damaged by the contemner's behavior are an adjunct of a finding that the contemner is guilty of contempt and are not conditioned upon the ability to pay. In re Weisbart, 39 Colo. App. 115, 564 P.2d 961 (1977).

Imposition of attorney's fees limited. This rule does not authorize imposition of attorney's fees to recompense the contemnor, no matter how inappropriate may be the contempt proceeding initiated by the person claiming damage. Avco Fin. Servs. of Colo., Inc. v. Gonzales, 653 P.2d 751 (Colo. App. 1982).

This rule does not extend beyond authorization for imposition of attorney's fees against a contemnor for the benefit of the person damaged by the contempt. Avco Fin. Servs. of Colo., Inc. v. Gonzales, 653 P.2d 751 (Colo. App. 1982).

Attorney fees cannot be awarded as a punitive sanction in a contempt proceeding. Eichhorn v. Kelley, 56 P.3d 124 (Colo. App. 2002); In re Lopez, 109 P.3d 1021 (Colo. App. 2004).

District court erred in awarding costs and attorney fees under section (d)(1). Sheep grazing activities that resulted in contempt citation were not ongoing at the time of the contempt hearing; they had occurred in the past. Thus contemnor could not purge his contempt because he could not undo what he had done. Therefore, remedial sanctions such as the assessment of costs and attorney fees could not be imposed against contemnor in these circumstances. Section (d)(2) permits the assessment of costs and attorney fees if remedial sanctions are imposed against a contemnor. In contrast, the provisions relating to punitive contempt sanctions under section (d)(1) do not authorize the assessment of costs and attorney fees. Aspen Springs Metro. Dist. v. Keno, 2015 COA 97,716 P.3d 369.

Although attorney fees cannot be awarded as a punitive sanction in a contempt proceeding, attorney fees can be awarded if the case involves an agreement or contract for an award of such fees to the prevailing party. This rule does not preclude the trial court from enforcing a valid fee-shifting agreement. In re Sanchez-Vigil, 151 P.3d 621 (Colo. App. 2006).

Specific findings as to the reasonableness of attorney fees not required. In re Bernardoni, 731 P.2d 146 (Colo. App. 1986).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in awarding plaintiff costs for travel and meal expenses related to contempt order because the costs were reasonable and necessary. Madison Capital Co., LLC v. Star Acquisition VIII, 214 P.3d 557 (Colo. App. 2009).

Trial court abused its discretion in awarding plaintiff costs for a client fee related to contempt order because the affidavit submitted for recovery of the fee failed to establish that it was incurred solely for the related litigation. At least some portion of the fee was for general business costs; therefore, the fee is not recoverable. Madison Capital Co., LLC v. Star Acquisition VIII, 214 P.3d 557 (Colo. App. 2009).

Plaintiff's costs and attorney fees incurred in connection with defendants' appeal of contempt order may be awarded under section (d)(2) rule since they were incurred in connection with the contempt proceedings. However, plaintiff's fees and costs incurred in connection with defendants' appeal of award of said attorney fees may not be awarded under section (d)(2) because they were not incurred in connection with the related contempt proceedings. Rather, they were incurred as a consequence of defendants' appeal of the standards applied by the trial court in awarding said fees and costs. Madison Capital Co., LLC v. Star Acquisition VIII, 214 P.3d 557 (Colo. App. 2009).

Words apparently scandalous or offensive, but susceptible of a different construction, may be explained by the speaker or writer, and he be relieved of the charge of contempt on sworn disavowal of intent to commit it; but when the words are necessarily offensive and insulting, such disavowal, while it may excuse, cannot justify. Hughes v. People, 5 Colo. 436 (1880).

No contempt where "not in the power of the person to perform". Where evidence disclosed that parent was unable to make immediate payment of support for minor child ordered by juvenile court, there was no failure to perform "an act in the power of the person to perform", and contempt proceeding should have been dismissed. In re People in Interest of Murley, 124 Colo. 581, 239 P.2d 706 (1951).

If the evidence in a contempt proceeding discloses that a party is unable to make the payments required by a support order, there is no refusal to perform an act within his power under section (d) and the contempt proceeding must be dismissed. In re Crowley, 663 P.2d 267 (Colo. App. 1983); McVay v. Johnson, 727 P.2d 416 (Colo. App. 1986).

Remedial contempt sanctions cannot be imposed on an attorney who failed to pay restitution ordered by the court when the master's findings did not establish the attorney's present ability to pay the ordered restitution. People v. Razatos, 699 P.2d 970 (Colo. 1985).

Before a remedial contempt order under section (c) can enter, the court must find that the contemnor has the ability to comply with its order and make findings that justify the imposition of the remedial sanction. Wilkinson v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 872 P.2d 1269 (Colo. App. 1993); In re Estate of Elliott, 993 P.2d 474 (Colo. 2000).

A court may not impose remedial contempt sanctions without making the required finding of a present ability to comply or without including a purge clause. In re Lodeski, 107 P.3d 1097 (Colo. App. 2004).

Exclusive penalties. Since section (d) precisely delineates the penalties to be assessed for the purpose of vindicating the dignity of the court, the only remedies available are a fine or imprisonment. Blank v. District Court, 190 Colo. 114, 543 P.2d 1255 (1975).

Remedial orders and punitive orders distinguished. Under section (d) of this rule, there is recognized the distinction between a remedial order, the purpose of which is primarily to enforce obedience to a writ, and a punitive order to vindicate the authority of the law and uphold the dignity of the court. In the former case the fine which may be imposed is limited to the damages and expense resulting from the contempt and is payable to the person damaged thereby, and the imprisonment which may be imposed may continue only until the contemnor shall comply with the order of the court. In the latter case the fine or imprisonment is not dependent on damage or subsequent performance but is a matter solely within judicial discretion. Shapiro v. Shapiro, 115 Colo. 501, 175 P.2d 387 (1946).

If punishment for contempt of court is conditioned upon the contemner's future performance of a duty he has to another person, then the contempt order is no longer punitive, but becomes remedial. In re Crowley, 663 P.2d 267 (Colo. App. 1983); McVay v. Johnson, 727 P.2d 416 (Colo. App. 1986).

Where sanctions could not be clearly categorized as punitive or remedial, but appeared to contain attributes of both, order was vacated and remanded. People ex rel. Pub. Utils. Comm'n v. Entrup, 143 P.3d 1120 (Colo. App. 2006).

One thousand dollar fine for attorney's failure to timely file jury instructions is necessary to vindicate dignity of court and is not arbitrary or vindictive. Wooden v. Park Sch. District, 748 P.2d 1311 (Colo. App. 1987).

Proof of willfulness need not predicate a court's order for remedial contempt sanctions. In re Cyr, 186 P.3d 88 (Colo. App. 2008).

Contempt order cannot be construed to constitute both a punitive and remedial contempt order where single sanction was imposed to compel performance of act. McVay v. Johnson, 727 P.2d 416 (Colo. App. 1986).

Fine in any amount is permissible for vindication of the dignity of the court, but it is made payable to the court, not to the parties. Brown v. Brown, 183 Colo. 356, 516 P.2d 1129 (1973).

When court levies fine, it must make findings of fact that the parties' conduct constituted misbehavior which offended the court's authority and dignity. Bd. of Water Works v. Pueblo Water Works Employees Local 1045, 196 Colo. 308, 586 P.2d 18 (1978).

Imposition of jail sentence could not be sustained when the trial court did not make any finding that appellant had the present ability to comply with its remedial orders for the payment of money. In re Roberts, 757 P.2d 1108 (Colo. App. 1988).

A court may imprison a receiver for contempt for failure to pay over funds as ordered. Taylor v. Taylor, 79 Colo. 487, 247 P. 174 (1926).

Penal sanctions imposed only to prevent obstruction of justice. A court before imposing penal sanctions for contempt should proceed with caution and deliberation as the power should be exercised only when necessary to prevent obstruction or interference with the administration of justice. Lobb v. Hodges, 641 P.2d 310 (Colo. App. 1982).

Confinement for contempt for longer than six months is constitutionally impermissible unless the person has been given the opportunity for a jury trial. People v. Zamora, 665 P.2d 153 (Colo. App. 1983).

Language of court imposing jail term for punitive contempt complies with rule. Language of trial court imposing jail term for punitive contempt that: ''The reason for the punitive finding or punitive order of the court was to vindicate the dignity of this court and I think that vindication is long overdue in this case'' was sufficient to comply with the requirements of this rule. In re Joseph, 44 Colo. App. 128, 613 P.2d 344 (1980).

A commitment to jail for contempt is justified for failure to pay alimony and attorneys' fees in a divorce action, but any commitment for failure of the defendant-husband to pay the plaintiff-wife for money loaned is not justified. Harvey v. Harvey, 153 Colo. 15, 384 P.2d 265 (1963).

Trial court can enforce its temporary maintenance and child support orders through punitive contempt proceedings, despite the fact that a judgment had entered on amounts due and not paid under such orders. In re Nussbeck, 974 P.2d 493 (Colo. 1999).

Neither the Colorado Children's Code nor this rule authorizes default judgment as a sanction against a parent for failing to appear at a dependency and neglect adjudicatory hearing. People in Interest of K.J.B., 2014 COA 168, 342 P.3d 597.

An order of imprisonment for making false report held unauthorized. An order imprisoning a quasi-receiver for making false reports, unless she pay a judgment rendered against her based in part, at least, on rents and issues received from the property under claim of right is unauthorized. Taylor v. Taylor, 79 Colo. 487, 247 P. 174 (1926).

One may be imprisoned until he performs instead of a term certain. This rule, by providing that a party guilty of contempt consisting of failure to perform an act in the power of such person to perform may be imprisoned until its performance, negates a claim that one may be committed only for a term certain. Harvey v. Harvey, 153 Colo. 15, 384 P.2d 265 (1963).

When imprisonment of contemnor for indefinite period prohibited. Where the trial court fails to find that contemnor had resources at the time of sentence with which he could purge himself of contempt, it may not order his imprisonment for an indefinite period. In re Hartt, 43 Colo. App. 335, 603 P.2d 970 (1979).

A punitive fine or imprisonment may be imposed only if the citation so states. Shapiro v. Shapiro, 115 Colo. 501, 175 P.2d 387 (1946); People v. Razatos, 699 P.2d 970 (Colo. 1985).

Unconditional fine imposed as punitive sanction in remedial contempt proceeding was error because a separate contempt proceeding to address the failure to submit a financial affidavit as ordered was never commenced. In re Lodeski, 107 P.3d 1097 (Colo. App. 2004).

Finding required to enter punitive order. In order for a court to enter a punitive order for contempt, it must, on supporting evidence, find that the alleged contemner's conduct constitutes misbehavior and that such conduct is offensive to the authority and dignity of the court. Lobb v. Hodges, 641 P.2d 310 (Colo. App. 1982).

Damages and attorney fees. Awards of attorney fees are incidental to a finding of contempt and are not conditioned upon the ability to pay. Likewise, awards of damages suffered by the contempt, plus costs, are incidental to the contempt finding and are not conditioned upon the ability to pay. In re Harris, 670 P.2d 446 (Colo. App. 1983).

In a proceeding involving only contempt for violation of a temporary restraining order, it is not proper for a court to make a restraining order permanent. Renner v. Williams, 140 Colo. 432, 344 P.2d 966 (1959).

The matter of dealing with contempt is within the sound discretion of the trial court, and its determination is final unless an abuse of such discretion is clearly shown. Conway v. Conway, 134 Colo. 79, 299 P.2d 509 (1956); DeMott v. Smith, 29 Colo. App. 531, 486 P.2d 451 (1971).

Trial court's decision on facts is conclusive. Where the trial court has jurisdiction, regularly pursues its authority, and there is evidence of contempt, its decision on the facts is conclusive. Wall v. District Court, 146 Colo. 74, 360 P.2d 452 (1961).

In the review of judgments in contempt, the supreme court goes no farther than to inquire if the court pronouncing sentence had jurisdiction of the parties and of the offense charged. Wall v. District Court, 146 Colo. 74, 360 P.2d 452 (1961).

Hearing required before revocation of suspended contempt sentence. In re Bernardoni, 731 P.2d 146 (Colo. App. 1986).

Review must be within the appellate court's jurisdiction. The supreme court has no jurisdiction to review the judgment of the district court imposing a penalty for a contempt of court civil in character, unless some question is involved such as is required to give the supreme court jurisdiction in other civil actions. Naturita Canal & Reservoir Co. v. People ex rel. Meenan, 30 Colo. 407, 70 P. 691 (1902).

Appellate court lacked jurisdiction to consider defendants' appeal of contempt order because defendants did not file a timely appeal of the order. Order entering remedial sanctions against defendant was final and appealable under this rule, but defendants failed to file appeal within 45 days after the order was entered pursuant to C.A.R. 4(a) and section (f) of this rule. Madison Capital Co., LLC v. Star Acquisition VIII, 214 P.3d 557 (Colo. App. 2009).

Review is confined to whether the trial court had jurisdiction and regularly pursued its authority. Cooper v. People ex rel. Wyatt, 13 Colo. 337, 22 P. 790 (1889); Guiraud v. Nevada Canal Co., 79 Colo. 289, 245 P. 485 (1926); Clear Creek Power & Dev. Co. v. Cutler, 79 Colo. 355, 245 P. 939 (1926); Fort v. Coop. Farmers' Exch., Inc., 81 Colo. 431, 256 P. 319 (1927); Fort v. People ex rel. Coop. Farmers' Exch., Inc., 81 Colo. 420, 256 P. 325 (1927).

An order in contempt proceedings, if beyond the power of the trial court to enter, is subject to review. Wyatt v. People, 17 Colo. 252, 28 P. 961 (1892); Taylor v. Taylor, 79 Colo. 487, 247 P. 174 (1926).

Although, in reviewing a contempt proceeding, the appellate court is not privileged to pass upon the weight or sufficiency of the evidence but is limited to the question of whether the trial court had jurisdiction. Coolidge v. People ex rel. District Att'y, 72 Colo. 35, 209 P. 504 (1922).

Mere irregularities are not reviewable. Where in a proceeding to punish a contempt the court acts within its jurisdiction, mere irregularities are not reviewable on error. Zobel v. People ex rel. Kyle, 49 Colo. 142, 111 P. 846 (1910).

However, the punishment may be reviewed to determine whether excessive or arbitrary. While punishment for contempt which consists of conduct derogatory is discretionary, the supreme court not only may inquire as to jurisdiction and regularity of procedure, but also may determine whether or not the punishment imposed is so excessive and incommensurate with the gravity of the offense as to be arbitrary and vindictive. In re People in Interest of Murley, 124 Colo. 581, 239 P.2d 706 (1951).

Combining contempt and alimony findings inappropriate. Where respondent court combined its ruling on contempt issue with its decision to terminate alimony, there is no alternative but to remand this case to the trial court to take further evidence on the alimony issue and to make more appropriate findings. Blank v. District Court, 190 Colo. 114, 543 P.2d 1255 (1975).

Punishment held arbitrary and oppressive. In re People in Interest of Murley, 124 Colo. 581, 239 P.2d 706 (1951).

CHAPTER 16

AFFIDAVITS, ARBITRATION, MISCELLANEOUS

Rule 108. Affidavits

An affidavit may be sworn to either within or without this state before any officer authorized by law to take and certify the acknowledgment of deeds conveying lands.

Cross references: For officers authorized to take acknowledgments of deeds, see §§ 24-12-104, 24-12-105, and 38-30-126 to 38-30-135, C.R.S.

ANNOTATION

Annotator's note. Since C.R.C.P. 108 is similar to § 373 of the former Code of Civil Procedure, which was supplanted by the Rules of Civil Procedure in 1941, relevant case construction of that section has been included in the annotations to this rule.

An officer of a foreign jurisdiction administering an oath to an affiant is presumed to be acting within the territorial jurisdiction for which he was appointed. Tucker v. Tucker, 21 Colo. App. 94, 121 P. 125 (1912).

That in the caption of an affidavit the venue as laid in Colorado is not sufficient to overcome this presumption. Tucker v. Tucker, 21 Colo. App. 94, 121 P. 125 (1912).

Rule 109. Arbitration

Repealed March 17, 1994, as to cases filed on or after July 1, 1994.

Rule 109.1. Mandatory Arbitration

Repealed May 30, 1991, as to cases filed on and after July 1, 1991.

Rule 110. Miscellaneous

(a) Amendments. No writ or process shall be quashed, nor any order or decree set aside, nor any undertaking be held invalid, nor any affidavit, traverse, or other paper be held insufficient if the same is corrected within the time and manner prescribed by the court, which shall be liberal in permitting amendments.

(b) Use of Terms. Words used in the present tense shall include the future; singular shall include the plural; masculine shall include the feminine; person or party shall include all manner of organizations which may sue or be sued. The use of the word clerk, sheriff, marshal, or other officer means such officer or his deputy or other person authorized to perform his duties. The word ''oath'' includes the word ''affirmation''; and the phrase ''to swear'' includes ''to affirm''; signature or subscription shall include mark, when the person is unable to write, his name being written near it and witnessed by a person who writes his own name as a witness. A superintendent, overseer, foreman, sales director, or person occupying a similar position, may be considered a managing agent for the purposes of these rules.

(c) Certificates. Certificates shall be made in the name of the officer either by the officer or by his deputy.

(d) Cross Claimants, Counterclaimants and Third-Party Claimants. Where a cross claim, counterclaim or third-party claim is filed, the claimant thereunder shall have the same rights and remedies as if a plaintiff.

ANNOTATION

In construing section 128 of the former Code of Civil Procedure, relating to affidavits or bonds, the court held that amendments under that section must be confined to cases in which the insufficiency was not jurisdictional, and that the section was not intended to permit interposing of affidavit where there was either none at all or its equivalent. Mentzer v. Ellison, 7 Colo. App. 315, 43 P. 464 (1896).

Prior to the adoption of this rule, general assembly endeavored to make it plain that substance, not form, was the controlling consideration. Waite v. People, 83 Colo. 162, 262 P. 1009 (1928) (decided under § 478 of the former Code of Civil Procedure, which was replaced by the Rules of Civil Procedure in 1941).

Rules 111 to 119.

Rules 111 to 119, inclusive, Supreme Court Proceedings, are deleted and are replaced by Chapter 32, Colorado Appellate Rules 1 through 58.

CHAPTER 17

Court Proceedings: Sales Under Powers

CHAPTER 17

COURT PROCEEDINGS: SALES UNDER POWERS

Rule 120. Orders Authorizing Foreclosure Sale Under Power in a Deed of Trust to the Public Trustee the Public Trustee

(a) Motion for Order Authorizing Sale. When an order of court is desired authorizing a foreclosure sale under a power of sale contained in a deed of trust to a public trustee, any person entitled to enforce the deed of trust may file a verified motion in a district court seeking such order. The motion shall be captioned: ''Verified Motion for Order Authorizing a Foreclosure Sale under C.R.C.P. 120,'' and shall be verified by a person with knowledge of the contents of the motion who is competent to testify regarding the facts stated in the motion.

(1) Contents of Motion. The motion shall include a copy of the evidence of debt, the deed of trust containing the power of sale, and any subsequent modifications of these documents. The motion shall describe the property to be sold, shall specify the facts giving rise to the default, and may include documents relevant to the claim of a default.

(A) When the property to be sold is personal property, the motion shall state the names and last known addresses, as shown by the records of the moving party, of all persons known or believed by the moving party to have an interest in such property which may be materially affected or extinguished by such sale.

(B) When the property to be sold is real property and the power of sale is contained in a deed of trust to a public trustee, the motion shall state the name and last known address, as shown by the real property records of the clerk and recorder of the county where the property or any portion thereof is located and the records of the moving party, of:

(i) the grantor of the deed of trust;

(ii) the current record owner of the property to be sold;

(iii) all persons known or believed by the moving party to be personally liable for the debt secured by the deed of trust;

(iv) those persons who appear to have an interest in such real property that is evidenced by a document recorded after the recording of the deed of trust and before the recording of the notice of election and demand for sale; and

(v) those persons whose interest in the real property may otherwise be affected by the foreclosure.

(C) In describing and giving notice to persons who appear to have acquired a record interest in real property, the address of each such person shall be the address that is given in the recorded instrument evidencing such person's interest. If such recorded instrument does not give an address or if only the county and state are given as the address of such person, no address need be stated for such person in the motion.

(2) Setting of Response Deadline; Hearing Date. On receipt of the motion, the clerk shall set a deadline by which any response to the motion must be filed. The deadline shall be not less than 21 nor more than 35 days after the filing of the motion. For purposes of any statutory reference to the date of a hearing under C.R.C.P. 120, the response deadline set by the clerk shall be regarded as the scheduled hearing date unless a later hearing date is set by the court pursuant to section (c)(2) below.

(b) Notice of Response Deadline; Service of Notice. The moving party shall issue a notice stating:

(1) a description of the deed of trust containing the power of sale, the property sought to be sold at foreclosure, and the facts asserted in the motion to support the claim of a default;

(2) the right of any interested person to file and serve a response as provided in section (c), including the addresses at which such response must be filed and served and the deadline set by the clerk for filing a response;

(3) the following advisement: ''If this case is not filed in the county where your property or a substantial part of your property is located, you have the right to ask the court to move the case to that county. If you file a response and the court sets a hearing date, your request to move the case must be filed with the court at least 7 days before the date of the hearing unless the request was included in your response.''; and

(4) the mailing address of the moving party and, if different, the name and address of any authorized servicer for the loan secured by the deed of trust. If the moving party or authorized servicer, if different, is not authorized to modify the evidence of the debt, the notice shall state in addition the name, mailing address, and telephone number of a representative authorized to address loss mitigation requests. A copy of C.R.C.P. 120 shall be included with or attached to the notice. The notice shall be served by the moving party not less than 14 days prior to the response deadline set by the clerk, by:

(A) mailing a true copy of the notice to each person named in the motion (other than any person for whom no address is stated) at that person's address or addresses stated in the motion;

(B) filing a copy with the clerk for posting by the clerk in the courthouse in which the motion is pending; and

(C) if the property to be sold is a residential property as defined by statute, by posting a true copy of the notice in a conspicuous place on the subject property as required by statute. Proof of mailing and delivery of the notice to the clerk for posting in the courthouse, and proof of posting of the notice on the residential property, shall be set forth in the certificate of the moving party or moving party's agent. For the purpose of this section, posting by the clerk may be electronic on the court's public website so long as the electronic address for the posting is displayed conspicuously at the courthouse.

(c) Response Stating Objection to Motion for Order Authorizing Sale; Filing and Service.

(1) Any interested person who disputes, on grounds within the scope of the hearing provided for in section (d), the moving party's right to an order authorizing sale may file and serve a response to the motion. The response must describe the facts the respondent relies on in objecting to the issuance of an order authorizing sale, and may include copies of documents which support the respondent's position. The response shall be filed and served not later than the response deadline set by the clerk. The response shall include contact information for the respondent including name, mailing address, telephone number, and, if applicable, an e-mail address. Service of the response on the moving party shall be made in accordance with C.R.C.P. 5(b).

(2) If a response is filed stating grounds for opposition to the motion within the scope of this Rule as provided for in section (d), the court shall set the matter for hearing at a later date. The clerk shall clear available hearing dates with the parties and counsel, if practical, and shall give notice to counsel and any self-represented parties who have appeared in the matter, in accordance with the rules applicable to e-filing, no less than 14 days prior to the new hearing date.

(d) Scope of Issues at the Hearing; Order Authorizing Foreclosure Sale; Effect of Order. The court shall examine the motion and any responses.

(1) If the matter is set for hearing, the scope of inquiry at the hearing shall not extend beyond

(A) the existence of a default authorizing exercise of a power of sale under the terms of the deed of trust described in the motion;

(B) consideration by the court of the requirements of the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act, 50 U.S.C. § 3931, as amended;

(C) whether the moving party is the real party in interest; and

(D) whether the status of any request for a loan modification agreement bars a foreclosure sale as a matter of law.

The court shall determine whether there is a reasonable probability that a default justifying the sale has occurred, whether an order authorizing sale is otherwise proper under the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act, whether the moving party is the real party in interest, and, if each of those matters is determined in favor of the moving party, whether evidence presented in support of defenses raised by the respondent and within the scope of this Rule prevents the court from finding that there is a reasonable probability that the moving party is entitled to an order authorizing a foreclosure sale. The court shall grant or deny the motion in accordance with such determination. For good cause shown, the court may continue a hearing.

(2) If no response has been filed by the response deadline set by the clerk, and if the court is satisfied that venue is proper and the moving party is entitled to an order authorizing sale, the court shall forthwith enter an order authorizing sale.

(3) Any order authorizing sale shall recite the date the hearing was completed, if a hearing was held, or, if no response was filed and no hearing was held, shall recite the response deadline set by the clerk as the date a hearing was scheduled, but that no hearing occurred.

(4) An order granting or denying a motion filed under this Rule shall not constitute an appealable order or final judgment. The granting of a motion authorizing a foreclosure shall be without prejudice to the right of any person aggrieved to seek injunctive or other relief in any court of competent jurisdiction, and the denial of any such motion shall be without prejudice to any other right or remedy of the moving party.

(e) The court shall not require the appointment of an attorney to represent any interested person as a condition of granting such motion, unless it appears from the motion or other papers filed with the court that there is a reasonable probability that the interested person is in the military service.

(f) Venue. For the purposes of this section, a consumer obligation is any obligation

(1) as to which the obligor is a natural person, and

(2) is incurred primarily for a personal, family, or household purpose.

Any proceeding under this Rule involving a consumer obligation shall be brought in and heard in the county in which such consumer signed the obligation or in which the property or a substantial part of the property is located. Any proceeding under this Rule that does not involve a consumer obligation or an instrument securing a consumer obligation may be brought and heard in any county. However, in any proceeding under this Rule, if a response is timely filed, and if in the response or in any other writing filed with the court, the responding party requests a change of venue to the county in which the encumbered property or a substantial part thereof is situated, the court shall order transfer of the proceeding to such county.

(g) Return of Sale. The court shall require a return of sale to be made to the court. If it appears from the return that the sale was conducted in conformity with the order authorizing the sale, the court shall enter an order approving the sale. This order is not appealable and shall not have preclusive effect in any other action or proceeding.

(h) Docket Fee. A docket fee in the amount specified by law shall be paid by the person filing the motion. Unless the court shall otherwise order, any person filing a response to the motion shall pay, at the time of the filing of such response, a docket fee in the amount specified by law for a defendant or respondent in a civil action under section 13-32-101(1)(d), C.R.S.

COMMENTS

[1] The 1989 amendment to C.R.C.P. 120 (Sales Under Powers) is a composite of changes necessary to update the Rule and make it more workable. The amendment was developed by a special committee made up of practitioners and judges having expertise in that area of practice, with both creditor and debtor interests represented.

[2] The changes are in three categories. There are changes that permit court clerks to perform many of the tasks that were previously required to be accomplished by the Court and thus save valuable Court time. There are changes to venue provisions of the Rule for compliance with the Federal Fair Debt Collection Practices Act. There are also a number of editorial changes to improve the language of the Rule.

[3] There was considerable debate concerning whether the Federal ''Fair Debt Collection Practices Act'' is applicable to a C.R.C.P. 120 proceeding. Rather than attempting to mandate compliance with that federal statute by specific rule provision, the Committee recommends that a person acting as a debt collector in a matter covered by the provisions of the Federal ''Fair Debt Collection Practices Act'' be aware of the potential applicability of the Act and comply with it, notwithstanding any provision of this Rule.

Annotator's note. Since this rule is similar to this rule as it existed prior to its 2017 amendment and to rules antecedent to that rule, relevant cases construing those rules are included in these annotations.

This rule was repealed and readopted to provide for due process safeguards to one who challenges the entitlement to foreclose a deed of trust containing a power of sale to the public trustee. Valley Dev. at Vail, Inc. v. Warder, 192 Colo. 316, 557 P.2d 1180 (1976).

Due process requires opportunity to be heard. Due process under section (d) requires only that the respondents to the motion be given an opportunity to be heard on their contentions. Moreland v. Marwich, Ltd., 629 P.2d 1095 (Colo. App. 1981), rev'd on other grounds, 665 P.2d 613 (Colo. 1983).

Provisions of this rule must be strictly complied with by one seeking foreclosure under a power of sale through the public trustee. Dews v. District Court, 648 P.2d 662 (Colo. 1982).

A completed foreclosure need not be set aside where the complaining party received timely actual notice and was not prejudiced. Amos v. Aspen Alps 123, LLC, 298 P.3d 940 (Colo. App. 2010), aff'd, 2012 CO 46, 280 P.3d 1256.

The provisions of this rule are predicated upon the requirements of the soldiers' and sailors' civil relief act, and the rule was adopted for the purpose of establishing a procedure for compliance therewith. That act by its plain provisions does not prevent the foreclosure of security for any obligation pursuant to a written agreement of the parties executed during the period of military service. Whitaker v. Hearnsberger, 123 Colo. 545, 233 P.2d 389 (1951).

The purpose of the rule is only to establish the status of the debtor with respect to military service. Hastings v. Security Thrift & Mtg. Co., 145 Colo. 36, 357 P.2d 919 (1960).

Proceedings under this rule are designed to afford holders of notes secured by deeds of trust a means of avoiding questions of marketability of title derived from sales thereunder. Where the debtor was not in military service, the sale by the public trustee could have proceeded without reference to this rule without prejudice to the debtor. Hastings v. Security Thrift & Mtg. Co., 145 Colo. 36, 357 P.2d 919 (1960).

This rule implements the statutory public trustee foreclosure system. Bakers Park Mining & Milling Co. v. District Court, 662 P.2d 483 (Colo. 1983).

Proceedings under this rule are not adversary proceedings in which the court determines issues and enters a final judgment, and no appeal may be taken to review the same. Hastings v. Security Thrift & Mtg. Co., 145 Colo. 36, 357 P.2d 919 (1960).

When hearing required. If a response to the motion seeking sale under the public trustee's deed is timely filed, the court should conduct a hearing on the existence of the default, and other relevant issues if raised in the response. Dews v. District Court, 648 P.2d 662 (Colo. 1982).

The scope of inquiry for a hearing held pursuant to this rule is limited to the existence of a default or other circumstances authorizing the sale, and action collateral to such hearing is necessary to resolve all other issues. Ragsdale Bros. Roofing v. United Bank, 744 P.2d 750 (Colo. App. 1987); In re Carpenter, 200 B.R. 47 (D. Colo. 1996).

The purpose and scope of a hearing pursuant to this rule are very narrow: the trial court must determine whether there is a reasonable probability that a default or other circumstance authorizing exercise of a power of sale has occurred. The test is whether, considering all relevant evidence, there is a reasonable probability that a default exists. United Guar. Residential Ins. Co. v. Vanderlaan, 819 P.2d 1103 (Colo. App. 1991); Plymouth Capital Co. v. District Court, 955 P.2d 1014 (Colo. 1998).

Determination of real party in interest. The trial court in a proceeding under this rule must consider whether the moving parties are the real parties in interest when the issue is properly raised by the debtors. Goodwin v. District Court, 779 P.2d 837 (Colo. 1989).

The defenses of waiver and estoppel are valid defenses that should be considered by the trial court in a proceeding under this rule if properly raised by the debtor. Goodwin v. District Court, 779 P.2d 837 (Colo. 1989).

There is no requirement that an order directing foreclosure be filed in the county where the property affected is located. Hastings v. Security Thrift & Mtg. Co., 145 Colo. 36, 357 P.2d 919 (1960).

The notice procedure requires nothing more than that the notices be mailed to the mortgagee at the address given in the deed of trust. Motlong v. World Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 168 Colo. 540, 452 P.2d 384 (1969).

Certificate of mailing not conclusive. Although section (b) states that ''mailing and posting shall be evidenced by the certificate of the clerk'', the certificate is not conclusive proof of compliance with the rule but only creates a presumption which may be rebutted with evidence of noncompliance. Dews v. District Court, 648 P.2d 662 (Colo. 1982).

Court may retain supervisory jurisdiction over proposed foreclosure. The narrowly circumscribed scope of a proceeding under this rule does not preclude the court from retaining supervisory jurisdiction over a proposed foreclosure for purposes of ensuring that due process is accorded to the parties. Bakers Park Mining & Milling Co. v. District Court, 662 P.2d 483 (Colo. 1983).

Ex parte appointment of receiver. While the ex parte appointment of a receiver may be permissible under emergency circumstances or where notice is impractical, a case must be pending at the time of the appointment. Johnson v. McCaughan, Carter & Scharrer, 672 P.2d 221 (Colo. App. 1983).

A receivership hearing did not provide petitioners with an effective opportunity to be heard on the issue of foreclosure. Valley Dev. at Vail, Inc. v. Warder, 192 Colo. 316, 557 P.2d 1180 (1976).

Injunctive action is not the exclusive action which may be taken under this rule as an aggrieved person may also seek other relief in any court having jurisdiction. Ragsdale Bros. Roofing v. United Bank, 744 P.2d 750 (Colo. App. 1987).

Foreclosure sale must be scheduled within seven days of hearing. When a creditor seeks to foreclose a deed of trust or mortgage, the foreclosure sale must be scheduled not less than seven days after the hearing conducted under this rule. Kirchner v. Sanchez, 661 P.2d 1161 (Colo. 1983).

Petitioners may be allowed additional time to redeem. The trial court acts within the limits of its discretion when it allows the petitioners additional time to redeem from the foreclosure sales. Moreland v. Marwich, Ltd., 665 P.2d 613 (Colo. 1983).

Attorney's fees not provided for. The determination of whether attorneys' fees can be recovered and the amount that is due is not within the permissible scope of a proceeding under this rule. Bakers Park Mining & Milling Co. v. District Court, 662 P.2d 483 (Colo. 1983).

Proceedings under this rule are a ''judicial proceeding'' and, therefore, ''legal action'' for the purposes of the federal Fair Debt Collection Practices Act. Thus, former section (f) of this rule, which permitted an action to be filed in any county, was preempted by federal law. But acceptance by district court clerks of improperly filed actions was not ''state action'' for the purposes of 42 U.S.C. § 1983. Zartman v. Shapiro and Meinhold, 811 P.2d 409 (Colo. App. 1990) (decided under rule in effect prior to 1989 amendment), aff'd, 823 P.2d 120 (Colo. 1992).

The federal Fair Debt Collection Practices Act requires that an action to enforce an interest in real property securing a consumer's obligation, brought by a debt collector, must be brought only in a judicial district in which the real property is located. For purposes of the federal act an attorney who qualifies under the first sentence of the definition in 15 U.S.C. § 1692a(6) is a debt collector. Shapiro and Meinhold v. Zartman, 823 P.2d 120 (Colo. 1992) (decided under rule in effect prior to 1989 amendment).

Entities engaged in non-judicial foreclosure actions in this state are not debt collectors under the FDCPA. A non-judicial foreclosure differs from a judicial foreclosure in that the sale does not preserve to the trustee the right to collect any deficiency in the loan amount personally against the mortgagor. A creditor may collect a deficiency only after the non-judicial foreclosure sale and through a separate action. Thus, a non-judicial foreclosure proceeding is not covered because it only allows the trustee to obtain proceeds from the sale of the foreclosed property, and no more. Obduskey v. Wells Fargo, 879 F.3d 1216 (10th Cir. 2018), aff'd sub nom. Obduskey v. McCarthy & Holthus LLP, __ U.S. __, 139 S. Ct. 1029, 203 L. Ed. 3d 390 (2019).

Court order under this rule to reform a bid ex post facto was beyond its authority. United Guar. Res. Ins. v. Vanderlaan, 819 P.2d 1103 (Colo. App. 1991).

The statute of limitations applies to each installment due on a note separately and does not begin to run on any one installment until that installment is due. Right to foreclose on note pursuant to this rule is not extinguished because recovery on certain payments is barred by the statute of limitations. Application of Church, 833 P.2d 813 (Colo. App. 1992).

Plaintiffs' due process rights not violated where claim of insufficient notice arises out of their own failure to comply with the change of address requirements in the deed of trust. Plaintiffs failed to provide to defendant, in writing, a notice of change of address. Defendant thus utilized address specified in the deed of trust to serve its motion and notice under this rule and to provide the public trustee with plaintiffs' most current address. The plain language of the deed of trust expresses the parties' intentions concerning notice and changes of address. Defendant's adherence to the deed of trust' notice provision complied with the notice requirements of section (a). Thus, the notice provision in the deed of trust and defendant's compliance with that provision comported with the requirements of section (a). Estates in Eagle Ridge, LLLP v. Valley Bank & Trust, 141 P.3d 838 (Colo. App. 2005).

Denver district court had jurisdiction to enter order authorizing foreclosure sale in proceeding filed in that court under this rule notwithstanding pending Larimer county proceeding. Under the circumstances of this case, the rule of priority of jurisdiction did not divest the Denver district court of jurisdiction to enter the order authorizing sale. There was no risk of inconsistent decision or duplicative efforts, because defendant had abandoned its efforts to obtain an order authorizing sale from the Larimer county district court and, indeed, had not even filed the necessary documentation to allow it to obtain such an order from the court. Thus, policy reasons supporting rule of priority of jurisdiction are not implicated here. Estates in Eagle Ridge, LLLP v. Valley Bank & Trust, 141 P.3d 838 (Colo. App. 2005).

Rule 120.1. Order Authorizing Expedited Sale Pursuant to Statute

(a) Motion; Contents. An order of the court authorizing an expedited sale pursuant to section 38-38-903, C.R.S. may be sought in conjunction with the order authorizing sale. An eligible holder as defined by statute may file a verified motion, together with a supporting affidavit, in a district court seeking an order authorizing an expedited sale together with the motion for order authorizing sale pursuant to C.R.C.P. Rule 120. The affidavit shall state the following: (1) The moving party is an eligible holder as that term is defined by statute; (2) the subject deed of trust secures an eligible evidence of debt as that term is defined by statute; and (3) the property has been abandoned as defined by statute, or in the alternative, the grantor of the deed of trust requests an order for expedited foreclosure sale. Upon receipt of the motion and supporting affidavit, the clerk shall fix a time and place for a hearing on the motion for order authorizing sale and the motion for an expedited sale. The time fixed for hearing shall be not less than twenty nor more than thirty calendar days after the filing of the motion for expedited sale.

(b) Notice; Contents; Service. The moving party shall issue a combined notice in English and in Spanish, which shall include the provisions as specified in C.R.C.P. Rule 120(b) and add a statement that the moving party is seeking in addition to the order authorizing sale, an order for expedited foreclosure sale. The moving party shall additionally state that the property is abandoned, or in the alternative that the grantor of the deed of trust has requested the order for expedited foreclosure sale. At least fifteen calendar days prior to the hearing, the combined notice shall be served by the moving party as required by C.R.C.P. 120, and in addition shall be either personally served on the grantor of the deed of trust, or posted at the real property as provided in C.R.C.P. Rule 120(b). Such mailing, delivery to the clerk for posting, and personal service or property posting shall be evidenced by the certificate of the moving party or the moving party's agent.

(c) Response; Contents; Filing and Service. The grantor of the deed of trust may dispute the moving party's motion for expedited sale in the same time frame as provided in C.R.C.P. Rule 120.

(d) Hearing; Scope of Issues; Order; Effect. At the time and place set for the hearing or to which the hearing may have been continued, the court shall examine the motion and responses, if any. The scope of inquiry under this section shall not extend beyond the determination that the property is abandoned as that term is defined by statute, or that the grantor requests for an order for expedited sale. The court shall enter the order for expedited sale if there is clear and convincing evidence that the property has been abandoned or that the grantor of the deed of trust has requested such order. In order to establish clear and convincing evidence that the property has been abandoned, the moving party shall file an affidavit with the court as provided by statute. The court shall determine whether there is clear and convincing evidence that the property is abandoned.

(e) Hearing Dispensed with if no Response Filed. If no response has been filed within the time permitted by C.R.C.P. Rule 120(c), the court shall examine the motion and, if satisfied that the moving party is entitled to an order for expedited sale upon the facts stated in the motion and affidavit, the court shall dispense with the hearing and forthwith enter the order for expedited sale.

CHAPTER 17A

Practice Standards and Local Court Rules

ANALYSIS BY RULE

CHAPTER 17A

PRACTICE STANDARDS AND LOCAL COURT RULES

Rule 121. Local Rules — Statewide Practice Standards

(a) Repeal of local rules. All District Court local rules, including local procedures and standing orders having the effect of local rules, enacted before April 1, 1988 are hereby repealed.

(b) Authority to enact local rules on matters which are strictly local. Each court by action of a majority of its judges may from time to time propose local rules and amendments of local rules not inconsistent with the Colorado Rules of Civil Procedure or Practice Standards set forth in C.R.C.P. 121(c), nor inconsistent with any directive of the Supreme Court. A proposed rule or amendment shall not be effective until approved by the Supreme Court. No local procedure shall be effective unless adopted as a local rule in accordance with this Section (b) of C.R.C.P. 121. To obtain approval, three copies of any proposed local rule or amendment of a local rule shall be submitted to the Supreme Court through the office of the State Court Administrator. Reasonable uniformity of local rules is required. Numbering and format of any proposed local rule or amendment of a local rule shall be as prescribed by the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court's approval of a local rule or local procedure shall not preclude review of that rule or procedure under the law of circumstances of a particular case.

(c) Matters of statewide concern. The Colorado Rules of Civil Procedure and the following rule subject areas called ''Practice Standards'' are declared to be of statewide concern and shall preempt and control in their form and content over any differing local rule:

DISTRICT COURT* PRACTICE STANDARDS

§§ 1-1 to End

---

*Includes Denver Probate Court where applicable.

Section 1-1

ENTRY OF APPEARANCE AND WITHDRAWAL

1. Entry of Appearance.

No attorney shall appear in any matter before the court unless that attorney has entered an appearance by filing an Entry of Appearance or signing a pleading. An entry of appearance shall state (a) the identity of the party for whom the appearance is made; (b) the attorney's office address; (c) the attorney's telephone number; (d) the attorney's E-Mail address; and (e) the attorney's registration number.

2. Withdrawal From an Active Case.

(a) An attorney may withdraw from a case, without leave of court where the withdrawing attorney has complied with all outstanding orders of the court and either files a notice of withdrawal where there is active co-counsel for the party represented by the withdrawing attorney, or files a substitution of counsel, signed by both the withdrawing and replacement attorney, containing the information required for an Entry of Appearance under subsection 1 of this Practice Standard as to the replacement attorney.

(b) Otherwise an attorney may withdraw from a case only upon approval of the court. Such approval shall rest in the discretion of the court, but shall not be granted until a motion to withdraw has been filed and served on the client and the other parties of record or their attorneys and either both the client and all counsel for the other parties consent in writing at or after the time of the service of said motion, or at least 14 days have expired after service of said motion. Every motion to withdraw shall contain the following advisements:

(I) the client has the burden of keeping the court and the other parties informed where notices, pleadings or other papers may be served;

(II) if the client fails or refuses to comply with all court rules and orders, the client may suffer possible dismissal, default or other sanctions;

(III) the dates of any proceedings, including trial, which dates will not be delayed nor proceedings affected by the withdrawal of counsel;

(IV) the client's and the other parties' right to object to the motion to withdraw within 14 days after service of the motion;

(V) if the client is not a natural person, that it must be represented by counsel in any court proceedings unless it is a closely held entity and first complies with section 13-1-127, C.R.S.; and

(VI) the client's last known address and telephone number.

(c) The client and the opposing parties shall have 14 days after service of a motion to withdraw within which to file objections to the withdrawal.

(d) If the motion to withdraw is granted, the withdrawing attorney shall promptly notify the client and the other parties of the effective date of the withdrawal.

3. Withdrawal From Completed Cases.

In any civil case which is concluded and in which all related orders have been submitted and entered by the court and complied with by the withdrawing attorney, an attorney may withdraw from the case without leave of court by filing a notice in the form and content of Appendix to Chapters 1 to 17A, Form 36, C.R.C.P. [JDF Form 83], which shall be served upon the client and all other parties of record or their attorneys, pursuant to C.R.C.P. 5. The withdrawal shall automatically become effective 14 days after service upon the client and all other parties of record or their attorneys unless there is an objection filed, in which event the matter shall be assigned to an appropriate judicial officer for determination.

4. Entries of Appearance and Withdrawals by Members or Employees of Law Firms, Professional Corporations or Clinics.

The entry of an appearance or withdrawal by an attorney who is a member or an employee of a law firm, professional corporation or clinic shall relieve other members or employees of the same law firm, professional corporation or clinic from the necessity of filing additional entries of appearance or withdrawal in the same litigation unless otherwise indicated.

5. Notice of Limited Representation Entry of Appearance and Withdrawal.

In accordance with C.R.C.P. 11(b) and C.R.C.P. Rule 311(b), an attorney may undertake to provide limited representation to a pro se party involved in a court proceeding. Upon the request and with the consent of a pro se party, an attorney may make a limited appearance for the pro se party in one or more specified proceedings, if the attorney files and serves with the court and the other parties and attorneys (if any) a notice of the limited appearance prior to or simultaneous with the proceeding(s) for which the attorney appears. At the conclusion of such proceeding(s), the attorney's appearance terminates without the necessity of leave of court, upon the attorney filing a notice of completion of limited appearance. Service on an attorney who makes a limited appearance for a party shall be valid only in connection with the specific proceeding(s) for which the attorney appears.

COMMITTEE COMMENT

The purpose of section 1-1(5) is to implement Colorado Rules of Civil Procedure 11(b) and 311(b), which authorize limited representation of a pro se party either on a pro bono or fee basis, in accordance with Colorado Rule of Professional Conduct 1.2. This provision provides assurance that an attorney who makes a limited appearance for a pro se party in a specified case proceeding(s), at the request of and with the consent of the pro se party, can withdraw from the case upon filing a notice of completion of the limited appearance, without leave of court.

COMMITTEE COMMENT

An ''active case'' is any case other than a ''completed case'' as described in subsection 3 of the Practice Standard.

Section 1-2

SPECIAL ADMISSION OF OUT-OF-STATE AND FOREIGN ATTORNEYS

Special admission of an out-of-state or foreign attorney shall be in accordance with C.R.C.P. Chapter 18, Rules Governing Admission to the Bar 205.3 and 205.5.

Source: Entire section amended and adopted and committee comment repealed October 20, 2005, effective January 1, 2006; amended and effective September 9, 2015.

Section 1-3

JURY FEES

Each party exercising the right to trial by jury shall file and serve a demand therefor and simultaneously pay the requisite jury fee. The demand and payment of the jury fee shall be in accordance with Rule 38. The jury fee shall not be returned under any circumstances. Failure of a party to timely file and serve a demand for trial by jury and pay the jury fee shall constitute a waiver of that party's right to trial by jury. When any party exercises the right to trial by jury, every other party to the action must pay the requisite jury fee unless such other party files a notice of waiver of the right to trial by jury pursuant to Rule 38(a)(2). Any party who has demanded a trial by jury and has paid the requisite jury fee and any party who has not waived the right to trial by jury and has paid the requisite jury fee is entitled to trial by jury of all issues properly designated for trial by jury unless that party waives such right pursuant to Rule 38(e).

Source: Entire section repealed and reenacted July 12, 1990, effective September 1, 1990.

COMMITTEE COMMENT

Amendment of this practice standard is to conform it to the requirements of C.R.S. 13-71-144 (1989) and amended C.R.C.P 38. Under that statutory requirement, each party who wishes to be assured of having a jury trial, must demand a jury trial and pay a jury fee within the time specified. The case will be tried to a jury if the party demanding a jury trial makes a timely demand, pays the jury fee at the time of the demand and does not later waive a jury trial. If a demand is timely made and the jury fee timely paid, the right to jury trial cannot be withdrawn as against a party who has demanded a jury trial and timely paid a jury fee. For a party to be certain of having a jury trial, that party must demand it and timely pay a jury fee.

Section 1-4

SUPPRESSION FOR SERVICE OF PROCESS

In any civil action, upon written request of the claiming party, the fact of the filing of a case shall be suppressed by the clerk only upon order of the court to secure service of summons or other process and such order shall expire upon service of such summons or other process.

COMMITTEE COMMENT

This Practice Standard was a local rule found in most districts. It provides the machinery for the clerk to temporarily suppress the fact of filing of a case temporarily to avoid publicity that may affect ability to serve process. Such temporary suppression in aid of service of process, is different from the Practice Standard pertaining to limitation of access to court files.

Section 1-5

LIMITATION OF ACCESS TO COURT FILES

1. Nature of Order. Upon motion by any party named in any civil action, the court may limit access to court files. The order of limitation shall specify the nature of limitation, the duration of the limitation, and the reason for limitation.

2. When Order Granted. An order limiting access shall not be granted except upon a finding that the harm to the privacy of a person in interest outweighs the public interest.

3. Application for Order. A motion for limitation of access may be granted, ex parte, upon motion filed with the complaint, accompanied by supporting affidavit or at a hearing concerning the motion.

4. Review by Order. Upon notice to all parties of record, and after hearing, an order limiting access may be reviewed by the court at any time on its own motion or upon the motion of any person.

COMMITTEE COMMENT

This Practice Standard was made necessary by lack of uniformity throughout the districts concerning access to court files. Some districts permitted free access after service of process was obtained. Others, particularly in malpractice or domestic relations cases, almost routinely prohibited access to court file information. The committee deemed it preferable to have machinery available for limitation in an appropriate case, but also a means for other entities having interest in the litigation, including the media, to have access.

Section 1-6

SETTINGS FOR TRIALS OR HEARINGS/SETTINGS BY TELEPHONE

1. All settings of trials and hearings, other than those set on the initiative of the court, shall be by the courtroom clerk upon notice to all other parties. Settings by telephone are encouraged. The original or a copy of the notice shall be on file with the courtroom clerk before the setting and shall contain the following:

(a) The caption of the case with designation ''Notice to Set'' or ''Notice to Set by Telephone.''

(b) The nature of the matter being set.

(c) The date and time at which the setting will occur.

(d) The courtroom clerk's address, by division or courtroom number if applicable and telephone number.

(e) A statement that the party or attorney being notified may appear or if not present, will be called at or about the time specified.

(f) A statement if the setting is to be by telephone.

2. The party issuing the notice to set shall be responsible for contacting all other counsel and clearing available dates with them.

3. Any attorney receiving the notice to set who does not personally appear at the setting shall have personnel at his or her office, supplied with a current appointment calendar and authorized to make settings for that attorney, at the date and time in the notice.

4. The party requesting the setting shall immediately confirm in writing the date and time of the matter that has been set with all other parties or their attorneys and shall file that confirmation with the court.

COMMITTEE COMMENT

The change in Standard 1-6 is to allow for settings on initiative of the Court. This change is to resolve the question raised by several districts as to whether the Court had the power to initiate its own settings. There has also been a slight tidying-up of language of the first sentence.

Section 1-7

AUDIO-VISUAL DEVICES

The photographing, broadcasting, televising or recording of court proceedings in any courtroom shall be governed in accordance with Canon 3 of the Code of Judicial Conduct of the State of Colorado.

COMMITTEE COMMENT

This Practice Standard was deemed necessary because it was apparent from local rules of a number of counties that there was a general lack of awareness of Canon 3 of the Code of Judicial Conduct pertaining to photographing, broadcasting, televising or recording court proceedings. This Practice Standard draws attention to Canon 3 and incorporates its provisions by reference.

Section 1-8

CONSOLIDATION

A party seeking consolidation shall file a motion to consolidate in each case sought to be consolidated. The motion shall be determined by the court in the case first filed in accordance with Practice Standard § 1-15. If consolidation is ordered, all subsequent filings shall be in the case first filed and all previous filings related to the consolidated cases placed together under that case number, unless otherwise ordered by the court.

Section 1-9

MULTI-DISTRICT LITIGATION

Consolidation of matters pending in other districts shall be determined in accordance with C.R.C.P. 42.1.

Section 1-10

DISMISSAL FOR FAILURE TO PROSECUTE

1. Upon due notice to the opposite party, any party to a civil action may apply to have any action dismissed when such action has not been prosecuted or brought to trial with due diligence.

2. The court, on its own motion, may dismiss any action not prosecuted with due diligence, upon 35 days' notice in writing to each attorney of record and each appearing party not represented by counsel, or require the parties to show cause in writing why the case should not be dismissed. Showing of cause and objections thereto shall be determined in accordance with Practice Standard § 1-15 (Determination of Motions).

3. If the case has not been set for trial, no activity of record in excess of 12 continuous months shall be deemed prima facie failure to prosecute.

4. Failure to show cause on or before the date set forth in the court's notice shall justify dismissal without further proceedings.

5. Any dismissal under this rule shall be without prejudice unless otherwise specified by the court.

Source: 2. amended and adopted December 14, 2011, effective January 1, 2012, for all cases pending on or filed on or after January 1, 2012, pursuant to C.R.C.P. 1(b).

COMMITTEE COMMENT

The purpose of this Practice Standard is to encourage prosecution of pending cases and permit machinery to dispose of matters which are not being prosecuted. Dismissal is without prejudice, and there are sufficient safeguards incorporated into the Practice Standard to permit retention on the docket if cause for the delay and interest in the case is shown. The Practice Standard does not mandate that the court search its files and send out notices, but permits such action if the court wishes. The Practice Standard also permits initiation of the procedure by motion.

Section 1-11

CONTINUANCES

Motions for continuances of hearings or trials shall be determined in accordance with Practice Standard 1-15 and shall be granted only for good cause. Stipulations for continuance shall not be effective unless and until approved by the court. A motion for continuance or request for extension of time will not be considered without a certificate that a copy of the motion has also been served upon the moving attorney's client.

Source: Entire section amended and adopted April 14, 1994, effective January 1, 1995, for all cases filed on or after that date.

Section 1-12

MATTERS RELATED TO DISCOVERY

1. Unless otherwise ordered by the court, reasonable notice for the taking of depositions pursuant to C.R.C.P. 30(b)(1) shall not be less than 7 days. Before serving a notice to take a deposition, counsel seeking the deposition shall make a good faith effort to schedule it by agreement at a time reasonably convenient and economically efficient to the proposed deponent and counsel for all parties. Prior to scheduling or noticing any deposition, all counsel shall confer in a good faith effort to agree on a reasonable means of limiting the time and expense of that deposition. Pending resolution of any motion pursuant to C.R.C.P. 26(c), the filing of the motion shall stay the discovery at which the motion is directed. If the court directs that any discovery motion under Rule 26(c) be made orally, then movant's written notice to the other parties that a hearing has been requested on the motion shall stay the discovery to which the motion is directed.

2. Motions under Rules 26(c) and 37(a), C.R.C.P., shall set forth the interrogatory, request, question or response constituting the subject matter of the motion.

3. Interrogatories and requests under Rules 33, 34, and 36, C.R.C.P., and the responses thereto shall be served upon other counsel or parties, but shall not be filed with the court. If relief is sought under Rule 26(c), C.R.C.P., or Rule 37(a), C.R.C.P., copies of the portions of the interrogatories, requests, answers or responses in dispute shall be filed with the court contemporaneously with the motion. If interrogatories, requests, answers or responses are to be used at trial, the portions to be used shall be made available and placed, but not filed, with the trial judge at the outset of the trial insofar as their use reasonably can be anticipated.

4. The originals of all stenographically reported depositions shall be delivered to the party taking the deposition after submission to the deponent as required by Rule 30(e), C.R.C.P. The original of the deposition shall be retained by the party to whom it is delivered to be available for appropriate use by any party in a hearing or trial of the case. If a deposition is to be used at trial, it shall be made available for inspection and placed, but not filed with the trial judge at the outset of the trial insofar as its use reasonably can be anticipated.

5. Unless otherwise ordered, the court will not entertain any motion under Rule 37(a), C.R.C.P., unless counsel for the moving party has conferred or made reasonable effort to confer with opposing counsel concerning the matter in dispute before the filing of the motion. Counsel for the moving party shall file a certificate of compliance with this rule at the time the motion under Rule 37(a), C.R.C.P., is filed. If the court requires that any discovery motion be made orally, then movant must make a reasonable effort to confer with opposing counsel before requesting a hearing from the court.

[1] Provisions of the practice standard are patterned in part after the local rule now in effect in the United States District Court for the District of Colorado. This practice standard specifies the minimum time for the serving of a notice to take deposition. Before serving a notice, however, counsel are required to make a good faith effort to schedule the deposition by agreement at a time reasonably convenient and economically efficient to the deponent and all counsel. Counsel are also required to confer in a good faith effort to agree on a reasonable means of limiting the time and expense of any deposition. The provisions of this Practice Standard are also designed to lessen paper mass/filing space problems and resolve various general problems related to discovery.

2015

[2] This rule was amended to address situations arising in courts that require oral discovery motions.

Section 1-13

DEPOSITION BY AUDIO TAPE RECORDING

When a deposition is taken by audio tape recording under C.R.C.P. 30(b)(4), the following procedures shall be followed:

(a) An oath or affirmation shall be administered to the witness by a notary public or other officer authorized to administer oaths.

(b) Two tape recorders with separate microphones shall be used.

(c) Speakers shall identify themselves before each statement except during extended colloquy between examiner and deponent.

(d) The recording shall be transcribed at the expense of the party taking the deposition.

(e) The transcribed testimony shall be made available for correction and signature by the deponent in accordance with Rule 30(e), C.R.C.P.

(f) The tape from which the transcription is made shall be retained by the party taking the deposition. The second tape shall be retained by the adverse party. Both tapes shall be preserved until the litigation is concluded.

(g) The party responsible for the transcription shall make available to the other parties upon request copies of the transcription at a reasonable charge and shall also submit to the other parties copies of changes, if any, which are made by the deponent and shall also inform the other parties of the date when the deposition is available for signature and whether signature is obtained.

(h) The transcription shall be retained by the party taking the deposition and made available in accordance with Paragraph 4 Practice Standard § 1-12 (Matters Related To Discovery).

COMMITTEE COMMENT

This Practice Standard sets forth detailed procedural safeguards for taking of depositions by tape recording as set out in Sanchez v. District Court, 200 Colo. 33, 624 P.2d 1314 (1981).

Section 1-14

DEFAULT JUDGMENTS

1. To enter a default judgment under C.R.C.P. 55(b) of the Colorado Rules of Civil Procedure, the following documents in addition to the motion for default judgment are necessary:

(a) The original summons showing valid service on the particular defendant in accordance with Rule 4, C.R.C.P.

(b) An affidavit stating facts showing that venue of the action is proper. The affidavit may be executed by the attorney for the moving party.

(d) An affidavit or affidavits or exhibits establishing the amount of damages and interest, if any, for which judgment is being sought. The affidavit may not be executed by the attorney for the moving party. The affidavit must be executed by a person with knowledge of the damages and the basis therefor.

(e) If attorney fees are requested, an affidavit that the defendant agreed to pay attorney fees or that they are provided by statute; that they have been paid or incurred; and that they are reasonable. The attorney for the moving party may execute the affidavit setting forth those matters listed in or required by Colorado Rule of Professional Conduct 1.5.

(g) A proposed form of judgment which shall recite in the body of the judgment:

(1) The name of the party or parties to whom the judgment is to be granted;

(2) The name of the party or the parties against whom judgment is being taken;

(4) When there are multiple parties against whom judgment is taken, whether the relief is intended to be a joint and several obligation;

(5) Where multiple parties are involved, language to comply with C.R.C.P. 54(b), if final judgment is sought against less than all the defendants;

(6) The principal amount, interest and attorney's fees, if applicable, and costs which shall be separately stated.

2. If further documentation, proof or hearing is required, the court shall so notify the moving party.

3. If the party against whom default judgment is sought is in the military service, or his status cannot be shown, the court shall require such additional evidence or proceeding as will protect the interests of such party in accordance with the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act (SCRA), 50 U.S.C. § 3931, including the appointment of an attorney when necessary. The appointment of an attorney shall be made upon application of the moving party, and expense of such appointment shall be borne by the moving party, but taxable as costs awarded to the moving party as part of the judgment except as prohibited by law.

4. In proceedings which come within the provisions of Rules 55 or 120, C.R.C.P., attendance by the moving party or his attorney shall not be necessary in any instance in which all necessary elements for entry of default under those rules are self-evident from verified motion in the court file. When such matter comes up on the docket with no party or attorney appearing and the court is of the opinion that necessary elements are not so established, the court shall continue or vacate the hearing and advise the moving party or attorney accordingly.

This Practice Standard was needed because neither C.R.C.P. 55, nor any local rule specified the elements necessary to obtain a default judgment and each court was left to determine what was necessary. One faced with the task of attempting to obtain a default judgment usually found themselves making several trips to the courthouse, numerous phone calls and redoing needed documents several times. The Practice Standard is designed to minimize both court and attorney time. The Practice Standard sets forth a standardized check list which designates particular items needed for obtaining a default judgment. For guidance on affidavits, see C.R.C.P. 108. See also Section 13-63-101, C.R.S., concerning affidavits and requirements by the court.

Section 1-15

DETERMINATION OF MOTIONS

1. Motions and Briefs; When Required; Time for Serving and Filing — Length.

(a) Except motions during trial or where the court orders that certain or all non-dispositive motions be made orally, any motions involving a contested issue of law shall be supported by a recitation of legal authority incorporated into the motion, which shall not be filed with a separate brief. Unless the court orders otherwise, motions and responsive briefs not under C.R.C.P. 12(b)(1) or (2), or 56 are limited to 15 pages, and reply briefs to 10 pages, not including the case caption, signature block, certificate of service and attachments. Unless the court orders otherwise, motions and responsive briefs under C.R.C.P. 12(b)(1) or (2) or 56 are limited to 25 pages, and reply briefs to 15 pages, not including the case caption, signature block, certificate of service and attachments. All motions and briefs shall comply with C.R.C.P. 10(d).

(b) The responding party shall have 21 days after the filing of the motion or such lesser or greater time as the court may allow in which to file a responsive brief. If a motion is filed 42 days or less before the trial date, the responding party shall have 14 days after the filing of the motion or such lesser or greater time as the court may allow in which to file a responsive brief.

(c) Except for a motion pursuant to C.R.C.P. 56, the moving party shall have 7 days after the filing of the responsive brief or such greater or lesser time as the court may allow to file a reply brief. For a motion pursuant to C.R.C.P. 56, the moving party shall have 14 days after the filing of the responsive brief or such greater or lesser time as the court may allow to file a reply brief.

(d) A motion shall not be included in a response or reply to the original motion.

2. Affidavits. If facts not appearing of record may be considered in disposition of the motion, the parties may file affidavits with the motion or within the time specified for filing the party's brief in this section 1-15, Rules 6, 56 or 59, C.R.C.P., or as otherwise ordered by the court. Copies of such affidavits and any documentary evidence used in connection with the motion shall be served on all other parties.

3. Effect of Failure to File Legal Authority. If the moving party fails to incorporate legal authority into a written motion, the court may deem the motion abandoned and may enter an order denying the motion. Other than motions seeking to resolve a claim or defense under C.R.C.P. 12 or 56, failure of a responding party to file a responsive brief may be considered a confession of the motion.

4. Motions to Be Determined on Briefs, When Oral Argument Is Allowed; Motions Requiring Immediate Attention. Motions shall be determined promptly if possible. The court has discretion to order briefing or set a hearing on the motion. If possible, the court shall determine oral motions at the conclusion of the argument, but may take the motion under advisement or require briefing before ruling. Any motion requiring immediate disposition shall be called to the attention of the courtroom clerk by the party filing such motion.

5. Notification of Court's Ruling; Setting of Argument or Hearing When Ordered. Whenever the court enters an order denying or granting a motion without a hearing, all parties shall be forthwith notified by the court of such order. If the court desires or authorizes oral argument or an evidentiary hearing, all parties shall be so notified by the court. After notification, it shall be the responsibility of the moving party to have the motion set for oral argument or hearing. Unless the court orders otherwise, a notice to set oral argument or hearing shall be filed in accordance with Practice Standard § 1-6 within 7 days of notification that oral argument or hearing is required or authorized.

6. Effect of Failure to Appear at Oral Argument or Hearing. If any of the parties fails to appear at an oral argument or hearing, without prior showing of good cause for non-appearance, the court may proceed to hear and rule on the motion.

7. Sanctions. If a frivolous motion is filed or if frivolous opposition to a motion is interposed, the court may assess reasonable attorney's fees against the party or attorney filing such motion or interposing such opposition.

8. Duty to Confer. Unless a statute or rule governing the motion provides that it may be filed without notice, moving counsel and any self-represented party shall confer with opposing counsel and any self-represented parties before filing a motion. The requirement of self-represented parties to confer and the requirement to confer with self-represented parties shall not apply to any incarcerated person, or any self-represented party as to whom the requirement is contrary to court order or statute, including, but not limited to, any person as to whom contact would or precipitate a violation of a protection or restraining order. The motion shall, at the beginning, contain a certification that the movant in good faith has conferred with opposing counsel and any self-represented parties about the motion. If the relief sought by the motion has been agreed to by the parties or will not be opposed, the court shall be so advised in the motion. If no conference has occurred, the reason why, including all efforts to confer, shall be stated.

9. Unopposed Motions. All unopposed motions shall be so designated in the title of the motion.

10. Proposed Order. Except for orders containing signatures of the parties or attorneys as required by statute or rule, each motion shall be accompanied by a proposed order submitted in editable format. The proposed order complies with this provision if it states that the requested relief be granted or denied.

11. Motions to Reconsider. Motions to reconsider interlocutory orders of the court, meaning motions to reconsider other than those governed by C.R.C.P. 59 or 60, are disfavored. A party moving to reconsider must show more than a disagreement with the court's decision. Such a motion must allege a manifest error of fact or law that clearly mandates a different result or other circumstance resulting in manifest injustice. The motion shall be filed within 14 days from the date of the order, unless the party seeking reconsideration shows good cause for not filing within that time. Good cause for not filing within 14 days from the date of the order includes newly available material evidence and an intervening change in the governing legal standard. The court may deny the motion before receiving a responsive brief under paragraph 1(b) of this standard.

[1] This Practice Standard was necessary because of lack of uniformity among the districts concerning how motions were to be made, set and determined. The Practice Standard recognizes that oral argument and hearings are not necessary in all cases, and encourages disposition of motions upon written submissions. The standard also sets forth the uniform requirements concerning filing of legal authority, filing of matters not already of record necessary to determination of motions, and the manner of setting an oral argument if argument is permitted. The practice standard is broad enough to include all motions, including venue motions. Some motions will not require extended legal analysis or affidavits. Obviously, if the basis for a motion is simple and routine, the citation of authorities can be correspondingly simple. Motions or briefs in excess of 10 pages are discouraged.

[2] This standard specifies contemporaneous recitation of legal authority either in the motion itself for all motions except those under C.R.C.P. Rule 56. Moving counsel should confer with opposing counsel before filing a motion to attempt to work out the difference prompting the motion. Every motion must, at the beginning, contain a certification that the movant, in good faith, has conferred with opposing counsel about the motion. If there has been no conference, the reason why must be stated. To assist the court, if the relief sought by the motion has been agreed to or will not be opposed, the court is to be so advised in the motion.

[3] Paragraph 4 of the standard contains an important feature. Any matter requiring immediate action should be called to the attention of the courtroom clerk by the party filing a motion for forthwith disposition. Calling the urgency of a matter to the attention of the court is a responsibility of the parties. The court should permit a forthwith determination.

[4] Paragraph 11 of the standard neither limits a trial court's discretion to modify an interlocutory order, on motion or sua sponte, nor affects C.R.M. 5(a).

2015

[5] The sentence in the 1994 comment that ''motions or briefs in excess of 10 pages are discouraged'' has been superseded by the 2015 amendments to the rule on the length of motions and briefs. The sentence in the 1994 comment that ''moving counsel should confer with opposing counsel before filing a motion to attempt to work out the difference prompting the motion'' is corrected to change the word ''should'' to ''shall'' to be consistent with the wording of the rule.

Section 1-16

PREPARATION OF ORDERS AND OBJECTIONS AS TO FORM

1. When directed by the court, the attorney for the prevailing party or such attorney as the court directs shall file and serve a proposed order within 14 days of such direction or such other time as the court directs. Prior to filing the proposed order, the attorney shall submit it to all other parties for approval as to form. The proposed order shall be timely filed even if all parties have not approved it as to form. A party objecting to the form of the proposed order as filed with court shall have 7 days after service of the proposed order to file and serve objections and suggested modifications to the form of the proposed order.

2. Alternatively, when directed by the court, the attorney for the prevailing party or such attorney as the court directs shall file and serve a stipulated order within 14 days after the ruling, or such other time as the court directs. Any matter upon which the parties cannot agree as to form shall be designated in the proposed order as ''disputed.'' The proposed order shall set forth each party's specific alternative proposal for each disputed matter.

3. Objecting, proposing modification or agreeing to the form of a proposed order or stipulated order, shall not affect a party's rights to appeal the substance of the order.

Section 1-17

COURT SETTLEMENT CONFERENCES

1. At any time after the filing of Disclosure Certificates as required by C.R.C.P. 16, any party may file with the courtroom clerk and serve a request for a court settlement conference, together with a notice for setting of such request. The court settlement conference shall, if the request is granted, be conducted by any available judge other than the assigned judge. In all instances, the assigned judge shall arrange for the availability of a different judge to conduct the court settlement conference.

2. All discussions at the settlement conference shall remain confidential and shall not be disclosed to the judge who presides at trial. Statements at the settlement conference shall not be admissible evidence for any purpose in any other proceeding.

3. This Rule shall not apply to proceedings conducted pursuant to Rule 16.2(i).

Source: Entire section amended and adopted September 30, 2004, effective for Domestic Relations Cases as defined in 16.2(a) filed on or after January 1, 2005, and for post-decree motions filed on or after January 1, 2005.

COMMITTEE COMMENT

This Practice Standard provides machinery for settlement conference upon request of the parties. The Practice Standard was deemed necessary because it was previously not possible to have a settlement conference in some districts. The committee recognized that there may be practical difficulties in a particular district because of nonavailability of a separate judge. It was felt that this problem could perhaps be largely overcome by cooperation between several districts or by use of a retired judge to make the service available.

Part 2 of the Practice Standard was deemed necessary to encourage settlement conference participation by litigants. Confidentiality and nonadmissibility of statements or communications made at settlement conference should override and prevail as a matter of policy over any asserted right or interest to the contrary.

Section 1-18

PRETRIAL PROCEDURE, CASE MANAGEMENT, DISCLOSURE AND SIMPLIFICATION OF ISSUES

Pretrial procedure, case management, disclosure and simplification of issues shall be in accordance with C.R.C.P. 16.

Editor's note: The Committee Comment to this section, was deleted from these rules when changes were made to this section November 12, 1987, pursuant to Court change #1987 (17).

JURY INSTRUCTIONS

Jury instructions shall be prepared and tendered to the court pursuant to C.R.C.P. 16(g).

Source: Entire section amended and adopted April 14, 1994, effective January 1, 1995, for all cases filed on or after that date; entire section amended and comment added effective January 12, 2017.

1983

This Standard makes preparation and timing of submission of jury instructions uniform throughout the state. It reasonably assures preparation of instructions and verdict forms before commencement of trial, but retains some needed flexibility in their final form. To permit use of preprepared forms, save time and expense, and to facilitate last-moment revision, the Standard mandates use of photocopies rather than typed originals for submission to the jury.

Section 1-20

SIZE AND FORMAT OF DOCUMENTS

All court documents shall be prepared in 8-1/2" x 11" format with black type or print and conform to the format, and spacing requirements specified in C.R.C.P. 10(d). Except documents filed by E-Filing or facsimile copy, all court documents shall be on recycled white paper. Any form required by these rules may be reproduced by word processor or other means, provided that the reproduction substantially follows the format of the form and indicates the effective date of the form which it reproduces.

Source: Entire section amended and effective September 6, 1990; entire section and committee comment amended July 9, 1992, effective October 1, 1992; entire section amended March 17, 1994, effective July 1, 1994; entire section and committee comment amended and adopted October 20, 2005, effective January 1, 2006.

COMMITTEE COMMENT

This standard draws attention to the requirements of C.R.C.P. 10(d) pertaining to paper size, paper quality, format and spacing of court documents. Color of paper and print requirements for documents not filed by E-Filing or facsimile copy were made necessary because colors other than black and white create photocopying and microfilming difficulties. Provision is also made to clarify that forms reproduced by word processor are acceptable if they follow the format of the form and state the effective date of the form which it reproduces.

Section 1-21

COURT TRANSCRIPTS

1. A party requesting a transcript shall arrange for preparation of the transcript directly with the reporter, or if the session or proceeding was recorded by mechanical or electronic means, the courtroom clerk. Where a transcript is to be made a part of the record on appeal, a party shall request preparation of the transcript by reference in the Designation of Record and by direct arrangement with the court reporter or courtroom clerk as provided herein.
2. Unless otherwise ordered by the court, a court reporter may require a deposit of sufficient money to cover the estimated cost of preparation before preparing the transcript.
3. The transcript shall be signed and certified by the person preparing the transcript. A transcript lodged with the court shall not be removed from the court without court order except when transmitted to the appellate court.

Source: 1. and 3. amended and adopted October 20, 2005, effective January 1, 2006.

COMMITTEE COMMENT

This Practice Standard sets forth uniform requirements for obtaining, paying for, certification and removal of court reporter transcripts.

Section 1-22

COSTS AND ATTORNEY FEES

1. Costs. A party claiming costs shall file a Bill of Costs within 21 days of the entry of order or judgment or within such greater time as the court may allow. The Bill of Costs shall itemize and provide a total of costs being claimed. Taxing and determination of costs shall be in accordance with C.R.C.P. 54(d) and Practice Standard § 1-15. Any party that may be affected by the Bill of Costs may request a hearing within the time permitted to file a reply in support of the Bill of Costs. Any request shall identify those issues that the party believes should be addressed at the hearing. When required to do so by law, the court shall grant a party's timely request for a hearing. In other cases where a party has made a timely request for a hearing, the court shall hold a hearing if it determines in its discretion that a hearing would materially assist the court in ruling on the motion.

2. Attorney Fees. (a) Scope. This practice standard applies to requests for attorney fees made at the conclusion of the action, including attorney fee awards requested pursuant to Section 13-17-102, C.R.S. It also includes awards of fees made to the prevailing party pursuant to a contract or statute where the award is dependent upon the achievement of a successful result in the litigation in which fees are to be awarded and the fees are for services rendered in connection with that litigation. This practice standard does not apply to attorney fees which are part of a judgment for damages and incurred as a result of other proceedings, or for services rendered other than in connection with the proceeding in which judgment is entered. This practice standard also does not apply to requests for attorney fees on matters relating to pre-trial sanctions and motions for default judgment unless otherwise ordered by the court.

(b) Motion and Response. Any party seeking attorney fees under this practice standard shall file and serve a motion for attorney fees within 21 days of entry of judgment or such greater time as the court may allow. The motion shall explain the basis upon which fees are sought, the amount of fees sought, and the method by which those fees were calculated. The motion shall be accompanied by any supporting documentation, including materials evidencing the attorney's time spent, the fee agreement between the attorney and client, and the reasonableness of the fees. Any response and reply, including any supporting documentation, shall be filed within the time allowed in practice standard § 1-15. The court may permit discovery on the issue of attorney fees only upon good cause shown when requested by any party.

(c) Hearing; Determination of Motion. Any party which may be affected by the motion for attorney fees may request a hearing within the time permitted to file a reply. Any request shall identify those issues which the party believes should be addressed at the hearing. When required to do so by law, the court shall grant a party's timely request for a hearing. In other cases where a party has made a timely request for a hearing, the court shall hold a hearing if it determines in its discretion that a hearing would materially assist the court in ruling on the motion. In exercising its discretion as to whether to hold a hearing in these cases, the court shall consider the amount of fees sought, the sufficiency of the disclosures made by the moving party in its motion and supporting documentation, and the extent and nature of the objections made in response to the motion. The court shall make findings of fact to support its determination of the motion. Attorney fees awarded under this practice standard shall be taxed as costs.

[1] Costs. This Standard establishes a uniform, optimum time within which to claim costs. The 15 day requirement encourages prompt filings so that disputes on costs can be determined with other post-trial motions. This Standard also requires itemization and totaling of cost items and reminds practitioners of the means of determining disputes on costs. C.R.S. 13-16-122 (1981) sets forth those items generally awardable as costs.

[2] Attorney Fees. Subject to certain exceptions, this Standard establishes a uniform procedure for resolving attorney fee disputes in matters where the request for attorney fees is made at the conclusion of an action or where attorney fees are awarded to the prevailing party (see ''Scope''). Unless otherwise ordered by the court, attorney fees under C.R.S. 14-10-119 should be heard at the time of the hearing on the motion or proceeding for which they are requested.

[3] The prior version of Rule 121, Section 1-22(2) addressed when and under what circumstances a party is entitled to a hearing regarding an award of attorney fees, but no rule addressed the circumstances regarding a hearing on costs. The procedural mechanisms regarding awards of attorney fees and awards of costs should be the same, and thus the rule change adds the existing language regarding hearings on attorney fees to awards of costs.

Section 1-23

BONDS IN CIVIL ACTIONS

1. Bonds Which Are Automatically Effective Upon Filing With the Court. The following bonds are automatically effective upon filing with the clerk of the court:

(a) Cash bonds in the amount set by court order, subsection 3 of this rule, or any applicable statute.

(b) Certificates of deposit issued by a bank chartered by either the United States government or the State of Colorado, in the amount set by court order, subsection 3 of this rule, or any applicable statute. The certificate of deposit shall be issued in the name of the clerk of the court and payable to the clerk of the court, and the original of the certificate of deposit must be deposited with the clerk of the court.

(c) Corporate surety bonds issued by corporate sureties presently authorized to do business in the State of Colorado in the amount set by court order, subsection 3 of this rule, or any applicable statute. A power of attorney showing the present or current authority of the agent for the surety signing the bond shall be filed with the bond.

2. Bonds Which Are Effective Only Upon Entry of an Order Approving the Bond.

(a) Letters of credit issued by a bank chartered by either the United States government or the State of Colorado, in the amount set by court order, subsection 3 of this rule, or any applicable statute. The beneficiary of the letter of credit shall be the clerk of the district court. The original of the letter of credit shall be deposited with the clerk of the court.

(b) Any Other Proposed Bond.

3. Amounts of Bond.

(a) Supersedeas Bonds. Unless the court otherwise orders, or any applicable statute directs a higher amount, the amount of a supersedeas bond to stay execution of a money judgment shall be 125% of the total amount of the judgment entered by the court (including any prejudgment interest, costs and attorneys fees awarded by the court). The amount of a supersedeas bond to stay execution of a non-money judgment shall be determined by the court. Nothing in this rule is intended to limit the court's discretion to deny a stay with respect to non-money judgments. Any interested party may move the trial court (which shall have jurisdiction not withstanding the pendency of an appeal) for an increase in the amount of the bond to reflect the anticipated time for completion of appellate proceedings or any increase in the amount of judgment.

(b) Other Bonds. The amounts of all other bonds shall be determined by the court or by any applicable statute.

4. Service of Bonds Upon All Parties of Record. A copy of all bonds or proposed bonds filed with the court shall be served on all parties of record in accordance with C.R.C.P. 5(b).

5. No Unsecured Bonds. Except as expressly provided by statute, and except with respect to appearance bonds, no unsecured bond shall be accepted by the court.

6. Objections to Bonds. Any party in interest may file an objection to any bond which is automatically effective under subsection 1 of this rule or to any proposed bond subject to subsection 2 of this rule. A bond, which is automatically effective under subsection 1 remains in effect unless the court orders otherwise. Any objections shall be filed not later than 14 days after service of the bond or proposed bond except that objections based upon the entry of any amended or additional judgment shall be made not later than 14 days after entry of any such amended or additional judgment.

7. Bonding over a Lien. If a money judgment has been made a lien upon real estate by the filing of a transcript of the judgment record by the judgment creditor, the lien shall be released upon the motion of the judgment debtor or other interested party if a bond for the money judgment has been approved and filed as provided in this section 1-23. The order of the court releasing the lien may be recorded with the clerk and recorder of the county where the property is located. Once the order is recorded, all proceedings by the judgment creditor to enforce the judgment lien shall be discontinued, unless a court orders otherwise.

[1] The Committee is aware that issues have arisen regarding the effective date of a bond, and thus the effectiveness of injunction orders and other orders which are conditioned upon the filing of an acceptable bond. Certain types of bonds are almost always acceptable and thus, under this rule, are automatically effective upon filing with the Court subject to the consideration of timely filed objections. Other types of bonds may or may not be acceptable and should not be effective until the Court determines the sufficiency of the bond. The court may permit property bonds upon such conditions as are appropriate to protect the judgment creditor (or other party sought to be protected). Such conditions may include an appraisal by a qualified appraiser, information regarding liens and encumbrances against the property, and title insurance.

[2] This rule also sets the presumptive amount of a supersedeas bond for a money judgment. The amount of a supersedeas bond for a non-money judgment must be determined in the particular case by the court and this rule is not intended to affect the court's discretion to deny a supersedeas bond in the case of a non-money judgment.

SETTING OF DEADLINES

[Practice Standard on Setting of Deadlines being prepared.]

Section 1-25

FACSIMILE COPIES

1. Facsimile copy, defined. A facsimile copy is a copy generated by a system that encodes a document into electrical signals, transmits these electrical signals over a telephone/data line, then reconstructs the signals to print an exact duplicate of the original document at the receiving end.

2. Facsimile copies which conform with the quality requirements specified in C.R.C.P. 10(d)(1) may be filed with the court in lieu of the original document. Once filed with the court, the facsimile copy shall be treated as an original for all court purposes. If a facsimile copy is filed in lieu of the original document, the attorney or party filing the facsimile shall retain the original document for production to the court, if requested to do so.

3. The court is not required to provide confirmation that it has received a facsimile transmission.

4. Any facsimile copy transmitted directly to the court shall be accompanied by a cover sheet which states the title of the document, case number, number of pages, identity and voice telephone number of transmitter and any instructions.

5. Payment of any required filing fees shall not be deferred for documents filed with the court by facsimile transmission.

6. This rule shall not require courts to have a facsimile machine nor shall the court be required to transmit orders or other material to attorneys or parties via facsimile transmission.

Source: Entire section and committee comment added and effective September 6, 1990.

COMMITTEE COMMENT

Facsimile transmissions are becoming commonplace in the business world. It was therefore deemed reasonable that the court system adapt to accommodate the use of this technology. Use of the technology, however, should not create more work for court staff. In order not to add to the duties of overburdened court personnel, provision is made that court personnel need not provide confirmation that a facsimile transmission has been received. This should not create difficulty for attorneys because almost all equipment manufactured today provides confirmation that a document has been received. This confirmation should be attached to the document sent and retained with the original document in the party's file.

The committee envisioned at least two ways in which facsimile filings could be accomplished. The first would be an arrangement where the facsimile machine would be located in a court clerk's office. The other would be where transmissions would be made to a machine outside the courthouse and then delivered to the clerk for filing. These rules were designed to accommodate both kinds of filings.

Ordinary thermofax paper fades in sunlight, deteriorates with handling and has a short shelf life. Therefore, only permanent plain paper which is not subject to these infirmities is acceptable for court purposes.

The committee also recognized that a requirement for filing of the original after filing of a facsimile copy would create more work for court staff. The committee therefore decided to accept facsimile copies in lieu of the original with the provision that the original would be maintained if it were ever needed for any purpose.

The requirement under C.R.C.P. 121, Sec. 1-15 for filing of a copy of any motions or briefs has been modified so that a copy is also filed with the clerk of the court. The clerk of the court is then responsible for distributing the copy to the courtroom clerk. This change is necessary because the courtroom clerk will ordinarily not have a separate facsimile machine.

Some judicial districts have or are acquiring the ability to accept credit cards or bank cards for payment of fees and fines. In the judicial districts where bank cards can be used for payment, parties may file complaints, answers and other pleadings which require a filing fee by faxing an appropriate bank card authorization along with the pleadings. If a judicial district does not accept payment by bank card, those types of pleadings cannot be filed by facsimile transmission because payment of filing fees will not be deferred.

The committee believes that reasonable fees can be charged for the costs associated with facsimile filings. However, the setting of such fees is not within the scope of the Rules of Civil Procedure.

The adoption of this rule does not require an attorney to have a designated facsimile telephone number.

Section 1-26

ELECTRONIC FILING AND SERVICE SYSTEM

1. Definitions:

(a) Document: A pleading, motion, writing or other paper filed or served under the E-System.

(b) E-Filing/Service System: The E-Filing/Service System (''E-System'') approved by the Colorado Supreme Court for filing and service of documents via the Internet through the Court-authorized E-System provider.

(c) Electronic Filing: Electronic filing (''E-Filing'') is the transmission of documents to the clerk of the court, and from the court, via the E-System.

(d) Electronic Service: Electronic service (''E-Service'') is the transmission of documents to any party in a case via the E-System. Parties who have subscribed to the E-System have agreed to receive service, other than service of a summons, via the E-System.

(e) E-System Provider: The E-Service/E-Filing System Provider authorized by the Colorado Supreme Court.

(f) Signatures:

(I) Electronic Signature: An electronic sound, symbol, or process attached to or logically associated with an electronic record and executed or adopted by the person with the intent to sign the E-filed or E-served document.

2. Types of Cases Applicable: E-Filing and E-Service may be used for certain cases filed in the courts of Colorado as the service becomes available. The availability of the E-System will be determined by the Colorado Supreme Court and announced through its web site http://www.courts.state.co.us/supct/supct.htm and through published directives to the clerks of the affected court systems. E-Filing and E-Service may be mandated pursuant to Subsection 13 of this Practice Standard 1-26.

3. To Whom Applicable:

(a) Attorneys licensed or certified to practice law in Colorado, or admitted pro hac vice under C.R.C.P. 205.3 or 205.5, may register to use the E-System. The E-System provider will provide an attorney permitted to appear pursuant to C.R.C.P. 205.3 or 205.5 with a special user account for purposes of E-Filing and E-Serving only in the case identified by a court order approving pro hac vice admission. The E-System provider will provide an attorney certified as pro bono counsel pursuant to C.R.C.P. 204.6 with a special user account for purposes of E-Filing and E-Serving in pro bono cases as contemplated by that rule. An attorney may enter an appearance pursuant to Rule 121, Section 1-1, through E-Filing. In districts where E-Filing is mandated pursuant to Subsection 13 of this Practice Standard 1-26, attorneys must register and use the E-System.

(b) Where the system and necessary equipment are in place to permit it, pro se parties and government entities and agencies may register to use the E-System.

4. Commencement of Action—Service of Summons: Cases may be commenced under C.R.C.P. 3 by E-Filing the initial pleading. Service of a summons shall be made in accordance with C.R.C.P. 4.

5. E-Filing—Date and Time of Filing: Documents filed in cases on the E-System may be filed under C.R.C.P. 5 through an E-Filing. A document transmitted to the E-System Provider by 11:59 p.m. Colorado time shall be deemed to have been filed with the clerk of the court on that date.

6. E-Service—When Required - Date and Time of Service: Documents submitted to the court through E-Filing shall be served under C.R.C.P. 5 by E-Service. A document transmitted to the E-System Provider for service by 11:59 p.m. Colorado time shall be deemed to have been served on that date.

7. Filing Party to Maintain the Signed Copy—Paper Document Not to Be Filed—Duration of Maintaining of Document: A printed or printable copy of an E-Filed or E-Served document with original, electronic, or scanned signatures shall be maintained by the filing party and made available for inspection by other parties or the court upon request, but shall not be filed with the court. When these rules require a party to maintain a document, the filer is required to maintain the document for a period of two years after the final resolution of the action, including the final resolution of all appeals. For domestic relations decrees, separation agreements and parenting plans, original signature pages bearing the attorneys, parties', and notaries' signatures must be scanned and E-filed. For probate of a will, the original must be lodged with the court.

8. Documents Requiring E-Filed Signatures: For E-Filed and E-Served documents, signatures of attorneys, parties, witnesses, notaries and notary stamps may be affixed electronically or documents with signatures obtained on a paper form scanned.

9. C.R.C.P. 11 Compliance: An e-signature is a signature for the purposes of C.R.C.P. 11.

10. Documents under Seal: A motion for leave to file documents under seal may be E-Filed. Documents to be filed under seal pursuant to an order of the court may be E-Filed at the direction of the court; however, the filing party may object to this procedure.

11. Transmitting of Orders, Notices and Other Court Entries: Beginning January 1, 2006, courts shall distribute orders, notices, and other court entries using the E-System in cases where E-Filings were received from any party.

12. Form of E-Filed Documents: C.R.C.P. 10 shall apply to E-Filed documents. A document shall not be transmitted to the clerk of the court by any other means unless the court at any later time requests a printed copy.

13. E-Filing May be Mandated: With the permission of the Chief Justice, a chief judge may mandate E-Filing within a county or judicial district for specific case classes or types of cases. A judicial officer may mandate E-Filing and E-Service in that judicial officer's division for specific cases, for submitting documents to the court and serving documents on case parties. Where E-Filing is mandatory, the court may thereafter accept a document in paper form and the court shall scan the document and upload it to the E-Service Provider. After notice to an attorney that all future documents are to be E-Filed, the court may charge a fee of $50 per document for the service of scanning and uploading a document filed in paper form. Where E-Filing and E-Service are mandatory, the Chief Judge or appropriate judicial officer may exclude pro se parties from mandatory E-Filing requirements.

14. Relief in the Event of Technical Difficulties:

(a) Upon satisfactory proof that E-Filing or E-Service of a document was not completed because of: (1) an error in the transmission of the document to the E-System Provider which was unknown to the sending party; (2) a failure of the E-System Provider to process the E-Filing when received, or (3) other technical problems experienced by the filer or E-System Provider, the court may enter an order permitting the document to be filed nunc pro tunc to the date it was first attempted to be sent electronically.

(b) Upon satisfactory proof that an E-Served document was not received by or unavailable to a party served, the court may enter an order extending the time for responding to that document.

15. Form of Electronic Documents

(a) Electronic document format, size and density: Electronic document format, size, and density shall be as specified by Chief Justice Directive # 11-01.

(b) Multiple Documents: Multiple documents (including proposed orders) may be filed in a single electronic filing transaction. Each document (including proposed orders) in that filing must bear a separate document title.

(c) Proposed Orders: Proposed orders shall be E-Filed in editable format. Proposed orders that are E-Filed in a non-editable format shall be rejected by the Court Clerk's office and must be resubmitted.

Purpose of rule. This rule is intended to provide uniformity among the various district courts as to procedural matters. People ex rel. Sullivan v. Swihart, 897 P.2d 822 (Colo. 1995).

Authority of district court rules is recognized so long as they do not conflict with the Colorado rules of civil procedure or with any directive of the supreme court. Danburg v. Realties, Inc., 677 P.2d 439 (Colo. App. 1984).

Not all standing orders are local rules. Section (a) of this rule clearly distinguishes between ''standing orders having the effect of local rules'' and those that do not. Therefore, not all standing orders are required to be reviewed by the supreme court. People ex rel. Sullivan v. Swihart, 897 P.2d 822 (Colo. 1995).

This rule contemplates supreme court approval only for standing orders that affect the rights of litigants before the court. People ex rel. Sullivan v. Swihart, 897 P.2d 822 (Colo. 1995).

Standing order of chief judge of judicial district prohibiting possession of a deadly weapon or firearm in designated areas of courthouse was a valid exercise of the chief judge's authority as to administrative matters, did not affect the procedural rights of litigants, and did not require supreme court approval under this rule. People ex rel. Sullivan v. Swihart, 897 P.2d 822 (Colo. 1995).

Late filings. This rule applies only to the failure to file a brief and does not apply to late filings. Charles Milne Assoc. v. Toponce, 770 P.2d 1313 (Colo. App. 1988).

Trial court's failure to comply with procedural requirements concerning notice and time for filing responsive brief before ruling on motion to dismiss is an abuse of discretion. Lanes v. Scott, 688 P.2d 251 (Colo. App. 1984).

Court order vacated where the court granted a proposed order three days after it was filed in violation of § 1-16, which allows a party seven days to object to the form of a proposed order. Laleh v. Johnson, 2016 COA 4, 405 P.3d 286, aff'd, 2017 CO 93, 403 P.3d 207.

Court's sua sponte order of dismissal for failure to prosecute cannot stand if it is not preceded by the notice required by § 1-10 and C.R.C.P. 41. In re Custody of Nugent, 955 P.2d 584 (Colo. App. 1997); Koh v. Kumar, 207 P.3d 900 (Colo. App. 2009).

A delay reduction order does not suffice to provide notice of dismissal under § 1-10. Koh v. Kumar, 207 P.3d 900 (Colo. App. 2009).

Juvenile court did not abuse its discretion in declining to consider failure of the mother to file a responsive pleading to the father's post-trial motion as a confession of motion. M.H.W. by M.E.S. v. D.J.W., 757 P.2d 1129 (Colo. App. 1988).

Failure to give an opportunity to respond to authority cited in support of or in opposition to a motion is harmless unless prejudice is shown. Benson v. Colo. Comp. Ins. Auth., 870 P.2d 624 (Colo. App. 1994).

Where there has been an unusual delay in prosecuting an action, prejudice to the defendant will be presumed. Therefore, in the absence of mitigating circumstances, an unusual delay in prosecuting an action justifies dismissal with prejudice. Richardson v. McFee, 687 P.2d 517 (Colo. App. 1984).

District court erred in exercising its discretion to dismiss appellant's case pursuant to § 1-10(3) of this rule due to appellant's inactivity while it waited 13 months for a ruling from the court on its motion for summary judgment on the counterclaims. Appellant, having done all that was required to obtain a ruling from the court on the merits, was not obligated to renew its motion for summary judgment on the counterclaims or even remind the court that the motion needed to be ruled on to avoid the prospect of dismissal. Hudak v. Med. Lien Mgmt., Inc., 2013 COA 83, 305 P.3d 429.

Trial court held not to have abused discretion in dismissing action with prejudice for failure to prosecute. Rossi v. Mathers, 749 P.2d 964 (Colo. App. 1987).

Scope of issues raised by a trial data certificate is limited only by the breadth of notice provided by the complaint. Under our rules of civil procedure, the precise legal theory asserted by a claimant is not controlling, so long as the complaint gives sufficient notice of the transaction sued upon. Yoder v. Hooper, 695 P.2d 1182 (Colo. App. 1984), aff'd, 732 P.2d 852 (Colo. 1987).

Trial court erred when it concluded deponent received "reasonable notice" of deposition under § 1-12 (1). Deponent received deposition notice only two days before the deposition, and one of those days was a Sunday. As such, deponent did not receive at least five days notice before the deposition. However, under C.R.C.P. 32(d)(1), ''all errors and irregularities in the notice for taking a deposition are waived unless written objection is promptly served upon the party giving the notice''. Keenan ex rel. Hickman v. Gregg, 192 P.3d 485 (Colo. App. 2008)

Provision inapplicable to summary judgment motions. Because of the drastic nature of summary judgment, provisions under § 1-15 concerning confession of motions are inapplicable to motions for summary judgment under this rule. Seal v. Hart, 755 P.2d 462 (Colo. App. 1988).

Failure to present controverting affidavit or other evidentiary materials are not grounds for summary judgment. Murphy v. Dairyland Ins. Co., 747 P.2d 691 (Colo. App. 1987).

Failure of nonmoving party to present affidavits or other evidentiary materials opposing a motion for summary judgment does not alone provide a proper basis for the entry of a judgment on the pleadings. Quiroz v. Goff, 46 P.3d 486 (Colo. App. 2002).

Only under extreme circumstances should sanction of dismissal or entry of default judgment be imposed. This rule should not be applied in a manner which unreasonably denies a party its day in court. Nagy v. District Court, 762 P.2d 158 (Colo. 1988) (decided under rule in effect prior to 1987 repeal and readoption); Pinkstaff v. Black & Decker (U.S.), Inc., 211 P.3d 698 (Colo. 2009).

It is within the district court's discretion to conduct an evidentiary hearing or rule on the submitted motions to vacate or modify an arbitration award. BFN-Greely, LLC v. Adair Group, Inc., 141 P.3d 937 (Colo. App. 2006).

Mere citation of a rule of civil procedure is not a "recitation of legal authority" as required by § 1-15 (7) of this rule. Box v. Wickham, 713 P.2d 415 (Colo. App. 1985).

Trial court improperly awarded attorney fees upon determining that a motion was frivolous due to an erroneous finding that the court had no jurisdiction. In re Smith, 757 P.2d 1159 (Colo. App. 1988).

Post-trial motion for the award of attorney fees is analogous to a request for taxing costs and should follow procedures established by C.R.C.P. 54(d) and § 1-22 of this rule. A trial court may address the issue of the award of attorney fees for services rendered in connection with the underlying litigation on a post-trial basis, whether or not counsel has previously sought to ''reserve'' the issue. Roa v. Miller, 784 P.2d 826 (Colo. App. 1989).

An award of attorney fees under § 13-17-102 cannot be held to be confessed by failure to respond to a motion for fees. Artes-Roy v. Lyman, 833 P.2d 62 (Colo. App. 1992).

A claim or defense is frivolous for purposes of assessing attorney fees if the proponent can present no rational argument based on the evidence or law in support of that claim or defense. McKown-Katy v. Rego Co., 776 P.2d 1130 (Colo. App. 1989), rev'd in part on other grounds, 801 P.2d 536 (Colo. 1990).

Determination of whether motion is frivolous is a matter within the discretion of the trial court. McKown-Katy v. Rego Co., 776 P.2d 1130 (Colo. App. 1989), rev'd in part on other grounds, 801 P.2d 536 (Colo. 1990).

Whether motion was frivolous under § 1-15 (7) is applied in Liebowitz v. Aimexco Inc., 701 P.2d 140 (Colo. App. 1985).

Award of attorney fees incurred in pursuing motions for sanctions improper under § 1-15 (7) where the defense to the motions, while ultimately unsuccessful, had a rational basis in fact and law and did not lack substantial justification. Boulder County Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Kraft Bldg. Contractors, 122 P.3d 1019 (Colo. App. 2005).

The provisions of § 1-15 concerning confession of a motion by failing to respond thereto are inapplicable to a motion for summary judgment. Koch v. Sadler, 759 P.2d 792 (Colo. App. 1988).

Rule is permissive, not mandatory, so that failure to file brief in opposition to motion for partial summary judgment may be considered a confession of the motion, but is not automatically considered such. Visintainer Sheep v. Centennial Gold, 748 P.2d 358 (Colo. App. 1987).

A motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim must be considered on its merits like a motion for summary judgment and cannot be deemed confessed by a failure to respond. Therefore, trial court erred in failing to consider the merits of plaintiffs' claims for relief as required by C.R.C.P. 12(b)(5) in resolving defendant's motion to dismiss. Hemmann Mgmt. Servs. v. Mediacell, Inc., 176 P.3d 856 (Colo. App. 2007).

A party has 15 days to respond to a motion and it is an abuse of discretion for a trial court to grant a motion only 12 days after it was filed. Weatherly v. Roth, 743 P. 2d 453 (Colo. App. 1987).

Trial court's ex-parte communication with defendant's counsel directing counsel to prepare the form of order was not improper and did not require the attorney fee order to be vacated, where the communication was made after the court had reached its decision based on full briefing of the issues and a telephone hearing, where plaintiff's counsel was given an opportunity to object and did in fact object, and where there was no evidence of bias on the part of the judge or prejudice to plaintiff as a result of the court's action. Aztec Minerals Corp. v. State, 987 P.2d 895 (Colo. App. 1999).

Trial judge's refusal to disqualify himself from proceeding amounted to abuse of discretion where trial judge acted as settlement judge in litigation underlying the present legal malpractice case and allegations, in light of policies expressed in § 1-17 of this rule that a settlement judge for a particular action should not thereafter have any dealings with the case and that a judge assigned for proceedings other than settlement should not be privy to discussions that occurred at court settlement conferences, were sufficient to raise a reasonable inference of the appearance of actual or apparent bias or prejudice. Tripp v. Borchard, 29 P.3d 345 (Colo. App. 2001).

For factors to use in determining appropriateness and severity of sanctions for failure to file a trial data certificate, see Nagy v. District Court, 762 P.2d 158 (Colo. 1988) (decided under rule in effect prior to 1987 repeal and readoption).

Sanction imposed for violation of § 1-18's requirement of timely filing of trial data certificate denied defendant its right to defend against plaintiff's claim. AAA Crane Serv. v. Omnibank, 723 P.2d 156 (Colo. App. 1986).

Sanctions may include dismissal, but only if court follows notice requirements of C.R.C.P. 41(b) and § 1-10 (2) of this rule. Maxwell v. W.K.A. Inc., 728 P.2d 321 (Colo. App. 1986).

In addition, it was an abuse of discretion for court to impose a sanction for both parties' failure to file trial data certificates which was detrimental only to plaintiff, and benefitted the equally noncomplying defendants. Maxwell v. W.K.A. Inc., 728 P.2d 321 (Colo. App. 1986).

Imposition of sanctions for noncompliance is not mandated; the language of § 1-18 (1) (d) is permissive in nature. Nagy v. District Court, 762 P.2d 158 (Colo. 1988) (decided under rule in effect prior to 1987 repeal and readoption).

The trial court has considerable discretion to determine whether noncompliance with mandatory pretrial procedures justifies the imposition of sanctions against the noncomplying party. People v. Milton, 732 P.2d 1199 (Colo. 1987).

Trial court's decision not to impose any sanction for noncompliance with pretrial procedures is an abuse of discretion only if, based on the particular circumstances, the decision was manifestly arbitrary, unreasonable, or unfair. People v. Milton, 732 P.2d 1199 (Colo. 1987).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion for failing to prohibit the state's witnesses from testifying in case in chief for failure to file trial data certificate setting forth the names of the witnesses. People v. Milton, 732 P.2d 1199 (Colo. 1987).

Trial court did not apply an erroneous legal standard in determining reasonableness of plaintiff's attorney fees. Without any supporting affidavit or exhibit, defendants' opposition to award of attorney fees incurred in connection with contempt proceedings constituted mere argument and did not create a genuine issue of material fact as to the reasonableness of the fees. Moreover, the award of attorney fees was based on sufficient evidence supporting the reasonableness of the fees. Madison Capital Co., LLC v. Star Acquisition VIII, 214 P.3d 557 (Colo. App. 2009).

Notwithstanding the discretionary language in § 1-22 (2)(c), a party is entitled to an evidentiary hearing to determine a reasonable amount of attorney fees, when the party presents an expert's affidavit raising disputed issues of fact and a significant amount of fees has been requested. Roberts v. Adams, 47 P.3d 690 (Colo. App. 2001).

Discretion to grant or deny belated request. Where party did not file motion for fees until 24 days after expiration of 15-day period and did not request extension of time nor offer excuse for delay, court did not abuse its discretion by denying the motion. Major v. Chons Bros., Inc., 53 P.3d 781 (Colo. App. 2002).

Although § 1-22 requires a party seeking costs to file a request within 15 days of the judgment, it also permits the request to be filed within such greater time as the court may allow. Although plaintiff filed the request for costs outside of the deadline, the court chose to address the issue. There is no abuse of discretion in the trial court's decision to address plaintiff's request under the ''within such greater time as the court may allow'' standard. Phillips v. Watkins, 166 P.3d 197 (Colo. App. 2007).

A request for an award of costs and fees under § 1-22 which has been filed beyond the 15-day deadline does not preclude the trial court's consideration even though the party fails to request an extension of time. In re Wright, 841 P.2d 358 (Colo. App. 1992).

Not an abuse of discretion for trial court to award attorney fees under § 1-22 beyond the 15-day deadline and without expressly granting an extension. US Fax Law Ctr., Inc. v. Henry Schein, Inc., 205 P.3d 512 (Colo. App. 2009); Anderson v. Pursell, 244 P.3d 1188 (Colo. 2010).

The court relied on specified information indicating the reasons for the late filing of the motion for attorney fees. US Fax Law Ctr., Inc. v. Henry Schein, Inc., 205 P.3d 512 (Colo. App. 2009).

Trial court not required to deny a motion for costs and attorney fees if it is filed outside of the 15-day time limit, even if the submitting party does not request an extension of time. Anderson v. Pursell, 244 P.3d 1188 (Colo. 2010).

Issues concerning recovery of attorney fees not sought as damages are outside the purview of C.R.C.P. 59 and outside the purview of C.R.C.P. 59(j)'s requirement that a motion be denied as a matter of law if it is not decided within 60 days. Anderson v. Pursell, 244 P.3d 1188 (Colo. 2010).

Even though plaintiff filed his bill of costs and an amended bill of costs more than 15 days after the entry of judgment, the trial court considered both the bill of costs and the amended bill in awarding minimal costs. Thus, the bill of costs was filed within ''such greater time as the court may allow'' and the trial court was required under § 13-17-202 to award the plaintiff ''reasonable costs'' incurred after the offer of settlement. Borquez v. Robert C. Ozer, P.C., 923 P.2d 166 (Colo. App. 1995), aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds, 940 P.2d 371 (Colo. 1997).

The rule does not require a court to determine that a filing made outside the 15-day period was attributable to excusable neglect or to make any other findings such as those required under C.R.C.P. 6(b). Parry v. Kuhlmann, 169 P.3d 188 (Colo. App. 2007).

Section 1-22 (2) does not require a party seeking attorney fees as costs to provide the disclosures mandated under C.R.C.P. 26 for experts who will testify at trial. Chartier v. Weinland Homes, Inc., 25 P.3d 1279 (Colo. App. 2001).

Failure of wife to file a motion in conformity with this rule in dissolution of marriage action does not operate as a waiver of her request for fees where wife had properly requested fees in her response to husband's petition; attorney fees were also listed as a disputed issue in the parties' joint trial management certificate; and husband acknowledged that wife raised the issue at the permanent orders hearing. In re Hill, 166 P.3d 269 (Colo. App. 2007).

The right to a jury trial, once proper demand is made and fee is paid pursuant to § 1-3 of this rule, may be lost only for reasons stated in C.R.C.P. 39(a). The trial court, in an action for payment of medical benefits, abused its discretion in denying the insured a jury trial on the basis that the insured failed to file jury instructions in accordance with § 1-19 of this rule. Neither this rule nor C.R.C.P. 39(a) includes a waiver provision on such basis. Whaley v. Keystone Life Ins. Co., 811 P.2d 404 (Colo. App. 1989).

Where defendant in prior action sought and obtained dismissal for failure to prosecute but did not specifically request dismissal with prejudice, order of dismissal did not so specify, and no good cause was shown for defendant's failure to request dismissal with prejudice, subsequent ''clarification'' of order to specify dismissal with prejudice was ineffective. McElvaney v. Batley, 824 P.2d 73 (Colo. App. 1991).

Expert's designation and summary of testimony was available and met the requirement of this rule to provide both sides with the opportunity to prepare adequately for trial and to prevent undue surprise. Fenton v. Fibreboard Corp., 827 P.2d 564 (Colo. App. 1991).

Confession of motion due to failure to respond in accordance with subsection (3) does not automatically render a pro se litigant's claims ''frivolous and groundless''. Separate findings on the issue are required before court may award attorney fees against such parties under § 13-17-102. Artes-Roy v. Lyman, 833 P.2d 62 (Colo. App. 1992).

Defendants waived their rights to a hearing on costs pursuant to this section where they did not request such hearing at trial. Van Schaack v. Van Schaack Holdings, Ltd., 856 P.2d 15 (Colo. App. 1992).

It was within the trial court's discretion to award expert witness fees for designated experts who did not testify at trial where such award was supported by evidence in the record. Van Schaack v. Van Schaack Holdings, Ltd., 856 P.2d 15 (Colo. App. 1992).

Trial court had discretion to impose sanctions, including issuing an order limiting scope of expert's testimony at trial where plaintiff failed to disclose identity of experts or their opinions and failed to supplement responses to discovery when additional information became known. Locke v. Vanderark, 843 P.2d 27 (Colo. App. 1992).

Trial court properly excluded psychiatrist's testimony regarding the association between IQ and hydrocephalic condition where plaintiff failed to disclose opinion, failed to disclose psychiatrist's qualifications, and failed to update discovery responses. Locke v. Vanderark, 843 P.2d 27 (Colo. App. 1992).

Trial court properly held that tardily disclosed expert opinion went beyond fair scope of previously disclosed opinion where plaintiff failed to make timely disclosure of expert's opinion concerning damages relating to matters beyond those provided in discovery. Locke v. Vanderark, 843 P.2d 27 (Colo. App. 1992).

Generally, the trial court determines a motion on the written motion and submitted briefs, and it is within the discretion of the court whether to allow an evidentiary hearing. City & County of Denver v. Ameritrust, 832 P.2d 1054 (Colo. App. 1992).

Section 1-5 creates a presumption that all court records are to be open. Anderson v. Home Ins. Co., 924 P.2d 1123 (Colo. App. 1996).

Section 1-5 places the burden upon the party seeking to limit access to a court file to overcome this presumption in favor of public accessibility by demonstrating that the harm to the privacy of a person in interest outweighs the public interest in the openness of court files. Anderson v. Home Ins. Co., 924 P.2d 1123 (Colo. App. 1996).

The fact that the parties claim that a court file contains extremely personal, private, and confidential matters is generally insufficient to constitute a privacy interest warranting the sealing of that entire file under § 1-5. In re Purcell, 879 P.2d 468 (Colo. App. 1994); Anderson v. Home Ins. Co., 924 P.2d 1123 (Colo. App. 1996).

The expectation of privacy or confidentiality in court records has been found to exist only in those limited instances involving sexual assault claims, trade secrets, potentially defamatory material, or threats to national security. Anderson v. Home Ins. Co., 924 P.2d 1123 (Colo. App. 1996).

A broad limited access order denying access to the entire court file was not warranted where a medical malpractice charge against a licensed health care professional implicates the public interest and involves more than a private dispute between individuals. Anderson v. Home Ins. Co., 924 P.2d 1123 (Colo. App. 1996).

Court may not enter a limited access order based solely upon an agreement between the parties to the litigation. If the evidence does not support the required finding under § 1-5 (2), no such order may be entered. Anderson v. Home Ins. Co., 924 P.2d 1123 (Colo. App. 1996).

Court did not abuse its discretion in denying party's request to seal record where it was not required to seal the record under this section and the record contained nothing unusual and no material that would mandate that it be sealed. In re Purcell, 879 P.2d 468 (Colo. App. 1994).

Movant's constitutional right to due process was not violated by trial court's denial of motion for costs and damages without a separate hearing on the motion where movant did not request an evidentiary hearing on its motion and trial court, in ruling on the motion, assumed movant could prove damages but determined, based on written motion and briefs, that an award of damages would be oppressive and inequitable. City & County of Denver v. Ameritrust, 832 P.2d 1054 (Colo. App. 1992).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing defendants to file their reply to plaintiff's response more than ten days after the response was filed where, in accepting the reply, the court stated that it had been filed within a reasonable time and that, in the interest of fundamental fairness, substance would be placed ahead of procedure. Armstead v. Memorial Hosp., 892 P.2d 450 (Colo. App. 1995).

Letter of credit was properly released by trial court, since the court was the beneficiary of the letter of credit. Vento v. Colo. Nat'l Bank, 985 P.2d 48 (Colo. App. 1999).

District court clerk's rejection of complaint filed does not, and cannot, alter the fact that the complaint had been "filed" in the district court under C.R.C.P. 106(b) on the date it was transmitted to the e-system provider. The rejection therefore also does not and cannot alter the fact that the litigants had invoked district court jurisdiction, including that of the intended county district court, on the date they e-filed their complaint with the other district court. Maslak v. Town of Vail, 2015 COA 2, 345 P.3d 972.

Section 1-1 (2) is applied in Barry v. Ashley Anderson, P.C., 718 F. Supp. 1492 (D. Colo. 1989).

Section 1-10 is applied in Powers v. Prof'l Rodeo Cowboys, 832 P.2d 1099 (Colo. App. 1992).

Section 1-10 (2) is applied in Maxwell v. W.K.A. Inc., 728 P.2d 321 (Colo. App. 1986).

Section 1-11 is applied in Herrera v. Anderson, 736 P.2d 416 (Colo. App. 1987); Todd v. Bear Valley Village Apts., 980 P.2d 973 (Colo. 1999).

Section 1-15 is applied in Herrera v. Anderson, 736 P.2d 416 (Colo. App. 1987); Ogawa v. Riley, 949 P.2d 118 (Colo. App. 1997).

Section 1-18 is applied in Baumann v. Rhode, 710 P.2d 493 (Colo. App. 1985); Conrad v. Imatani, 724 P.2d 89 (Colo. App. 1986); Coffee v. Inman, 728 P.2d 376 (Colo. App. 1986).

Section 1-19 is applied in Whaley v. Keystone Life Ins. Co., 811 P.2d 404 (Colo. App. 1989).

CHAPTER 17B

Appointed Judges

Adopted by the

SUPREME COURT OF COLORADO

June 23, 2005,

Effective July 1, 2005

CHAPTER 17B

APPOINTED JUDGES

Rule 122. Case Specific Appointment of Appointed Judges Pursuant to C.R.S. § 13-3-111

(a) Appointed Judges.

(1) At any time after a civil action, excluding juvenile delinquency proceedings, is filed in a trial court of record, upon agreement of all parties that a specific retired or resigned justice of the Supreme Court, or a retired or resigned judge of any other court of record within the state of Colorado be appointed to hear the action and upon agreement that one or more of the parties shall pay the agreed upon compensation of the selected justice or judge, together with all other compensation and expenses incurred, the Chief Justice may appoint such justice or judge who consents to perform judicial duties for such action.

(2) The decision as to whether such justice or judge shall be appointed to judicial duties, pursuant to subsection (1) of this section, shall be entirely within the discretion of the Chief Justice. The Chief Justice has the authority to reject or approve any deviations from these rules agreed to by the parties. The Chief Justice may require such undertakings as in his or her opinion may be necessary to ensure that proceedings held pursuant to this section shall be without expense to the state of Colorado.

(3) The compensation and expenses paid to an Appointed Judge shall be at the rate agreed upon by the parties and the Appointed Judge and rate of compensation must be approved by the Chief Justice at the time of making the appointment.

(4) The Appointed Judge shall have the same authority as a full-time sitting judge. Orders, decrees, verdicts and judgments entered by an Appointed Judge shall have the same force and effect and may be enforced or appealed in the same manner as any other order, decree, verdict, or judgment.

(b) Qualifications. To be eligible to serve as an Appointed Judge, a person must be a Senior Judge, a retired or resigned justice of the Supreme Court, or a retired or resigned judge of the court of appeals, a district court, probate court, juvenile court or county court, who has served as a judge in one or more of said courts for a total of at least six years. If a judge has served in the Colorado State Court System and as a judge in the Federal Court System, those years of service may be combined for the purpose of meeting the six year requirement. Such person must be currently licensed to practice law in Colorado.

(c) Motion for Appointment. A request for the appointment of an Appointed Judge shall be made by a joint motion filed by all parties to a case and shall be signed as approved by the Appointed Judge. The original of such motion shall be filed with the Supreme Court with a copy filed in the originating court — the court of record in which the case was originally filed. Such motion shall include:

(1) The name, address, and registration number of the Appointed Judge;

(2) The rate of compensation agreed to be paid to the Appointed Judge;

(3) The Appointed Judge's agreement to be bound by Section II of the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct, Applicability of Code to Senior and Retired Judges, and the Appointed Judge's agreement that the Chief Justice may ask the Office of Attorney Regulation Counsel and the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline for any record of his or her imposed discipline, or pending disciplinary proceeding, if any;

(4) A realistic estimate of all compensation and expenses for the Appointed Judge, any needed personnel, rental of an appropriate facility outside the courthouse, if needed, in which to hold the proceedings, payment for any requested jury, and all other anticipated compensation and expenses, including travel, lodging and meals, and provisions assuring that all such compensation and expenses will be paid by the parties; and

(5) An agreement as to who is responsible for initial payment of the compensation and expenses of the action, and who is responsible for payment of the compensation and expenses upon final judgment;

(6) The agreement of the parties and the Appointed Judge that none of the compensation and expenses shall be paid by the state of Colorado;

(7) A copy signed by the Appointed Judge of the following oath: "I, (name of Appointed Judge), do solemnly swear or affirm that I will support the Constitution of the United States and of the State of Colorado, and faithfully perform the duties of the office upon which I am about to enter."

(8) Any other matters the parties desire to be considered by the Chief Justice in exercising his or her discretion.

(9) A form order approving the appointment.

(10) A statement acknowledging that the Chief Justice may approve or reject the order or, upon the agreement of all the parties and of the Appointed Judge, may change any of the provisions of the order.

The parties shall file the Chief Justice's ruling on the motion in the case file in the originating court.

(d) Duration of Appointment. The appointment shall last for so long as the parties specify in the motion and order of appointment. In the absence of such specification, the appointment shall last until entry of a final, appealable judgment, order or decree or, in dissolution actions, until the entry of Permanent Orders.

(e) Compensation and Expenses. Upon the appointment of an Appointed Judge by the Chief Justice, the parties shall forthwith deposit in an agreed escrow or trust account to be administered by the Appointed Judge or some other person acceptable to the parties and the Appointed Judge, sufficient funds to pay the estimated compensation and expenses of the case for the duration of the appointment. If, at any time, the Appointed Judge determines that the funds on deposit are insufficient to cover all further compensation and expenses, the Appointed Judge may order the parties promptly to deposit sufficient additional funds to cover such amount. An Appointed Judge may withdraw from the appointment after reasonable notice and with permission of the Chief Justice if this order is not complied with, and the case proceedings shall revert to the originating court. Within a reasonable time after the conclusion of the Appointed Judge's duties on the case, the parties shall file in the record of the case in the originating court a report of the total compensation paid for the Appointed Judge's services and the total expenses paid by the parties in the case.

(f) Rules Applicable to Proceedings. Proceedings before an Appointed Judge shall be conducted pursuant to Rules applicable to the originating court. All filings shall be open records available for public review and inspection unless sealed upon motion and order, and all proceedings shall be open to the public in the same manner and pursuant to the same law applicable to the originating court.

(g) Record.

(1) The original of each filing in all proceedings before an Appointed Judge shall be filed with the clerk of the originating court and a copy shall be provided to the Appointed Judge.

(2) The parties and the Appointed Judge shall comply with all applicable rules and Chief Justice Directives relating to reporting, filing and maintaining the record.

(3) The originals of any reporter's notes or recording medium, along with any exhibits tendered, shall be filed with the clerk of the originating court pursuant to C.R.C.P. 80(d). The parties shall pay the costs of a court reporter or for any recording equipment that is acceptable to all parties.

(h) Location of Proceedings.

(1) Unless consented to by the parties and ordered by the Appointed Judge for good cause, the location of evidentiary proceedings and trial of a matter subject to this rule shall be pursuant to C.R.C.P. 98.

(2) The parties and the Appointed Judge shall arrange for an appropriate facility in which proceedings shall be held. If available, a room in the courthouse may be used for one or more proceedings in the case. Use of available court rooms, equipment or facilities within the courthouse shall not be considered an expense to the state that the parties are required to bear or reimburse;

(3) Whenever proceedings are scheduled in advance, the Appointed Judge shall timely file a Notice of Hearing with the clerk of the originating court giving notice of the date, time, nature and location of the proceedings.

(4) Except when proceedings are taking place in a courthouse, the parties shall arrange for or assure that there is sufficient premises liability insurance to assure that any injury to a party, other participant or spectator at the proceedings is covered without expense to the state of Colorado. Such insurance shall name the state of Colorado as an additional insured.

(i) Jury Trials.

(1) The Colorado Uniform Jury Selection and Service Act applies to jury trials conducted pursuant to this rule.

(2) When a trial by jury has been properly demanded, before setting the case for trial the Appointed Judge shall coordinate the start of the trial with the jury commissioner and the district administrator for the originating court so that jurors are selected and voir dire is held in the courthouse to which the prospective jurors are summoned.

(3) If the trial is held outside the courthouse, the parties shall be responsible for offering transportation from the courthouse to the location of the trial for the duration of the trial. Such transportation shall be at no cost to the jurors or the state of Colorado. The parties shall arrange for or assure that there is sufficient liability insurance to assure that any injury to a juror related to such transportation is covered without expense to the state of Colorado. Such insurance shall name the state of Colorado as an additional insured.

(4) Not later than 3 business days following the conclusion of their service as jurors, the parties shall pay the jurors at the statutory rate pursuant to the Colorado Uniform Jury Selection and Service Act. The parties also shall pay all related expenses such as meals for the jurors and the costs of a bailiff. Payments made pursuant to this section should not be made through the court.

(5) If the trial is held outside the courthouse, jurors shall be instructed to the effect that such fact does not affect their responsibility and the importance of their service.

(6) In the event the jury is cancelled, postponed or a jury is waived, the Appointed Judge shall notify the jury commissioner as soon as possible.

(j) Removal. An Appointed Judge shall preside over all matters throughout the duration of the appointment unless the Appointed Judge recuses, is removed pursuant to C.R.C.P. 97, dies or becomes incapacitated. In any such circumstance, the case proceedings shall immediately revert to the originating court.

(k) Immunity. An Appointed Judge shall have immunity in the same manner and to the same extent as any other judge in the state of Colorado.

This Rule is hereby enacted and adopted by the Court, En Banc, this 23rd day of June, 2005 and shall be effective with regard to all cases pending in courts as of July 1, 2005 or filed in courts on or after July 1, 2005.

APPENDIX TO RULE 201

Approval of Law Schools

American Bar Association Standards and Rules of Procedure

301 (a) The law school shall maintain an educational program that is designed to qualify its graduates for admission to the bar.
(b) A law school may offer an educational program designed to emphasize some aspects of the law or the legal profession and give less attention to others. If a school offers such a program, that program and its objectives shall be clearly stated in its publications, where appropriate.
(c) The educational program of the school shall be designed to prepare the students to deal with recognized problems of the present and anticipated problems of the future.

302 (a) The law school shall:
(i) Offer to all students instruction in those subjects generally regarded as the core of the law school curriculum;
(ii) Offer to all students at least one rigorous writing experience;
(iii) Offer instruction in professional skills;
(iv) Require of all candidates for the first professional degree, instruction in the duties and responsibilities of the legal profession. Such required instruction need not be limited to any pedagogical method as long as the history, goals, structure and responsibilities of the legal profession and its members, including the ABA Model Code of Professional Responsibility, are all covered. Each law school is encouraged to involve members of the bench and bar in such instruction.
(b) The law school may not offer to its students, for academic credit or as a condition to graduation, instruction that is designed as a bar examination review course.

303 (a) The educational program of the law school shall provide adequate opportunity for:
(i) Study in seminars or by directed research,
(ii) Small classes for at least some portion of the total instructional program.
(b) The law school may not allow credit for study by correspondence.

304 (a) The law school shall maintain and adhere to sound standards of legal scholarship, including clearly defined standards for good standing, advancement, and graduation.
(b) The scholastic achievement of students shall be evaluated from the inception of their studies. As part of the testing of scholastic achievement, a written examination of suitable length and complexity shall be required in every course for which credit is given, except clinical work, courses involving extensive written work such as moot court, practice court, legal writing and drafting, and seminars and individual research projects.
(c) A law school shall not, either by initial admission or subsequent retention, enroll or continue a person whose inability to do satisfactory work is sufficiently manifest that the person's continuation in school would inculcate false hopes, constitute economic exploitation, or deleteriously affect the education of other students.

305 (a) Subject to the qualifications and exceptions contained in this Chapter, the law school shall require, as a condition for graduation, the completion of a course of study in residence of not less than 1200 class hours, extending over a period of not less than ninety weeks for full-time students, or not less than one hundred and twenty weeks for part-time students.

(i) ''In residence'' means attendance at classes in the law school.
(ii) ''Class hours'' means time spent in regularly scheduled class sessions in the law school, including time allotted for final examinations, not exceeding ten percent of the total number of class session hours.
(iii) ''Full-time student'' means a student who devotes substantially all working hours to the study of law.
(b) To receive residence credit for an academic period, a full-time student must be enrolled in a schedule requiring a minimum of ten class hours a week and must receive credit for at least nine class hours and a part-time student must be enrolled in a schedule requiring a minimum of eight class hours a week and must receive credit for at least eight class hours. If a student is not enrolled in or fails to receive credit for the minimum number of hours specified in this subsection, the student may receive residence credit only in the ratio that the hours enrolled in or in which credit was received, as the case may be, bear to the minimum specified.
(c) Regular and punctual class attendance is necessary to satisfy residence and class hours requirements.

306 If the law school has a program that permits or requires student participation in studies or activities away from the law school or in a format that does not involve attendance at regularly scheduled class sessions, the time spent in such studies or activities may be included as satisfying the residence and class hours requirements, provided the conditions of this section are satisfied.
(a) The residence and class hours credit allowed must be commensurate with the time and effort expended by and the educational benefits to the participating student.
(b) The studies or activities must be approved in advance, in accordance with the school's established procedures for curriculum approval and determination.
(c) Each such study or activity, and the participation of each student therein, must be conducted or periodically reviewed by a member of the faculty to insure that in its actual operation it is achieving its educational objectives and that the credit allowed therefor is, in fact, commensurate with the time and effort expended by, and the educational benefits to, the participating student.
(d) At least 900 hours of the total time credited towards satisfying the ''in residence'' and ''class hours'' requirements of this Chapter shall be in actual attendance in regularly scheduled class sessions in the law school conferring the degree, or, in the case of a student receiving credit for studies at another law school, at the law school at which the credit was earned.

308 The law school may admit with advanced standing and allow credit for studies at a law school outside the United States if the studies
(i) Either were ''in residence'' as provided in Section 305, or qualify for credit under Section 306, and
(ii) The content of the studies was such that credit therefor would have been allowed towards satisfaction of degree requirements at the admitting school, and
(iii) The admitting school is satisfied that the quality of the educational program at the prior school was at least equal to that required for an approved school.
Advanced standing and credit allowed for foreign study shall not exceed one-third of the total required by the Standards for the first professional degree unless the foreign study related chiefly to a system of law basically followed in the jurisdiction in which the admitting school is located; and in no event shall the maximum advanced standing and credit allowed exceed two-thirds of the total required by the Standards for the first professional degree.

RULE 202

Rule 202.1. Supreme Court Jurisdiction

Rule 202.2. Supreme Court Advisory Committee

(1) The Supreme Court Advisory Committee (Advisory Committee) is a permanent committee of the Supreme Court. See C.R.C.P. 251.34. The Advisory Committee oversees the coordination of administrative matters for all programs of the attorney regulation process.

(3) The Advisory Committee shall recommend to the Supreme Court proposed changes or additions to the rules of procedure governing admission to the practice of law.

Rule 202.3. Board of Law Examiners

(1) Colorado State Board of Law Examiners. The Colorado State Board of Law Examiners (Board) shall consist of two committees: the Law Committee and the Character and Fitness Committee.

(2) Law Committee. The Law Committee shall serve as a permanent committee of the Supreme Court.

(a) Members. The Law Committee shall consist of eleven volunteer attorneys appointed by the Supreme Court. With the exception of the chair and vice-chair, members shall be appointed for one term of seven years. Diversity shall be a consideration in making the appointments. The terms of the members of the Law Committee shall be staggered to provide, so far as possible, for the expiration each year of the term of one member. (1) Legal Aid Clinics. Students of any law school that maintains a legal aid clinic where poor or legally underserved persons receive legal advice and services shall, when representing the clinic and its clients, be authorized to advise clients on legal matters and appear in any court or before any administrative tribunals or arbitration panels in Colorado as if licensed to practice law.

(2) Law Student Externs.

(a) Practice by Law Student Extern. (formerly section 12-5-116.1)

(i) An eligible law student extern, as specified in subsection (2)(b), may appear and participate in any civil proceeding in any municipal, county, or district court (including domestic relations proceedings) or before any administrative tribunal in Colorado, or in any county or municipal court criminal proceedings, except when the defendant has been charged with a felony, or in any juvenile proceeding in any municipal, county, or district court, or before any magistrate in any juvenile or other proceeding or any parole revocation as if licensed to practice law under the following circumstances:

(A) If the person on whose behalf the extern is appearing has provided written consent to that appearance and the law student extern is under the supervision of a supervising lawyer, as specified in section (2)(d).

(B) When representing the office of the state public defender and its clients, if the person on whose behalf the extern is appearing has provided written consent to that appearance and the law student extern is under the supervision of the public defender or one of his or her deputies. In such case, the record shall reflect the name of a supervising lawyer, and a supervising lawyer must be available, but not necessarily physically present in the courtroom, if the person wants to consult with him or her. However, a supervising lawyer must be physically present in the courtroom if the proceeding is a testimonial motions hearing or trial.

(C) On behalf of the state or any of its departments, agencies, or institutions, a county, a city, or a municipality, with the written approval and under the supervision of the attorney general, attorney for the state, county attorney, district attorney, city attorney, or municipal attorney. A general approval for the law student extern to appear, executed by the appropriate supervising attorney pursuant to this paragraph (C), shall be filed with the clerk of the applicable court/administrative tribunal and brought to the attention of the judge/presiding officer thereof.

(D) On behalf of a nonprofit legal services organization where poor or legally underserved persons receive legal advice and services if the person on whose behalf the student is appearing has provided written consent to that appearance and the law student extern is under the supervision of a supervising lawyer, as specified in section (2)(d).

(ii) The consent or approval referred to in subsection (2)(a)(i)(A), except a general approval, shall be made in the record of the case and shall be brought to the attention of the judge of the court or the presiding officer of the administrative tribunal.

(iii) In addition to the activities authorized in subsection (2)(a), an eligible law student extern may engage in other activities under the supervision of a supervising lawyer, including but not limited to the preparation of pleadings, briefs, and other legal documents, which must be approved and signed by the supervising lawyer. However, acknowledgments and advisements relating to pleas in criminal cases may be signed by the extern alone. Additionally, the eligible law student may, under the supervision of a supervising lawyer, assist indigent inmates of correctional institutions who have no attorney of record and who request such assistance in preparing applications and supporting documents for post-conviction relief.

(b) Eligibility requirements for law student extern practice. (formerly section 12-5-116.2)

(i) In order to be eligible to make an appearance and participate pursuant to section (2)(a), a law student must:

(A) Be duly enrolled in an ABA accredited law school, or a recent graduate of such a law school who has applied for admission to the Colorado Bar. For purposes of this rule, the ''law student's'' eligibility continues after graduation from law school and until the announcement of the results of the first bar examination following the student's graduation, provided that for anyone who passes that examination, eligibility shall continue in effect through the date of the first swearing-in ceremony following the examination.

(B) Have completed a minimum of two years of legal studies;

(C) Have the certification of the dean of such law school that the dean has no personal knowledge of and knows of nothing of record indicating that the student is not of good moral character and, in addition, that the law student has completed the requirements specified in subsection (2)(b)(i)(B) and is a student in good standing, or recently graduated. The dean of such law school has no continuing duty to certify the student's good moral character after the student has graduated from law school, at which point the law student/applicant to the Colorado Bar has obligations to maintain the integrity of the profession pursuant to Colo. RPC 8.1.

(D) Be introduced to the court or administrative tribunal in which the extern is appearing as a law student extern by an attorney authorized to practice law in Colorado;

(E) Neither ask for nor receive any compensation or remuneration of any kind for the extern's services from the person on whose behalf the extern renders services; but such limitation shall not prevent the law student extern from receiving credit for participation in the law school externship program upon prior approval of the law school, nor shall it prevent the law school, the state, a county, a city, a municipality, or the office of the district attorney or the public defender from paying compensation to the law school extern nor shall it prevent any agency from making such charges for its services as it may otherwise properly require; and

(F) State that the extern has read, is familiar with, and will be governed in the conduct of the extern's activities under subsection (2)(a) by the Colorado Rules of Professional Conduct.

(c) Certification of Law Student Extern by Law School Dean Filing Effective Period of Withdrawal by Dean or Termination. (formerly section 12-5-116.3)

(i) The certification by the law school dean, pursuant to subsection (2)(b)(i)(C), required in order for a law student extern to appear and participate in proceedings:

(A) Shall be filed with the Clerk of the Supreme Court Office of Attorney Registration, and unless it is sooner withdrawn, shall remain in effect until the student's graduation.

(B) May be withdrawn by the dean at any time by mailing a notice to that effect to the Clerk of the Supreme Court Office of Attorney Registration, and such withdrawal may be without notice or hearing and without any showing of cause; and

(C) May be terminated by the Supreme Court at any time without notice or hearing and without any showing of cause.

(d) Qualifications and Requirements of Supervising Lawyer. (formerly section 12-5-116.4)

(i) A supervising lawyer, under whose supervision an eligible law student extern appears and participates pursuant to section (2)(a), shall be authorized to practice law in the state and:

(A) Shall be a lawyer working for or on behalf of an organization identified in subsection (2)(a)(i)(B) - (D);

(B) Shall assume personal professional responsibility for the conduct of the law student extern; and

(C) Shall assist the law student extern in the extern's preparation to the extent the supervising lawyer considers it necessary.

ANNOTATION

It is a violation of this rule for the supervising lawyer not to be present during critical stages of a criminal case; such a violation constitutes structural error. People v. McGlaughlin, 2018 COA 114, 428 P.3d 691.

The sixth amendment requires that a licensed lawyer be present in the courtroom when a law student represents a criminal defendant during a critical stage of a criminal case. If the supervising lawyer is not in the courtroom during those critical stages, no licensed lawyer is present, and the defendant is denied his or her constitutional right to counsel guaranteed by the sixth amendment. Such a complete deprivation of counsel is a structural error, requiring reversal without regard to any showing of prejudice. People v. McGlaughlin, 2018 COA 114, 428 P.3d 691.

Issues of adequacy of representation involving violations of the rules governing student practice, other than the supervising attorney's presence, are properly analyzed under the test for ineffective assistance of counsel announced in Strickland. People v. McGlaughlin, 2018 COA 114, 428 P.3d 691.

Rule 206. Petitions to the Supreme Court for Waiver of Admissions Requirements

(1) Applicability. This rule applies only to petitions for waiver of specific attorney admissions eligibility requirements or restrictions set forth in C.R.C.P. 203 through C.R.C.P. 205.7 and C.R.C.P. 211.3. Nothing herein is deemed a limitation on the Supreme Court's plenary jurisdiction set forth in C.R.C.P. 202.1 and C.R.C.P. 212.

(2) Requirements for and Content of Petition. The petitioner must file a petition setting forth the relief sought, the specific admissions eligibility requirements or restrictions at issue with citations to applicable rules, and the grounds for relief. The petitioner has the burden of showing that the Supreme Court should grant the relief requested. The petition also must include: a statement that petitioner has conferred with the Office of Attorney Admissions; a recital of the position of the Office of Attorney Admissions as to the relief sought; and a certificate of service.

(3) Docketing of Petition, Caption and Fees. Petitions under this rule must be filed with the Supreme Court. Upon the filing of the petition, petitioner must pay to the clerk of the Supreme Court the docket fee as set by the Court. The petition caption must include the phrase ''Original Proceeding in Attorney Admissions pursuant to C.R.C.P. 206'' and the matter shall be docketed by the Clerk of the Supreme Court as:

SUPREME COURT, STATE OF COLORADO
Case No.
ORIGINAL PROCEEDING IN ATTORNEY ADMISSIONS

IN THE MATTER OF (name of Applicant), APPLICANT

(4) Service. The petition and all attachments must be served on the Office of Attorney Admissions. Such service must be accomplished by hand-delivery, express delivery, or first-class mail unless the Office of Attorney Admissions has consented to an alternative form of service.

(5) Petitions for Relief Relating to Underlying Character and Fitness Investigations. Any petition seeking relief relating to an eligibility requirement that is implicated by an underlying character and fitness investigation, including a request to extend the expiration time for bar exam scores under C.R.C.P. 211.3, is confidential and must be filed as a non-public document. This subsection does not apply to exceptions filed by an applicant under C.R.C.P. 209.5.

(6) Request for Protection of Other Confidential Information. A petition filed under this rule is not deemed an application for a license to practice law and is not confidential under C.R.C.P. 203.1. Instead, such a petition is presumed to be publicly available unless it is a petition filed under subsection (5) of this rule. A petitioner may request protection of confidential information contained in supporting documentation by filing a motion requesting that specific exhibits to the petition that contain confidential information not be made publicly available.

(7) Response by Office of Attorney Admissions. The Office of Attorney Admissions may respond to a petition under this rule pursuant to an order by the Supreme Court or at the discretion of the Office of Attorney Admissions. Any response must be filed within seven days of the date the petition was served on the Office of Attorney Admissions.

(8) Scope of Supreme Court Discretion. The Supreme Court may issue an order: denying the petition without explanation; requesting that the Petitioner address a specific issue in a supplemental filing; granting the relief requested with or without conditions; or granting modified relief with or without conditions.

[There is no Rule 207.]

Rule 208. Character and Fitness Determination

Rule 208.1. Character and Fitness Investigation

(1) Purpose. The purpose of a character and fitness investigation conducted before an individual is admitted to practice law in Colorado is to protect the public and safeguard the system of justice.

(2) Burden of Proof. The applicant shall bear the burden of proving the character and fitness necessary to practice law in Colorado.

(3) Expectations of A Lawyer's Responsibilities. Applicants should understand that a lawyer's professional responsibilities include the following minimum expectations set forth in the Preamble to the Colorado Rules of Professional Conduct:

(h) While it is a lawyer's duty, when necessary, to challenge the rectitude of official action, it is also the lawyer's duty to uphold the legal process.

(4) Standard of Character and Fitness. A Colorado lawyer should possess record of conduct that justifies the trust of clients, adversaries, courts and others with respect to the professional responsibilities owed to them. A basis for denial of an application arising from lack of character may exist when the applicant's record tends to show a deficiency in honesty, integrity, judgment, trustworthiness, diligence, reliability or capacity to practice law. A basis for denial of an application may exist where the applicant's record reveals a history of deceptiveness, criminality, fraud, negligence, irrational behavior, drug or alcohol dependence or abuse, emotional or mental instability, financial irresponsibility or violence.

(5) Essential Eligibility Requirements. Applicants must meet all of the following essential eligibility requirements for the practice of law:

(a) Honesty and candor with clients, lawyers, courts, regulatory authorities and others;

(b) Academic misconduct;

(c) Misconduct in employment;

(d) Acts involving dishonesty, fraud, deceit, or misrepresentation;

(e) Acts that demonstrate disregard for the rights or welfare of others;

(g) Neglect of financial responsibilities;

(h) Neglect of professional obligations;

(i) Violation of a court order, including a child support order;

Source: Entire rule added and effective September 1, 2014.

Rule 210.2. Revocation Proceedings

(1) Petition for Revocation. If, after an applicant has been admitted to practice law in Colorado, the Office of Attorney Regulation Counsel learns that during the admissions process the applicant knowingly made a false statement of material fact, knowingly failed to disclose a fact necessary to correct a misapprehension known by the applicant to have arisen in the matter, knowingly failed to supplement the application with details of any material changes in the information provided in the application, or engaged in knowing dishonest conduct during the application process in an attempt to induce the Office of Attorney Admissions, the Board of Law Examiners and/or the Supreme Court to grant a law license, or otherwise engaged in pre-admission conduct that if disclosed could have precluded the applicant from being admitted to the practice of law in Colorado, the Office of Attorney Regulation Counsel may file a petition with the Supreme Court within three (3) years that specifies the conduct and seeks an order requiring the attorney to show cause why the Colorado license to practice law should not be revoked. Such petition and any subsequent pleadings may be e-filed in accordance with C.A.R. 30. Such revocation proceedings shall be public.

(2) Caption. Revocation proceedings shall be commenced in the name of The People of the State of Colorado.

(3) Show Cause Order. The Supreme Court, on consideration of the petition filed, may issue an order directed to the attorney respondent commanding the respondent to show cause why the respondent's law license should not be revoked, and further requiring that the respondent file with the Supreme Court, within twenty-one days after service of the petition and show cause order, a written answer admitting or denying the matters stated in the petition. The show cause order, together with a copy of the petition, shall be served on the respondent and the Office of Attorney Regulation Counsel. Service shall be sufficient when made either personally upon the respondent or by certified mail sent to the respondent's registered or last known address.

(4) Supreme Court Order Based on Pleadings. If a response to the show cause order is not timely filed, the Supreme Court upon its own motion or the motion of any party shall decide the case, granting such relief and issuing such other orders as may be appropriate.

(5) Judgment on Pleadings. If the response to the show cause order raises no genuine issue of material fact, any party by motion may request a judgment on the pleadings and the Supreme Court may decide the case as a matter of law, granting such relief and issuing such other orders as may be appropriate.

(6) Referral to Hearing Board. Upon the Supreme Court's order or upon motion of any party, questions of fact raised in proceedings under this rule may be referred to a hearing board consisting of the Presiding Disciplinary Judge and two members of the Character and Fitness Committee for findings of fact, conclusions of law and recommendations for final disposition of the case. The two Character and Fitness Committee members, at least one of whom shall be an attorney, shall be randomly selected by the clerk for the Presiding Disciplinary Judge. If the Presiding Disciplinary Judge has been disqualified, an attorney on the Character and Fitness Committee shall be selected by the clerk to serve as the presiding officer.

(a) Burden of Proof. The Attorney Regulation Counsel has the burden of establishing by clear and convincing evidence that the respondent engaged in any of the conduct set forth in section (1) of this rule.

(b) Procurement of Evidence. The parties may procure the attendance of witnesses before the hearing board by issuance of subpoenas which shall be in the name of the Supreme Court and may be issued by the Presiding Disciplinary Judge or his or her clerk upon the request of a party. All such subpoenas shall be subject to the provisions of C.R.C.P. 45. Failure or refusal, without adequate excuse, to comply with any such subpoena shall constitute contempt of the Supreme Court and may be punished accordingly.

(c) Hearing Procedures. The Colorado Rules of Civil Procedure shall apply when not inconsistent with these rules. Subject to any limitations in the order of reference, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge or presiding officer shall have the powers generally reposed in a district court under the Colorado Rules of Civil Procedure. The Presiding Disciplinary Judge or presiding officer shall rule on all motions, objections and other matters of law presented during the course of proceedings conducted pursuant to the order of reference. At all hearings before a hearing board, witnesses shall be sworn in and a complete record made of all proceedings had and testimony taken.

(d) Findings. After the hearing, the hearing board shall report in writing to the Supreme Court in accordance with the order of reference, setting forth findings of fact, conclusions of law and recommendations for final disposition of the case.

(e) Exceptions. Exceptions to the report of the hearing board may be filed with the Supreme Court by any party within twenty-eight days after copies of the report have been mailed to the parties. If no exceptions are timely filed, the case shall stand submitted upon the hearing board's report.

(f) Record on Appeal.

(i) Composition of the Record. Unless the parties stipulate to a more limited record, the record shall consist of all pleadings, documents, and other materials filed or submitted in the proceedings before the hearing board; all written findings, orders, and judgments entered by the hearing board; all evidence presented to the hearing board, including depositions and exhibits; and a complete transcript of all hearings conducted by the hearing board.

(ii) Designation of the Record; Costs. Except as otherwise provided in this rule, the designation of the record on appeal shall be in accordance with C.A.R. 10. Within fourteen days after filing the written exceptions, the excepting party shall file a designation of record with the clerk of the Presiding Disciplinary Judge and the clerk of the Supreme Court. The designation of record shall either: (1) indicate that all the items enumerated in section (f)(i) are desired; or (2) contain a more limited detailed list, arrived through stipulation of the parties, describing the specific items to be included in the record. The excepting party shall serve a copy of the designation of record on the opposing party and on the court reporter(s) who reported the proceedings before the hearing board. Service on any court reporter of the excepting party's designation of record shall constitute a request for transcription of the specified proceedings. Each such court reporter shall provide the written notifications required by C.A.R. 10(b), and the designating party shall pay for the requested transcript(s) in accordance with that rule.

(iii) Certification of the Record. The records and files of the hearing board shall be certified by the clerk of the Presiding Disciplinary Judge.

(iv) Transmission of the Record. Except as otherwise provided in this rule, the transmission of the record on appeal shall be in accordance with C.A.R. 11. The record on appeal, including the transcript and exhibits necessary for the determination of the appeal, shall be transmitted to the clerk of the Supreme Court within sixty-three days (nine weeks) after the filing of the written exceptions, unless the time is shortened or extended by an order entered under C.A.R. 11(d). The excepting party shall take any action necessary to enable the clerk of the Presiding Disciplinary Judge to assemble and transmit the record. The clerk of the Presiding Disciplinary Judge shall assemble and transmit the record in accordance with C.A.R. 10(a)(4) and (5), and C.A.R. 11(b).

(g) Briefs. Except as otherwise provided in this rule, the form, filing, and service of briefs shall be in accordance with C.A.R. 28, 31, and 32.

(i) Titles, Content, Form, and Length of Briefs. No Requests for Attorney Fees Allowed. The brief of the excepting party shall be entitled ''opening brief,'' the brief of the opposing party shall be entitled ''answer brief,'' and the excepting party's reply brief, if any, shall be entitled ''reply brief.'' The content, form, and length of the briefs shall comply with C.A.R. 28 and 32, except that neither party may seek an award of attorney fees.

(ii) Time for Serving and Filing Briefs. The excepting party shall serve and file the opening brief within twenty-eight days after the date on which the record is filed. The objecting party shall serve and file the answer brief within twenty-eight days after service of the opening brief. The excepting party may serve and file a reply brief within fourteen days after service of the answer brief.

(h) Order of Revocation. After review of the report of the hearing board, together with any exceptions, briefs, and the record, the Supreme Court may adopt, modify, or reject the report in whole or in part and shall determine as a matter of law whether the respondent engaged in any of the conduct set forth in section (1) of this rule. If the Supreme Court finds that the respondent did engage in any of the conduct set forth in section (1) of this rule, the Supreme Court may enter an order revoking the respondent's license to practice law in Colorado and may issue such further orders as it deems appropriate, including orders for restitution to any affected agency or client, and the assessment of costs.

(7) Immediate Suspension. Nothing in this rule shall be construed to limit the power of the Supreme Court, upon proper application, to immediately suspend an attorney at any stage of the revocation proceeding in order to prevent public harm.

(8) Not Exclusive Remedy. In addition to or in lieu of initiating revocation proceedings, the Office of Attorney Regulation Counsel may in its discretion choose to institute disciplinary proceedings against the respondent for conduct described in subparagraph (1) of this rule, and a C.R.C.P. 251.18 hearing board may order revocation of the law license as an alternative to discipline. Nothing in this rule precludes the Office of Attorney Regulation Counsel from pursuing disciplinary proceedings against the respondent attorney if the Supreme Court does not order revocation of the attorney's law license pursuant to this rule.

Representation by one who fails to take oath of admission. Representation of a criminal defendant by one who is otherwise qualified to practice law but who fails to take the mandatory oath of admission does not constitute a per se denial of the accused's right to counsel. Rule 224. Provision of Legal Services Following Determination of a Major Disaster

(1) Determination of Major Disaster. Solely for purposes of this rule, the Supreme Court shall determine when an emergency affecting the justice system, as a result of a natural or other major disaster, has occurred in:

(a) The state of Colorado, and whether the emergency caused by the major disaster affects the entirety or only a part of this state, or

(b) Another jurisdiction in the United States, but only after such a determination and its geographical scope have been made by the highest court of that jurisdiction.

(2) Temporary Practice in Colorado Following a Major Disaster in Colorado. Following the determination of an emergency in Colorado pursuant to paragraph (1) of this rule, an out-of-state attorney who meets the conditions of C.R.C.P. 205.1(a) and (b) may be allowed to establish a place for the temporary practice of law from which the attorney may provide legal services not otherwise authorized by Rule 205.1. The terms and conditions of such temporary practice will be set forth in the Supreme Court's emergency order, and will depend upon the nature and extent of the emergency affecting the justice system, and the needs for legal services resulting from such emergency.

(3) Temporary Practice in Colorado Following A Major Disaster in Another Jurisdiction. Following the determination of a major disaster in another jurisdiction in the United States, pursuant to paragraph (1) of this rule, an out-of-state attorney who meets the conditions of C.R.C.P. 205.1(a) and (b) may establish a place for the temporary practice of law in Colorado not otherwise authorized by C.R.C.P. 205.1, from which such attorney may provide legal services related to that attorney's practice of law in the licensing jurisdiction or the area of such licensing jurisdiction where the major disaster occurred.

(4) Duration of Authority for Temporary Practice. The authority for an out-of-state attorney to maintain a place for the practice of law in Colorado as described in paragraphs (2) and (3) shall end when the Supreme Court determines that the conditions caused by the major disaster have ended. The Supreme Court may allow a winding down period for such temporary practice offices.

(5) Court Appearances. The authority granted by this rule does not include appearances in Colorado state courts of record or administrative tribunals, except:

(a) When the out-of-state attorney files a motion for pro hac vice admission pursuant to C.R.C.P. 205.3 and 205.4, and obtains permission from the trial court for such appearance (the Supreme Court may waive pro hac vice admission fees at the time of the determination of the major disaster as described in paragraph (1) or at any time thereafter while the determination remains in effect); or

(b) When the Supreme Court, in any determination made under paragraph (1), grants blanket permission to attorneys providing legal services pursuant to paragraph (2) to appear in all or designated Colorado courts or administrative tribunals, thereby suspending the pro hac vice application and fee requirements set forth in C.R.C.P. 205.3 and 205.4.

(6) Disciplinary Authority and Registration Requirement. Out-of-state attorneys who establish a place for the temporary practice of law in Colorado pursuant to paragraphs (2) or (3) are subject to this Supreme Court's disciplinary authority and the Colorado Rules of Professional Conduct as provided in C.R.C.P. 205.1(3) and Colo. RPC 8.5. Prior to opening such place for the temporary practice of law in Colorado, these out-of-state attorneys shall file a registration statement with the Colorado Supreme Court Office of Attorney Registration. The registration statement shall be in a form prescribed by the Supreme Court. Any out-of-state attorney who provides legal services pursuant to this rule shall not be considered to be engaged in the unauthorized practice of law in Colorado, and shall be deemed, for the purposes of Colorado Revised Statutes, Title 12, Article 5, Sections 101, 112 and 115, to have obtained a license for the limited scope of practice specified in this rule.

(7) Notification to Clients. Out-of-state attorneys who establish a place for the temporary practice of law in Colorado pursuant to paragraph (2) shall inform Colorado clients in writing, at the time the relationship commences, of the jurisdiction(s) in which the attorney is licensed or otherwise authorized to practice law, any limits on that authorization, and that the attorney is not authorized to practice law in Colorado except as permitted by this rule and the Court's emergency order.

Rule 227. Registration Fee

A. Registration Fee of Attorneys and Attorney Judges

(1) General Provisions.

(a) Fees. On or before February 28 of each year, every attorney admitted to practice in Colorado (including judges, those admitted on a provisional or temporary basis and those admitted as judge advocate) shall annually file a registration statement and pay a fee as set by the Colorado Supreme Court. As of 2014, the fees set by the court are as follows: the fee for active attorneys is $325.00; the fee of any attorney whose first admission to practice is within the preceding three years is $190.00; the fee for attorneys on inactive status is $130.00. All persons first becoming subject to this rule shall file a statement required by this rule at the time of admission, but no annual fee shall be payable until the first day of January following such admission. As necessary to defray the costs of regulating attorneys, judges and those engaged in unauthorized practice of law, the Supreme Court will authorize periodic increases to the annual fee for every Colorado attorney.

(b) Collection of Fee. The annual fee shall be collected by the Clerk of the Supreme Court of Colorado, who shall send and receive the notices and statements provided for hereafter.

(c) Application of Fees. The fee shall be divided. Twenty-five dollars shall be used to maintain an Attorneys' Fund for Client Protection. The remaining portion of the fee, and the entire fee of those on inactive status, shall be used only to defray the costs of the Office of Attorney Regulation Counsel (admissions, registration, mandatory continuing legal and judicial education, attorney diversion and discipline counsel to Commission on Judicial Discipline, unauthorized practice of law and inventory counsel functions), the Office of the Presiding Disciplinary Judge, the Commission on Judicial Discipline, the Colorado Lawyers Assistance Program, the Colorado Attorney Mentoring Program, the Advisory and other regulatory committees and any other practice of law function deemed appropriate by the Supreme Court.

(2) Statement.

(a) Contents. The annual registration statement shall be on a form prescribed by the Clerk, setting forth:

(1) date of admission to the Bar of the Colorado Supreme Court;

(2) registration number;

(3) current residence and office addresses and, if applicable, a preferred mailing address for the Colorado Courts, along with current telephone numbers and email addresses;

(4) certification as to (a) whether the attorney has been ordered to pay child support and, if so, whether the attorney is in compliance with any child support order, (b) whether the attorney or the attorney's law firm has established one or more interest-bearing accounts for client funds as provided in Colo. RPC 1.15B and if so, the name of the financial institution, account number and location of the financial institution, or, if not, the reason for the exemption, and (c) with respect to attorneys engaged in the private practice of law, whether the attorney is currently covered by professional liability insurance and, if so, whether the attorney intends to maintain insurance during the time the attorney is engaged in the private practice of law; and

(5) such other information as the Clerk may from time to time direct.

(b) Notification of Change. Every attorney shall file a supplemental statement of change in the information previously submitted, including home and business addresses, within 28 days of such change. Such change shall include, without limitation, the lapse or termination of professional liability insurance without continuous coverage.

(c) Availability of Information. The information provided by the lawyer regarding professional liability insurance shall be available to the public through the Supreme Court Office of Attorney Registration and on the Supreme Court Office of Attorney Registration website.

(3) Compliance.

(a) Late Fee. Any attorney who pays the annual fee or files the annual registration statement after February 28 but on or before March 31 shall pay a late fee of $50.00 in addition to the registration fee. Any attorney who pays the annual fee or files the annual registration statement after March 31 shall pay a late fee of $150.00 for each such year, in addition to the registration fee.

(b) Receipt - Demonstration of Compliance. Within 28 days of the receipt of each fee and of each statement filed by an attorney in accordance with the provisions of this rule, receipt thereof shall be acknowledged on a form prescribed by the Clerk in order to enable the attorney on request to demonstrate compliance with the requirement of registration pursuant to this rule.

(c) Initial Pleading Must Contain Registration Number. Whenever an initial pleading is signed by an attorney, it shall also include thereon the attorney's registration number. Whenever an initial appearance is made in court without a written pleading, the attorney shall advise the court of the registration number. The number need not be on any subsequent pleadings.

(4) Suspension.

(a) Failure to Pay Fee or File Statement - Notice of Delinquency. An attorney shall be summarily suspended if the attorney either fails to pay the fee or fails to file a complete statement or supplement thereto as required by this rule prior to May 1, provided a notice of delinquency has been issued by the Clerk and mailed to the attorney addressed to the attorney's last known mailing address at least 28 days prior to such suspension, unless an excuse has been granted on grounds of financial hardship.

(b) Failure of Judge to Pay Fee or File Statement. Any judge subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission on Judicial Discipline or the Denver County Court Judicial Discipline Commission who fails to timely pay the fee or file a complete statement or supplement thereto as required by this rule shall be reported to the appropriate commission, provided a notice of delinquency has been issued by the Clerk and mailed to the judge addressed to the judge's last known business address at least 28 days prior to such reporting, unless an excuse has been granted on grounds of financial hardship.

(5) Reinstatement.

(a) Application - Reinstatement Fee. Any attorney suspended under the provisions of section (4)(a) above shall not be reinstated until application for reinstatement is made in writing and the Clerk acts favorably on the application. Each application for reinstatement shall be accompanied by a reinstatement fee of $100.00 and payment of all arrearages and late fees to the date of the request for reinstatement.

(b) Report Judge's Payment. If any judge who is reported to a commission under the provisions of section (4)(b) above subsequently makes payment of all arrearages, such payment shall be reported to the commission by the Clerk.

(6) Inactive Status.

(a) Notice. An attorney who has retired or is not engaged in practice shall file a notice in writing with the Clerk that he or she desires to transfer to inactive status and discontinue the practice of law.

(b) Payment of Fee - Filing of Statement. Upon the filing of the notice to transfer to inactive status, the attorney shall no longer be eligible to practice law but shall continue to pay the fee required under section (1)(a) above and file the statements and supplements thereto required by this rule on an annual basis.

(c) Exemption - Age 65. Any registered inactive attorney over the age of 65 is exempt from payment of the annual fee.

(7) Transfer to Active Status.

Upon the filing of a notice to transfer to inactive status and payment of the fee required under section (1)(a) above and any arrearages, if owed, an attorney shall be removed from the roll of those classified as active until and unless a request for transfer to active status is made and granted. Transfer to active status shall be granted, unless the attorney is subject to an outstanding order of suspension or disbarment, upon the payment of any assessment in effect for the year the request is made and any accumulated arrearages for non-payment of inactive fees.

(8) Resignation.

An attorney may resign from the practice of law in Colorado upon order of the Supreme Court and thereby be excused from paying the annual registration fee provided that no disciplinary or disability matter or order is pending against the attorney. Any attorney who wishes to resign must petition the Supreme Court pursuant to this Rule and tender the attorney's certificate of admission with the petition. Any attorney who so resigns is not eligible for reinstatement or transfer to active or inactive status and may be admitted to the practice of law in Colorado only by complying with the rules governing admission to the practice of law. Any attorney who so resigns remains subject to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court as set forth in Rule 251.1(b) with respect to the attorney's practice of law in Colorado.

B. Registration Fee of Non-Attorney Judges

(1) Every non-attorney judge who is subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission on Judicial Discipline shall pay an annual fee of $10.00. The annual fee shall be collected by the Clerk of the Supreme Court of Colorado, who shall send and receive, or cause to be sent and received, the notices and fees provided for hereafter. The ten-dollar fee shall be used to pay the costs of establishing and administering the mandatory continuing legal education requirement. The clerk shall account for and forward these receipts to the Office of Continuing Legal and Judicial Education.

(2) Any non-attorney judge who fails to timely pay the fee required under subparagraph (1) above shall be reported to the Commission on Judicial Discipline, provided a notice of delinquency has been issued by the Clerk and mailed to the non-attorney judge by certified mail addressed to the county court in the respective county seat at least 28 days prior to such reporting, unless an excuse has been granted on grounds of financial hardship.

(3) If any non-attorney judge who is reported to the Commission on Judicial Discipline under the provisions of subparagraph (2) above subsequently makes payment of arrearages, such payment shall be reported to the Commission by the Clerk.

(4) On or before January 31 of each year, all non-attorney judges shall file any affidavit required by Rule 250.7 and shall pay the annual fee required by this rule.

(5) Within 21 days after the receipt of each fee in accordance with the provisions of subparagraph (4) above, receipt thereof shall be acknowledged on a form prescribed by the Clerk.

COMMENT

The Supreme Court sets the annual attorney registration fee. The annual attorney registration fee includes both attorneys on active status and attorneys on inactive status. Attorneys admitted under C.R.C.P. 204 annually pay the active attorney fee as required by C.R.C.P. 204.1 through 204.6. The Supreme Court apportions the active attorney fee to the various attorney regulation and registration offices; the continuing legal education office; the Attorneys' Fund for Client Protection; and the Colorado Attorney Assistance Program.

To cover the operating costs of the various programs the court increased the annual attorney registration fee every six to eight years. In 2006, the court increased the active attorney registration fee fifteen percent. In 1998, to fund major changes to the attorney regulation system the court increased the fee seventy percent. The infrequent increases resulted in a surplus in the attorney registration/regulation fund for a period of years. In an effort to reduce the impact of a substantial fee increase every six to eight years the court adopted a more modest and consistent way of determining attorney registration fees. The court will authorize smaller but more frequent fee increases as necessary to cover operating expenses related to the costs of the Attorneys' Fund for Client Protection, attorney regulation, unauthorized practice of law matters, and administration of this rule.

Constitutionality. The difference in treatment accorded lawyers who pay the fee under this rule and those who do not pay the fee does not constitute invidious discrimination against those who do not pay the fee as it is not in violation of due process or equal protection of the law. May v. Supreme Court of Colo., 508 F.2d 136 (10th Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 422 U.S. 1008, 95 S. Ct. 2631, 45 L. Ed. 2d 671 (1975).

Attorney currently under suspension for failure to comply with registration requirements is still subject to jurisdiction of the court for additional violations of Colorado rules of civil procedure and failure to comply with the code of professional responsibility. People v. Richards, 748 P.2d 341 (Colo. 1987).

Conduct violating this rule sufficient to justify public censure. People v. Smith, 757 P.2d 628 (Colo. 1988); People v. Newman, 925 P.2d 783 (Colo. 1996).

Disbarment is warranted for driving while impaired, marihuana possession, improperly executing agreement without permission, and failing to perform certain professional duties, despite the lack of a prior record. People v. Gerdes, 891 P.2d 995 (Colo. 1995).

Facts supported finding of direct contempt when defendant admittedly made offensive statement during the course of proceedings even though obscenity was directed toward counsel for the People and merely overheard by the court. There was no abuse of discretion by the trial court given the fact that the defendant admitted it was inappropriate and an affront to the dignity of the court and its proceedings, and given the fact that defendant was an attorney admitted to the Bar. People v. Holmes, 967 P.2d 192 (Colo. App. 1998).

CHAPTER 19

Unauthorized Practice of Law Rules

CHAPTER 19

UNAUTHORIZED PRACTICE OF LAW RULES

Rule 228. Jurisdiction

The Supreme Court of Colorado, in the exercise of its exclusive jurisdiction to define the practice of law and to prohibit the unauthorized practice of law within the State of Colorado, adopts the following rules, which shall govern proceedings concerning the unauthorized practice of law.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, ''Proposed Amendments to C.R.C.P. 228 and the Cross-Border Practice of Law'', see 31 Colo. 21 (January 2002).

Granting person permission to practice law is sole prerogative of supreme court of Colorado. People v. Belfor, 200 Colo. 44, 611 P.2d 979 (1980).

Purpose of the bar and the admission requirements is to protect the public from unqualified individuals who charge fees for providing incompetent legal advice. Unauthorized Practice of Law Comm. v. Grimes, 654 P.2d 822 (Colo. 1982); Unauthorized Practice of Law Comm. v. Prog, 761 P.2d 1111 (Colo. 1988).

The court cannot permit an unlicensed person to commit acts which it would condemn if done by a lawyer. Unauthorized Practice of Law Comm. v. Grimes, 654 P.2d 822 (Colo. 1982).

The counseling and sale of living trusts by nonlawyers constitutes the unauthorized practice of law. People v. Cassidy, 884 P.2d 309 (Colo. 1994).

Assignee's action in filing adversary proceedings contesting discharge of debts assigned to him by various subcontractors constitutes the unauthorized practice of law. As long as the subcontractors are not selling their claims for present consideration but instead are retaining an interest in the proceeds of the claims, assignee is acting partially on their behalf in a representative capacity. By pursuing litigation to recover on the claims, assignee is arguably taking actions amounting to the practice of law. In re Thomas, 387 B.R. 808 (D. Colo. 2008).

Suspended attorney must demonstrate rehabilitation for readmittance to bar. Actions of a suspended attorney who took part in a complex real estate transaction and engaged in the practice of law by representing, counseling, advising, and assisting a former client warranted suspension until he demonstrates by clear and convincing evidence that: (1) He has been rehabilitated; (2) he has complied with and will continue to comply with all applicable disciplinary orders and rules; and (3) he is competent and fit to practice law. People v. Belfor, 200 Colo. 44, 611 P.2d 979 (1980).

Rule 229. Appointment and Organization of Unauthorized Practice of Law Committee

(a) There is hereby established a committee to be known as the Unauthorized Practice of Law Committee of the Supreme Court of the State of Colorado (Committee) and which shall be an adjunct to the Supreme Court. The Committee shall be composed of nine members, six of whom shall be members of the Bar of Colorado. The members of the Committee shall be appointed by the Supreme Court for terms of three years, beginning on the 1st day of January, and the terms of three members shall commence each year; provided, that terms may be for shorter periods to accommodate changes in the size of the Committee by amendments to this rule. Membership on the Committee may be terminated by the Supreme Court at its pleasure, and members may resign at any time. Any vacancies shall be filled by appointment by the Supreme Court for the unexpired term. The Committee and members thereof shall be entitled to reimbursement for reasonable travel, lodging, and other expenses incurred in the performance of their official duties.

(b) The Supreme Court shall designate a member of the Committee as Chair.

(c) The Committee may adopt rules providing for the time and place of its meetings, the selection of a Vice-Chair and other officers, and such other rules not in conflict with the rules of the Supreme Court as may be deemed necessary or expedient for the conduct of the Committee's business. The Clerk of the Supreme Court shall have copies of the rules for interested persons.

(d) The Committee may enlist the assistance of other duly licensed members of the Bar of Colorado in the performance of the activities of the Committee.

Source: (d) amended and adopted December 14, 1995, effective January 1, 1996; (b) and (c) amended and adopted October 29, 1998, effective January 1, 1999.

Rule 230. Committee Jurisdiction

(a) The Committee shall have jurisdiction over and inquire into and consider complaints or reports made by any person, including Regulation Counsel, or other entities alleging the unauthorized practice of law. Moreover, the Committee, on its own motion, may inquire into any matter pertaining to the unauthorized practice of law.

(b) Nothing contained in these rules shall be construed as a limitation upon the authority or jurisdiction of any court or judge thereof to punish for contempt any person or legal entity not having a license from this court who practices law or attempts or purports to practice law in any matter which comes within the jurisdiction of that court nor shall these rules be construed as a limitation upon any civil remedy or criminal proceeding which may otherwise exist with respect to the unauthorized practice of law.

Source: (a) amended and adopted October 29, 1998, effective January 1, 1999.

ANNOTATION

Trial court has jurisdiction under subsection (b) of this rule to conduct punitive contempt proceedings in which the sole allegation is that an individual is engaged in the unauthorized practice of law in violation of rules adopted by the Colorado Supreme Court. Watt, Tieder, Killian & Hoffar v. U.S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 847 P.2d 170 (Colo. App. 1992).

Because a partnership is not a separate legal entity, but is only treated as such under partnership statutes for certain limited purposes, trial court should reconsider its finding of contempt based on theory that a Virginia partnership and individuals representing it in Colorado courts were engaged in the unauthorized practice of law. Watt, Tieder, Killian & Hoffar v. U.S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 847 P.2d 170 (Colo. App. 1992).

Rule 231. Regulation Counsel; Duties and Powers

Regulation Counsel, appointed by the Supreme Court pursuant to C.R.C.P. 251.3, shall have the following duties and powers, in addition to those set forth in C.R.C.P. 251.3:

Rule 232. Investigations; General, Subpoenas

Repealed, effective October 29, 2001.

Rule 232.5. Investigation; Procedure; Subpoenas

(a) All matters within the jurisdiction of the Committee shall be referred to the Regulation Counsel who shall either conduct an investigation or, if the Chair concurs, refer the matter to a member of the Committee pursuant to this rule or to an enlisted member of the Bar pursuant to C.R.C.P. 229(d) for investigation. Unless excused by the Regulation Counsel, the complainant shall be required to submit the complaint in writing and subscribe the same.

(b) (1) Promptly after receiving a written request for investigation or complaint, the Regulation Counsel shall determine whether to proceed with an investigation. In making such determination, the Regulation Counsel may make such inquiry regarding the underlying facts as the Regulation Counsel deems appropriate.

(2) If the Regulation Counsel determines to proceed with an investigation or refers the matter to a member of the Committee or an enlistee for investigation pursuant to C.R.C.P. 232.5(a), the respondent shall be: notified that the investigation is underway; provided with a copy of the complaint and of the rules governing the investigation; and asked to file with the Regulation Counsel or the person conducting the investigation a written answer to the complaint within 21 days after notice of the investigation is given.

(c) When the investigation is concluded, the Regulation Counsel shall either dismiss the allegations or report to the Committee for a determination as provided in paragraph (d) of this rule. If the Regulation Counsel dismisses the allegations, the person making the allegations may request review of the Regulation Counsel's decision by the Committee. If such review is requested, the Committee shall review the matter and make a determination as provided in paragraph (d). The Committee shall sustain the dismissal unless it finds that the Regulation Counsel's action constituted an abuse of discretion. If the Committee sustains a dismissal, it shall furnish the person making the allegations with a written explanation of its decision.

(d) If, after conducting an investigation, the Regulation Counsel believes that the Committee should authorize an informal disposition, civil-injunction proceedings, or contempt proceedings, the Regulation Counsel shall submit a report of the investigation and a recommendation to the Committee. The Committee shall then decide whether to:

(1) dismiss the matter; provided that the dismissal may be either with or without a finding of the unauthorized practice of law, and the letter of dismissal may contain cautionary language if appropriate; and provided that the person making the allegation shall be furnished a written explanation of the Committee's decision;

(2) conduct further investigation;

(3) enter into an informal disposition with the respondent consisting of a written agreement by the respondent to refrain from the conduct in question, to refund any fees collected, to make restitution and/or to pay a fine that may range from $100 to $250 per incident; such informal dispositions are to be encouraged;

(4) commence civil-injunction proceedings as provided in C.R.C.P. 234 to 237; or

(5) commence contempt proceedings as provided in C.R.C.P. 238 and 239.

(e) At least three Committee members must be present for the Committee to act upon said reports, findings, and recommendations.

(f) In connection with an investigation of the unauthorized practice of law, the Chair or the Regulation Counsel may issue subpoenas to compel the attendance of respondents and other witnesses or to compel the production of books, papers, documents, or other evidence. All such subpoenas are subject to the provisions of C.R.C.P. 45.

(g) Any person subpoenaed to appear and give testimony, or to produce books or records, who refuses to appear and give testimony, or to produce the books or records; and any person having been sworn to testify and who refuses to answer any proper questions, may be cited for contempt of the Supreme Court, as provided in C.R.C.P. 107.

(h) Any person investigating a matter pursuant to these rules shall have the power to administer oaths and affirmations, and to take and have transcribed the testimony and evidence of witnesses.

(i) Any person who knowingly obstructs the Regulation Counsel or the Committee, or any part thereof, in the performance of their duties may be cited for contempt of the Supreme Court, as provided in C.R.C.P. 107.

Rule 233. Investigation; Procedure

Repealed, effective October 29, 2001.

Rule 234. Civil Injunction Proceedings; General

(a) If the Committee determines that civil injunction proceedings shall be instituted against a respondent, such proceedings may be commenced in the name of the People of the State of Colorado by a petition filed in the Supreme Court by the Regulation Counsel or by a member of the Bar appointed by the Supreme Court for the purpose of conducting such proceedings.

(b) The petition shall be in writing and shall set forth the facts and charges in plain language and with sufficient particularity to inform the respondent of the acts complained of. The petition shall specify requested relief which may include, without limitation, injunction, refund, restitution, a fine, and assessment of costs of the proceeding.

(c) The Supreme Court, upon consideration of the petition so filed, may issue its order directed to the respondent commanding the respondent to show cause why the respondent should not be enjoined from the alleged unauthorized practice of law, and further requiring the respondent to file with the Supreme Court within 21 days after service of the petition and show cause order, a written answer admitting or denying the matter stated in the petition. The show cause order, together with a copy of the petition, shall be served upon the respondent. Service of process shall be sufficient when made either personally upon the respondent or by certified mail sent to the respondent's last known address.

(d) If no response or defense is filed within the time permitted, the Supreme Court, upon its motion or upon motion of any party, shall decide the case, granting such relief and issuing such other orders as may be appropriate.

(e) If a response or defense raises no genuine issue of material fact, any party by motion may request a judgment on the pleadings and the Supreme Court may decide the case as a matter of law, granting such relief and issuing such orders as may be appropriate.

(f) Upon the Supreme Court's motion or upon motion of any party, questions of fact raised in proceedings under this rule shall be referred to a hearing master for determination.

Rule 235. Civil Injunction Proceedings; Hearing Master, Powers, Procedure

(a) Civil injunction proceedings before a hearing master shall be held in any county designated by the hearing master that is convenient to the participants.

(b) The People of the State of Colorado may be represented in proceedings before the hearing master by the Regulation Counsel, or by a member of the Bar appointed pursuant to Rule 234. Upon receipt of the order of reference, the hearing master shall set a date, time, and place for a first meeting of the parties which shall be within 28 days after the date notice thereof is given and notify the parties accordingly. At such meeting, a date, time, and place for hearing shall be set, and any matters which may expedite the proceedings shall be considered. A complete record of this meeting shall be made unless jointly waived by the parties. After the first meeting, the hearing master shall issue a notice of hearing to the parties. The notice shall be in writing and shall designate the date, time, and place of the hearing. The notice shall also advise the respondent that the respondent is entitled to be represented by counsel at the hearing, to cross-examine witnesses, and to present evidence in the respondent's own behalf. The giving of notice shall be sufficient when made by certified mail sent to the respondent at the respondent's last known address.

(c) The parties may procure the attendance of witnesses before the hearing master by the issuance of subpoenas which shall run in the name of the Supreme Court and may be issued by the hearing master or Clerk of the Supreme Court upon the request of a party. All such subpoenas shall be subject to the provisions of C.R.C.P. 45. Failure or refusal, without adequate excuse, to comply with any such subpoena shall be a contempt of the Supreme Court and may be punished accordingly.

(d) The Colorado Rules of Civil Procedure shall be applicable when not inconsistent with these rules. Subject to any limitations in the order of reference, the hearing master shall have the powers generally reposed in a ''Court'' under the Colorado Rules of Civil Procedure. At all hearings before a hearing master witnesses shall be sworn and a complete record made of all proceedings had and testimony taken.

Rule 236. Civil Injunction Proceedings; Report of Hearing Master; Objections

(a) After the hearing, the hearing master shall report in writing to the Supreme Court in accordance with the order of reference, setting forth findings of fact, conclusions of law, and recommendations for final disposition of the case. If the hearing master makes a finding of unauthorized practice of law in the report, then the hearing master shall also recommend that a fine be imposed for each incident of unauthorized practice of law; the minimum fine for each incident shall be not less than $250 and not more than $1000. A report from the Presiding Disciplinary Judge approving the parties' stipulation to injunction, may be exempt from a fine. Promptly after the report is filed with the Supreme Court, the Clerk shall mail copies thereof to all parties.

(b) Objections to the report of the hearing master may be filed with the Supreme Court by any party, within 28 days after copies of the report have been mailed to the parties.

(c) If no objections are filed, the case shall stand submitted upon the hearing master's report.

(d) If objections are filed, the objecting party shall within 14 days thereafter request the reporter to prepare a transcript of the proceedings before the hearing master, or any portion of such transcript thereof as is deemed necessary for the consideration of the case. The objecting party shall file with the Supreme Court and serve on the opposing party a designation of those portions of the transcript and of the record before the hearing master which the party wishes added to the record before the Supreme Court.

The opposing party may within 14 days after service of the designation file and serve a cross-designation of any additional portions of the transcript and additional parts of the record before the hearing master as is deemed necessary for a proper consideration of the case. The objecting party is responsible for the expense of preparing the record, including the transcript or portions thereof.

The reporter shall prepare the transcript and file it, properly certified, with the Supreme Court within 63 days (9 weeks) after the filing of the objections.

(e) An objecting party shall have 28 days after the filing with the Supreme Court of the transcript and other additions to the record within which to file an opening brief. The opposing party shall have 28 days after the filing of the objecting party's opening brief within which to file an answer brief. The objecting party shall have 14 days after the filing of the answer brief within which to file a reply brief.

(f) A brief of an amicus curiae may be filed only by leave of the Supreme Court granted on motion or by the request of the Court. The brief may be conditionally filed with the motion for leave. A motion for leave shall identify the interest of the applicant and shall state the reasons why a brief of an amicus curiae is desirable. Any amicus curiae shall file its brief within the time allowed the party whose position the amicus brief will support unless the Court for cause shown shall grant leave for later filing, in which event it shall specify within what period an opposing party may answer.

Rule 237. Civil Injunction Proceedings; Determination by Court

(a) After review of the report of the hearing master, together with any objections and briefs, the Supreme Court may adopt the report or modify or reject it in whole or in part and shall determine as a matter of law whether the respondent has been engaged in the unauthorized practice of law. If the Supreme Court finds that the respondent was engaged in the unauthorized practice of law, the Supreme Court may enter an order enjoining the respondent from further conduct found to constitute the unauthorized practice of law, and make such further orders as it may deem appropriate, including restitution and the assessment of costs.

(b) Nothing in this rule shall be construed to limit the power of the Supreme Court, upon proper application, to issue an injunction at any stage of the proceeding in order to prevent public harm.

Rule 238. Contempt Proceedings; General

(a) If the Committee determines that contempt proceedings shall be instituted against a respondent, such proceedings shall be commenced in the name of the People of the State of Colorado by a petition filed in the Supreme Court by the Regulation Counsel or by a member of the Bar appointed by the Supreme Court for the purpose of conducting such proceedings.

(b) The petition shall allege facts indicating that the respondent is engaged in the unauthorized practice of law and shall contain a prayer for the issuance of a contempt citation.

(c) Upon the filing of a petition, the Supreme Court may issue a citation directing the respondent to show cause why he should not be held in contempt of the Supreme Court for the unauthorized practice of law, or the Supreme Court may, in the alternative, issue a show cause order in civil injunctive proceedings which shall be governed by Rules 234 to 237. If a citation is issued, the citation shall state that a fine of not less than $2000 per incident or imprisonment may be imposed to vindicate the dignity of the Supreme Court.

(d) If a contempt citation is issued, it shall be served upon the respondent, together with a copy of the petition, as provided in Rule 4, C.R.C.P., and the citation shall specify the time for response. If a response is filed, the Supreme Court shall appoint a hearing master who shall set a date, time, and place for the appearance of the respondent, and shall give notice thereof. The notice shall be in writing. The notice shall designate the date, time, and place of the appearance. The notice shall also advise the respondent that the respondent is entitled to be represented by counsel at the appearance, to cross-examine witnesses, and to present evidence in the respondent's own behalf. The giving of notice shall be sufficient when made by certified mail sent to the respondent at the respondent's last known address.

(e) Proceedings for the hearing of a contempt citation before a hearing master shall be held in any county designated by the hearing master that is convenient to the participants.

(f) If the respondent has been served with a citation and fails to respond to the citation or appear before the hearing master at the time and place designated in the notice issued by the hearing master, a warrant for the arrest of the respondent may be issued by the hearing master without prior approval of the Supreme Court. The warrant shall fix the time and place for the production of the respondent before the hearing master. The hearing master shall direct by endorsement on the warrant the amount of bail required, and the respondent shall be discharged upon the delivery to and approval by the sheriff or the Clerk of the Supreme Court of a written undertaking executed by a sufficient surety, to the effect that the respondent will appear at the time and place designated in the warrant and at any time thereafter to which the hearing on the citation may be continued, or pay the sum specified. Any funds surrendered as bail shall be deposited with the Clerk of the Supreme Court or with the Clerk of the District court in the county where the proceedings are to be held. If the respondent fails to appear at the time designated in the warrant, or at any time to which the hearing may be continued, the undertaking may be forfeited upon order of the hearing master. If the respondent fails to make bond, the sheriff shall keep the respondent in custody and produce the respondent before the hearing master at the time and place fixed by the warrant.

(g) At all hearings before the hearing master, witnesses shall be sworn and a complete record made of all proceedings had and testimony taken. The citation shall be prosecuted by the Regulation Counsel of the State of Colorado or by such duly licensed and registered members of the Bar as may be designated by this Court.

(h) The Colorado Rules of Civil Procedure shall be applicable when not inconsistent with these rules. Subject to any limitations in the order of reference, the hearing master shall have the powers generally reposed in a ''court'' under the Colorado Rules of Civil Procedure.

(i) The parties may procure the attendance of witnesses before the hearing master by the issuance of subpoenas in the name of the Supreme Court, which may be issued by the hearing master or Clerk of the Supreme Court upon the request of a party. All such subpoenas shall be subject to the provisions of C.R.C.P. 45. Failure or refusal, without adequate excuse, to comply with any such subpoena shall be a contempt of the Supreme Court and may be punished accordingly. The parties shall have the right to be present at all times during the hearings before the hearing master and to examine and cross-examine witnesses.

Rule 239. Contempt Determination by Court Proceedings; Report of Hearing Master; Objections

(a) After the conclusion of the hearing, the hearing master shall report in writing to the Supreme Court, setting forth the hearing master's findings of fact, conclusions of law, and, upon a finding of contempt, recommendations for punishment. If the matter proceeds to trial and the hearing master makes a finding of contempt but does not recommend imprisonment, then the hearing master shall recommend that a fine be imposed for each incident of contempt; the minimum fine for each incident shall be not less than $2000 and not more than $5000. Promptly after the report is filed with the Supreme Court, the Clerk of the Supreme Court shall mail copies thereof to the parties.

(b) Objections to the report of the hearing master may be filed with the Supreme Court by either party within 28 days after the filing of the report.

(c) If no objections are filed, the case shall stand submitted upon the hearing master's report.

(d) If objections are filed, the objecting party shall within 14 days thereafter request the reporter to prepare a transcript of the proceedings before the hearing master, or any portion of such transcript thereof as is deemed necessary for the consideration of the case. The objecting party shall file with the Supreme Court and serve on the opposing party a designation of those portions of the transcript and of the record before the hearing master which the party wishes added to the record before the Supreme Court.

The opposing party may within 14 days after service of the designation file and serve a cross-designation of any additional portions of the transcript and additional parts of the record before the hearing master as is deemed necessary for a proper consideration of the case. The objecting party is responsible for the expense of preparing the record, including the transcript or portions thereof.

The reporter shall prepare the transcript and file it, properly certified, with the Supreme Court within 63 days (9 weeks) after the filing of the objections.

(e) An objecting party shall have 28 days after the filing with the Supreme Court of the transcript and other additions to the record within which to file an opening brief. The opposing party shall have 28 days after the filing of the objecting party's opening brief within which to file an answer brief. The objecting party shall have 14 days after the filing of the answer brief within which to file a reply brief.

(f) A brief of an amicus curiae may be filed only by leave of the Supreme Court granted on motion or by the request of the Court. The brief may be conditionally filed with the motion for leave. A motion for leave shall identify the interest of the applicant and shall state the reasons why a brief of an amicus curiae is desirable. Any amicus curiae shall file its brief within the time allowed the party whose position the amicus brief will support unless the Court for cause shown shall grant leave for later filing, in which event it shall specify within what period an opposing party may answer.

(g) After review of the report of the hearing master any objections thereto and briefs, the Supreme Court may adopt the report or modify or reject it in whole or in part and shall determine whether the respondent is guilty of contempt of the Supreme Court and shall, by order, prescribe the punishment therefor, including the assessment of costs, expenses and reasonable attorney's fees.

(h) Nothing in this rule shall be construed to limit the power of the Supreme Court, upon proper application, to issue an injunction at any stage of contempt proceedings in order to prevent public harm, or to limit the power of the Supreme Court to issue an injunction in lieu of or in addition to the imposition of a fine or any other remedy under these rules.

Rule 240.2. Expunction of Records

(a) Expunction — Self-Executing. Except for records relating to proceedings that have 1) become public pursuant to C.R.C.P 234, et seq., 2) resulted in a finding of unauthorized practice of law, or 3) resulted in agreements, all records relating to proceedings that were dismissed without a finding of unauthorized practice of law shall be expunged from the files of the committee, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge, and Regulation Counsel three years after the end of the year in which the dismissal occurred.
(b) Definition. The terms ''expunge'' and ''expunction'' shall mean the destruction of all records or other evidence of any type, including but not limited to, the request for investigation, the response, the investigator's notes, and the report of investigation.
(c) Notice to Respondent. If proceedings conducted pursuant to these Rules (or their predecessor) were commenced, the attorney in question shall be given prompt notice of the expunction.
(d) Effect of Expunction. After expunction, the proceedings shall be deemed never to have occurred. Upon either general or specific inquiry concerning the existence of proceedings which have been expunged, the committee or the Regulation Counsel shall

The respondent in question may properly respond to any general inquiry about proceedings which have been expunged by stating that no record of the proceedings exists. The respondent in question may properly respond to any inquiry requiring reference to a specific proceeding which has been expunged by stating only that the proceeding was dismissed with no finding of unauthorized practice of law and that the record of the proceeding was expunged pursuant to this Rule. After a response is provided and is given to an inquirer, no further response to an inquiry into the nature or scope of the proceedings which have been expunged needs be made.

(e) Retention of Records. Upon written application to the committee, for good cause and with written notice to the respondent in question and opportunity to such respondent to be heard, the Regulation Counsel may request that records which would otherwise be expunged under this Rule be retained for such additional period of time, not to exceed three years, as the committee deems appropriate. The Regulation Counsel may seek further extensions of the period for which retention of the records is authorized whenever a previous application has been granted.

ORDER

The Supreme Court of the State of Colorado has adopted a series of changes to the attorney grievance system. Most of the reforms are incorporated into Rules that have been adopted effective January 1, 1999. However, a number of the reforms will come into effect over the course of the next six months. Hence, the Court enters this Order to permit immediate implementation of some programs and to insure an orderly transition to the new system.

IT IS ORDERED:

1. The following reorganization of the attorney regulation system has been adopted and will be implemented as set forth in this order;

a. We hereby adopt an alternatives to discipline program to permit the diversion of certain cases of minor misconduct to various agencies that will provide concrete assistance to attorneys and better protect the public. Therefore, C.R.C.P. 251.9, 251.10, 251.11, 251.12, and 251.13, shall become effective July 1, 1998, and shall be applicable to all cases pending in the Office of Disciplinary Counsel or before an Inquiry Panel, a Hearing Board, or a Hearing Panel of the Grievance Committee as of June 30, 1998, and to all cases initiated July 1, 1998 and thereafter;

b. Probation may be considered for all cases after a hearing pursuant to C.R.C.P. 251.7, which Rule shall become effective July 1, 1998, and which shall be applicable to all cases pending before the Hearing Board or Hearing Panel of the Grievance Committee on July 1, 1998, and to all cases considered after that date;

c. An attorneys' peer assistance program will be established and funded as part of the attorney regulation process pursuant to C.R.C.P. 227, which shall become effective June 30, 1998, and C.R.C.P. 251.34, which shall become effective July 1, 1998;

d. Immunity shall be granted to those individuals and entities providing assistance through the alternatives to discipline and peer assistance programs, as provided in C.R.C.P. 251.32, which shall become effective July 1, 1998;

e. The Office of the Presiding Disciplinary Judge is established by C.R.C.P. 251.16, which shall become effective January 1, 1999. The court will attempt to appoint the Presiding Disciplinary Judge on or before December 1, 1998, following an application and review process to be established by the court. After December 31, 1998, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge shall be substituted for the Presiding Officer of all Hearing Boards in which a hearing has not been held. The Presiding Officer so replaced shall then act as one of the other members of that Hearing Board in the event that case goes to trial. In those cases in which the Presiding Disciplinary Judge cannot sit, the Grievance Committee member who was appointed Presiding Officer will continue to act as Presiding Officer of the Hearing Board;

f. All conditional admissions of misconduct and deferral agreements entered into prior to January 1, 1999, shall be reviewed by the Inquiry Panel at a final meeting or meetings in 1999. Conditional admissions of misconduct and alternatives to discipline agreements entered into on or after January 1, 1999, shall be considered by the Presiding Disciplinary Judge or the Attorney Regulation Committee as provided by C.R.C.P. 251.1 et seq.

g. All attorney discipline cases in which trial has occurred prior to January 1, 1999 before a Hearing Board of the Grievance Committee prior to the appointment of the Presiding Disciplinary Judge, shall be reviewed by the applicable, existing Hearing Panel at a final meeting to be held in 1999;

h. All reinstatement and readmission cases in which hearing has been held by a Hearing Board of the Grievance Committee prior to the establishment of the officer of the Presiding Disciplinary Judge shall be reviewed by the applicable, existing Hearing Panel at a final meeting to be held in 1999.

i. An Advisory Committee shall be appointed to assist the court with administrative oversight of the attorney regulation system pursuant to C.R.C.P. 251.34, which shall become effective July 1, 1998. Therefore, the following individuals are hereby appointed to the Advisory Committee: John Lebsack, Bethiah Crane, Erika Schafer, David Stark, Justice Rebecca Love Kourlis, Justice Michael L. Bender and William C. McClearn, who shall serve as chair.

2. Rules implementing federal and state statutorily mandated procedures regarding licensing of attorneys who are in arrears in child support, C.R.C.P. 201.6, C.R.C.P. 201.9, C.R.C.P. 251.8, and C.R.C.P. 227 are hereby adopted and shall be effective July 1, 1998. Between July 1 and December 30, 1998, any hearings requested shall be held before a member of the Grievance Committee designated by the chairman.

3. C.R.C.P. 227 is hereby amended to raise late fees and reinstatement fees effective July 1, 1998.

4. The readmission process after disbarment shall be amended to provide for one hearing by amendment of C.R.C.P. 201.12 and 259.29, adopted and effective on July 1, 1998.

5. Any references in those rules adopted herein and made effective June 30, 1998, and July 1, 1998, to Regulation Counsel, the Attorney Regulation Committee, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge, the Appellate Discipline Commission, and Appellate Discipline Commission Counsel shall, in fact, refer to the Disciplinary Counsel, Committee Counsel, and the Grievance Committee between now and January 1, 1999.

6. C.R.C.P. 251.1 through 251.34 shall become effective January 1, 1999. In order to avoid confusion, Rules 241.1, et seq., have been repealed and re-enacted as C.R.C.P. 251.1, et seq., as set forth in this order.

7. Amendments to Colo. RPC 1.15 establishing an attorney trust account overdraft notification rule shall become effective July 1, 1999.

8. Rules establishing a Client Protection Fund, C.R.C.P. 252.1 through 252.16, shall become effective on January 1, 1999.

DONE at Denver, Colorado, this 30th day of June, 1998.

ANTHONY F. VOLLACK, Chief Justice

Rule 250. Mandatory Continuing Legal and Judicial Education

PREAMBLE: Statement of Purpose

As society becomes more complex, the delivery of legal services likewise becomes more complex. The public rightly expects that lawyers, in their practice of law, and judges, in the performance of their duties, will continue their professional development throughout their legal careers. The purpose of mandatory continuing legal and judicial education requirements is to promote and sustain competence and professionalism and to ensure that lawyers and judges remain current on the law, law practice management, and technology in our rapidly changing society.

Rule 250.1. Definitions

(1) An ''accredited'' CLE activity is an educational endeavor that meets the criteria in these Rules and the CLJE Committee's Regulations Governing Mandatory Continuing Legal and Judicial Education and satisfies the requirements of C.R.C.P. 250.6.

(2) ''CLE'' stands for ''Continuing Legal Education,'' which is any legal, judicial, or other educational activity that meets the criteria in these Rules and the Continuing Legal and Judicial Education (CLJE) Committee's Regulations Governing Mandatory Continuing Legal and Judicial Education and, therefore, satisfies the requirements of C.R.C.P. 250.2.

(3) A ''CLE credit'' or a ''CLE credit hour'' is a measurement unit combining time and quality assigned by the CLJE Office to all or part of a particular continuing legal educational activity. A CLE credit hour will be the equivalent of attending 50 minutes of an accredited program with accompanying textual material unless otherwise specified in these rules.

(4) ''CLE transcript'' means the official record maintained by the CLJE Office of a registered lawyer's or judge's CLE credit hours earned during a CLE compliance period and will be used to verify a registered lawyer's or judge's compliance with the CLE requirements.

(5) The ''CLJE Committee'' is the Colorado Supreme Court's Continuing Legal and Judicial Education Committee.

(6) ''Compliance period'' means the three years during which a registered lawyer or judge is required to earn the minimum number of CLE credits.

ANNOTATION

Constitutionality. A state supreme court may constitutionally require attorneys to meet continuing legal education requirements, so long as such requirements have a rational connection with the attorney's fitness or capacity to practice law, which the requirements in Colorado have. Verner v. Colo., 716 F.2d 1352 (10th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 466 U.S. 960, 104 S. Ct. 2175, 80 L. Ed. 2d 558 (1984) (decided under former rule 260.1).

Rule 250.2. CLE Requirements

(1) CLE Credit Requirement. Every registered lawyer and every judge must complete 45 credit hours of continuing legal education during each applicable CLE compliance period as provided in these rules. The 45 credit hours must include at least seven credit hours devoted to ethics. Failure to comply with these requirements in a timely manner as set forth in these rules may subject the registered lawyer or judge to a fee, a penalty, and/or administrative suspension.

(2) Compliance Period. All registered lawyers and judges become subject to these rules on the date of their admission or certification to the bar of the State of Colorado. The first compliance period begins on the date of admission or certification and ends on the 31st of December of the third full calendar year following the year of admission or certification to practice law in Colorado. For non-lawyer judges, the first CLE compliance period begins on the date of appointment as a judge and ends on the 31st of December of the third full calendar year following the year of appointment as a judge. Subsequent CLE compliance periods begin on the 1st of January immediately following a previous compliance period and end on the 31st of December of the third full calendar year thereafter. Compliance periods that commenced under the previous C.R.C.P. 260 will continue without interruption under these rules.

(3) Reporting. All registered lawyers and judges must report compliance as set forth in C.R.C.P. 250.7.

(4) Lawyer Status and Compliance. Any registered lawyer who has been suspended under C.R.C.P. 227A(4), or who has elected to transfer to inactive status under C.R.C.P. 227A(6)(a), will, upon being reinstated pursuant to C.R.C.P. 227A(5) or (7), become subject to the minimum continuing legal educational requirements set forth in these rules on the date of reinstatement, pursuant to C.R.C.P. 250.2 and as set forth in paragraph (5) of this rule.

(5) Modification of Compliance Period. A registered lawyer's obligation to comply with these rules during a compliance period will be deferred if the lawyer has been suspended for any reason other than noncompliance with these rules, has elected to transfer to inactive status, or has been placed on disability inactive status by Court order. However, upon reinstatement or return to active status, the compliance period will be calculated as follows:

(a) If the registered lawyer remains on suspension, inactive status, or disability inactive status for one year or longer, the start of the compliance period will begin on the date of reinstatement from suspension or disability inactive status, or date of transfer to active status, and will end on the 31st of December of the third full calendar year following the start of the compliance period.

(b) If the registered lawyer is suspended, on inactive status, or on disability inactive status for less than one year, the compliance period will not be recalculated. However, upon reinstatement or return to active status, the lawyer will have 91 days from the date of reinstatement or return to active status, or the remainder of the original compliance period, whichever is longer, to complete and report all deferred CLE requirements as otherwise set forth under C.R.C.P. 250.7, and to pay any penalties or fees that accrued before the suspension or transfer to inactive status. Failure to complete deferred CLE requirements or to pay related penalties or fees during this 91 day period will subject the lawyer to suspension pursuant to C.R.C.P. 250.7(8).

(c) No registered lawyer will be permitted to change status to circumvent these rules.

(6) No Roll-Over Credits. CLE credit hours completed in excess of the required 45 credit hours in any applicable compliance period may not be used to meet the minimum educational requirements in any subsequent compliance period.

(7) Exemptions.

(a) Inactive or Suspended Status. A lawyer who is on inactive status, disability inactive status, or under suspension during his or her entire CLE compliance period is excused from the CLE requirements for that compliance period.

(b) Age. A registered lawyer or judge will be exempt from the CLE requirements of these rules starting on the registered lawyer's or judge's 72nd birthday. On the effective date of these rules, all registered lawyers and judges who were exempt from the educational requirements under the previous C.R.C.P. 260.5 (Exemptions), will again become subject to the requirements in these rules. For all previously exempt registered lawyers and judges, the compliance period will begin on the effective date of these rules and end on December 31, 2021 (the end of the third full calendar year following the start of the compliance period). For all registered lawyers and judges who reach their 65th birthday in 2018, the compliance period will be extended through December 31, 2021. For all registered lawyers and judges who reach their 65th birthday in 2019, and whose compliance period otherwise would have ended in 2019 or 2020, the compliance period will be extended through December 31, 2021. Subsequent compliance periods will begin on the 1st of January of the year immediately following the end of the previous compliance period.

(8) Deferral.

(a) Inability to Comply. In cases of inability to comply with these rules for good cause shown, the CLJE Office may, in its discretion, defer individual compliance with the CLE requirements set forth in these rules. Good cause may include, for example, a registered lawyer or judge serving on full-time active duty in the armed forces of the United States who is deployed to a location outside the United States, and who provides to the CLJE Office a copy of military orders or other official paperwork listing the date, location, and duration of the deployment.

(b) No Waiver. Deferral does not constitute a waiver of the CLE requirements.

ANNOTATION

Annotator's note. The following annotations include a case decided under former rule 260.2, which was similar to this rule.

Deprivation of due process claim requires only minimal scrutiny. A person's ''right'' or ''privilege'' in the practice of law, has never been among those held to be ''fundamental'', so only minimal scrutiny under the rational basis test is required to evaluate claims of deprivation of such a ''right'' without due process. Verner v. Colo., 533 F. Supp. 1109 (D. Colo. 1982), aff'd, 716 F.2d 1352 (10th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 466 U.S. 960, 104 S. Ct. 2175, 80 L. Ed. 2d 558 (1984).

Rule does not violate prohibition against involuntary servitude. The requirement that attorneys attend education classes does not violate the thirteenth amendment prohibition against involuntary servitude. Verner v. Colo., 533 F. Supp. 1109 (D. Colo. 1982), aff'd, 716 F.2d 1352 (10th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 466 U.S. 960, 104 S. Ct. 2175, 80 L. Ed. 2d 558 (1984).

Rule does not violate first amendment. This rule does not violate any alleged first amendment right ''not to be forced to hear speeches or assemblies''. Verner v. Colo., 533 F.

Supp. 1109 (D. Colo. 1982), aff'd, 716 F.2d 1352 (10th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 466 U.S. 960, 104 S. Ct. 2175, 80 L. Ed. 2d 558 (1984).

Strict requirements may be set. If states can set strict legal proficiency related requirements for admission to the bar, it follows that they may also set strict proficiency related requirements for continuing legal practice. Verner v. Colo., 533 F. Supp. 1109 (D. Colo. 1982), aff'd, 716 F.2d 1352 (10th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 466 U.S. 960, 104 S. Ct. 2175, 80 L. Ed. 2d 558 (1984).

A state may constitutionally exempt senior citizen attorneys from this rule's requirements upon a showing of hardship. Verner v. Colo., 533 F. Supp. 1109 (D. Colo. 1982), aff'd, 716 F.2d 1352 (10th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 466 U.S. 960, 104 S. Ct. 2175, 80 L. Ed. 2d 558 (1984) (decided under former rule 260.5).

Rule 250.3. The Supreme Court Advisory Committee and the Continuing Legal and Judicial Education Committee

(1) Advisory Committee. The Supreme Court Advisory Committee (Advisory Committee) is a permanent committee of the Court. See C.R.C.P. 251.34. The Advisory Committee oversees the coordination of administrative matters for all programs of the lawyer regulation process, including the continuing legal and judicial education program set forth in these rules. The Advisory Committee reviews the productivity, effectiveness, and efficiency of the continuing legal and judicial education program, and recommends to the Court proposed changes or additions to these rules and the CLJE Committee's Regulations Governing Mandatory Continuing Legal and Judicial Education.

(2) The Continuing Legal and Judicial Education Committee. The Continuing Legal and Judicial Education Committee (CLJE Committee) serves as a permanent committee of the Supreme Court.

(a) Members. The CLJE Committee consists of nine members appointed by the Court, and is subject to oversight by the Advisory Committee. With the exceptions of the chair and the vice chair, members will be appointed for one term of seven years. Diversity will be a consideration in making the appointments. The terms of the members will be staggered to provide, so far as possible, for the expiration each year of the term of one member. Six of the members must be volunteer lawyers, at least one of whom must also be a judge, and three of the members must be volunteer non-lawyers (citizen members). All members serve at the pleasure of and may be dismissed at any time by the Court. A member of the CLJE Committee may resign at any time. In the event of a vacancy, a successor will be appointed by the Court for the remainder of the unexpired term of the member whose office is vacated.

(b) Chair and Vice Chair. The Court will designate two members of the CLJE Committee to serve as its chair and vice-chair for unspecified terms. The chair will also be a member of the Advisory Committee. The chair and vice-chair serve at the pleasure of and may be dismissed at any time by the Court.

(c) Powers and Duties. The CLJE Committee will formulate regulations consistent with these rules, modify or amend the same from time to time, and perform CLJE Committee duties established by these rules. The CLJE Committee's Regulations Governing Mandatory Continuing Legal and Judicial Education will be submitted to the Advisory Committee for review and approval by the Court and will be published on the website of the Office of Attorney Regulation Counsel.

(3) Reimbursement.The CLJE Committee members are entitled to reimbursement for reasonable travel, lodging and other expenses incurred in the performance of official duties.

(10th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 466 U.S. 960, 104 S. Ct. 2175, 80 L. Ed. 2d 558 (1984) (decided under former rule 260.3).

Rule 250.4. Attorney Regulation Counsel

The Attorney Regulation Counsel will maintain and supervise a permanent office, the CLJE Office, and will administer all mandatory CLE functions as part of a budget approved by the Court.

Rule 250.5. Immunity

All persons performing official duties under the provisions of these rules, including but not limited to the Advisory Committee and its members, the CLJE Committee and its members, the Attorney Regulation Counsel and staff, and other enlisted volunteers are immune from suit for all conduct performed in the course of their official duties.

Source: Amended and Adopted by the Court, En Banc, March 15, 2018, effective July 1, 2018.

Rule 250.6. Accreditation

(1) Objective. CLE must be an educational activity which has as its primary objective the promotion of professional competence of registered lawyers and judges, and must deal with subject matter directly related to the practice of law or the performance of judicial duties. The CLJE Committee will develop criteria for the accreditation of CLE activities as set forth in the Regulations Governing Mandatory Continuing Legal and Judicial Education, and the CLJE Office will accredit a broad variety of educational activities that meet these requirements.

(2) Criteria. For an activity to be accredited, the following criteria must be met: (1) the subject matter must directly relate to legal subjects and the performance of judicial duties or the practice of law, including professionalism, leadership, diversity, wellness, ethics, and law practice management, and (2) the activity must be directed to lawyers and judges. The CLJE Office will consider, in accrediting educational activities, the contribution the activity will make to the competent and professional practice of law or administration of justice.

(3) Ethics. For an activity or portion within an activity to be accredited as ''ethics'' it must deal with the Colorado Rules of Professional Conduct, the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct, similar rules of other jurisdictions, the ABA Model Rules of Professional Conduct, the ABA Model Rules of Judicial Conduct, or legal authority related to any of the above-specified rules.

(4) Non-accredited Activities. The CLJE Office will not accredit activities completed in the ordinary course of the practice of law, in the performance of regular employment, or in a lawyer's or judge's service on a committee, section, or division of any bar-related organization except as provided in these rules.

(5) Assignment of Credit. The CLJE Office will assign an appropriate number of CLE credit hours to each educational activity it accredits.

(6) Provider Eligibility. The CLJE Committee may establish provider eligibility requirements consistent with these rules, as set forth in the Regulations Governing Mandatory Continuing Legal and Judicial Education.

(7) Published List. The CLJE Office will publish a list of all accredited programs, together with the approved CLE credit hours for each program on the website of the Office of the Attorney Regulation Counsel.

ANNOTATION

Constitutionality. Under any of the descriptions of ''rationality'' used by the United States supreme court, the requirements of this rule are rational and do not violate substantive due process guarantees. Verner v. Colo., 533 F. Supp. 1109 (D. Colo. 1982), aff'd, 716 F.2d 1352 (10th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 466 U.S. 960, 104 S. Ct. 2175, 80 L. Ed. 2d 558 (1984) (decided under former rule 260.4).

Rule 250.7. Compliance

(1) Reporting Requirement. Each registered lawyer and judge must report compliance with these rules. CLE credit hours must be reported by the online affidavit on the CLJE Office's website or other form approved by the CLJE Committee within a reasonable amount of time after the credit hours are earned. A registered lawyer or judge who is exempt from compliance under C.R.C.P. 250.2(7)(b) may nevertheless report CLE credit hours on a voluntary basis.

(2) Verification Requirement. It is the responsibility of each registered lawyer and judge to verify CLE credit hours completed during a compliance period, and to confirm that his or her CLE transcript is accurate and complete by no later than the 31st of January following that compliance period. Failure to comply with these requirements in a timely manner as set forth in these rules may subject the registered lawyer or judge to a fee, a penalty, and/or administrative suspension.

(3) Make-up Plan. If a registered lawyer or judge fails to complete the required CLE credit hours by the end of the CLE compliance period, the registered lawyer or judge must do the following: (1) by the 31st of January following the end of the CLE compliance period, file a specific plan to make up the deficiency; and (2) complete the planned CLE credit hours no later than the 31st of May following the end of the CLE compliance period. The plan must be accompanied by a filing fee determined by the CLJE Committee. Such plan will be deemed accepted by the CLJE Office unless within 28 days after the receipt of the make-up plan the CLJE Office notifies the registered lawyer or judge to the contrary. Completion of the make-up plan must be reported by affidavit to the CLJE Office no later than the 14th of June following the end of the CLE compliance period. Failure of the registered lawyer or judge to complete the plan by the 31st of May or to file an affidavit demonstrating compliance constitutes grounds for imposing administrative remedies set forth in paragraph (8) of this rule.

(4) Statement of Noncompliance. If any registered lawyer or judge fails to comply with these rules, or C.R.C.P. 203.1(8), the CLJE Office will promptly provide a statement of noncompliance to the registered lawyer or judge. The statement will advise the registered lawyer or judge that within 14 days of the date of the statement, either the noncompliance must be corrected, or the registered lawyer or judge must request a hearing before the CLJE Committee. Upon failure to do either, the CLJE Office will file the statement of noncompliance with the Court, which may impose the administrative remedies set forth in paragraph (8) of this rule.

(5) Failure to Correct Noncompliance. If the noncompliance is not corrected within 14 days, or if a hearing is not requested within 14 days, the CLJE Office will promptly forward the statement of noncompliance to the Court, which may impose the sanctions set forth in paragraph (8) of this rule.

(6) Hearing Before the CLJE Committee. If a hearing before the CLJE Committee is requested, the following apply:

(a) Notice of the time and place of the hearing will be given to the registered lawyer or judge by the CLJE Office at least 14 days prior thereto;

(b) The registered lawyer or judge may be represented by counsel;

(c) The hearing will be conducted in conformity with the Colorado Rules of Civil Procedure and the Colorado Rules of Evidence;

(d) The Office of Attorney Regulation Counsel will prosecute the matter and bear the burden of proof by a preponderance of the evidence;

(e) The chair will preside at the hearing, or will appoint another lawyer member of the CLJE Committee to act as presiding officer, and will appoint at least two other CLJE Committee members to the hearing panel;

(f) Upon the request of any party to the hearing, the chair or vice chair may issue subpoenas for the use of a party to compel attendance of witnesses and production of pertinent books, papers, documents, or other evidence, and any such subpoenas will be subject to the provisions of C.R.C.P. 45;

(g) The presiding officer will rule on all motions, objections, and other matters presented in connection with the hearing; and,

(h) The hearing will be recorded and a transcript may be provided to the registered lawyer or judge upon request and payment of the cost of the transcript.

(7) Determination by the CLJE Committee. Within 28 days after the conclusion of the hearing, the Panel will issue a written decision on behalf of the CLJE Committee setting forth findings of fact and the determination as to whether the registered lawyer or judge has complied with the requirements of these rules. A copy of such findings and determination will be sent to the registered lawyer or judge involved.

(a) If the Panel determines that the registered lawyer or judge complied, the registered lawyer's or judge's record will reflect compliance and any previously assessed fees may be rescinded.

(b) If the Panel determines the registered lawyer or judge was not in compliance, the written decision issued by the Panel will be promptly filed with the Court.

(8) Supreme Court Review. When the Court receives either a statement of noncompliance or the written decision of a CLJE Committee hearing, the Court will enter such order as it deems appropriate, which may include an order of administrative suspension from the practice of law in the case of registered lawyers or referral of the matter to the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline or the Denver County Court Judicial Discipline Commission in the case of judges.

(9) Notice. All notices given pursuant to these rules may be sent to any address provided by the registered lawyer or judge pursuant to C.R.C.P. 227.

(10) Reinstatement. Any lawyer who has been suspended for noncompliance pursuant to C.R.C.P. 250.7(8) may be reinstated by order of the Court upon a showing that the lawyer's CLE deficiency has been corrected. The lawyer must file with the CLJE Office a petition seeking reinstatement by the Court. The petition must state with particularity the CLE activities that the lawyer has completed, including dates of completion, which correct the deficiency that caused the lawyer's suspension. The petition must be accompanied by a reinstatement filing fee as determined by the CLJE Committee. The CLJE Office will file a properly completed petition with its recommendation with the Clerk of the Court within 14 days after receipt.

(11) Jurisdiction. All suspended and inactive lawyers remain subject to the jurisdiction of the Court as set forth in C.R.C.P. 251.1(b).

ANNOTATION

Annotator's note. The following annotations include a case decided under former rule 260.6, which was similar to this rule.

Constitutionality. A state supreme court may constitutionally require attorneys to meet continuing legal education requirements, so long as such requirements have a rational connection with the attorney's fitness or capacity to practice law, which the requirements in Colorado have. Verner v. Colo., 716 F.2d 1352 (10th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 466 U.S. 960, 104 S. Ct. 2175, 80 L. Ed. 2d 558 (1984).

This rule does not violate procedural due process. Verner v. Colo., 533 F. Supp. 1109 (D. Colo. 1982), aff'd, 716 F.2d 1352 (10th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 466 U.S. 960, 104 S. Ct. 2175, 80 L. Ed. 2d 558 (1984).

This rule does not violate federal separation of powers doctrine. The claim that this rule violates the separation of powers principle embodied in the United States constitution fails, since the principle of separation of powers is not enforceable against the states as a matter of federal constitutional law. Verner v. Colo., 533

F. Supp. 1109 (D. Colo. 1982), aff'd, 716 F.2d 1352 (10th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 466 U.S. 960, 104 S. Ct. 2175, 80 L. Ed. 2d 558 (1984).

The rule does not violate sixth amendment. This rule does not violate sixth amendment rights by not providing for a jury trial and not permitting consideration of ''mitigating factors''. Verner v. Colo., 533 F. Supp. 1109 (D. Colo. 1982), aff'd, 716 F.2d 1352 (10th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 466 U.S. 960, 104 S. Ct. 2175, 80 L. Ed. 2d 558 (1984).

Suspension not "cruel and unusual punishment". The claim that suspension from practice for violation of this rule constitutes ''cruel and unusual punishment'' is without merit, since the eighth amendment does not apply where loss of a license is the full extent of possible punishment. Verner v. Colo., 533 F. Supp. 1109 (D. Colo. 1982), aff'd 716 F.2d 1352 (10th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 466 U.S. 960, 104 S. Ct. 2175, 80 L. Ed. 2d 558 (1984).

Jurisdiction of federal courts limited. Federal district courts only have jurisdiction to consider challenges to the constitutionality of a state disciplinary rule. All claims that are addressed to particular conduct during the disciplinary proceedings are dismissed for want of jurisdiction. Verner v. Colo., 533 F. Supp. 1109 (D. Colo. 1982),aff'd, 716 F.2d 1352 (10th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 466 U.S. 960, 104 S. Ct. 2175, 80 L. Ed. 2d 558 (1984).

Rule 250.8. Access to Information

(1) Compliance Information.

(a) CLE Transcript Maintenance. For each registered lawyer or judge, the CLJE Office will maintain CLE transcripts for the current and immediately preceding compliance periods as reported pursuant to C.R.C.P. 250.7(1).

(b) Compliance Records - Confidential. Records maintained by the CLJE Office pertaining to a registered lawyer's or judge's compliance are confidential and will not be disclosed except upon written request or consent of the registered lawyer or judge affected or as directed by the Court.

(2) Accreditation Information - Public. All records submitted by a Provider to obtain accreditation pursuant to C.R.C.P. 250.6 will be available to the public.

(3) Expunction of Records.

(a) Expunction - Self-Executing. All records maintained by the CLJE Office pursuant to these rules, in paper or electronic form, will be expunged from the files of the CLJE Office as follows:

(i) All records pertaining to accreditation of CLE activities by approved Providers pursuant to C.R.C.P. 250.6 will be expunged one year after the end of the year in which the activity request was processed by the CLJE office;

(ii) All records pertaining to requests for accreditation of activities submitted by a registered lawyer or judge will be expunged three months following the date the submission was processed by the CLJE Office, including but not limited to activities under C.R.C.P. 250.9 and 250.10, self-study, graduate study, and teaching or writing accreditation requests;

(iii) Affidavits submitted in paper form to the CLJE Office by registered lawyers or judges relating to completion of an approved CLE activity will be expunged seven days after the claimed credits have been entered on the CLE Transcript by the CLJE Office;

(iv) All records pertaining to proceedings under C.R.C.P. 250.7(3) - (10) will be expunged three years after the expiration of the registered attorney's or judge's current compliance period or after reinstatement, whichever time period is longer; and,

(v) All records pertaining to requests for deferrals pursuant to C.R.C.P. 250.2(8) will be expunged three years after the expiration of the registered attorney's or judge's current compliance period.

ANNOTATION

Disciplinary rules are not designed to be a basis for civil liability, and they do not create a private cause of action. Weiszmann v. Kirkland and Ellis, 732 F. Supp. 1540 (D. Colo. 1990) (decided under former rule 260.7).

Rule 250.9. Representation in Pro Bono Legal Matters

(1) Maximum Credits. A registered lawyer may earn a maximum of nine CLE credit hours during each three-year compliance period for providing uncompensated pro bono legal representation to indigent or near-indigent persons, or supervising a law student providing such representation. Ethics credit may not be earned under this rule.

(2) Eligibility. To be eligible for CLE credit hours, the pro bono legal matter in which a registered lawyer provides representation must have been assigned to the registered lawyer by: a court; a bar association or Access to Justice Committee-sponsored program; a law school; or an organized, non-profit entity, such as Legal Services Corporation, Metro Volunteer Lawyers, or Colorado Lawyers Committee, whose purpose is or includes the provision of pro bono representation to indigent or near-indigent persons. Prior to assigning the matter, the assigning court, program, law school, or entity will determine that the client is financially eligible for pro bono legal representation because (a) the client qualifies for participation in programs funded by the Legal Services Corporation, or (b) the client's income and financial resources are slightly above the guidelines utilized by such programs, but the client nevertheless cannot afford counsel.

(3) Computation of Credits. Subject to the reporting and review requirements specified herein, (a) a registered lawyer providing uncompensated, pro bono legal representation may receive one unit of credit for every five billable-equivalent hours of representation provided to the indigent client; and (b) a registered lawyer who acts as a supervisor to a law student may be awarded three CLE credit hours per completed matter.

(4) Claiming Credits. A registered lawyer wishing to receive CLE credit hours under this rule must submit to the assigning court, program, law school, or entity a completed form as designated by the CLJE Committee. As to supervising a law student, the registered lawyer will submit the form when the matter is fully completed. As to pro bono representation, if the representation will be concluded during a single three-year compliance period, then the registered lawyer will complete and submit the form when the representation is fully completed. If the representation will continue into another three-year compliance period, then the applying registered lawyer may submit an interim form seeking such credit as the lawyer may be eligible to receive during the three-year compliance period that is coming to an end. Upon receipt of an interim or final form, the assigning court, program, law school, or entity must in turn report to the CLJE Office the number of CLE credit hours that it recommends be awarded to the reporting registered lawyer under the provisions of this rule. The CLJE Committee has final authority to issue or decline to issue CLE credit hours to the registered lawyer providing representation or mentoring, subject to the other provisions of these rules.

(5) Law Student Supervision. A registered lawyer who acts as a supervisor to a law student who is eligible to practice law under C.R.C.P. 205.7(2) may claim CLE credits consistent with (1) and (3) above. The matter must be assigned to the law student by a court, program, law school, or entity as described in C.R.C.P. 250.9(2), or an organized student law office program administered by his or her law school, after such court, program, entity, or student law office determines that the client is eligible for pro bono representation in accordance with C.R.C.P. 250.9(2). The registered lawyer must be available to the law student for information and advice on all aspects of the matter and must directly and actively supervise the law student while allowing the law student to provide representation to the client. The registered lawyer must file or enter an appearance along with the law student in any legal matter pursued or defended for the client in any court. Lawyers may be acting as full-time or adjunct professors at the law student's law school at the same time they serve as supervising lawyers so long as it is not a primary, paid responsibility of that professor to administer the student law office and supervise its law-student participants.

Rule 250.10. Participation in the Colorado Attorney Mentoring Program (CAMP)

(1) One-Year CAMP Program. A registered lawyer or judge may earn a maximum of nine CLE credit hours, two hours of which will count toward the ethics requirement of C.R.C.P. 250.2(1), for successful completion of the one-year CAMP program curriculum (pursuant to C.R.C.P. 255) as either a mentor or as a mentee.

(2) Six-Month CAMP Program. A registered lawyer or judge may earn a maximum of four CLE credit hours, one hour of which will count toward the ethics requirement of C.R.C.P. 250.2(1), for successful completion of the six-month CAMP program curriculum (pursuant to C.R.C.P. 255) as either a mentor or a mentee.

(3) CLE Credit Participation Criteria. To receive CLE credit hours as a mentor or mentee:

(a) The mentor must be a Colorado lawyer or judge in good standing with an active license or a Colorado lawyer or judge who retired from the practice of law in good standing. The mentor must be licensed for five years and must not be currently subject to lawyer discipline or the subject of a pending disciplinary matter in any jurisdiction, and must be current with all CLE requirements. The mentor must be approved by the CAMP Director.

(b) The mentee must be a licensed, active Colorado lawyer, who is either practicing or is intending to practice law in Colorado. The CAMP Director may accept and approve petitions to participate from new lawyers not otherwise eligible to participate in CAMP programs. The mentee must be registered in a CAMP program.

(c) Mentors may participate in a CAMP program, one mentor relationship at a time, as often as they wish, but may receive a maximum of nine total CLE credit hours, including a maximum of two ethics credit hours, per compliance period.

(d) Mentees may receive CLE credits as a mentee only once in a CAMP program.

(e) The award of CLE credits will apply to the compliance period in which the CAMP program is completed.

(f) Any mentee or mentor who fails to complete the CAMP program will not receive CLE credit, partial or otherwise.

(g) Mentors and mentees who participate together in pro bono representation during or as a part of this program may not also receive CLE credit under C.R.C.P. 250.9 for the same representation.

(4) Verification by Director. All certificates and affidavits of completion of a CAMP program must be submitted to the CAMP Director for verification pursuant to C.R.C.P. 255. Following verification of substantial completion, the CAMP Director will recommend to the CLJE Office that the CLE hours be recorded as earned.

Rule 251.1. Discipline and Disability; Policy — Jurisdiction

(a) Statement of Policy. All members of the Bar of Colorado, having taken an oath to support the Constitution and laws of this state and of the United States, are charged with obedience to those laws at all times. As officers of the Supreme Court of Colorado, attorneys must observe the highest standards of professional conduct. A license to practice law is a proclamation by this Court that its holder is a person to whom members of the public may entrust their legal affairs with confidence; that the attorney will be true to that trust; that the attorney will hold inviolate the confidences of clients; and that the attorney will competently fulfill the responsibilities owed to clients and to the courts.

In order to maintain the highest standards of professional conduct, attorneys who have demonstrated that they are unable, or are likely to be unable, to discharge their professional responsibilities shall be subject to appropriate disciplinary or disability proceedings.

(b) Jurisdiction. Every attorney licensed to practice law in the State of Colorado is subject to the disciplinary and disability jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in all matters relating to the practice of law. Every attorney practicing law in this state pursuant to C.R.C.P. 204 or 205 is subject to the disciplinary and disability jurisdiction of the Supreme Court when practicing law pursuant to such rules. Every attorney serving as a magistrate pursuant to Colorado Rules for Magistrates, Chapter 35, vol. 12, C.R.S., is subject to the disciplinary and disability jurisdiction of the Supreme Court for conduct performed as a magistrate as provided by C.R.M. 5(h).

(c) Standards of Conduct. Any reference contained in these Rules to the Code of Professional Responsibility pertains to conduct occurring prior to January 1, 1993. On January 1, 1993, and thereafter, the conduct of attorneys licensed to practice law in the State of Colorado shall be governed by the Colorado Rules of Professional Conduct and the other Rules or Standards of Professional Conduct adopted from time to time by this Court.

(d) Plenary Power of the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court reserves the authority to review any determination made in the course of a disciplinary proceeding and to enter any order with respect thereto, including an order directing that further proceedings be conducted as provided by these Rules.

Annotator's note. The following annotations include cases decided under former provisions similar to this rule.

Rule held constitutional. Rule provides sufficient guidelines to impose attorney discipline and is not, therefore, unconstitutionally vague in violation of due process of law. People v. Morley, 725 P.2d 510 (Colo. 1986); People v. Varallo, 913 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1996).

Bill of rights freedoms should not be prevented. The supreme court should never make an order which would prevent any lawyer, or association of lawyers, from enjoying to the fullest the fundamental freedoms contained in the bill of rights. In re Petition of Colo. Bar Ass'n, 137 Colo. 357, 325 P.2d 932 (1958).

There is lodged in the supreme court exclusive power to admit applicants to the bar of this state, to prescribe the rules to be followed in the discipline of lawyers, and to revoke a license to practice law or otherwise assess penalties in disciplinary proceedings where the conduct of the lawyer accused either amounts to a violation of law or involves moral turpitude or dishonorable conduct; in all these matters full responsibility rests with the court. In re Petition of Colo. Bar Ass'n, 137 Colo. 357, 325 P.2d 932 (1958); People v. Varallo, 913 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1996).

Granting person permission to practice law is sole prerogative of supreme court of Colorado. People v. Belfor, 200 Colo. 44, 611 P.2d 979 (1980) (decided under prior rule).

And statute disqualifying a convicted felon of practicing as an attorney in no wise interferes with the exclusive right of the supreme court to determine the rules and regulations which shall govern those seeking admission to the bar nor does the statute impinge in any real sense the judicial right to discipline those licensed to practice law. Rather, such a statute is an effort by the general assembly under its police power to bar convicted felons from practicing law in the courts, which the general assembly has the power to do so, since it does not violate the separation of powers doctrine. People v. Buckles, 167 Colo. 64, 453 P.2d 404 (1968).

The supreme court has the inherent power, apart from rule or statute, as well as the duty, to suspend an attorney whose conduct tends to obstruct or impede the administration of justice. People v. Radinsky, 176 Colo. 357, 490 P.2d 951 (1971).

Supreme court authority in disciplinary proceedings is limited to lawyers. In re Petition of Colo. Bar Ass'n, 137 Colo. 357, 325 P.2d 932 (1958).

Purpose of the bar and the admission requirements is to protect the public from unqualified individuals who charge fees for providing incompetent legal advice. Unauthorized Practice of Law Comm. v. Grimes, 654 P.2d 822 (Colo. 1982).

The procedures in force which must be followed in actions for the discipline of lawyers are defined in these rules on the discipline of attorneys. In re Petition of Colo. Bar Ass'n, 137 Colo. 357, 325 P.2d 932 (1958).

These rules require that the pendency of investigations be strictly confidential. In re Petition of Colo. Bar Ass'n, 137 Colo. 357, 325 P.2d 932 (1958).

No person acting as a representative of the supreme court has any power or authority to express an opinion concerning the propriety or the ethics of the conduct of any lawyer. In re Petition of Colo. Bar Ass'n, 137 Colo. 357, 325 P.2d 932 (1958).

In disciplinary proceedings the supreme court acts under well-established rules which protect the attorney from possible unjust public criticism until guilt is established under due process of law. In re Petition of Colo. Bar Ass'n, 137 Colo. 357, 325 P.2d 932 (1958).

Previously, disciplinary action could not be taken merely for violating standards of ethics. In re Petition of Colo. Bar Ass'n, 137 Colo. 357, 325 P.2d 932 (1958).

To be actionable, it must have amounted to a violation of law, or involve moral turpitude or dishonorable conduct. See In re Petition of Colo. Bar Ass'n, 137 Colo. 357, 325 P.2d 932 (1958).

License to practice law assures public that the lawyer who holds the license will perform basic legal tasks honestly and without undue delay, in accordance with the highest standards of professional conduct. People ex rel. Silverman v. Anderson, 200 Colo. 76, 612 P.2d 94 (1980); People v. Meldahl, 200 Colo. 332, 615 P.2d 29 (1980); People v. Witt, 200 Colo. 522, 616 P.2d 139 (1980); People v. Dixon, 621 P.2d 322 (Colo. 1981); People v. Kendrick, 646 P.2d 337 (Colo. 1982).

An attorney must adhere with dedication to the highest standards of honesty and integrity in order that members of the public are assured that they may deal with attorneys with the knowledge that their matters will be handled with absolute propriety. People v. Golden, 654 P.2d 853 (Colo. 1982).

As officers of the court, lawyers are charged with obedience to the laws of this state and to the laws of the United States, and intentional violation by them of these laws subjects them to the severest discipline. People v. Wilson, 176 Colo. 389, 490 P.2d 954 (1971).

Attorney never to obstruct justice or judicial process. An attorney has a high duty as an officer of the court to never participate in any scheme to obstruct the administration of justice or the judicial process. People v. Kenelly, 648 P.2d 1065 (Colo. 1982); People v. Richards, 748 P.2d 341 (Colo. 1987).

Since a lawyer is an officer of the court, the court cannot tolerate or allow fraud by a lawyer to go unpunished, for to declare such acts to be unprofessional conduct would be to use the mildest of language. People v. Radinsky, 176 Colo. 357, 490 P.2d 951 (1971).

Disciplining those who perpetrate fraud on courts is a sacred duty. A most sacred duty is to maintain the integrity of the law profession by disciplining lawyers who indulge in practices which are designed to perpetrate a fraud on the courts. People v. Radinsky, 176 Colo. 357, 490 P.2d 951 (1971).

A lawyer who holds the position of district attorney, with the substantial powers of that office, assumes responsibilities beyond those of other lawyers and must be held to the highest standard of conduct. People v. Brown, 726 P.2d 638 (Colo. 1986).

Public expects appropriate discipline for misconduct. The public has a right to expect that one who engages in professional misconduct shall be disciplined appropriately. People ex rel. Silverman v. Anderson, 200 Colo. 76, 612 P.2d 94 (1980); People v. Meldahl, 200 Colo. 332, 615 P.2d 29 (1980); People v. Witt, 616 P.2d 139 (Colo. 1980); People v. Dixon, 621 P.2d 322 (Colo. 1981); People v. Kendrick, 646 P.2d 337 (Colo. 1982).

Supreme court has, as part of inherent powers, ultimate and exclusive responsibility for the structure and administration of disciplinary proceedings against lawyers. People v. Susman, 196 Colo. 458, 587 P.2d 782 (1978); Mulei v. Jet Courier Serv., Inc., 860 P.2d 569 (Colo. App. 1993); Matter of Greene, 2013 CO 29, 302 P.3d 690.

In a disciplinary proceeding, the court's primary duty is to protect the public and the legal profession from unscrupulous lawyers. People v. Harfmann, 638 P.2d 745 (Colo. 1981); People v. Morley, 725 P.2d 510 (Colo. 1986); People v. Grenemyer, 745 P.2d 1027 (Colo. 1987).

Disciplinary proceedings are sui generis in nature, and conviction of a criminal offense is not a condition precedent to the institution of such proceedings nor does acquittal constitute a bar to such proceedings. People v. Harfmann, 638 P.2d 745 (Colo. 1981); People v. Morley, 725 P.2d 510 (Colo. 1986).

Although attorney discipline proceedings have been characterized as quasi-criminal in nature, Colorado has chosen to follow a largely civil model for the enforcement of attorney discipline. Matter of Greene, 2013 CO 29, 302 P.3d 690.

The doctrine of claim preclusion applies to attorney discipline proceedings. Matter of Greene, 2013 CO 29, 302 P.3d 690.

Four conditions are required to invoke claim preclusion: (1) Finality of the earlier judgment; (2) identity of subject matter; (3) identity of claims; and (4) identity of the parties, or at least those in privity with them. Matter of Greene, 2013 CO 29, 302 P.3d 690.

For purposes of claim-preclusion analysis, the concept of a "criminal episode" offers an analog for a "transaction or connected series of transactions" of attorney misconduct. Matter of Greene, 2013 CO 29, 302 P.3d 690.

Where a number of violations of the same ethical rule were allegedly committed by the same attorney, and the violations did not constitute a single transaction or series of transactions or share any interrelatedness of proof, the attorney regulation counsel was not precluded from filing a second complaint. Matter of Greene, 2013 CO 29, 302 P.3d 690.

Where the crime with which an attorney is charged is one of serious consequences denoting moral turpitude, which he is found guilty of, he cannot, in good conscience, be permitted to practice law in this state. People v. Wilson, 176 Colo. 389, 490 P.2d 954 (1971).

Acts and conduct on the part of an attorney which establish that he is incapable of being trusted, when coupled with acts of dishonesty and deceit, render that person unworthy of public confidence and recognition by the courts. People v. Radinsky, 176 Colo. 357, 490 P.2d 951 (1971).

Such acts should be promptly and severely punished. In that the foundation of the legal profession is honor, if acts which a respondent has committed are not promptly and severely punished, the public will not have reason to trust those lawyers who maintain the high standards of the profession. People v. Radinsky, 176 Colo. 357, 490 P.2d 951 (1971).

Conduct of counsel found contrary to standard of honesty, justice, and integrity. People v. Van Nocker, 176 Colo. 354, 490 P.2d 697 (1971).

Attorney is subject to jurisdiction of court even though disbarred for failure to comply with the Code of Professional Responsibility while practicing law as an officer of this court. People v. Richards, 748 P.2d 341 (Colo. 1987); People v. Koransky, 830 P.2d 490 (Colo. 1992); People v. Vigil, 945 P.2d 1385 (Colo. 1997).

Attorney who is licensed to practice law in Colorado is subject to the jurisdiction of the supreme court for violations of ethical obligations under the rules of professional conduct that are committed while the license to practice is suspended. In re C de Baca, 11 P.3d 426 (Colo. 2000).

Attorney who is a member of the Colorado bar is subject to the jurisdiction of the supreme court and its grievance committee for professional misconduct committed in another jurisdiction where attorney is licensed to practice law despite fact that attorney does not maintain a law office in this state and has not paid the required registration fee or satisfied the continuing legal education requirements of this state. People v. Schindelar, 845 P.2d 1146 (Colo. 1993).

Because hearing board's decision raised an important question of law, whether former § 12-5-120 (now § 13-93-115) authorizes an attorney to assert a retaining lien on a United States passport, the supreme court invoked its plenary authority under section (d) to address it, even though hearing board had dismissed the complaint. Matter of Attorney G., 2013 CO 27, 302 P.3d 248.

Applied in People v. Hebeler, 638 P.2d 254 (Colo. 1981); People v. Archuleta, 638 P.2d 255 (Colo. 1981); People v. Gellenthien, 638 P.2d 295 (Colo. 1981); People v. Proffitt, 731 P.2d 1257 (Colo. 1987); People v. Turner, 758 P.2d 1335 (Colo. 1988).

(1) Committee. The Committee shall be composed of seven members, a Chair and Vice-Chair.

(2) Members. The members shall be composed of four members of the Bar of Colorado and three public members. Diversity shall be a consideration in making the appointment. The Supreme Court, with the assistance of the Advisory Committee, shall appoint the members. The members shall serve one term of seven years but may be dismissed from the Committee at any time by order of the Supreme Court. The terms of the members of the Committee shall be staggered to provide, so far as possible, for the expiration each year of the term of one member. Members of the Committee may resign at any time. In the event of a vacancy on the Committee, the Supreme Court shall appoint a successor to serve the remainder of the unexpired term.

(3) Chair and Vice-Chair. The Chair and Vice-Chair shall be members of the Bar of Colorado. The Supreme Court, with the assistance of the Advisory Committee, shall appoint the Chair and Vice-Chair. The Chair and Vice-Chair shall serve an unspecified term at the pleasure of the Supreme Court. The Chair and Vice-Chair of the Committee may resign at any time. The Chair shall exercise overall supervisory control of the Committee. The Vice-Chair shall assist the Chair and shall serve as Chair in the Chair's absence.

(4) Reimbursement of Committee Members. The members of the Committee shall be entitled to reimbursement for reasonable travel, lodging, and other expenses incurred in the performance of their official duties.

(b) Powers and Duties of the Committee. The committee shall be authorized and empowered to act in accordance with these Rules and to:

(1) Enlist the assistance of members of the Bar to conduct investigations, or assist with investigations;

(2) Periodically report to the Advisory Committee and the management committee on the operation of the committee;

(3) Recommend to the Advisory Committee proposed changes or additions to the rules of procedure for attorney discipline and disability proceedings; and

(4) Adopt such practices as may from time to time become necessary to govern the internal operation of the committee, as approved by the Supreme Court.

(c) Abstention of Committee Members. Committee members shall refrain from taking part in any proceedings in which a judge, similarly situated, would be required to abstain. No partner or associate in the law firm of a member of the committee, or any attorney in any way affiliated with a committee member or the member's law firm, may accept or continue in employment connected with any matter pending before the committee, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge, a Hearing Board, or the Supreme Court as long as the member is serving on the committee.

(d) Disqualification. Members of the committee shall not represent an attorney in any matter as provided in these Rules during their terms of service. Former members of the committee shall not represent an attorney in any matter that was being investigated or prosecuted as provided in these rules during their terms of service.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For note, ''Standards of Discipline for Attorneys in Colorado and the Significance of the Code of Professional Responsibility'', see 50 Den. L.J. 207 (1973).

Annotator's note. The following annotations include cases decided under former provisions similar to this rule.

Rule held constitutional. Rule provides sufficient guidelines to impose attorney discipline and is not, therefore, unconstitutionally vague in violation of due process of law. People v. Morley, 725 P.2d 510 (Colo. 1986).

Grievance committee is committee of supreme court, not bar association. The grievance committee, functioning in disciplinary proceedings under the rules on the discipline of attorneys, ceases to be a representative of the bar association and becomes a committee of the supreme court, and as such is responsible solely to the court. In re Petition of Colo. Bar Ass'n, 137 Colo. 357, 325 P.2d 932 (1958).

It has no greater power than the court. The grievance committee acting as the investigating agent for the supreme court has no greater power or authority than the court. In re Petition of Colo. Bar Ass'n, 137 Colo. 357, 325 P.2d 932 (1958).

Confidential matters cannot be used for any other purpose than that of disciplinary action. No committee serving in the confidential capacity called for under the rules for discipline of attorneys can conduct hearing as the representative of the supreme court and thereafter make use of any confidential matters coming to its attention for any purpose other than that of disciplinary action if such action is warranted; and if such action is not warranted, it cannot use the data obtained as the basis for the publication of an opinion on ethics in which the identity of the original subject is divulged. In re Petition of Colo. Bar Ass'n, 137 Colo. 357, 325 P.2d 932 (1958).

The data gathered by the grievance committee are not public records and are not to be released unless by vote of the committee with the approval of the supreme court. In re Petition of Colo. Bar Ass'n, 137 Colo. 357, 325 P.2d 932 (1958).

Committee cannot escape responsibility for releasing information of intended investigations. Where a grievance committee functioning in the capacity of an agent and representative of the supreme court, or persons identified with it, releases information that it intends to investigate certain persons in connection with particular conduct in violation of the applicable rules, such committee cannot escape responsibility for the advance press publication of its intentions. In re Petition of Colo. Bar Ass'n, 137 Colo. 357, 325 P.2d 932 (1958).

The committee occupies a position of trust and confidence. When the supreme court calls upon a committee of the bar to conduct investigations in disciplinary proceedings, the members of that committee occupy a position of trust and confidence, and they must function under applicable rules. In re Petition of Colo. Bar Ass'n, 137 Colo. 357, 325 P.2d 932 (1958).

Any such committee acting for the court should not be charged with duties as members of another committee of the bar association, a private organization, which might require the individual members to disregard the confidential nature of the duties they have assumed as an agent of the court. In re Petition of Colo. Bar Ass'n, 137 Colo. 357, 325 P.2d 932 (1958).

Rule 251.3. Attorney Regulation Counsel

(a) Attorney Regulation Counsel. The Supreme Court shall appoint a Regulation Counsel. The Regulation Counsel shall serve at the pleasure of the Supreme Court.

The Regulation Counsel, while serving in that capacity, shall not hold any other public office or engage in the private practice of law.

(1) Maintain and supervise a permanent office to serve as a central office for the filing of requests for investigation and for the coordination of such investigations; the filing of claims with the Colorado Attorneys' Fund for Client Protection as provided in C.R.C.P. 252 and the consideration of such claims; the administration of all disciplinary and disability enforcement proceedings carried on pursuant to these Rules; and, the administration of all proceedings conducted pursuant to C.R.C.P. 252, et seq., under a budget approved by the Supreme Court;

(4) Prepare and prosecute disciplinary and disability actions against attorneys as provided by these Rules;

(5) In appropriate cases, negotiate dispositions of pending matters as authorized in C.R.C.P. 251.10(b)(4) and C.R.C.P. 251.22;

(6) Prepare and prosecute petitions for immediate suspension in conformity with C.R.C.P. 251.8;

(7) Prosecute contempt proceedings for violations of these Rules;

(8) Prosecute contempt proceedings for violations of orders of the Supreme Court relating to suspended and disbarred attorneys and attorneys placed on disability inactive status;

(9) Participate in and present recommendations reflecting the public interest in all proceedings for reinstatement held pursuant to C.R.C.P. 251.29 and C.R.C.P. 251.30;

(10) Maintain permanent records of matters processed by the committee, and the disposition thereof;

(11) Participate in the management and supervision of the bar mediation process established by the Supreme Court, implemented by the Colorado Bar Association, and administered by the mediation committee of the association in conjunction with the committee; and,

(12) Perform such other duties as the Supreme Court may direct.

Mediators shall be appointed by the Supreme Court. The mediation committee and the Regulation Counsel shall jointly recommend attorneys to the Court for appointment as mediators. The Regulation Counsel shall forward the names of those recommended to the Court together with a proposed order making the appointment of the mediators.

(d) Disqualification. A former member of the Regulation Counsel's staff shall not represent an attorney in any proceeding that was being investigated and/or prosecuted during the member's association with the Regulation Counsel's staff.

ANNOTATION

Annotator's note. The following annotations include cases decided under former C.R.C.P. 241.4, which was similar to this rule.

Rule held constitutional. Rule provides sufficient guidelines to impose attorney discipline and is not, therefore, unconstitutionally vague in violation of due process of law. People v. Morley, 725 P.2d 510 (Colo. 1986).

Supreme court regulation counsel and office of attorney regulation counsel are part of the judicial branch of state government because they are subject to the direction of the supreme court pursuant to this rule and participate in the process of regulating attorneys. Gleason v. Judicial Watch, Inc., 2012 COA 76, 292 P.3d 1044.

Colorado Supreme Court disciplinary counsel is an "arm of the state" and not a ''person'' for the purposes of a suit for damages pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983. Bannister v. Colo. Supreme Court Disciplinary Counsel, 856 P.2d 79 (Colo. App. 1993).

Disciplinary prosecutor, acting in an official capacity, is an "arm of the state" and not a ''person'' for the purposes of a suit for damages pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983. Bannister v. Colo. Supreme Court Disciplinary Counsel, 856 P.2d 79 (Colo. App. 1993).

Disciplinary prosecutors, in their individual capacity, are absolutely immune from liability for damages under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 when acting within the scope of their prosecutorial duties. Bannister v. Colo. Supreme Court Disciplinary Counsel, 856 P.2d 79 (Colo. App. 1993).

Rule 251.4. Duty of Judge to Report Misconduct or Disability

A judge has a duty to report unprofessional conduct by an attorney to Regulation Counsel pursuant to Rule 2.15 of the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct. No action taken by any judge pursuant to Rule 2.15 shall in any way limit the power of the reporting judge to exercise the power of contempt against an attorney, nor should the reporting of such matters to the Regulation Counsel be used in lieu of contempt proceedings.

ANNOTATION

Annotator's note. The following annotations include cases decided under former provisions similar to this rule.

Rule held constitutional. Rule provides sufficient guidelines to impose attorney discipline and is not, therefore, unconstitutionally vague in violation of due process of law. People v. Morley, 725 P.2d 510 (Colo. 1986).

A most sacred duty is to maintain the integrity of the law profession by disciplining lawyers who indulge in practices which are designed to perpetrate a fraud on the courts. People v. Radinsky, 176 Colo. 357, 490 P.2d 951 (1971).

Where the court specifically noted that the issue of contempt was not properly before the court, the trial court lacked authority to impose disciplinary sanctions against an attorney, along with client, for failing to disclose at the settlement conference that funds were never paid into the directory. Mulei v. Jet Courier Serv., Inc., 860 P.2d 569 (Colo. App. 1993).

Applied in Coerber v. Rath, 164 Colo. 294, 435 P.2d 228 (1967); People ex rel. Aisenberg v. Young, 198 Colo. 26, 599 P.2d 257 (1979).

Rule 251.5. Grounds for Discipline

Misconduct by an attorney, individually or in concert with others, including the following acts or omissions, shall constitute grounds for discipline, whether or not the act or omission occurred in the course of an attorney-client relationship:

(a) Any act or omission which violates the provisions of the Code of Professional Responsibility or the Colorado Rules of Professional Conduct;

(b) Any criminal act that reflects adversely on the lawyer's honesty, trustworthiness or fitness as a lawyer in other respects; provided that conviction thereof in a criminal proceeding shall not be a prerequisite to the institution of disciplinary proceedings, and provided further that acquittal in a criminal proceeding shall not necessarily bar disciplinary action;

(c) Any act or omission which violates these Rules or which violates an order of discipline or disability; or

(d) Failure to respond without good cause shown to a request by the committee, the Regulation Counsel, or the Board of Trustees of the Colorado Attorneys' Fund for Client Protection or obstruction of the committee, the Regulation Counsel, or the Board or any part thereof in the performance of their duties. Good cause includes, but is not limited to, an assertion that a response would violate the respondent's constitutional privilege against self-incrimination.

This enumeration of acts and omissions constituting grounds for discipline is not exclusive, and other acts or omissions amounting to unprofessional conduct may constitute grounds for discipline.

Constitutionality upheld. This rule is not unconstitutionally vague on its face or as applied. People v. Morley, 725 P.2d 510 (Colo. 1986).

Standards used in determining constitutional challenges to rule. Same standards used in determining a constitutional challenge to a statute are used in determining constitutional challenge to this rule or a disciplinary rule under the code of professional responsibility. People v. Morley, 725 P.2d 510 (Colo. 1986).

Presumption of constitutionality attaches to such enactment, and the burden is on the party challenging an enactment to demonstrate its unconstitutionality beyond a reasonable doubt. People v. Morley, 725 P.2d 510 (Colo. 1986).

Since a disciplinary rule is promulgated for the purpose of guiding lawyers in their professional conduct, and is not directed to the public at large, the central consideration in resolving a vagueness challenge should be whether the nature of the proscribed conduct encompassed by the rule is readily understandable to a licensed lawyer. People v. Morley, 725 P.2d 510 (Colo. 1986).

II. GROUNDS.

A. In General.

Violation of election laws sufficient to justify public censure. People v. Casias, 646 P.2d 391 (Colo. 1982).

Actions taken by attorney contrary to court order violate this rule and justify suspension. People v. Awenius, 653 P.2d 740 (Colo. 1982).

Demonstration of rehabilitation required for readmittance to bar. Where a practicing attorney breached fiduciary duties to his client in misrepresenting his dealings and in handling of funds given to him in trust, his conduct warranted disbarment, and before he may seek readmittance to the state bar association, he must first demonstrate to the grievance committee that rehabilitation has occurred and that he is entitled to a new start. People ex rel. Buckley v. Beck, 199 Colo. 482, 610 P.2d 1069 (1980).

Actions of a suspended attorney who took part in a complex real estate transaction and engaged in the practice of law by representing, counseling, advising, and assisting a former client warranted suspension until he demonstrates by clear and convincing evidence that (1) he has been rehabilitated; (2) he has complied with and will continue to comply with all applicable disciplinary orders and rules; and (3) he is competent and fit to practice law. People v. Belfor, 200 Colo. 44, 611 P.2d 979 (1980).

Maximum suspension of three years rather than disbarment appropriate for attorney who violated a number of disciplinary rules including filing a false claim for loss of unemployment damages; failure to prepare case for trial over two-year period; failure to file affidavit required under grandparent visitation statute; arriving at settlement conference in intoxicated state; failure to file complaint and representing to client that case was close to being settled; and failure to notify disciplinary counsel of conviction of driving while ability impaired. People v. Anderson, 828 P.2d 228 (Colo. 1992).

Aggravating factors present in case include attorney's substantial experience in the practice of law, attorney's prior disciplinary record, attorney's pattern of misconduct taking place over several years and involving multiple offenses, the practice of deceit by attorney to mislead clients concerning the status of their cases, the obstruction of disciplinary proceedings by attorney's intentional failure to respond to requests for investigation, and the display of indifference to making restitution by the failure to repay a retainer after promising to do so. People v. Fahrney, 791 P.2d 1116 (Colo. 1990).

Aggravating factors present in case were: (1) A dishonest and selfish motive on the part of the respondent; (2) a pattern of misconduct; (3) multiple offenses; and (4) substantial experience in the practice of law. People v. Finesilver, 826 P.2d 1256 (Colo. 1992).

Aggravating factors present in case include: (1) The attorney's prior disciplinary record; (2) a dishonest or selfish attitude on the part of the attorney; (3) a pattern of misconduct; (4) the attorney's refusal to acknowledge the wrongfulness of his conduct; (5) the vulnerability of the client's wife and her children during the attorney's representation of them; and (6) the attorney's substantial experience in the practice of law. In re Quiat, 979 P.2d 1029 (Colo. 1999).

Aggravating factors present in case include: (1) Attorney's history of prior discipline; (2) the vulnerable status of the attorney's victims; and (3) the attorney's obstruction of the disciplinary process. In re Meyers, 981 P.2d 143 (Colo. 1999).

Aggravating factors present in case include the respondent attorney's dishonest and selfish motive, pattern of misconduct and multiple offenses, refusal to acknowledge the wrongful nature of the conduct, the vulnerability of the victims, the respondent's substantial experience with the law, and the respondent's indifference to making restitution. People v. Sweetman, 218 P.3d 1123 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2008).

Mitigating factors present in case included the respondent's full and free disclosure to the grievance committee and the hearing board, good character and reputation, and the respondent's remorse for wrongdoing. People v. Finesilver, 826 P.2d 1256 (Colo. 1992).

Insofar as respondent's addiction to illegal drugs was a symptom of more deeply seated psychological and emotional problems, the respondent established the existence of these allegedly mitigating factors. However, even though the respondent testified that none of the converted funds were used to purchase illegal drugs, the supreme court is inclined to view the respondent's drug use itself as an aggravating rather than mitigating factor. People v. Finesilver, 826 P.2d 1256 (Colo. 1992).

Several significant aggravating factors are that the respondent engaged in multiple offenses and in a pattern of misconduct, failed to cooperate with the grievance committee in the attorney discipline proceedings, and submitted false statements and false evidence to the court in a related proceeding. People v. Hellewell, 827 P.2d 527 (Colo. 1992).

Aggravating factors in case where three-year suspension rather than disbarment imposed include prior disciplinary offenses, pattern of misconduct, multiple offenses, submission of false evidence, false statements, or other deceptive practices during disciplinary process, refusal to acknowledge the wrongful nature of conduct, vulnerability of victim, and substantial experience in the practice of law. Mitigating factors include remoteness of prior offenses and gesture of restitution. People v. Anderson, 828 P.2d 228 (Colo. 1992).

Public censure was appropriate where attorney made false statements in the course of discovery in cases where the attorney was the plaintiff. Evidence showed that the attorney was suffering from a psychiatric condition at the time, and the assistant disciplinary counsel could not prove that the attorney's false statements were knowing, but only that they were negligent. People v. Dillings, 880 P.2d 1220 (Colo. 1994).

Mitigating factors present in case include: (1) At the time of the misconduct, the attorney was experiencing personal problems; (2) the attorney cooperated during the disciplinary proceedings; (3) the attorney has a good character and reputation in the community; and (4) there has been a substantial delay in these disciplinary proceedings. In re Quiat, 979 P.2d 1029 (Colo. 1999).

Attorney's depression did not qualify as mitigating factor of mental disability where no testimony showed depression caused the misconduct. People v. Reynolds, 933 P.2d 1295 (Colo. 1997).

The Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990 did not prevent the Colorado supreme court from disciplining attorney who suffered from depression in light of finding that the depression had not been shown to have directly caused his misconduct. People v. Reynolds, 933 P.2d 1295 (Colo. 1997).

Demonstration of drug rehabilitation and of improved business practices required for reinstatement. Where attorney was suspended for misuse of client funds due to confusion and inattention resulting from cocaine addiction, he would be required to demonstrate a history of negative drug screening tests and that he had educated himself about the business aspects of practicing law, including the handling of trust accounts, to qualify for reinstatement following three-year suspension. People v. Schubert, 799 P.2d 388 (Colo. 1990).

Demonstration of participation in a course of therapy for clinical depression required for reinstatement where attorney was suspended for inattention resulting from such depression. People v. Barr, 855 P.2d 1386 (Colo. 1993).

Demonstration of four conditions required for attorney publicly censured after conviction of driving while ability impaired: Continue psychotherapy, remain on antabuse, submit monthly reports regarding progress on antabuse, and execute written authorization to therapist to release medical information regarding status on antabuse. People v. Rotenberg, 911 P.2d 642 (Colo. 1996).

Pattern of misconduct involving failure to render services, multiple offenses, and conversion of client's property sufficient to justify disbarment. People v. Vermillion, 814 P.2d 795 (Colo. 1991).

Conduct found to violate this rule. People v. Bugg, 635 P.2d 881 (Colo. 1981).

Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules is sufficient to justify public censure. People v. Barnthouse, 941 P.2d 916 (Colo. 1997).

Conduct violating this rule sufficient to justify public censure. People v. Bollinger, 648 P.2d 620 (Colo. 1982); People v. Bergmann, 716 P.2d 1089 (Colo. 1986); People v. Mayer, 716 P.2d 1094 (Colo. 1986); People v. Carpenter, 731 P.2d 726 (Colo. 1987); People v. Horn, 738 P.2d 1186 (Colo. 1987); People v. Stauffer, 745 P.2d 240 (Colo. 1987); People v. Evidence sufficient to justify suspension from the practice of law. People v. Belfor, 197 Colo. 223, 591 P.2d 585 (1979); People v. Goss, 646 P.2d 334 (Colo. 1982).

B. Violation of Code of Professional Responsibility.

Law reviews. For article, ''Punishing Ethical Violations: Aggravating and Mitigating Factors'', see 20 Colo. Law. 243 (1991).

Annotator's note. For additional annotations, see the annotations under the disciplinary rules for the canons included in the Code of Professional Responsibility.

Disbarment is warranted where attorney converted client funds and where factors in mitigation, although present, were not sufficient to justify a lesser sanction. People v. Ogborn, 887 P.2d 21 (Colo. 1994).

District attorney's failure to prosecute personal friend for possession of marijuana violates code of professional responsibility and warrants three-year suspension. People v. Larsen, 808 P.2d 1265 (Colo. 1991).

Suspension is generally appropriate when a lawyer knows of a conflict of interest and fails to disclose to a client the possible effect of that conflict. Respondent admittedly and knowingly failed to fully disclose to a client the possible effect of a conflict of interest and was therefore suspended from the practice of law for ninety days, stayed upon the successful completion of a one-year period of probation. People v. Fischer, 237 P.3d 645 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2010).

Suspension for one year and one day was warranted for attorney who violated C.R.P.C. 1.1 and C.R.P.C. 8.4 by preparing and filing child support worksheets that failed to properly reflect the new stipulation concerning custody and where aggravating factors included a previous disciplinary history and failure to appear in the grievance proceedings in violation of section (7) of this rule. People v. Davies, 926 P.2d 572 (Colo. 1996).

One-year suspension warranted when attorney's behavior constituted nine separate violations of the Colorado rules of professional conduct by challenging a final judgment repeatedly in state, federal, and water courts and pursuing a frivolous federal Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act lawsuit without a rudimentary analysis of the facts, while disregarding a judge's order to cease collateral attacks. People v. Maynard, 238 P.3d 672 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2009).

Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules is sufficient to justify public censure. People v. Smith, 819 P.2d 497 (Colo. 1991).

Creasey, 793 P.2d 1159 (Colo. 1990); People v. Schmad, 793 P.2d 1162 (Colo. 1990); People v. Lopez, 796 P.2d 957 (Colo. 1990); People v. Sullivan, 802 P.2d 1091 (Colo. 1990); People v. Lamberson, 802 P.2d 1098 (Colo. 1990); People v. Rhodes, 803 P.2d 514 (Colo. 1991); People v. Flores, 804 P.2d 192 (Colo. 1991); People v. Ross, 810 P.2d 659 (Colo. 1991); People v. Barr, 855 P.2d 1386 (Colo. 1993); People v. Dickinson, 903 P.2d 1132 (Colo. 1995); In re Demaray, 8 P.3d 427 (Colo. 1999).

C. Violation of Legal Ethics.

Where severe sanctions necessitated. Where misconduct is grievous and demonstrates insensitivity to the professional obligations of a lawyer, it necessitates a severe sanction to reflect the gravity of the breach of ethical standards and to protect the public from future unprofessional conduct. People v. Razatos, 636 P.2d 666 (Colo. 1981), appeal dismissed, 455 U.S. 930, 102 S. Ct. 1415, 71 L. Ed. 2d 639 (1982).

Of more concern is our responsibility to protect the public interest by ensuring continued confidence of the people of this state in the function and role of the office of district attorney and the integrity of the legal profession and the judicial system. People v. Brown, 726 P.2d 638 (Colo. 1986).

The public has a right to expect that one who engages in such gregarious professional misconduct shall be disciplined appropriately. People v. Kendrick, 646 P.2d 337 (Colo. 1982).

Where an attorney demonstrates an extreme indifference to the welfare of his clients and the status of their cases and an extreme insensitivity to his professional duties in the face of adverse judgments due to neglect, client complaints, and repeated disciplinary proceedings, disbarment is the appropriate sanction. People v. Wyman, 782 P.2d 339 (Colo. 1989).

Total disregard of obligation to protect a client's rights and interests over an extended period of time in conjunction with the violation of a number of disciplinary rules and an extended prior record of discipline requires most severe sanction of disbarment. People v. O'Leary, 783 P.2d 843 (Colo. 1989).

The severity of the ethical violations may be balanced by lack of prior discipline, absence of injury to clients, compliance with court ordered treatment plan, and dismissal of criminal charges in felony prosecution. People v. Abelman, 744 P.2d 486 (Colo. 1987).

Continued representation of clients with conflicting interests violates this rule and warrants discipline. People v. Awenius, 653 P.2d 740 (Colo. 1982).

Adjudicating, as a judge, the criminal case of a person who is his client in a divorce proceeding warrants public censure because it is the duty of an attorney-judge to promptly disclose conflicts of interest and to disqualify himself without suggestion from anyone. People v. Perrott, 769 P.2d 1075 (Colo. 1989).

Unauthorized recordation of telephone conversation established unethical conduct. Telephone conversation, which attorney initiated and recorded without the permission of other party to conversation, established unethical conduct on attorney's part. People v. Wallin, 621 P.2d 330 (Colo. 1981).

Suggesting that witness have ex parte communication with chief justice. Where an attorney suggested to a principal witness in a pending grievance proceeding against that attorney that he write a letter on behalf of the attorney to the chief justice of the state supreme court, substantially recanting his testimony in the grievance proceeding, the attorney's conduct violated this rule and the code of professional responsibility. Public censure is the appropriate discipline for this breach of professional obligations. People v. Hertz, 638 P.2d 794 (Colo. 1982).

Most severe punishment is required when a lawyer disregards his professional obligations and converts his clients' funds to his own use. People v. Kluver, 199 Colo. 511, 611 P.2d 971 (1980); People v. Kendrick, 646 P.2d 337 (Colo. 1982); People v. Bealmear, 655 P.2d 402 (Colo. 1982); People v. Costello, 781 P.2d 85 (Colo. 1989).

Conversion of client funds is conduct warranting disbarment because it destroys the trust essential to the attorney-client relationship, severely damages the public's perception of attorneys, and erodes public confidence in our legal system. People v. Radosevich, 783 P.2d 841 (Colo. 1989).

When an attorney converts client property, disbarment is an appropriate sanction. People v. Hellewell, 827 P.2d 527 (Colo. 1992).

The most severe punishment is required when a lawyer disregards his professional obligations and converts his clients' funds to his own use. People v. Buckles, 673 P.2d 1008 (Colo. 1984).

Attorney's misuse of funds, writing of bad checks, and neglect in handling a legal matter justify disbarment. People v. Murphy, 778 P.2d 658 (Colo. 1989).

A stipulation of misconduct admitting to withdrawing money while acting as personal representative so that one's corporation can post an appeal bond, converting funds from estates while serving as personal representative, converting settlement proceeds, and converting funds while serving as president of endowment foundation warrant disbarment. People v. Barber, 799 P.2d 936 (Colo. 1990).

Suspension is appropriate discipline given the number and severity of instances of misconduct, including pattern of neglect over clients' affairs over lengthy period and in variety of circumstances and misrepresentation in dissolution case to client who wished to remarry concerning the filing of a dissolution petition. Considering proper mitigating factors such as attorney's lack of experience, absence of prior discipline, attorney's willingness to undergo psychiatric evaluation and accept transfer to disability inactive status, suspension without credit for time on disability inactive status is appropriate. People v. Griffin, 764 P.2d 1166 (Colo. 1988).

Undertaking to provide services to clients in areas in which one lacks experience, which would ordinarily result in a reprimand, warrants a 30-day suspension when coupled with continued neglect after private censure. People v. Frank, 752 P.2d 539 (Colo. 1988).

Neglect of client matters, use of cocaine, and failure to respond to complaint and client correspondence warrant public censure in light of participation in comprehensive rehabilitation programs. People v. Driscoll, 716 P.2d 1086 (Colo. 1986).

Respondent's continued neglect of matters entrusted to him, including his failure to deliver a promissory note and his failure to record a deed of trust, and respondent's acceptance of a retainer and his subsequent failure to litigate the matter warrant suspension from the practice of law for two years. Respondent's misconduct was aggravated by his failure to cooperate with the grievance committee. People v. Fagan, 791 P.2d 1123 (Colo. 1990).

Failure to timely file a paternity action constitutes neglect of a legal matter that warrants public censure. People v. Good, 790 P.2d 331 (Colo. 1990).

Suspension for one year and one day appropriate where attorney violated section (4) by not returning or accounting for client funds held for emergencies after the clients fired the attorney and for negligently converting other client funds to the attorney's own use. People v. Johnson, 944 P.2d 524 (Colo. 1997).

Abandonment of law practice and conversion of clients' funds to attorney's own use justifies disbarment of attorney. People v. Franks, 791 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1990).

Disbarment is appropriate discipline for attorney who caused potentially serious injury to clients by abandoning his practice, knowingly failing to perform services for clients, and engaging in pattern of neglect. People v. Nichols, 796 P.2d 966 (Colo. 1990).

Aggravating factors in case were the previous issuance of a letter of admonition for a disciplinary offense, the lawyer's actions in dealing with clients which establish a dishonest or selfish motive, the acceptance of new clients and the charging of retainers immediately before lawyer moved to Ireland, multiple offenses and a repetition of the same conduct, the bad faith obstruction of the disciplinary process, the utilization of the substantial experience and expertise of the lawyer in the practice of law to collect substantial fees for services that the lawyer knew he could not perform, and the total indifference of the lawyer to making restitution and to repaying misappropriated funds. People v. Franks, 791 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1990).

Neglect of a legal matter entrusted to the attorney and misrepresentation to the client in connection with a real estate transaction constituted violations of this rule and various other rules. People v. Susman, 787 P.2d 1119 (Colo. 1990).

Failure to file petition for dissolution of marriage and failure to return unearned legal fees sufficient to warrant 45-day suspension. People v. Combs, 805 P.2d 1115 (Colo. 1991).

Attorney's lack of preparation for trial constituted gross negligence. People v. Butler, 875 P.2d 219 (Colo. 1994).

F. Criminal Behavior.

Disciplinary proceedings are sui generis in nature, and conviction of a criminal offense is not a condition precedent to the institution of such proceedings nor does acquittal constitute a ban to such proceedings. People v. Harfmann, 638 P.2d 745 (Colo. 1981); People v. Morley, 725 P.2d 510 (Colo. 1986).

Acquittal may be considered by grievance committee. Although an acquittal is not a bar to disciplinary action, it may be considered by the grievance committee. People v. Kenelly, 648 P.2d 1065 (Colo. 1982).

Disbarment warranted by attorney's conviction of conspiracy to deliver counterfeited federal reserve notes, serious neglect of several legal matters, unjustified retention of clients' property, failure to respond to the grievance committee, and previous disciplinary record. People v. Mayer, 752 P.2d 537 (Colo. 1988).

Felonious conduct and violation of code of professional responsibility justifies disbarment. Where a lawyer's conduct not only constitutes a violation of the code of professional responsibility, but also involves felonious conduct, clearly and convincingly proven by testimony of sheriff's officers, the grievance committee is justified in requiring disbarment. People v. Harfmann, 638 P.2d 745 (Colo. 1981).

Conviction of a district attorney of two felonies and a misdemeanor while in office warrants the most severe sanction — disbarment. People v. Brown, 726 P.2d 638 (Colo. 1986).

Conviction of a serious felony involving dishonesty, fraud, deceit, and conversion of clients funds in another state and failure to notify Colorado authorities of same justifies disbarment. People v. Hedicke, 785 P.2d 918 (Colo. 1990).

Use of license to practice law for the purpose of bringing into being an illegal prostitution enterprise renders disbarment the only possible form of discipline. Any lesser sanction would unduly depreciate such misconduct in the eyes of the public and the legal profession. People v. Morley, 725 P.2d 510 (Colo. 1986).

Disbarment not unjust discipline for embezzling funds from estate of client, conversion of money belonging to employer, and convictions of theft and unlawful distribution and possession of controlled substance, after consenting to entry of disbarment in another jurisdiction. People v. Fitzke, 716 P.2d 1065 (Colo. 1986).

Where there is a great weight of mitigating evidence, even when an attorney has engaged in serious criminal conduct which would ordinarily justify disbarment, a three-year suspension and the requirement to pay costs of the disciplinary proceeding may be appropriate in lieu of disbarment. People v. Preblud, 764 P.2d 822 (Colo. 1988).

Existence of numerous mitigating factors warrant three-year suspension and payment of costs rather than disbarment for attorney convicted of felony violations of the California Revenue and Taxation Code. People v. Mandell, 813 P.2d 732 (Colo. 1991).

Felony theft held sufficient grounds for suspension. People v. Petrie, 642 P.2d 519 (Colo. 1982).

Defendant intentionally and without permission took eyeglass frames from two retail stores and thereby violated section (5). There were many aggravating factors, the only mitigating factor was a suspension eight years prior. One year suspension levied. People v. Barnthouse, 948 P.2d 534 (Colo. 1997).

Conviction for sale of narcotic drug warrants disbarment and action striking attorney's name from the role of lawyers authorized to practice before the court. People v. McGonigle, 198 Colo. 315, 600 P.2d 61 (1979).

Conviction of conspiracy to violate drug laws. A lawyer who enters into a conspiracy to violate the law by importing narcotic drugs for distribution should be disbarred. People v. Unruh, 621 P.2d 948 (Colo. 1980), cert. denied, 476 U.S. 1171, 106 S. Ct. 2894, 90 L. Ed. 2d 981 (1986).

Conviction for conspiracy to possess with intent to distribute cocaine warrants disbarment and the striking of the attorney's name from the roll of attorneys licensed to practice in this state. People v. Avila, 778 P.2d 657 (Colo. 1989).

Use of professional status to accomplish illicit commercial transaction. Violation of the criminal laws of Colorado is grounds for discipline, and the use of one's professional status to accomplish an illicit commercial transaction for profit demands the most severe sanction. People v. McGonigle, 198 Colo. 315, 600 P.2d 61 (1979).

Attorney's use of his position as director of a bank to arrange financial transactions in a manner prohibited by federal law, where his conduct was deliberate, carefully planned, and extended over a period of a year and a half, justified disbarment, notwithstanding such factors as attorney's full restitution to bank, his cooperation with federal officials, his lack of any prior criminal record, his history of community service, and the existence of psychological problems which may have precipitated his illegal activity and which have been acknowledged and solved. People v. Loseke, 698 P.2d 809 (Colo. 1985).

Structuring financial transaction to avoid reporting requirements, a felony under federal law, warranted disbarment. In re DeRose, 55 P.3d 126 (Colo. 2002).

Committing offense of bigamy and placing unauthorized signatures upon land deeds warranted public censure. People v. Tucker, 755 P.2d 452 (Colo. 1988).

Committing offense of third-degree sexual assault on a client and recklessly accusing a lawyer and judge of having an improper ex parte communication warranted suspension for a year and a day, and, for purposes of a disciplinary proceeding, the sexual assault only had to be proved by clear and convincing evidence, not beyond a reasonable doubt. In re Egbune, 971 P.2d 1065 (Colo. 1999).

Neglect of client matters, use of cocaine, and failure to respond to complaint and client correspondence warrant public censure in light of participation in comprehensive rehabilitation programs. People v. Driscoll, 716 P.2d 1086 (Colo. 1986).

Public censure appropriate in light of mitigating circumstances for possession of cocaine in violation of state and federal controlled substance laws. People v. Gould, 912 P.2d 556 (Colo. 1996).

Discharging firearm in direction of spouse while intoxicated, although not a crime involving dishonesty, goes beyond mere negligence and public censure is appropriate. Mitigating factors, although present, were insufficient to warrant making censure private. People v. Senn, 824 P.2d 822 (Colo. 1992).

Adopting a conscious scheme to take ownership of homes, collect rents from tenants, make virtually no efforts to sell the homes, and permit foreclosures to occur on which the department of housing and urban development (HUD) would absorb the losses constituted equity skimming in violation of § 18-5-802 and constitutes a violation of sections (A)(4) and (A)(6) for which suspension for one year is appropriate. People v. Phelps, 837 P.2d 755 (Colo. 1992).

Suspension of one year and one day warranted for attorney who entered guilty plea to class 5 felony of failure to pay employee income tax withheld and who violated other disciplinary rules involving neglect of legal matter, failure to seek lawful objectives of client, intentional failure to carry out employment contract resulting in intentional prejudice or damage to client. People v. Franks, 866 P.2d 1375 (Colo. 1994).

Suspension of two years warranted for attorney who reached a consent settlement with the securities and exchange commission stating that he had employed devices, schemes, or artifices to defraud or made untrue statements of material fact or engaged in acts, practices, or courses of business which operated as a fraud or deceit upon persons in violation of the Securities and Exchange Act. People v. Hanks, 967 P.2d 141 (Colo. 1998).

Where deputy district attorney was convicted of possession of cocaine under federal law, one-year suspension is appropriate due to seriousness of offense and fact that attorney had higher responsibility to the public by virtue of engaging in law enforcement. People v. Robinson, 839 P.2d 4 (Colo. 1992).

Guilty pleas of deputy district attorney for acting as an accessory to a crime and for official misconduct relating to the disposal of drug paraphernalia warrants six-month suspension. Respondent's status as a deputy district attorney at the time she committed the offenses is an aggravating factor because public officials engaged in law enforcement have assumed an even greater responsibility to the public than have other lawyers. People v. Freeman, 885 P.2d 205 (Colo. 1994).

Suspension of one year and one day appropriate for experienced attorney and judicial officer who pled guilty to unlawful use of a controlled substance. People v. Stevens, 866 P.2d 1378 (Colo. 1994).

Attorney who was not charged or convicted of a substance abuse related crime was suspended. The attorney's drug problem was self-reported, he had voluntarily hospitalized himself and undergone an after-care program, and he had over one year of sustained recovery. People v. Ebbert, 873 P.2d 731 (Colo. 1994).

Suspension of three years was appropriate for attorney who drove a vehicle on at least four occasions after his driver's license was revoked and who also failed to appear in two cases involving his illegal driving. People v. Hughes, 966 P.2d 1055 (Colo. 1998).

Attorney offered money to two police officers in the context of releasing his client from custody. The attorney alleged such action was a joke intended to teach his client that the police would not release the client from custody. Such activity was determined to be bribery even though the attorney was not charged by the police and sufficient for a three-year suspension. In re Elinoff, 22 P.3d 60 (Colo. 2001).

Suspension for one year and one day warranted where attorney failed to appear in county court on a charge of driving under the influence. People v. Myers, 969 P.2d 701 (Colo. 1998).

Entering guilty pleas to multiple counts of bank fraud evidences serious criminal conduct warranting disbarment. People v. Vidakovich, 810 P.2d 1071 (Colo. 1991).

Pleading guilty to a single count of bank fraud evidences serious criminal conduct warranting disbarment. People v. Terborg, 848 P.2d 346 (Colo. 1993).

Entering guilty plea to committing mail fraud evidences serious criminal conduct warranting disbarment. People v. Bollinger, 859 P.2d 901 (Colo. 1993).

When a lawyer knowingly converts client funds, disbarment is virtually automatic, at least in the absence of significant factors in mitigation. People v. McDonnell, 897 P.2d 829 (Colo. 1995).

Convictions for conspiring to commit fraud against the United States and impeding an officer of a United States court justify disbarment. People v. Pilgrim, 802 P.2d 1084 (Colo. 1990).

Conviction for bankruptcy fraud warrants disbarment. People v. Brown, 841 P.2d 1066 (Colo. 1992).

Disbarment is warranted where attorney was convicted of felony offense of forging a federal bankruptcy judge's signature and had engaged in multiple types of other dishonest conduct and where there was an insufficient showing of mental disability. People v. Goldstein, 887 P.2d 634 (Colo. 1994).

Suspension justified where respondent violated federal and state laws by failing to file personal income tax returns, failing to pay withholding taxes, using cocaine, and using marihuana. People v. Holt, 832 P.2d 948 (Colo. 1992).

The fact that no specific client of the respondent was actually harmed by the respondent's misconduct misses the point in proceeding for suspension of an attorney. While the primary purpose of attorney discipline is the protection of the public and not to mete punishment to the offending lawyer, lawyers are, nonetheless, charged with obedience to the law, and intentional violation of those laws subjects an attorney to the severest discipline. People v. Holt, 832 P.2d 948 (Colo. 1992).

Lack of prior disciplinary record insufficient to call for sanction less than disbarrment where attorney convicted of bankruptcy fraud, conspiracy to commit bankruptcy fraud and other federal offenses. People v. Schwartz, 814 P.2d 793 (Colo. 1991).

Although attorney had not previously been disciplined, sanction of disbarment was warranted where attorney's felony conviction for possession of a firearm occurred while he was still on probation for a felony conviction for possession of marijuana. People v. Laquey, 862 P.2d 278 (Colo. 1993).

Lack of prior disciplinary record insufficient to call for sanction less than disbarment where attorney pleaded guilty to bribery. People v. Viar, 848 P.2d 934 (Colo. 1993).

Conviction for aiding fugitive to flee warrants disbarment despite lack of a prior disciplinary record. People v. Bullock, 882 P.2d 1390 (Colo. 1994).

Respondent given two-year suspension for aiding and abetting aliens' entry into the United States and by advising clients to make misrepresentations for such entry. Such an act generally warrants disbarment, but respondent's full disclosure during proceedings, expression of remorse, and the fact that a prior offense was remote in time were mitigating factors. Respondent also required to discontinue the representation of clients before INS and the Department of Labor. People v. Boyle, 942 P.2d 1199 (Colo. 1997).

Six-month suspension justified for attorney pleading guilty to making and altering a false and forged prescription for a controlled substance and of criminal attempt to obtain a controlled substance by forgery and alteration, where mitigating factors included: (1) No prior disciplinary history; (2) personal or emotional problems at time of misconduct; (3) full and free disclosure by attorney to grievance committee; (4) imposition of other penalties and sanctions resulting from criminal proceeding; (5) demonstration of genuine remorse; and (6) relative inexperience in the practice of law. People v. Moore, 849 P.2d 40 (Colo. 1993).

Six-month suspension appropriate for respondent convicted of drunken driving offense and assault. People v. Shipman, 943 P.2d 458 (Colo. 1997); People v. Reaves, 943 P.2d 460 (Colo. 1997).

Chief deputy district attorney's theft of less than $50 constitutes conduct warranting public censure where significant mitigating factors exist. People v. Buckley, 848 P.2d 353 (Colo. 1993).

Attorney's failure to file personal state and federal income tax returns and to pay withholding taxes for federal income taxes and FICA, and use of cocaine and marijuana constitute conduct warranting suspension for one year and one day. People v. Holt, 832 P.2d 948 (Colo. 1992).

Failure to file federal income tax returns in combination with mitigating factors of no prior discipline and significant personal problems at the time of the misconduct warrants public censure. People v. Tauger, 893 P.2d 121 (Colo. 1995).

Public censure was appropriate where significant mitigating factors were present. Attorney was convicted of vehicular assault, a class 4 felony, and two counts of driving under the influence of alcohol. The crimes are strict liability offenses for which attorney must serve three years in the custody of the department of corrections, followed by a two-year mandatory period of parole. Section 18-1-105(3) provides that, while he is serving his sentence, attorney is disqualified from practicing as an attorney in any state courts. The sentence and disqualification from practicing law are a significant "other penalty[] or sanction[]" and therefore a mitigating factor in determining the level of discipline. In re Kearns, 991 P.2d 824 (Colo. 1999) (decided under former C.R.C.P. 241.6(5)).

Public censure is appropriate for driving under the influence with mitigating factor of candidness and cooperativeness. This was attorney's first conviction, and he was truthful, candid, and cooperative. He also underwent alcohol evaluation by a doctor. People v. Miller, 409 P.3d 667 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2017).

Public censure was warranted where attorney twice requested arresting officers in driving under the influence cases not to appear at license revocation hearings before the department of motor vehicles. People v. Carey, 938 P.2d 1166 (Colo. 1997).

Public censure was appropriate where an already suspended attorney was the subject of prior discipline for misdemeanor convictions of assault and driving while impaired and where an additional period of suspension would have little, if any, practical effect and would not have afforded a meaningful measure of protection for the public. People v. Flores, 871 P.2d 1182 (Colo. 1994).

Public censure warranted for attorney's solicitation of prostitution during telephone conversation with wife of client whom he was representing in a dissolution of marriage proceeding. People v. Bauder, 941 P.2d 282 (Colo. 1997).

Suspension for 180 days is warranted based upon conviction of third degree assault charges. People v. Knight, 883 P.2d 1055 (Colo. 1994).

The conduct of an attorney who is convicted of domestic violence and who fails to report the conviction substantially reflects adversely on the attorney's fitness to practice. The aggravating factors outweigh the mitigating factors; accordingly, the proper form of discipline is six months' suspension. In re Hickox, 57 P.3d 403 (Colo. 2002).

Disbarment is warranted for driving while impaired, marihuana possession, improperly executing agreement without authority, and failing to perform certain professional duties, despite the lack of a prior record. People v. Gerdes, 891 P.2d 995 (Colo. 1995).

Attorney's admitted initiation of sexual contact and sexual intrusion on a client violate sections (2), (3), and (5) of this rule. People v. Dawson, 894 P.2d 756 (Colo. 1995).

Disbarment warranted where attorney was convicted of two separate sexual assaults on a client and a former client and attorney's previous dishonest conduct was an aggravating factor as well as findings of the attorney's selfish motive in engaging in the sexual misconduct, the two clients' vulnerability, the attorney's more than 20 years practicing law, and the attorney's failure to acknowledge the wrongful nature of his conduct. People v. Bertagnolli, 922 P.2d 935 (Colo. 1996).

Notwithstanding the entry of attorney's "Alford" plea in sexual assault proceedings, for purpose of disciplinary proceeding the attorney was held to have actually committed the acts necessary to accomplish third degree sexual assault and therefore the attorney knowingly had sexual contact with a former client and with a current client without either woman's consent. People v. Bertagnolli, 922 P.2d 935 (Colo. 1996).

Disbarment warranted for attorney convicted of criminal attempt to commit sexual exploitation of a child, a class 4 felony. People v. Damkar, 908 P.2d 1113 (Colo. 1996).

Disbarment warranted for attorney convicted of one count of sexual assault on a child, notwithstanding lack of a prior record of discipline. People v. Espe, 967 P.2d 159 (Colo. 1998).

Disbarment warranted for attorney convicted in Hawaii of second-degree murder. People v. Draizen, 941 P.2d 280 (Colo. 1997).

Disbarment appropriate sanction for attorney who intentionally killed another person. Despite a lack of prior discipline in this state, giving full faith and credit to another state's law and its jury finding that attorney intentionally took her husband's life by shooting him 10 times with a firearm, disbarment is an appropriate sanction. People v. Sims, 190 P.3d 188 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2008).

Disbarment warranted for writing nonsufficient funds checks while practicing law during a period of suspension and committing several other disciplinary rules violations. People v. Fager, 938 P.2d 138 (Colo. 1997).

Disbarment justified in a reciprocal discipline proceeding where attorney convicted of knowingly making false statements to obtain a loan from a federal savings and loan institution. Attorney was also disbarred by the United States court of federal claims and had his license revoked by the Virginia state bar for the same offense. Unless certain exceptions exist, the same discipline that was imposed in the foreign jurisdiction is generally imposed in a reciprocal discipline proceeding. People v. Kiely, 968 P.2d 110 (Colo. 1998).

Disbarment warranted for knowingly abandoning clients, converting their funds, and causing actual financial and emotional harm to them. Attorney violated duty to preserve clients' property, to diligently perform services on their behalf, to be candid with them during the course of the professional relationship, and to abide by the legal rules of substance and procedure that affect the administration of justice. People v. Martin, 223 P.3d 728 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2009).

Disbarment warranted for attorney convicted of conspiracy to commit tax fraud, tax evasion, and aiding and assisting in the preparation of a false income tax return. People v. Evanson, 223 P.3d 735 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2009).

Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules is sufficient to justify disbarment. People v. Allbrandt, 913 P.2d 532 (Colo. 1996); In re Tolley, 975 P.2d 1115 (Colo. 1999) (decided under former rule 241.6).

G. Violation of Other Rules.

Disbarment in another state violates this rule and warrants disbarment. People v. Montano, 744 P.2d 480 (Colo. 1987); People v. Brunn, 764 P.2d 1165 (Colo. 1988).

Disbarment from practice in federal court violates this rule and warrants discipline. People v. Awenius, 653 P.2d 740 (Colo. 1982).

Suspension from practice in federal tax court violates this rule and warrants discipline. People v. Hartman, 744 P.2d 482 (Colo. 1987).

Pattern of neglect which has not been corrected despite lesser sanctions requires imposition of suspension for protection of public. People v. Mayer, 744 P.2d 509 (Colo. 1987).

Repeated neglect and delay in handling legal matters and failure to comply with the directions contained in a letter of admonition and to answer letter of complaint from the grievance committee constitute a violation of this rule and, with other offenses of the code of professional responsibility, are sufficient to justify suspension for three years. People v. Hebenstreit, 764 P.2d 51 (Colo. 1988).

Repeated misconduct charges warranted suspension of licenses. Where respondent had been disciplined three times previously, once by private censure and twice by letters of admonition and where two of the matters involved delay and the respondent's failure to inform his clients of the status of their cases, subsequent misconduct warranted that respondent's license to practice law be suspended for six months. People ex rel. Silverman v. Anderson, 200 Colo. 76, 612 P.2d 94 (1980).

Two-year suspension was not excessively harsh where previous suspension and vulnerability of young, unsophisticated client in current matter are properly considered as aggravating factors in fixing punishment. People v. Yaklich, 744 P.2d 504 (Colo. 1987).

Continuing to represent client and failing to comply with disciplinary rule after initial suspension from practice of law warrants suspension for additional year. People v. Underhill, 708 P.2d 790 (Colo. 1985).

Continuing to practice while suspended is conduct justifying disbarment. People v. James, 731 P.2d 698 (Colo. 1987).

Conduct violating this rule, in conjunction with other disciplinary rules, sufficient to justify disbarment where the attorney continued to practice law while on suspension, repeatedly neglecting his clients and failing to take reasonable steps to protect clients' interests. People v. Fager, 938 P.2d 138 (Colo. 1997).

Multiple criminal and traffic convictions demonstrate a pattern of misconduct, and the presence of multiple offenses warrants suspension for six months with the requirement of reinstatement proceedings. People v. Van Buskirk, 962 P.2d 975 (Colo. 1998).

H. Failure to Respond to Grievance Committee.

Failure to answer a disciplinary complaint is itself a violation of the disciplinary rules. People v. Richards, 748 P.2d 341 (Colo. 1987).

Because an attorney has a duty to cooperate with disciplinary proceedings under this rule, default judgments are not subject to being set aside easily. In re Weisbard, 25 P.3d 24 (Colo. 2001).

Continued pattern of conduct involving neglect and misrepresentation. Attorney disbarred for continued pattern of conduct involving neglect and misrepresentation, and for failure to cooperate in investigation by grievance committee. People v. Young, 673 P.2d 1003 (Colo. 1984); People v. Johnston, 759 P.2d 10 (Colo. 1988).

Stipulation of deputy public defender that he failed to communicate with a client for seven months and failed to answer in a timely manner either the request for investigation or the formal complaint in the disciplinary matter, and his neglect of six separate professional matters over a three-year period warrant a 30-day suspension where substantial mitigating factors exist, including the absence of a prior disciplinary history, the absence of a selfish or dishonest motive, the presence of serious personal and emotional problems, a cooperative attitude throughout the disciplinary proceedings, a good character and professional reputation, the imposition of other penalties or sanctions, and the presence of remorse. People v. Bobbitt, 859 P.2d 902 (Colo. 1993).

Depositing personal funds into COLTAF account, paying personal bills from that account, and then knowingly failing to respond to the investigation into the use of the account justifies 60-day suspension with conditions of reinstatement. People v. Herrick, 191 P.3d 172 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2008).

Failure to respond to informal complaints constitutes failure to respond to a request by the grievance committee without good cause. People v. Quick, 716 P.2d 1082 (Colo. 1986).

Neglect of client matters, use of cocaine, and failure to respond to complaint and client correspondence warrant public censure in light of participation in comprehensive rehabilitation programs. People v. Driscoll, 716 P.2d 1086 (Colo. 1986).

Failure to take action on behalf of client in civil action, failure to advise client of claim, attempt to place property beyond the reach of creditors, and failure to cooperate in disciplinary proceedings justifies three-year suspension of attorney. People v. Baptie, 796 P.2d 978 (Colo. 1990).

Suspension for three years is appropriate where lawyer failed to respond to motions or appear at hearing, resulting in dismissal of clients' bankruptcy proceeding, thereby increasing clients' debts tenfold. The hearing board further found that the attorney engaged in bad faith obstruction of the disciplinary proceedings and refused to acknowledge the wrongful nature of his conduct or the vulnerability of his clients. People v. Farrant, 883 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1994).

Fabrication of administrative decision and settlement discussions to conceal respondent's failure to prosecute client's wage claim unnecessarily wasted grievance committee's time and resources, warranting increased period of suspension and relatively high assessment of costs. People v. Gaimara, 810 P.2d 1076 (Colo. 1991).

Disbarment appropriate remedy for attorney who neglected client's legal matter, failed to return retainer after being requested to do so, abandoned law practice, evaded process, and failed to respond to request of grievance committee. People v. Williams, 845 P.2d 1150 (Colo. 1993).

Disbarment appropriate remedy for attorney who neglected a legal matter, misappropriated funds and property, abandoned client, engaged in fraud, evaded process, and failed to cooperate in disciplinary investigation. People v. Hindman, 958 P.2d 463 (Colo. 1998).

Disbarment warranted for attorney who abandoned her law practice, disregarded court orders, made misrepresentations to her clients, and failed to respond or appear, with aggravating factors. People v. Valley, 960 P.2d 141 (Colo. 1998).

Rule 251.6. Forms of Discipline

Any of the following forms of discipline may be imposed in those cases where grounds for discipline have been established:

(a) Disbarment. Disbarment is the revocation of an attorney's license to practice law in this state, subject to readmission as provided by C.R.C.P. 251.29(a). Disbarment shall be for at least eight years;

(b) Suspension. Suspension is the temporary suspension of an attorney's license to practice law in this state, subject to reinstatement as provided in C.R.C.P. 251.29(b). Suspension, which may be stayed in whole or in part, shall be for a definite period of time not to exceed three years;

(c) Public Censure. Public censure is a reproach published with other grievance decisions and made available to the public; and

(d) Private Admonition. Private admonition is an unpublished reproach. An attorney who has been admonished by the committee and who wishes to challenge the order of admonition may, by written petition filed with the Regulation Counsel within 21 days after the date the letter of admonition was mailed to the admonished attorney or personally read to the attorney, demand as a matter of right that imposition of the admonition be vacated, that a complaint be filed against the attorney, and that disciplinary proceedings continue in the manner prescribed by these rules.

ANNOTATION

Annotator's note. The following annotations include cases decided under former provisions similar to this rule.

Constitutionality upheld. This rule provides sufficient guidelines to impose discipline to comply with due process of law. People v.

Morley, 725 P.2d 510 (Colo. 1986); People v. Varallo, 913 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1996).

Standards used in determining constitutional challenges. Same standards used in determining a constitutional challenge to a statute are used in determining constitutional challenge to this rule. People v. Morley, 725 P.2d 510 (Colo. 1986).

A statute passes constitutional muster for the purposes of imposing professional discipline if it prescribes the possible penalties that can be imposed for a violation of a statutory provision. People v. Morley, 725 P.2d 510 (Colo. 1986).

An attorney-at-law is an officer of court exercising a privilege or franchise to the enjoyment of which he has been admitted not as a matter of right, but upon proof of fitness through evidence of his possession of satisfactory legal attainments and fair private character. People v. Howard, 147 Colo. 501, 364 P.2d 380 (1961), cert. denied, 369 U.S. 819, 82 S. Ct. 830, 7 L. Ed. 2d 784 (1962).

An attorney is continually accountable to the court. People v. Howard, 147 Colo. 501, 364 P.2d 380 (1961), cert. denied, 369 U.S. 819, 82 S. Ct. 830, 7 L. Ed. 2d 784 (1962).

The privilege to practice law may at any time be declared forfeited for misconduct, whether professional or nonprofessional, as shows him to be an unfit or unsafe person to manage the business of others in the capacity of an attorney. People v. Howard, 147 Colo. 501, 364 P.2d 380 (1961), cert. denied, 369 U.S. 819, 82 S. Ct. 830, 7 L. Ed. 2d 784 (1962).

The power to declare a forfeiture of the privilege to practice is a summary one inherent in the courts and exists not to mete out punishment to an offender, but rather so that the administration of justice may be safeguarded and the courts and the public protected from the misconduct or unfitness of those who are licensed to perform the important functions of the legal profession. People v. Howard, 147 Colo. 501, 364 P.2d 380 (1961), cert. denied, 369 U.S. 819, 82 S. Ct. 830, 7 L. Ed. 2d 784 (1962).

It is not an adversary proceeding. People v. Howard, 147 Colo. 501, 364 P.2d 380 (1961), cert. denied, 369 U.S. 819, 82 S. Ct. 830, 7 L. Ed. 2d 784 (1962).

A hearing board always has discretion in determining the appropriate sanction for attorney misconduct and may impose any of the forms of discipline listed in this rule, which range from private admonition to disbarment. In re Attorney F, 2012 CO 57, 285 P.3d 322.

Hearing board erred, therefore, in concluding that it was compelled by case law to impose a public censure instead of private admonition. In re Attorney F, 2012 CO 57, 285 P.3d 322.

Where complaints are resolved against an attorney, the committee may recommend public censure. People v. Radinsky, 176 Colo. 357, 490 P.2d 951 (1971).

Disbarment is generally appropriate when a lawyer in an official or governmental position knowingly misuses the position with the intent to obtain a significant benefit or advantage for himself or another. People v. Brown, 726 P.2d 638 (Colo. 1986).

Disbarment held not to be excessive. Use of a license to practice law for the purpose of bringing into being an illegal prostitution enterprise renders disbarment the only possible from of discipline. Any lesser sanction would unduly depreciate such misconduct in the eyes of the public and the legal profession. People v. Morley, 725 P.2d 510 (Colo. 1986).

Disbarment may be recommended when attorney found guilty of crime. Where the committee finds that the nature of a crime of which an attorney has been found guilty is such as to render him an unfit person to be licensed to practice law, he therefore should be disbarred, and the committee recommend such disbarment. People v. Wilson, 176 Colo. 389, 490 P.2d 954 (1971).

Disciplinary recommendation of grievance committee is advisory only and is not binding on the supreme court. People v. Smith, 773 P.2d 528 Colo. 1989).

Disbarment was the only available remedy to protect the interest of the public where attorney had been afforded multiple opportunities including two suspensions and court ordered rehabilitation, and where attorney's conduct demonstrated (a) neglect of legal matters entrusted to him; (b) misrepresentation to his client and the grievance committee; and (c) a pattern of neglect followed by the respondent that had the potential of causing serious injury to his clients. People v. Susman, 787 P.2d 1119 (Colo. 1990).

Disbarment proper when attorney failed to timely answer complaint, put on evidence at hearing on amount of damages, answer amended complaint which included punitive damages that the court awarded and respond to grievance committee. The attorney had history of prior discipline for seriously neglecting client matters. Additional aggravating factors included the presence of multiple offenses, failing to cooperate in the disciplinary proceedings, and having substantial experience in the practice of law. There were no mitigating factors. In the Matter of Scott, 979 P.2d 572 (Colo. 1999).

Disbarment is appropriate, in the absence of aggravating or mitigating factors, where lawyer knowingly converts client property and deceives client with the intent to benefit the lawyer or another and causes serious injury to a client. People v. Mulligan, 817 P.2d 1028 (Colo. 1991).

Disbarment is the presumptive sanction for conversion of client funds. Where attorney knowingly converted, used, and failed to return client funds, disbarment was warranted. The attorney's failure to participate in disciplinary proceedings or present significant factors in mitigation further precluded any deviation from the presumptive sanction. People v. Young, 201 P.3d 1273 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2008).

In the absence of aggravating or mitigating circumstances, disbarment is generally appropriate when (a) a lawyer abandons the practice and causes serious or potentially serious injury to a client; or (b) a lawyer knowingly fails to perform services for a client and causes serious or potentially serious injury to a client; or (c) a lawyer engages in a pattern of neglect with respect to client matters and causes serious or potentially serious injury to a client. People v. Southern, 832 P.2d 946 (Colo. 1992).

The ultimate sanction for multiple charges of misconduct generally should be greater than the sanction for the most serious conduct. People v. Schubert, 799 P.2d 388 (Colo. 1990).

Court makes 90-day suspension consecutive to previously imposed one year and a day suspension where existing suspension imposed for unrelated conduct. In re Meyers, 981 P.2d 143 (Colo. 1999).

Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules is sufficient to warrant suspension. People v. Smith, 828 P.2d 249 (Colo. 1992).

Maximum period of suspension was warranted in light of multiple instances of misconduct and necessity for respondent to complete drug rehabilitation program. People v. Schubert, 799 P.2d 388 (Colo. 1990); People v. Driscoll, 830 P.2d 1019 (Colo. 1992).

Established facts demonstrating that attorney knowingly practiced law after he had been administratively suspended by Colorado supreme court for failing to comply with his CLE and attorney fee registration requirements merited short suspension of attorney from practice of law. Upon consideration of the nature of attorney's misconduct, his mental state, the potential harm he caused, the aggravating factors, and the absence of significant mitigating factors, the ABA standards for imposing lawyer sanctions and Colorado supreme court case law both support short suspension. Of particular salience here was attorney's failure to participate in disciplinary proceedings. People v. Swarts, 239 P.3d 441 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2010).

Attorney received suspension for charging excessive fee in another state. The action taken in the other state had resulted in the attorney's receipt of a one-year conditional suspension. Usually the court will impose the same discipline as that which was imposed in the foreign jurisdiction, but because Colorado does not provide for conditional suspensions public censure was deemed appropriate. People v. Nash, 873 P.2d 764 (Colo. 1994).

Applied in People v. Barbary, 164 Colo. 588, 437 P.2d 57 (1968); People v. Creasey, 811 P.2d 40 (Colo. 1991).

Rule 251.7. Probation

(a) Eligibility. When an attorney has demonstrated that the attorney:

(1) Is unlikely to harm the public during the period of probation and can be adequately supervised;

(2) Is able to perform legal services and is able to practice law without causing the courts or profession to fall into disrepute; and,

(3) Has not committed acts warranting disbarment, then the attorney may be placed on probation. Probation shall be imposed for a specified period of time in conjunction with a suspension which may be stayed in whole or in part. Such an order shall be regarded as an order of discipline. The period of probation shall not exceed three years unless an extension is granted upon motion by either party. A motion for an extension must be filed prior to the conclusion of the period originally specified.

(b) Conditions. The order placing an attorney on probation shall specify the conditions of probation. The conditions shall take into consideration the nature and circumstances of the attorney's misconduct and the history, character, and health status of the attorney and shall include no further violations of the Colorado Rules of Professional Conduct. The conditions may include but are not limited to the following:

(1) Making periodic reports to the Regulation Counsel or to the attorneys' peer assistance program as provided in subsection (d) of this Rule;

(2) Monitoring the attorney's practice or accounting procedures;

(3) Establishing a relationship with an attorney-mentor, and regular reporting with respect to the development of that relationship;

(4) Satisfactory completion of a course of study;

(5) Successful completion of the multi-state professional responsibility examination;

(6) Refund or restitution;

(7) Medical evaluation or treatment;
(8) Mental health evaluation or treatment;
(9) Evaluation or treatment in a program that specializes in treating disorders related to sexual misconduct;
(10) Evaluation or treatment in a program that specializes in treating matters relating to perpetration of family violence, including but not limited to domestic partner, elder, and child abuse;
(11) Substance abuse evaluation or treatment;
(12) Abstinence from alcohol and drugs; and
(13) No further violations of the Colorado Rules of Professional Conduct.

(c) Costs. The attorney shall also be responsible for all costs of evaluation, treatment and supervision. Failure to pay these costs prior to termination of probation shall constitute a violation of probation.

(d) Monitoring. The Regulation Counsel shall monitor the attorney's compliance with the conditions of probation imposed under these rules. When appropriate, the Regulation Counsel may delegate its monitoring role to the attorneys' peer assistance program. In cases in which the attorneys' peer assistance program is the designated monitor, regular reports regarding the progress of the attorney shall be submitted by the attorneys' peer assistance program to the Regulation Counsel.

(e) Violations. If, during the period the attorney is on probation, the Regulation Counsel receives information that any condition may have been violated, the Regulation Counsel may file a motion with the Presiding Disciplinary Judge specifying the alleged violation and seeking an order requiring the attorney to show cause why the stay should not be lifted and the sanction activated for violation of the condition. The filing of such a motion shall toll any period of suspension until final action. A hearing shall be held upon motion of either party before the Presiding Disciplinary Judge. At the hearing, the Regulation Counsel has the burden of establishing by a preponderance of the evidence the violation of a condition of probation. When, in a revocation hearing, the alleged violation of a condition is the attorney's failure to pay restitution or costs, the evidence of the failure to pay shall constitute prima facie evidence of a violation. Any evidence having probative value shall be received regardless of its admissibility under the rules of evidence if the attorney is accorded a fair opportunity to rebut hearsay evidence. At the conclusion of a hearing, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge shall prepare a report setting forth findings of fact and decision.

(f) Termination. Unless otherwise provided in the order of suspension, within 28 days and no less than 14 days prior to the expiration of the period of probation, the attorney shall file an affidavit with the Regulation Counsel stating that the attorney has complied with all terms of probation and shall file with the Presiding Disciplinary Judge notice and a copy of such affidavit and application for an order showing successful completion of the period of probation. Upon receipt of this notice and absent objection from the Regulation Counsel, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge shall issue an order showing that the period of probation was successfully completed. The order shall become effective upon the expiration of the period of probation.

(g) Independent Charges. A motion for revocation of an attorney's probation shall not preclude the Regulation Counsel from filing independent disciplinary charges based on the same conduct as alleged in the motion.

ANNOTATION

The expiration of a specific period of probation imposed on an attorney does not alone entitle that attorney to reinstatement to the unconditional practice of law. While the rule does not expressly state that the probationer remains on probation until an order of successful completion has issued, that is not only a probable, but in fact the necessary, implication of the requirement. In re Bass, 2013 CO 40, 307 P.3d 1052.

Applied in In re Green, 982 P.2d 838 (Colo. 1999).

Rule 251.8. Immediate Suspension

(a) Immediate Suspension. Immediate suspension is the temporary suspension by the Supreme Court of an attorney's license to practice law for a definite or indefinite period of time while proceedings conducted pursuant to this Rule and these Rules are pending against the attorney.

Although an attorney's license to practice law shall not ordinarily be suspended during the pendency of such proceedings, the Supreme Court may order the attorney's license to practice law immediately suspended when there is reasonable cause to believe that:

(1) the attorney is causing or has caused immediate and substantial public or private harm and the attorney:

(A) has been convicted of a serious crime as defined by C.R.C.P. 251.20(e);

(B) has converted property or funds;

(C) has abandoned clients; or

(D) has engaged in conduct which poses an immediate threat to the effective administration of justice.

(b) Petition for Immediate Suspension.

(1) When it is believed that an attorney should be immediately suspended, the committee or Regulation Counsel shall file a petition with the Presiding Disciplinary Judge. The petition shall be supported by an affidavit setting forth sufficient facts to give rise to reasonable cause that the alleged conduct has in fact occurred. A copy of the petition shall be served on the attorney pursuant to these Rules.

(2) The Presiding Disciplinary Judge, or the Supreme Court, by any justice thereof, may order the issuance of an order to show cause directing the attorney to show cause why the attorney should not be immediately suspended, which order shall be returnable within 14 days. After the issuance of an order to show cause, and after the period for response has passed without a response having been filed, or after consideration of any response and reply, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge shall prepare a report setting forth findings of fact and recommendation and file the report with the Supreme Court. After receipt of the report the Supreme Court may enter an order immediately suspending the attorney from the practice of law, or dissolve the order to show cause.

(3) If a response to the order to show cause is filed and the attorney requests a hearing on the petition, said hearing shall be held within 14 days before the Presiding Disciplinary Judge. Thereafter, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge shall submit a transcript of the hearing and a report setting forth findings of fact and a recommendation to the Supreme Court within 7 days after the conclusion of the hearing. Upon the receipt of the recommendation and the record relating thereto, the Supreme Court may enter an order immediately suspending the attorney from the practice of law or dissolve the order to show cause.

(4) When the Supreme Court enters an order immediately suspending the attorney, the Regulation Counsel shall promptly prepare and file a complaint against the attorney as provided in C.R.C.P. 251.14, notwithstanding the provisions of C.R.C.P. 251.10 and C.R.C.P. 251.12. Thereafter the matter shall proceed as provided by these Rules.

(5) An attorney who has been immediately suspended pursuant to this Rule shall have the right to request an accelerated disposition of the allegations which form the bases for the immediate suspension by filing a notice with the Regulation Counsel requesting accelerated disposition. After the notice has been filed, the Regulation Counsel shall promptly file a complaint pursuant to these Rules and the matter shall be docketed by the Presiding Disciplinary Judge for accelerated disposition. Thereafter the matter shall proceed and be concluded without appreciable delay.

ANNOTATION

Annotator's note. The following annotations include cases decided under former C.R.C.P. 259, which was similar to this rule.

Applied in People v. McMichael, 199 Colo. 433, 609 P.2d 633 (1980); People v. Harfmann, 638 P.2d 745 (Colo. 1981); In re Green, 982 P.2d 838 (Colo. 1999).

Rule 251.8.5. Suspension for Nonpayment of Child Support, or for Failure to Comply with Warrants Relating to Paternity or Child Support Proceedings

(a) Application. The provisions of this rule shall apply to an attorney licensed or admitted to practice law in Colorado who is in arrears in payment of child support or who is in arrears under a child support order as defined by section 26-13-123 (a), C.R.S., or who fails to comply with a warrant relating to paternity or child support proceedings.

Proceedings commenced against an attorney under the provisions of this rule are not disciplinary proceedings. Suspension of an attorney's license to practice law under the provisions of this rule is not a form of discipline, and shall not necessarily bar disciplinary action.

(b) Petition for Suspension.

(1) Upon receipt of reliable information that an attorney is in arrears in payment under a child support order, or has failed to comply with subpoenas or warrants relating to paternity or child support proceedings, regulation counsel may file a petition for suspension with the presiding disciplinary judge. The petition shall be supported by an affidavit setting forth sufficient facts to give rise to reasonable cause to believe that the attorney is in arrears on a child support order, or has failed to comply with a subpoena or a warrant relating to paternity or child support proceedings. A copy of the petition shall be served on the attorney pursuant to these rules.

(2) The presiding disciplinary judge shall order the issuance of an order to show cause directing the attorney to show cause why the attorney's license to practice law should not be immediately suspended, which order shall be returnable within 28 days. After the issuance of an order to show cause, and after the period for response has passed without a response having been filed, or after consideration of any response and reply, the presiding disciplinary judge shall enter an order immediately suspending the attorney from the practice of law, unless within the 28-day period: the attorney has paid the past-due obligation, negotiated a payment plan approved by the court or the state child support enforcement agency or agency having jurisdiction over the child support order, requested a hearing before the presiding disciplinary judge, or complied with the warrant or subpoena.

(3) If a response to the order to show cause is timely filed and the attorney or the regulation counsel requests a hearing before the presiding disciplinary judge on the petition, the hearing shall be held within 14 days of the request, or as soon thereafter as is practicable. At the hearing, the burden is initially on the regulation counsel to prove the allegations in the petition by a preponderance of the evidence. If the presiding disciplinary judge has determined that the regulation counsel has proved the allegations in the petition by a preponderance of the evidence, he or she shall issue an order immediately suspending the attorney, unless the attorney proves by a preponderance of the evidence that: (1) there is a mistake in the identity of the attorney; (2) there is a bona fide disagreement currently before a court or an agency concerning the amount of the child support debt, arrearage balance, retroactive support due, or the amount of the past-due child support when combined with maintenance; (3) all child support payments were made when due; (4) the attorney has complied with the subpoena or warrant; (5) the attorney was not served with the subpoena or warrant; or (6) there was a technical defect with the subpoena or warrant. No evidence with respect to the appropriateness of the underlying child support order or ability of the attorney in arrears to comply with such order shall be received or considered by the presiding disciplinary judge. Upon conclusion of the hearing, the presiding disciplinary judge shall promptly prepare an opinion setting forth his or her findings of facts and decision.

(c) Appeal. For purposes of this rule, the decision of the presiding disciplinary judge shall be final, and an appeal may be commenced as set forth in C.R.C.P. 251.26.

(d) Reinstatement.

(1) If, after an attorney's license has been suspended, the attorney has paid the past-due obligations, entered into a payment plan approved by the court or the agency having jurisdiction over the child support order, or complied with the warrant or subpoena, the attorney may seek reinstatement by filing a verified petition, with evidence of compliance, with the presiding disciplinary judge.

(2) Immediately upon receipt of a petition for reinstatement, the regulation counsel shall have 28 days or, upon a showing of good cause, such greater time as authorized by the presiding disciplinary judge within which to conduct any investigation deemed necessary. The attorney shall cooperate in any such investigation. At the end of the period of time allowed for the investigation, the regulation counsel shall file an answer. Based on the petition and answer, the presiding disciplinary judge may order reinstatement or hold a hearing to determine whether the attorney shall be reinstated. The attorney shall bear the burden of establishing the right to be reinstated by a preponderance of the evidence.

(3) If the petition for reinstatement is denied by the presiding disciplinary judge, the attorney may proceed pursuant to C.R.C.P. 251.26.

Rule 251.8.6. Suspension for Failure to Cooperate

(a) Application. The provisions of this rule shall apply in all cases where there is a request for investigation pending against an attorney under these rules, alleging serious misconduct. If the attorney fails to cooperate either by failing to respond to the request for investigation or by failing to produce information or records requested by Regulation Counsel, then Regulation Counsel may file a petition for suspension of the attorney's license to practice law. Proceedings commenced against an attorney under the provisions of this rule are not disciplinary proceedings. Suspension of an attorney's license to practice law under the provisions of this rule is not a form of discipline, and shall not necessarily bar disciplinary action.

(b) Petition for Suspension. Regulation Counsel may file a petition for suspension with the supreme court alleging that the attorney has not responded to requests for information, has not responded to the request for investigation, or has not produced records or documents requested by Regulation Counsel and has not interposed a good-faith objection to producing the records or documents. The petition shall be supported by an affidavit setting forth sufficient facts to give rise to reasonable cause to believe that the serious misconduct alleged in the request for investigation has in fact occurred. The affidavit shall also include the efforts undertaken by Regulation Counsel to obtain the attorney's cooperation. A copy of the petition shall be served on the attorney pursuant to C.R.C.P. 251.32(b). The failure of the attorney to file a response in opposition to the petition within 14 days may result in the entry of an order suspending the attorney's license to practice law until further order of the court. The attorney's response shall set forth facts showing that the attorney has complied with the requests, or the reasons why the attorney has not complied and may request a hearing.

Upon consideration of a petition for suspension and the attorney's response, if any, the supreme court may suspend the attorney's license to practice law for an indefinite period pending further order of the court; it may deny the petition; or it may issue any other appropriate orders. If a response to the petition is filed and the attorney requests a hearing on the petition, the supreme court may conduct such a hearing or it may refer the matter to the presiding disciplinary judge for resolution of contested factual matters. The presiding disciplinary judge shall submit a report setting forth findings of fact and a recommendation to the supreme court within 7 days of the conclusion of the hearing.

(c) Reinstatement. An attorney suspended under this rule may apply to the supreme court for reinstatement upon proof of compliance with the requests of Regulation Counsel as alleged in the petition, or as otherwise ordered by the court. A copy of the application must be delivered to Regulation Counsel, who may file a response to the application within two business days after being served with a copy of the application for reinstatement. The supreme court will summarily reinstate an attorney suspended under the provisions of this Rule upon proof of compliance with the requests of Regulation Counsel.

COMMENT

This rule addresses problems caused by relatively few attorneys who fail to cooperate with the regulation counsel after a request for investigation has been filed against the attorney. In general, it would not apply after formal proceedings have been commenced against the attorney by the filing of a complaint. The rule would still apply, however, even after formal proceedings have begun, with respect to matters outside of the complaint.

Suspension under the rule is not discipline. In this sense, it is similar to a summary administrative suspension for failing to pay the attorney registration fee or to file a registration statement, see C.R.C.P. 227(A)(4), or for noncompliance with mandatory continuing legal education requirements, see C.R.C.P. 260.6. It is also similar to a suspension for nonpayment of child support, see C.R.C.P. 251.8.5, except resort in the first instance is made to the supreme court rather than the presiding disciplinary judge. Like those other rules, the intent of this rule is to ensure that an attorney complies with the requirements of the rules governing the legal profession, in this case the attorney's duty to cooperate with regulation counsel in the investigation of a request for investigation. See C.R.C.P. 251.1(a); C.R.C.P. 251.5(d); Colo. RPC 8.4(d). By this rule, the supreme court intends to facilitate communication between the attorney and regulation counsel. The rule is not designed to threaten or punish lawyers who have a good reason for not complying with regulation counsel's request, such as an inability to comply or possession of a good-faith objection to production. For example, an attorney will not be suspended under this rule merely because the attorney is out of the office on vacation.

Rule 251.9. Request for Investigation

(a) Commencement. Proceedings as provided in these Rules shall be commenced:

(1) Upon a request for investigation made by any person and directed to the Regulation Counsel; or

(2) Upon a report made by a judge of any court of record of this state and directed to the Regulation Counsel, as provided in C.R.C.P. 251.4;

(3) By the committee upon its own motion; or

(4) By the Regulation Counsel with the concurrence of the Chair or Vice-Chair of the committee.

(b) Determination to Proceed. Immediately upon receipt of a request for investigation, a report made by a judge, or a motion made by the committee, as provided in subsection (a) of this Rule, the matter shall be referred to the Regulation Counsel to determine:

(1) If the attorney in question is subject to the disciplinary jurisdiction of the Supreme Court;

(2) If there is an allegation made against the attorney in question which, if proved, would constitute grounds for discipline; and

(3) If the matter should be investigated as provided by C.R.C.P. 251.10 or addressed by means of an alternative to discipline as provided by C.R.C.P. 251.13.

In making a determination whether to proceed, the Regulation Counsel may make inquiry regarding the underlying facts and consult with the Chair of the committee. The decision of the Regulation Counsel shall be final, and the complaining witness shall have no right to appeal.

Rule 251.10. Investigation of Allegations

(a) When Commenced. If, pursuant to C.R.C.P. 251.9, the Regulation Counsel makes a determination to proceed with an investigation, the Regulation Counsel shall give the attorney in question written notice that the attorney is under investigation and of the general nature of the allegations made against the attorney. The attorney in question shall file with the Regulation Counsel a written response to the allegations made against the attorney within 21 days after notice of the investigation is given.

Upon receipt of the attorney's response, or at the expiration of the 21-day period if no response is received, the matter shall be assigned to an Investigator for investigation and report.

(b) Procedures for Investigation.

(1) The Investigator. A member of the committee, the Regulation Counsel, a member of the Regulation Counsel's staff, or an attorney enlisted pursuant to C.R.C.P. 251.2(b)(1) may act as Investigator. The Investigator shall expeditiously conduct an investigation of the allegations made against the attorney in question.

(2) Procurement of Evidence During Investigation. In the course of an investigation conducted pursuant to these Rules, the Investigator, acting pursuant to and in conformity with these Rules, shall have the power to administer oaths and affirmations.

In connection with an investigation of allegations made against an attorney, the Chair of the committee or the Regulation Counsel may issue subpoenas to compel the attendance of witnesses, including the attorney in question, and the production of pertinent books, papers, documents, or other evidence in proceedings before the Investigator. All such subpoenas shall be subject to the provisions of C.R.C.P. 45. Any challenge to the power to subpoena as exercised pursuant to this Rule shall be directed to the Presiding Disciplinary Judge.

Any person who fails or refuses to comply with a subpoena issued pursuant to this Rule may be cited for contempt of the Supreme Court.

Any person who knowingly obstructs the Regulation Counsel or the committee or any part thereof in the performance of their duties may be cited for contempt of the Supreme Court.

Any person having been duly sworn to testify who refuses to answer any proper question may be cited for contempt of the Supreme Court.

A contempt citation may be issued by the Supreme Court upon recommendation of the Presiding Disciplinary Judge. A copy of the recommendation, together with the findings of fact made by the Presiding Disciplinary Judge surrounding the contemptuous conduct, shall be filed with the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court shall then determine whether to impose contempt.

(3) Investigator's Report. When the Investigator is not a member of the Regulation Counsel's staff, the Investigator shall submit a written report of investigation and recommendation to the committee for a determination as provided in C.R.C.P. 251.12. If the Investigator is a member of the Regulation Counsel's staff, the matter shall be submitted as provided in C.R.C.P. 252.11.

(4) Conditional Admission. While the matter is under investigation, the attorney in question and the Regulation Counsel may tender an agreed upon conditional admission of misconduct as provided in C.R.C.P. 251.22 to the committee when the form of discipline is no greater than a private admonition. When the form of discipline is greater than a private admonition or, if a range of disciplinary measures is specified in the conditional admission, then the conditional admission shall be tendered to the Presiding Disciplinary Judge. When a conditional admission is tendered pursuant to this Rule, the person acting as Investigator may forego submitting a written report of investigation and recommendation to the committee as provided in subsection (3) of this Rule.

ANNOTATION

Attorney under investigation is a "party" to the investigative proceedings and, therefore, entitled, as required by the specific discovery provisions of the rules of civil procedure, to notice of the investigative subpoena and subpoena documents. Given the plain language of the rules, present and historic interpretation by attorney regulation counsel (ARC) of the rules, and the implications of a contrary interpretation that would render other rules in attorney discipline system moot and create a secretive system that discourages informal resolution of discipline claims, Attorney E was a ''party'' in his own investigation. Accordingly, ARC appropriately followed the specific provisions of C.R.C.P. 45, 26(a)(1)(B), and 30 by providing the attorney with notice of its subpoena and the documents produced from that subpoena. In re Attorney E, 78 P.3d 300 (Colo. 2003).

Rule 251.11. Determination by the Regulation Counsel

During the investigation or at the conclusion thereof, the Regulation Counsel may determine that the matter should be diverted to the alternatives to discipline program as provided in C.R.C.P. 251.13.

At the conclusion of an investigation of a matter that has not been diverted, the Regulation Counsel shall either dismiss the allegations or report to the committee for a determination as provided in C.R.C.P. 251.12. If the Regulation Counsel dismisses the allegations as provided herein, the person making the allegations against the attorney in question may request review of the Regulation Counsel's decision. If review is requested, the committee shall review the matter and make a determination as provided by C.R.C.P. 251.12; provided, however, that the committee shall sustain the dismissal unless it determines that the Regulation Counsel's determination constituted an abuse of discretion. When the committee sustains a dismissal, it shall furnish the person making the allegations with a written explanation of its determination.

Rule 251.12. Determination by the Committee

If, at the conclusion of an investigation, the Regulation Counsel believes that the committee should order private admonition imposed or authorize the Regulation Counsel to prepare and file a complaint, the Regulation Counsel shall submit a report of investigation and recommendation to the committee, which shall determine whether there is reasonable cause to believe grounds for discipline exist and shall either:

(a) Direct the Regulation Counsel or other investigator appointed pursuant to C.R.C.P. 251.2(b)(1) to conduct further investigation;

(b) Dismiss the allegations and furnish the person making the allegations with a written explanation of its determination;

(c) Divert the matter to the alternatives to discipline program as provided by C.R.C.P. 251.13;

(d) Order private admonition imposed; or

(e) Authorize the Regulation Counsel to prepare and file a complaint against the attorney.

In determining whether to authorize the Regulation Counsel to file a complaint, the committee shall consider the following:

(1) Whether it is reasonable to believe that misconduct warranting discipline can be proved by clear and convincing evidence;

(2) The level of injury;

(3) Whether the attorney previously has been disciplined; and

(4) Whether the conduct in question is generally considered to warrant the commencement of disciplinary proceedings because it involves misrepresentation, conversion or commingling of funds, acts of violence, or criminal or other misconduct that ordinarily would result in public censure, suspension or disbarment.

ANNOTATION

The rule does not require that the attorney regulation committee's authorization for a complaint set forth, with particularity or otherwise, the grounds for discipline with which the respondent is to be charged. People v. Kanwal, 2014 CO 20, 321 P.3d 494.

Rule 251.13. Alternatives to Discipline

(a) Referral to Program. The Regulation Counsel, the committee, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge, a Hearing Board, or the Supreme Court may offer diversion to the alternatives to discipline program to the attorney. The alternatives to discipline program may include, but is not limited to, diversion or other programs such as mediation, fee arbitration, law office management assistance, evaluation and treatment through the attorneys' peer assistance program, evaluation and treatment for substance abuse, psychological evaluation and treatment, medical evaluation and treatment, monitoring of the attorney's practice or accounting procedures, continuing legal education, ethics school, the multistate professional responsibility examination, or any other program authorized by the Court.

(b) Participation in the Program. As an alternative to a form of discipline, an attorney may participate in an approved diversion program in cases where there is little likelihood that the attorney will harm the public during the period of participation, where the Regulation Counsel can adequately supervise the conditions of diversion, and where participation in the program is likely to benefit the attorney and accomplish the goals of the program. A matter generally will not be diverted under this Rule when:

(1) The presumptive form of discipline in the matter is likely to be greater than public censure;

(2) The misconduct involves misappropriation of funds or property of a client or a third party;

(3) The misconduct involves a serious crime as defined by C.R.C.P. 251.20(e);

(4) The misconduct involves family violence;

(5) The misconduct resulted in or is likely to result in actual injury (loss of money, legal rights, or valuable property rights) to a client or other person, unless restitution is made a condition of diversion;

(6) The attorney has been publicly disciplined in the last three years;

(7) The matter is of the same nature as misconduct for which the attorney has been disciplined in the last five years;

(8) The misconduct involves dishonesty, deceit, fraud, or misrepresentation; or

(9) The misconduct is part of a pattern of similar misconduct.

(c) Diversion Agreement. If an attorney agrees to an offer of diversion as provided by this rule, the terms of the diversion shall be set forth in a written agreement. If the agreement is entered prior to a determination to proceed is made pursuant to C.R.C.P. 251.9, the agreement shall be between the attorney and Regulation Counsel. If diversion is offered and entered after a determination to proceed is made pursuant to C.R.C.P. 251.9 but before authorization to file a complaint, the diversion agreement between the attorney and Regulation Counsel shall be submitted to the committee for consideration. If the committee rejects the diversion agreement, the matter shall proceed as otherwise provided by these Rules. If diversion is offered and entered after a complaint has been filed pursuant to C.R.C.P. 251.14, the diversion agreement shall be submitted to the Presiding Disciplinary Judge or Supreme Court, whichever body before which the matter is pending for consideration. If the diversion agreement is rejected, the matter shall proceed as provided by these Rules.

The agreement shall specify the program(s) to which the attorney shall be diverted, the general purpose of the division, the manner in which compliance is to be monitored, and any requirement for payment of restitution or cost.

(d) Costs of the Diversion. The attorney shall pay all the costs incurred in connection with participation in any diversion program. The attorney shall also pay the administrative cost of the proceeding as set by the Supreme Court.

(e) Effect of Diversion. When the recommendation for diversion becomes final, the attorney shall enter into the diversion program(s) and complete the requirements thereof. Upon the attorney's entry into the diversion programs(s), the underlying matter shall be placed in abeyance, indicating diversion. Diversion shall not constitute a form of discipline.

(f) Effect of Successful Completion of the Diversion Program. If diversion is entered prior to a determination to proceed is made pursuant to C.R.C.P. 251.9(b)(3), and if Regulation Counsel determines that the attorney has successfully completed all requirements of the diversion program, the Regulation Counsel shall close the file. If diversion is successfully completed in a matter that was determined to warrant investigation or other proceedings pursuant to these Rules, the matter shall be dismissed and expunged pursuant to C.R.C.P. 251.33(d). After the file is expunged, the attorney may respond to any general inquiry as provided in C.R.C.P. 251.33(d).

(g) Breach of Diversion Agreement. The determination of a breach of a diversion agreement will be as follows:

(1) If the Regulation Counsel has reason to believe that the attorney has breached the diversion agreement, and the diversion agreement was entered prior to a decision to proceed pursuant to C.R.C.P. 251.9(b), and after the attorney has had an opportunity to respond, Regulation Counsel may elect to modify the diversion agreement or terminate the diversion agreement and proceed with the matter as provided by these rules.

(2) If Regulation Counsel has reason to believe that the attorney has breached the diversion agreement after a determination to proceed has been made, then the matter shall be referred to the Presiding Disciplinary Judge or Supreme Court, whichever body approved the diversion agreement, with an opportunity for the attorney to respond. The Regulation Counsel will have the burden by a preponderance of the evidence to establish the materiality of the breach, and the attorney will have the burden by a preponderance of the evidence to establish justification for the breach. If after consideration of the information presented by the Regulation Counsel and the attorney's response, if any, it is determined that the breach was material without justification, the agreement will be terminated and the matter will proceed as provided for by these rules. If a breach is established but determined to be not material or to be with justification, the diversion agreement may be modified in light of the breach. If no breach is found, the matter shall proceed pursuant to the terms of the original diversion agreement.

(3) If the matter has been referred for determination to the committee, Presiding Disciplinary Judge, or the Supreme Court as provided for in section (g)(2) of this rule, upon motion of either party, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge shall hold a hearing on the matter. Upon conclusion of the hearing, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge shall prepare written findings of fact and conclusions and enter an appropriate order in those matters in which the Presiding Disciplinary Judge originally approved the diversion agreement. If the hearing is requested in a matter pending before the committee or Supreme Court for consideration, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge shall prepare findings of fact and recommendations and forward them to the body which originally approved the diversion agreement for its determination of the matter.

(h) Effect of Rejection of Recommendation for Diversion. If an Attorney rejects a diversion recommendation, the matter shall proceed as otherwise provided in these Rules.

(i) Confidentiality. All the files and records resulting from the diversion of a matter shall not be made public except by order of the Supreme Court. Information of misconduct admitted by the attorney to a treatment provider or a monitor while in a diversion program is confidential if the misconduct occurred before the attorney's entry into a diversion program.

Rule 251.14. Complaint — Contents, Service

(a) Contents of Complaint. Complaints seeking to establish grounds for discipline of an attorney shall be filed as provided by these Rules with the Presiding Disciplinary Judge. An original and three copies of the complaint shall be filed.

The complaint shall set forth clearly and with particularity the grounds for discipline with which the respondent is charged and the conduct of the respondent which gave rise to those charges. All disciplinary and disability proceedings filed as herein provided shall be conducted in the name of the People of the State of Colorado and shall be prosecuted by the Regulation Counsel.

(b) Service of Complaint. The Regulation Counsel shall promptly serve upon the respondent, as provided in C.R.C.P. 251.32(b), a citation and a copy of the complaint filed against the respondent. The citation shall require the respondent within 21 days after service thereof to file an original and three copies of a written answer to the complaint, in compliance with C.R.C.P. 251.15.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, "Statutes and Cases Concerning Unauthorized Practice of Law in Colorado", see 24 Dicta 257 (1947). For note, "Standards of Discipline for Attorneys in Colorado and the Significance of the Code of Professional Responsibility", see 50 Den. L.J. 207 (1973).

Consideration of charges not made in formal complaint against an attorney constitutes a violation of the respondent's rights to procedural due process of law. People v. Emeson, 638 P.2d 293 (Colo. 1981) (decided under former C.R.C.P. 247).

The rule does not require that a complaint limit the sanctions to which a person may be exposed or the precise elements upon which particular sanctions may depend. The rule could not require this given both the diverse nature of possible grounds for discipline and the multiplicity of considerations upon which particular discipline may ultimately depend. People v. Kanwal, 2014 CO 20, 321 P.3d 494.

Board's findings that attorney engaged in dishonest conduct in collection matter contravened requirement that the grounds for discipline be set forth "clearly and with particularity." The complaint and the issues identified for hearing did not adequately place the attorney on notice that he had violated the disciplinary rules prohibiting dishonest conduct. A proper charge of dishonesty would have identified conduct constituting violation of C.R.P.C. 4.1(a) (making a false statement of material fact or law to a third person) or 8.4(c) (engaging in conduct involving dishonesty, deceit, fraud, or misrepresentation); not 8.4(g) (engaging in conduct violating accepted standards of legal ethics). In re Quiat, 979 P.2d 1029 (Colo. 1999) (decided under rule in effect prior to the 1999 repeal and reenactment).

Rule 251.15. Answer — Filing, Failure to Answer, Default

(a) Answer. Within 21 days after service of the citation and complaint, or within such greater period of time as may be approved by the Presiding Disciplinary Judge, the respondent shall file an original and three copies of an answer to the complaint with the Presiding Disciplinary Judge and one copy with the Regulation Counsel. In the answer the respondent shall either admit or deny every material allegation contained in the complaint, or request that the allegation be set forth with greater particularity. In addition, the respondent shall set forth in the answer any affirmative defenses. Any objection to the complaint which a respondent may assert, including a challenge to the complaint for failure to charge misconduct constituting grounds for discipline, must also be set forth in the answer.

(b) Failure to Answer, and Default. If the respondent fails to file an answer within the period provided by subsection (a) of this Rule, the Regulation Counsel shall file a motion for default with the Presiding Disciplinary Judge. Thereafter, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge shall enter a default and the complaint shall be deemed admitted; provided, however, that a respondent who fails to file a timely answer may, upon a showing that the failure to answer was the result of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, obtain leave of the Presiding Disciplinary Judge to file an answer.

Notwithstanding the entry of a default, the Regulation Counsel shall give the respondent notice of the final hearing, at which the respondent may appear and present arguments to the Hearing Board regarding the form of discipline to be imposed.

Thereafter, the Hearing Board shall review all pleadings, arguments, and the report of investigation and shall prepare a report setting forth its findings of fact and its decision as provided in C.R.C.P. 251.19.

If, however, after the entry of default neither the respondent nor Regulation Counsel timely requests a hearing before the Hearing Board, then the sanctions hearing shall be held solely before the Presiding Disciplinary Judge.

ANNOTATION

Annotator's note. The following annotations include cases decided under former C.R.C.P. 241.13, which was similar to this rule.

Both the charges and the well-pleaded facts are deemed admitted by the entry of a default judgment. People v. Richards, 748 P.2d 341 (Colo. 1987); People v. Young, 201 P.3d 1273 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2008).

The allegations of fact were deemed admitted where attorney did not answer the complaint filed in the case and the hearing board entered a default against him. People v. Davies, 926 P.2d 572 (Colo. 1996); In re Demaray, 8 P.3d 427 (Colo. 1999).

A motion to set aside a default because the respondent failed to file a timely answer under this rule can be analogized to a motion under C.R.C.P. 60 (b)(1). The decision to grant relief is entrusted to the sound discretion of the trial court and will not be disturbed on appeal unless there is an abuse of discretion. In re Weisbard, 25 P.3d 24 (Colo. 2001).

In a motion to set aside a default judgment, the movant bears the burden of proving the grounds for relief by clear, strong, and satisfactory proof. In re Weisbard, 25 P.3d 24 (Colo. 2001).

Because an attorney has a duty to cooperate with disciplinary proceedings, default judgments are not subject to being set aside easily. In re Weisbard, 25 P.3d 24 (Colo. 2001).

In setting aside a default judgment on the grounds of excusable neglect, the court must determine: Whether the neglect causing the default was excusable; whether the movant has alleged a meritorious defense; and whether relief from the order would be equitable. In re Weisbard, 25 P.3d 24 (Colo. 2001).

Failure to act because of carelessness and negligence is not excusable neglect. In re Weisbard, 25 P.3d 24 (Colo. 2001).

Applied in People v. Moore, 681 P.2d 480 (Colo. 1984); People v. Stauffer, 745 P.2d 240 (Colo. 1987); People v. Jacobson, 747 P.2d 654 (Colo. 1987); People v. Dohe, 800 P.2d 71 (Colo. 1990); People v. Ashley, 817 P.2d 965 (Colo. 1991); People v. Rouse, 817 P.2d 967 (Colo. 1991); People v. (3) Order the parties in disciplinary proceedings to attend a settlement conference;

(4) Impose discipline on an attorney or transfer an attorney to disability inactive status as provided in these Rules;

(5) Periodically report to the Advisory Committee and the management committee on the operation of the office of the Presiding Disciplinary Judge;

(7) Adopt such practices as may from time to time become necessary to govern the internal operation of the office of the Presiding Disciplinary Judge, as approved by the Supreme Court.

(8) Preside over contempt proceedings initiated under these Rules and C.R.C.P. 107 when appropriate.

(9) Preside over sanctions hearings pursuant to C.R.C.P. 251.15(b) and C.R.C.P. 251.19(c).

(d) Abstention. The Presiding Disciplinary Judge shall refrain from taking part in any proceedings in which a judge, similarly situated, would be required to abstain. No partner or associate in the law firm of the Presiding Disciplinary Judge, or any attorney in any way affiliated with the Presiding Disciplinary Judge or the Judge's law firm, may accept or continue in employment connected with any matter pending before the committee, the Judge, or a Hearing Board as long as the Judge is serving as the Presiding Disciplinary Judge.

(e) Disqualification. Presiding Disciplinary Judges shall not represent an attorney in any matter as provided in these Rules during their terms of service. Rule 251.17. Hearing Board

(a) Hearing Board. Hearing Boards are hereby established and empowered to act in accordance with these Rules.

(1) Members. The Supreme Court shall appoint a diverse pool of members of the Bar of Colorado and members of the public to serve as members of Hearing Boards. Persons appointed shall serve terms of six years. Terms shall be staggered to provide, so far as possible, for the expiration each year of the terms of an equal number of persons.

Persons appointed shall serve at the pleasure of the Supreme Court and may be dismissed from service at any time by order of the Supreme Court. Persons appointed may resign at any time.

(2) Vacancy. In the event of vacancies on the list of Hearing Board members, the Supreme Court shall, with the assistance of the Advisory Committee, appoint new persons to the list to serve on Hearing Boards.

(3) Reimbursement. Members of Hearing Boards shall be entitled to reimbursement for reasonable travel, lodging, and other expenses incurred in the performance of their official duties.

(b) Abstention of Members. Members of Hearing Boards shall refrain from taking part in any proceedings in which a judge, similarly situated, would be required to abstain. No partner or associate in the law firm of a member of the Hearing Board, or any attorney in any way affiliated with a member of the Hearing Board or the member's law firm, may accept or continue in employment connected with any matter pending before the Hearing Board on which the member is serving.

(c) Disqualification. Members of Hearing Boards shall not represent an attorney in any matter as provided in these Rules during their terms of service.

Rule 251.18. Hearings Before the Hearing Board

(a) Notice. Not less than 56 days (8 weeks) before the date set for the hearing of a complaint, the Regulation Counsel shall give notice of such hearing as provided in C.R.C.P. 251.32(b) to the respondent, or the respondent's counsel, and to the complaining witness. The notice shall designate the date, place, and time of the hearing. The notice shall also advise the respondent that the respondent is entitled to be represented by counsel at the hearing, to cross-examine witnesses, and to present evidence in the respondent's own behalf.

The notice shall also advise the complaining witness that the complaining witness has a right to be present at the hearing and if there is a finding of misconduct to make a statement, orally or in writing, regarding the form of discipline.

(b) Designation of a Hearing Board.

(1) All hearings on complaints seeking disciplinary action against a respondent shall be conducted by a Hearing Board except as provided in subsection (b)(3). A Hearing Board shall consist of the Presiding Disciplinary Judge and two other members, one of whom shall be an attorney, who are to be selected at random from the pool of Hearing Board Members by the clerk for the Presiding Disciplinary Judge. If the Presiding Disciplinary Judge has been disqualified, then a presiding officer shall be selected at random from among the attorneys on the list of Hearing Board members. The presiding officer shall, in all respects, act in accordance with these Rules.

(2) The Presiding Disciplinary Judge or the presiding officer shall rule on all motions, objections, and other matters presented after a complaint is filed and in the course of a hearing.

(3) Once a default has been entered against a respondent, the respondent or Regulation Counsel has 28 days after notice of the default order to request a sanctions hearing before a three-person Hearing Board. The party requesting this hearing shall send notice of such request, in writing, to the Presiding Disciplinary Judge and the opposing party. If neither party requests a sanctions hearing before a three-person Hearing Board, the sanction shall be decided by the Presiding Disciplinary Judge.

(c) Prehearing Conference. At the discretion of the Presiding Disciplinary Judge, a prehearing conference may be ordered.

(d) Procedure and Proof. Except as otherwise provided in these Rules, hearings and all matters commencing with filing the complaint as provided in C.R.C.P. 251.14 shall be conducted in conformity with the Colorado Rules of Civil Procedure, the Colorado Rules of Evidence, and the practice in this state in the trial of civil cases; provided, however, that proof shall be by clear and convincing evidence, and provided further that the respondent may not be required to testify or to produce records over the respondent's objection if to do so would be in violation of the respondent's constitutional privilege against self-incrimination.

In the course of proceedings conducted pursuant to this Rule, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge or the Presiding Officer, acting pursuant to and in conformity with these Rules, shall have the power to administer oaths and affirmations.

A complete record shall be made of all depositions and of all testimony taken at hearings before a Hearing Board.

(e) Order for Examination. When the mental or physical condition of the attorney in question has become an issue in the proceeding, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge, on motion of the Regulation Counsel, may order the attorney to submit to a physical or mental examination by a suitable licensed or certified examiner. The order may be made only upon a determination that reasonable cause exists and after notice to the attorney. The attorney will be provided the opportunity to respond to the motion of the Regulation Counsel, and the attorney may request a hearing before the Presiding Disciplinary Judge. If requested, the hearing shall be held within 28 days of the date of the attorney's request, and shall be limited to the issue of whether reasonable cause exists for such an order.

(f) Procurement of Evidence During Hearing.

(1) Subpoena. In the course of a hearing conducted pursuant to these Rules, and upon the petition of any party to the hearing, the clerk of the Presiding Disciplinary Judge may, for the use of a party, issue subpoenas to compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of pertinent books, papers, documents, or other evidence.

Witnesses shall be entitled to receive fees for mileage as provided by law for witnesses in civil actions.

(2) Quashing a Subpoena. Any challenge to the power to subpoena as exercised pursuant to this Rule shall be directed to the Presiding Disciplinary Judge or the Presiding Officer of the Hearing Board.

(3) Contempt. Any person who fails or refuses to comply with a subpoena issued pursuant to these Rules may be cited for contempt of the Supreme Court.

Any person who by misbehavior obstructs the Hearing Board or any part thereof in the performance of its duties may be cited for contempt of the Supreme Court.

Any person having been duly sworn to testify who refuses to answer any proper question may be cited for contempt of the Supreme Court.

A contempt citation may be issued by the Presiding Disciplinary Judge or the presiding officer. A copy of the contempt citation, together with the findings of fact made by the Presiding Disciplinary Judge or the presiding officer surrounding the contempt, shall be filed with the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court shall then determine whether to impose contempt.

(4) Discovery.

(A) Purpose and Scope. Rules 16 and 26 of the Colorado Rules of Civil Procedure shall not apply to proceedings conducted pursuant to these Rules. This Rule shall govern discovery in attorney discipline and disability proceedings.

(B) Meeting. A meeting of the parties must be held no later than 14 days after the case is at issue to confer with each other about the nature and basis of the claims and defenses and discuss the matters to be disclosed.

(C) Disclosures. No later than 28 days after the case is at issue, the parties shall disclose:

(i) The name and, if known, the address, and telephone number of each individual likely to have discoverable information relevant to disputed facts alleged in the pleadings, identifying who the person is and the subjects of the information;

(ii) A listing, together with a copy of, or a description of, all documents, data compilations, and tangible things in the possession, custody, or control of the parties that are relevant to the disputed facts in the pleadings; and

(iii) A statement of whether the parties anticipate use of expert witnesses, identifying the subject areas of the proposed experts.

(D) Trial Management Order. Upon the request of one of the parties or upon order of the Presiding Disciplinary Judge or the presiding officer of the Hearing Board, no later than 42 days prior to the trial date, the parties shall disclose to the other party and file a trial management order containing the following matters under the following captions and in the following order:

(i) Statement of Claims and Defenses to be Pursued or Withdrawn. The parties shall set forth a listing of the claims and defenses remaining for trial. Any claims or defenses set forth in the pleadings which will not be at issue at trial shall be designated as ''withdrawn.''

(ii) Stipulated Facts. The parties shall set forth a plain, concise statement of all facts which the Hearing Board shall accept as undisputed.

(iii) Pretrial Motions. The parties shall list motions, if any, which are anticipated to be filed before trial as well as motions, if any, which are pending before the Hearing Board. The parties shall indicate a deadline for the filing of such motions which shall be no later than 14 days prior to the date set for trial.

(iv) Legal Issues. The parties shall set forth a list of legal issues that are controverted, including appropriate citation of statutory, case or other authority. In addition, the parties shall indicate whether trial briefs will be filed, including a schedule for their filing. Trial briefs shall be filed no later than 7 days before the commencement of the trial.

(v) Identification of Witnesses and Exhibits. Each party shall provide the following information:

(a) Lay Witnesses. Each party shall include a list containing the name, address, and telephone number of any person whom the party will call and of any person whom the party may call as a witness at trial.

(b) Exhibits. Each party shall attach a list describing any physical or documentary evidence which the party intends to introduce at trial. Complainant shall assign a number and respondent shall assign a letter designation for each exhibit. If any party wishes to object to the authenticity or admissibility of any exhibit, such objection shall be noted, together with the grounds therefor.

(c) Expert Witnesses. Each party shall attach to the trial management order a list of the name, address, and telephone number of each person whom the party will call and any person whom the party may call as an expert witness at trial, indicating the anticipated length of testimony, including cross-examination. The list shall indicate whether the opposing party accepts or challenges the qualifications of a witness to testify as an expert as to the opinions expressed. If there is a challenge, the list shall be accompanied by a resume setting forth the basis for the expertise of the challenged witness. Copies of any expert reports shall be provided to the other party at this time.

(vi) Presentation of Testimony. If the testimony of any witness is to be presented by deposition or through any other acceptable means in lieu of live testimony, a copy shall be submitted to the Hearing Board or the Presiding Disciplinary Judge if there is no Hearing Board and include the proponent's and opponent's anticipated designations of the pertinent portions of such testimony or a statement why designation is not feasible prior to trial. If any party wishes to object to the admissibility of the testimony or to any tendered question or answer therein, it shall be noted, setting forth the grounds therefor.

(vii) Trial Efficiencies. If the anticipated length of the trial has changed, the parties shall so indicate.

(E) Limitations. Except upon order by the Presiding Disciplinary Judge or the presiding officer of the Hearing Board for good cause shown, discovery shall be limited as follows:

(i) The Regulation Counsel may take one deposition of the respondent and two other persons in addition to the depositions of experts as provided in C.R.C.P. 26. The respondent may take one deposition of the complaining witness and two other persons in addition to the depositions of experts as provided in C.R.C.P. 26. The scope and manner of proceeding by way of deposition and the use thereof shall otherwise be governed by C.R.C.P. 26, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, and 45.

(ii) A party may serve on the adverse party 30 written interrogatories, each of which shall consist of a single question. The scope and manner of proceeding by means of written interrogatories and the use thereof shall otherwise be governed by C.R.C.P. Rules 26 and 33.

(iii) The Regulation Counsel may obtain a physical or mental examination of the respondent pursuant to C.R.C.P. 251.18(e).

(iv) A party may serve the adverse party requests for production of documents pursuant to C.R.C.P. 34, except such requests for production shall be limited to 20 in number, each of which shall consist of a single request.

(v) A party may serve on the adverse party 20 requests for admission, each of which shall consist of a single request. The scope and manner of proceeding by means of requests for admission and the use thereof shall otherwise be governed by C.R.C.P. 36.

(F) In determining good cause pursuant to C.R.C.P. 251.18(f)(4)(E), the Presiding Disciplinary Judge or the presiding officer of the Hearing Board shall consider the following:

(i) Whether the discovery sought is unreasonably cumulative or duplicative, or is obtainable from some other source that is more convenient, less burdensome, or less expensive;

(ii) Whether the party seeking discovery has had ample opportunity by disclosure or discovery in the action to obtain the information sought;

(iii) Whether the burden or expense of the proposed discovery outweighs its likely benefit, taking into account the needs of the case, the parties' resources, the importance of the issues in the litigation, and the importance of the proposed discovery in resolving the issues; and

(iv) Whether, because of the number of parties and their alignment with respect to the underlying claims and defenses, the proposed discovery is reasonable.

(G) Supplementation of Disclosures and Discovery Responses. A party is under a duty to supplement its disclosures under section (f)(4)(C) of this Rule when the party learns that in some material respect the information disclosed is incomplete or incorrect and if the additional or corrective information has not otherwise been made known to the other parties during the disclosure or discovery process. A party is under a duty to amend a prior response to an interrogatory, request for production or request for admission when the party learns that the prior response is in some material respect incomplete or incorrect and if the additional or corrective information has not otherwise been made known to the other parties during the discovery process. With respect to experts, the duty to supplement or correct extends both to information contained in the expert's report or summary disclosed pursuant to section (f)(4)(D)(v)(c) of this Rule and to information provided through any deposition of or interrogatory responses by the expert. Supplementation shall be performed in a timely manner.

ANNOTATION

Annotator's note. The following annotations include cases decided under former provisions similar to this rule.

Procedural due process does not include criminal defendant's rights. In every disciplinary proceeding a lawyer is entitled to procedural due process, but those rights do not extend so far as to guarantee the full panoply of rights afforded to an accused in a criminal case. People v. Harfmann, 638 P.2d 745 (Colo. 1981); People v. Morley, 725 P.2d 510 (Colo. 1986); People v. Varallo, 913 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1996); People v. Smith, 937 P.2d 724 (Colo. 1997).

Sixth amendment rights to jury trial and speedy trial do not attach in discipline cases, since by its terms the sixth amendment only applies in criminal cases. People v. Smith, 937 P.2d 724 (Colo. 1997).

Fifth amendment privilege against self-incrimination did not operate to preclude respondent from being compelled to attend his own deposition. People v. Smith, 937 P.2d 724 (Colo. 1997).

No due-process violation where presiding officer of the board also served on the hearing panel that reviews the board's action. People v. Fitzgibbons, 909 P.2d 1098 (Colo. 1996); People v. Smith, 937 P.2d 724 (Colo. 1997).

Consideration of charges not made in formal complaint against an attorney constitutes a violation of the respondent's rights to procedural due process of law. People v. Emeson, 638 P.2d 293 (Colo. 1981).

Right to call witnesses is a basic tenet of due process and applies to an attorney facing disciplinary charges. People v. Morley, 725 P.2d 510 (Colo. 1986).

This right, however, is not absolute. Due process does not vest a respondent in a disciplinary proceeding with a right to call any and all witnesses or elicit any testimony whatever; so long as the respondent is accorded a full and fair opportunity to present a defense to a charge, the tribunal hearing the case is entitled to exercise a sound discretion in limiting the type of evidence and the number of witnesses offered at a hearing. People v. Morley, 725 P.2d 510 (Colo. 1986).

Standard of proof in disciplinary proceeding. The disciplinary prosecutor has to prove allegations of misconduct by clear, convincing and substantial evidence. People v. Bugg, 635 P.2d 881 (Colo. 1981) (decided under former Rule 249, C.R.C.P.).

Clear and convincing evidence is proof which persuades the trier of fact that the truth contention is highly probable. It is evidence stronger than a preponderance by less than beyond reasonable doubt. People v. Distel, 759 P.2d 654 (Colo. 1988).

Evidence which clearly and unequivocally establishes unlawful conduct of a lawyer should be admissible in a disciplinary proceeding if the official misconduct does not shock the conscience of the court or is not in bad faith. People v. Harfmann, 638 P.2d 745 (Colo. 1981).

Unlike the rule applicable to a criminal proceeding, evidence of professional misconduct obtained by law enforcement officers should be admissible at a disciplinary proceeding unless the officers themselves engaged in outrageous misconduct or acted in bad faith in obtaining the challenged evidence. People v. Morley, 725 P.2d 510 (Colo. 1986).

If governmental officials act outrageously or in bad faith in obtaining challenged evidence, due process of law requires the exclusion of such evidence or perhaps the even more drastic remedy of dismissal. There is no ''bright line'' or ''per se'' rule in this area of the law and each case must be decided on the basis of its own peculiar facts. People v. Morley, 725 P.2d 510 (Colo. 1986).

Evidence of attorney's disciplinary record may be properly admitted to the extent allowed under the Colorado rules of evidence in order to refute claim that he regularly attended to client matters. People v. Yaklich, 744 P.2d 504 (Colo. 1987).

Such evidence may be introduced to impeach respondent's credibility. People v. Distel, 759 P.2d 654 (Colo. 1988).

When acting as fact finder in attorney disciplinary proceedings, grievance committee has duty to assess credibility of all evidence before it, both controverted and uncontroverted. People v. Distel, 759 P.2d 654 (Colo. 1988).

Presiding disciplinary judge (PDJ) has exclusive authority under section (b) of this rule to hear respondent's motion for sanctions under C.R.C.P. 11(a). The plain language of the rules, their context, and the design of the attorney regulation system support conclusion that PDJ has exclusive authority to consider and rule on a C.R.C.P. 11(a) motion for sanctions. People v. Trupp, 51 P.3d 985 (Colo. 2002).

Abuse of discretion for presiding disciplinary judge to hold that assistant attorney regulation counsel violated rule when she advanced claim that attorney had violated C.R.P.C. 8.4(c). No evidence that assistant attorney regulation counsel failed to investigate either the facts or the law and she did not misrepresent them in the complaint. People v. Trupp, 92 P.3d 923 (Colo. 2004).

Applied in People ex rel. Goldberg v. Gordon, 199 Colo. 296, 607 P.2d 995 (1980).

Rule 251.19. Findings of Fact and Decision

(a) Hearing Board Opinion and Decision. Within 56 days (8 weeks) after the hearing, the Hearing Board shall prepare an opinion setting forth its findings of fact and its decision. In preparing its decision, the Hearing Board shall take into consideration the respondent's prior disciplinary record, if any. The opinion shall be signed by each concurring member of the Hearing Board. Two members are required to make a decision. Members of the Hearing Board who dissent shall also sign the opinion, provided they indicate the basis of their dissent in the opinion.

(b) Decision of the Hearing Board. When it renders its decision, the Hearing Board shall:

(1) Determine that the complaint is not proved and enter an order dismissing the complaint;

(2) Enter an order imposing private admonition, public censure, a definite period of suspension, or disbarment; or

(3) Enter an order conditioned on the agreement of the attorney diverting the case to the alternatives to discipline program.

The Hearing Board may also enter other appropriate orders including, without limitation, probation, and orders requiring the respondent to pay the costs of the disciplinary proceeding, to make restitution, or to refund money paid to the respondent.

(4) Within 14 days of entry of an order as provided in this Rule or such greater time as the Hearing Board may allow, a party may move for post-hearing relief as provided in C.R.C.P. 59. In the event a motion for post-hearing relief is filed, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge or the presiding officer shall consult with the other members of the Hearing Board and then rule on the motion.

(5) For purposes of this Rule, the decision of the Hearing Board shall be final and time for filing notice of appeal shall commence as set forth in C.R.C.P. 251.27.

(6) Unless stayed, vacated, reversed, or otherwise modified by order of the Supreme Court, a final decision of the Hearing Board under paragraph (b)(5) of this Rule shall be considered for all purposes an order of the Supreme Court.

(c) Decision of the Presiding Disciplinary Judge. When the Presiding Disciplinary Judge renders a decision without a Hearing Board as provided in these rules, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge shall:

(1) Enter an order imposing private admonition, public censure, a definite period of suspension, or disbarment; or

(2) Enter an order conditioned on the agreement of the attorney diverting the case to the alternatives to discipline program.

The Presiding Disciplinary Judge may also enter other appropriate orders including, without limitation, probation, and orders requiring the respondent to pay the costs of the disciplinary proceeding, to make restitution, or to refund money paid to the respondent.

(3) Within 14 days of entry of an order as provided in this Rule or such greater time as the Presiding Disciplinary Judge may allow, a party may move for post-hearing relief as provided in C.R.C.P. 59.

(4) For purposes of this Rule, the decision of the Presiding Disciplinary Judge shall be final and time for filing notice of appeal shall commence as set forth in C.R.C.P. 251.26.

ANNOTATION

Annotator's note. The following annotations include cases decided under former provisions similar to this rule.

A disciplinary proceeding is an investigation by the court into the conduct of one of its officers and is neither a civil action nor a criminal proceeding, but a proceeding ''sui generis'', the object of which is not to punish the offender but to protect the court. People v. Howard, 147 Colo. 501, 364 P.2d 380 (1961), cert. denied, 369 U.S. 819, 82 S. Ct. 830, 7 L. Ed. 2d 784 (1962).

The grievance committee of the supreme court conducts the formal hearing on a complaint and makes a report, which sets forth its findings, conclusions, and recommendations. People v. Van Nocker, 176 Colo. 354, 490 P.2d 697 (1971).

Report and recommendation of grievance committee in disciplinary proceedings against lawyers is advisory, and the supreme court has the duty to review the recommendations and to increase or decrease the sanction imposed by the committee in a proper case. People v. Susman, 196 Colo. 458, 587 P.2d 782 (1978); People v. Morley, 725 P.2d 510 (Colo. 1986); People v. Jacobson, 747 P.2d 654 (Colo. 1987); People v. Shipp, 793 P.2d 574 (Colo. 1990); People v. Abelman, 804 P.2d 859 (Colo. 1991); People v. Larsen, 808 P.2d 1265 (Colo. 1991); People v. Gaimara, 810 P.2d 1076 (Colo. 1991); People v. Raubolt, 831 P.2d 462 (Colo. 1992).

While supreme court has always given the recommendation for discipline by the grievance committee great weight, the court reserves the right to exercise our independent judgment in arriving at the proper level of discipline. People v. Brown, 726 P.2d 638 (Colo. 1986); People v. Anderson, 817 P.2d 1035 (Colo. 1991); Colo. Supreme Ct. v. District Court, 850 P.2d 150 (Colo. 1993).

The supreme court's rule is to make an independent decision regarding the appropriate form of discipline, suited to the facts and circumstances of the particular case. People v. Grenemyer, 745 P.2d 1027 (Colo. 1987).

To warrant a finding of misconduct, the charges must be established by substantial, clear, convincing, and satisfactory evidence. People v. Howard, 147 Colo. 501, 364 P.2d 380 (1961), cert. denied, 369 U.S. 819, 82 S. Ct. 830, 7 L. Ed. 2d 784 (1962).

Proof of all elements of a criminal offense is necessary to establish misconduct on the basis of commission of a criminal act. Where one element of attempted theft was not proven by clear and convincing evidence, the attorney was not subject to sanction under C.R.P.C. 8.4(b). People v. Rosen, 199 P.3d 1241 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2007).

This does not mean that strict rules of evidence apply in disbarment proceedings, although they are frequently invoked to insure a fair hearing. People v. Howard, 147 Colo. 501, 364 P.2d 380 (1961), cert. denied, 369 U.S. 819, 82 S. Ct. 830, 7 L. Ed. 2d 784 (1962).

Evidence taken at civil action that an attorney has been guilty of conduct justifying disbarment is admissible in disbarment proceeding. People v. Howard, 147 Colo. 501, 364 P.2d 380 (1961), cert. denied, 369 U.S. 819, 82 S. Ct. 830, 7 L. Ed. 2d 784 (1962).

The finding is not conclusive on the same question. The finding in a civil action that an attorney at law has been guilty of conduct justifying disbarment is not conclusive on the same question when presented for determination in an action for disbarment. Notwithstanding the finding in the civil action, the culpability of the attorney must be established in the disbarment action by a clear preponderance of the evidence. People v. Howard, 147 Colo. 501, 364 P.2d 380 (1961), cert. denied, 369 U.S. 819, 82 S. Ct. 830, 7 L. Ed. 2d 784 (1962).

Factual findings of grievance committee are binding on the supreme court, unless the supreme court, after considering the record as a whole, concludes that the findings are clearly erroneous and unsupported by substantial evidence. People v. Garnett, 725 P.2d 1149 (Colo. 1986) (apparently overruling People v. Mattox, 639 P.2d 397 (Colo. 1982)); People v. Susman, 747 P.2d 667 (Colo. 1987).

Letter of admonition concerning conduct which occurred after the events giving rise to the complaint in the instant case, but received prior to the time the hearing board held its hearing in the instant case, is part of the prior disciplinary record and may be properly considered. People v. Wolfe, 748 P.2d 789 (Colo. 1988).

Where an attorney fails to comply with condition pertaining to private censure, such failure provides basis for withdrawal of private censure and issuance of public censure. People v. Moore, 681 P.2d 480 (Colo. 1984).

Conduct found to violate disciplinary rules. People v. Razatos, 636 P.2d 666 (Colo. 1981), appeal dismissed, 455 U.S. 930, 102 S. Ct. 1415, 71 L. Ed. 2d 639 (1982).

Hearing panel may modify recommendations of hearing board. People v. Shields, 905 P.2d 608 (Colo. 1995).

Modification by hearing panel of board's recommendation of discipline after it concluded a six-month suspension was insufficient in light of the attorney's prior discipline complied with this rule. People v. Brenner, 852 P.2d 456 (Colo. 1993).

Form of discipline imposed by hearing board for respondent's proven violations not unreasonable. Following ABA standards for imposing lawyer sanctions, violation of duty owed the public, even one involving dishonesty, fraud, deceit, or misrepresentation, as long as it is short of actual criminality, should generally be sanctioned by reprimand or censure. When dishonesty relates to practice of law, ABA standards recognize appropriateness of probation as a sanction if it will adequately protect the public. In re Rosen, 198 P.3d 116 (Colo. 2008).

Rule 251.20. Attorney Convicted of a Crime

(a) Proof of Conviction. Except as otherwise provided by these Rules, a certified copy of the judgment of conviction from the clerk of any court of criminal jurisdiction indicating that an attorney has been convicted of a crime in that court shall conclusively establish the existence of such conviction for purposes of disciplinary proceedings in this state and shall be conclusive proof of the commission of that crime by the respondent.

(b) Duty to Report Conviction. Every attorney subject to these Rules, upon being convicted of a crime, except those misdemeanor traffic offenses or traffic ordinance violations, not including the use of alcohol or drugs, shall notify the Regulation Counsel in writing of such conviction within 14 days after the date of the conviction. In addition, the clerk of any court in this state in which the conviction was entered shall transmit to the Regulation Counsel within 14 days after the date of the conviction a certificate thereof.

(c) Commencement of Disciplinary Proceedings Upon Notice of Conviction. Upon receiving notice that an attorney subject to these Rules has been convicted of a crime, other than a serious crime as hereinafter defined, the Regulation Counsel shall, following an investigation as provided in these Rules, make a determination as provided in C.R.C.P. 251.11 or refer the matter to the committee for further proceedings consistent with C.R.C.P. 251.12.

If the conviction is for a serious crime as hereinafter defined, the Regulation Counsel shall obtain the record of conviction and prepare and file a complaint against the respondent as provided in C.R.C.P. 251.14.

If a complaint is filed against a respondent pursuant to the provisions of this Rule, the Regulation Counsel shall present proof of the criminal conviction and may present any other evidence which the Regulation Counsel deems appropriate. If the respondent's criminal conviction is either proved or admitted, the respondent shall have the right to be heard by the Hearing Board only on matters of rebuttal of any evidence presented by the Regulation Counsel other than proof of the conviction.

(d) Conviction of a Serious Crime — Immediate Suspension. The Regulation Counsel shall report to the Supreme Court the name of any attorney who has been convicted of a serious crime, as hereinafter defined. The Supreme Court shall thereupon issue a citation directing the convicted attorney to show cause why the attorney's license to practice law should not be immediately suspended pursuant to C.R.C.P. 251.8. Upon full consideration of the matter, the Supreme Court may either impose immediate suspension for a definite or indefinite period or may discharge the rule to show cause. The fact that a convicted attorney is seeking appellate review of the conviction shall not limit the power of the Supreme Court to impose immediate suspension.

(e) Serious Crime Defined. The term serious crime as used in these Rules shall include:

(1) Any felony; and

(2) Any lesser crime a necessary element of which, as determined by its statutory or common law definition, involves interference with the administration of justice, false swearing, misrepresentation, fraud, willful extortion, misappropriation, or theft; or an attempt or conspiracy to commit such crime; or solicitation of another to commit such crime.

(f) Notice to Clients and Others of Immediate Suspension. An order of immediate suspension of an attorney pursuant to this Rule shall constitute a suspension of the attorney for the purpose of the provisions of C.R.C.P. 251.28.

(g) Automatic Reinstatement From Immediate Suspension When Conviction Reversed. An attorney suspended under the provisions of this Rule shall be reinstated to practice law immediately upon filing a certificate demonstrating that the underlying criminal conviction has been reversed; provided, however, that reinstatement of the attorney shall have no effect on any proceedings conducted pursuant to these Rules then pending against him.

(h) Conviction Defined. The term conviction as used in these Rules shall include any ultimate finding of fact in a criminal proceeding that an individual is guilty of a crime, whether the judgment rests on a verdict of guilty, a plea of guilty, or a plea of nolo contendere, and irrespective of whether entry of judgment or imposition of sentence is suspended or deferred by the court.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, ''The Rules of Professional Conduct: An Equal Opportunity for Ethical Pitfalls'', see 41 Colo. Law. 71 (October 2012).

Annotator's note. The following annotations include cases decided under former provisions similar to this rule.

Attorney licensed to practice law in state of Colorado is subject to discipline by Colorado supreme court in the event of his conviction of a criminal offense in a foreign jurisdiction. People v. Swope, 621 P.2d 321 (Colo. 1981).

Attorney's conduct while in office not only resulted in convictions of second degree official misconduct, § 18-8-405, and failure to disclose a conflict of interest, § 18-8-308, but also flagrantly violated minimal standards of candor and honesty required by attorneys and justified suspension. People v. Tucker, 676 P.2d 680 (Colo. 1983).

Attorney pleading guilty to cultivation of marijuana and unlawful possession of a controlled substance is subject to discipline. While convicted felon was not trafficking or dealing in illegal substances and was instead engaged in horticultural preservation and storing substance for others, suspension for three years is appropriate penalty. People v. McPhee, 728 P.2d 1292 (Colo. 1986).

Accepting illegal drugs for legal services is serious criminal conduct warranting severe sanction even though it does not fit definition of serious crime provided in rule. People v. Davis, 768 P.2d 1227 (Colo. 1989).

Failure to report felony conviction in another state where crime involved conversion of client funds justifies disbarment. People v. Hedicke, 785 P.2d 918 (Colo. 1990).

Attorney's failure to report felony conviction including counts involving proof of intent to defraud is sufficient for disbarment. People v. Brunn, 764 P.2d 1165 (Colo. 1988); People v. Vidakovich, 810 P.2d 1071 (Colo. 1991).

Failure to report felony convictions in another state for two counts of failure to report income and two counts of filing false income tax returns warrants three-year suspension and payment of costs rather than disbarment in light of numerous mitigating factors. People v. Mandell, 813 P.2d 732 (Colo. 1991).

The conduct of an attorney who fails to report a domestic violence conviction substantially reflects adversely on the attorney's fitness to practice. Because there is no exception to the duty to report based upon mistake and because the aggravating factors outweigh the mitigating factors, the proper form of discipline is six months' suspension. In re Hickox, 57 P.3d 403 (Colo. 2002).

Failure to report felony conviction in another state for mail fraud warrants disbarment in absence of mitigating factors and where aggravating factor of a prior disciplinary record exists. People v. Bollinger, 859 P.2d 901 (Colo. 1993).

Lack of prior disciplinary record insufficient to call for sanction less than disbarment where attorney convicted of bank fraud. People v. Terborg, 848 P.2d 346 (Colo. 1993).

Guilty plea followed by deferred judgment was a "conviction" and failure to report warranted public censure even though the conviction occurred prior to the adoption of a specific definition for the term ''conviction'' in this section. People v. Barnthouse, 941 P.2d 916 (Colo. 1997).

Bar reinstatement required demonstration of possession of moral and professional qualifications. Where a state attorney had been convicted of failing to file his federal income tax return and making false representations to a special agent of the Internal Revenue Service regarding the filing of income tax returns, and where the attorney was later found to have made a false statement in his application to the Arizona State Bar by answering in the negative an inquiry as to whether he had ever been questioned regarding the violation of any law, he was suspended from the practice of law in Colorado for three years, and was required to demonstrate upon application for reinstatement that he possessed moral and professional qualifications for admission to the bar of this state. People v. Gifford, 199 Colo. 205, 610 P.2d 485 (1980).

Bankruptcy fraud is a serious crime as defined by rule. People v. Brown, 841 P.2d 1066 (Colo. 1990).

Attorney's conviction of three counts of sexual assault on a child and three counts of aggravated incest conclusively established where the court notified him it intended to take judicial notice of the conviction and attorney neither responded to the substance of the notice nor denied the conviction occurred. Because of the nature and seriousness of the crimes for which the attorney was convicted, disbarment was appropriate. People v. Schwartz, 890 P.2d 82 (Colo. 1995).

Disbarment warranted for attorney convicted of criminal attempt to commit sexual exploitation of a child, a class 4 felony. People v. Damkar, 908 P.2d 1113 (Colo. 1996).

Attorney's violations constituted "serious crimes" as defined in section (e) of this rule where the attorney pleaded guilty to making and altering a false and forged prescription for Phentermine, a controlled substance, in violation of former § 12-22-315, a class 5 felony, and of criminal attempt to obtain a controlled substance by forgery and alteration in violation of § 18-2-101 and former § 12-22-315, a class 6 felony. People v. Moore, 849 P.2d 40 (Colo. 1993).

Lack of prior disciplinary record insufficient to call for sanction less than disbarment where attorney convicted of bankruptcy fraud and for conspiracy to commit bankruptcy fraud and other federal offenses. People v. Schwartz, 814 P.2d 793 (Colo. 1991).

Although attorney had not previously been disciplined, sanction of disbarment was warranted where attorney's felony conviction for possession of a firearm occurred while he was still on probation for a felony conviction for possession of marijuana. People v. Laquey, 862 P.2d 278 (Colo. 1993).

Conviction for aiding fugitive to flee warrants disbarment despite lack of a prior disciplinary record. People v. Bullock, 882 P.2d 1390 (Colo. 1994).

Respondent given two-year suspension for aiding and abetting aliens' entry into the United States and by advising clients to make misrepresentations for such entry. Such an act generally warrants disbarment, but respondent's full disclosure during proceedings, expression of remorse, and the fact that a prior offense was remote in time were mitigating factors. Respondent also required to discontinue the representation of clients before INS and the Department of Labor. People v. Boyle, 942 P.2d 1199 (Colo. 1997).

Disbarment is warranted for driving while impaired, marihuana possession, improperly executing agreement without permission, and failing to perform certain professional duties, despite the lack of a prior record. People v. Gerdes, 891 P.2d 995 (Colo. 1995).

Conviction of attempt to commit sexual assault in the second degree on a 17-year-old high school student filing clerk working at attorney's law firm is a serious crime as defined by the rule. The conviction together with sexual conduct toward a client warrant disbarment. People v. Dawson, 894 P.2d 756 (Colo. 1995).

Disbarment warranted for attorney convicted in Hawaii of second-degree murder. People v. Draizen, 941 P.2d 280 (Colo. 1997).

Disbarment warranted for writing nonsufficient funds checks while practicing law during a period of suspension and committing several other disciplinary rules violations. People v. Fager, 938 P.2d 138 (Colo. 1997).

Applied in People ex rel. MacFarlane v. Harthun, 195 Colo. 38, 581 P.2d 716 (1978); People v. Harfmann, 638 P.2d 745 (Colo. 1981); People v. Loseke, 698 P.2d 809 (Colo. 1985); People v. Proffitt, 731 P.2d 1257 (Colo. 1987); People v. Geller, 753 P.2d 235 (Colo. 1988); People v. Cantor, 753 P.2d 238 (Colo. 1988).

Rule 251.21. Discipline Imposed by Foreign Jurisdiction

(a) Proof of Discipline Imposed. Except as otherwise provided by these Rules, a final adjudication in another jurisdiction of misconduct constituting grounds for discipline of an attorney shall, for purposes of proceedings pursuant to these Rules, conclusively establish such misconduct.

(b) Duty to Report Discipline Imposed. Any attorney subject to these Rules against whom any form of public discipline has been imposed by the authorities of another jurisdiction, or who voluntarily surrenders the attorney's license to practice law in connection with disciplinary proceedings in another jurisdiction, shall notify the Regulation Counsel of such action in writing within 14 days thereof.

(c) Commencement of Proceedings Upon Notice of Voluntary Surrender of License. Upon receiving notice that an attorney subject to these Rules has voluntarily surrendered his license to practice law in another jurisdiction, the Regulation Counsel shall, following investigation pursuant to these Rules, refer the matter to the committee for further proceedings consistent with C.R.C.P. 251.12.

(d) Commencement of Proceedings Upon Notice of Discipline Imposed. Upon receiving notice that an attorney subject to these Rules has been publicly disciplined in another jurisdiction, the Regulation Counsel shall obtain the disciplinary order and prepare and file a complaint against the attorney as provided in C.R.C.P. 251.14. If the Regulation Counsel intends either to claim that substantially different discipline is warranted or to present additional evidence, notice of that intent shall be given in the complaint.

If the attorney intends to challenge the validity of the disciplinary order entered in the foreign jurisdiction, the attorney must file with the Presiding Disciplinary Judge an answer and a full copy of the record of the disciplinary proceedings which resulted in the imposition of that disciplinary order within 21 days after service of the complaint or such greater time as the Presiding Disciplinary Judge may allow for good cause shown.

At the conclusion of proceedings brought under this Rule, the Hearing Board shall issue a decision imposing the same discipline as was imposed by the foreign jurisdiction, unless it is determined by the Hearing Board that:

(1) The procedure followed in the foreign jurisdiction did not comport with requirements of due process of law;

(2) The proof upon which the foreign jurisdiction based its determination of misconduct is so infirm that the Hearing Board cannot, consistent with its duty, accept as final the determination of the foreign jurisdiction;

(3) The imposition by the Hearing Board of the same discipline as was imposed in the foreign jurisdiction would result in grave injustice; or

(4) The misconduct proved warrants that a substantially different form of discipline be imposed by the Hearing Board.

(e) If Regulation Counsel does not seek substantially different discipline and if the respondent does not challenge the order based on any of the grounds set forth in (d)(1)(4) above, then the Presiding Disciplinary Judge may, without a hearing or a Hearing Board, issue a decision imposing the same discipline as imposed by the foreign jurisdiction.

ANNOTATION

Annotator's note. The following annotations include cases decided under former provisions similar to this rule.

Disbarment from practice in another jurisdiction warrants disbarment in this state. People v. Payne, 738 P.2d 374 (Colo. 1987); People v. Montano, 744 P.2d 480 (Colo. 1987); People v. Kochel, 764 P.2d 68 (Colo. 1988); People v. Brunn, 764 P.2d 1165 (Colo. 1988); People v. Sousa, 943 P.2d 448 (Colo. 1997).

Public censure was appropriate discipline in this state for attorney who received public reprimand in Texas. People v. Campbell, 932 P.2d 312 (Colo. 1997).

Public censure was appropriate discipline for attorney who had been reprimanded in Connecticut for failure to file federal income tax return. People v. Perkell, 969 P.2d 703 (Colo. 1998).

Three-year suspension was appropriate discipline for attorney who had received an indefinite suspension in Massachusetts. People v. Gargano, 306 P.3d 109 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2013).

Disbarment from practice in federal court violates this rule and warrants discipline. People v. Awenius, 653 P.2d 740 (Colo. 1982).

Suspension from practice in tax court is a determination of misconduct in another jurisdiction constituting grounds for discipline under these rules. People v. Hartman, 744 P.2d 482 (Colo. 1987).

Suspension from United States district court pursuant to a plea agreement in that court is a determination of misconduct in another jurisdiction and is grounds for suspension under these rules. People v. Gilson, 780 P.2d 1088 (Colo. 1989).

Imposition of same discipline as another jurisdiction. This rule calls for imposition of the same discipline as that imposed in another jurisdiction unless one of four listed exceptions has been established. People v. Gilson, 780 P.2d 1088 (Colo. 1989); People v. Breingan, 820 P.2d 1115 (Colo. 1991); People v. Mattox, 862 P.2d 276 (Colo. 1993); People v. Bengert, 885 P.2d 241 (Colo. 1994); People v. Calder, 897 P.2d 831 (Colo. 1995); People v. Cohan, 913 P.2d 523 (Colo. 1996); People v. Campbell, 932 P.2d 312 (Colo. 1997); People v. Rodriguez, 937 P.2d 1210 (Colo. 1997); People v. Harper, 294 P.3d 161 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2012); People v. Gargano, 306 P.3d 109 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2013); People v. Collins, 348 P.3d 993 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2014).

Where the thrust of the respondent's defense was that the proof upon which the foreign state's findings of misconduct were based was infirm, and a determination in the respondent's favor would require the hearing board to reweigh the credibility of the witnesses at the out-of-state hearing, board acted properly in declining to do so. People v. Calder, 897 P.2d 831 (Colo. 1995); People v. Gargano, 306 P.3d 109 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2013).

Where the thrust of the respondent's defense was that the proof upon which the tenth circuit court of appeals based its finding of misconduct was impermissibly infirm, and a determination in the respondent's favor would require the disciplinary panel to revisit issues that had been conclusively determined in a prior proceeding, the panel acted properly in declining to do so. People v. Smith, 937 P.2d 724 (Colo. 1997); People v. Gargano, 306 P.3d 109 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2013).

Although infirmity of proof is a basis on which to challenge disciplinary action by a foreign jurisdiction, it does not apply to the findings and recommendations of a hearing board and the supreme court grievance committee panel. People v. Smith, 937 P.2d 724 (Colo. 1997).

A respondent attorney is entitled to due process in disciplinary proceedings, although there is no requirement that the lawyer be afforded the same constitutional safeguards as those granted a defendant in a criminal trial. People v. Gargano, 306 P.3d 109 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2013).

Multiple due-process challenges to procedure followed by federal appeals court were rejected in People v. Smith, 937 P.2d 724 (Colo. 1997).

Respondent was not entitled to an evidentiary hearing on the question of whether motions he had filed in a prior case were frivolous. People v. Smith, 937 P.2d 724 (Colo. 1997).

Sixth amendment rights to jury trial and speedy trial do not attach in discipline cases, since by its terms the sixth amendment only applies in criminal cases. People v. Smith, 937 P.2d 724 (Colo. 1997).

Fifth amendment privilege against self-incrimination did not operate to preclude respondent from being compelled to attend his own deposition. People v. Smith, 937 P.2d 724 (Colo. 1997).

Nine-month period of suspension recommended by the board and accepted by the hearing panel was not more severe than the indefinite suspension imposed by the tenth circuit court of appeals, hence respondent could not challenge suspension on this basis. People v. Smith, 937 P.2d 724 (Colo. 1997).

No due-process violation where presiding officer of the board also served on the hearing panel that reviews the board's action. People v. Fitzgibbons, 909 P.2d 1098 (Colo. 1996); People v. Smith, 937 P.2d 724 (Colo. 1997).

Failure to report suspension from the practice of law and felony conviction in another state justifies disbarment. People v. Hedicke, 785 P.2d 918 (Colo. 1990).

Failure to disclose prior discipline in Kentucky, Colorado, and U.S. district court for district of Colorado to the U.S. district court for the district of Nevada warranted suspension from the practice of law for one year. People v. Mattox, 862 P.2d 276 (Colo. 1993).

Virginia disciplinary proceedings provided defendant with due process. Imposition of same discipline, in this case, disbarment, in Colorado customary. People v. Williams, 892 P.2d 885 (Colo. 1995).

Discipline in foreign jurisdiction for sharing legal fees and forming a partnership with a nonlawyer and for failing to deposit client funds in required interest-bearing account was suspension for two years, with the period of suspension stayed, and three years of probation on condition that the respondent be actually suspended for six months. Colorado law does not provide for the conditional suspension of a period of suspension or for probation, but a period of suspension of one year and one day ensures that the respondent has complied with the conditions of the foreign state suspension. People v. Bengert, 885 P.2d 241 (Colo. 1994).

Attorney received suspension for charging excessive fee in another state. The action taken in the other state had resulted in the attorney's receipt of a one-year conditional suspension. Usually the court will impose the same discipline as that which was imposed in the foreign jurisdiction, but because Colorado does not provide for conditional suspensions public censure was deemed appropriate. People v. Nash, 873 P.2d 764 (Colo. 1994).

Applied in People v. Swope, 621 P.2d 321 (Colo. 1981); People v. Miller, 744 P.2d 489 (Colo. 1987); People v. Trevino, 803 P.2d 473 (Colo. 1990); People v. Lenihan, 286 P.3d 1110 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2012).

Rule 251.22. Discipline Based on Admitted Misconduct

(a) Acceptance of Admission. An attorney against whom proceedings are pending pursuant to these Rules may, at any point in the proceedings prior to final action by a Hearing Board, tender a conditional admission of misconduct constituting grounds for discipline in exchange for a stipulated form of discipline. The conditional admission must be approved by the Regulation Counsel prior to being tendered to the committee or the Presiding Disciplinary Judge.

If the form of discipline stipulated to is private admonition, the conditional admission shall be tendered to the committee for its review. The committee shall either reject the conditional admission and order the proceedings continued in accordance with these Rules, or accept the conditional admission and order private admonition imposed.

If the form of discipline stipulated to is disbarment, suspension, public censure, or a range that includes any of the former and private admonition, the conditional admission shall be tendered to the Presiding Disciplinary Judge for review. The Presiding Disciplinary Judge or Presiding Officer of the Hearing Board shall, after conducting a hearing as provided in this Rule, if one is requested, either reject the conditional admission and order the proceedings continued in accordance with these Rules, or approve the conditional admission and enter an appropriate order.

Imposition of discipline pursuant to a conditional admission of misconduct shall terminate all proceedings conducted pursuant to these Rules and pending against the attorney in connection with that misconduct.

(b) Conditional Admission — Contents. A conditional admission of misconduct shall be set forth in the form of an affidavit, be submitted by the attorney, and shall contain:

(1) An admission of misconduct which constitutes grounds for discipline;

(2) An acknowledgment of the proceedings pending against the attorney; and

(3) A statement that the admission is freely and voluntarily made, that it is not the product of coercion or duress, and that the attorney is fully aware of the implications of the attorney's admission.

If the conditional admission is tendered before a complaint is filed as provided in C.R.C.P. 251.14, it shall remain confidential if the form of discipline stipulated to is private admonition and its contents shall not be publicly disclosed or made available for use in any proceedings outside this Chapter except as otherwise provided in these Rules or by order of the Supreme Court.

(c) Conditional Admission — Hearing.

(1) Procedure. Within 14 days of the date a conditional admission is filed, the respondent or the Regulation Counsel may request a hearing before the Presiding Disciplinary Judge. If a hearing is requested, it shall be set promptly.

(2) Notice. Not less than 14 days before the date set for the hearing on the conditional admission, the Regulation Counsel shall give notice of such hearing as provided in C.R.C.P. 251.32(b) to the respondent, the respondent's counsel, and the complaining witness. The notice shall designate the date, place, and time of the hearing. The notice shall advise the respondent that the respondent is entitled to be represented by counsel at the hearing and to present argument regarding the form of discipline to be ordered.

(3) Complaining Witness. In addition to the foregoing, the notice shall advise the complaining witness that the complaining witness has a right to be present at the hearing and to make a statement, orally or in writing, to the Presiding Disciplinary Judge regarding the form of discipline.

(d) Stay of Proceedings. Proceedings conducted pursuant to these Rules that are pending before the Presiding Disciplinary Judge at the time a conditional admission is tendered may be stayed by order of the Presiding Disciplinary Judge.

(e) Further Proceedings. If the conditional admission of misconduct is rejected and the matter is returned for further proceedings consistent with these Rules, the conditional admission may not be used against the attorney.

ANNOTATION

Annotator's note. The following annotations include cases decided under former provisions similar to this rule.

The supreme court will deny attorney's application to voluntarily surrender his license to practice law in the state of Colorado where the gravity of the attorney's wrongful conduct necessitates disbarment. People v. Murphy, 174 Colo. 182, 483 P.2d 224 (1971).

Surrender of a license pursuant to this rule is not confidential and will be made known to the National Disciplinary Data Bank for dissemination on a national basis to other agencies who license attorneys. People v. Culpepper, 645 P.2d 5 (Colo. 1982).

Stipulation to 18-month suspension is reasonable and warranted, given the number and seriousness of the charges balanced against the mitigating factors. People v. Taylor, 799 P.2d 930 (Colo. 1990).

Stipulation to disbarment is appropriate where attorney pleaded guilty to felony menacing and had history of discipline. People v. Littlefield, 893 P.2d 773 (Colo. 1995).

Attorney under investigation for misconduct may submit a stipulation and conditional admission at any time but inquiry panel should not normally accept it until the inquiry panel has authorized the disciplinary counsel to file a formal complaint. People v. Borchard, 825 P.2d 999 (Colo. 1992).

Mitigating factors warranting suspension for three years. Conviction for distribution of cocaine is ''serious crime'' as defined in C.R.C.P. 241.16(e). However, mitigating factors including personal and emotional problems, full disclosure and cooperation with the grievance committee and the office of disciplinary counsel, and participation in interim rehabilitation warrant suspension from practice for three years. People v. Rhodes, 829 P.2d 850 (Colo. 1992).

Mitigating factors warranting public censure. Attorney who stipulated to misconduct admitted to activities warranting public censure. People v. Odom, 829 P.2d 855 (Colo. 1992).

Respondent's multiple acts of violence are indicative of a dangerous volatility which might well prejudice his ability to effectively represent his client's interests. Although respondent had taken major steps toward rehabilitation the acts committed were of such gravity as to require a public censure and a three-month suspension. People v. Wallace, 837 P.2d 1223 (Colo. 1992).

Stipulated agreement and recommendations of disbarment based on conditional admission of misconduct warranted where respondent practiced law while suspended. People v. Redman, 902 P.2d 839 (Colo. 1995).

Also warranted where attorney misappropriated and commingled client funds, failed to communicate with clients, engaged in dishonest conduct and conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice, charged unreasonable fees, neglected legal matters, and failed to pay funds to which a third person was entitled. People v. Clyne, 945 P.2d 1386 (Colo. 1997).

Stipulated agreement and recommendations of disbarment warranted where respondent pled guilty to conspiracy to commit securities fraud and securities fraud. People v. Frye, 935 P.2d 10 (Colo. 1997).

Stipulated agreement and recommendations of suspension for nine months based upon conditional admission of misconduct were warranted for attorney who was suspended in another state for neglect, failure to communicate, and failure to surrender documents and other client property after termination of representation. People v. McKee, 942 P.2d 494 (Colo. 1997).

Stipulated agreement and recommendations of suspension for six months based upon conditional admission of misconduct were warranted for attorney who engaged in conduct that adversely reflects on the lawyer's ability to practice law and for violating criminal laws of a state or the United States. People v. McIntyre, 942 P.2d 499 (Colo. 1997).

Stipulated agreement and recommendation of suspension for 30 days based upon conditional admission of misconduct were warranted for attorney who committed unfair insurance claim settlement practices and tortious conduct in handling insurance investigation of fire claim that he was not competent to handle. People v. McClung, 953 P.2d 1282 (Colo. 1998).

Stipulated agreement and recommendation of public censure based on conditional admission of misconduct was warranted where respondent neglected and made misrepresentations in two separate legal matters. People v. Eagan, 902 P.2d 841 (Colo. 1995).

Stipulated agreement and recommendation of public censure based on conditional admission of misconduct was acceptable where respondent was convicted of driving while ability impaired and had also appeared in court while intoxicated on two consecutive days. People v. Coulter, 950 P.2d 176 (Colo. 1998).

Stipulated agreement and recommendation of public censure based on conditional admission of misconduct was warranted. People v. Williams, 936 P.2d 1289 (Colo. 1997).

Stipulated agreement and recommendation of public censure with certain conditions and monitoring based upon conditional admission of misconduct were warranted for attorney who required that his associates sign a covenant that hindered a client's right to choose his or her own lawyer and which placed a financial hardship upon a departing associate who might not be able to represent the client if the associate's recovery would be limited to 25 percent or less of the total fee. People v. Wilson, 953 P.2d 1292 (Colo. 1998).

Applied in People v. Brackett, 667 P.2d 1357 (Colo. 1983).

Rule 251.23. Disability Inactive Status

(a) Disability Inactive Status. Where it is shown that an attorney is unable to fulfill professional responsibilities competently because of physical, mental or emotional infirmity or illness, including addiction to drugs or intoxicants, the attorney shall be transferred to disability inactive status. During such time as an attorney is on disability inactive status the attorney shall not engage in the practice of law.

Proceedings instituted against an attorney pursuant to this Rule are disability proceedings. Transfer to disability inactive status is not a form of discipline and does not involve a violation of the attorney's oath. The pendency of proceedings provided for by this Rule shall not defer or abate other proceedings conducted pursuant to these Rules, unless after a hearing the Presiding Disciplinary Judge determines that the attorney, is unable to assist in the defense of those other proceedings because of the disability. If such other proceedings are deferred, then the deferral shall continue until such time as the attorney is found to be eligible for reinstatement as provided by C.R.C.P. 251.30.

(b) Transfer to Disability Inactive Status Without a Hearing. Where an attorney who is subject to these Rules has been judicially declared mentally ill, or has been involuntarily committed to a mental hospital, or has voluntarily petitioned for the appointment of a guardian, or has been found not guilty by reason of insanity in a criminal proceeding in a court of record, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge, upon proper proof of the fact, shall enter an order transferring the attorney to disability inactive status. Such order shall remain in effect unless altered by the Presiding Disciplinary Judge or the Supreme Court. A copy of the order transferring an attorney to disability inactive status shall be served upon the attorney and upon either the attorney's guardian or the superintendent of the hospital in which the attorney is confined. Service shall be made in such manner as the Presiding Disciplinary Judge may direct.

(c) Procedure When Disability is Alleged. Whenever any interested party shall petition the Presiding Disciplinary Judge to determine whether an attorney is incapable of continuing to practice law by reason of physical, mental or emotional infirmity or illness, including addiction to drugs or intoxicants, or whether the attorney in a proceeding conducted pursuant to these Rules is so incapacitated as to be unable to proffer a defense, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge shall direct such action as it deems necessary or proper to determine whether the attorney is incapacitated, including an examination of the attorney by qualified medical experts designated by the Presiding Disciplinary Judge; provided, however, that before any medical examination or other action may be ordered, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge must afford the attorney an opportunity to show cause why such examination or action should not be ordered. If, upon due consideration of the matter, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge determines that the attorney is incapable of continuing to practice law or is incapable of defending in proceedings conducted pursuant to these Rules, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge shall enter an order transferring the attorney to disability inactive status. Such order shall remain in effect unless altered by the Presiding Disciplinary Judge or the Supreme Court.

An attorney against whom disability proceedings are pending shall be given notice of such proceedings. Notice shall be given in such a manner as the Presiding Disciplinary Judge may direct. The Presiding Disciplinary Judge may appoint counsel to represent the attorney if the attorney is without adequate representation.

(d) Procedure When Attorney During Course of Proceedings Alleges a Disability that Impairs the Attorney's Ability to Defend Himself. If in the course of proceedings conducted pursuant to these Rules the lawyer alleges disability by reason of physical, mental or emotional infirmity or illness, including addiction to drugs or intoxicants, that impairs the attorney's ability to defend adequately in such proceedings, such proceedings shall be suspended and the Presiding Disciplinary Judge shall enter an order transferring the attorney to disability inactive status and order a medical examination of the attorney. Upon review of the report of the medical examination and other relevant information, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge may do any of the following:

(1) Order a hearing on the issue of whether the attorney suffers from a disability that impairs the attorney's ability to defend adequately in such other proceedings;

(2) Continue the order transferring the lawyer to disability inactive status;

(3) Discharge the order transferring the lawyer to disability inactive status, and order that the proceedings pending against the attorney be resumed;

(4) Enter any other appropriate order, including an order directing further examination of the attorney.

(e) Burden of Proof. In a disability proceeding seeking the transfer of an attorney to disability inactive status the party petitioning for transfer shall bear the burden of proof by clear and convincing evidence.

(f) Hearings. Any hearings held pursuant to this Rule shall be conducted by the Presiding Disciplinary Judge in the manner prescribed by C.R.C.P. 251.18 and C.R.C.P. 251.19, and a Hearing Board shall not be required.

(g) Compensation. The Presiding Disciplinary Judge may fix the compensation to be paid to any legal counsel or medical expert appointed by the Presiding Disciplinary Judge pursuant to this Rule. The Presiding Disciplinary Judge may direct that such compensation be assessed as part of the costs of a proceeding held pursuant to this Rule and that it be paid as such in accordance with law.

(h) Post-Hearing Relief and Notice of Appeal. The attorney may file a motion for post-hearing relief or a notice of appeal as provided in C.R.C.P. 251.19.

ANNOTATION

Annotator's note. The following annotations include cases decided under former provisions similar to this rule.

Former section (a) is not unconstitutional. Requiring attorney to prove mental illness by clear and convincing evidence was not contrary to § 13-25-127 (1), which establishes a preponderance of the evidence as the quantum of proof in civil cases, because an attorney disciplinary proceeding is not strictly a civil proceeding. People v. Sullivan, 802 P.2d 1091 (Colo. 1990).

Supreme court affirms order of presiding disciplinary judge (PDJ) transferring attorney to disability inactive status. The office of attorney regulation counsel (OARC) adequately petitioned PDJ for a disability proceeding under section (c) of this rule by filing status report. Because the status report unquestionably put attorney on notice of the disability proceeding and gave him or her a meaningful opportunity to oppose the OARC's request for an independent medical examination (IME), the report satisfied the ''petition'' requirement of section (c). In addition, the law of the case doctrine did not preclude the PDJ from reconsidering his or her decision to disregard the report of the first medical expert retained to conduct an IME of the attorney. In light of testimony of this expert, PDJ acted ''upon proper grounds'' when her or she decided to reconsider earlier ruling disregarding expert's report. Even without medical report, adverse inference of disability drawn by PDJ on the basis of attorney's disregard of orders to cooperate in second IME process was by itself sufficient to establish by clear and convincing evidence that the attorney suffers from a mental or emotional infirmity or illness and that such infirmity or illness prevents the attorney from both defending himself or herself in the consolidated disciplinary proceeding and fulfilling the responsibilities as an attorney, thereby requiring the attorney to petition for reinstatement under C.R.C.P. 251.30. In re Bass, 142 P.3d 1259 (Colo. 2006).

Applied in People v. Luxford, 626 P.2d 675 (Colo. 1981); People v. Southern, 638 P.2d 787 (Colo. 1982); People v. Barbour, 639 P.2d 1065 (Colo. 1982); People v. Dwyer, 652 P.2d 1074 (Colo. 1982); People v. Craig, 708 P.2d 787 (Colo. 1985).

Rule 251.24. Appellate Discipline Commission

Repealed, effective September 1, 2000.

Rule 251.25. Counsel for the Appellate Discipline Commission

Repealed, effective September 1, 2000.

Rule 251.26. Proceedings Before the Appellate Discipline Commission

Repealed, effective September 1, 2000.

Rule 251.27. Proceedings Before the Supreme Court

(a) Appellate Jurisdiction. Appellate review by the Supreme Court of every final decision of the Hearing Board in which public censure, a period of suspension, disbarment, or transfer to disability inactive status is ordered or in which reinstatement or readmission is denied shall be allowed as provided by these rules.

(b) Standard of Review. All disciplinary and disability proceedings filed in the Supreme Court as herein provided shall be conducted in the name of the People of the State of Colorado titled ''IN THE MATTER OF [the name of the ATTORNEY-RESPONDENT]'' and shall be prosecuted by the Regulation Counsel.

When proceedings are conducted before the Supreme Court as herein provided, the Supreme Court shall affirm the decision of the Hearing Board unless it determines that, based on the record, the findings of fact of the Hearing Board are clearly erroneous or that the form of discipline imposed by the Hearing Board (1) bears no relation to the conduct, (2) is manifestly excessive or insufficient in relation to the needs of the public, or (3) is otherwise unreasonable. The Supreme Court may conduct a de novo review of the conclusions of law.

The matter shall be docketed by the clerk of the Supreme Court as:

SUPREME COURT, STATE OF COLORADO
Case No.
ORIGINAL PROCEEDING IN DISCIPLINE [OR DISABILITY]

IN THE MATTER OF [the name of the ATTORNEY-RESPONDENT]

(c) Appeal—How Taken. An appeal from a Hearing Board to the Supreme Court shall be taken by filing a notice of appeal with the Supreme Court within the time set forth in this Rule. Upon the filing of the notice of appeal, the Supreme Court shall have the exclusive jurisdiction over the appeal and procedures concerning the appeal unless otherwise specified by these Rules. An advisory copy of the notice of appeal shall be served on the Presiding Disciplinary Judge within the time for its filing in the Supreme Court. Failure of an appellant to take any step other than the timely filing of a notice of appeal does not affect the validity of the appeal, but is a ground only for such action as the Supreme Court deems appropriate, which may include dismissal of the appeal. Content of the notice of appeal shall not be deemed jurisdictional.

(d) Contents of Notice of Appeal. Except as otherwise provided by these rules, and to the extent practicable, the notice of appeal shall conform to the requirements set forth in C.A.R. 3(e).

(e) Contents of Any Notice of Cross-Appeal. A notice of cross-appeal shall set forth the same information required for a notice of appeal and shall set forth the party initiating the cross-appeal and designate all cross-appellees.

(f) Number of Copies to be Filed. Five copies of the notice of appeal or cross-appeal shall be filed with the original.

(g) Appeal—When Taken. The notice of appeal required by this rule shall be filed with the Supreme Court with an advisory copy served on the Presiding Disciplinary Judge within 21 days of the date of mailing the decision from which the party appeals. If a timely notice of appeal is filed by a party, the other party may file a notice of appeal within 14 days of the date on which the first notice of appeal is filed, or within the time otherwise prescribed by this section (g), whichever period last expires.

The running of the time for filing a notice of appeal is terminated as to both parties by a timely motion filed with the Presiding Disciplinary Judge by either party pursuant to the Colorado Rules of Civil Procedure hereafter enumerated in this sentence, and the full time for appeal fixed by this section (g) commences to run and is to be computed from the entry of any of the following orders made upon a timely motion under such rules: (1) granting or denying a motion under C.R.C.P. 52 or 59, to amend or make additional findings of fact, whether or not an alteration of the judgment would be required if the motion is granted; (2) granting or denying a motion under C.R.C.P. 59, to alter or amend the judgment; (3) denying a motion for a new hearing under C.R.C.P. 59; (4) expiration of an extension of time granted by the Presiding Disciplinary Judge to file motion(s) for post-hearing relief under C.R.C.P. 59, where no motion is filed. The Hearing Board shall continue to have jurisdiction to hear and decide a motion under C.R.C.P. 59 regardless of the filing of a notice of appeal, provided the C.R.C.P. 59 motion is timely filed under C.R.C.P. 59(a) and determined within the time specified in C.R.C.P. 59(j). During such time, all proceedings in the Supreme Court shall be stayed. If the decision is transmitted to the parties by mail, the time for the filing of the notice of appeal shall commence from the date of the mailing of the decision.

Upon a showing of excusable neglect, the Supreme Court may extend the time for filing the notice of appeal by a party for a period not to exceed 28 days from the expiration of the time otherwise prescribed by this section (g). Such an extension may be granted before or after the time otherwise prescribed by this section (g) has expired; but if a request for an extension is made after such time has expired, it shall be made by motion with such notice as the Supreme Court shall deem appropriate.

(h) Stay Pending Appeal. Application for a stay of the decision of a Hearing Board pending appeal must ordinarily be made in the first instance to the Hearing Board. The application for stay pending appeal should be granted except when an immediate suspension has been ordered, or when no conditions of probation and supervision while the appeal is pending will protect the public. A motion for such relief may be made to the Supreme Court, but the motion shall show that application to the Hearing Board for the relief sought is not practicable, or that the Hearing Board has denied an application, or has failed to afford the relief which the applicant requested, with the reasons given by the Hearing Board for its action. The motion shall also show the reasons for the relief requested and the facts relied upon, and if the facts are subject to dispute the motion shall be supported by affidavits or other sworn statements or copies thereof. With the motion shall be filed such parts of the record as are relevant. Reasonable notice of the motion shall be given to all parties.

(i) Record on Appeal—Composition.

(1) The final pleadings which frame the issues before the Hearing Board; the findings of fact, conclusions of law and decision; motions for new trial and other post-trial motions, if any, and the Hearing Board's ruling; together with any other documents which by designation of either party or by stipulation are directed to be included shall constitute the record on appeal in all cases.

(2) The reporter's transcript, or such parts thereof as provided under section (j) of this rule, relevant depositions and exhibits may be made a part of the record.

(3) The records and files of the Hearing Board shall be certified by the clerk of the Presiding Disciplinary Judge.

(4) The original papers in all instances shall be in the record submitted. Except on written request by a party, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge need not duplicate or retain a copy of the papers or exhibits included in the record. The party requesting that a duplicate be retained shall advance the cost of preparing the copies.

(5) The record shall be properly paginated and fully indexed and shall be prepared and bound under the direction of the Presiding Disciplinary Judge.

(j) Record of Proceedings; Duty of Appellant to Order; Notice to Appellee if Partial Record is Ordered; Costs. Within 14 days after filing the notice of appeal, the appellant shall file with the Presiding Disciplinary Judge and with the clerk of the Supreme Court either: (1) a statement that no portions of the record other than those numerated in section (i) are desired or (2) a detailed designation of record, setting forth specifically those portions of the record to be included and all dates of proceedings for which transcripts are requested and the name(s) of the court reporter(s) who reported the proceedings that the appellant directs to be included in the record. The appellant shall serve a copy of the designation of record on each court reporter listed therein. If the appellant contends that a finding or conclusion is not supported by the evidence, the appellant shall include in the record a transcript of all evidence relevant to such finding or conclusion. Unless the entire transcript is to be included, the appellant shall include in the designation of record a description of the part of the transcript that the appellant intends to include in the record and a statement of the issues to be presented on appeal. If the appellee deems it necessary to include a transcript of other proceedings or other parts of the record, the appellee shall, within 14 days after the service of the statement or the appellant's designation of the record, file with the Presiding Disciplinary Judge and the Supreme Court, and serve on the appellant and on any court reporter who reported proceedings of which the appellee desires an additional transcript, a designation of the additional items to be included. Service on any court reporter of the appellant's designation of record or the appellee's additional designation of record shall constitute a request for transcription of the specified proceedings. Within 14 days after service of any such designation of record, each such court reporter shall provide in writing to all counsel in the appeal: (1) the estimated number of pages to be transcribed; (2) the estimated completion date; and (3) the estimated cost of transcription. Within 21 days after receiving the reporter's estimate, the designating party shall deposit the full amount of such estimate with the court reporter. For good cause shown, within said 21 days and upon the agreement of the court reporter, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge may order a payment schedule extending the time for payment. When the cost of the transcription will be paid by public funds, the public entity shall make arrangements with the court reporter for payment of the transcription costs. Within 28 days of the transmittal of the court reporter's cost estimate to the pro se party or counsel, the court reporter shall file with the Presiding Disciplinary Judge and Supreme Court a statement of: (1) the date the court reporter's estimate was provided and the date on which the reporter received full payment of the estimate; or (2) the schedule of payments approved by the Presiding Disciplinary Judge under a good cause extension; or (3) that the cost of the transcript will be paid from public funds. Each party shall advance the cost of preparing that part of the record designated by such party except as otherwise ordered by the Presiding Disciplinary Judge for good cause shown.

(k) Transmission of the Record.

(1) Time. The record on appeal, including the transcript and exhibits necessary for the determination of the appeal, shall be transmitted to the Supreme Court within 56 days (8 weeks) after the filing of the notice of appeal unless the time is shortened or extended by an order entered as provided in this rule. After filing the notice of appeal the appellant shall comply with the provisions of this rule and shall take any other action necessary to enable the Presiding Disciplinary Judge to assemble and transmit the record.

(2) Duty of Presiding Disciplinary Judge to Transmit the Record. When the record, including any designated transcript, is complete for purposes of the appeal, the clerk of the Presiding Disciplinary Judge shall transmit it to the clerk of the Supreme Court. The clerk of the Presiding Disciplinary Judge shall number the documents comprising the entire designated record and shall transmit with the record a list of the documents correspondingly numbered and identified with reasonable definiteness. Documents of unusual bulk or weight and physical exhibits other than documents shall not be transmitted unless a party or the Supreme Court directs the Presiding Disciplinary Judge to do so. A party must make advance arrangements for the transportation and receipt of exhibits of unusual bulk or weight.

Transmission of the record is effected when the clerk of the Presiding Disciplinary Judge mails or otherwise forwards the record to the clerk of the Supreme Court. The clerk of the Presiding Disciplinary Judge shall indicate, by endorsement on the face of the record or otherwise, the date upon which it is transmitted to the Supreme Court.

(3) Temporary Retention of Record by the Presiding Disciplinary Judge For Use In Preparing Appellate Papers. Notwithstanding the provisions of this rule, the parties may stipulate, or the Presiding Disciplinary Judge on motion of any party may order, that the record shall temporarily be retained by the Presiding Disciplinary Judge for use by the parties in preparing appellate papers. In that event, the appellant shall nevertheless cause the appeal to be docketed and the record to be filed within the time fixed or allowed for transmission of the record by complying with the provisions of this Rule and by presenting to the Supreme Court a partial record in the form of a copy of the docket entries, accompanied by a certificate of counsel for the appellant, or of the appellant if the appellant is without counsel, reciting that the record, including the transcript or parts thereof designated for inclusion and all necessary exhibits, is complete for purposes of the appeal. Upon receipt of the brief of the appellee, or at such earlier time as the parties may agree or the Supreme Court may order, the appellant shall request the Presiding Disciplinary Judge to transmit the record.

(4) Extension Of Time For Transmission Of The Record; Reduction Of Time. The Supreme Court for good cause shown may extend the time for transmitting the record. A request for extension must be made within the time originally prescribed or within an extension previously granted. Any request for extension of the period of time based upon the reporter's inability to complete the transcript shall be supported by an affidavit of the reporter specifying why the transcript has not yet been prepared, and the date by which the transcript can be completed and a statement by the court reporter that all payments due have been made. Failure to pay for the transcript in accordance with C.R.C.P. 251.27(j) is grounds for denial of a motion for extension. The Supreme Court may direct the Presiding Disciplinary Judge to expedite the preparation and transmittal of the record on appeal and, upon motion or sua sponte, take other appropriate action regarding preparation and completion of the record.

(5) Stipulation Of Parties That Parts of the Record Be Retained By the Presiding Disciplinary Judge. The parties may agree by written stipulation filed with the Presiding Disciplinary Judge that designated parts of the record shall be retained by the Presiding Disciplinary Judge unless thereafter the Supreme Court shall order or any party shall request their transmittal. The parts thus designated shall nevertheless be a part of the record on appeal for all purposes.

(6) Preliminary Record Transmitted to the Supreme Court. If prior to the time the record is transmitted, a party desires to make to the Supreme Court a motion for dismissal, for a stay pending appeal, or for any intermediate order, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge at the request of any party shall transmit to the Supreme Court such parts of the original record as any party shall designate.

(l) Docketing the Appeal.

(1) Filing. At the time of the filing of the notice of appeal or the time of filing any documents with the Supreme Court before the filing of the notice of appeal, the Appellant shall pay to the clerk of the Supreme Court a docket fee of $150 and the clerk shall enter the appeal upon the docket. The party appealing shall docket the case as provided in section (b) of this Rule.

(2) Leave to Proceed On Appeal In Forma Pauperis From Hearing Board to Supreme Court. A party to an action before a Hearing Board who desires to proceed on appeal in forma pauperis shall file with the Presiding Disciplinary Judge a motion for leave so to proceed, together with an affidavit showing an inability to pay costs, a belief that the party is entitled to redress, and a statement of the issues which the party intends to present on appeal. If the motion is granted, the party may proceed without further application to the Supreme Court and without prepayment of costs. If the motion is denied, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge shall state in writing the reasons for the denial.

Notwithstanding the provisions of the preceding paragraph, a party who has been permitted to proceed in an action before the Presiding Disciplinary Judge in forma pauperis may proceed on appeal in forma pauperis without further authorization unless, before or after the notice of appeal is filed, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge shall certify that the appeal is not taken in good faith or shall find that the party is otherwise not entitled so to proceed, in which event the Presiding Disciplinary Judge shall state in writing the reasons for such certification or finding. A party proceeding under this subsection shall attach a copy of the Presiding Disciplinary Judge's order granting or denying leave to proceed in forma pauperis before the Hearing Board with the appendix to the notice of appeal.

(3) Filing Of The Record. Upon receipt of the record or papers authorized to be filed in lieu of the record under the provisions of subsections (k)(3) and (k)(6) of this rule following timely transmittal, the clerk of the Supreme Court shall file the record. The clerk shall immediately give notice to all parties of the date on which the record was filed.

(4) The appellant shall have 28 days after the filing with the clerk of the Supreme Court of the record on appeal within which to file an opening brief. The appellee shall have 28 days after the filing of the appellant's opening brief within which to file an answer brief. The appellant shall have 14 days after the filing of the answer brief within which to file a reply brief.

(m) General Provisions. Except as otherwise provided in these Rules, and to the extent practicable, appeals shall be conducted in conformity with the general provisions found in C.A.R. 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 31, 32, 34, 36, 38, 39, 42, and 45.

(n) Oral Argument. Oral argument may be allowed at the discretion of the court in accordance with C.A.R. 34.

(o) Disposition. When proceedings are conducted before the Supreme Court as herein provided, the Supreme Court may resolve the matter by opinion or by order without opinion, as the court shall determine in its discretion.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, ''Constitutional Law'', which discusses Tenth Circuit decisions dealing with questions of due process in attorney disciplinary hearings, see 63 Den. U. L. Rev. 247 (1986).

Annotator's note. The following annotations include cases decided under former provisions similar to this rule.

This rule does not constitute a denial of due process even though the final arbiters of fact, the justices of the Colorado supreme court, do not personally hear the testimony of the accused attorney or other witnesses. Razatos v. Colo. Supreme Court, 549 F. Supp. 798 (D. Colo.), appeal dismissed, 455 U.S. 930, 102 S. Ct. 1415, 71 L. Ed. 2d 639 (1982).

Recommendation of grievance committee's hearing panel is advisory only, and it is incumbent upon the supreme court to exercise its independent judgment, taking into consideration the facts, circumstances, and background of the lawyer, to increase or decrease the recommended sanction. People v. Mattox, 639 P.2d 397 (Colo. 1982).

While the supreme court has always given the recommendation for discipline by the grievance committee great weight, the court reserves the right to exercise our independent judgment in arriving at the proper level of discipline. People v. Brown, 726 P.2d 638 (Colo. 1986).

Under this rule, the supreme court may accept the recommendation of the grievance committee or may impose such other discipline as may be proper under the circumstances. People v. Radinsky, 176 Colo. 357, 490 P.2d 951 (1971).

The selection of discipline to be imposed is ultimately a decision to be made by the supreme court after considering the appropriate factors and the purposes to be served by disciplinary sanctions. People v. Vigil, 779 P.2d 372 (Colo. 1989).

As part of its constitutional and inherent powers, the supreme court has exclusive jurisdiction over lawyers, and possesses the plenary authority to regulate and supervise the practice of law in Colorado. In re Caldwell, 50 P.3d 897 (Colo. 2002); Matter of Greene, 2013 CO 29, 302 P.3d 690.

This rule does not specifically authorize the appellate review of an order granting summary judgment, but that authority is reserved in C.R.C.P. 251.1(d). Matter of Greene, 2013 CO 29, 302 P.3d 690.

Suspension of a license to practice law is not criminal punishment for purposes of the double jeopardy clause of the fifth amendment. In re Cardwell, 50 P.3d 897 (Colo. 2002).

The primary purpose of lawyer regulation proceedings is to protect the public, not to punish the offending lawyer. In re Caldwell, 50 P.3d 897 (Colo. 2002).

Factual findings of grievance committee are binding on the supreme court, unless the supreme court, after considering the record as a whole, concludes that the findings are clearly erroneous and unsupported by substantial evidence. People v. Garnett, 725 P.2d 1149 (Colo. 1986) (apparently overruling People v. Mattox, 639 P.2d 397 (Colo. 1982)).

Supreme court is bound by the factual findings of the hearing board unless those findings are clearly erroneous and not supported by substantial evidence in the record. Court reviews questions of law de novo as in any appeal. In re Quiat, 979 P.2d 1029 (Colo. 1999); In re Rosen, 198 P.3d 116 (Colo. 2008).

Where hearing board determined that an allegation of the complaint was not proven by clear and convincing evidence because it believed respondent's explanation of his actions rather than attorney regulation counsel's allegations, supreme court could not conclude, as a matter of law, that no reasonable fact finder could have made that determination. In re Rosen, 198 P.3d 116 (Colo. 2008).

An attorney may file exceptions to the findings of the grievance committee. People v. Wilson, 176 Colo. 389, 490 P.2d 954 (1971).

Exceptions to the report of the grievance committee will be ordered stricken where the attorney fails to support them by a reporter's transcript or such portions thereof as would be necessary to enable the court to pass upon the exceptions. People v. Van Nocker, 176 Colo. 354, 490 P.2d 697 (1971).

If an attorney files exceptions, he should also provide a reporter's transcript to enable the supreme court to pass on the exceptions. People v. Murphy, 174 Colo. 182, 483 P.2d 224 (1971).

Respondent's exceptions stricken for failure to designate record as required by subsection (b)(4) of this rule. People v. Lutz, 897 P.2d 807 (Colo. 1995).

There is no evaluation of evidence on review. In determining whether the board's findings are supported by substantial evidence, it is not within the province of the supreme court to measure the weight of the evidence or to resolve the credibility of witnesses. People v. Distel, 759 P.2d 654 (Colo. 1988).

Applied in People v. King, 191 Colo. 120, 550 P.2d 848 (1976); People v. Kane, 655 P.2d 390 (Colo. 1982).

Rule 251.28. Required Action After Disbarment, Suspension, or Transfer to Disability

(a) Effective Date of Order - Winding Up Affairs. Orders imposing disbarment or a definite suspension shall become effective 35 days after the date of entry of the decision or order, or at such other time as the Supreme Court, a Hearing Board, or the Presiding Disciplinary Judge may order. Orders imposing immediate suspension, transferring an attorney to disability inactive status, or for failure to comply with rules governing attorney registration or continuing legal education, shall become effective immediately upon the date of entry of the order, unless otherwise ordered by the Supreme Court, a Hearing Board, or the Presiding Disciplinary Judge. After the entry of an order of disbarment, suspension unless fully stayed (see C.R.C.P. 251.7(a)(3)), or transfer to disability inactive status, the attorney may not accept any new retainer or employment as an attorney in any new case or legal matter; provided, however, that during any period between the date of entry of an order and its effective date the attorney may, with the consent of the client after full disclosure, wind up or complete any matters pending on the date of entry of the order.

(b) Notice to Clients in Pending Matters. An attorney against whom an order of disbarment, suspension unless fully stayed, or transfer to disability inactive status has been entered shall promptly notify in writing by certified mail each client whom the attorney represents in a matter still pending of the order entered against the attorney and of the attorney's consequent inability to act as an attorney after the effective date of such order, and advising such clients to seek legal services elsewhere. In addition, the attorney shall deliver to each client all papers and property to which the client is entitled. An attorney who has been suspended as provided in the rules governing attorney registration or continuing legal education need not comply with the requirements of this subsection if the attorney has sought reinstatement as provided by the rules governing attorney registration or continuing legal education and reasonably believes that reinstatement will occur within 14 days of the date of the order of suspension. If the attorney is not reinstated within those 14 days, then the attorney must comply with this subsection.

(c) Notice to Parties in Litigation. An attorney against whom an order of disbarment, suspension unless fully stayed, or transfer to disability inactive status is entered and who represents a client in a matter involving litigation or proceedings before an administrative body shall notify that client as required by section (b) of this rule, and shall recommend that the client promptly obtain substitute counsel. In addition, the lawyer must notify in writing by certified mail the opposing counsel of the order entered against the attorney and of the attorney's consequent inability to act as an attorney after the effective date of the order. The notice to opposing counsel shall state the place of residence of the client of the attorney against whom the order was entered. An attorney who has been suspended as provided in the rules governing attorney registration or continuing legal education need not comply with the requirements of this section if the attorney has sought reinstatement as provided by the rules governing attorney registration or continuing legal education and reasonably believes that reinstatement will occur 14 days of the date of the order of suspension. If the attorney is not reinstated within those 14 days, then the attorney must comply with this section.

If the client of the attorney against whom an order was entered does not obtain substitute counsel before the effective date of such order, the attorney must appear before the court or administrative body in which the proceeding is pending and move for leave to withdraw.

(d) Affidavit Filed With Supreme Court or the Hearing Board. Within 14 days after the effective date of the order of disbarment, suspension, or transfer to disability inactive status, or within such additional time as allowed by the Supreme Court, the Hearing Board, or the Presiding Disciplinary Judge, the attorney shall file with the Supreme Court or the Hearing Board an affidavit setting forth a list of all pending matters in which the attorney served as counsel and showing:

(1) That the attorney has fully complied with the provisions of the order and of this rule;

(2) That the attorney has served on Regulation Counsel, a list of the clients notified pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule and a copy of each notice provided;

(3) That the attorney has notified every other jurisdiction before which the attorney is admitted to practice law of the order entered against attorney; and

(4) That the attorney has served a copy of such affidavit upon the Presiding Disciplinary Judge and the Regulation Counsel. The list and notices described in (d)(2) shall only be attached to the affidavit provided to Regulation Counsel.

Such affidavit shall also set forth the address of the attorney to which communications may thereafter be directed.

In addition, the attorney shall continue to file a registration statement in accordance with C.R.C.P. 227 for a period of five years following the effective date of the order listing the attorney's residence or other address where communications may thereafter be directed to the attorney; provided, however, that the annual registration fee need not be paid during such five-year period unless and until the attorney is reinstated. Upon reinstatement the attorney shall pay the annual registration fee for the year in which reinstatement occurs.

(e) Public Notice of Order. The clerk of the Supreme Court or the Presiding Disciplinary Judge shall release for publication orders of disbarment, suspension, or transfer to disability inactive status entered against an attorney.

(f) Notice of Order to the Courts. The Presiding Disciplinary Judge or the clerk of the Supreme Court shall promptly transmit notice of the final order of disbarment, suspension, or transfer to disability inactive status to all courts in this state. The chief judge of each judicial district may make such further orders pursuant to C.R.C.P. 251.32(h) or otherwise as the Chief Judge deems necessary to protect the rights of clients of the attorney.

(g) Duty to Maintain Records. An attorney who has been disbarred, suspended, or transferred to disability inactive status shall keep and maintain records of any steps taken by the attorney pursuant to this rule as proof of compliance with this rule and with the order entered against the attorney. Failure to comply with this section without good cause shown shall constitute contempt of the Supreme Court. Proof of compliance with this section shall be a condition precedent to any petition for reinstatement or readmission.

ANNOTATION

Annotator's note. The following annotations include cases decided under former provisions similar to this rule.

It is not necessary that an attorney give notice pursuant to section (b) if he has not practiced law and has no clients. People v. Culpepper, 645 P.2d 5 (Colo. 1982).

Technical violations of the disciplinary orders and rules will not always preclude reinstatement, rather the most important consideration is the nature of the violations. In re Price, 18 P.3d 185 (Colo. 2001).

But denial of reinstatement is justified where attorney's failure to provide required notice of suspension to each client has potential to cause harm and such failure adversely affects the protections afforded the public by the disciplinary orders and rules. In re Price, 18 P.3d 185 (Colo. 2001).

Continuing to practice while suspended is conduct justifying disbarment. People v. James, 731 P.2d 698 (Colo. 1987).

Total disregard of obligation to protect a client's rights and interests over an extended period of time in conjunction with the violation of a number of disciplinary rules, the continuation of the practice of law after suspension, and an extended prior record of discipline requires most severe sanction of disbarment. People v. O'Leary, 783 P.2d 843 (Colo. 1989).

Suspension of one year and one day imposed for failing to abide by notification procedures of this section in conjunction with violation of other disciplinary rules where attorney who was suspended from practice of law for failure to pay registration fee and subsequently failed to notify client in pending bankruptcy matter, failed to withdraw from bankruptcy matter before trial date, failed to take action to secure substitute counsel, move for continuance, or otherwise protect his client's interest, and who failed to inform court or opposing counsel. People v. Smith, 828 P.2d 249 (Colo. 1992).

Attorney's continued practice of law while under an order of suspension, with no efforts to wind up the legal practice, and the failure to take action to protect the legal interests of the attorney's clients warrants disbarment. People v. Wilson, 832 P.2d 943 (Colo. 1992).

An attorney who is suspended for failure to comply with CLE requirements is barred from practicing law under this rule and rule 5.5 of the Colorado rules of professional conduct, the same as if the attorney had been suspended following a disciplinary proceeding. Continuing to practice law after such an administrative suspension warranted an additional 18-month suspension. People v. Johnson, 946 P.2d 469 (Colo. 1997).

Winding up affairs unnecessary. Where an attorney is presently suspended from the practice of law, it is not necessary that he be granted time to wind up his legal affairs. Disbarment is therefore effective on the date that the opinion was announced. People v. Susman, 787 P.2d 1119 (Colo. 1990).

Accepting a retainer while suspended from the practice of law is sufficient, in conjunction with the violation of other disciplinary rules, to justify further suspension. People v. Redman, 819 P.2d 495 (Colo. 1991).

A lawyer's continued practice of law while under an order of suspension, with no efforts to wind up the legal practice, and failure to take action to protect the legal interests of the lawyer's clients, warrants disbarment. People v. Wilson, 832 P.2d 943 (Colo. 1992).

Suspension of one year and one day appropriate for admitted solicitation of sexual favors when extensive mitigating factors were present. The instances of misconduct occurred over a short period of time during which respondent was undergoing emotional and personal problems, respondent voluntarily underwent psychological counseling, the psychologist indicated in writing that a reoccurrence of the offenses was seen as unlikely, and respondent had already received the sanction of a criminal conviction as a result of pleading guilty to harassment. Respondent was also the subject of several newspaper articles that reported his misconduct. People v. Crossman, 850 P.2d 708 (Colo. 1993).

An attorney's appearance as counsel of record in numerous court proceedings following an order of suspension warrants further suspension for one year and one day. People v. Kargol, 854 P.2d 1267 (Colo. 1993).

Suspension for one year and one day is warranted where attorney mishandled client funds but where the court found several factors in mitigation such as the absence of a prior record, a reputation for honesty, and a demonstration of remorse. People v. Galindo, 884 P.2d 1109 (Colo. 1994).

Suspension for one year and one day appropriate when attorney terminated representation without reasonable notice, failed to provide client with accounting and refund, and failed to meet continuing education requirements. Restitution required as condition of reinstatement. People v. Rivers, 933 P.2d 6 (Colo. 1997).

Suspension for three years is warranted where attorney, in conjunction with violating numerous rules of professional conduct, violated this rule by failing to notify client by certified mail of order of suspension and attorney's inability to represent client. People v. Hohertz, 926 P.2d 560 (Colo. 1996).

Disbarment appropriate when attorney took no steps to protect the legal interests of his clients when he was placed under a suspension order. Attorney also had an extensive history of similar discipline. People v. Dolan, 873 P.2d 766 (Colo. 1994).

Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other violations is sufficient to justify disbarment. People v. Ebbert, 925 P.2d 274 (Colo. 1996); People v. Mannix, 936 P.2d 1285 (Colo. 1997); People v. Fager, 938 P.2d 138 (Colo. 1997); People v. Swan, 938 P.2d 1164 (Colo. 1997); People v. Holmes, 955 P.2d 1012 (Colo. 1998); People v. Zimmermann, 960 P.2d 85 (Colo. 1998); People v. Alexander, 281 P.3d 496 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2012).

An attorney's continued practice of law while under suspension is negligent where there is evidence that the attorney incorrectly believed that he had been reinstated and where there is no evidence that misconduct caused any actual harm. People v. Dieters, 883 P.2d 1050 (Colo. 1994).

Suspension for 90 days is warranted for attorney's continued practice of law during a period of suspension in view of prior record and substantial experience in practice of law even if attorney incorrectly believed that he had been reinstated. People v. Dieters, 883 P.2d 1050 (Colo. 1994).

Suspension for 18 months is warranted where attorney failed to notify opposing counsel and trial court of suspension and where the attorney had extensive record of previous discipline. People v. Watson, 883 P.2d 1053 (Colo. 1994).

Public censure is warranted where, although the attorney failed to notify opposing counsel and appeared in one hearing after imposition of the suspension, the attorney's involvement was minimal, it occurred only upon request by the client, it did not result in any harm to the client, and the attorney did not receive any benefit from the appearance. People v. Pittam, 917 P.2d 710 (Colo. 1996).

Public censure warranted where, although respondent did not notify his clients and opposing counsel of his suspension, he did notify the court early in proceedings and did not go forward with court proceedings while on suspension and no actual harm was demonstrated to any of his clients. People v. Dover, 944 P.2d 80 (Colo. 1997).

Conduct violating this rule is sufficient to warrant public censure. People v. Williams, 936 P.2d 1289 (Colo. 1997).

Orders affecting disbarment or suspension are effective 30 days after the entry of the order or at such other time as the court may order. People v. Goldstein, 887 P.2d 634 (Colo. 1994).

Applied in People ex rel. MacFarlane v. Harthun, 195 Colo. 38, 581 P.2d 716 (1978); People v. Pacheco, 198 Colo. 455, 608 P.2d 333 (1979); People v. Gifford, 199 Colo. 205, 610 P.2d 485 (1980); People v. Dixon, 621 P.2d 322 (Colo. 1981); People v. Southern, 638 P.2d 787 (Colo. 1982); People v. Dwyer, 652 P.2d 1074 (Colo. 1982); People v. Roehl, 655 P.2d 1381 (Colo. 1983).

Rule 251.29. Readmission and Reinstatement After Discipline

(a) Readmission After Disbarment. A disbarred attorney may not apply for readmission until at least eight years after the effective date of the order of disbarment. To be eligible for readmission the attorney must demonstrate the attorney's fitness to practice law and professional competence, and must successfully complete the written examination for admission to the Bar. The attorney must file a petition for readmission, properly verified, with the Presiding Disciplinary Judge, and furnish a copy to the Regulation Counsel. Thereafter, the petition shall be heard in procedures identical to those outlined by these rules governing hearings of complaints, except it is the attorney who must demonstrate by clear and convincing evidence the attorney's rehabilitation and full compliance with all applicable disciplinary orders and with all provisions of this Chapter. A Hearing Board shall consider every petition for readmission and shall enter an order granting or denying readmission.

(b) Reinstatement After Suspension. Unless otherwise provided by the Supreme Court, a Hearing Board, or the Presiding Disciplinary Judge in the order of suspension, an attorney who has been suspended for a period of one year or less shall be reinstated by order of the Presiding Disciplinary Judge, provided the attorney files an affidavit with the Regulation Counsel within 28 days prior to the expiration of the period of suspension, stating that the attorney has fully complied with the order of suspension and with all applicable provisions of this chapter. Upon receipt of the attorney's affidavit that has been timely filed, the Regulation Counsel shall notify the Presiding Disciplinary Judge of the attorney's compliance with this Rule. Upon receipt of the notice, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge shall issue an order reinstating the attorney. The order shall become effective upon the expiration of the period of suspension. If the attorney fails to file the required affidavit within the time specified, the attorney must seek reinstatement pursuant to section (c) of this Rule; provided, however, that a suspended attorney who fails to file a timely affidavit may obtain leave of the Presiding Disciplinary Judge to file an affidavit upon showing that the attorney's failure to file the affidavit was the result of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect. An attorney reinstated pursuant to this section shall not be required to show proof of rehabilitation.

An attorney who has been suspended for a period longer than one year must file a petition with the Presiding Disciplinary Judge for reinstatement and must prove by clear and convincing evidence that the attorney has been rehabilitated, has complied with all applicable disciplinary orders and with all provisions of this chapter, and is fit to practice law.

If the attorney remains suspended for five years or longer, reinstatement shall be conditioned upon certification by the state board of law examiners of the attorney's successful completion, after the expiration of the period of suspension, of the examination for admission to practice law and upon a showing by the attorney of such other proof of professional competence as the Supreme Court or a Hearing Board may require; provided, however, that filing a petition for reinstatement within five years of the effective date of the suspension of the attorney tolls the five-year period until such time as the Hearing Board rules on the petition.

(c) Petition for Reinstatement. Any attorney who has been suspended for a period longer than one year must file a petition with the Presiding Disciplinary Judge for an order of reinstatement if the attorney wishes to be reinstated to practice law. The petition must be properly verified and, when filed, a copy must be furnished to the Regulation Counsel.

The petition for reinstatement must set forth:

(1) The date the order of suspension was entered and the effective date thereof, and a copy of the disciplinary order or opinion;

(2) The date on which all prior petitions for reinstatement were filed and the disposition thereof;

(3) The facts other than passage of time and absence of additional misconduct upon which the petitioning attorney relies to establish that the attorney possesses all of the qualifications required of applicants for admission to the Bar of Colorado, fully considering the previous disciplinary action taken against the attorney;

(4) Evidence of compliance with all applicable disciplinary orders and with all provisions of this Chapter regarding actions required of suspended lawyers;

(5) Evidence of efforts to maintain professional competence through continuing legal education or otherwise during the period of suspension; and

(6) A statement of restitution made as ordered to any persons and the Colorado Attorneys' Fund for Client Protection and the source and amount of funds used to make restitution.

(d) Reinstatement Proceedings. Immediately upon receipt of a petition for reinstatement the Regulation Counsel shall conduct any investigation the Regulation Counsel deems necessary. The petitioner shall cooperate in any such investigation.

The Regulation Counsel shall submit an answer to the petition. Thereafter, the petition for reinstatement shall be reviewed in procedures identical to those outlined by these Rules governing hearings of complaints.

The Regulation Counsel may present evidence bearing upon the matters in issue, and the attorney seeking reinstatement shall bear the burden of proving by clear and convincing evidence the averments in the petition.

(e) Hearing Board Decision. In deciding whether to grant or deny the petition, the Hearing Board shall consider the attorney's past disciplinary record. The Hearing Board may condition reinstatement upon compliance with any additional orders it deems appropriate, including but not limited to the payment of restitution to any person harmed by the misconduct for which the petitioner was suspended.

(f) Readmission and Reinstatement Proceedings Before the Supreme Court. An attorney whose petition for readmission or reinstatement is denied by the Hearing Board may proceed before the Supreme Court in a manner identical to that outlined in C.R.C.P. 251.27.

(g) Successive Petitions. No petition for reinstatement under this Rule shall be accepted within two years following a denial of a previous petition for reinstatement filed on behalf of the same person.

(h) Public Information. Notwithstanding the provisions of C.R.C.P. 251.31, and any Rule relating to the confidentiality of Bar admissions, petitions for reinstatement and applications for readmission shall be matters of public record.

Any hearing held under sections (a) and (d) of this Rule shall be open to the public.

(i) Cost Deposit. Petitions for readmission or reinstatement under this Rule shall be accompanied by a cost deposit of $500 to be used to pay all expenses connected with the reinstatement proceedings. If such costs should exceed $500, the Supreme Court, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge or the presiding officer of the Hearing Board may enter an order requiring the petitioner to supply an additional deposit. Upon the completion of proceedings held pursuant to this Rule an accounting shall be rendered and any portion of the cost deposit unexpended shall be returned to the petitioner.

(j) Reinstatement on Stipulation. Provided the petition for reinstatement under section (c) of this rule is filed within 28 days prior to the expiration of the period of suspension or 91 days (13 weeks) if the period of suspension is longer than one year and provided the attorney seeking reinstatement and the Regulation Counsel, after any investigation the Regulation Counsel deems necessary, stipulate to reinstatement, the Regulation Counsel shall file with the Presiding Disciplinary Judge the stipulation containing such terms and conditions of reinstatement, if any, as may be agreed. Upon receipt of the stipulation, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge may approve the stipulation following an appearance by the attorney before the Presiding Disciplinary Judge and enter an order of reinstatement on the terms and conditions contained in the stipulation or reject the stipulation and order that a hearing be held by a Hearing Board as provided in section (d) of this rule.

Person not entitled to admission to bar not entitled to reinstatement. Where a disciplined respondent was not qualified to take the bar examination in the first instance, he will never be entitled to apply for reinstatement pursuant to this rule. People v. Culpepper, 645 P.2d 5 (Colo. 1982).

Fact that psychiatric condition contributed to violations of code of professional responsibility requires application to grievance committee for reinstatement, including presentation of evidence of psychiatric and emotional condition that indicates fitness to practice law. People v. Fleming, 716 P.2d 1090 (Colo. 1986).

Requiring that a psychiatric evaluation precede reinstatement after suspension of longer than one year is justified by respondent's erratic behavior with respect to his handling of cases on which discipline is based and his conduct during the disciplinary proceedings, including his threatening manner toward prosecutor. People v. Fagan, 745 P.2d 249 (Colo. 1987).

Reinstatement of attorney suspended for one year and one day conditioned upon attorney demonstrating what amount of harm client suffered as a result of his misconduct, that he made appropriate restitution to her for that harm, and that attorney is emotionally and psychologically able to practice law. People v. Davies, 926 P.2d 572 (Colo. 1996).

Complainant's specific averments refuting attorney-respondent's averments contained in the petition for reinstatement did not constitute affirmative defenses to the petition for reinstatement, thus shifting the burden of proof borne by attorney-respondent under C.R.C.P. 241.22(d) (now this rule) to the complainant. In re Price, 18 P.3d 185 (Colo. 2001).

It was appropriate to require an attorney to petition for reinstatement under this rule, even though his period of suspension for violating disciplinary rule did not exceed one year, where the extraordinary number of previous matters in which the attorney was cited for neglect showed the need for a demonstration that he had been rehabilitated. People v. C De Baca, 862 P.2d 273 (Colo. 1993); People v. Beecher, 350 P.3d 327 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2015).

Tucker, 676 P.2d 680 (Colo. 1983); People v. Baca, 691 P.2d 1136 (Colo. 1984).

Rule 251.30. Reinstatement after Transfer to Disability Inactive Status

(a) Reinstatement Upon Termination of Disability. An attorney who has been transferred to disability inactive status pursuant to C.R.C.P. 251.23 shall be entitled to petition for reinstatement at such time as the Supreme Court or the Presiding Disciplinary Judge may direct. The petition shall be filed with the Presiding Disciplinary Judge, and a copy shall be furnished to the Regulation Counsel. Such petition for reinstatement shall be granted upon a showing by clear and convincing evidence that the attorney's disability has been removed and that the attorney is competent to resume the practice of law.

Upon receipt of a petition for reinstatement from disability inactive status, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge may take or direct such action as he or she deems necessary or proper to determine whether the attorney is again competent to practice law, including but not limited to the issuance of an order for an examination of the attorney by qualified medical experts designated by the Presiding Disciplinary Judge.

In addition, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge may direct that the petitioner re-establish proof of competence and learning in law, including certification by the state board of law examiners of the petitioner's successful completion of the examination for admission to practice law. If the petitioner remains on disability inactive status for five years or longer, reinstatement shall be conditioned upon certification by the state board of law examiners of the petitioner's successful completion, within the previous twelve months, of the examination for admission to practice law and upon a showing by the petitioner of such other proof of professional competence as the Supreme Court or the Presiding Disciplinary Judge may require; provided, however, that filing a petition for reinstatement within five years of the effective date of the attorney's transfer to disability inactive status tolls the five-year period until such time as the Presiding Disciplinary Judge rules on the petition.

When an attorney has been transferred to disability inactive status by an order in accordance with C.R.C.P. 251.23 and thereafter has been judicially declared to be competent, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge may dispense with any further evidence of the attorney's return to competence and may direct that the attorney be reinstated upon such terms as are deemed proper and advisable; provided, however, that if a disciplinary proceeding conducted pursuant to these rules and pending against the petitioner was deferred upon the petitioner's transfer to disability inactive status, such proceeding shall be resumed and the petitioner shall not be reinstated pending the final disposition of such proceeding.

(b) Reinstatement Proceedings. The Presiding Disciplinary Judge may, in the Presiding Disciplinary Judge's discretion, order that reinstatement proceedings identical to those provided for by C.R.C.P. 251.29(d) be conducted.

(c) Compensation of Medical Experts. The Presiding Disciplinary Judge may fix the compensation to be paid to any medical expert appointed by the Presiding Disciplinary Judge pursuant to this rule. The Supreme Court may direct that such compensation be assessed as part of the costs of a proceeding held pursuant to this Rule and that it be paid as such in accordance with law.

(d) Waiver of Doctor-Patient Privilege. For the purposes of any proceedings conducted pursuant to this Rule, the filing of a petition for reinstatement by an attorney who has been transferred to disability inactive status shall constitute a waiver of any doctor-patient privilege between the attorney and any psychiatrist, psychologist, physician, treating professional, or other medical expert who has examined or treated the attorney in connection with the disability. By order of the Supreme Court the attorney may be required to disclose the name of every psychiatrist, psychologist, physician, treating professional, or other medical expert who has examined or treated the attorney in connection with the disability, and to furnish written consent for the disclosure by such persons of any information and records pertaining to such examination or treatment requested by the Supreme Court.

ANNOTATION

Attorney on disability inactive status must demonstrate by clear and convincing evidence that her alcohol-related disability has been removed and that she is once again competent to practice law before she may be reinstated. People v. Coulter, 950 P.2d 176 (Colo. 1998); Kline v. People, 367 P.3d 116 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2016).

Rule 251.31. Access to Information Concerning Proceedings Under These Rules

(a) Availability of Information. Except as otherwise provided by these rules, all records, except (i) the work product, deliberations and internal communications of the Regulation Counsel, the committee, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge, the Hearing Boards, and the Supreme Court, and (ii) the lists of clients and copies of client notices referred to in C.R.C.P. 251.28(d)(2), shall be available to the public after the committee determines that reasonable cause to believe grounds for discipline exists and the Regulation Counsel files and serves a complaint as provided in C.R.C.P. 251.14, unless the complainant or the respondent obtains a protective order.

Unless otherwise ordered by the Supreme Court or the Presiding Disciplinary Judge, nothing in these rules shall prohibit the complaining witness, the attorney, or any other witness from disclosing the existence of proceedings under these rules or from disclosing any documents or correspondence served on or provided to those persons.

(b) Confidentiality. Before the filing and service of a complaint as provided in C.R.C.P. 251.14, the proceedings are confidential within the Office of the Regulation Counsel, the committee, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge, and the Supreme Court, except that the pendency, subject matter, and status of an investigation under C.R.C.P 251.10 may be disclosed by the Regulation Counsel if:

(1) The respondent has waived confidentiality;

(2) The proceeding is based upon allegations that include either the conviction of a crime or discipline imposed by a foreign jurisdiction;

(3) The proceeding is based on allegations that have become generally known to the public;

(4) There is a need to notify another person or organization, including the fund for client protection, to protect the public, the administration of justice, or the legal profession; or

(5) A petition for immediate suspension has been filed pursuant to C.R.C.P. 251.8.

(c) Public Proceedings. When the committee determines that reasonable cause to believe that grounds for discipline exists and the Regulation Counsel files and serves a complaint as provided in C.R.C.P. 251.14, or when a petition for reinstatement or readmission is filed, the proceeding is public except for:

(1) The deliberations of the Presiding Disciplinary Judge, the Hearing Board, or the Supreme Court; and,

(2) Information with respect to which a protective order has been issued.

(d) Proceedings Alleging Disability. In disability proceedings, all orders transferring an attorney to or from disability inactive status shall be matters of public record, but otherwise, disability proceedings shall be confidential and shall not be made public, except by order of the Supreme Court, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge, or a Hearing Board.

(e) Protective Orders. To protect the interests of a complainant, witness, third party, or respondent, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge or a Hearing Board, may, upon application of any person and for good cause shown, issue a protective order prohibiting the disclosure of specific information otherwise privileged or confidential and direct that the proceedings be conducted so as to implement the order, including requiring that the hearing be conducted in such a way as to preserve the confidentiality of the information that is the subject of the application.

(f) Disclosure to Law Firms. When the Regulation Counsel obtains an order transferring the attorney to disability inactive status or immediately suspending the attorney, or is authorized to file a complaint as provided by C.R.C.P. 251.12, the attorney shall make written disclosure to the attorney's current firm and, if different, to the attorney's law firm at the time of the act or omission giving rise to the matter, of the fact that the order has been obtained or that a disciplinary proceeding as provided for in these rules has been commenced. The disclosures shall be made within 14 days of the date of the order or of the date the Regulation Counsel notified the attorney that a disciplinary proceeding has been commenced.

(g) Pending Investigations. Except as provided by section (b) of this rule or when the attorney waives confidentiality, the Regulation Counsel shall treat as confidential proceedings pending with the Regulation Counsel or before the committee.

(h) Cases Dismissed. Except as provided by section (b) of this rule or when the attorney waives confidentiality, the Regulation Counsel shall treat as confidential proceedings that have been dismissed.

(i) Private Admonitions. Any public proceeding in which a private admonition is imposed as provided by C.R.C.P. 251.6 shall be public, as follows: the fact that private admonition is imposed shall be public information, but the private admonition itself shall not be disclosed.

(j) Production of Records Pursuant to Subpoena. The Regulation Counsel, pursuant to a valid subpoena, shall not permit access to files or records or furnish documents that are confidential as provided by these rules unless the Supreme Court orders otherwise. When counsel is permitted to disclose confidential documents contained in files or confidential records, a reasonable fee may be charged for identification of and photocopying the documents and records.

(k) Response to False or Misleading Statement. If public statements that are false or misleading are made about any disciplinary or disability case, the Regulation Counsel may disclose any information necessary to correct the false or misleading statements.

(l) Request for Nonpublic Information. A request for nonpublic information other than that authorized for disclosure under subsection (b) of this Rule shall be denied unless the request is from:

(1) An agency authorized to investigate the qualifications of persons for admission to practice law;

(2) An agency authorized to investigate the qualifications of persons for government employment;

(3) An attorney discipline enforcement agency;

(4) A criminal justice agency; or,

(5) An agency authorized to investigate the qualifications of judicial candidates. If a judicial nominating commission of the State of Colorado requests the information it shall be furnished promptly and the Regulation Counsel shall give written notice to the attorney that specified confidential information has been so disclosed.

(m) Notice to the Attorney. Except as provided in subsection (l)(5) of this Rule, if the Regulation Counsel is permitted to provide nonpublic information requested, and if the attorney has not signed a waiver permitting the requesting agency to obtain nonpublic information, the attorney shall be notified in writing at his or her last known address of that information which has been requested and by whom, together with a copy of the information proposed to be released to the requesting agency. The notice shall advise the attorney that the information shall be released at the end of 21 days following mailing of the notice unless the attorney objects to the disclosure. If the attorney timely objects to the disclosure, the information shall remain confidential unless the requesting agency obtains an order from the Supreme Court requiring its release.

(n) Release Without Notice. If an agency otherwise authorized by section (l) of this rule has not obtained a waiver from the attorney to obtain nonpublic information, and requests that the information be released without giving notice to the attorney, the requesting agency shall certify that:

(1) The request is made in furtherance of an ongoing investigation into misconduct by the attorney;

(2) The information is essential to that investigation; and

(3) Disclosure of the existence of the investigation to the attorney would seriously prejudice that investigation.

(o) Notice to National Regulatory Data Bank. The Regulation Counsel shall transmit notice of all public discipline imposed against an attorney, transfers to or from disability inactive status, and reinstatements to the National Regulatory Data Bank maintained by the American Bar Association.

(p) Duty of Officials and Employees. All officials and employees within the Office of the Regulation Counsel, the committee, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge, and the Supreme Court shall conduct themselves so as to maintain the confidentiality mandated by this rule.

(q) Evidence of Crime. Nothing in these rules except for the admission of past misconduct protected by C.R.C.P. 251.13(i) shall be construed to preclude any person from giving information or testimony to authorities authorized to investigate criminal activity.

(r) For matters that are confidential under subsection (b) of this rule and that involve allegations of sexual harassment, Regulation Counsel's investigation records regarding the sexual harassment allegations, not otherwise privileged or protected by court rule or court order, shall be available to the complainant and respondent, subject to the provisions of C.R.C.P. 251.33.

COMMITTEE COMMENT

The confidentiality rule set forth in C.R.C.P. 251.31(b) seeks to strike a balance between the protection of attorneys against publicity predicated upon unfounded accusations and the protection of clients and prospective clients and the effective administration of justice from harm caused by attorneys who are unwilling or unable to fulfill their professional obligations. C.R.C.P. 251.31(b) also recognizes that restrictions on confidentiality no longer serve their purpose when allegations that would ordinarily be confidential have become generally known through disclosure in the public record, publicity or otherwise.

The Regulation Counsel frequently receives inquiries from judges, clients or prospective clients and the media asking if an attorney is the subject of a pending disciplinary investigation. Ordinarily, this rule prohibits the Regulation Counsel from providing information about a pending investigation or even confirming that an investigation is pending. C.R.C.P. 251.31(b) sets forth exceptions when the Regulation Counsel may reveal the pendency, subject matter, and status of an investigation under C.R.C.P. 251.10.

Certain exceptions are clear. For example, when the attorney has waived confidentiality or when the proceeding against the attorney is based on a criminal conviction, discipline imposed on the attorney in another jurisdiction, or a petition for immediate suspension filed by the Regulation Counsel against the attorney under C.R.C.P. 251.8.

Other exceptions require the Regulation Counsel to exercise discretion. C.R.C.P. 251.31(b)(3) requires the Regulation Counsel to determine whether otherwise confidential allegations against an attorney have become generally known. Factors that the Regulation Counsel should consider in these circumstances include but are not limited to the nature and extent of media coverage, the nature and extent of inquiries from the media and the public, the nature and status of any related judicial proceedings, the number of people believed to have knowledge of the allegations, and the seriousness of the allegations.

Another important exception requiring the Regulation Counsel to exercise discretion is C.R.C.P. 251.31(b)(4), which allows disclosure when there is a need to notify another person or organization in order to protect the public, the administration of justice, or the legal profession. In determining whether a need to notify exists, the Regulation Counsel should consider factors including but not limited to the nature and seriousness of the conduct under investigation, the attorney's prior disciplinary history and whether the attorney has previously been disciplined for conduct similar to the alleged conduct under investigation, and the potential harm to a client or prospective client, the public or the judicial system. In those instances in which the Regulation Counsel determines that disclosure is permitted based on C.R.C.P. 251.31(b)(4) alone, the Regulation Counsel is authorized to disclose the pendency, subject matter, and status of an investigation in response to inquiry, but also to disclose this information affirmatively to those persons having a need to know the information in order to avoid potential harm.

ANNOTATION

Annotator's note. The following annotations include cases decided under former provisions similar to this rule.

Protective order issued by presiding disciplinary judge (PDJ) for "good cause" shown under section (e) does not offend the first amendment. First, section (e) furthers substantial government interest unrelated to the suppression of speech. Specifically, the government has substantial interests in preventing attorney from further abusing the discovery processes and in protecting the judge's privacy. Second, the protective order did not limit attorney's first amendment freedoms to an extent greater than necessary to protect the judge's privacy interests. The protective order prevented attorney, as a party to the investigative proceedings, from disseminating information obtained from federal bureau of investigation (FBI) documents only during attorney regulation counsel's precomplaint stage. In re Attorney E, 78 P.3d 300 (Colo. 2003).

Protective order issued by PDJ under section (e) must be modified because it unduly hinders both attorney regulation counsel's and attorney's ability to further their cases. Both parties to the investigative proceedings, attorney regulation counsel and attorney, must be able to use the documents in a limited way to prosecute and defend their respective cases even though good cause exists to protect the pertinent privacy interests. Given the implications of a privacy order that prevents both parties from making any use of the relevant documents, PDJ must modify protective order to allow limited use of FBI documents by both parties. In re Attorney E, 78 P.3d 300 (Colo. 2003).

Under this rule, the fact that a hearing board has imposed a particular sanction after a public hearing is a matter of public record. In re Attorney F, 2012 CO 57, 285 P.3d 322.

Suppressing a hearing board's disposition in a case pending resolution of an appeal would impair the transparency and public accountability in the disciplinary system. In re Attorney F, 2012 CO 57, 285 P.3d 322.

PDJ did not err in denying attorney's motion to compel removal of disciplinary information from website. PDJ did not err by denying attorney's motion to compel the office of attorney regulation counsel to remove from its website information disclosing hearing board's determination that a public censure was warranted in attorney's case. In re Attorney F, 2012 CO 57, 285 P.3d 322.

District attorney may obtain access to grievance committee's files provided that following requirements are met: first, the district attorney's request must be made pursuant to an ongoing criminal investigation; and second, the prosecution's request must set forth the evidence or information required which must relate to the charges being investigated. People v. Pacheco, 199 Colo. 470, 618 P.2d 1102 (1980); People v. Smith, 773 P.2d 522 (Colo. 1989).

Disbarment warranted where attorney filed false pleadings and disciplinary complaints, disclosed information concerning the filing of the disciplinary complaints, offered to withdraw a disciplinary complaint filed against a judge in exchange for a favorable ruling, failed to serve copies of pleadings on opposing counsel, revealed client confidences and material considered derogatory and harmful to the client aggravated by a repeated failure to cooperate with the investigation of misconduct, disruption of disciplinary proceedings, and a record of prior discipline. People v. Bannister, 814 P.2d 801 (Colo. 1991).

Reference to confidential disciplinary proceedings in civil action constituted violation and, in conjunction with violation of other disciplinary rules, warranted suspension. People v. Smith, 830 P.2d 1003 (Colo. 1992).

Applied in People ex rel. MacFarlane v. Harthun, 195 Colo. 38, 581 P.2d 716 (1978); People v. Kendrick, 646 P.2d 337 (Colo. 1982); People v. Smith, 830 P.2d 1003 (Colo. 1992).

Rule 251.32. General Provisions

(a) Quorum. A majority of the members of the committee or a Hearing Board shall constitute a quorum of such body, and the action of a majority of those present and comprising such a quorum shall be the action of the committee or Hearing Board.

(b) Notice and Service of Process. Except as may be otherwise provided by these Rules or by order of the Supreme Court, notice shall be in writing, and the giving of notice and service of process shall be sufficient when made either personally upon the attorney or by certified mail, sent to the attorney at both the attorney's last known address as provided by the attorney pursuant to C.R.C.P. 227 or such later address as may be known to the person effecting service.

If the attorney is not licensed to practice law in this state but was specially admitted by a court of this state for a particular proceeding, notice and service shall be effected as provided in this section, and if service is by certified mail, it shall be made to the attorney's last known address.

(c) Number of Copies Filed. Unless otherwise provided in these rules, in all cases where a party files documents with the Presiding Disciplinary Judge or a Hearing Board, the committee, or the Regulation Counsel, an original and three copies must be filed. When documents are filed with the Supreme Court, an original and ten copies must be filed.

(d) Costs.

(1) Disciplinary Proceedings. In all cases where discipline is imposed by the Hearing Board, it may assess against the respondent all or any part of the costs incurred in connection with the disciplinary proceedings. If the Supreme Court imposes discipline, the Supreme Court may also assess against the respondent all or any part of the costs of the proceedings. If the committee imposes discipline as provided by these rules, it may also assess against the respondent all or any part of the costs of the proceedings.

(2) Reinstatement and Readmission Proceedings After Discipline. An attorney who petitions for reinstatement from a suspension or readmission after disbarment must bear the cost of such proceedings, as required by C.R.C.P. 251.29(i).

(3) Disability Proceedings. The Presiding Disciplinary Judge, a Hearing Board, or the Supreme Court, in its discretion, may order the attorney to bear the cost of all or any part of the disability proceedings, including the cost of any examinations ordered.

(4) Reinstatement Proceedings After Transfer to Disability Inactive Status. The Presiding Disciplinary Judge, a Hearing Board, or the Supreme Court, in its discretion, may order an attorney who petitions for reinstatement after transfer to disability inactive status to pay the cost of all or any part of the proceedings conducted pursuant to C.R.C.P. 251.30, including the cost of any examinations ordered.

(e) Immunity. Testimony given in disciplinary proceedings or communications relating to attorney misconduct, lack of professionalism or disability made to the Supreme Court, the committee, the Regulation Counsel, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge, members of the Hearing Board, mediators acting pursuant to C.R.C.P. 251.3(c)(11), or monitors enlisted to assist with probation or diversion, as authorized by C.R.C.P. 251.13, shall be absolutely privileged and no lawsuit shall be predicated thereon. If the matter is confidential as provided in these rules, and if the person who testified or communicated does not maintain confidentiality, then the testimony or communications shall be qualifiedly privileged, such that an action may lie against the person whose testimony or communications were made in bad faith or with reckless disregard of their truth or falsity. Persons performing official duties under the provisions of this Chapter, including but not limited to the Presiding Disciplinary Judge and staff; members of the Hearing Board; the committee; the Regulation Counsel and staff; mediators appointed by the Supreme Court pursuant to C.R.C.P. 251.3(c)(11); monitors enlisted to assist with diversion as authorized by C.R.C.P. 251.13; members of the Bar working in connection with disciplinary proceedings or under the direction of the Presiding Disciplinary Judge, or the committee; and health care professionals working in connection with disciplinary proceedings shall be immune from suit for all conduct in the course of their official duties.

(f) Termination of Proceedings. No disciplinary or disability proceeding may be terminated except as provided by these Rules.

(g) Pending Litigation. All disciplinary proceedings which involve complaints with material allegations substantially similar to the material allegations of a criminal prosecution pending against the respondent may in the discretion of the committee, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge, or a Hearing Board be deferred until the conclusion of such prosecution.

Disciplinary proceedings involving complaints with material allegations which are substantially similar to those made against the respondent in pending civil litigation may in the discretion of the committee, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge, or a Hearing Board be deferred until the conclusion of such litigation. If the disciplinary proceeding is deferred pending the conclusion of civil litigation, the respondent shall make all reasonable efforts to obtain a prompt trial and final disposition of the pending litigation. If the respondent fails to take steps to assure a prompt disposition of the civil litigation, the disciplinary proceeding may be immediately resumed.

The acquittal of a respondent on criminal charges or a verdict or judgment in the respondent's favor in civil litigation involving substantially similar material allegations shall not alone justify the termination of disciplinary proceedings pending against the respondent upon the same material allegations.

(h) Protective Appointment of Counsel. When an attorney has been transferred to disability inactive status; or when an attorney has disappeared; or when an attorney has died; or when an attorney has been suspended or disbarred and there is evidence that the attorney has not complied with the provisions of C.R.C.P. 251.28, and no partner, executor, or other responsible party capable of conducting the attorney's affairs is known to exist, the chief judge of any judicial district in which the attorney maintained his office, upon the request of the Regulation Counsel, shall appoint legal counsel to inventory the files of the lawyer in question and to take any steps necessary to protect the interests of the attorney in question and the attorney's clients. Counsel appointed pursuant to this Rule shall not disclose any information contained in the files so inventoried without the consent of the client to whom such files relate, except as necessary to carry out the order of the court that appointed the counsel to make such inventory.

(i) Statute of Limitations. A request for investigation against an attorney shall be filed within five years of the time that the complaining witness discovers or reasonably should have discovered the misconduct. There shall be no statute of limitations for misconduct alleging fraud, conversion, or conviction of a serious crime, or for an offense the discovery of which has been prevented by concealment by the attorney.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For note, ''Standards of Discipline for Attorneys in Colorado and the Significance of the Code of Professional Responsibility'', see 50 Den. L.J. 207 (1973).

Annotator's note. The following annotations include cases decided under former provisions similar to this rule.

Immunity for persons seeking attorney discipline does not violate right to access court. Attorney disbarment for prosecution of individuals seeking discipline is appropriate and does not violate civil rights of attorney. In re Smith, 989 P.2d 165 (Colo. 1999).

Constructive service is appropriate where attorney failed to provide an address and actively concealed his whereabouts. People v. Richards, 748 P.2d 341 (Colo. 1987).

Attorney who claimed costs and damages for complaint against him subject to public censure. Where attorney violated this rule by claiming costs and damages for defending grievance filed against him and violated other disciplinary rules, public censure is appropriate. People v. Dalton, 840 P.2d 351 (Colo. 1992).

Reference to confidential disciplinary proceedings in civil action constituted violation and, in conjunction with violation of other disciplinary rules, warranted suspension. People v. Smith, 830 P.2d 1003 (Colo. 1992).

The assessment of the entire amount of the complainant's expert witness fees against a respondent is appropriate even where the complainant's expert testified to matters other than the injury the respondent's misconduct caused if such testimony was relevant. In re Cimino, 3 P.3d 398 (Colo. 2000).

Applied in People v. Harfmann, 638 P.2d 745 (Colo. 1981) (decided under former C.R.C.P. 259); People v. Smith, 830 P.2d 1003 (Colo. 1992).

Rule 251.33. Expunction of Records

(a) Expunction - Self-Executing. Except for records relating to proceedings that have become public pursuant to C.R.C.P. 251.31, all records relating to proceedings conducted pursuant to these Rules, which proceedings were dismissed, shall be expunged from the files of the committee, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge, and Regulation Counsel three years after the end of the year in which the dismissal occurred.

(b) Definition. The terms ''expunge'' and ''expunction'' shall mean the destruction of all records or other evidence of any type, including, but not limited to, the request for investigation, the response, Investigator's notes, and the report of investigation.

(c) Notice to Respondent. If proceedings conducted pursuant to these Rules (or their predecessor) were commenced, the attorney in question shall be given prompt notice of the expunction.

(d) Effect of Expunction. After expunction, the proceedings shall be deemed never to have occurred. Upon either general or specific inquiry concerning the existence of proceedings which have been expunged, the committee or the Regulation Counsel shall respond by stating that no record of the proceedings exists. The attorney in question may properly respond to any general inquiry about proceedings which have been expunged by stating that no record of the proceedings exists. The attorney in question may properly respond to any inquiry requiring reference to a specific proceeding which has been expunged by stating only that the proceeding was dismissed and that the record of the proceeding was expunged pursuant to this Rule. After a response as provided in this Rule is given to an inquirer, no further response to an inquiry into the nature or scope of the proceedings which have been expunged need be made.

(e) Retention of Records. Upon written application to the committee, for good cause and with written notice to the attorney in question and opportunity to such attorney to be heard, the Regulation Counsel may request that records which would otherwise be expunged under this Rule be retained for such additional period of time not to exceed three years as the committee deems appropriate. The Regulation Counsel may seek further extensions of the period for which retention of the records is authorized whenever a previous application has been granted.

Two Supreme Court justices who serve as liaison to the attorney regulation system, eight members of the Bar, and a member of the public shall also serve as members of the Advisory Committee. The membership shall include one member from the Colorado Bar Association's Ethics Committee, one Respondent Bar member of the Colorado Bar Association's Attorney Regulation Policy Committee, and one member of the Hearing Board pool. Diversity shall be a consideration in making the appointments.

The members of the Advisory Committee shall serve at the pleasure of the Supreme Court and may be dismissed from the Advisory Committee at any time by order of the Supreme Court. A member of the Advisory Committee may resign at any time.

(2) Vacancy. In the event of a vacancy on the Advisory Committee, the Supreme Court shall fill the vacancy to serve at the pleasure of the Supreme Court.

(3) Chair. The court shall appoint a member of the Advisory Committee to serve as its chair. The chair shall exercise overall supervisory control of the Advisory Committee.

(4) Reimbursement of Advisory Committee Members. The members of the Advisory Committee shall be entitled to reimbursement for reasonable travel, lodging, and other expenses incurred in the performance of their official duties.

(1) Assist the Supreme Court in making appointments as described in these Rules;

(2) Oversee the management committee in the coordination of administrative matters within all programs of the attorney regulation system. The management committee shall be composed of the Clerk of the Supreme Court, who shall serve as its chair, the Regulation Counsel, and the Presiding Disciplinary Judge. The management committee's functions are limited to considering administrative matters;

(3) Review the productivity, effectiveness, and efficiency of the Supreme Court's attorney regulation system including that of the Presiding Disciplinary Judge and peer assistance programs and report its findings to the Supreme Court;

(4) Review the resources of the system for the purpose of making recommendations to the Supreme Court;

(5) Periodically report to the Supreme Court on the operation of the Advisory Committee;

(6) Recommend to the Supreme Court proposed changes or additions to the rules of procedure for attorney discipline and disability proceedings;

(7) Assist the Supreme Court in such matters as the court may direct; and

(8) Repealed.

(9) Select one or more health assistance programs as designated providers.

To be eligible for designation by the Advisory Committee, an attorney's health assistance program shall provide for the education of attorneys with respect to the recognition and prevention of physical, emotional, and psychological problems and provide for intervention when necessary; offer assistance to an attorney in identifying physical, emotional, or psychological problems; evaluate the extent of physical, emotional, or psychological problems and refer the attorney for appropriate treatment; monitor the status of an attorney who has been referred for treatment; provide counseling and support for the attorney referred for treatment; agree to receive referrals from the Advisory Committee or the Regulation Counsel; and agree to make their services available to all active licensed Colorado attorneys.

Nothing in this section or section 9.5 shall be construed to create any liability on the Advisory Committee or the Supreme Court for the actions of the Advisory Committee in funding assistance programs, and no civil action may be brought or maintained against the committee or the Supreme Court for an injury alleged to have been the result of the activities of any committee-selected assistance program or court approved lawyers' peer assistance program, or the result of an act or omission of an attorney participating in or referred by a committee-selected assistance program.

(9.5) Make recommendations concerning approval of lawyers' peer assistance program.

A. Any lawyers' peer assistance program that wishes to provide services to Colorado lawyers and have protection from the reporting requirements of Colo. RPC 8.3, must be approved by the Colorado Supreme Court. To request such approval, a description of the program must be submitted to the Advisory Committee who shall then review the program and make a recommendation to the Colorado Supreme Court as to approval.

B. The description shall contain the following information:

i. The type of organization, e.g. corporation, limited liability company, etc.;

ii. The mission statement for the program;

iii. The funding for the program;

iv. A list of the volunteers and/or paid employees, together with their qualifications and backgrounds, working for or together with the program; and,

v. An explanation of the type and frequency of training for the volunteers and/or paid employees.

C. Approval of a lawyer peer assistance program is for a period of two years subject to revocation at any time by the Colorado Supreme Court. In order to be reapproved, the program must file a request for renewal with the Clerk of the Colorado Supreme Court, containing the information listed in subparagraph B, and explain any changes that occurred in the program since its initial approval by the Colorado Supreme Court. The Clerk shall then forward the request for renewal to the Advisory Committee for recommendations to the Colorado Supreme Court. Unless renewed by the Colorado Supreme Court at the conclusion of the two years, the program shall lose its approved status.

(10) Adopt such practices as may from time to time become necessary to govern the internal operation of the Advisory Committee as approved by the Supreme Court.

Rule 252.10. Eligible Claims

(a) The loss must be caused by the dishonest conduct of the attorney or, in such circumstance as described below in the death or disability of the attorney, and shall have arisen out of and by reason of an attorney-client relationship or a court-appointed fiduciary relationship between the attorney and the claimant.

(b) The claim shall have been filed no later than three years after the claimant knew or should have known of the dishonest conduct of the attorney.

(c) As used in these rules, ''dishonest conduct'' means one or more wrongful acts committed by an attorney in the nature of theft or embezzlement of money or the wrongful taking or conversion of money, property or other things of value, including but not limited to:

(1) Refusal to refund unearned fees received in advance as required by Rule 1.16 of the Colorado Rules of Professional Conduct; and

(2) The borrowing of money from a client without intention to repay it, or with disregard of the attorney's inability or reasonably anticipated inability to repay it.

(d) Except as provided by section (e) of this rule, the following losses shall not be eligible:

(1) Losses incurred by spouses, children, parents, grandparents, siblings, partners, associates and employees of attorney(s) causing the losses;

(2) Losses covered by any bond, surety agreement, or insurance contract to the extent covered thereby, including any loss to which any bonding agent, surety or insurer is subrogated, to the extent of that subrogated interest;

(e) In cases of extreme hardship or special and unusual circumstances, the Board may, in its discretion, recognize a claim which would otherwise be excluded under these rules. The Board may also pay a claim when client funds are no longer in the attorney's trust account and, due to the attorney's death or court ordered transfer to disability inactive status, the Board is unable to determine whether the attorney earned the funds or engaged in dishonesty.

(f) In cases in which it appears that there will be unjust enrichment or multiple recovery or the claimant unreasonably or knowingly contributed to the loss, the Board may, in its discretion, deny the claim.

Rule 252.11. Procedures for Filing Claims

(a) The Board shall prepare and approve a form for claiming reimbursement and shall designate the place and manner for filing a claim.

(b) The claimant must agree to cooperate with the Board in reference to the claim and in reference to civil actions which may be brought in the name of the Board pursuant to a subrogation and assignment clause which shall also be contained within the claim.

(c) The claimant shall have the responsibility to complete the claim form and provide satisfactory evidence to support the claim.

Source: Added and adopted June 25, 1998, effective January 1, 1999.

Rule 252.12. Procedures for Processing Claims

(a) Whenever it appears that a claim is not eligible for reimbursement pursuant to these rules, the claimant shall be advised of the reasons why the claim may not be eligible for reimbursement, and that, unless additional facts to support eligibility are submitted to the Fund, the claim file shall be closed.

(b) A certified copy of an order disciplining an attorney for the same dishonest act or conduct alleged in a claim, or a final judgment imposing civil or criminal liability therefor, shall be conclusive evidence that the attorney committed such dishonest act or conduct.

(c) Regulation Counsel shall be promptly notified of the claim and requested to furnish a report of its investigation, if any, on the matter to the Board. The Regulation Counsel shall allow the Fund's representatives access to its records during an investigation of a claim. The Board shall evaluate whether the investigation is complete and determine whether the Board should conduct additional investigation or await the conclusion of any disciplinary investigation or proceeding involving the same act or conduct that is alleged in the claim.

(d) The Board may conduct its own investigation when it deems it appropriate and may seek and obtain the assistance of the Regulation Counsel, the Attorney Regulation Committee, the Board of Law Examiners, the Board of Continuing Legal Education, and the Attorney Registration Office, irrespective of any confidentiality requirements of those offices, subject to rule 252.15.

(e) The Board or an individual trustee or counsel designated to act on behalf of the trustees, upon determining that any person has knowledge or is in possession or custody of books, papers, documents or other objects relevant to the disposition of a claim, may issue a subpoena requiring such person to appear and testify or to produce such books, papers, documents or other objects before the Board or counsel designated to act on behalf of the trustees, at the time and place specified therein. Subpoenas shall be subject to the provisions of C.R.C.P. 45.

(f) If any person, without adequate excuse, shall fail to obey a subpoena, the Board or an individual trustee or counsel designated to act on their behalf, may file with the Supreme Court a verified statement setting forth the facts establishing such disobedience, and the Court may then, in its discretion, institute contempt proceedings. If such person is found guilty of contempt, the Court may compel payment of the costs of the contempt proceedings to be taxed by the Court.

(g) If, by the completion of the investigation, the attorney or the attorney's representative has not been notified of the claim and given an opportunity to respond to the claim, a copy of the claim shall be served upon the attorney, or the attorney's representative. The attorney or representative shall have 21 days in which to respond.

(h) The Board may request that testimony be presented to complete the record. Upon request, the claimant or attorney, or their representatives, will be given an opportunity to be heard.

(i) The Board may make a finding of dishonest conduct for purposes of adjudicating a claim. Such a determination is not a finding of dishonest conduct for purposes of professional discipline or other purposes.

(j) When the record is complete, the claim shall be determined on the basis of all available evidence, and notice shall be given to the claimant and the attorney of the Board's determination and the reasons therefor. The approval or denial of a claim shall require the affirmative votes of at least four trustees. Payment of a claim may be made in a lump sum or in installments in the discretion of the Board.

(k) Any proceeding upon a claim need not be conducted according to technical rules relating to evidence, procedure and witnesses. Any relevant evidence shall be admitted if it is the sort of evidence on which responsible persons are accustomed to rely in the conduct of serious affairs, regardless of the existence of any common law or statutory rule which might make improper the admission of such evidence over objection in court proceedings.

(l) The Board shall determine the order and manner of payment and pay all approved claims, but unless the Board directs otherwise, no claim should be approved during the pendency of a disciplinary proceeding involving the same act or conduct that is alleged in the claim if the attorney disputes the pertinent allegations.

(m) Both the claimant and the attorney shall be advised of the status of the Board's consideration of the claim and shall be informed of the final determination.

(n) The claimant may request in writing reconsideration within 35 days of the denial or determination of the amount of a claim. If the claimant fails to make a request or the request is denied, the decision of the Board is final.

Rule 252.13. Reimbursement from Fund is a Matter of Grace

No person shall have the legal right to payment from the fund whether as claimant, third-party beneficiary, or otherwise. The decisions and actions of the Board of Trustees are not reviewable on any ground in any court or other tribunal.

Rule 252.14. Restitution and Subrogation

(a) An attorney whose dishonest conduct results in payment to a claimant shall be liable to the Fund for restitution; and the Board may bring such action as it deems advisable to enforce such obligation, including costs of such action.

(b) As a condition of payment, a claimant shall be required to provide the fund with a transfer of the claimant's rights up to the amount paid by the Fund against the attorney, the attorney's legal representative, estate or assigns; and of the claimant's rights against any third party or entity who may be liable for the claimant's loss.

(c) Upon commencement of an action by the Board as subrogee or assignee of a claim, it shall advise the claimant, who may then join in such action to recover the claimant's unpaid losses.

(d) In the event that the claimant commences an action to recover unpaid losses against the attorney or another entity who may be liable for the claimant's loss, the claimant shall be required to notify the Board of such action.

(e) The claimant shall be required to agree to cooperate in all efforts that the Board undertakes to achieve restitution for the Fund.

ANNOTATION

Ratification of unauthorized action. Claimant's acceptance of moneys from the fund does not constitute ratification of his attorney's unauthorized settlement with a third party if claimant was not aware of the consequences of accepting the fund moneys. Rule 252.15. Confidentiality

Rule 256. The Colorado Lawyer Self-Assessment Program

(1) The Colorado Supreme Court Lawyer Self-Assessment Program. The Colorado Supreme Court hereby establishes the Colorado Lawyer Self-Assessment Program. The Colorado Lawyer Self-Assessment Program allows lawyers and law firms to evaluate confidentially and voluntarily the systems and procedures they have in place to promote compliance with professional obligations. The program gives lawyers and law firms the opportunity to improve the quality of legal services offered and to build greater client satisfaction through proactive practice review. This program also promotes access to justice, as well as inclusivity and well-being among lawyers and their staff.

Lawyer participation in this program furthers the objectives in the Preamble to Chapters 18-20 of the Colorado Rules of Civil Procedure.

The Colorado Supreme Court additionally finds that maintaining the confidentiality of information prepared, created, or communicated by a lawyer or by a law firm administrator, employee, or consultant acting under the direction of a lawyer, in connection with a lawyer self-assessment will enhance participation in the Colorado Lawyer Self-Assessment Program, which will further the objectives referenced above.

(2) Definitions. As used in this rule:

(a) ''Confidential information'' means any information, including, but not limited to, documents, notations, notes, records, writings, and responses prepared or created by a lawyer or by a law firm administrator, law firm employee, or consultant under the direction of a lawyer, in connection with a lawyer self-assessment. Confidential information includes any conclusions or evaluations made by a lawyer or by a law firm administrator, law firm employee, or consultant acting under the direction of a lawyer, in connection with a lawyer self-assessment. Confidential information also includes any oral, written, or electronic communication by or to a lawyer or law firm administrator, law firm employee, or consultant acting under the direction of a lawyer, in connection with a lawyer self-assessment. Confidential information further includes any information generated or communicated as part of a law practice review.

(b) ''Lawyer self-assessment'' means any lawyer self-assessment tool approved by the Colorado Supreme Court Advisory Committee. This includes both the online survey self-assessment tool and the downloadable and printable survey tool available at www.coloradosupremecourt.com.

(c) ''Law practice review'' means any oral, written, or electronic communications between a lawyer who has completed a lawyer self-assessment and one or more law practice reviewers for purposes of obtaining feedback and guidance on that lawyer's practice.

(d) ''Law practice reviewer'' means a lawyer, and any consultant acting under the direction of a lawyer, who agrees to provide practice feedback and guidance to a lawyer following completion of a lawyer self-assessment.

(3) Program Administration. The Office of Attorney Regulation Counsel shall be responsible for the administration of the Colorado Lawyer Self-Assessment Program.

(4) Confidentiality.

(a) Confidential information shall not be utilized in any disciplinary or disability complaint or investigation, and shall be excluded as evidence in any disciplinary or disability proceeding before the Supreme Court Attorney Regulation Committee, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge of the Supreme Court, or the Colorado Supreme Court.

(b) Confidential information that lawyers or staff within a law firm communicate with other lawyers or staff in the same law firm and concerning a lawyer self-assessment shall be kept strictly confidential, shall not be utilized in any disciplinary or disability complaint or investigation, and shall be excluded as evidence in any disciplinary or disability proceeding before the Supreme Court Attorney Regulation Committee, the Presiding Disciplinary Judge of the Supreme Court, or the Colorado Supreme Court.

(c) The Office of Attorney Regulation Counsel shall not collect any personally-attributable answer data from lawyers who participate in the Colorado Lawyer Self-Assessment Program, nor shall any confidential information be used in any investigation or any disciplinary or disability proceeding initiated by the Office of Attorney Regulation Counsel.

(5) Immunity. Any law practice reviewer is immune from suit and liability for damages in any legal proceeding related to participation in law practice review, provided the law practice reviewer acted in good faith. COLORADO RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT

PREAMBLE AND SCOPE

PREAMBLE: A LAWYER'S RESPONSIBILITIES

[1] A lawyer, as a member of the legal profession, is a representative of clients, an officer of the legal system and a public citizen having special responsibility for the quality of justice.

[2] As a representative of clients, a lawyer performs various functions. As advisor, a lawyer provides a client with an informed understanding of the client's legal rights and obligations and explains their practical implications. As advocate, a lawyer zealously asserts the client's position under the rules of the adversary system. As negotiator, a lawyer seeks a result advantageous to the client but consistent with requirements of honest dealings with others. As an evaluator, a lawyer acts by examining a client's legal affairs and reporting about them to the client or to others.

[3] In addition to these representational functions, a lawyer may serve as a third-party neutral, a nonrepresentational role helping the parties to resolve a dispute or other matter. Some of these Rules apply directly to lawyers who are or have served as third-party neutrals. See, e.g., Rules 1.12 and 2.4. In addition, there are Rules that apply to lawyers who are not active in the practice of law or to practicing lawyers even when they are acting in a nonprofessional capacity. For example, a lawyer who commits fraud in the conduct of a business is subject to discipline for engaging in conduct involving dishonesty, fraud, deceit or misrepresentation. See Rule 8.4.

[4] In all professional functions a lawyer should be competent, prompt and diligent. A lawyer should maintain communication with a client concerning the representation. A lawyer should keep in confidence information relating to representation of a client except so far as disclosure is required or permitted by the Rules of Professional Conduct or other law.

[5] A lawyer's conduct should conform to the requirements of the law, both in professional service to clients and in the lawyer's business and personal affairs. A lawyer should use the law's procedures only for legitimate purposes and not to harass or intimidate others. A lawyer should demonstrate respect for the legal system and for those who serve it, including judges, other lawyers and public officials. While it is a lawyer's duty, when necessary, to challenge the rectitude of official action, it is also a lawyer's duty to uphold legal process.

[6] As a public citizen, a lawyer should seek improvement of the law, access to the legal system, the administration of justice and the quality of service rendered by the legal profession. As a member of a learned profession, a lawyer should cultivate knowledge of the law beyond its use for clients, employ that knowledge in reform of the law and work to strengthen legal education. In addition, a lawyer should further the public's understanding of and confidence in the rule of law and the justice system because legal institutions in a constitutional democracy depend on popular participation and support to maintain their authority. A lawyer should be mindful of deficiencies in the administration of justice and of the fact that the poor, and sometimes persons who are not poor, cannot afford adequate legal assistance. Therefore, all lawyers should devote professional time and resources and use civic influence to ensure equal access to our system of justice for all those who because of economic or social barriers cannot afford or secure adequate legal counsel. A lawyer should aid the legal profession in pursuing these objectives and should help the bar regulate itself in the public interest.

[7] Many of a lawyer's professional responsibilities are prescribed in the Rules of Professional Conduct, as well as substantive and procedural law. However, a lawyer is also guided by personal conscience and the approbation of professional peers. A lawyer should strive to attain the highest level of skill, to improve the law and the legal profession and to exemplify the legal profession's ideals of public service.

[8] A lawyer's responsibilities as a representative of clients, an officer of the legal system and a public citizen are usually harmonious. Thus, when an opposing party is well represented, a lawyer can be a zealous advocate on behalf of a client and at the same time assume that justice is being done. So also, a lawyer can be sure that preserving client confidences ordinarily serves the public interest because people are more likely to seek legal advice, and thereby heed their legal obligations, when they know their communications will be private.

[9] In the nature of law practice, however, conflicting responsibilities are encountered. Virtually all difficult ethical problems arise from conflict between a lawyer's responsibilities to clients, to the legal system and to the lawyer's own interest in remaining an ethical person while earning a satisfactory living. The Rules of Professional Conduct often prescribe terms for resolving such conflicts. Within the framework of these Rules, however, many difficult issues of professional discretion can arise. Such issues must be resolved through the exercise of sensitive professional and moral judgment guided by the basic principles underlying the Rules. These principles include the lawyer's obligation zealously to protect and pursue a client's legitimate interests, within the bounds of the law. Zealousness does not, under any circumstances, justify conduct that is unprofessional, discourteous or uncivil toward any person involved in the legal system.

[10] The legal profession is largely self-governing. Although other professions also have been granted powers of self-government, the legal profession is unique in this respect because of the close relationship between the profession and the processes of government and law enforcement. This connection is manifested in the fact that ultimate authority over the legal profession is vested largely in the courts.

[11] To the extent that lawyers meet the obligations of their professional calling, the occasion for government regulation is obviated. Self-regulation also helps maintain the legal profession's independence from government domination. An independent legal profession is an important force in preserving government under law, for abuse of legal authority is more readily challenged by a profession whose members are not dependent on government for the right to practice.

[12] The legal profession's relative autonomy carries with it special responsibilities of self-government. The profession has a responsibility to assure that its regulations are conceived in the public interest and not in furtherance of parochial or self-interested concerns of the bar. Every lawyer is responsible for observance of the Rules of Professional Conduct. A lawyer should also aid in securing their observance by other lawyers. Neglect of these responsibilities compromises the independence of the profession and the public interest which it serves.

[13] Lawyers play a vital role in the preservation of society. The fulfillment of this role requires an understanding by lawyers of their relationship to our legal system. The Rules of Professional Conduct, when properly applied, serve to define that relationship.

SCOPE

[14] The Rules of Professional Conduct are rules of reason. They should be interpreted with reference to the purposes of legal representation and of the law itself. Some of the Rules are imperatives, cast in the terms ''shall'' or ''shall not.'' These define proper conduct for purposes of professional discipline. Others, generally cast in the term ''may,'' are permissive and define areas under the Rules in which the lawyer has discretion to exercise professional judgment. No disciplinary action should be taken when the lawyer chooses not to act or acts within the bounds of such discretion. Other Rules define the nature of relationships between the lawyer and others. The Rules are thus partly obligatory and disciplinary and partly constructive and descriptive in that they define a lawyer's professional role. Many of the Comments use the term ''should.'' Comments do not add obligations to the Rules but provide guidance for practicing in compliance with the Rules.

[15] The Rules presuppose a larger legal context shaping the lawyer's role. That context includes court rules and statutes relating to matters of licensure, laws defining specific obligations of lawyers and substantive and procedural law in general. The Comments are sometimes used to alert lawyers to their responsibilities under such other law.

[16] Compliance with the Rules, as with all law in an open society, depends primarily upon understanding and voluntary compliance, secondarily upon reinforcement by peer and public opinion and finally, when necessary, upon enforcement through disciplinary proceedings. The Rules do not, however, exhaust the moral and ethical considerations that should inform a lawyer, for no worthwhile human activity can be completely defined by legal rules. The Rules simply provide a framework for the ethical practice of law.

[17] Furthermore, for purposes of determining the lawyer's authority and responsibility, principles of substantive law external to these Rules determine whether a client-lawyer relationship exists. Most of the duties flowing from the client-lawyer relationship attach only after the client has requested the lawyer to render legal services and the lawyer has agreed to do so. But there are some duties, such as that of confidentiality under Rule 1.6, that attach when the lawyer agrees to consider whether a client-lawyer relationship shall be established. See Rule 1.18. Whether a client-lawyer relationship exists for any specific purpose can depend on the circumstances and may be a question of fact.

[18] Under various legal provisions, including constitutional, statutory and common law, the responsibilities of government lawyers may include authority concerning legal matters that ordinarily reposes in the client in private client-lawyer relationships. For example, a lawyer for a government agency may have authority on behalf of the government to decide upon settlement or whether to appeal from an adverse judgment. Such authority in various respects is generally vested in the attorney general and the state's attorney in state government, and their federal counterparts, and the same may be true of other government law officers. Also, lawyers under the supervision of these officers may be authorized to represent several government agencies in intragovernmental legal controversies in circumstances where a private lawyer could not represent multiple private clients. These Rules do not abrogate any such authority.

[19] Failure to comply with an obligation or prohibition imposed by a Rule is a basis for invoking the disciplinary process. The Rules presuppose that disciplinary assessment of a lawyer's conduct will be made on the basis of the facts and circumstances as they existed at the time of the conduct in question and in recognition of the fact that a lawyer often has to act upon uncertain or incomplete evidence of the situation. Moreover, the Rules presuppose that whether or not discipline should be imposed for a violation, and the severity of a sanction, depend on all the circumstances, such as the willfulness and seriousness of the violation, extenuating factors and whether there have been previous violations.

[20] Violation of a Rule should not itself give rise to a cause of action against a lawyer nor should it create any presumption in such a case that a legal duty has been breached. In addition, violation of a Rule does not necessarily warrant any other nondisciplinary remedy, such as disqualification of a lawyer in pending litigation. The Rules are designed to provide guidance to lawyers and to provide a structure for regulating conduct through disciplinary agencies. They are not designed to be a basis for civil liability. Furthermore, the purpose of the Rules can be subverted when they are invoked by opposing parties as procedural weapons. The fact that a Rule is a just basis for a lawyer's self- assessment, or for sanctioning a lawyer under the administration of a disciplinary authority, does not imply that an antagonist in a collateral proceeding or transaction has standing to seek enforcement of the Rule. Nevertheless, since the Rules do establish standards of conduct by lawyers, in appropriate cases, a lawyer's violation of a Rule may be evidence of breach of the applicable standard of conduct.

[21] The Comment accompanying each Rule explains and illustrates the meaning and purpose of the Rule. The Preamble and this note on Scope provide general orientation. The Comments are intended as guides to interpretation, but the text of each Rule is authoritative.

ANNOTATION

The rules of professional conduct do not create a fiduciary duty, but they may evidence standards of care. The court may look to the rules to determine whether an attorney failed to adhere to a particular standard of care and thus breached his or her fiduciary duty to a client. Moye White LLP v. Beren, 2013 COA 89, 320 P.3d 373.

Rule 1.0. Terminology

(a) ''Belief'' or ''believes'' denotes that the person involved actually supposed the fact in question to be true. A person's belief may be inferred from circumstances.

(b) ''Confirmed in writing,'' when used in reference to the informed consent of a person, denotes informed consent that is given in writing by the person or a writing that a lawyer promptly transmits to the person confirming an oral informed consent. See paragraph (e) for the definition of ''informed consent.'' If it is not feasible to obtain or transmit the writing at the time the person gives informed consent, then the lawyer must obtain or transmit it within a reasonable time thereafter.

(b-1) ''Document'' includes e-mail or other electronic modes of communication subject to being read or put into readable form.

(c) ''Firm'' or ''law firm'' denotes a partnership, professional company, or other entity or a sole proprietorship through which a lawyer or lawyers render legal services; or lawyers employed in a legal services organization or the legal department of a corporation or other organization.

(d) ''Fraud'' or ''fraudulent'' denotes conduct that is fraudulent under the substantive or procedural law of the applicable jurisdiction and has a purpose to deceive.

(e) ''Informed consent'' denotes the agreement by a person to a proposed course of conduct after the lawyer has communicated adequate information and explanation about the material risks of and reasonably available alternatives to the proposed course of conduct.

(f) ''Knowingly,'' ''known,'' or ''knows'' denotes actual knowledge of the fact in question. A person's knowledge may be inferred from circumstances.

(g) ''Partner'' denotes a member of a partnership, an owner of a professional company, or a member of an association authorized to practice law.

(1) ''Professional company'' has the meaning ascribed to the term in C.R.C.P. 265.

(h) ''Reasonable'' or ''reasonably'' when used in relation to conduct by a lawyer denotes the conduct of a reasonably prudent and competent lawyer.

(i) ''Reasonable belief'' or ''reasonably believes'' when used in reference to a lawyer denotes that the lawyer believes the matter in question and that the circumstances are such that the belief is reasonable.

(j) ''Reasonably should know'' when used in reference to a lawyer denotes that a lawyer of reasonable prudence and competence would ascertain the matter in question.

(k) ''Screened'' denotes the isolation of a lawyer from any participation in a matter through the timely imposition of procedures within a firm that are reasonably adequate under the circumstances to protect information that the isolated lawyer is obligated to protect under these Rules or other law.

(l) ''Substantial'' when used in reference to degree or extent denotes a material matter of clear and weighty importance.

(m) ''Tribunal'' denotes a court, an arbitrator in a binding arbitration proceeding or a legislative body, administrative agency or other body acting in an adjudicative capacity. A legislative body, administrative agency or other body acts in an adjudicative capacity when a neutral official, after the presentation of evidence or legal argument by a party or parties, will render a binding legal judgment directly affecting a party's interests in a particular matter.

(n) ''Writing'' or ''written'' denotes a tangible or electronic record of a communication or representation, including handwriting, typewriting, printing, photostating, photography, audio or videorecording, and electronic communications. A ''signed'' writing includes an electronic sound, symbol, or process attached to or logically associated with a writing and executed or adopted by a person with the intent to sign the writing.

COMMENT

Confirmed in Writing

[1] If it is not feasible to obtain or transmit a written confirmation at the time the client gives informed consent, then the lawyer must obtain or transmit it within a reasonable time thereafter. If a lawyer has obtained a client's informed consent, the lawyer may act in reliance on that consent so long as it is confirmed in writing within a reasonable time thereafter.

Firm

[2] Whether two or more lawyers constitute a firm within paragraph (c) can depend on the specific facts. For example, two practitioners who share office space and occasionally consult or assist each other ordinarily would not be regarded as constituting a firm. However, if they present themselves to the public in a way that suggests that they are a firm or conduct themselves as a firm, they should be regarded as a firm for purposes of the Rules. The terms of any formal agreement between associated lawyers are relevant in determining whether they are a firm, as is the fact that they have mutual access to information concerning the clients they serve. Furthermore, it is relevant in doubtful cases to consider the underlying purpose of the Rule that is involved. A group of lawyers could be regarded as a firm for purposes of the Rule that the same lawyer should not represent opposing parties in litigation, while it might not be so regarded for purposes of the Rule that information acquired by one lawyer is attributed to another.

[3] With respect to the law department of an organization, including the government, there is ordinarily no question that the members of the department constitute a firm within the meaning of the Rules of Professional Conduct. There can be uncertainty, however, as to the identity of the client. For example, it may not be clear whether the law department of a corporation represents a subsidiary or an affiliated corporation, as well as the corporation by which the members of the department are directly employed. A similar question can arise concerning an unincorporated association and its local affiliates.

[4] Similar questions can also arise with respect to lawyers in legal aid and legal services organizations. Depending upon the structure of the organization, the entire organization or different components of it may constitute a firm or firms for purposes of these Rules.

Fraud

[5] When used in these Rules, the terms ''fraud'' or ''fraudulent'' refer to conduct that is characterized as such under the substantive or procedural law of the applicable jurisdiction and has a purpose to deceive. This does not include merely negligent misrepresentation or negligent failure to apprise another of relevant information. For purposes of these Rules, it is not necessary that anyone has suffered damages or relied on the misrepresentation or failure to inform.

Informed Consent

[6] Many of the Rules of Professional Conduct require the lawyer to obtain the informed consent of a client or other person (e.g., a former client or, under certain circumstances, a prospective client) before accepting or continuing representation or pursuing a course of conduct. See, e.g., Rules 1.2(c), 1.6(a) and 1.7(b). The communication necessary to obtain such consent will vary according to the Rule involved and the circumstances giving rise to the need to obtain informed consent. The lawyer must make reasonable efforts to ensure that the client or other person possesses information reasonably adequate to make an informed decision. Ordinarily, this will require communication that includes a disclosure of the facts and circumstances giving rise to the situation, any explanation reasonably necessary to inform the client or other person of the material advantages and disadvantages of the proposed course of conduct and a discussion of the client's or other person's options and alternatives. In some circumstances it may be appropriate for a lawyer to advise a client or other person to seek the advice of other counsel. A lawyer need not inform a client or other person of facts or implications already known to the client or other person; nevertheless, a lawyer who does not personally inform the client or other person assumes the risk that the client or other person is inadequately informed and the consent is invalid. In determining whether the information and explanation provided are reasonably adequate, relevant factors include whether the client or other person is experienced in legal matters generally and in making decisions of the type involved, and whether the client or other person is independently represented by other counsel in giving the consent. Normally, such persons need less information and explanation than others, and generally a client or other person who is independently represented by other counsel in giving the consent should be assumed to have given informed consent.

[7] Obtaining informed consent will usually require an affirmative response by the client or other person. In general, a lawyer may not assume consent from a client's or other person's silence. Consent may be inferred, however, from the conduct of a client or other person who has reasonably adequate information about the matter. A number of Rules require that a person's consent be confirmed in writing. See Rules 1.7(b) and 1.9(a). For a definition of ''writing'' and ''confirmed in writing,'' see paragraphs (n) and (b). Other Rules require that a client's consent be obtained in a writing signed by the client. See, e.g., Rules 1.8(a) and (g). For a definition of ''signed,'' see paragraph (n).

Knowingly, Known or Knows

[7A] In considering the prior Colorado Rules of Professional Conduct, the Colorado Supreme Court has stated, ''with one important exception [involving knowing misappropriation of property] we have considered a reckless state of mind, constituting scienter, as equivalent to 'knowing' for disciplinary purposes.'' In the Matter of Egbune, 971 P.2d 1065, 1069 (Colo.1999). See also People v. Rader, 822 P.2d 950 (Colo. 1992); People v. Small, 962 P.2d 258, 260 (Colo. 1998). For purposes of applying the ABA Standards for Imposing Lawyer Sanctions, and in determining whether conduct is fraudulent, the Court will continue to apply the Egbune line of cases. However, where a Rule of Professional Conduct specifically requires the mental state of ''knowledge,'' recklessness will not be sufficient to establish a violation of that Rule and to that extent, the Egbune line of cases will not be followed.

Screened

[8] This definition applies to situations where screening of a personally disqualified lawyer is permitted to remove imputation of a conflict of interest under Rules 1.10(e), 1.11, 1.12 or 1.18.

[9] The purpose of screening is to assure the affected parties that confidential information known by the personally disqualified lawyer remains protected. The personally disqualified lawyer should acknowledge the obligation not to communicate with any of the other lawyers in the firm with respect to the matter. Similarly, other lawyers in the firm who are working on the matter should be informed that the screening is in place and that they may not communicate with the personally disqualified lawyer with respect to the matter. Additional screening measures that are appropriate for the particular matter will depend on the circumstances. To implement, reinforce, and remind all affected lawyers of the presence of the screening, it may be appropriate for the firm to undertake such procedures as a written undertaking by the screened lawyer to avoid any communication with other firm personnel and any contact with any firm files or other information, including information in electronic form, relating to the matter, written notice and instructions to all other firm personnel forbidding any communication with the screened lawyer relating to the matter, denial of access by the screened lawyer to firm files or other information, including information in electronic form, relating to the matter, and periodic reminders of the screen to the screened lawyer and all other firm personnel.

[10] In order to be effective, screening measures must be implemented as soon as practical after a lawyer or law firm knows or reasonably should know that there is a need for screening.

Rule 1.1. Competence

A lawyer shall provide competent representation to a client. Competent representation requires the legal knowledge, skill, thoroughness and preparation reasonably necessary for the representation.

COMMENT

Legal Knowledge and Skill

[1] In determining whether a lawyer employs the requisite knowledge and skill in a particular matter, relevant factors include the relative complexity and specialized nature of the matter, the lawyer's general experience, the lawyer's training and experience in the field in question, the preparation and study the lawyer is able to give the matter and whether it is feasible to refer the matter to, or associate or consult with, a lawyer of established competence in the field in question. In many instances, the required proficiency is that of a general practitioner. Expertise in a particular field of law may be required in some circumstances.

[2] A lawyer need not necessarily have special training or prior experience to handle legal problems of a type with which the lawyer is unfamiliar. A newly admitted lawyer can be as competent as a practitioner with long experience. Some important legal skills, such as the analysis of precedent, the evaluation of evidence and legal drafting, are required in all legal problems. Perhaps the most fundamental legal skill consists of determining what kind of legal problems a situation may involve, a skill that necessarily transcends any particular specialized knowledge. A lawyer can provide adequate representation in a wholly novel field through necessary study. Competent representation can also be provided through the association of a lawyer of established competence in the field in question.

[3] In an emergency a lawyer may give advice or assistance in a matter in which the lawyer does not have the skill ordinarily required where referral to or consultation or association with another lawyer would be impractical. Even in an emergency, however, assistance should be limited to that reasonably necessary in the circumstances, for ill-considered action under emergency conditions can jeopardize the client's interest.

[4] A lawyer may accept representation where the requisite level of competence can be achieved by reasonable preparation. This applies as well to a lawyer who is appointed as counsel for an unrepresented person. See also Rule 6.2.

Thoroughness and Preparation

[5] Competent handling of a particular matter includes inquiry into and analysis of the factual and legal elements of the problem, and use of methods and procedures meeting the standards of competent practitioners. It also includes adequate preparation. The required attention and preparation are determined in part by what is at stake; major litigation and complex transactions ordinarily require more extensive treatment than matters of lesser complexity and consequence. An agreement between the lawyer and the client regarding the scope of the representation may limit the matters for which the lawyer is responsible. See Rule 1.2(c).

Retaining or Contracting With Other Lawyers

[6] Before a lawyer retains or contracts with other lawyers outside the lawyer's own firm to provide or assist in the provision of legal services to a client, the lawyer should ordinarily obtain informed consent from the client and must reasonably believe that the other lawyers' services will contribute to the competent and ethical representation of the client. See also Rules 1.2 (allocation of authority), 1.4 (communication with client), 1.5(e) (fee sharing), 1.6 (confidentiality), and 5.5(a) (unauthorized practice of law). The reasonableness of the decision to retain or contract with other lawyers outside the lawyer's own firm will depend upon the circumstances, including the education, experience, and reputation of the nonfirm lawyers; the nature of the services assigned to the nonfirm lawyers; and the legal protections, professional conduct rules, and ethical environments of the jurisdictions in which the services will be performed, particularly relating to confidential information.

[7] When lawyers from more than one law firm are providing legal services to the client on a particular matter, the lawyers ordinarily should consult with each other and the client about the scope of their respective representations and the allocation of responsibility among them. See Rule 1.2. When making allocations of responsibility in a matter pending before a tribunal, lawyers and parties may have additional obligations that are a matter of law beyond the scope of these Rules.

Maintaining Competence

[8] To maintain the requisite knowledge and skill, a lawyer should keep abreast of changes in the law and its practice, and changes in communications and other relevant technologies, engage in continuing study and education, and comply with all continuing legal education requirements to which the lawyer is subject. See Comments [18] and [19] to Rule 1.6.

Annotator's note. Rule 1.1 is similar to Rule 1.1 as it existed prior to the 2007 repeal and readoption of the Colorado rules of professional conduct. Relevant cases construing that provision have been included in the annotations to this rule.

Disbarment was appropriate discipline for attorney who borrowed or otherwise obtained money from elderly and vulnerable client where attorney failed (a) to disclose that the likelihood of repayment was remote and the inadequacy of security purportedly given to secure loans; (b) to provide client with adequate legal documentation to ensure repayment; and (c) to obtain client's consent to possible conflicts of interest. People v. Schindelar, 845 P.2d 1146 (Colo. 1993).

Duty of competence imposed by this rule violated by attorney's failure to adequately supervise and monitor non-attorney employee's actions on behalf of clients in bankruptcy proceedings. People v. Calvert, 280 P.3d 1269 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2011).

One-year and one-day suspension warranted where respondent failed to serve a cross-claim, failed to respond to several motions, failed to keep client informed, advanced defense that was not warranted by the facts and existing law, and misrepresented to client the basis for the judgment in favor of the opposing party. People v. Genchi, 849 P.2d 28 (Colo. 1993).

Attorney conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other rules sufficient to justify suspension when violation did not arise from neglect or willingness to take advantage of client's vulnerability and is mitigated by her inexperience in the practice of law, her lack of any prior disciplinary record, the fact that she had already been held in contempt and punished by the district court, and the fact that there is no suggestion of selfish motivation. Attorney's failure to appreciate the serious nature of conduct and the jurisdiction of the hearing board to discipline her is a serious matter meriting a period of suspension and a redetermination of her fitness before being permitted to practice law again. In re Roose, 69 P.3d 43 (Colo.), cert. denied, 540 U.S. 1053, 124 S. Ct. 815, 157 L. Ed. 2d 705 (2003).

Nine-month suspension stayed upon the requirement to pay restitution to clients is justified when violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules, particularly given the substantial and continuous incompetence, advancement of meritless claims, and significant financial harm that conduct caused clients. People v. Bontrager, 407 P.3d 1235 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2017).

Attorney's conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules is sufficient to justify six-month suspension, stayed upon completion of two-year probationary period. Attorney neglected to provide competent representation by failing to take action to secure survivor benefits for client. In re Fisher, 202 P.3d 1186 (Colo. 2009) (decided under rules in effect prior to 2007 repeal and readoption).

Forty-five-day suspension warranted where respondent neglected child custody matter and had a prior public censure, a prior admonishment, and prior suspensions, but where the respondent did not demonstrate a dishonest or selfish motive and exhibited a cooperative attitude and expressions of remorse. People v. Dowhan, 951 P.2d 905 (Colo. 1998).

Attorney's neglect resulting in an untimely filing of an inadequate certificate of review and dismissal of his client's case, combined with fact that certificate contained false statements of material fact that attorney later repeated to an investigative counsel with the office of disciplinary counsel warranted a 45-day suspension, despite mitigating factors. People v. Porter, 980 P.2d 536 (Colo. 1999).

Neglecting to file response to motion for summary judgment and to return client files upon request was sufficient to result in one-year and one-day suspension. People v. Honaker, 847 P.2d 640 (Colo. 1993).

Thirty-day suspension warranted where attorney, with previous history of discipline and experience in practicing law, neglected a civil rights suit by failing to provide an accounting with respect to fees charged and by failing to return unearned fees. People v. Fritsche, 849 P.2d 31 (Colo. 1993).

Stipulated agreement and recommendation of suspension for 30 days based upon conditional admission of misconduct were warranted for attorney who committed unfair insurance claim settlement practices and tortious conduct in handling insurance investigation of fire claim that he was not competent to handle. People v. McClung, 953 P.2d 1282 (Colo. 1998).

Attorney's inaction over a period of more than two years and other disciplinary violations warrant suspension for 30 days where there are mitigating factors. People v. LaSalle, 848 P.2d 348 (Colo. 1993).

Thirty-day suspension was appropriate discipline where attorney advised client to take action in violation of child custody order but failed to warn her of criminal consequences of such action. People v. Aron, 962 P.2d 261 (Colo. 1998).

Public censure warranted where respondent negligently filed an involuntary bankruptcy petition that was ill-advised and without factual or legal basis. Mitigating factors included the fact that respondent's mental state was one of negligence rather than knowing misconduct, respondent had not been disciplined before, and respondent cooperated in the discipline action. People v. Moskowitz, 944 P.2d 76 (Colo. 1997).

Public censure appropriate where harm suffered by attorney's client was speculative, attorney retracted his misrepresentations and admitted to his client before the institution of disciplinary proceedings that he had done nothing on the client's appeal, attorney had no prior discipline, he made full and free disclosure of his misconduct to the grievance committee, and he expressed remorse for his misconduct. People v. Nelson, 848 P.2d 351 (Colo. 1993).

Public censure appropriate where attorney failed to review district attorney's file and the transcript of the preliminary hearing before trial. People v. Bonner, 927 P.2d 836 (Colo. 1996).

Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules is sufficient to justify public censure. People v. Doherty, 908 P.2d 1120 (Colo. 1996); People v. Doherty, 945 P.2d 1380 (Colo. 1997); People v. Kolko, 962 P.2d 979 (Colo. 1998).

Conduct violating this rule sufficient to justify public censure. People v. Smith, 847 P.2d 1154 (Colo. 1993).

Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules is sufficient to justify suspension. People v. Hohertz, 926 P.2d 560 (Colo. 1996); People v. Dieters, 935 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1997); People v. Primavera, 942 P.2d 496 (Colo. 1997); In re Tolley, 975 P.2d 1115 (Colo. 1999); People v. Maynard, 238 P.3d 672 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2009); People v. Cochrane, 296 P.3d 1051 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2013); People v. Beecher, 350 P.3d 310 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2015).

Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules is sufficient to justify disbarment. People v. Walsh, 880 P.2d 766 (Colo. 1994); People v. Roybal, 949 P.2d 993 (Colo. 1997); People v. Calvert, 280 P.3d 1269 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2011); People v. Lindley, 349 P.3d 304 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2015); People v. Palmer, 349 P.3d 312 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2015); People v. Doherty, 354 P.3d 1150 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2015).

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Law reviews. For article, ''Criminal Procedure'', which discusses Tenth Circuit decisions dealing with effective assistance of counsel, see 61 Den. L.J. 303 (1984). For article, ''Third-Party Malpractice Claims Against Real Estate Lawyers'', see 13 Colo. Law. 996 (1984).

License to practice law assures public that the lawyer who holds the license will perform basic legal tasks honestly and without undue delay, in accordance with the highest standards of professional conduct. People v. Witt, 200 Colo. 522, 616 P.2d 139 (1980); People v. Dixon, 621 P.2d 322 (Colo. 1981).

Attorney has burden of proving his own incompetence. Attorney who is appointed to represent criminal defendant and who believes he is incompetent to handle case has burden of proving his incompetence to the court and if attorney carries the burden, the trial court must decide whether attorney is capable of becoming competent on his own or whether appointment of co-counsel is necessary until attorney becomes competent. Stern v. County Court, 773 P.2d 1074 (Colo. 1989).

Claim of ineffective assistance of counsel by court-appointed attorney is premature before representation has occurred and, therefore, attorney was not entitled to withdraw from case. Stern v. County Court, 773 P.2d 1074 (Colo. 1989).

Public expects appropriate discipline for misconduct. The public has a right to expect that one who engages in professional misconduct will be disciplined appropriately. People v. Witt, 200 Colo. 522, 616 P.2d 139 (1980); People v. Dixon, 621 P.2d 322 (Colo. 1981).

An attorney's personal problems cannot excuse his negligence or professional misconduct, for discipline is required not only to punish the attorney but also to protect the public. People v. Morgan, 194 Colo. 260, 574 P.2d 79 (1977); People v. Belina, 765 P.2d 121 (Colo. 1988).

The right to effective assistance of counsel is not a right to acquittal. Morse v. People, 180 Colo. 49, 501 P.2d 1328 (1972).

When cross-examination is permitted by defense counsel on previous felony convictions that the defendant has suffered without a prior foundation which establishes that defendant had counsel at the time he was convicted, counsel's representation is competent when the defendant brought his prior convictions to the jury's attention and made no claim that he was not represented by counsel. Steward v. People, 179 Colo. 31, 498 P.2d 933 (1972).

Agreeing to have depositions read at trial, rather than to have forceful live testimony, is a trial strategy decision for counsel. Morse v. People, 180 Colo. 49, 501 P.2d 1328 (1972).

Clients' business simply must be processed in apt time. People v. Bailey, 180 Colo. 211, 503 P.2d 1023 (1972).

Lawyer owes obligation to client to act with diligence in handling his client's legal work and in his representation of his client in court. People v. Bugg, 200 Colo. 512, 616 P.2d 133 (1980); People v. Pooley, 774 P.2d 239 (Colo. 1989).

An attorney violates his obligations to his client in not filing suit until almost four years after retained, in not proceeding with the lawsuit during the period thereafter, in not procuring the client's permission to transfer the case to another attorney, and in not supervising its handling by that attorney, all of which actions constitute gross negligence and unprofessional conduct. People v. Zelinger, 179 Colo. 379, 504 P.2d 668 (1972).

A lawyer's failure to prepare a will for at least eight months after being employed to do so, especially where client is aged person, is grossly negligent and shows total lack of responsibility. People v. James, 180 Colo. 133, 502 P.2d 1105 (1972).

Attorney's only preparation for hearing in dissolution of marriage action occurring in car on way to courthouse constituted handling a legal matter without adequate preparation in violation of this rule. People v. Felker, 770 P.2d 402 (Colo. 1989).

Attorney violated this rule and C.R.P.C. 8.4(d) when he prepared and filed child support worksheets that failed to properly reflect the new stipulation concerning custody. People v. Davies, 926 P.2d 572 (Colo. 1996).

Suspension for one year and one day was warranted for attorney who violated this rule and C.R.P.C. 8.4(d) by preparing and filing child support worksheets that failed to properly reflect the new stipulation concerning custody and where aggravating factors included a previous disciplinary history and failure to appear in the grievance proceedings. People v. Davies, 926 P.2d 572 (Colo. 1996).

Attorney violated this rule by taking no action on client's tort claim and by failing to file client's workers' compensation claim until July, 1985, although retained in 1984 to do so. People v. Felker, 770 P.2d 402 (Colo. 1989).

Attorney neglected legal matter entrusted to her by taking no action on client's claim which resulted in claim being barred by the statute of limitations. People v. Felker, 770 P.2d 402 (Colo. 1989).

Hindsight cannot replace a decision which counsel makes in the heat of trial. Morse v. People, 180 Colo. 49, 501 P.2d 1328 (1972).

There was insufficient evidence to establish incompetence of defense counsel. Morse v. People, 180 Colo. 49, 501 P.2d 1328 (1972).

Conduct found to violate disciplinary rules. People v. Bugg, 635 P.2d 881 (Colo. 1981); People v. Razatos, 636 P.2d 666 (Colo. 1981), appeal dismissed, 455 U.S. 930, 102 S. Ct. 1415, 71 L. Ed. 2d 639 (1982); People v. Goss, 646 P.2d 334 (Colo. 1982); People v. Ross, 810 P.2d 659 (Colo. 1991).

II. DISCIPLINARY ACTIONS.

A. Public Censure.

When a lawyer is negligent in handling estates, a public reprimand is warranted for his dereliction of duty. People v. Bailey, 180 Colo. 211, 503 P.2d 1023 (1972).

Attorney was negligent in closing two different estates in an untimely manner. Public censure is an appropriate sanction when a lawyer is negligent and does not act with reasonable diligence in representing a client, and causes injury or potential injury to a client. People v. Gebauer, 821 P.2d 782 (Colo. 1991).

Undertaking to provide services to clients in areas in which one lacks experience, which would ordinarily result in a reprimand, warrants a 30-day suspension when coupled with continued neglect after private censure. People v. Frank, 752 P.2d 539 (Colo. 1988).

Delay in handling and closing decedents' estates and failure to properly prepare inheritance tax returns, following prior letters of admonition, justify public censure. People v. Clark, 681 P.2d 482 (Colo. 1984).

An attorney's neglect and delay in handling an adoption proceeding, considered with other circumstances, justified public censure. People v. Moore, 681 P.2d 480 (Colo. 1984).

Neglect of a legal matter ordinarily warranting a letter of admonition by way of reprimand requires the imposition of public censure when such conduct is repeated after three letters of admonition. People v. Goodwin, 782 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1989).

Evidence sufficient to warrant public reprimand for dereliction of duty. People v. Atencio, 177 Colo. 439, 494 P.2d 837 (1972); People v. Zelinger, 179 Colo. 379, 504 P.2d 668 (1972).

Failure to obtain an order for service by publication, failing to return client phone calls, and failure to set a case for trial justify public censure. People v. Barr, 805 P.2d 440 (Colo. 1991).

Public censure for failure to promptly distribute proceeds of a settlement is warranted since respondent's negligence did little or no actual or potential injury to client. People v. Genchi, 824 P.2d 815 (Colo. 1992).

Public censure appropriate where attorney delayed hiring experts for case, neglected to familiarize himself and comply with the criminal discovery rules, inadequately prepared for trial, and proceeded to trial without knowing whether his own experts' testimony would support his client's defense. People v. Silvola, 888 P.2d 244 (Colo. 1995).

Public censure was appropriate where attorney's failure to appear at three hearings and to timely return a stipulation violated DR 1-102(A)(5) and, in aggravation, there was a pattern of misconduct. People v. Cabral, 888 P.2d 245 (Colo. 1995).

Public censure justified where attorney failed to attend to bankruptcy proceeding and scheduled meetings, failed to timely file pleadings and responses, and allowed his paralegal to engage in unauthorized practice of law. People v. Fry, 875 P.2d 222 (Colo. 1994).

Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules is sufficient to justify public censure. People v. Ashley, 796 P.2d 962 (Colo. 1990); People v. Nichols, 796 P.2d 966 (Colo. 1990); People v. Taylor, 799 P.2d 930 (Colo. 1990); People v. Smith, 819 P.2d 497 (Colo. 1991); People v. Odom, 829 P.2d 855 (Colo. 1992); People v. Sadler, 831 P.2d 887 (Colo. 1992); People v. Fry, 875 P.2d 222 (Colo. 1994); People v. O'Donnell, 955 P.2d 53 (Colo. 1998).

Conduct violating this rule sufficient to justify public censure. People v. Driscoll, 716 P.2d 1086 (Colo. 1986); People v. Mayer, 716 P.2d 1094 (Colo. 1986); People v. Carpenter, 731 P.2d 726 (Colo. 1987); People v. Wilson, 745 P.2d 248 (Colo. 1987); People v. Smith, 757 P.2d 628 (Colo. 1988); People v. Dowhan, 759 P.2d 4 (Colo. 1988); People v. Smith, 769 P.2d 1078 (Colo. 1989); People v. Baird, 772 P.2d 110 (Colo. 1989); People v. Fieman, 788 P.2d 830 (Colo. 1990); People v. Good, 790 P.2d 331 (Colo. 1990); People v. Brinn, 801 P.2d 1195 (Colo. 1990); People v. Moffitt, 801 P.2d 1197 (Colo. 1990); People v. Richardson, 820 P.2d 1120 (Colo. 1991); People v. Odom, 829 P.2d 855 (Colo. 1992).

B. Suspension.

The failure for more than five years to record a deed and to return it and the abstract constitutes gross professional negligence and carelessness warranting a suspension of one year from the practice of law. People v. James, 176 Colo. 299, 490 P.2d 291 (1971).

Where an attorney misrepresents to a client that he has filed a case, fails for two years to take action on behalf of another client, and, knowing that a hearing had been set on charges against him, deliberately leaves the jurisdiction of the court without making any arrangements with the grievance committee and without arranging for representation, his conduct warrants suspension from the bar. People v. Kane, 177 Colo. 378, 494 P.2d 96 (1972).

Where counsel appears to be totally oblivious to obligations to render the services for which he is paid, this crass irresponsibility or callous indifference in the handling of a client's affairs is inexcusable under any circumstances and warrants indefinite suspension from the bar. People v. Van Nocker, 176 Colo. 354, 490 P.2d 697 (1971).

Attorney suspended for three years for repeated neglect and delay in handling legal matters, failure to comply with the directions contained in a letter of admonition, and failure to answer letter of complaint from the grievance committee constitute a violation of this rule, and, with other offenses of the code of professional responsibility. People v. Hebenstreit, 764 P.2d 51 (Colo. 1988).

Suspension of lawyer for three years, which is the longest possible period for suspension, is appropriate where there was extensive pattern of client neglect and intentional deception in client matters over a period of years. Anything less would be too lenient. People v. Hellewell, 811 P.2d 386 (Colo. 1991).

Suspension for three years is appropriate where lawyer failed to respond to motions or appear at hearing, resulting in dismissal of clients' bankruptcy proceeding, thereby increasing clients' debts tenfold. The hearing board further found that the attorney engaged in bad faith obstruction of the disciplinary proceedings and refused to acknowledge the wrongful nature of his conduct or the vulnerability of his clients. People v. Farrant, 883 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1994).

Suspension for one year and one day warranted for attorney who "represented" client for a period of 19 months without that person's knowledge or consent, even asserting a counterclaim on his behalf without talking to him; who did not communicate with him in any manner for an extended period of time and then did not withdraw within a reasonable time after being unable to contact him; and who failed to answer discovery requests, resulting in the entries of default and then a default judgment against him. People v. Silvola, 915 P.2d 1281 (Colo. 1996).

Disbarment not warranted where there was mitigating evidence concerning attorney's mental and physical disabilities. Instead, the board imposed a three-year suspension with a condition for reinstatement that professional medical evidence be presented that the disabilities do not interfere with the attorney's ability to practice law. People v. Stewart, 892 P.2d 875 (Colo. 1995).

Suspension for three years, the longest period available, was appropriate in case where violation of this rule and others would otherwise have justified disbarment but mitigating factors included personal and emotional problems, interim rehabilitation, and remorse. People v. McCaffrey, 925 P.2d 269 (Colo. 1996).

Suspension for three years, rather than disbarment, was appropriate where violation of this rule and others caused serious harm to attorney's clients, but mitigating factors were present, including no previous discipline in 14 years of practice, personal and emotional problems, and cooperation and demonstrated remorse in proceedings. People v. Henderson, 967 P.2d 1038 (Colo. 1998).

Eighteen-month suspension warranted where attorney failed to notify client of an actual conflict of interest and subsequently neglected a matter, but did so without dishonest or selfish motive. People v. Watson, 833 P.2d 50 (Colo. 1992).

Failure to appear after accepting retainer justifies suspension. Where, after accepting a retainer for the defense of an action, an attorney failed to appear or advise his client of the fact that he was not going to appear and thereby prejudiced his client's case, the attorney's conduct violated the code of professional responsibility and C.R.C.P. 241.6. People v. Southern, 638 P.2d 787 (Colo. 1982).

Failure to respond to repeated inquiries from client and client's parents, failure to monitor client's case in the court system, including failure to respond to calls from the court clerk, and failure to return client's urgent calls after client was arrested and jailed constitutes a pattern of neglect and warrants 30 day suspension. People v. O'Leary, 752 P.2d 530 (Colo. 1988).

Suspension is fitting sanction when lawyer knowingly fails to perform services for a client and thereby causes injury to such client. People v. Masson, 782 P.2d 335 (Colo. 1988).

Initiation of unnecessary proceeding and legal incompetence warrant suspension. Where lawyer initiates unnecessary probate proceeding, as well as fails to meet minimum standards of legal competence for corporate and mining law problems which he has undertaken, his professional misconduct warrants suspension from the bar. People ex rel. Goldberg v. Gordon, 199 Colo. 296, 607 P.2d 995 (1980).

Failure to designate record on appeal, causing nine-month delay in criminal appeal, considered with other violations, justifies suspension. People v. May, 745 P.2d 218 (Colo. 1987).

Suspension is appropriate discipline given number and severity of instances of misconduct, including pattern of neglect over clients' affairs over lengthy period and in variety of circumstance and misrepresentation in dissolution case to client who wished to remarry concerning the filing of a dissolution petition. Considering misconduct in light of proper mitigating factors, suspension was appropriate. People v. Griffin, 764 P.2d 1166 (Colo. 1988).

There is evidence to warrant indefinite suspension. People v. Stewart, 178 Colo. 352, 497 P.2d 1003 (1972).

More severe sanction of 90-day suspension rather than public censure appropriate discipline for attorney who neglected client matter, caused potential injury to client, and engaged in conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice when aggravated by a history of five prior instances of disciplinary offenses for neglect, pattern of misconduct, refusal to acknowledge wrongful nature of conduct, vulnerability of victim, and substantial experience in the practice of law. People v. Dolan, 813 P.2d 733 (Colo. 1991).

Pattern of inaction, including failure to perform adequate research on statute of limitations problem, violated sections (A)(2) and (A)(3) and other disciplinary rules, justifying six-month suspension. People v. Barber, 799 P.2d 936 (Colo. 1990).

Failing to resolve an inability to proceed on behalf of a client, neglecting to respond to communications from the grievance committee, failing to fulfill commitments made to the investigator for the disciplinary counsel, and misrepresenting to such investigator the status of the case under investigation is conduct warranting suspension. People v. Chappell, 783 P.2d 838 (Colo. 1989).

Failing to obtain substitute counsel after accepting a retainer while under suspension constitutes neglect of a legal matter. People v. Redman, 819 P.2d 495 (Colo. 1991).

Failure to file bankruptcy petition warrants suspension from the practice of law for a period of 90 days. The respondent's misconduct was compounded by his prolonged refusal to respond to his client's inquiries and his failure to inform his client of domicile issues bearing on her desire to obtain a discharge in bankruptcy in Colorado. People v. Cain, 791 P.2d 1133 (Colo. 1990).

Delay in filing bankruptcy petition and failing to file complaint or return retainer warrants six-month suspension. People v. Archuleta, 898 P.2d 1064 (Colo. 1995).

Suspension for one year and one day warranted where attorney misrepresented to client that a trial had been scheduled, that continuances and new trial settings had been made, that a settlement had been reached, and where the attorney's previous, similar discipline, was a significant aggravating factor. People v. Smith, 888 P.2d 248 (Colo. 1995).

Suspension for one year and one day warranted for attorney who "represented" client for a period of 19 months without that person's knowledge or consent, even asserting a counterclaim on his behalf without talking to him; who did not communicate with him in any manner for an extended period of time and then did not withdraw within a reasonable time after being unable to contact him; and who failed to answer discovery requests, resulting in the entries of default and then a default judgment against him. People v. Silvola, 915 P.2d 1281 (Colo. 1996).

Failure to communicate with clients, court, and opposing counsel, misrepresentation of the status of the proceedings to client, failure to investigate clients' case, failure to attend one hearing and being late for another hearing, and refusing client an accounting and a refund of the unused portion of attorney fee, justifies three-year suspension. People v. Wilson, 814 P.2d 791 (Colo. 1991).

Ninety-day suspension warranted where attorney neglected client's legal matter, failed to pay for court reporting services, and showed complete disregard of grievance proceedings. People v. Whitaker, 814 P.2d 812 (Colo. 1991).

Suspension for 90 days is warranted for attorney's continued practice of law during a period of suspension in view of prior record and substantial experience in practice of law even if attorney incorrectly believed that he had been reinstated. People v. Dieters, 883 P.2d 1050 (Colo. 1994).

Suspension of one year and one day warranted for attorney whose misconduct included neglect of legal matter, failure to seek lawful objectives of client, intentional failure to carry out employment contract resulting in intentional prejudice or damage to client, and who also pled guilty to class 5 felony of failure to pay employee income tax withheld. People v. Franks, 866 P.2d 1375 (Colo. 1994).

Absent mitigating or aggravating factors, suspension appropriate when a lawyer knowingly fails to perform services for a client or engages in a pattern of neglect and causes injury or potential injury to a client. People v. Glaess, 884 P.2d 722 (Colo. 1994).

It was appropriate to require an attorney to petition for reinstatement under C.R.C.P. 241.22 (b) to (d), even though his period of suspension for violating section (A)(3) did not exceed one year, where the extraordinary number of previous matters in which the attorney was cited for neglect showed the need for a demonstration that he had been rehabilitated. People v. C De Baca, 862 P.2d 273 (Colo. 1993).

Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules is sufficient to justify suspension. People v. Moya, 793 P.2d 1154 (Colo. 1990); People v. Creasey, 793 P.2d 1159 (Colo. 1990); People v. Schmad, 793 P.2d 1162 (Colo. 1990); People v. Baptie, 796 P.2d 978 (Colo. 1990); People v. Garrett, 802 P.2d 1082 (Colo. 1990); People v. C. Disbarment.

Attorney disbarred for continued pattern of conduct involving neglect and misrepresentation and for failure to cooperate in investigation by grievance committee. People v. Young, 673 P.2d 1003 (Colo. 1984); People v. Johnston, 759 P.2d 10 (Colo. 1988).

Failure to file bankruptcy petition for eight months justifies disbarment. When a lawyer, after being paid for his services, neglects to file a bankruptcy petition for his client for a period of approximately eight months, during which time the client is sued and his wages attached on several occasions, the lawyer's gross neglect and failure to carry out a contract of employment justify disbarment. People v. McMichael, 199 Colo. 433, 609 P.2d 633 (1980).

Failure to timely file estate tax returns on behalf of personal representative of estate, failure to be adequately prepared for argument at scheduled hearing, failure to file timely notice of alibi, and failure to notify opposing counsel constitutes continuing pattern of neglect causing risk of serious injury to clients and justifies disbarment. People v. Stewart, 752 P.2d 528 (Colo. 1987).

Failing to commence any action on behalf of a client, exploiting a client's friendship and trust to extort funds for one's personal use, and failing to cooperate with the grievance committee in its investigation of complaints with respect to such matters is conduct warranting disbarment. People v. McMahill, 782 P.2d 336 (Colo. 1989).

Where an attorney demonstrates an extreme indifference to the welfare of his clients and the status of their cases and an extreme insensitivity to his professional duties in the face of adverse judgments due to neglect, client complaints, and repeated disciplinary proceedings, disbarment is the appropriate sanction. People v. Wyman, 782 P.2d 339 (Colo. 1989).

Conduct which causes a client serious or potentially serious injury and demonstrates a complete lack of concern for a client's interests and welfare warrants disbarment. People v. Lyons, 762 P.2d 143 (Colo. 1988).

Continuing to practice law while suspended is conduct justifying disbarment. People v. James, 731 P.2d 698 (Colo. 1987).

Facts sufficient to justify disbarment of attorney for failure to comply with registration requirements of C.R.C.P. 227, misappropriation of funds, and improper withdrawal from employment. People v. Scudder, 197 Colo. 99, 590 P.2d 493 (1979).

Total disregard of obligation to protect a client's rights and interests over an extended period of time in conjunction with the violation of a number of disciplinary rules and an extended prior record of discipline requires most severe sanction of disbarment. People v. O'Leary, 783 P.2d 843 (Colo. 1989).

Attorney's continued practice of law while under an order of suspension, with no efforts to wind up the legal practice, and the failure to take action to protect the legal interests of the attorney's clients, warrants disbarment. People v. Wilson, 832 P.2d 943 (Colo. 1992).

Disbarment was the proper remedy where the attorney was afforded multiple opportunities including two suspensions and court ordered rehabilitation and where attorney's conduct demonstrated (a) neglect of legal matters entrusted to him; (b) misrepresentation to the client and the grievance committee; and (c) a pattern of neglect followed by the respondent that had the potential of causing serious injury to his clients. People v. Susman, 787 P.2d 1119 (Colo. 1990).

Disbarment proper remedy for lawyer who, shortly after admission to bar and continuing for two years, embarked on a course of conduct resulting in ten separate instances of professional misconduct, some of which presented the potential for serious harm to clients and to the administration of justice. People v. Murray, 887 P.2d 1016 (Colo. 1994).

A lawyer's continued practice of law while under an order of suspension, with no efforts to wind up the legal practice, and failure to take action to protect the legal interests of the lawyer's clients, warrants disbarment. People v. Wilson, 832 P.2d 943 (Colo. 1992).

Pattern of misconduct involving failure to render services, multiple offenses, and conversion of clients' property sufficient to warrant disbarrment. People v. Vermillion, 814 P.2d 795 (Colo. 1991).

Disbarment appropriate where attorney converted client funds, neglected a legal matter entrusted to him, and had a history of discipline. People v. Grossenbach, 814 P.2d 810 (Colo. 1991).

Disbarment appropriate when attorney neglected numerous legal matters and engaged in other conduct prejudicial to client and the administration of justice. People v. Theodore, 926 P.2d 1237 (Colo. 1996).

Failure to respond to discovery and motions, failure to attend case management hearing, and failure to inform client of progress of a civil case is grounds for disbarment. People v. Hebenstreit, 823 P.2d 125 (Colo. 1992).

Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules is sufficient to justify disbarment. People v. Ashley, 817 P.2d 965 (Colo. 1991); People v. Rouse, 817 P.2d 967 (Colo. 1991); People v. Margolin, 820 P.2d 347 (Colo. 1991); People v. Koransky, 824 P.2d 819 (Colo. 1992); People v. Bradley, 825 P.2d 475 (Colo. 1992); People v. Rule 1.2. Scope of Representation and Allocation of Authority Between Client and Lawyer

(a) Subject to paragraphs (c) and (d), a lawyer shall abide by a client's decisions concerning the objectives of representation and, as required by Rule 1.4, shall consult with the client as to the means by which they are to be pursued. A lawyer may take such action on behalf of the client as is impliedly authorized to carry out the representation. A lawyer shall abide by a client's decision whether to settle a matter. In a criminal case, the lawyer shall abide by the client's decision, after consultation with the lawyer, as to a plea to be entered, whether to waive jury trial and whether the client will testify.

(b) A lawyer's representation of a client, including representation by appointment, does not constitute an endorsement of the client's political, economic, social or moral views or activities.

(c) A lawyer may limit the scope or objectives, or both, of the representation if the limitation is reasonable under the circumstances and the client gives informed consent. A lawyer may provide limited representation to pro se parties as permitted by C.R.C.P. 11(b) and C.R.C.P. 311(b).

(d) A lawyer shall not counsel a client to engage, or assist a client, in conduct that the lawyer knows is criminal or fraudulent, but a lawyer may discuss the legal consequences of any proposed course of conduct with a client and may counsel or assist a client to make a good faith effort to determine the validity, scope, meaning or application of the law.

COMMENT

Allocation of Authority between Client and Lawyer

[1] Paragraph (a) confers upon the client the ultimate authority to determine the purposes to be served by legal representation, within the limits imposed by law and the lawyer's professional obligations. The decisions specified in paragraph (a), such as whether to settle a civil matter, must also be made by the client. See Rule 1.4(a)(1) for the lawyer's duty to communicate with the client about such decisions. With respect to the means by which the client's objectives are to be pursued, the lawyer shall consult with the client as required by Rule 1.4(a)(2) and may take such action as is impliedly authorized to carry out the representation.

[2] On occasion, however, a lawyer and a client may disagree about the means to be used to accomplish the client's objectives. Clients normally defer to the special knowledge and skill of their lawyer with respect to the means to be used to accomplish their objectives, particularly with respect to technical, legal and tactical matters. Conversely, lawyers usually defer to the client regarding such questions as the expense to be incurred and concern for third persons who might be adversely affected. Because of the varied nature of the matters about which a lawyer and client might disagree and because the actions in question may implicate the interests of a tribunal or other persons, this Rule does not prescribe how such disagreements are to be resolved. Other law, however, may be applicable and should be consulted by the lawyer. The lawyer should also consult with the client and seek a mutually acceptable resolution of the disagreement. If such efforts are unavailing and the lawyer has a fundamental disagreement with the client, the lawyer may withdraw from the representation. See Rule 1.16(b)(4). Conversely, the client may resolve the disagreement by discharging the lawyer. See Rule 1.16(a)(3).

[3] At the outset of a representation, the client may authorize the lawyer to take specific action on the client's behalf without further consultation. Absent a material change in circumstances and subject to Rule 1.4, a lawyer may rely on such an advance authorization. The client may, however, revoke such authority at any time.

[4] In a case in which the client appears to be suffering diminished capacity, the lawyer's duty to abide by the client's decisions is to be guided by reference to Rule 1.14.

Independence from Client's Views or Activities

[5] Legal representation should not be denied to people who are unable to afford legal services, or whose cause is controversial or the subject of popular disapproval. By the same token, representing a client does not constitute approval of the client's views or activities.

[5A] Regarding communications with clients when a lawyer retains or contracts with other lawyers outside the lawyer's own firm to provide or assist in the providing of legal services to the client, see Comment [6] to Rule 1.1.

[5B] Regarding communications with clients and with lawyers outside of the lawyer's firm when lawyers from more than one firm are providing legal services to the client on a particular matter, see Comment [7] to Rule 1.1.

Agreements Limiting Scope of Representation

[6] The scope of services to be provided by a lawyer may be limited by agreement with the client or by the terms under which the lawyer's services are made available to the client. When a lawyer has been retained by an insurer to represent an insured, for example, the representation may be limited to matters related to the insurance coverage. A limited representation may be appropriate because the client has limited objectives for the representation. In addition, the terms upon which representation is undertaken may exclude specific means that might otherwise be used to accomplish the client's objectives. Such limitations may exclude actions that the client thinks are too costly or that the lawyer regards as repugnant or imprudent.

[7] Although this Rule affords the lawyer and client substantial latitude to limit the representation, the limitation must be reasonable under the circumstances. If, for example, a client's objective is limited to securing general information about the law the client needs in order to handle a common and typically uncomplicated legal problem, the lawyer and client may agree that the lawyer's services will be limited to a brief telephone consultation. Such a limitation, however, would not be reasonable if the time allotted was not sufficient to yield advice upon which the client could rely. Although an agreement for a limited representation does not exempt a lawyer from the duty to provide competent representation, the limitation is a factor to be considered when determining the legal knowledge, skill, thoroughness and preparation reasonably necessary for the representation. See Rule 1.1.

[8] All agreements concerning a lawyer's representation of a client must accord with the Rules of Professional Conduct and other law. See, e.g., Rules 1.1, 1.8 and 5.6.

Criminal, Fraudulent and Prohibited Transactions

[9] Paragraph (d) prohibits a lawyer from knowingly counseling or assisting a client to commit a crime or fraud. This prohibition, however, does not preclude the lawyer from giving an honest opinion about the actual consequences that appear likely to result from a client's conduct. Nor does the fact that a client uses advice in a course of action that is criminal or fraudulent of itself make a lawyer a party to the course of action. There is a critical distinction between presenting an analysis of legal aspects of questionable conduct and recommending the means by which a crime or fraud might be committed with impunity.

[10] When the client's course of action has already begun and is continuing, the lawyer's responsibility is especially delicate. The lawyer is required to avoid assisting the client, for example, by drafting or delivering documents that the lawyer knows are fraudulent or by suggesting how the wrongdoing might be concealed. A lawyer may not continue assisting a client in conduct that the lawyer originally supposed was legally proper but then discovers is criminal or fraudulent. The lawyer must, therefore, withdraw from the representation of the client in the matter. See Rule 1.16(a). In some cases, withdrawal alone might be insufficient. It may be necessary for the lawyer to give notice of the fact of withdrawal and to disaffirm any opinion, document, affirmation or the like. See Rule 4.1.

[11] Where the client is a fiduciary, the lawyer may be charged with special obligations in dealings with a beneficiary.

[12] Paragraph (d) applies whether or not the defrauded party is a party to the transaction. Hence, a lawyer must not participate in a transaction to effectuate criminal or fraudulent avoidance of tax liability. Paragraph (d) does not preclude undertaking a criminal defense incident to a general retainer for legal services to a lawful enterprise. The last clause of paragraph (d) recognizes that determining the validity or interpretation of a statute or regulation may require a course of action involving disobedience of the statute or regulation or of the interpretation placed upon it by governmental authorities.

[13] If a lawyer comes to know or reasonably should know that a client expects assistance not permitted by the Rules of Professional Conduct or other law or if the lawyer intends to act contrary to the client's instructions, the lawyer must consult with the client regarding the limitations on the lawyer's conduct. See Rule 1.4(a)(5).

[14] A lawyer may counsel a client regarding the validity, scope, and meaning of Colorado constitution article XVIII, secs. 14 & 16, and may assist a client in conduct that the lawyer reasonably believes is permitted by these constitutional provisions and the statutes, regulations, orders, and other state or local provisions implementing them. In these circumstances, the lawyer shall also advise the client regarding related federal law and policy.

Annotator's note. Rule 1.2 is similar to Rule 1.2 as it existed prior to the 2007 repeal and readoption of the Colorado rules of professional conduct. Relevant cases construing that provision have been included in the annotations to this rule.

Even though section (c) of this rule allows unbundling of legal services, an attorney remains obligated to comply with C.R.C.P. 11(b). In re Merriam, 250 B.R. 724 (B.R. D. Colo. 2000).

Having a litigant appear to be pro se when in truth an attorney is authoring pleadings and necessarily guiding the course of the litigation with an unseen hand is disingenuous and far below the level of candor that must be met by members of the bar. Such conduct is contrary to section (d) of this rule. Johnson v. Bd. of County Comm'rs of Fremont, 868 F. Supp. 1226 (D. Colo. 1994).

Any provision in an agreement to provide legal services that would deprive a client of the right to control settlement is unenforceable as against public policy, including a provision that purports to prohibit the client from unreasonably refusing to settle. A client's right to reject settlement is absolute and unqualified; parties to litigation have the right to control their own cases. Jones v. Feiger, Collison & Killmer, 903 P.2d 27 (Colo. App. 1994), rev'd on other grounds, 926 P.2d 1244 (Colo. 1996).

Representing to client that a case had been settled, on terms that the client had not agreed to, violated section (a). People v. Muhr, 370 P.3d 677 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2015).

The decision to enter a guilty plea or withdraw a guilty plea is one of the few fundamental choices that must be decided by the defendant alone. People v. Davis, 2012 COA 1, __ P.3d __, rev'd on other grounds, 2015 CO 36M, 352 P.3d 950.

Aiding client to violate custody order sufficient to justify disbarment. People v. Chappell, 927 P.2d 829 (Colo. 1996).

Suspension for three years, the longest period available, was appropriate in case where violation of this rule and others would otherwise have justified disbarment but mitigating factors included personal and emotional problems, interim rehabilitation, and remorse. People v. McCaffrey, 925 P.2d 269 (Colo. 1996).

Suspension for three years appropriate when attorney circumvented proper channels for the adoption of a child by falsely listing her own husband as the birth father on the baby's birth certificate, counseled her husband to engage in fraudulent conduct, and provided false information on a petition for stepparent adoption. People v. Ritland, 327 P.3d 914 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2014).

Suspension for one year and one day appropriate when attorney neglected to file response to motion for summary judgment and to return client files upon request. People v. Honaker, 847 P.2d 640 (Colo. 1993).

Public censure appropriate where harm suffered by attorney's client was speculative, attorney retracted his misrepresentations and admitted to his client before the institution of disciplinary proceedings that he had done nothing on the client's appeal, attorney had no prior discipline, he made full and free disclosure of his misconduct to the grievance committee, and he expressed remorse for his misconduct. People v. Nelson, 848 P.2d 351 (Colo. 1993).

If prosecution witness advises the prosecutor that he or she knows or recognizes one of the jurors, the prosecutor has an affirmative duty immediately to notify the court and opposing counsel of the witness' statement. People v. Drake, 841 P.2d 364 (Colo. App. 1992).

When a lawyer accepts fees from clients and then abandons those clients while keeping their money and causing serious harm, disbarment is appropriate. People v. Steinman, 930 P.2d 596 (Colo. 1997).

Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules is sufficient to justify suspension, stayed upon completion of one-year period of probation with conditions. People v. Bendinelli, 329 P.3d 300 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2014).

Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules is sufficient to justify disbarment. People v. Steinman, 930 P.2d 596 (Colo. 1997); In re Bilderback, 971 P.2d 1061 (Colo. 1999).

Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules is sufficient to justify disbarment. People v. Sousa, 943 P.2d 448 (Colo. 1997).

Cases Decided Under Former DR 2-110.

of Client Files'', see 16 Colo. Law. 1787 (1987).

Suspension for one year and one day warranted for attorney who "represented" client for a period of 19 months without that person's knowledge or consent, even asserting a counterclaim on his behalf without talking to him; who did not communicate with him in any manner for an extended period of time and then did not withdraw within a reasonable time after being unable to contact him; and who failed to answer discovery requests, resulting in the entries of default and then a default judgment against him. People v. Silvola, 915 P.2d 1281 (Colo. 1996).

Attorney who undertakes to conduct action impliedly agrees that he will pursue it to some conclusion; and he is not free to abandon it without reasonable cause. Sobol v. District Court, 619 P.2d 765 (Colo. 1980); Anderson, Calder & Lembke v. District Court, 629 P.2d 603 (Colo. 1981).

Even where cause may exist, attorney's withdrawal must be undertaken in proper manner, duly protective of his client's rights and liabilities. Sobol v. District Court, 619 P.2d 765 (Colo. 1980).

Attorney's withdrawal from employment was improper where attorney gave clients insufficient notice of her intention to withdraw, failed to return the file of one client, and took no steps to avoid foreseeable injury to the clients' interests. People v. Felker, 770 P.2d 402 (Colo. 1989).

Trial dates accepted shall be honored before withdrawal from employment. When public defender or a busy defense lawyer finds that his representation of one client is inimical to his representation of another client and he must make an election as to the client he will represent, he has a heavy duty to the court to see that he honors dates that he has agreed to for the trial of a case. Watson v. District Court, 199 Colo. 76, 604 P.2d 1165 (1980).

Attorney's withdrawal is within trial court's discretion. The question of whether an attorney should be permitted to withdraw his general appearance on behalf of a litigant in a civil case is, under ordinary circumstances, within the discretion of the trial court; and its decision will not be reversed unless this discretion has been demonstrably abused. Sobol v. District Court, 619 P.2d 765 (Colo. 1980).

Motions for withdrawal of counsel are addressed to the discretion of the court and will not be reversed unless clear error or abuse is shown. Anderson, Calder & Lembke v. District Court, 629 P.2d 603 (Colo. 1981).

A decision as to whether counsel should be permitted to withdraw must lie within the sound discretion of the trial judge. As long as the trial court has a reasonable basis for believing that the lawyer-client relation has not deteriorated to the point where counsel is unable to give effective aid in the fair presentation of a defense, the court is justified in refusing to appoint new counsel. People v. Schultheis, 638 P.2d 8 (Colo. 1981).

The question of whether a lawyer may withdraw during course of trial due to the client's conduct is within the trial court's discretion and court must balance need for orderly administration of justice with facts underlying request for withdrawal. People v. Rubanowitz, 688 P.2d 231 (Colo. 1984).

The trial court's decision will not be disturbed on review absent abuse. The decision of the trial court to deny a motion to withdraw will not be disturbed on review absent a clear abuse of discretion. People v. Schultheis, 638 P.2d 8 (Colo. 1981).

Disagreement concerning counsel's refusal to call witnesses is insufficient grounds. A disagreement between defense counsel and the accused concerning counsel's refusal to call certain witnesses is not sufficient to require the trial judge to grant the motion to withdraw and replace defense counsel. People v. Schultheis, 638 P.2d 8 (Colo. 1981).

Filing of a grievance because of disagreement as to trial tactics is insufficient grounds. Mere filing of grievance concerning counsel's refusal to file certain motions and refusal to file a civil action is not sufficient to require trial judge to grant the motion to withdraw and replace defense counsel. People v. Martinez, 722 P.2d 445 (Colo. App. 1986).

Counsel should request permission to withdraw where client insists on presenting perjured testimony. When a serious disagreement arises between the defense counsel and the accused, and counsel is unable to dissuade his client from insisting that fabricated testimony be presented by a witness, counsel should request permission to withdraw from the case in accordance with the procedures set forth in this opinion. If the motion to withdraw is denied, however, he must continue to serve as defense counsel. People v. Schultheis, 638 P.2d 8 (Colo. 1981).

When confronted with a client who insists upon presenting perjured testimony as to an alibi, counsel may only state, in the motion to withdraw, that he has an irreconcilable conflict with his client. People v. Schultheis, 638 P.2d 8 (Colo. 1981).

Failure and refusal to refund unearned portions of fees collected from two clients constituted violations of C.R.C.P. 241(B), DR 9-102, and this rule. People v. Gellenthien, 621 P.2d 328 (Colo. 1981).

Failure to withdraw for over a year after being discharged by client, accompanied by protracted failure to return client's file, justifies suspension. People v. Hodge, 752 P.2d 533 (Colo. 1988).

Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules sufficient to justify public censure. People v. Vsetecka, 893 P.2d 1309 (Colo. 1995).

Failing to return the file of a client while at the same time neglecting to make further filings in such client's case during a period of suspension for similar acts of misconduct warrants further suspension from the practice of law. People v. Hodge, 782 P.2d 25 (Colo. 1989).

Suspended attorney must demonstrate rehabilitation. The actions of a suspended attorney who took part in a complex real estate transaction and engaged in the practice of law by representing, counseling, advising, and assisting a former client warrant suspension until he demonstrates by clear and convincing evidence that (1) he has been rehabilitated; (2) he has complied with and will continue to comply with all applicable disciplinary orders and rules; and (3) he is competent and fit to practice law. People v. Belfor, 200 Colo. 44, 611 P.2d 979 (1980).

Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules is sufficient to justify suspension. People v. Moya, 793 P.2d 1154 (Colo. 1990); People v. Creasey, 793 P.2d 1159 (Colo. 1990); People v. Wilson, 814 P.2d 791 (Colo. 1991); People v. Whitaker, 814 P.2d 812 (Colo. 1991); People v. Heilbrunn, 814 P.2d 819 (Colo. 1991); People v. Regan, 871 P.2d 1184 (Colo. 1994); People v. Cole, 880 P.2d 158 (Colo. 1994).

Conduct violating this rule sufficient to justify suspension. People v. Geller, 753 P.2d 235 (Colo. 1988).

Facts sufficient to justify disbarment of attorney for failure to comply with registration requirements of C.R.C.P. 227, misappropriation of funds, and improper withdrawal from employment. People v. Scudder, 197 Colo. 99, 590 P.2d 493 (1979).

Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules is sufficient to justify disbarment. People v. Southern, 832 P.2d 946 (Colo. 1992); People v. McGrath, 833 P.2d 731 (Colo. 1992); People v. Fritsche, 897 P.2d 805 (Colo. 1995).

Conduct violating this rule sufficient to justify disbarment. People v. Dwyer, 652 P.2d 1074 (Colo. 1982); People v. Kengle, 772 P.2d 605 (Colo. 1989); People v. Franks, 791 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1990); People v. Vermillion, 814 P.2d 795 (Colo. 1991); People v. Mullison, 829 P.2d 382 (Colo. 1992); People v. McGrath, 833 P.2d 731 (Colo. 1992).

Lawyers are required by the obligations of their office to act with diligence in the affairs of their clients and in judicial proceedings. People v. Heyer, 176 Colo. 188, 489 P.2d 1042 (1971).

Failure to take any action on behalf of his client after he was retained and entrusted with work and after making representations to his client which were false, an attorney violates the code of professional responsibility and C.R.C.P. 241.6. People v. Southern, 638 P.2d 787 (Colo. 1982).

Trial court may explore adequacy of trial counsel's representations regarding grounds for withdrawal, but in the course of this inquiry, the court may not compel the attorney to disclose any confidential communications. People v. Schultheis, 44 Colo. App. 452, 618 P.2d 710 (1980), rev'd on other grounds, 638 P.2d 8 (Colo. 1981).

Attorney may not breach his duty of maintaining his client's confidences even when he knows his client has previously perjured himself. People v. Schultheis, 44 Colo. App. 452, 618 P.2d 710 (1980), rev'd on other grounds, 638 P.2d 8 (Colo. 1981).

Attorney shall not use testimony that he knows is perjured. People v. Schultheis, 44 Colo. App. 452, 618 P.2d 710 (1980), rev'd on other grounds, 638 P.2d 8 (Colo. 1981).

Defense counsel may waive right to confront witnesses. The right to confront witnesses is a fundamental right and waiver of such a right is not to be lightly found, but this decision is properly the responsibility of defense counsel, and therefore, the decision of defense counsel to allow the prosecution to use depositions of witnesses in court is an effective waiver. Morse v. People, 180 Colo. 49, 501 P.2d 1328 (1972).

Matters of trial conduct and strategy are the responsibility of defense counsel. Morse v. People, 180 Colo. 49, 501 P.2d 1328 (1972).

Defendant cannot complain when it falls short of accomplishing an acquittal. It is not error to deny a motion for a new trial based on incompetence of trial counsel where the incompetence claimed arises out of defense counsel's failure to call certain witnesses that the defendant suggested, because defense counsel is responsible for trial strategy, and the defendant will not be heard to complain when trial strategy falls short of accomplishing an acquittal. People v. Moreno, 181 Colo. 106, 507 P.2d 857 (1973).

If every decision in a contested trial had to be made by the accused, he would be denied effective assistance and the judgment of his trial counsel; the defendant's attorney is the expert at trial, not the defendant. Morse v. People, 180 Colo. 49, 501 P.2d 1328 (1972).

Continued and chronic neglect over a period of two years must be considered willful and supports finding of intentional prejudice or damage to clients. People v. Barber, 799 P.2d 936 (Colo. 1990).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by imposing sanctions on attorney who, at direction of clients, failed to advise opposing party of clients' bankruptcy and automatic stay in advance of trial. Under such circumstances the attorney was faced with an irreconcilable conflict between his duty to his clients and his professional obligations to opposing counsel and would have been justified in requesting permission to withdraw. Parker v. Davis, 888 P.2d 324 (Colo. App. 1994).

Inappropriate personal relationship with a client may prejudice or damage client under this rule. People v. Gibbons, 685 P.2d 168 (Colo. 1984).

Where an attorney requests, on the day of trial, dismissal of federal court proceedings because of lack of jurisdictional amount while representing plaintiff, fails to appear in court when scheduled, shows gross indifference and disregard toward the court, the jurors, and opposing counsel, and fails to keep appointments with the grievance committee assigned to investigate charges against him, a public reprimand for dereliction of duty is called for. People v. Heyer, 176 Colo. 188, 489 P.2d 1042 (1971).

Public censure was appropriate where attorney's failure to appear at three hearings and to timely return a stipulation violated DR 1-102(A)(5) and, in aggravation, there was a pattern of misconduct. People v. Cabral, 888 P.2d 245 (Colo. 1995).

Conduct of attorney warranted public censure under paragraph (A)(1). People v. Stayton, 798 P.2d 903 (Colo. 1990); People v. Smith, 819 P.2d 497 (Colo. 1991).

Conduct of attorney warranted public reprimand under paragraph (A)(2). People v. Atencio, 177 Colo. 439, 494 P.2d 837 (1972).

Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules is sufficient to justify public censure. People v. Ashley, 796 P.2d 962 (Colo. 1990); People v. Fitzgibbons, 909 P.2d 1098 (Colo. 1996).

Conduct violating this rule sufficient to justify public censure. People v. Mayer, 716 P.2d 1094 (Colo. 1986); People v. Wilson, 745 P.2d 248 (Colo. 1987); People v. Wyman, 769 P.2d 1076 (Colo. 1989); People v. Baird, 772 P.2d 110 (Colo. 1989); People v. Fieman, 788 P.2d 830 (Colo. 1990); People v. Good, 790 P.2d 331 (Colo. 1990).

Where an attorney misrepresents to a client that he has filed a case, fails for two years to take action on behalf of another client, and, knowing that a hearing had been set on charges against him, deliberately leaves the jurisdiction of the court without making any arrangements with the grievance committee and without arranging for representation, his conduct warrants suspension from the bar. People v. Kane, 177 Colo. 378, 494 P.2d 96 (1972).

Suspension is fitting sanction when lawyer knowingly fails to perform services for a client and thereby causes injury to such client. People v. Masson, 782 P.2d 335 (Colo. 1989).

Failing to resolve an inability to proceed on behalf of a client, neglecting to respond to communications from the grievance committee, failing to fulfill commitments made to the investigator for the disciplinary counsel, and misrepresenting to such investigator the status of the case under investigation is conduct warranting suspension. People v. Chappell, 783 P.2d 838 (Colo. 1989).

Suspension of lawyer for three years which is the longest possible period for suspension, is appropriate where there was extensive pattern of client neglect and intentional deception in client matters over a period of years. Anything less would be too lenient. People v. Hellewell, 811 P.2d 386 (Colo. 1991).

Failure to communicate with clients, court, and opposing counsel, misrepresentation of the status of the proceedings to the client, and failure to investigate clients' case justifies three-year suspension. People v. Wilson, 814 P.2d 791 (Colo. 1991).

Knowing failure to prosecute client's claim or to obtain client's informed consent to abandon the claim and neglecting to pursue settlement negotiations damaged client and constitutes intentional failure to carry out contract of employment sufficient to justify suspension. People v. Honaker, 814 P.2d 785 (Colo. 1991).

Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules is sufficient to warrant suspension. People v. Creasey, 793 P.2d 1159 (Colo. 1990); People v. Schmad, 793

P.2d 1162 (Colo. 1990); People v. Wilbur, 796 P.2d 976 (Colo. 1990); People v. Baptie, 796 P.2d 978 (Colo. 1990); People v. Taylor, 799 P.2d 930 (Colo. 1990); People v. Garrett, 802 P.2d 1082 (Colo. 1990); People v. Rhodes, 803 P.2d 514 (Colo. 1991); People v. Flores, 804 P.2d 192 (Colo. 1991); People v. Dunsmoor, 807 P.2d 561 (Colo. 1991); People v. Regan, 831 P.2d 893 (Colo. 1992); People v. Denton, 839 P.2d 6 (Colo. 1992); People v. Hindorff, 860 P.2d 526 (Colo. 1993); People v. Cole, 880 P.2d 158 (Colo. 1994); People v. Smith, 880 P.2d 763 (Colo. 1994); People v. Schaefer, 938 P.2d 147 (Colo. 1997).

Conduct violating this rule sufficient to justify suspension. People v. Yaklich, 646 P.2d 938 (Colo. 1982); People v. Brackett, 667 P.2d 1357 (Colo. 1983); People v. Pilgrim, 698 P.2d 1322 (Colo. 1985); People v. Convery, 704 P.2d 296 (Colo. 1985); People v. Foster, 716 P.2d 1069 (Colo. 1986); People v. Coca, 716 P.2d 1073 (Colo. 1986); People v. Convery, 758 P.2d 1338 (Colo. 1988); People v. Griffin, 764 P.2d 1166 (Colo. 1988); People v. Goens, 770 P.2d 1218 (Colo. 1989); People v. Flores, 772 P.2d 610 (Colo. 1989); People v. Pooley, 774 P.2d 239 (Colo. 1989); People v. Fahrney, 782 P.2d 743 (Colo. 1989); People v. Gregory, 788 P.2d 823 (Colo. 1990); People v. Bergmann, 790 P.2d 840 (Colo. 1990).

Failure to file bankruptcy petition for eight months justifies disbarment. When a lawyer, after being paid for his services, neglects to file a bankruptcy petition for his client for a period of approximately eight months, during which time the client is sued and his wages attached on several occasions, the lawyer's gross neglect and failure to carry out a contract of employment justify disbarment. People v. McMichael, 199 Colo. 433, 609 P.2d 633 (1980).

Converting estate or trust funds for one's personal use, overcharging for services rendered, neglecting to return inquiries relating to client matters, failing to make candid disclosures to grievance committee, and attempting to conceal wrongdoing during disciplinary proceedings warrants the severe sanction of disbarment. People v. Gerdes, 782 P.2d 2 (Colo. 1989).

Disbarment was the proper remedy where attorney's conduct demonstrated (a) neglect of legal matters entrusted to him; (b) misrepresentation to the client and the grievance committee; and (c) a pattern of neglect followed by the respondent that had the potential of causing serious injury to his clients, and the attorney was afforded multiple opportunities including two suspensions and court ordered rehabilitation. People v. Susman, 787 P.2d 1119 (Colo. 1990).

Converting trust funds to one's own use in the amount of $13,100 and refusing to make payments on a promissory note taken as restitution was conduct intentionally prejudicial to the client sufficient to justify disbarment. People v. Whitcomb, 819 P.2d 493 (Colo. 1991).

Converting trust funds, along with other misconduct, sufficient to justify disbarment. Where attorney withdraws $62,550 from trust without beneficiaries' knowledge or permission, fails to repay a $5,000 loan from the trustee, prepares fictional quarterly trust reports, disburses principal to beneficiaries in lieu of interest and lies regarding the amount of principal remaining in the trust, there is conduct sufficiently prejudicial to the client to justify disbarment. People v. Tanquary, 831 P.2d 889 (Colo. 1992).

When attorney converted client's funds, named himself trustee, misrepresented to banks that the funds were his own, engaged in self-dealing, and maintained custody of the client's investment accounts, disbarment was warranted. There were no mitigating factors. People v. Warner, 8873 P.2d 724 (Colo. 1994).

Misrepresenting the status of a dissolution of marriage action with knowledge of impending remarriage and then forging the purported decree of dissolution is conduct involving moral turpitude deserving of disbarment. People v. Belina, 782 P.2d 26 (Colo. 1989).

Conduct which causes a client serious or potentially serious injury and demonstrates a complete lack of concern for a client's interests and welfare warrants disbarment. People v. Lyons, 762 P.2d 143 (Colo. 1988).

Where an attorney demonstrates an extreme indifference to the welfare of his clients and the status of their cases and an extreme insensitivity to his professional duties in the face of adverse judgments due to neglect, client complaints, and repeated disciplinary proceedings, disbarment is the appropriate sanction. People v. Wyman, 782 P.2d 339 (Colo. 1989).

Facts sufficient to justify disbarment of attorney for failure to comply with registration requirements of C.R.C.P. 227, misappropriation of funds, and improper withdrawal from employment. People v. Scudder, 197 Colo. 99, 590 P.2d 493 (1979).

Failure to respond to discovery and motions, failure to attend case management hearing, and failure to inform client of progress of a civil case is grounds for disbarment. People v. Hebenstreit, 823 P.2d 125 (Colo. 1992).

Disbarment is appropriate sanction where attorney knowingly converts client property and causes injury or potential injury to a client. People v. Bowman, 887 P.2d 18 (Colo. 1994).

Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules is sufficient to justify disbarment. People v. Nichols, 796 P.2d 966 (Colo. 1990); People v. Ashley, 817 P.2d 965 (Colo. 1991); People v. Rouse, 817 P.2d 967 (Colo. 1991); People v. Crimaldi, 804 P.2d 863 (Colo. 1991); People v. Bergmann, 807 P.2d 568 (Colo. 1991); People v. Rhodes, 814 P.2d 787 (Colo. 1991); People v. Heilbrunn, 814 P.2d 819 (Colo. 1991); People v. Whitcomb, 819 P.2d 493 (Colo. 1991); People v. Koransky, 824 P.2d 819 (Colo. 1992); People v. Bradley, 825 P.2d 475 (Colo. 1992); People v. Southern, 832 P.2d 946 (Colo. 1992); People v. Schindelar, 845 P.2d 1146 (Colo. 1993); People v. Schaefer, 944 P.2d 78 (Colo. 1997); People v. Skaalerud, 963 P.2d 341 (Colo. 1998).

Conduct violating this rule sufficient to justify disbarment. People v. Kendrick, 646 P.2d 337 (Colo. 1982); People v. Dwyer, 652 P.2d 1074 (Colo. 1982); People v. Golden, 654 P.2d 853 (Colo. 1982); People v. Bealmear, 655 P.2d 402 (Colo. 1982); People v. Buckles, 673 P.2d 1008 (Colo. 1984); People v. Gibbons, 685 P.2d 168 (Colo. 1984); People v. Attorney-client relationship required. Rule requires the existence of an attorney-client relationship as an essential element of the proscribed professional misconduct. People v. Morley, 725 P.2d 510 (Colo. 1986).

A client is a person who employs or retains an attorney for advice or assistance on a matter relating to legal business. People v. Morley, 725 P.2d 510 (Colo. 1986).

The relationship of an attorney and client can be inferred from the conduct of the parties. People v. Morley, 725 P.2d 510 (Colo. 1986).

The relationship is sufficiently established when it is shown that the client seeks and receives the advice of the lawyer on the legal consequences of the client's past or contemplated actions. People v. Morley, 725 P.2d 510 (Colo. 1986).

Attorney shall not use testimony that he knows is perjured. People v. Schultheis, 44 Colo. App. 452, 618 P.2d 710 (1980), rev'd on other grounds, 638 P.2d 8 (Colo. 1981).

If he does so, he commits subornation of perjury. A lawyer who presents a witness knowing that the witness intends to commit perjury thereby engages in the subornation of perjury. People v. Schultheis, 638 P.2d 8 (Colo. 1981).

Trial court may explore adequacy of trial counsel's representations regarding grounds for withdrawal, but in the course of this inquiry, the court may not compel the attorney to disclose any confidential communications. People v. Schultheis, 44 Colo. App. 452, 618 P.2d 710 (1980), rev'd on other grounds, 638 P.2d 8 (Colo. 1981).

Attorney may not breach his duty of maintaining his client's confidences even when he knows his client has previously perjured himself. People v. Schultheis, 44 Colo. App. 452, 618 P.2d 710 (1980), rev'd on other grounds, 638 P.2d 8 (Colo. 1981).

Unauthorized recordation of telephone conversation establishes unethical conduct. Telephone conversation, which attorney initiated and recorded without the permission of other party to conversation, established unethical conduct on attorney's part. People v. Wallin, 621 P.2d 330 (Colo. 1981).

Planned course of conduct which is unresponsive to civil discovery constitutes intent to deceive, and such conduct is prejudicial to the administration of justice. People v. Haase, 781 P.2d 80 (Colo. 1989).

In fulfilling the duty under Canon 7 of the Code of Professional Responsibility to zealously represent a client, a lawyer may advance a claim or defense not recognized under existing law if it can be supported by a good faith argument for an extension, modification, or reversal of existing law. Sullivan v. Lutz, 827 P.2d 626 (Colo. App. 1992).

Unsuccessful appeal is not necessarily frivolous. Because a lawyer may present a supportable argument which is extremely unlikely to prevail on appeal, it cannot be said that an unsuccessful appeal is necessarily frivolous. Mission Denver Co. v. Pierson, 674 P.2d 363 (Colo. 1984).

An attorney should not pursue frivolous appeals. An attorney's decision not to pursue a frivolous appeal complies with his ethical responsibilities to his client. Hodges v. Barry, 701 P.2d 1240 (Colo. 1985).

Failure to inform arbitrators of errors in expert witness' testimony constituted violation of DR 7-102 warranting public censure because attorney did not disclose that expert had informed attorney of mistakes in writing, and ttorney made closing arguments based on uncorrected expert conclusions. People v. Bertagnolli, 861 P.2d 717 (Colo. 1993).

Actions taken by attorney contrary to court order violate this rule and justify suspension. People v. Awenius, 653 P.2d 740 (Colo. 1982).

False testimony and counselling such conduct warrant disbarment. When a lawyer counsels his client to testify falsely at a hearing on a bankruptcy petition and the client does so, and the lawyer gives a false answer to a question asked of him by the bankruptcy judge, his misconduct warrants disbarment. People v. McMichael, 199 Colo. 433, 609 P.2d 633 (1980).

Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules is sufficient to justify suspension. People v. Smith, 830 P.2d 1003 (Colo. 1992).

Conduct violating this rule sufficient to justify suspension. People v. Belfor, 197 Colo. 223, 591 P.2d 585 (1979); People v. Barnthouse, 775 P.2d 545 (Colo. 1989), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 1026, 110 S. Ct. 734, 107 L. Ed. 2d 752 (1990); People v. Bergmann, 790 P.2d 840 (Colo. 1990).

Morley, 725 P.2d 510 (Colo. 1986); People v. Turner, 758 P.2d 1335 (Colo. 1988); People v. Franks, 791 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1990); People v. Mullison, 829 P.2d 382 (Colo. 1992); People v. Sims, 913 P.2d 526 (Colo. 1996).

Conduct held to violate this rule. People v. Goss, 646 P.2d 334 (Colo. 1982).

Since employment in a public defender's office is not the type of public employment contemplated in paragraph (B) of this rule, no conflict of interest can be perceived in the representation of a defendant by a deputy public defender and the subsequent representation by the same attorney in a private capacity of the defendant in the same case. Coles, Manter & Watson v. Denver Dist. Court, 177 Colo. 210, 493 P.2d 374 (1972).

Disqualification of former district attorney and his firm was appropriate. Disqualification of former district attorney and his firm from representing client in case in which former district attorney had done investigation under this canon was clearly appropriate. Osburn v. District Court, 619 P.2d 41 (Colo. 1980).

Disqualification of district attorney's office required where two former district attorneys are witnesses on contested issues in case. Pease v. District Court, 708 P.2d 800 (Colo. 1985).

Where a lawyer knows or should know that he is dealing improperly with a client's property and causes potential injury to the client, a suspension from the practice of law, at the very least, is an appropriate sanction. People v. McGrath, 780 P.2d 492 (Colo. 1989).

Where there is no evidence of a specific identifiable impropriety, there is no basis for disqualification under this canon. Food Brokers, Inc. v. Great Western Sugar, 680 P.2d 857 (Colo. App. 1984).

Factors for determining "an appearance of impropriety" discussed in Cleary v. District Court, 704 P.2d 866 (Colo. 1985).

"Substantial responsibility" requirement of paragraph (B) of this rule applied in Cleary v. District Court, 704 P.2d 866 (Colo. 1985); People v. Anaya, 732 P.2d 1241 (Colo. App. 1986), rev'd on other grounds, 764 P.2d 779 (Colo. 1988).

Conduct violating this rule sufficient to justify disbarment. People v. Dulaney, 785 P.2d 1302 (Colo. 1990).

Rule 1.3. Diligence

A lawyer shall act with reasonable diligence and promptness in representing a client.

Source: Entire Appendix repealed and readopted April 12, 2007, effective January 1, 2008.

COMMENT

[1] A lawyer should pursue a matter on behalf of a client despite opposition, obstruction or personal inconvenience to the lawyer, and take whatever lawful and ethical measures are required to vindicate a client's cause or endeavor. A lawyer must also act with commitment and dedication to the interests of the client and with zeal in advocacy upon the client's behalf. A lawyer is not bound, however, to press for every advantage that might be realized for a client. For example, a lawyer may have authority to exercise professional discretion in determining the means by which a matter should be pursued. See Rule 1.2. The lawyer's duty to act with reasonable diligence does not require the use of offensive tactics or preclude the treating of all persons involved in the legal process with courtesy and respect.

[2] A lawyer's work load must be controlled so that each matter can be handled competently.

[3] Perhaps no professional shortcoming is more widely resented than procrastination. A client's interests often can be adversely affected by the passage of time or the change of conditions; in extreme instances, as when a lawyer overlooks a statute of limitations, the client's legal position may be destroyed. Even when the client's interests are not affected in substance, however, unreasonable delay can cause a client needless anxiety and undermine confidence in the lawyer's trustworthiness. A lawyer's duty to act with reasonable promptness, however, does not preclude the lawyer from agreeing to a reasonable request for a postponement that will not prejudice the lawyer's client.

[4] Unless the relationship is terminated as provided in Rule 1.16, a lawyer should carry through to conclusion all matters undertaken for a client. If a lawyer's employment is limited to a specific matter, the relationship terminates when the matter has been resolved. If a lawyer has served a client over a substantial period in a variety of matters, the client sometimes may assume that the lawyer will continue to serve on a continuing basis unless the lawyer gives notice of withdrawal. Doubt about whether a client-lawyer relationship still exists should be clarified by the lawyer, preferably in writing, so that the client will not mistakenly suppose the lawyer is looking after the client's affairs when the lawyer has ceased to do so. For example, if a lawyer has handled a judicial or administrative proceeding that produced a result adverse to the client and the lawyer and the client have not agreed that the lawyer will handle the matter on appeal, the lawyer must consult with the client about the possibility of appeal before relinquishing responsibility for the matter. See Rule 1.4(a)(2). Whether the lawyer is obligated to prosecute the appeal for the client depends on the scope of the representation the lawyer has agreed to provide to the client. See Rule 1.2.

[5] To prevent neglect of client matters in the event of a sole practitioner's death or disability, the duty of diligence may require that each sole practitioner prepare a plan, in conformity with applicable rules, that designates another competent lawyer to review client files, notify each client of the lawyer's death or disability, and determine whether there is a need for immediate protective action. Cf. Rule 28 of the American Bar Association Model Rules for Lawyer Disciplinary Enforcement (providing for court appointment of a lawyer to inventory files and take other protective action in absence of a plan providing for another lawyer to protect the interests of the clients of a deceased or disabled lawyer); C.R.C.P. 251.32(h).

Annotator's note. Rule 1.3 is similar to Rule 1.3 as it existed prior to the 2007 repeal and readoption of the Colorado rules of professional conduct. Relevant cases construing that provision have been included in the annotations to this rule.

Public censure appropriate where harm suffered by attorney's client was speculative, attorney retracted his misrepresentations and admitted to his client before the institution of disciplinary proceedings that he had done noting on the client's appeal, attorney had no prior discipline, he made full and free disclosure of his misconduct to the grievance committee, and he expressed remorse for his misconduct. People v. Nelson, 848 P.2d 351 (Colo. 1993).

Public censure appropriate where attorney failed to review district attorney's file and the transcript of the preliminary hearing before trial. People v. Bonner, 927 P.2d 836 (Colo. 1996).

More severe sanction of public censure rather than private censure warranted where attorney continued to rely on methods of communication which had previously failed even after it became evident that the settlement agreement would be withdrawn and the client's interests would be harmed. People v. Podoll, 855 P.2d 1389 (Colo. 1993).

Public censure instead of private censure was appropriate where attorney failed to respond to discovery requests and motions for summary judgment and the findings of the board did not support the applicability of ABA Standard 9.32(i) as a mitigating factor since there was no medical evidence that attorney was affected by chemical dependency or that alcohol contributed to or caused the misconduct. People v. Brady, 923 P.2d 887 (Colo. 1996).

Public censure and monitoring conditions for one year, rather than private censure, were appropriate where attorney had a history of private sanctions indicating a pattern of misconduct. The attorney had also had a six-month suspension entered against him during the same time period in which the acts giving rise to censure occurred. Had the acts occurred following the suspension, public censure would be too lenient. People v. Field, 967 P.2d 1035 (Colo. 1998).

Aggravating and mitigating factors. The following factors are considered aggravating when deciding the appropriate level of discipline: (1) Prior discipline, (2) a pattern of misconduct, and (3) bad faith obstruction of the disciplinary process through total non-cooperation with the disciplinary authorities. Failure to appear before the disciplinary board will cause one to lose the ability to present evidence of mitigating factors. People v. Stevenson, 980 P.2d 504 (Colo. 1999).

Attorney's restitution agreement was neither an aggravating nor mitigating factor since the attorney did not propose or attempt any form of restitution until after a request for investigation had been filed with the office of disciplinary counsel. People v. Brady, 923 P.2d 887 (Colo. 1996).

Attorney's argument that public discipline is not appropriate because it would stigmatize a recovering alcoholic was rejected since overriding concern in discipline proceedings is to protect the public through the enforcement of professional standards of conduct. People v. Brady, 923 P.2d 887 (Colo. 1996).

Public censure appropriate where attorney allowed the statute of limitations to run before filing a complaint on the client's personal injury claim. People v. Hockley, 968 P.2d 109 (Colo. 1998).

Public censure appropriate where neglect extended over a long period of time, respondent had no prior history of discipline, and the actual harm caused by the misconduct was slight. People v. Berkley, 858 P.2d 699 (Colo. 1993).

Public censure appropriate for failure to submit settlement papers to client and to take any further action in the matter, in addition to other conduct violating rules. People v. Berkley, 858 P.2d 699 (Colo. 1993).

Public censure appropriate where attorney neglected and made misrepresentations in two separate legal matters. People v. Eagan, 902 P.2d 841 (Colo. 1995).

Public censure with additional conditions imposed on lawyer who neglected client's matter and then misinformed client of its status. People v. Kram, 966 P.2d 1065 (Colo. 1998).

Public censure warranted where, although respondent did not notify his clients and opposing counsel of his suspension, he did notify the court early in proceedings, did not go forward with court proceedings while on suspension and no actual harm was demonstrated to any of his clients. People v. Dover, 944 P.2d 80 (Colo. 1997).

Forty-five-day suspension warranted where respondent neglected child custody matter and had a prior public censure, a prior admonishment, and prior suspensions, but where the respondent did not demonstrate a dishonest or selfish motive and exhibited a cooperative attitude and expressions of remorse. People v. Dowhan, 951 P.2d 905 (Colo. 1998).

Attorney's inaction over a period of more than two years and other disciplinary violations warrant suspension for 30 days where there are mitigating factors. People v. LaSalle, 848 P.2d 348 (Colo. 1993).

Neglecting to file response to motion for summary judgment and to return client files upon request was sufficient to result in one-year and one-day suspension. People v. Honaker, 847 P.2d 640 (Colo. 1993).

Suspension for one year and one day appropriate when attorney neglected to file response to motion for summary judgment and to return client files upon request. People v. Honaker, 847 P.2d 640 (Colo. 1993).

Suspension for one year and one day appropriate when lawyer neglects matters of multiple clients and charges unreasonable fees. People v. Reedy, 966 P.2d 1057 (Colo. 1998).

Suspension for three years, the longest period available, was appropriate in case where violation of this rule and others would otherwise have justified disbarment but mitigating factors included personal and emotional problems, interim rehabilitation, and remorse. People v. McCaffrey, 925 P.2d 269 (Colo. 1996).

Suspension for three years was appropriate in case involving violation of this rule and others, together with attorney's breach of his duty as client's trustee to protect his client, who was a particularly vulnerable victim that was recuperating from a serious head injury. People v. DeRose, 945 P.2d 412 (Colo. 1997).

Suspension for three years, rather than disbarment, was appropriate where violation of this rule and others caused serious harm to attorney's clients, but mitigating factors were present, including no previous discipline in 14 years of practice, personal and emotional problems, and cooperation and demonstrated remorse in proceedings. People v. Henderson, 967 P.2d 1038 (Colo. 1998).

Three-year suspension warranted for attorney who effectively abandoned and failed to communicate with clients. People v. Shock, 970 P.2d 966 (Colo. 1999).

Conduct warranted one-year extension of attorney's suspension. People v. Silvola, 933 P.2d 1308 (Colo. 1997).

Disbarment appropriate remedy for attorney who neglected client's legal matter, failed to return retainer after being requested to do so, abandoned law practice, evaded process, and failed to respond to request of grievance committee. People v. Williams, 845 P.2d 1150 (Colo. 1993).

Attorney who failed to make sufficient efforts to ensure that his client received timely payments from the trust for which he was the trustee violated this rule. People v. DeRose, 945 P.2d 412 (Colo. 1997).

When a lawyer accepts fees from clients and then abandons those clients while keeping their money and causing serious harm, disbarment is appropriate. People v. Steinman, 930 P.2d 596 (Colo. 1997).

Attorney's failure to take prompt measures to secure client's rights to share of former spouse's retirement benefits constitutes neglect of a legal matter in violation of this rule. In re Fisher, 202 P.3d 1186 (Colo. 2009) (decided under rules in effect prior to 2007 repeal and readoption).

Duty of diligence imposed by this rule violated by attorney's failure to adequately supervise and monitor non-attorney employee's actions on behalf of clients in bankruptcy proceedings. People v. Calvert, 280 P.3d 1269 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2011).

Attorney's conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules is sufficient to justify six-month suspension, stayed upon completion of two-year probationary period. In re Fisher, 202 P.3d 1186 (Colo. 2009) (decided under rules in effect prior to 2007 repeal and readoption).

Previously disbarred attorney who violated this rule would be forced to pay restitution to clients as a condition of readmission. People v. Vigil, 945 P.2d 1385 (Colo. 1997).

Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules sufficient to justify disbarment where the attorney continued to practice law while on suspension, repeatedly neglecting his clients and failing to take reasonable steps to protect clients' interests. People v. Fager, 938 P.2d 138 (Colo. 1997).

Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules is sufficient to justify public censure. People v. Titoni, 893 P.2d 1322 (Colo. 1995); People v. Doherty, 908 P.2d 1120 (Colo. 1996); People v. Woodrum, 911 P.2d 640 (Colo. 1996); People v. Murray, 912 P.2d 554 (Colo. 1996); People v. Barbieri, 935 P.2d 12 (Colo. 1997); People v. Rule 1.4. Communication

(a) A lawyer shall:

(1) promptly inform the client of any decision or circumstance with respect to which the client's informed consent, as defined in Rule 1.0(e), is required by these Rules;

(2) reasonably consult with the client about the means by which the client's objectives are to be accomplished;

(3) keep the client reasonably informed about the status of the matter;

(4) promptly comply with reasonable requests for information; and

(5) consult with the client about any relevant limitation on the lawyer's conduct when the lawyer knows that the client expects assistance not permitted by the Rules of Professional Conduct or other law.

(b) A lawyer shall explain a matter to the extent reasonably necessary to permit the client to make informed decisions regarding the representation.

COMMENT

[1] Reasonable communication between the lawyer and the client is necessary for the client effectively to participate in the representation.

Communicating with Client

[2] If these Rules require that a particular decision about the representation be made by the client, paragraph (a)(1) requires that the lawyer promptly consult with and secure the client's consent prior to taking action unless prior discussions with the client have resolved what action the client wants the lawyer to take. For example, a lawyer who receives from opposing counsel an offer of settlement in a civil controversy or a proffered plea bargain in a criminal case must promptly inform the client of its substance unless the client has previously indicated that the proposal will be acceptable or unacceptable or has authorized the lawyer to accept or to reject the offer. See Rule 1.2(a).

[3] Paragraph (a)(2) requires the lawyer to reasonably consult with the client about the means to be used to accomplish the client's objectives. In some situations—depending on both the importance of the action under consideration and the feasibility of consulting with the client—this duty will require consultation prior to taking action. In other circumstances, such as during a trial when an immediate decision must be made, the exigency of the situation may require the lawyer to act without prior consultation. In such cases the lawyer must nonetheless act reasonably to inform the client of actions the lawyer has taken on the client's behalf. Additionally, paragraph (a)(3) requires that the lawyer keep the client reasonably informed about the status of the matter, such as significant developments affecting the timing or the substance of the representation.

[4] A lawyer's regular communication with clients will minimize the occasions on which a client will need to request information concerning the representation. When a client makes a reasonable request for information, however, paragraph (a)(4) requires prompt compliance with the request, or if a prompt response is not feasible, that the lawyer, or a member of the lawyer's staff, acknowledge receipt of the request and advise the client when a response may be expected. A lawyer should promptly respond to or acknowledge client communications.

Explaining Matters

[5] The client should have sufficient information to participate intelligently in decisions concerning the objectives of the representation and the means by which they are to be pursued, to the extent the client is willing and able to do so. Adequacy of communication depends in part on the kind of advice or assistance that is involved. For example, when there is time to explain a proposal made in a negotiation, the lawyer should review all important provisions with the client before proceeding to an agreement. In litigation a lawyer should explain the general strategy and prospects of success and ordinarily should consult the client on tactics that are likely to result in significant expense or to injure or coerce others. On the other hand, a lawyer ordinarily will not be expected to describe trial or negotiation strategy in detail. The guiding principle is that the lawyer should fulfill reasonable client expectations for information consistent with the duty to act in the client's best interests, and the client's overall requirements as to the character of representation. In certain circumstances, such as when a lawyer asks a client to consent to a representation affected by a conflict of interest, the client must give informed consent, as defined in Rule 1.0(e).

[6] Ordinarily, the information to be provided is that appropriate for a client who is a comprehending and responsible adult. However, fully informing the client according to this standard may be impracticable, for example, where the client is a child or suffers from diminished capacity. See Rule 1.14. When the client is an organization or group, it is often impossible or inappropriate to inform every one of its members about its legal affairs; ordinarily, the lawyer should address communications to the appropriate officials of the organization. See Rule 1.13. Where many routine matters are involved, a system of limited or occasional reporting may be arranged with the client.

[6A] Regarding communications with clients when a lawyer retains or contracts with other lawyers outside the lawyer's own firm to provide or assist in the providing of legal services to the client, see Comment [6] to Rule 1.1.

[6B] Regarding communications with clients and with lawyers outside of the lawyer's firm when lawyers from more than one firm are providing legal services to the client on a particular matter, see Comment [7] to Rule 1.1.

Withholding Information

[7] In some circumstances, a lawyer may be justified in delaying transmission of information when the client would be likely to react imprudently to an immediate communication. Thus, a lawyer might withhold a psychiatric diagnosis of a client when the examining psychiatrist indicates that disclosure would harm the client. A lawyer may not withhold information to serve the lawyer's own interest or convenience or the interests or convenience of another person. Rules or court orders governing litigation may provide that information supplied to a lawyer may not be disclosed to the client. Rule 3.4(c) directs compliance with such rules or orders.

Explanation of Fees and Expenses

[7A] Information provided to the client under Rule 1.4(a) should include information concerning fees charged, costs, expenses, and disbursements with regard to the client's matter. Additionally, the lawyer should promptly respond to the client's reasonable requests concerning such matters. It is strongly recommended that all these communications be in writing. As to the basis or rate of the fee, see Rule 1.5(b).

Annotator's note. Rule 1.4 is similar to Rule 1.4 as it existed prior to the 2007 repeal and readoption of the Colorado rules of professional conduct. Relevant cases construing that provision have been included in the annotations to this rule.

Public censure appropriate where harm suffered by attorney's client was speculative, attorney retracted his misrepresentations and admitted to his client before the institution of disciplinary proceedings that he had done nothing on the client's appeal, attorney had no prior discipline, he made full and free disclosure of his misconduct to the grievance committee, and he expressed remorse for his misconduct. People v. Nelson, 848 P.2d 351 (Colo. 1993).

Public censure instead of private censure was appropriate where attorney failed to respond to discovery requests and motions for summary judgment and the findings of the board did not support the applicability of ABA Standard 9.32(i) as a mitigating factor since there was no medical evidence that attorney was affected by chemical dependency or that alcohol contributed to or caused the misconduct. People v. Brady, 923 P.2d 887 (Colo. 1996).

Aggravating and mitigating factors. The following factors are considered aggravating when deciding the appropriate level of discipline: (1) Prior discipline, (2) a pattern of misconduct, and (3) bad faith obstruction of the disciplinary process through total non-cooperation with the disciplinary authorities. Failure to appear before the disciplinary board will cause one to lose the ability to present evidence of mitigating factors. People v. Stevenson, 980 P.2d 504 (Colo. 1999).

Attorney's restitution agreement was neither an aggravating nor mitigating factor since the attorney did not propose or attempt any form of restitution until after a request for investigation had been filed with the office of disciplinary counsel. People v. Brady, 923 P.2d 887 (Colo. 1996).

Attorney's argument that public discipline is not appropriate because it would stigmatize a recovering alcoholic was rejected since overriding concern in discipline proceedings is to protect the public through the enforcement of professional standards of conduct. People v. Brady, 923 P.2d 887 (Colo. 1996).

Neglecting to file response to motion for summary judgment and to return client files upon request was sufficient to result in one-year and one-day suspension. People v. Honaker, 847 P.2d 640 (Colo. 1993).

Failing to inform client that limitation period had expired, or that attorney had not actually settled the case, violated section (a)(3). People v. Muhr, 370 P.3d 677 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2015).

Moving for a voluntary dismissal of client's claim without prejudice, whether characterized as a strategic decision within the attorney's purview or a fundamental decision reserved for the client, was one that the attorney was obligated to disclose and discuss with the client beforehand. People v. Muhr, 370 P.3d 677 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2015).

Broad terms of a power of attorney do not obviate the attorney's duty to keep the client informed in accordance with section (a)(3). People v. Muhr, 370 P.3d 677 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2015).

Ninety-day suspension justified where attorney's failure to respond to discovery requests resulted in default and entry of judgment against client for $816,613. People v. Clark, 927 P.2d 838 (Colo. 1996).

Attorney's inaction over a period of more than two years and other disciplinary violations warrant suspension for 30 days where there are mitigating factors. People v. LaSalle, 848 P.2d 348 (Colo. 1993).

Suspension for one year and one day appropriate when attorney neglected to return client files upon request. People v. Honaker, 847 P.2d 640 (Colo. 1993).

Suspension for three years, rather than disbarment, was appropriate where violation of this rule and others caused serious harm to attorney's clients, but mitigating factors were present, including no previous discipline in 14 years of practice, personal and emotional problems, and cooperation and demonstrated remorse in proceedings. People v. Henderson, 967 P.2d 1038 (Colo. 1998).

Three-year suspension warranted for attorney who effectively abandoned and failed to communicate with clients. People v. Shock, 970 P.2d 966 (Colo. 1999).

Duty to communicate imposed by this rule violated by attorney's failure to keep clients in bankruptcy proceedings reasonably notified about the status of the case, including the dismissal of their first bankruptcy petition and the filing of their second. People v. Calvert, 280 P.3d 1269 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2011).

Previously disbarred attorney who violated this rule would be forced to pay restitution to clients as a condition of readmission. People v. Vigil, 945 P.2d 1385 (Colo. 1997).

Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules is sufficient to justify public censure. People v. Titoni, 893 P.2d 1322 (Colo. 1995); People v. Doherty, 908 P.2d 1120 (Colo. 1996); People v. Woodrum, 911 P.2d 640 (Colo. 1996); People v. Barbieri, 935 P.2d 12 (Colo. 1997); People v. Williams, 936 P.2d 1289 (Colo. 1997); People v. Paragraphs (A) and (B)(3) require as a minimum standard of conduct that a lawyer segregate his clients' funds from his own and keep them in identifiable bank trust accounts. People v. Harthun, 197 Colo. 1, 593 P.2d 324 (1979); People v. Schubert, 799 P.2d 388 (Colo. 1990).

Misuse of funds by a lawyer strikes at the heart of the legal profession by destroying public confidence in lawyers. The most severe punishment is required when a lawyer disregards his professional obligations and converts his clients' funds to his own use. People v. Buckles, 673 P.2d 1008 (Colo. 1984); People v. Wolfe, 748 P.2d 789 (Colo. 1987).

Conversion of client funds is conduct warranting disbarment because it destroys the trust essential to the attorney-client relationship, severely damages the public's perception of attorneys, and erodes public confidence in our legal system. People v. Radosevich, 783 P.2d 841 (Colo. 1989).

Failure and refusal to refund unearned portions of fees collected from two clients constituted violations of C.R.C.P. 241(B) (now C.R.C.P. 241.6), DR 2-110, and this rule. People v. Gellenthien, 621 P.2d 328 (Colo. 1981).

Attorney obligated to forward client's file upon request. Failure to forward client's file a year after a request is made constitutes conduct violative of disciplinary rules. People v. Belina, 765 P.2d 121 (Colo. 1988).

Failing to provide a client with an accounting of charges applied against a retainer after the client's request therefor, in conjunction with other instances of neglect, is conduct warranting public censure. People v. Goodwin, 782 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1989).

Failure to make proper accounting to client with respect to trust funds and failure to promptly deliver to the client funds to which she is entitled warrants public censure. People v. Robnett, 737 P.2d 1389 (Colo. 1987).

Failure to deposit funds in trust account, to notify client of receipt of funds and provide accounting, and to forward file promptly to new attorney constitute a violation of this rule and, with other offenses, warrants public censure. People v. Swan, 764 P.2d 54 (Colo. 1988).

Violation of duty to account for and promptly return client property upon request over a three-year period warrants public censure. People v. Shunneson, 814 P.2d 800 (Colo. 1991).

Public censure for failure to promptly distribute proceeds of a settlement is warranted since respondent's negligence did little or no actual or potential injury to client. People v. Genchi, 824 P.2d 815 (Colo. 1992).

Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules is sufficient to justify public censure. People v. Ashley, 796 P.2d 962 (Colo. 1990); People v. Sadler, 831 P.2d 887 (Colo. 1992).

Converting estate or trust funds for one's personal use, overcharging for services rendered, neglecting to return inquiries relating to client matters, failing to make candid disclosures to grievance committee, and attempting to conceal wrongdoing during disciplinary proceedings warrants the severe sanction of disbarment. People v. Gerdes, 782 P.2d 2 (Colo. 1989).

Conduct violating this rule sufficient to justify public censure. People v. Bollinger, 648 P.2d 620 (Colo. 1982); People v. Wright, 698 P.2d 1317 (Colo. 1985); People v. Mayer, 716 P.2d 1094 (Colo. 1986); People v. Schaiberger, 731 P.2d 728 (Colo. 1987); People v. Barr, 748 P.2d 1302 (Colo. 1988); People v. Danker, 759 P.2d 14 (Colo. 1988).

Two-year unjustified retention of one client's file, coupled with failure to withdraw at request of said client and refusal to forward a second client's file to subsequent counsel, resulting in both clients sustaining injuries, justifies suspension for the period of a year and a day. People v. Hodge, 752 P.2d 533 (Colo. 1988).

Failure to account for money collected on behalf of client, despite numerous client requests for accounting, and failure to adhere to terms of agreement with client regarding representation, coupled with prior, ongoing suspension, warrants additional six-month suspension. People v. Yost, 752 P.2d 542 (Colo. 1988).

Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules is sufficient to justify suspension. People v. Moya, 793 P.2d 1154 (Colo. 1990); People v. Creasey, 793 P.2d 1159 (Colo. 1990); People v. Schubert, 799 P.2d 388 (Colo. 1990); People v. Garrett, 802 P.2d 1082 (Colo. 1990); People v. Lamberson, 802 P.2d 1098 (Colo. 1990); People v. Derelictions in fiduciary duties by an attorney which go beyond mere negligence warrant disbarment. People v. Roads, 180 Colo. 192, 503 P.2d 1024 (1972).

Attorney failed to deliver property of a client in violation of this rule by ignoring requests for client's files made by the client, the client's attorney, and the grievance committee. People v. Felker, 770 P.2d 402 (Colo. 1989).

Refusal to provide accounting for money and jewelry delivered to him and refusal to itemize the services performed and the costs incurred warrant disbarment. People v. Lanza, 660 P.2d 881 (Colo. 1983).

Commingling and appropriation of funds warrants disbarment. When a lawyer collects $3000 on behalf of a client in connection with a sale of real estate and commingles it with his other trust funds and unlawfully converts it to his own use, his flagrant disregard of his professional obligation warrants disbarment. People v. McMichael, 199 Colo. 433, 609 P.2d 633 (1980).

Where a practicing attorney breached fiduciary duties to his client in misrepresenting his dealings and in handling of funds given to him in trust, his conduct warranted disbarment, and, before he may seek readmittance to the state bar association, he must first demonstrate to the grievance committee that rehabilitation has occurred and that he is entitled to a new start. People ex rel. Buckley v. Beck, 199 Colo. 482, 610 P.2d 1069 (1980).

Commingling a client's funds with those of the lawyer is a serious violation of the Code of Professional Responsibility, even in the absence of an actual loss to the client, because the act of commingling subjects the client's funds to the claims of the lawyer's creditors. People v. McGrath, 780 P.2d 492 (Colo. 1989).

Misappropriation of funds, failure to account, and deceit and fraud in handling the affairs of a client necessitate that an attorney be disbarred. People v. Bealmear, 655 P.2d 402 (Colo. 1982); People v. Costello, 781 P.2d 85 (Colo. 1989).

Conduct which causes a client serious or potentially serious injury and demonstrates a complete lack of concern for a client's interests and welfare warrants disbarment. People v. Lyons, 762 P.2d 143 (Colo. 1988).

Alcoholism not excuse. Efforts at alcoholism rehabilitation do not excuse conduct which includes dishonesty and fraud, failing to preserve identity of client funds, and failing to properly pay or deliver client funds, and which otherwise warrants disbarment. People v. Shafer, 765 P.2d 1025 (Colo. 1988).

Total disregard of obligation to protect a client's rights and interests over an extended period of time in conjunction with the violation of a number of disciplinary rules and an extended prior record of discipline requires most severe sanction of disbarment. People v. O'Leary, 783 P.2d 843 (Colo. 1989).

Disbarment was appropriate where attorney removed $5,000 from a client's trust account, refused to return money upon several request by the client which ultimately resulted in a suit against the attorney, and the attorney lied about the transaction to the attorney with whom he shared office space. Factors in aggravation included a history of prior discipline, including suspension for conversion of client funds, the dishonest motive of the attorney in removing and not returning the client's funds, the attorney's refusal to acknowledge the wrongful nature of his conduct, the vulnerability of the client, and the attorney's legal experience. Mitigating factors were insufficient for disciplinary action short of disbarment. People v. McGrath, 833 P.2d 731 (Colo. 1992).

Disbarment is appropriate sanction where attorney knowingly converts client property and causes injury or potential injury to a client. People v. Bowman, 887 P.2d 18 (Colo. 1994); People v. Varallo, 913 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1996).

Rule is violated when attorney "knowingly" converts client funds; there is no requirement that the attorney intend to permanently deprive the client of the funds. People v. Varallo, 913 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1996).

Disbarment was appropriate where attorney converted $25,000 of client funds on seven different occasions over a period of four months and did not restore any of the missing funds until after he was detected. People v. Robbins, 869 P.2d 517 (Colo. 1994).

Disbarment was appropriate where the balance of the respondent's trust accounts fell below the amount necessary to pay settlements on at least 45 occasions and where the respondent withdrew attorney fees on at least 68 occasions from trust accounts before receiving the funds from which the fees were to be taken. People v. Lefly, 902 P.2d 361 (Colo. 1995).

Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules is sufficient to justify disbarment. People v. Nichols, 796 P.2d 966 (Colo. 1990); People v. Broadhurst, 803 P.2d 478 (Colo. 1990); People v. Rhodes, 814 P.2d 787 (Colo. 1991); People v. Vermillion, 814 P.2d 795 (Colo. 1991); People v. Ashley, 817 P.2d 965 (Colo. 1991); People v. Rule 1.5. Fees

(a) A lawyer shall not make an agreement for, charge, or collect an unreasonable fee or an unreasonable amount for expenses. The factors to be considered in determining the reasonableness of a fee include the following:

(1) the time and labor required, the novelty and difficulty of the questions involved, and the skill requisite to perform the legal service properly;

(2) the likelihood, if apparent to the client, that the acceptance of the particular employment will preclude other employment by the lawyer;

(3) the fee customarily charged in the locality for similar legal services;

(4) the amount involved and the results obtained;

(5) the time limitations imposed by the client or by the circumstances;

(6) the nature and length of the professional relationship with the client;

(7) the experience, reputation, and ability of the lawyer or lawyers performing the services; and

(8) whether the fee is fixed or contingent.

(b) When the lawyer has not regularly represented the client, the basis or rate of the fee and expenses shall be communicated to the client, in writing, before or within a reasonable time after commencing the representation. Any changes in the basis or rate of the fee or expenses shall also be promptly communicated to the client, in writing.

(c) A fee may be contingent on the outcome of the matter for which the service is rendered, except in a matter in which a contingent fee is otherwise prohibited. A contingent fee agreement shall meet all of the requirements of Chapter 23.3 of the Colorado Rules of Civil Procedure, ''Rules Governing Contingent Fees.''

(d) Other than in connection with the sale of a law practice pursuant to Rule 1.17, a division of a fee between lawyers who are not in the same firm may be made only if:

(1) the division is in proportion to the services performed by each lawyer or each lawyer assumes joint responsibility for the representation;

(2) the client agrees to the arrangement, including the basis upon which the division of fees shall be made, and the client's agreement is confirmed in writing; and

(3) the total fee is reasonable.

(e) Referral fees are prohibited.

(f) Fees are not earned until the lawyer confers a benefit on the client or performs a legal service for the client. Advances of unearned fees are the property of the client and shall be deposited in the lawyer's trust account pursuant to Rule 1.15B(a)(1) until earned. If advances of unearned fees are in the form of property other than funds, then the lawyer shall hold such property separate from the lawyer's own property pursuant to Rule 1.15A(a).

(g) Nonrefundable fees and nonrefundable retainers are prohibited. Any agreement that purports to restrict a client's right to terminate the representation, or that unreasonably restricts a client's right to obtain a refund of unearned or unreasonable fees, is prohibited.

(h) A ''flat fee'' is a fee for specified legal services for which the client agrees to pay a fixed amount, regardless of the time or effort involved.

(1) The terms of a flat fee shall be communicated in writing before or within a reasonable time after commencing the representation and shall include the following information:

(i) A description of the services the lawyer agrees to perform;

(ii) The amount to be paid to the lawyer and the timing of payment for the services to be performed;

(iii) If any portion of the flat fee is to be earned by the lawyer before conclusion of the representation, the amount to be earned upon the completion of specified tasks or the occurrence of specified events; and

(iv) The amount or the method of calculating the fees the lawyer earns, if any, should the representation terminate before completion of the specified tasks or the occurrence of specified events.

(2) If all or any portion of a flat fee is paid in advance of being earned and a dispute arises about whether the lawyer has earned all or part of the flat fee, the lawyer shall comply with Rule 1.15A(c) with respect to any portion of the flat fee that is in dispute.

(3) The form Flat Fee Agreement following the comment to this Rule may be used for flat fee agreements and shall be sufficient. The authorization of this form shall not prevent the use of other forms consistent with this Rule.

COMMENT

Reasonableness of Fee and Expenses

[1] Paragraph (a) requires that lawyers charge fees that are reasonable under the circumstances. The factors specified in (1) through (8) are not exclusive. Nor will each factor be relevant in each instance. Paragraph (a) also requires that expenses for which the client will be charged must be reasonable. A lawyer may seek reimbursement for the cost of services performed in-house, such as copying, or for other expenses incurred in-house, such as telephone charges, either by charging a reasonable amount to which the client has agreed in advance or by charging an amount that reasonably reflects the cost incurred by the lawyer.

Basis or Rate of Fee

[2] When the lawyer has regularly represented a client, they ordinarily will have evolved an understanding concerning the basis or rate of the fee and the expenses for which the client will be responsible, but when there has been a change from their previous understanding the basis or rate of the fee should be promptly communicated in writing. In a new client-lawyer relationship, the basis or rate of the fee must be promptly communicated in writing to the client, but the communication need not take the form of a formal engagement letter or agreement, and it need not be signed by the client. Moreover, it is not necessary to recite all the factors that underlie the basis of the fee, but only those that are directly involved in its computation. It is sufficient, for example, to state that the basic rate is an hourly charge or a fixed amount or an estimated amount, to identify the factors that may be taken into account in finally fixing the fee, or to furnish the client with a simple memorandum or the lawyer's customary fee schedule. When developments occur during the representation that render an earlier communication substantially inaccurate, a revised written communication should be provided to the client. All flat fee arrangements must be in writing and must comply with paragraph (h) of this Rule. All contingent fee arrangements must be in writing, regardless of whether the client-lawyer relationship is new or established. See C.R.C.P., Ch. 23.3, Rule 1.

[3] Contingent fees, like any other fees, are subject to the reasonableness standard of paragraph (a) of this Rule. In determining whether a particular contingent fee is reasonable, or whether it is reasonable to charge any form of contingent fee, a lawyer must consider the factors that are relevant under the circumstances. Applicable law may impose limitations on contingent fees, such as a ceiling on the percentage allowable, or may require a lawyer to offer clients an alternative basis for the fee. Applicable law also may apply to situations other than a contingent fee, for example, government regulations regarding fees in certain tax matters.

[3A] Repealed.

Terms of Payment

[4] A lawyer may require advance payment of a fee, but is obliged to return any unearned portion. See Rule 1.16(d). A lawyer may accept property in payment for services, such as an ownership interest in an enterprise, providing this does not involve acquisition of a proprietary interest in the cause of action or subject matter of the litigation contrary to Rule 1.8(i). However, a fee paid in property instead of money may be subject to the requirements of Rule 1.8(a) because such fees often have the essential qualities of a business transaction with the client.

[5] A fee agreement may not be made whose terms might induce the lawyer improperly to curtail services for the client or perform them in a way contrary to the client's interest. For example, a lawyer should not enter into an agreement whereby services are to be provided only up to a stated amount when it is foreseeable that more extensive services probably will be required, unless the situation is adequately explained to the client. Otherwise, the client might have to bargain for further assistance in the midst of a proceeding or transaction. However, it is proper to define the extent of services in light of the client's ability to pay. A lawyer should not exploit a fee arrangement based primarily on hourly charges by using wasteful procedures.

[6] [No Colorado comment.]

Division of Fee

[7] A division of fee is a single billing to a client covering the fee of two or more lawyers who are not in the same firm. A division of fee facilitates association of more than one lawyer in a matter in which neither alone could serve the client as well, and most often is used when the fee is contingent and the division is between a referring lawyer and a trial specialist. Paragraph (d) permits the lawyers to divide a fee either on the basis of the proportion of services they render or if each lawyer assumes responsibility for the representation as a whole. In addition, the client must agree to the arrangement, including the share that each lawyer is to receive, and the agreement must be confirmed in writing. Contingent fee agreements must be in a writing signed by the client and must otherwise comply with paragraph (c) of this Rule. Joint responsibility for the representation entails financial and ethical responsibility for the representation as if the lawyers were associated in a partnership. A lawyer should refer a matter only to a lawyer who the referring lawyer reasonably believes is competent to handle the matter. See Rule 1.1.

[8] Paragraph (d) does not prohibit or regulate division of fees to be received in the future for work done when lawyers were previously associated in a law firm.

Disputes over Fees

[9] If a procedure has been established for resolution of fee disputes, such as an arbitration or mediation procedure established by the bar, the lawyer must comply with the procedure when it is mandatory, and, even when it is voluntary, the lawyer should conscientiously consider submitting to it. Law may prescribe a procedure for determining a lawyer's fee, for example, in representation of an executor or administrator, a class or a person entitled to a reasonable fee as part of the measure of damages. The lawyer entitled to such a fee and a lawyer representing another party concerned with the fee should comply with the prescribed procedure.

Advances of Unearned Fees and Engagement Retainer Fees

[10] The analysis of when a lawyer may treat advances of unearned fees as property of the lawyer must begin with the principle that the lawyer must hold in trust all fees paid by the client until there is a basis on which to conclude that the lawyer has earned the fee; otherwise the funds must remain in the lawyer's trust account because they are not the lawyer's property.

[11] To make a determination of when an advance fee is earned, the written statement of the basis or rate of the fee, when required by Rule 1.5(b) or (h), should include a description of the benefit or service that justifies the lawyer's earning the fee, the amount of the advance unearned fee, as well as a statement describing when the fee is earned. Whether a lawyer has conferred a sufficient benefit to earn a portion of the advance fee will depend on the circumstances of the particular case. The circumstances under which a fee is earned should be evaluated under an objective standard of reasonableness. Rule 1.5(a).

[12] Advances of unearned fees, including advances of all or a portion of a flat fee, are those funds the client pays for specified legal services that the lawyer has agreed to perform in the future. Pursuant to Rule 1.5(f), the lawyer must deposit an advance of unearned fees in the lawyer's trust account. The funds may be earned only as the lawyer performs specified legal services or confers benefits on the client as provided for in the written statement of the basis of the fee, if a written statement is required by Rule 1.5(b). See also Restatement (Third) of the Law Governing Lawyers §§ 34, 38 (1998). Rule 1.5(f) does not prevent a lawyer from entering into these types of arrangements.

[13] For example, the lawyer and client may agree that portions of the advance of unearned fees are deemed earned at the lawyer's hourly rate and become the lawyer's property as and when the lawyer provides legal services.

[14] A lawyer and client may agree that a flat fee or a portion of a flat fee is earned in various ways. For example, the lawyer and client may agree to an advance flat fee that will be earned in whole or in part based upon the lawyer's completion of specific tasks or the occurrence of specific events, regardless of the precise amount of the lawyer's time involved. For instance, in a criminal defense matter, a lawyer and client may agree that the lawyer earns portions of the flat fee upon the lawyer's entry of appearance, initial advisement, review of discovery, preliminary hearing, pretrial conference, disposition hearing, motions hearing, trial, and sentencing. Similarly, in a trusts and estates matter, a lawyer and client may agree that the lawyer earns portions of the flat fee upon client consultation, legal research, completing the initial draft of testamentary documents, further client consultation, and completing the final documents.

[15] The portions of the advance flat fee earned as each such event occurs need not be in equal amounts. However, the fees attributed to each event should reflect a reasonable estimate of the proportionate value of the legal services the lawyer provides in completing each designated event to the anticipated legal services to be provided on the entire matter. See Rule 1.5(a); Feiger, Collison & Killmer v. Jones, 926 P.2d 1244, 1252-53 (Colo. 1996) (client's sophistication is relevant factor).

[16] "[A]n 'engagement retainer fee' is a fee paid, apart from any other compensation, to ensure that a lawyer will be available for the client if required. An engagement retainer must be distinguished from a lump-sum fee [i.e., a flat fee] constituting the entire payment for a lawyer's service in a matter and from an advance payment from which fees will be subtracted (see § 38, Comment g). A fee is an engagement retainer only if the lawyer is to be additionally compensated for actual work, if any, performed." Restatement (Third) of the Law Governing Lawyers § 34 Comment e. An engagement retainer fee agreement must comply with Rule 1.5(a), (b), and (g), and should expressly include the amount of the engagement retainer fee, describe the service or benefit that justifies the lawyer's earning the engagement retainer fee, and state that the engagement retainer fee is earned upon receipt. As defined above, an engagement retainer fee will be earned upon receipt because the lawyer provides an immediate benefit to the client, such as forgoing other business opportunities by making the lawyer's services available for a given period of time to the exclusion of other clients or potential clients, or by giving priority to the client's work over other matters.

[17] Because an engagement retainer fee is earned at the time it is received, it must not be commingled with client property. However, it may be subject to refund to the client in the event of changed circumstances.

[18] It is unethical for a lawyer to fail to return unearned fees, to charge an excessive fee, or to characterize any lawyer's fee as nonrefundable. Lawyer's fees are always subject to refund if either excessive or unearned. If all or some portion of a lawyer's fee becomes subject to refund, then the amount to be refunded should be paid directly to the client if there is no further legal work to be performed or if the lawyer's employment is terminated. In the alternative, if there is an ongoing client-lawyer relationship and there is further work to be done, it may be deposited in the lawyer's trust account, to be withdrawn from the trust account as it is earned.

Form Flat Fee Agreement

The client _____ (''Client'') retains _____ (''Lawyer'' [or ''Firm'']) to perform the legal services specified in Section I, below, for a flat fee as described below.

I. Legal Services to Be Performed.

In exchange for the fee described in this Agreement, Lawyer will perform the following legal services (''Services''): *[Insert specific description of the scope and/or objective of the representation. II. Flat Fee.

This is a flat fee agreement. Client will pay Lawyer [or Firm] $_____ for Lawyer's [or Firm's] performance of the Services described in Section I, above, plus costs as described in Section VI, below. Client understands that Client is NOT entering into an hourly fee arrangement. This means that Lawyer [or Firm] will devote such time to the representation as is necessary, but the Lawyer's [or Firm's] fee will not be increased or decreased based upon the number of hours spent.

III. When Fee Is Earned.

The flat fee will be earned in increments, as follows:

Description of increment: _____ Amount earned: _____
Description of increment: _____ Amount earned: _____
Description of increment: _____ Amount earned: _____
Description of increment: _____ Amount earned: _____
Description of increment: _____ Amount earned: _____

[Alternatively: The flat fee will be earned when Lawyer [or Firm] provides Client with [Select one: the Will, the Power of Attorney, the contract, other specified description of work].

IV. When Fee Is Payable.

Client shall pay Lawyer [or Firm] [Select one: in advance, as billed, or as the services are completed]. Fees paid in advance shall be placed in Lawyer's [or Firm's] trust account and shall remain the property of Client until they are earned. When the fee or part of the fee is earned pursuant to this Agreement, it becomes the property of Lawyer [or Firm].

V. Right to Terminate Representation and Fees on Termination.

Client has the right to terminate the representation at any time and for any reason, and Lawyer [or firm] may terminate the representation in accordance with Rule 1.16 of the Colorado Rules of Professional Conduct. In the event that Client terminates the representation without wrongful conduct by Lawyer [or Firm] that would cause Lawyer [or Firm] to forfeit any fee, or Lawyer [or Firm] justifiably withdraws in accordance with Rule 1.16 from representing Client, Client shall pay, and Lawyer [or Firm] shall be entitled to, the fee or part of the fee earned by Lawyer [or Firm] as described in Section I, above, up to the time of termination. In a litigation matter, Client shall pay, and Lawyer [or Firm] shall be entitled to, the fee or part of the fee earned up to the time when the court grants Lawyer's motion for withdrawal. If the representation is terminated between the completion of increments described in Section III above, Client shall pay a fee based on [an hourly rate of $_____] [the percentage of the task completed] [other specified method]. However, such fees shall not exceed the amount that would have been earned had the representation continued until the completion of the increment, and in any event all fees shall be reasonable.

VI. Costs.

Client is liable to Lawyer [or Firm] for reasonable expenses and disbursements. Examples of such expenses and disbursements are fees payable to the Court and expenses involved in preparing exhibits. Such expenses and disbursements are estimated to be $_____ . Client authorizes Lawyer [or Firm] to incur expenses and disbursements up to a maximum of $_____ , which limitation will not be exceeded without Client's further written authorization. Client shall reimburse Lawyer for such expenditures [Select one: upon receipt of a billing, in specified installments, or upon completion of the Services].

Annotator's note. Rule 1.5 is similar to Rule 1.5 as it existed prior to the 2007 repeal and readoption of the Colorado rules of professional conduct. Relevant cases construing that provision have been included in the annotations to this rule.

Supreme court is exclusive tribunal for regulation of the practice of law, including reasonableness of fees, notwithstanding statutory provision allowing the director of the division of workers' compensation to determine reasonableness of fees in a workers' compensation case. In re Wimmershoff, 3 P.3d 417 (Colo. 2000).

The term "joint responsibility" in section (d)(1) involves two components: financial responsibility and ethical responsibility. Scott R. Larson, P.C. v. Grinnan, 2017 COA 85, __ P.3d __.

The test for financial responsibility is joint and several or vicarious liability for the trial specialist's legal malpractice. Scott R. Larson, P.C. v. Grinnan, 2017 COA 85, __ P.3d __.

Attorney assumed financial responsibility for case when he and another attorney entered into a joint venture for the purposes of representing clients and sharing in the fee. Vicarious malpractice liability flows from that arrangement. Scott R. Larson, P.C. v. Grinnan, 2017 COA 85, __ P.3d __.

To assume ethical responsibility, a referring lawyer must: (1) actively monitor the progress of the case; (2) make reasonable efforts to ensure that the firm of the lawyer to whom the case was referred has in effect measures giving reasonable assurance that all lawyers in the firm conform to the rules of professional conduct; and (3) remain available to the client to discuss the case and provide independent judgment as to any concerns the client may have that the lawyer to whom the case was referred is acting in conformity with the rules of professional conduct. Scott R. Larson, P.C. v. Grinnan, 2017 COA 85, __ P.3d __.

Agreement for the division of fees between a firm and an attorney separating from the firm is valid and not against public policy. Where an attorney enters into a separation agreement with his or her firm upon departure and the agreement specifies the division of fees for clients continuing legal services with the departing attorney, the agreement is enforceable and does not implicate the policies behind this rule. Norton Frickey, P.C. v. James B. Turner, P.C., 94 P.3d 1266 (Colo. App. 2004).

Further, clients benefit from separation agreements between a departing attorney and the firm because the client is not charged additional fees as a result of the agreement, nor is the client deceived or misled. Norton Frickey, P.C. v. James B. Turner, P.C., 94 P.3d 1266 (Colo. App. 2004).

Lawyer's bills proper under this rule when lawyer billed attorney and secretarial services separately. Newport Pac. Capital Co. v. Waste, 878 P.2d 136 (Colo. App. 1994).

Public policy of protecting a client's right to control settlement will be better served by not treating a clause in a representation agreement that restricts the client's right to control settlement as severable from the provision for calculating fees. Where representation agreement provided alternate method of calculating the fees payable if the client unreasonably refused to settle, court refused to enforce either provision and allowed only reasonable value of services rendered by law firm. Jones v. Feiger, Collison & Killmer, 903 P.2d 27 (Colo. App. 1994), rev'd on other grounds, 926 P.2d 1244 (Colo. 1996).

Stipulated agreement and recommendation of public censure with certain conditions and monitoring based upon conditional admission of misconduct were warranted for attorney who required that his associates sign a covenant that allowed his firm to collect 75 to 100 percent of the total fee generated by a case in which his firm did less than all the work. People v. Wilson, 953 P.2d 1292 (Colo. 1998).

Public censure and restitution were appropriate in case of attorney who unilaterally charged client $1,000 in addition to previously agreed contingent fee. In re Wimmershoff, 3 P.3d 417 (Colo. 2000).

Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules, where mitigating factors were present, warrants public censure. People v. Davis, 950 P.2d 586 (Colo. 1998).

Conduct violating this rule sufficient to justify public censure. In re Green, 11 P.3d 1078 (Colo. 2000); People v. Dalton, 367 P.3d 126 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2016).

There was no agreement between the attorney and the client to justify the billing, and the attorney's claim that the billing stemmed from the attorney's independent duty to protect the client was found by the grievance panel to be false. Therefore, the billing based on such a theory is deceptive and dishonest in violation of this rule. The appropriate sanction for the lawyer's conduct is public censure. People v. Rule 1.6. Confidentiality of Information

(a) A lawyer shall not reveal information relating to the representation of a client unless the client gives informed consent, the disclosure is impliedly authorized in order to carry out the representation, or the disclosure is permitted by paragraph (b).

(b) A lawyer may reveal information relating to the representation of a client to the extent the lawyer reasonably believes necessary:

(1) to prevent reasonably certain death or substantial bodily harm;

(2) to reveal the client's intention to commit a crime and the information necessary to prevent the crime;

(3) to prevent the client from committing a fraud that is reasonably certain to result in substantial injury to the financial interests or property of another and in furtherance of which the client has used or is using the lawyer's services;

(4) to prevent, mitigate, or rectify substantial injury to the financial interests or property of another that is reasonably certain to result or has resulted from the client's commission of a crime or fraud in furtherance of which the client has used the lawyer's services;

(5) to secure legal advice about the lawyer's compliance with these Rules, other law or a court order;

(6) to establish a claim or defense on behalf of the lawyer in a controversy between the lawyer and the client, to establish a defense to a criminal charge or civil claim against the lawyer based upon conduct in which the client was involved, or to respond to allegations in any proceeding concerning the lawyer's representation of the client;

(7) to detect and resolve conflicts of interest arising from the lawyer's change of employment or from changes in the composition or ownership of a firm, but only if the revealed information is not protected by the attorney-client privilege and its revelation is not reasonably likely to otherwise materially prejudice the client; or

(8) to comply with other law or a court order.

(c) A lawyer shall make reasonable efforts to prevent the inadvertent or unauthorized disclosure of, or unauthorized access to, information relating to the representation of a client.

COMMENT

[1] This Rule governs the disclosure by a lawyer of information relating to the representation of a client during the lawyer's representation of the client. See Rule 1.18 for the lawyer's duties with respect to information provided to the lawyer by a prospective client, Rule 1.9(c)(2) for the lawyer's duty not to reveal information relating to the lawyer's prior representation of a former client and Rules 1.8(b) and 1.9(c)(1) for the lawyer's duties with respect to the use of such information to the disadvantage of clients and former clients.

[2] A fundamental principle in the client-lawyer relationship is that, in the absence of the client's informed consent, the lawyer must not reveal information relating to the representation. See Rule 1.0(e) for the definition of informed consent. This contributes to the trust that is the hallmark of the client-lawyer relationship. The client is thereby encouraged to seek legal assistance and to communicate fully and frankly with the lawyer even as to embarrassing or legally damaging subject matter. The lawyer needs this information to represent the client effectively and, if necessary, to advise the client to refrain from wrongful conduct. Almost without exception, clients come to lawyers in order to determine their rights and what is, in the complex of laws and regulations, deemed to be legal and correct. Based upon experience, lawyers know that almost all clients follow the advice given, and the law is upheld.

[3] The principle of client-lawyer confidentiality is given effect by related bodies of law: the attorney-client privilege, the work-product doctrine and the rule of confidentiality established in professional ethics. The attorney-client privilege and work-product doctrine apply in judicial and other proceedings in which a lawyer may be called as a witness or otherwise required to produce evidence concerning a client. The rule of client-lawyer confidentiality applies in situations other than those where evidence is sought from the lawyer through compulsion of law. The confidentiality rule, for example, applies not only to matters communicated in confidence by the client but also to all information relating to the representation, whatever its source. A lawyer may not disclose such information except as authorized or required by the Rules of Professional Conduct or other law. See also Scope.

[4] Paragraph (a) prohibits a lawyer from revealing information relating to the representation of a client. This prohibition also applies to disclosures by a lawyer that do not in themselves reveal protected information but could reasonably lead to the discovery of such information by a third person. A lawyer's use of a hypothetical to discuss issues relating to the representation is permissible so long as there is no reasonable likelihood that the listener will be able to ascertain the identity of the client or the situation involved.

Authorized Disclosure

[5] Except to the extent that the client's instructions or special circumstances limit that authority, a lawyer is impliedly authorized to make disclosures about a client when appropriate in carrying out the representation. In some situations, for example, a lawyer may be impliedly authorized to admit a fact that cannot properly be disputed or to make a disclosure that facilitates a satisfactory conclusion to a matter. Lawyers in a firm may, in the course of the firm's practice, disclose to each other information relating to a client of the firm, unless the client has instructed that particular information be confined to specified lawyers.

Disclosure Adverse to Client

[6] Although the public interest is usually best served by a strict rule requiring lawyers to preserve the confidentiality of information relating to the representation of their clients, the confidentiality rule is subject to limited exceptions. Paragraph (b)(1) recognizes the overriding value of life and physical integrity and permits disclosure reasonably necessary to prevent reasonably certain death or substantial bodily harm. Such harm is reasonably certain to occur if it will be suffered imminently or if there is a present and substantial threat that a person will suffer such harm at a later date if the lawyer fails to take action necessary to eliminate the threat. Thus, a lawyer who knows that a client has accidentally discharged toxic waste into a town's water supply may reveal this information to the authorities if there is a present and substantial risk that a person who drinks the water will contract a life threatening or debilitating disease and the lawyer's disclosure is necessary to eliminate the threat or reduce the number of victims.

[6A] Paragraph (b)(2) permits disclosure regarding a client's intention to commit a crime in the future and authorizes the disclosure of information necessary to prevent the crime. This paragraph does not apply to completed crimes. Although paragraph (b)(2) does not require the lawyer to reveal the client's intention to commit a crime, the lawyer may not counsel or assist the client in conduct the lawyer knows is criminal. See Rule 1.2(d). See also Rule 1.16 with respect to the lawyer's obligation or right to withdraw from the representation of the client in such circumstances, and Rule 1.13(c), which permits the lawyer, where the client is an organization, to reveal information relating to the representation in limited circumstances.

[7] Paragraph (b)(3) is a limited exception to the rule of confidentiality that permits the lawyer to reveal information to the extent necessary to enable affected persons or appropriate authorities to prevent the client from committing a fraud, as defined in Rule 1.0(d), that is reasonably certain to result in substantial injury to the financial or property interests of another and in furtherance of which the client has used or is using the lawyer's services. Such a serious abuse of the client-lawyer relationship by the client forfeits the protection of this Rule. The client can, of course, prevent such disclosure by refraining from the wrongful conduct. Although paragraph (b)(3) does not require the lawyer to reveal the client's misconduct, the lawyer may not counsel or assist the client in conduct the lawyer knows is fraudulent. See Rule 1.2(d). See also Rule 1.16 with respect to the lawyer's obligation or right to withdraw from the representation of the client in such circumstances, and Rule 1.13(c), which permits the lawyer, where the client is an organization, to reveal information relating to the representation in limited circumstances.

[8] Paragraph (b)(4) addresses the situation in which the lawyer does not learn of the client's crime or fraud until after it has been consummated. Although the client no longer has the option of preventing disclosure by refraining from the wrongful conduct, there will be situations in which the loss suffered by the affected person can be prevented, rectified or mitigated. In such situations, the lawyer may disclose information relating to the representation to the extent necessary to enable the affected persons to prevent or mitigate reasonably certain losses or to attempt to recoup their losses. Paragraph (b)(4) does not apply when a person who has committed a crime or fraud thereafter employs a lawyer for representation concerning that offense.

[9] A lawyer's confidentiality obligations do not preclude a lawyer from securing confidential legal advice about the lawyer's personal responsibility to comply with these Rules, other law, or a court order. In most situations, disclosing information to secure such advice will be impliedly authorized for the lawyer to carry out the representation. Even when the disclosure is not impliedly authorized, paragraph (b)(5) permits such disclosure because of the importance of a lawyer's compliance with these Rules, other law, or a court order. For example, Rule 1.6(b)(5) authorizes disclosures that the lawyer reasonably believes are necessary to seek advice involving the lawyer's duty to provide competent representation under Rule 1.1. In addition, this rule permits disclosure of information that the lawyer reasonably believes is necessary to secure legal advice concerning the lawyer's broader duties, including those addressed in Rules 3.3, 4.1 and 8.4.

[10] Where a legal claim or disciplinary charge alleges complicity of the lawyer in a client's conduct or other misconduct of the lawyer involving representation of the client, the lawyer may respond to the extent the lawyer reasonably believes necessary to establish a defense. The same is true with respect to a claim involving the conduct or representation of a former client. Such a charge can arise in a civil, criminal, disciplinary or other proceeding and can be based on a wrong allegedly committed by the lawyer against the client or on a wrong alleged by a third person, for example, a person claiming to have been defrauded by the lawyer and client acting together. The lawyer's right to respond arises when an assertion of such complicity has been made. Paragraph (b)(6) does not require the lawyer to await the commencement of an action or proceeding that charges such complicity, so that the defense may be established by responding directly to a third party who has made such an assertion. The right to defend also applies, of course, where a proceeding has been commenced.

[11] A lawyer entitled to a fee is permitted by paragraph (b)(6) to prove the services rendered in an action to collect it. This aspect of the rule expresses the principle that the beneficiary of a fiduciary relationship may not exploit it to the detriment of the fiduciary.

[12] Other law may require that a lawyer disclose information about a client. Whether such a law supersedes Rule 1.6 is a question of law beyond the scope of these Rules. When disclosure of information relating to the representation appears to be required by other law, the lawyer must discuss the matter with the client to the extent required by Rule 1.4. If, however, the other law supersedes this Rule and requires disclosure, paragraph (b)(7) permits the lawyer to make such disclosures as are necessary to comply with the law.

Detection of Conflicts of Interest

[13] Paragraph (b)(7) recognizes that lawyers in different firms may need to disclose limited information to each other to detect and resolve conflicts of interest, such as when a lawyer is considering an association with another firm, two or more firms are considering a merger, or a lawyer is considering the purchase of a law practice. See Rule 1.17, Comment [7]. Under these circumstances, lawyers and law firms are permitted to disclose limited information, but only once substantive discussions regarding the new relationship have occurred. Any such disclosure should ordinarily include no more than the identity of the persons and entities involved in a matter, a brief summary of the general issues involved, and information about whether the matter has terminated. Even this limited information, however, should be disclosed only to the extent reasonably necessary to detect and resolve conflicts of interest that might arise from the possible new relationship. Moreover, the disclosure of any information is prohibited if the information is protected by the attorney-client privilege or its disclosure is reasonably likely to materially prejudice the client (e.g., the fact that a corporate client is seeking advice on a corporate takeover that has not been publicly announced; that a person has consulted a lawyer about the possibility of divorce before the person's intentions are known to the person's spouse; or that a person has consulted a lawyer about a criminal investigation that has not led to a public charge). Under those circumstances, paragraph (a) prohibits disclosure unless the client or former client gives informed consent. A lawyer's fiduciary duty to the lawyer's firm may also govern a lawyer's conduct when exploring an association with another firm and is beyond the scope of these Rules.

[14] Any information disclosed pursuant to paragraph (b)(7) may be used or further disclosed only to the extent necessary to detect and resolve conflicts of interest. Paragraph (b)(7) does not restrict the use of information acquired by means independent of any disclosure pursuant to paragraph (b)(7). Paragraph (b)(7) also does not affect the disclosure of information within a law firm when the disclosure is otherwise authorized, see Comment [5], such as when a lawyer in a firm discloses information to another lawyer in the same firm to detect and resolve conflicts of interest that could arise in connection with undertaking a new representation.

[15] A lawyer may be ordered to reveal information relating to the representation of a client by a court or by another tribunal or governmental entity claiming authority pursuant to other law to compel the disclosure. For purposes of paragraph (b)(8), a subpoena is a court order. Absent informed consent of the client to do otherwise, the lawyer should assert on behalf of the client all nonfrivolous claims that the order is not authorized by other law or that the information sought is protected against disclosure by the attorney-client privilege or other applicable law. In the event of an adverse ruling, the lawyer must consult with the client about the possibility of appeal to the extent required by Rule 1.4. Unless review is sought, however, paragraph (b)(8) permits the lawyer to comply with the court's order.

[15A] Rule 4.1(b) requires a disclosure when necessary to avoid assisting a client's criminal or fraudulent act, if such disclosure will not violate this Rule 1.6.

[16] Paragraph (b) permits disclosure only to the extent the lawyer reasonably believes the disclosure is necessary to accomplish one of the purposes specified. Where practicable, the lawyer should first seek to persuade the client to take suitable action to obviate the need for disclosure. In any case, a disclosure adverse to the client's interest should be no greater than the lawyer reasonably believes necessary to accomplish the purpose. If the disclosure will be made in connection with a judicial proceeding, the disclosure should be made in a manner that limits access to the information to the tribunal or other persons having a need to know it and appropriate protective orders or other arrangements should be sought by the lawyer to the fullest extent practicable.

[16A] The interrelationships between this Rule and Rules 1.2(d), 1.13, 3.3, 4.1, 8.1, and 8.3, and among those rules, are complex and require careful study by lawyers in order to discharge their sometimes conflicting obligations to their clients and the courts, and more generally, to our system of justice. The fact that disclosure is permitted, required, or prohibited under one rule does not end the inquiry. A lawyer must determine whether and under what circumstances other rules or other law permit, require, or prohibit disclosure. While disclosure under this Rule is always permissive, other rules or law may require disclosure. For example, Rule 3.3 requires disclosure of certain information (such as a lawyer's knowledge of the offer or admission of false evidence) even if this Rule would otherwise not permit that disclosure. In addition, Rule 1.13 sets forth the circumstances under which a lawyer representing an organization may disclose information, regardless of whether this Rule permits that disclosure. By contrast, Rule 4.1 requires disclosure to a third party of material facts when disclosure is necessary to avoid assisting a criminal or fraudulent act by a client, unless that disclosure would violate this Rule. See also Rule 1.2(d)(prohibiting a lawyer from counseling or assisting a client in conduct the lawyer knows is criminal or fraudulent). Similarly, Rule 8.1(b) requires certain disclosures in bar admission and attorney disciplinary proceedings and Rule 8.3 requires disclosure of certain violations of the Rules of Professional Conduct, except where this Rule does not permit those disclosures.

[17] Paragraph (b) permits but does not require the disclosure of information relating to a client's representation to accomplish the purposes specified in paragraphs (b) (1) through (b)(8). In exercising the discretion conferred by this Rule, the lawyer may consider such factors as the nature of the lawyer's relationship with the client and with those who might be injured by the client, the lawyer's own involvement in the transaction, and factors that may extenuate the conduct in question. A lawyer's decision not to disclose as permitted by paragraph (b) does not violate this Rule.

Reasonable Measures to Preserve Confidentiality

[18] Paragraph (c) requires a lawyer to make reasonable efforts to safeguard information relating to the representation of a client against unauthorized access by third parties and against inadvertent or unauthorized disclosure by the lawyer or other persons who are participating in the representation of the client or who are subject to the lawyer's supervision. See Rules 1.1, 5.1 and 5.3. The unauthorized access to, or the inadvertent or unauthorized disclosure of, information relating to the representation of a client does not constitute a violation of paragraph (c) if the lawyer has made reasonable efforts to prevent the access or disclosure. Factors to be considered in determining the reasonableness of the lawyer's efforts include, but are not limited to, the sensitivity of the information, the likelihood of disclosure if additional safeguards are not employed, the cost of employing additional safeguards, the difficulty of implementing the safeguards, and the extent to which the safeguards adversely affect the lawyer's ability to represent clients (e.g., by making a device or important piece of software excessively difficult to use). A client may require the lawyer to implement special security measures not required by this Rule or may give informed consent to forgo security measures that would otherwise be required by this Rule. Whether a lawyer may be required to take additional steps to safeguard a client's information in order to comply with other law, such as state and federal laws that govern data privacy or that impose notification requirements upon the loss of, or unauthorized access to, electronic information, is beyond the scope of these Rules. For a lawyer's duties when sharing information with nonlawyers outside the lawyer's own firm, see Comments [3] and [4] to Rule 5.3.

[19] When transmitting a communication that includes information relating to the representation of a client, the lawyer must take reasonable precautions to prevent the information from coming into the hands of unintended recipients. This duty, however, does not require that the lawyer use special security measures if the method of communication affords a reasonable expectation of privacy. Special circumstances, however, may warrant special precautions. Factors to be considered in determining the reasonableness of the lawyer's expectation of confidentiality include the sensitivity of the information and the extent to which the privacy of the communication is protected by law or by a confidentiality agreement. A client may require the lawyer to implement special security measures not required by this Rule or may give informed consent to the use of a means of communication that would otherwise be prohibited by this Rule. Whether a lawyer may be required to take additional steps in order to comply with other law, such as state and federal laws that govern data privacy, is beyond the scope of these Rules.

Former Client

[20] The duty of confidentiality continues after the client-lawyer relationship has terminated. See Rule 1.9(c)(2). See Rule 1.9(c)(1) for the prohibition against using such information to the disadvantage of the former client.

Rule 1.7. Conflict of Interest: Current Clients

(a) Except as provided in paragraph (b), a lawyer shall not represent a client if the representation involves a concurrent conflict of interest. A concurrent conflict of interest exists if:

(1) the representation of one client will be directly adverse to another client; or

(2) there is a significant risk that the representation of one or more clients will be materially limited by the lawyer's responsibilities to another client, a former client or a third person or by a personal interest of the lawyer.

(b) Notwithstanding the existence of a concurrent conflict of interest under paragraph (a), a lawyer may represent a client if:

(1) the lawyer reasonably believes that the lawyer will be able to provide competent and diligent representation to each affected client;

(2) the representation is not prohibited by law;

(3) the representation does not involve the assertion of a claim by one client against another client represented by the lawyer in the same litigation or other proceeding before a tribunal; and

(4) each affected client gives informed consent, confirmed in writing.

COMMENT

General Principles

[1] Loyalty and independent judgment are essential elements in the lawyer's relationship to a client. Concurrent conflicts of interest can arise from the lawyer's responsibilities to another client, a former client or a third person or from the lawyer's own interests. For specific rules regarding certain concurrent conflicts of interest, see Rule 1.8. For former client conflicts of interest, see Rule 1.9. For conflicts of interest involving prospective clients, see Rule 1.18. For definitions of ''informed consent'' and ''confirmed in writing,'' see Rule 1.0(e) and (b).

[2] Resolution of a conflict of interest problem under this Rule requires the lawyer to: 1) clearly identify the client or clients; 2) determine whether a conflict of interest exists; 3) decide whether the representation may be undertaken despite the existence of a conflict, i.e., whether the conflict is consentable; and 4) if so, consult with the clients affected under paragraph (a) and obtain their informed consent, confirmed in writing. The clients affected under paragraph (a) include both of the clients referred to in paragraph (a)(1) and the one or more clients whose representation might be materially limited under paragraph (a)(2).

[3] A conflict of interest may exist before representation is undertaken, in which event the representation must be declined, unless the lawyer obtains the informed consent of each client under the conditions of paragraph (b). To determine whether a conflict of interest exists, a lawyer should adopt reasonable procedures, appropriate for the size and type of firm and practice, to determine in both litigation and nonlitigation matters the persons and issues involved. See also Comment to Rule 5.1. Ignorance caused by a failure to institute such procedures will not excuse a lawyer's violation of this Rule. As to whether a client-lawyer relationship exists or, having once been established, is continuing, see Comment to Rule 1.3 and Scope.

[4] If a conflict arises after representation has been undertaken, the lawyer ordinarily must withdraw from the representation, unless the lawyer has obtained the informed consent of the client under the conditions of paragraph (b). See Rule 1.16. Where more than one client is involved, whether the lawyer may continue to represent any of the clients is determined both by the lawyer's ability to comply with duties owed to the former client and by the lawyer's ability to represent adequately the remaining client or clients, given the lawyer's duties to the former client. See Rule 1.9. See also Comments [5] and [29].

[5] Unforeseeable developments, such as changes in corporate and other organizational affiliations or the addition or realignment of parties in litigation, might create conflicts in the midst of a representation, as when a company sued by the lawyer on behalf of one client is bought by another client represented by the lawyer in an unrelated matter. Depending on the circumstances, the lawyer may have the option to withdraw from one of the representations in order to avoid the conflict. The lawyer must seek court approval where necessary and take steps to minimize harm to the clients. See Rule 1.16. The lawyer must continue to protect the confidences of the client from whose representation the lawyer has withdrawn. See Rule 1.9(c).

Identifying Conflicts of Interest: Directly Adverse

[6] Loyalty to a current client prohibits undertaking representation directly adverse to that client without that client's informed consent. Thus, absent consent, a lawyer may not act as an advocate in one matter against a person the lawyer represents in some other matter, even when the matters are wholly unrelated. The client as to whom the representation is directly adverse is likely to feel betrayed, and the resulting damage to the client-lawyer relationship is likely to impair the lawyer's ability to represent the client effectively. In addition, the client on whose behalf the adverse representation is undertaken reasonably may fear that the lawyer will pursue that client's case less effectively out of deference to the other client, i.e., that the representation may be materially limited by the lawyer's interest in retaining the current client. Similarly, a directly adverse conflict may arise when a lawyer is required to cross-examine a client who appears as a witness in a lawsuit involving another client, as when the testimony will be damaging to the client who is represented in the lawsuit. On the other hand, simultaneous representation in unrelated matters of clients whose interests are only economically adverse, such as representation of competing economic enterprises in unrelated litigation, does not ordinarily constitute a conflict of interest and thus may not require consent of the respective clients.

[7] Directly adverse conflicts can also arise in transactional matters. For example, if a lawyer is asked to represent the seller of a business in negotiations with a buyer represented by the lawyer, not in the same transaction but in another, unrelated matter, the lawyer could not undertake the representation without the informed consent of each client.

Identifying Conflicts of Interest: Material Limitation

[8] Even where there is no direct adverseness, a conflict of interest exists if there is a significant risk that a lawyer's ability to consider, recommend or carry out an appropriate course of action for the client will be materially limited as a result of the lawyer's other responsibilities or interests. For example, a lawyer asked to represent several individuals seeking to form a joint venture is likely to be materially limited in the lawyer's ability to recommend or advocate all possible positions that each might take because of the lawyer's duty of loyalty to the others. The conflict in effect forecloses alternatives that would otherwise be available to the client. The mere possibility of subsequent harm does not itself require disclosure and consent. The critical questions are the likelihood that a difference in interests will eventuate and, if it does, whether it will materially interfere with the lawyer's independent professional judgment in considering alternatives or foreclose courses of action that reasonably should be pursued on behalf of the client.

Lawyer's Responsibilities to Former Clients and Other Third Persons

[9] In addition to conflicts with other current clients, a lawyer's duties of loyalty and independence may be materially limited by responsibilities to former clients under Rule 1.9 or by the lawyer's responsibilities to other persons, such as fiduciary duties arising from a lawyer's service as a trustee, executor or corporate director.

Personal Interest Conflicts

[10] The lawyer's own interests should not be permitted to have an adverse effect on representation of a client. For example, if the probity of a lawyer's own conduct in a transaction is in serious question, it may be difficult or impossible for the lawyer to give a client detached advice. Similarly, when a lawyer has discussions concerning possible employment with an opponent of the lawyer's client, or with a law firm representing the opponent, such discussions could materially limit the lawyer's representation of the client. In addition, a lawyer may not allow related business interests to affect representation, for example, by referring clients to an enterprise in which the lawyer has an undisclosed financial interest. See Rule 1.8 for specific Rules pertaining to a number of personal interest conflicts, including business transactions with clients. See also Rule 1.10 (personal interest conflicts under Rule 1.7 ordinarily are not imputed to other lawyers in a law firm).

[11] When lawyers representing different clients in the same matter or in substantially related matters are closely related by blood or marriage or when there is a cohabiting relationship between the lawyers, there may be a significant risk that client confidences will be revealed and that the lawyer's family or cohabiting relationship will interfere with both loyalty and independent professional judgment. As a result, each client is entitled to know of the existence and implications of the relationship between the lawyers before the lawyer agrees to undertake the representation. Thus, a lawyer related to another lawyer, e.g., as parent, child, sibling or spouse (or in a cohabiting relationship with another lawyer,) ordinarily may not represent a client in a matter where that lawyer is representing another party, unless each client gives informed consent. The disqualification arising from a close family relationship or a cohabiting relationship is personal and ordinarily is not imputed to members of firms with whom the lawyers are associated. See Rule 1.10.

[12] A lawyer is prohibited from engaging in sexual relationships with a client unless the sexual relationship predates the formation of the client-lawyer relationship. See Rule 1.8(j).

Interest of Person Paying for a Lawyer's Service

[13] A lawyer may be paid from a source other than the client, including a co-client, if the client is informed of that fact and consents and the arrangement does not compromise the lawyer's duty of loyalty or independent judgment to the client. See Rule 1.8(f). If acceptance of the payment from any other source presents a significant risk that the lawyer's representation of the client will be materially limited by the lawyer's own interest in accommodating the person paying the lawyer's fee or by the lawyer's responsibilities to a payer who is also a co-client, then the lawyer must comply with the requirements of paragraph (b) before accepting the representation, including determining whether the conflict is consentable and, if so, that the client has adequate information about the material risks of the representation.

Prohibited Representations

[14] Ordinarily, clients may consent to representation notwithstanding a conflict. However, as indicated in paragraph (b), some conflicts are nonconsentable, meaning that the lawyer involved cannot properly ask for such agreement or provide representation on the basis of the client's consent. When the lawyer is representing more than one client, the question of consentability must be resolved as to each client.

[15] Consentability is typically determined by considering whether the interests of the clients will be adequately protected if the clients are permitted to give their informed consent to representation burdened by a conflict of interest. Thus, under paragraph (b)(1), representation is prohibited if in the circumstances the lawyer cannot reasonably conclude that the lawyer will be able to provide competent and diligent representation. See Rule 1.1 (competence) and Rule 1.3 (diligence).

[16] Paragraph (b)(2) describes conflicts that are nonconsentable because the representation is prohibited by applicable law. For example, in some states substantive law provides that the same lawyer may not represent more than one defendant in a capital case, even with the consent of the clients, and under federal criminal statutes certain representations by a former government lawyer are prohibited, despite the informed consent of the former client. In addition, decisional law in some states limits the ability of a governmental client, such as a municipality, to consent to a conflict of interest.

[17] Paragraph (b)(3) describes conflicts that are nonconsentable because of the institutional interest in vigorous development of each client's position when the clients are aligned directly against each other in the same litigation or other proceeding before a tribunal. Whether clients are aligned directly against each other within the meaning of this paragraph requires examination of the context of the proceeding. Although this paragraph does not preclude a lawyer's multiple representation of adverse parties to a mediation (because mediation is not a proceeding before a ''tribunal'' under Rule 1.0(m)), such representation may be precluded by paragraph (b)(1).

Informed Consent

[18] Informed consent requires that each affected client be aware of the relevant circumstances and of the material and reasonably foreseeable ways that the conflict could have adverse effects on the interests of that client. See Rule 1.0(e) (informed consent). The information required depends on the nature of the conflict and the nature of the risks involved. When representation of multiple clients in a single matter is undertaken, the information must include the implications of the common representation, including possible effects on loyalty, confidentiality and the attorney-client privilege and the advantages and risks involved. See Comments [30] and [31] (effect of common representation on confidentiality).

[19] Under some circumstances it may be impossible to make the disclosure necessary to obtain consent. For example, when the lawyer represents different clients in related matters and one of the clients refuses to consent to the disclosure necessary to permit the other client to make an informed decision, the lawyer cannot properly ask the latter to consent. In some cases the alternative to common representation can be that each party may have to obtain separate representation with the possibility of incurring additional costs. These costs, along with the benefits of securing separate representation, are factors that may be considered by the affected client in determining whether common representation is in the client's interests.

Consent Confirmed in Writing

[20] Paragraph (b) requires the lawyer to obtain the informed consent of the client, confirmed in writing. Such a writing may consist of a document executed by the client or one that the lawyer promptly records and transmits to the client following an oral consent. See Rule 1.0(b). See also Rule 1.0(n) (writing includes electronic transmission). If it is not feasible to obtain or transmit the writing at the time the client gives informed consent, then the lawyer must obtain or transmit it within a reasonable time thereafter. See Rule 1.0(b). The requirement of a writing does not supplant the need in most cases for the lawyer to talk with the client, to explain the risks and advantages, if any, of representation burdened with a conflict of interest, as well as reasonably available alternatives, and to afford the client a reasonable opportunity to consider the risks and alternatives and to raise questions and concerns. Rather, the writing is required in order to impress upon clients the seriousness of the decision the client is being asked to make and to avoid disputes or ambiguities that might later occur in the absence of a writing.

Revoking Consent

[21] A client who has given consent to a conflict may revoke the consent and, like any other client, may terminate the lawyer's representation at any time. Whether revoking consent to the client's own representation precludes the lawyer from continuing to represent other clients depends on the circumstances, including the nature of the conflict, whether the client revoked consent because of a material change in circumstances, the reasonable expectations of the other client and whether material detriment to the other clients or the lawyer would result.

Consent to Future Conflict

[22] Whether a lawyer may properly request a client to waive conflicts that might arise in the future is subject to the test of paragraph (b). The effectiveness of such waivers is generally determined by the extent to which the client reasonably understands the material risks that the waiver entails. The more comprehensive the explanation of the types of future representations that might arise and the actual and reasonably foreseeable adverse consequences of those representations, the greater the likelihood that the client will have the requisite understanding. Thus, if the client agrees to consent to a particular type of conflict with which the client is already familiar, then the consent ordinarily will be effective with regard to that type of conflict. If the consent is general and open-ended, then the consent ordinarily will be ineffective, because it is not reasonably likely that the client will have understood the material risks involved. On the other hand, if the client is an experienced user of the legal services involved and is reasonably informed regarding the risk that a conflict may arise, such consent is more likely to be effective, particularly if, e.g., the client is independently represented by other counsel in giving consent and the consent is limited to future conflicts unrelated to the subject of the representation. In any case, advance consent cannot be effective if the circumstances that materialize in the future are such as would make the conflict nonconsentable under paragraph (b).

Conflicts in Litigation

[23] Paragraph (b)(3) prohibits representation of opposing parties in the same litigation, regardless of the clients' consent. On the other hand, simultaneous representation of parties whose interests in litigation may conflict, such as co-plaintiffs or codefendants, is governed by paragraph (a)(2). A conflict may exist by reason of substantial discrepancy in the parties' testimony, incompatibility in positions in relation to an opposing party or the fact that there are substantially different possibilities of settlement of the claims or liabilities in question. Such conflicts can arise in criminal cases as well as civil. The potential for conflict of interest in representing multiple defendants in a criminal case is so grave that ordinarily a lawyer should decline to represent more than one codefendant.

On the other hand, common representation of persons having similar interests in civil litigation is proper if the requirements of paragraph (b) are met.

[24] Ordinarily a lawyer may take inconsistent legal positions in different tribunals at different times on behalf of different clients. The mere fact that advocating a legal position on behalf of one client might create precedent adverse to the interests of a client represented by the lawyer in an unrelated matter does not create a conflict of interest. A conflict of interest exists, however, if there is a significant risk that a lawyer's action on behalf of one client will materially limit the lawyer's effectiveness in representing another client in a different case; for example, when a decision favoring one client will create a precedent likely to seriously weaken the position taken on behalf of the other client. Factors relevant in determining whether the clients need to be advised of the risk include: where the cases are pending, whether the issue is substantive or procedural, the temporal relationship between the matters, the significance of the issue to the immediate and long-term interests of the clients involved and the clients' reasonable expectations in retaining the lawyer. If there is significant risk of material limitation, then absent informed consent of the affected clients, the lawyer must refuse one of the representations or withdraw from one or both matters.

[25] When a lawyer represents or seeks to represent a class of plaintiffs or defendants in a class-action lawsuit, unnamed members of the class are ordinarily not considered to be clients of the lawyer for purposes of applying paragraph (a)(1) of this Rule. Thus, the lawyer does not typically need to get the consent of such a person before representing a client suing the person in an unrelated matter. Similarly, a lawyer seeking to represent an opponent in a class action does not typically need the consent of an unnamed member of the class whom the lawyer represents in an unrelated matter.

Nonlitigation Conflicts

[26] Conflicts of interest under paragraphs (a)(1) and (a)(2) arise in contexts other than litigation. For a discussion of directly adverse conflicts in transactional matters, see Comment [7]. Relevant factors in determining whether there is significant potential for material limitation include the duration and intimacy of the lawyer's relationship with the client or clients involved, the functions being performed by the lawyer, the likelihood that disagreements will arise and the likely prejudice to the client from the conflict. The question is often one of proximity and degree. See Comment [8].

[27] For example, conflict questions may arise in estate planning and estate administration. A lawyer may be called upon to prepare wills for several family members, such as husband and wife, and, depending upon the circumstances, a conflict of interest may be present. In estate administration the identity of the client may be unclear under the law of a particular jurisdiction. Under one view, the client is the fiduciary; under another view the client is the estate or trust, including its beneficiaries. In order to comply with conflict of interest rules, the lawyer should make clear the lawyer's relationship to the parties involved.

[28] Whether a conflict is consentable depends on the circumstances. For example, a lawyer may not represent multiple parties to a negotiation whose interests are fundamentally antagonistic to each other, but common representation is permissible where the clients are generally aligned in interest even though there is some difference in interest among them. Thus, a lawyer may seek to establish or adjust a relationship between clients on an amicable and mutually advantageous basis; for example, in helping to organize a business in which two or more clients are entrepreneurs, working out the financial reorganization of an enterprise in which two or more clients have an interest or arranging a property distribution in settlement of an estate. The lawyer seeks to resolve potentially adverse interests by developing the parties' mutual interests. Otherwise, each party might have to obtain separate representation, with the possibility of incurring additional cost, complication or even litigation. Given these and other relevant factors, the clients may prefer that the lawyer act for all of them.

Special Considerations in Common Representation

[29] In considering whether to represent multiple clients in the same matter, a lawyer should be mindful that if the common representation fails because the potentially adverse interests cannot be reconciled, the result can be additional cost, embarrassment and recrimination. Ordinarily, the lawyer will be forced to withdraw from representing all of the clients if the common representation fails. In some situations, the risk of failure is so great that multiple representation is plainly impossible. For example, a lawyer cannot undertake common representation of clients where contentious litigation or negotiations between them are imminent or contemplated. Moreover, because the lawyer is required to be impartial between commonly represented clients, representation of multiple clients is improper when it is unlikely that impartiality can be maintained. Generally, if the relationship between the parties has already assumed antagonism, the possibility that the clients' interests can be adequately served by common representation is not very good. Other relevant factors are whether the lawyer subsequently will represent both parties on a continuing basis and whether the situation involves creating or terminating a relationship between the parties.

[30] A particularly important factor in determining the appropriateness of common representation is the effect on client-lawyer confidentiality and the attorney-client privilege. With regard to the attorney-client privilege, the prevailing rule is that, as between commonly represented clients, the privilege does not attach. Hence, it must be assumed that if litigation eventuates between the clients, the privilege will not protect any such communications, and the clients should be so advised.

[31] As to the duty of confidentiality, continued common representation will almost certainly be inadequate if one client asks the lawyer not to disclose to the other client information relevant to the common representation. This is so because the lawyer has an equal duty of loyalty to each client, and each client has the right to be informed of anything bearing on the representation that might affect that client's interests and the right to expect that the lawyer will use that information to that client's benefit. See Rule 1.4. The lawyer should, at the outset of the common representation and as part of the process of obtaining each client's informed consent, advise each client that information will be shared and that the lawyer will have to withdraw if one client decides that some matter material to the representation should be kept from the other. In limited circumstances, it may be appropriate for the lawyer to proceed with the representation when the clients have agreed, after being properly informed, that the lawyer will keep certain information confidential. For example, the lawyer may reasonably conclude that failure to disclose one client's trade secrets to another client will not adversely affect representation involving a joint venture between the clients and agree to keep that information confidential with the informed consent of both clients.

[32] When seeking to establish or adjust a relationship between clients, the lawyer should make clear that the lawyer's role is not that of partisanship normally expected in other circumstances and, thus, that the clients may be required to assume greater responsibility for decisions than when each client is separately represented. Any limitations on the scope of the representation made necessary as a result of the common representation should be fully explained to the clients at the outset of the representation. See Rule 1.2(c).

[33] Subject to the above limitations, each client in the common representation has the right to loyal and diligent representation and the protection of Rule 1.9 concerning the obligations to a former client. The client also has the right to discharge the lawyer as stated in Rule 1.16.

Organizational Clients

[34] A lawyer who represents a corporation or other organization does not, by virtue of that representation, necessarily represent any constituent or affiliated organization, such as a parent or subsidiary. See Rule 1.13(a). Thus, the lawyer for an organization is not barred from accepting representation adverse to an affiliate in an unrelated matter, unless the circumstances are such that the affiliate should also be considered a client of the lawyer, there is an understanding between the lawyer and the organizational client that the lawyer will avoid representation adverse to the client's affiliates, or the lawyer's obligations to either the organizational client or the new client are likely to limit materially the lawyer's representation of the other client.

[35] A lawyer for a corporation or other organization who is also a member of its board of directors should determine whether the responsibilities of the two roles might conflict. The lawyer may be called on to advise the corporation in matters involving actions of the directors. Consideration should be given to the frequency with which such situations may arise, the potential intensity of the conflict, the effect of the lawyer's resignation from the board and the possibility of the corporation's obtaining legal advice from another lawyer in such situations. If there is material risk that the dual role will compromise the lawyer's independence of professional judgment, the lawyer should not serve as a director or should cease to act as the corporation's lawyer when conflicts of interest arise. The lawyer should advise the other members of the board that in some circumstances matters discussed at board meetings while the lawyer is present in the capacity of director might not be protected by the attorney-client privilege and that conflict of interest considerations might require the lawyer's recusal as a director or might require the lawyer and the lawyer's firm to decline representation of the corporation in a matter.

Annotator's note. Rule 1.7 is similar to Rule 1.7 as it existed prior to the 2007 repeal and readoption of the Colorado rules of professional conduct. Relevant cases construing that provision have been included in the annotations to this rule.

Where there is a large group of clients who are not recognized as a single legal entity, an attorney has an attorney-client relationship with each individual member of the group. Abbott v. Kidder Peabody & Co., Inc., 42 F. Supp. 2d 1046 (D. Colo. 1999).

Representation agreement that gives counsel the ability to negotiate settlement for each member of a large group of clients without providing him or her with personalized advisement and without obtaining individual authority to enter into a settlement agreement violates the professional and ethical standards created to regulate the legal profession in Colorado. Abbott v. Kidder Peabody & Co., Inc., 42 F. Supp. 2d 1046 (D. Colo. 1999).

Any provision of an attorney-client agreement that deprives a client of a right to control his or her case is void as against public policy. Abbott v. Kidder Peabody & Co., Inc., 42 F. Supp. 2d 1046 (D. Colo. 1999).

Valid client consent to waive the potential conflict of interest cannot be obtained under the circumstances. Abbott v. Kidder Peabody & Co., Inc., 42 F. Supp. 2d 1046 (D. Colo. 1999).

Where counsel simultaneously represented company's interests as well as those of company's employees for a substantial period of time and the representation continued through the emergence of conflicts, counsel could continue to represent company because the company and the former clients, the employees, through counsel, consented to such representation after consultation and there was an indication that counsel reasonably believed that the continued representation would not adversely affect the relationship with the former clients. Gates Rubber Co. v. Bando Chem. Indus., Ltd., 855 F. Supp. 330 (D. Colo. 1994).

Out-of-state law firm disqualified from representing plaintiff when defense counsel had previously consulted with a member of the firm about the case, including counsel's theory of the case and defense strategy. Liebnow v. Boston Enters. Inc., 2013 CO 8, 296 P.3d 108.

A defendant may waive the right to conflict-free counsel. The waiver is valid when: (1) The defendant is aware of the conflict and its likely effect on the attorney's ability to render effective assistance; and (2) the waiver is voluntary, knowing, and intelligent. A waiver is voluntary, knowing, and intelligent when the defendant is aware of and understands the various risks, has the capacity to make a decision on the basis of this information, and states unequivocally a desire to hazard those dangers. People v. Preciado-Flores, 66 P.3d 155 (Colo. App. 2002).

A waiver is not knowing and intelligent where a defendant gives merely pro forma answers to pro forma questions. People v. Preciado-Flores, 66 P.3d 155 (Colo. App. 2002).

Balancing test to determine whether defendant may waive conflict-free representation. The trial court must examine: (1) The defendant's preference for particular counsel; (2) the public's interest in maintaining the integrity of the judicial process; and (3) the nature of the particular conflict. People v. Nozolino, 2013 CO 19, 298 P.3d 915.

Defendant does not have an absolute right to revoke waiver of conflict-free counsel at any time, but is subject to the same limitations as any defendant terminating counsel. The court may refuse to revoke an untimely waiver or to grant a revocation that is filed for improper purposes based upon evidence presented at the time of attempted revocation. People v. Maestas, 199 P.3d 713 (Colo. 2009).

Attorney violated paragraph (a) by simultaneously representing both a borrower and the purported lenders to a proposed transaction that he attempted to persuade both parties to enter into. People v. Calvert, 280 P.3d 1269 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2011).

Lawyer violated section (b) when his representation of a client was materially limited by his responsibilities to another client. He represented loan documents to be investment agreements to circumvent a provision in the Colorado Liquor Code that restricts the cross-ownership of businesses holding liquor licenses. In re Lopez, 980 P.2d 983 (Colo. 1999).

Public censure was appropriate for attorney who violated this rule by simultaneously representing, as defendants in a quantum meruit and lis pendens suit initiated by a subcontractor, the homeowners, the general contractor, the bank holding deed of trust on homeowners property, and two other parties who had contracted with contractor. Balancing the seriousness of the misconduct with the factors in mitigation, and taking into account the respondent's mental state when he entered into the conflicts in representation, public censure is appropriate. People v. Fritze, 926 P.2d 574 (Colo. 1996).

Public censure warranted for attorney's solicitation of prostitution during telephone conversation with wife of client whom he was representing in a dissolution of marriage proceeding. People v. Bauder, 941 P.2d 282 (Colo. 1997).

Critical inquiry when representation of one client may be limited by representation of another is whether a conflict is likely to arise, and, if so, whether it materially interferes with the lawyer's independent professional judgment. People in Interest of J.A.M., 907 P.2d 725 (Colo. App. 1995).

Actual conflict existed where criminal charges were pending against defense counsel in the same district in which his client was being prosecuted. People v. Edebohls, 944 P.2d 552 (Colo. App. 1996).

Attorney's representation of criminal defendant for whom attorney negotiated a plea bargain for testifying against another criminal defendant prohibited attorney from also representing the other criminal defendant where such other defendant did not consent to conflict-free counsel. People ex rel. Peters v. District Court, 951 P.2d 926 (Colo. 1998).

Attorney who was the trustee of client's trust violated section (b) by utilizing the trust's funds to loan money to his daughter and to purchase his son-in-law's parents' former residence for the purpose of leasing it back to them, and by then failing to take any legal action against them when they did not make lease payments. People v. DeRose, 945 P.2d 412 (Colo. 1997).

Preparation of an extension agreement on the repayment of a loan made to a client by the attorney violated section (b) because certain exceptions were not satisfied. People v. Ginsberg, 967 P.2d 151 (Colo. 1998).

Thirty-day suspension warranted where lawyer, who represented an individual accused of first-degree murder, communicated with co-defendant who also was charged with first-degree murder and whose interests were adverse to the lawyer's client, without the knowledge or consent of the co-defendant's lawyers. The potential for harm was high in a first-degree murder case and the number of unauthorized contacts demonstrated more than negligence on the lawyer's part. People v. DeLoach, 944 P.2d 522 (Colo. 1997).

Suspension for three years was appropriate in case involving violation of this rule and others, together with attorney's breach of his duty as client's trustee to protect his client, who was a particularly vulnerable victim that was recuperating from a serious head injury. People v. DeRose, 945 P.2d 412 (Colo. 1997).

Suspension for three years, rather than disbarment, was appropriate where violation of this rule and others caused serious harm to attorney's clients, but mitigating factors were present, including no previous discipline in 14 years of practice, personal and emotional problems, and cooperation and demonstrated remorse in proceedings. Attorney's ability to represent his client in a bankruptcy was materially limited by his own interest as a creditor in collecting attorney fees. People v. Henderson, 967 P.2d 1038 (Colo. 1998).

The presumed sanction of suspension is appropriate where the attorney knew of a conflict of interest and did not fully disclose to a client the possible effect of that conflict even though such action caused no actual harm. In re Cimino, 3 P.3d 398 (Colo. 2000).

Whether an attorney expects to be paid or not is insignificant to the issue of whether an attorney-client relationship existed. In re Cimino, 3 P.3d 398 (Colo. 2000).

The hearing panel of the former grievance committee committed harmless error by failing to consider the personal and emotional problems that an attorney was experiencing at the time of the attorney's misconduct as mitigating in determining sanctions because no medical or psychological proof of emotional problems was brought forward. In re Cimino, 3 P.3d 398 (Colo. 2000).

Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules is sufficient to justify suspension. People v. Robinson, 853 P.2d 1145 (Colo. 1993); People v. Good, 893 P.2d 101 (Colo. 1995); People v. Silver, 924 P.2d 159 (Colo. 1996); People v. Mason, 938 P.2d 133 (Colo. 1997); People v. Representing client without full disclosure of potential conflict of interest violates disciplinary rule. People v. Watson, 787 P.2d 151 (Colo. 1990).

No violation of paragraph (A). Although disclosure was inadequate as to the nature of the business relationships between the attorney and his business-partner client, record does not support conclusion that attorney's business relationship with individual client would or reasonably might affect his professional judgment with respect to his representation of that client. In re Quiat, 979 P.2d 1029 (Colo. 1999).

Violation of paragraph (B) where attorney knew, when he accepted employment in connection with his client's bankruptcy, that he could be a witness by virtue of his interests in the general and limited partnerships that were assets of the bankruptcy estate, and by his failure to transfer the partnership interests to his client's children prior to the filing of the bankruptcy. A lawyer cannot act as an advocate on behalf of his client and yet give testimony adverse to the interests of that client in the same proceeding. Riley v. District Court, 181 Colo. 90, 507 P.2d 464 (1973).

Prosecution subpoena of accused's attorney may stand. A prosecutorial subpoena served on a criminal defendant's attorney can withstand a motion to quash only if the prosecution shows the following: (1) Defense counsel's testimony will be actually adverse to the accused; (2) the evidence will likely be admissible at trial; and (3) there is a compelling need for the evidence which cannot be satisfied from another source. Williams v. District Court, 700 P.2d 549 (Colo. 1985).

The act of subpoenaing defense counsel is itself the functional equivalent of a motion to disqualify. Williams v. District Court, 700 P.2d 549 (Colo. 1985).

Test applied in Rodriquez v. District Court, 719 P.2d 699 (Colo. 1986).

Paragraph (A) of this rule relates to potential testimony of a lawyer during the trial of a matter for which he is presently employed. People v. Rubanowitz, 688 P.2d 231 (Colo. 1984).

When deputy district attorney was endorsed as witness for prosecution, disqualification of deputy district attorney was proper, and disqualification of entire staff of county district attorney's office, under the circumstances, was not an abuse of discretion. People v. Garcia, 698 P.2d 801 (Colo. 1985).

Dismissal of charge is not an appropriate remedy. People v. Garcia, 698 P.2d 801 (Colo. 1985).

Motion to disqualify must set forth specific facts which point to a clear danger that either prejudices counsel's client or his adversary. People ex rel. Woodard v. District Court, 704 P.2d 851 (Colo. 1985).

Paragraph (B) does not provide a tool for disqualifying counsel by the mere stratagem of suggesting that opposing counsel may be called as a witness during the trial. People ex rel. Woodard v. District Court, 704 P.2d 851 (Colo. 1985).

Although the Code mandates that an attorney withdraw on the attorney's own initiative if the attorney violates paragraph (B), there are no provisions in this rule for the trial court to disqualify attorneys and this rule does not require a new trial if the attorney does not withdraw. Although plaintiff's attorneys testified for the defendant, the court found that plaintiff was bound by his counsel's decision not to withdraw and refused to grant plaintiff a new trial. Taylor v. Grogan, 900 P.2d 60 (Colo. 1995).

Attorney, with power to act as trustee, who obtains a loan from the trust through the actual trustee, but does not disclose conflict and does not discuss security for the loan with the actual trustee, violates this section. People v. Tanquary, 831 P.2d 889 (Colo. 1992).

Public censure appropriate for lawyer who failed to make full disclosure to client of their differing interests prior to obtaining her consent for a loan to the lawyer. People v. Potter, 966 P.2d 1061 (Colo. 1998).

An attorney's conduct in lending money to a client, preparing a promissory note with an excessive interest rate, and failing to fully disclose his differing interest in the business transaction constitutes conduct violating this rule. People v. Ginsberg, 967 P.2d 151 (Colo. 1998).

Exploiting a client's friendship and trust to extort funds for one's personal use is reprehensible conduct deserving of disbarment. People v. McMahill, 782 P.2d 336 (Colo. 1988).

Lawyer's encouragement of a client to enter into a business transaction with said lawyer in which the two had differing interests and lawyer's failure to disclose relevant facts warrant disbarment. People v. Martinez, 739 P.2d 838 (Colo. 1987), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 1054, 108 S. Ct. 1003, 98 L. Ed. 2d 970 (1988); People v. Score, 760 P.2d 1111 (Colo. 1988).

Conduct violating this rule sufficient to justify suspension. People v. Vernon, 660 P.2d 879 (Colo. 1982); People v. Foster, 716 P.2d 1069 (Colo. 1986).

An attorney's conduct in borrowing money from his former clients and in failing to record deeds of trust on their behalf to be used as security constitutes professional misconduct and justifies his suspension. People v. Brackett, 667 P.2d 1357 (Colo. 1983).

An attorney's failure to disclose to his clients that he was a lender and holder of a long-term mortgage on their property and that his interests in the transaction were necessarily adverse to their interests constitutes conduct violating this rule sufficient to justify suspension. People v. Nutt, 696 P.2d 242 (Colo. 1984).

Intent of rule is to guarantee the independence of counsel from the conflicting interests of other clients in order to preserve the integrity of the attorney's adversary role. Allen v. District Court, 184 Colo. 202, 519 P.2d 351 (1974).

Genuine conflicts of interest must be scrupulously avoided. Allen v. District Court, 184 Colo. 202, 519 P.2d 351 (1974); McCall v. District Court, 783 P.2d 1223 (Colo. 1989).

It is of the utmost importance that an attorney's loyalty to his client not be diminished, fettered, or threatened in any manner by his loyalty to another client. Allen v. District Court, 184 Colo. 202, 519 P.2d 351 (1974); Watson v. District Court, 199 Colo. 76, 604 P.2d 1165 (1980).

Conflict arises where parties would be opposed in subsequent contribution action. Where litigants in a negligence action are represented by the same attorneys, a conflict of interest arises if the plaintiff are considered opposing parties in the same action for purposes of a subsequent contribution action, because both parties would want to place a higher degree of fault on the other party. Nat'l Farmers Union Prop. & Gas. Co. v. Frackelton, 662 P.2d 1056 (Colo. 1983).

Whenever a motion to withdraw is filed on the grounds that a conflict of interest may exist or may arise in the future, the trial judge must conduct a hearing to determine if a conflict of interest, or a potential conflict of interest, requires that counsel withdraw, and if, from the facts presented at the hearing, it appears that a substantial conflict of interest exists, or will in all probability arise in the course of counsel's representation, the motion to withdraw should be granted. Allen v. District Court, 184 Colo. 202, 519 P.2d 351 (1974); McCall v. District Court, 783 P.2d 1223 (Colo. 1989).

Consent of all parties may be insufficient. There are certain factual situations where the conflicts of interests between parties are so critically adverse to one another so as not to permit the representation of multiple parties by an attorney, even with the consent of all parties made after full disclosure. In re King Res. Co., 20 B.R. 191 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1982).

Attorney should evaluate potential for impropriety. The attorney should not only inform the parties of the former representations, but should evaluate for himself, as well as for his client, any potential for impropriety that might arise. In re King Res. Co., 20 B.R. 191 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1982); People v. Belina, 765 P.2d 121 (Colo. 1988).

It must be "obvious" that attorney can adequately represent clients. The general rule that a lawyer may represent clients with potentially conflicting interests with the consent of the clients is qualified in that it must be ''obvious'' that he can adequately do so. In re King Res. Co., 20 B.R. 191 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1982); People v. Chew, 830 P.2d 488 (Colo. 1992).

Attorney may represent individual officer of client corporation. When an individual director or officer of a corporation seeks representation from an attorney hired by the corporation, the attorney may serve the individual only if the lawyer is convinced that differing interests are not present. In re King Res. Co., 20 B.R. 191 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1982).

Knowledge of one attorney must be imputed to lawyers with whom he practices. Osborn v. District Court, 619 P.2d 41 (Colo. 1980).

Imputed disqualification applies to public law firm. The same rule of imputed disqualification stated in subdivision (D) of this rule may be considered in determining the ethical standards for disqualification of a public law firm, such as a district attorney. People v. Garcia, 698 P.2d 801 (Colo. 1985); McCall v. District Court, 783 P.2d 1223 (Colo. 1989).

Rule of imputed disqualification applies to public defenders. Allen v. District Court, 519 P.2d 351 (Colo. 1974); McCall v. District Court, 783 P.2d 1223 (Colo. 1989).

Due to imputed disqualification, appellate division of state public defender's office must be permitted to withdraw from representing on appeal a defendant who claims ineffective counsel provided by local deputy public defender. McCall v. District Court, 783 P.2d 1223 (Colo. 1989).

Disqualification of district attorney's office required where two former district attorneys are witnesses on contested issues in case. Pease v. District Court, 708 P.2d 800 (Colo. 1985).

Trial dates accepted should be honored before withdrawal from employment. When a public defender or a busy defense lawyer finds that his representation of one client is inimical to his representation of another client and he must make an election as to the client he will represent, he has a heavy duty to the court to see that he honors dates that he has agreed to for the trial of a case. Watson v. District Court, 199 Colo. 76, 604 P.2d 1165 (1980).

Attorney's compensation may be denied. Where an attorney is shown to represent more than one party with conflicting interests, a court may deny him all compensation under a retainer agreement. In re King Res. Co., 20 B.R. 191 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1982).

Continued representation of clients with conflicting interests violates this rule and warrants discipline. People v. Awenius, 653 P.2d 740 (Colo. 1982).

Public censure is generally appropriate when a lawyer is negligent in determining whether the representation of a client will adversely affect another client, causing injury or potential injury to a client. Attorney's representation of two estates where the beneficiaries of the estates have conflicting interests and the attorney fails to obtain waivers from the beneficiaries violates this rule. People v. Gebauer, 821 P.2d 782 (Colo. 1991).

Public censure was appropriate where attorney simultaneously represented one client in automobile accident case and another client, who was involved in the automobile accident, in a bankruptcy proceeding without listing the accident client as a creditor of the bankruptcy client, and where aggravating factors existed. People v. Gonzales, 922 P.2d 933 (Colo. 1996).

Public censure warranted where attorney entered into compensated consulting agreement with law firm to which he referred client's cases, without full disclosure of agreement to client. People v. Mulvihill, 814 P.2d 805 (Colo. 1991).

An attorney is not always precluded from representing a client in a transaction with a former or currently inactive client. Whether an attorney properly may do so depends upon the nature and extent of the former legal work performed for the previous client as well as the possible relationship between the two transactions. Crystal Homes, Inc. v. Radetsky, 895 P.2d 1179 (Colo. App. 1995).

Evidence sufficient to justify suspension from the practice of law. People v. Belfor, 197 Colo. 223, 591 P.2d 585 (1979); People v. Foster, 716 P.2d 1069 (Colo. 1986).

Three-month suspension appropriate for violation of DR 5-105 (A) and (B) and DR 5-101 (B). The interests of the client and the client's wife, from whom the client was then separated, were so adverse, or potentially adverse, that the conflicts could not be waived even had there been full disclosure. As such, it was not obvious that the attorney could represent the client, the client's estranged wife, and their children in the client's bankruptcy proceedings. Because the attorney knew of the conflicts involved when he undertook the multiple representation, a short period of suspension is warranted, but not the requirement of reinstatement proceedings. In re Quiat, 979 P.2d 1029 (Colo. 1999).

Forty-five-day suspension appropriate for violation of this rule where pattern of misconduct and multiple offenses are factors in aggravation. People v. Chew, 830 P.2d 488 (Colo. 1992).

Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules is sufficient to justify public censure. People v. Odom, 829 P.2d 855 (Colo. 1992); People v. Stevens, 883 P.2d 21 (Colo. 1994); People v. Vsetecka, 893 P.2d 1309 (Colo. 1995); People v. Wollrab, 909 P.2d 1093 (Colo. 1996).

Public censure appropriate where attorney represented buyer and seller of restaurant and did not properly advise the buyer or protect the buyer's interest. People v. Odom, 829 P.2d 855 (Colo. 1992).

Conduct violating this rule sufficient to justify public censure. People v. Gebauer, 821 P.2d 782 (Colo. 1991).

Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules is sufficient to justify suspension. People v. Lopez, 796 P.2d 957 (Colo. 1990); People v. Rule 1.8. Conflict of Interest; Current Clients; Specific Rules

(a) A lawyer shall not enter into a business transaction with a client or knowingly acquire an ownership, possessory, security or other pecuniary interest adverse to a client unless:

(1) the transaction and terms on which the lawyer acquires the interest are fair and reasonable to the client and are fully disclosed and transmitted in writing in a manner that can be reasonably understood by the client;

(2) the client is advised in writing of the desirability of seeking and is given a reasonable opportunity to seek the advice of independent legal counsel on the transaction; and

(3) the client gives informed consent, in a writing signed by the client, to the essential terms of the transaction and the lawyer's role in the transaction, including whether the lawyer is representing the client in the transaction.

(b) A lawyer shall not use information relating to representation of a client to the disadvantage of the client unless the client gives informed consent, except as permitted or required by these Rules.

(c) A lawyer shall not solicit any substantial gift from a client, including a testamentary gift, or prepare on behalf of a client an instrument giving the lawyer or a person related to the lawyer any substantial gift unless the lawyer or other recipient of the gift is related to the client. For purposes of this paragraph, related persons include a spouse, child, grandchild, parent, grandparent or other relative or individual with whom the lawyer or the client maintains a close, familial relationship.

(d) Prior to the conclusion of representation of a client, a lawyer shall not make or negotiate an agreement giving the lawyer literary or media rights to a portrayal or account based in substantial part on information relating to the representation.

(e) A lawyer shall not provide financial assistance to a client in connection with pending or contemplated litigation, except that:

(1) a lawyer may advance court costs and expenses of litigation, the repayment of which may be contingent on the outcome of the matter; and

(2) a lawyer representing an indigent client may pay court costs and expenses of litigation on behalf of the client.

(f) A lawyer shall not accept compensation for representing a client from one other than the client unless:

(1) the client gives informed consent;

(2) there is no interference with the lawyer's independence of professional judgment or with the client-lawyer relationship; and

(3) information relating to representation of a client is protected as required by Rule 1.6.

(g) A lawyer who represents two or more clients shall not participate in making an aggregate settlement of the claims of or against the clients, or in a criminal case an aggregated agreement as to guilty or nolo contendere pleas, unless each client gives informed consent, in a writing signed by the client. The lawyer's disclosure shall include the existence and nature of all the claims or pleas involved and of the participation of each person in the settlement.

(h) A lawyer shall not:

(1) make an agreement prospectively limiting the lawyer's liability to a client for malpractice unless the client is independently represented in making the agreement; or

(2) settle a claim or potential claim for such liability with an unrepresented client or former client unless that person is advised in writing of the desirability of seeking and is given a reasonable opportunity to seek the advice of independent legal counsel in connection therewith.

(i) A lawyer shall not acquire a proprietary interest in the cause of action or subject matter of litigation the lawyer is conducting for a client, except that the lawyer may:

(1) acquire a lien authorized by law to secure the lawyer's fee or expenses; and

(2) contract with a client for a reasonable contingent fee in a civil case.

(j) A lawyer shall not have sexual relations with a client unless a consensual sexual relationship existed between them when the client-lawyer relationship commenced.

(k) While lawyers are associated in a firm, a prohibition in the foregoing paragraphs (b) through (i) that applies to any one of them shall apply to all of them.

COMMENT

Business Transactions Between Client and Lawyer

[1] A lawyer's legal skill and training, together with the relationship of trust and confidence between lawyer and client, create the possibility of overreaching when the lawyer participates in a business, property or financial transaction with a client, for example, a loan or sales transaction or a lawyer investment on behalf of a client. The requirements of paragraph (a) must be met even when the transaction is not closely related to the subject matter of the representation, as when a lawyer drafting a will for a client learns that the client needs money for unrelated expenses and offers to make a loan to the client. The Rule applies to lawyers engaged in the sale of goods or services related to the practice of law, for example, the sale of title insurance or investment services to existing clients of the lawyer's legal practice. See Rule 5.7. It also applies to lawyers purchasing property from estates they represent. It does not apply to ordinary fee arrangements between client and lawyer, which are governed by Rule 1.5, although its requirements must be met when the lawyer accepts an interest in the client's business or other nonmonetary property as payment of all or part of a fee. In addition, the Rule does not apply to standard commercial transactions between the lawyer and the client for products or services that the client generally markets to others, for example, banking or brokerage services, medical services, products manufactured or distributed by the client, and utilities' services. In such transactions, the lawyer has no advantage in dealing with the client, and the restrictions in paragraph (a) are unnecessary and impracticable.

[2] Paragraph (a)(1) requires that the transaction itself be fair to the client and that its essential terms be communicated to the client, in writing, in a manner that can be reasonably understood. Paragraph (a)(2) requires that the client also be advised, in writing, of the desirability of seeking the advice of independent legal counsel. It also requires that the client be given a reasonable opportunity to obtain such advice. Paragraph (a)(3) requires that the lawyer obtain the client's informed consent, in a writing signed by the client, both to the essential terms of the transaction and to the lawyer's role. When necessary, the lawyer should discuss both the material risks of the proposed transaction, including any risk presented by the lawyer's involvement, and the existence of reasonably available alternatives and should explain why the advice of independent legal counsel is desirable. See Rule 1.0(e) (definition of informed consent).

[3] The risk to a client is greatest when the client expects the lawyer to represent the client in the transaction itself or when the lawyer's financial interest otherwise poses a significant risk that the lawyer's representation of the client will be materially limited by the lawyer's financial interest in the transaction. Here the lawyer's role requires that the lawyer must comply, not only with the requirements of paragraph (a), but also with the requirements of Rule 1.7. Under that Rule, the lawyer must disclose the risks associated with the lawyer's dual role as both legal adviser and participant in the transaction, such as the risk that the lawyer will structure the transaction or give legal advice in a way that favors the lawyer's interests at the expense of the client. Moreover, the lawyer must obtain the client's informed consent. In some cases, the lawyer's interest may be such that Rule 1.7 will preclude the lawyer from seeking the client's consent to the transaction.

[4] If the client is independently represented in the transaction, paragraph (a)(2) of this Rule is inapplicable, and the paragraph (a)(1) requirement for full disclosure is satisfied either by a written disclosure by the lawyer involved in the transaction or by the client's independent counsel. The fact that the client was independently represented in the transaction is relevant in determining whether the agreement was fair and reasonable to the client as paragraph (a)(1) further requires.

Use of Information Related to Representation

[5] Use of information relating to the representation to the disadvantage of the client violates the lawyer's duty of loyalty. Paragraph (b) applies when the information is used to benefit either the lawyer or a third person, such as another client or business associate of the lawyer. For example, if a lawyer learns that a client intends to purchase and develop several parcels of land, the lawyer may not use that information to purchase one of the parcels in competition with the client or to recommend that another client make such a purchase. The Rule does not prohibit uses that do not disadvantage the client. For example, a lawyer who learns a government agency's interpretation of trade legislation during the representation of one client may properly use that information to benefit other clients. Paragraph (b) prohibits disadvantageous use of client information unless the client gives informed consent, except as permitted or required by these Rules. See Rules 1.2(d), 1.6, 1.9(c), 3.3, 4.1(b), 8.1 and 8.3.

Gifts to Lawyers

[6] A lawyer may accept a gift from a client, if the transaction meets general standards of fairness. For example, a simple gift such as a present given at a holiday or as a token of appreciation is permitted. If a client offers the lawyer a more substantial gift, paragraph (c) does not prohibit the lawyer from accepting it, although such a gift may be voidable by the client under the doctrine of undue influence, which treats client gifts as presumptively fraudulent. In any event, due to concerns about overreaching and imposition on clients, a lawyer may not suggest that a substantial gift be made to the lawyer or for the lawyer's benefit, except where the lawyer is related to the client as set forth in paragraph (c).

[7] If effectuation of a substantial gift requires preparing a legal instrument such as a will or conveyance the client should have the detached advice that another lawyer can provide. The sole exception to this Rule is where the client is a relative of the donee.

[8] This Rule does not prohibit a lawyer from seeking to have the lawyer or a partner or associate of the lawyer named as executor of the client's estate or to another potentially lucrative fiduciary position. Nevertheless, such appointments will be subject to the general conflict of interest provision in Rule 1.7 when there is a significant risk that the lawyer's interest in obtaining the appointment will materially limit the lawyer's independent professional judgment in advising the client concerning the choice of an executor or other fiduciary. In obtaining the client's informed consent to the conflict, the lawyer should advise the client concerning the nature and extent of the lawyer's financial interest in the appointment, as well as the availability of alternative candidates for the position.

Literary Rights

[9] An agreement by which a lawyer acquires literary or media rights concerning the conduct of the representation creates a conflict between the interests of the client and the personal interests of the lawyer. Measures suitable in the representation of the client may detract from the publication value of an account of the representation. Paragraph (d) does not prohibit a lawyer representing a client in a transaction concerning literary property from agreeing that the lawyer's fee shall consist of a share in ownership in the property, if the arrangement conforms to Rule 1.5 and paragraphs (a) and (i).

Financial Assistance

[10] Lawyers may not subsidize law suits or administrative proceedings brought on behalf of their clients, including making or guaranteeing loans to their clients for living expenses, because to do so would encourage clients to pursue law suits that might not otherwise be brought and because such assistance gives lawyers too great a financial stake in the litigation. These dangers do not warrant a prohibition on a lawyer lending a client court costs and litigation expenses, including the expenses of medical examination and the costs of obtaining and presenting evidence, because these advances are virtually indistinguishable from contingent fees and help ensure access to the courts. Similarly, an exception allowing lawyers representing indigent clients to pay court costs and litigation expenses regardless of whether these funds will be repaid is warranted.

Person Paying for a Lawyer's Services

[11] Lawyers are frequently asked to represent a client under circumstances in which a third person will compensate the lawyer, in whole or in part. The third person might be a relative or friend, an indemnitor (such as a liability insurance company) or a co-client (such as a corporation sued along with one or more of its employees). Because third-party payers frequently have interests that differ from those of the client, including interests in minimizing the amount spent on the representation and in learning how the representation is progressing, lawyers are prohibited from accepting or continuing such representations unless the lawyer determines that there will be no interference with the lawyer's independent professional judgment and there is informed consent from the client. See also Rule 5.4(c) (prohibiting interference with a lawyer's professional judgment by one who recommends, employs or pays the lawyer to render legal services for another).

[12] Sometimes, it will be sufficient for the lawyer to obtain the client's informed consent regarding the fact of the payment and the identity of the third-party payer. If, however, the fee arrangement creates a conflict of interest for the lawyer, then the lawyer must comply with Rule 1.7. The lawyer must also conform to the requirements of Rule 1.6 concerning confidentiality. Under Rule 1.7(a), a conflict of interest exists if there is significant risk that the lawyer's representation of the client will be materially limited by the lawyer's own interest in the fee arrangement or by the lawyer's responsibilities to the third-party payer (for example, when the third-party payer is a co-client). Under Rule 1.7(b), the lawyer may accept or continue the representation with the informed consent of each affected client, unless the conflict is nonconsentable under that paragraph. Under Rule 1.7(b), the informed consent must be confirmed in writing.

Aggregate Settlements

[13] Differences in willingness to make or accept an offer of settlement are among the risks of common representation of multiple clients by a single lawyer. Under Rule 1.7, this is one of the risks that should be discussed before undertaking the representation, as part of the process of obtaining the clients' informed consent. In addition, Rule 1.2(a) protects each client's right to have the final say in deciding whether to accept or reject an offer of settlement and in deciding whether to enter a guilty or nolo contendere plea in a criminal case. The rule stated in this paragraph is a corollary of both these Rules and provides that, before any settlement offer or plea bargain is made or accepted on behalf of multiple clients, the lawyer must inform each of them about all the material terms of the settlement, including what the other clients will receive or pay if the settlement or plea offer is accepted. See also Rule 1.0(e) (definition of informed consent). Lawyers representing a class of plaintiffs or defendants, or those proceeding derivatively, may not have a full client-lawyer relationship with each member of the class; nevertheless, such lawyers must comply with applicable rules regulating notification of class members and other procedural requirements designed to ensure adequate protection of the entire class.

Limiting Liability and Settling Malpractice Claims

[14] Agreements prospectively limiting a lawyer's liability for malpractice are prohibited unless the client is independently represented in making the agreement because they are likely to undermine competent and diligent representation. Also, many clients are unable to evaluate the desirability of making such an agreement before a dispute has arisen, particularly if they are then represented by the lawyer seeking the agreement. This paragraph does not, however, prohibit a lawyer from entering into an agreement with the client to arbitrate legal malpractice claims, provided such agreements are enforceable and the client is fully informed of the scope and effect of the agreement. Nor does this paragraph limit the ability of lawyers to practice in the form of a limited-liability entity, where permitted by law, provided that each lawyer remains personally liable to the client for his or her own conduct and the firm complies with any conditions required by law, such as provisions requiring client notification or maintenance of adequate liability insurance. Nor does it prohibit an agreement in accordance with Rule 1.2 that defines the scope of the representation, although a definition of scope that makes the obligations of representation illusory will amount to an attempt to limit liability.

[15] Agreements settling a claim or a potential claim for malpractice are not prohibited by this Rule. Nevertheless, in view of the danger that a lawyer will take unfair advantage of an unrepresented client or former client, the lawyer must first advise such a person in writing of the appropriateness of independent representation in connection with such a settlement. In addition, the lawyer must give the client or former client a reasonable opportunity to find and consult independent counsel.

Acquiring Proprietary Interest in Litigation

[16] Paragraph (i) states the traditional general rule that lawyers are prohibited from acquiring a proprietary interest in litigation. Like paragraph (e), the general rule has its basis in common law champerty and maintenance and is designed to avoid giving the lawyer too great an interest in the representation. In addition, when the lawyer acquires an ownership interest in the subject of the representation, it will be more difficult for a client to discharge the lawyer if the client so desires. The Rule is subject to specific exceptions developed in decisional law and continued in these Rules. The exception for certain advances of the costs of litigation is set forth in paragraph (e). In addition, paragraph (i) sets forth exceptions for liens authorized by law to secure the lawyer's fees or expenses and contracts for reasonable contingent fees. The law of each jurisdiction determines which liens are authorized by law. These may include liens granted by statute, liens originating in common law and liens acquired by contract with the client. When a lawyer acquires by contract a security interest in property other than that recovered through the lawyer's efforts in the litigation, such an acquisition is a business or financial transaction with a client and is governed by the requirements of paragraph (a). Contracts for contingent fees in civil cases are governed by Rule 1.5.

Client-Lawyer Sexual Relationships

[17] The relationship between lawyer and client is a fiduciary one in which the lawyer occupies the highest position of trust and confidence. The relationship is almost always unequal; thus, a sexual relationship between lawyer and client can involve unfair exploitation of the lawyer's fiduciary role, in violation of the lawyer's basic ethical obligation not to use the trust of the client to the client's disadvantage. In addition, such a relationship presents a significant danger that, because of the lawyer's emotional involvement, the lawyer will be unable to represent the client without impairment of the exercise of independent professional judgment. Moreover, a blurred line between the professional and personal relationships may make it difficult to predict to what extent client confidences will be protected by the attorney-client evidentiary privilege, since client confidences are protected by privilege only when they are imparted in the context of the client-lawyer relationship. Because of the significant danger of harm to client interests and because the client's own emotional involvement renders it unlikely that the client could give adequate informed consent, this Rule prohibits the lawyer from having sexual relations with a client regardless of whether the relationship is consensual and regardless of the absence of prejudice to the client.

[18] Sexual relationships that predate the client-lawyer relationship are not prohibited. Issues relating to the exploitation of the fiduciary relationship and client dependency are diminished when the sexual relationship existed prior to the commencement of the client-lawyer relationship. However, before proceeding with the representation in these circumstances, the lawyer should consider whether the lawyer's ability to represent the client will be materially limited by the relationship. See Rule 1.7(a)(2).

[19] When the client is an organization, paragraph (j) of this Rule prohibits a lawyer for the organization (whether inside counsel or outside counsel) from having a sexual relationship with a constituent of the organization who supervises, directs or regularly consults with that lawyer concerning the organization's legal matters.

Imputation of Prohibitions

[20] Under paragraph (k), a prohibition on conduct by an individual lawyer in paragraphs (b) through (i) also applies to all lawyers associated in a firm with the personally prohibited lawyer. For example, one lawyer in a firm may not solicit a substantial gift from a client of another member of the firm, even if the soliciting lawyer is not personally involved in the representation of the client, because the prohibition in paragraph (c) applies to all lawyers associated in the firm. The prohibitions set forth in paragraphs (a) and (j) are personal and are not applied to associated lawyers.

Annotator's note. Rule 1.8 is similar to Rule 1.8 as it existed prior to the 2007 repeal and readoption of the Colorado rules of professional conduct. Relevant cases construing that provision have been included in the annotations to this rule.

Although the basis of this rule is to deter common law champerty and maintenance, the scope of the rule is not limited to conduct that would constitute champerty and maintenance. People v. Mason, 938 P.2d 133 (Colo. 1997).

This rule is a source of public policy and the purpose is to protect the interests of clients. Because this rule is an ethical rule, based on public policy, where an attorney violated this rule, an oral contract between the attorney and a former client was void and unenforceable. Calvert v. Mayberry, 2016 COA 60, __ P.3d __.

A violation of this rule is per se a false representation under 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(2)(A) of the federal bankruptcy code. In re Waller, 210 B.R. 370 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1997).

Personal loan from client to attorney was not a standard commercial transaction exempt from the requirements of section (a) of this rule. In re Riebesell, 586 F.3d 782 (10th Cir. 2009).

Advancing an appellate-lawyer's fees for a client does not violate section (e). Paying another lawyer to appeal a case is an ''expense of litigation'', and, therefore, does not violate the rule against providing financial assistance to a client. Mercantile Adjustment Bureau v. Flood, 2012 CO 38, 278 P.3d 348.

Suspension for 60 days appropriate for lawyer who entered into an agreement with a client and failed to fully inform the client of the terms of the agreement in writing or obtain the client's consent to the transaction. People v. Foreman, 966 P.2d 1062 (Colo. 1998).

The presumed sanction of suspension is appropriate where the attorney knew of a conflict of interest and did not fully disclose to a client the possible effect of that conflict even though such action caused no actual harm. In re Cimino, 3 P.3d 398 (Colo. 2000).

Whether an attorney expects to be paid or not is insignificant to the issue of whether an attorney-client relationship existed. In re Cimino, 3 P.3d 398 (Colo. 2000).

The hearing panel of the former grievance committee committed harmless error by failing to consider the personal and emotional problems that an attorney was experiencing at the time of the attorney's misconduct as mitigating in determining sanctions because no medical or psychological proof of emotional problems was brought forward. In re Cimino, 3 P.3d 398 (Colo. 2000).

Suspension is generally appropriate when a lawyer knows of a conflict of interest and fails to disclose to a client the possible effect of that conflict. Respondent admittedly and knowingly failed to fully disclose to a client the possible effect of a conflict of interest and was therefore suspended from the practice of law for ninety days, stayed upon the successful completion of a one-year period of probation. People v. Fischer, 237 P.3d 645 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2010).

By acquiring promissory note and deed of trust in client's property, attorney acquired a pecuniary interest in client's property that was adverse to the client's interest. Therefore, attorney was obligated to comply with requirements of section (a). In re Fisher, 202 P.3d 1186 (Colo. 2009) (decided under rules in effect prior to 2007 repeal and readoption).

When the attorney secured a promissory note with a deed of trust in client's residence, he acquired a proprietary interest in the subject matter of the litigation in violation of former section (j) (now section (i)). In re Fisher, 202 P.3d 1186 (Colo. 2009) (decided under rules in effect prior to 2007 repeal and readoption).

Business transaction between a lawyer and a company partly owned and controlled by a client, in which the lawyer obtained a possessory interest adverse to that of the client, triggered the requirements of this rule although it was not technically a transaction between the lawyer and the client. Matter of Wollrab, 2018 CO 64, 420 P.3d 960.

An option contract is a "business transaction" within the meaning of this rule. The fact that the option related to a larger transaction that ultimately was not consummated does not alter its status. Matter of Wollrab, 2018 CO 64, 420 P.3d 960.

If the client is independently represented for purposes of the transaction, the requirement to obtain the client's informed, written consent under section (a)(3) still applies. Comment 4 discusses the applicability of sections (a)(1) and (a)(2) in this situation but does not excuse the lawyer from compliance with section (a)(3). Matter of Wollrab, 2018 CO 64, 420 P.3d 960.

Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules is sufficient to justify suspension, stayed upon completion of one-year period of probation with conditions. People v. Bendinelli, 329 P.3d 300 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2014).

Attorney's conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules is sufficient to justify six-month suspension, stayed upon completion of two-year probationary period. In re Fisher, 202 P.3d 1186

(Colo. 2009) (decided under rules in effect prior to 2007 repeal and readoption).

Attorney's conduct warrants punishment whether or not he knew conduct was improper under the rules. In re Fisher, 202 P.3d 1186 (Colo. 2009) (decided under rules in effect prior to 2007 repeal and readoption).

Conduct violating this rule in conjuntion with other disciplinary rules is sufficient to justify suspension. People v. Robinson, 853 P.2d 1145 (Colo. 1993); People v. The effect of Canon 5 is that whenever a contingent fee contract becomes a subject of litigation in the courts, the lawyer, by reason of the canon, understands that the court, under its general supervisory powers over attorneys as officers of the courts, will determine the reasonableness of the amount and will subject it to the test of quantum meruit. Brillhart v. Hudson, 169 Colo. 329, 455 P.2d 878 (1969).

However, this does not mean that the court can or should remake the contract, but rather that it should determine from all the facts and circumstances the amount of time spent, the novelty of the questions of law, and the risks of nonreturn to the client as well as to the attorney in the situation. Brillhart v. Hudson, 169 Colo. 329, 455 P.2d 878 (1969).

Where the "legal services" rendered were for the most part those which are ordinarily performed by a business chance broker, the established commission payable to such broker at the time would be considered to determine reasonableness. Brillhart v. Hudson, 169 Colo. 329, 455 P.2d 878 (1969) (shown to be 10 percent of purchase price).

Court cannot approve commission of 25 percent. In the exercise of supervisory powers over attorneys as officers of this court, the supreme court cannot approve — under the guise of a ''contingent fee'' contract for legal services — the payment of what in fact amounts to a broker's commission of 25 percent of the purchase price of the leasehold interest. Brillhart v. Hudson, 169 Colo. 329, 455 P.2d 878 (1969).

Attorney fees secured by a note which was secured by a deed of trust on property to be sold violated this rule when, upon receipt of a check at closing, the attorney was aware that he had encumbered the property in excess of his client's share of the equity. People v. Franco, 698 P.2d 230 (Colo. 1985).

Arrangement of counsel and clients in written fee agreement which assigned alleged interest in oil and gas properties in order to secure payment of legal fees did not endanger a fair trial. Trial court abused its discretion in granting a mistrial, disqualifying counsel, and assessing attorney fees. Gold Rush Invs. v. Ferrell, 778 P.2d 297 (Colo. App. 1989).

Public censure warranted where attorney kept the first lump sum check obtained in settlement as a lump sum payment of his contingency fee and reimbursement of costs even though he knew the settlement might later be reduced by the social security disability award and the client's union award. People v. Maceau, 910 P.2d 692 (Colo. 1996).

Rule 1.9. Duties to Former Clients

(a) A lawyer who has formerly represented a client in a matter shall not thereafter represent another person in the same or a substantially related matter in which that person's interests are materially adverse to the interests of the former client unless the former client gives informed consent, confirmed in writing.

(b) A lawyer shall not knowingly represent a person in the same or a substantially related matter in which a firm with which the lawyer formerly was associated had previously represented a client:

(1) whose interests are materially adverse to that person; and

(2) about whom the lawyer had acquired information protected by Rules 1.6 and 1.9(c) that is material to the matter; unless the former client gives informed consent, confirmed in writing.

(c) A lawyer who has formerly represented a client in a matter or whose present or former firm has formerly represented a client in a matter shall not thereafter:

(1) use information relating to the representation to the disadvantage of the former client except as these Rules would permit or require with respect to a client, or when the information has become generally known; or

(2) reveal information relating to the representation except as these Rules would permit or require with respect to a client.

COMMENT

[1] After termination of a client-lawyer relationship, a lawyer has certain continuing duties with respect to confidentiality and conflicts of interest and thus may not represent another client except in conformity with this Rule. Under this Rule, for example, a lawyer could not properly seek to rescind on behalf of a new client a contract drafted on behalf of the former client. So also a lawyer who has prosecuted an accused person could not properly represent the accused in a subsequent civil action against the government concerning the same transaction. Nor could a lawyer who has represented multiple clients in a matter represent one of the clients against the others in the same or a substantially related matter after a dispute arose among the clients in that matter, unless all affected clients give informed consent. See Comment [9]. Current and former government lawyers must comply with this Rule to the extent required by Rule 1.11.

[2] The scope of a ''matter'' for purposes of this Rule depends on the facts of a particular situation or transaction. The lawyer's involvement in a matter can also be a question of degree. When a lawyer has been directly involved in a specific transaction, subsequent representation of other clients with materially adverse interests in that transaction clearly is prohibited. On the other hand, a lawyer who recurrently handled a type of problem for a former client is not precluded from later representing another client in a factually distinct problem of that type even though the subsequent representation involves a position adverse to the prior client. Similar considerations can apply to the reassignment of military lawyers between defense and prosecution functions within the same military jurisdictions. The underlying question is whether the lawyer was so involved in the matter that the subsequent representation can be justly regarded as a changing of sides in the matter in question.

[3] Matters are ''substantially related'' for purposes of this Rule if they involve the same transaction or legal dispute or if there otherwise is a substantial risk that confidential factual information as would normally have been obtained in the prior representation would materially advance the client's position in the subsequent matter. For example, a lawyer who has represented a businessperson and learned extensive private financial information about that person may not then represent that person's spouse in seeking a divorce. Similarly, a lawyer who has previously represented a client in securing environmental permits to build a shopping center would be precluded from representing neighbors seeking to oppose rezoning of the property on the basis of environmental considerations; however, the lawyer would not be precluded, on the grounds of substantial relationship, from defending a tenant of the completed shopping center in resisting eviction for nonpayment of rent. Information that has been disclosed to the public or to other parties adverse to the former client ordinarily will not be disqualifying. Information acquired in a prior representation may have been rendered obsolete by the passage of time, a circumstance that may be relevant in determining whether two representations are substantially related. In the case of an organizational client, general knowledge of the client's policies and practices ordinarily will not preclude a subsequent representation; on the other hand, knowledge of specific facts gained in a prior representation that are relevant to the matter in question ordinarily will preclude such a representation. A former client is not required to reveal the confidential information learned by the lawyer in order to establish a substantial risk that the lawyer has confidential information to use in the subsequent matter. A conclusion about the possession of such information may be based on the nature of the services the lawyer provided the former client and information that would in ordinary practice be learned by a lawyer providing such services.

Lawyers Moving Between Firms

[4] When lawyers have been associated within a firm but then end their association, the question of whether a lawyer should undertake representation is more complicated. There are several competing considerations. First, the client previously represented by the former firm must be reasonably assured that the principle of loyalty to the client is not compromised. Second, the Rule should not be so broadly cast as to preclude other persons from having reasonable choice of legal counsel. Third, the Rule should not unreasonably hamper lawyers from forming new associations and taking on new clients after having left a previous association. In this connection, it should be recognized that today many lawyers practice in firms, that many lawyers to some degree limit their practice to one field or another, and that many move from one association to another several times in their careers. If the concept of imputation were applied with unqualified rigor, the result would be radical curtailment of the opportunity of lawyers to move from one practice setting to another and of the opportunity of clients to change counsel.

[5] Paragraph (b) operates to disqualify the lawyer only when the lawyer involved has actual knowledge of information protected by Rules 1.6 and 1.9(c). Thus, if a lawyer while with one firm acquired no knowledge or information relating to a particular client of the firm, and that lawyer later joined another firm, neither the lawyer individually nor the second firm is disqualified from representing another client in the same or a related matter even though the interests of the two clients conflict. See Rule 1.10(b) for the restrictions on a firm once a lawyer has terminated association with the firm.

[6] Application of paragraph (b) depends on a situation's particular facts, aided by inferences, deductions or working presumptions that reasonably may be made about the way in which lawyers work together. A lawyer may have general access to files of all clients of a law firm and may regularly participate in discussions of their affairs; it should be inferred that such a lawyer in fact is privy to all information about all the firm's clients. In contrast, another lawyer may have access to the files of only a limited number of clients and participate in discussions of the affairs of no other clients; in the absence of information to the contrary, it should be inferred that such a lawyer in fact is privy to information about the clients actually served but not those of other clients. In such an inquiry, the burden of proof should rest upon the firm whose disqualification is sought.

[7] Independent of the question of disqualification of a firm, a lawyer changing professional association has a continuing duty to preserve confidentiality of information about a client formerly represented. See Rules 1.6 and 1.9(c).

[8] Paragraph (c) provides that information acquired by the lawyer in the course of representing a client may not subsequently be used or revealed by the lawyer to the disadvantage of the client. However, the fact that a lawyer has once served a client does not preclude the lawyer from using generally known information about that client when later representing another client.

[9] The provisions of this Rule are for the protection of former clients and can be waived if the client gives informed consent, which consent must be confirmed in writing under paragraphs (a) and (b). See Rule 1.0(e). With regard to the effectiveness of an advance waiver, see Comment [22] to Rule 1.7. With regard to disqualification of a firm with which a lawyer is or was formerly associated, see Rule 1.10.

The party seeking disqualification under this rule must provide the court with specific facts to show that disqualification is necessary and he cannot rely on speculation or conjecture. FDIC v. Sierra Res., Inc., 682 F. Supp. 1167 (D. Colo. 1987); Funplex Partnership v. FDIC, 19 F. Supp. 2d 1202 (D. Colo. 1998).

Specifically, the moving party must show that: (1) An attorney-client relationship existed in the past; (2) the present litigation involves a matter that is ''substantially related'' to the prior litigation; (3) the present client's interests are materially adverse to the former client's interests; and (4) the former client has not consented to the disputed representation after consultation. English Feedlot, Inc. v. Norden Lab., Inc., 833 F. Supp. 1498 (D. Colo. 1993); Funplex Partnership v. FDIC, 19 F. Supp. 2d 1202 (D. Colo. 1998).

Substantiality is present if the factual contexts of the two representations are similar or related. English Feedlot, Inc. v. Norden Lab., Inc., 833 F. Supp. 1498 (D. Colo. 1993); Cole v. Ruidoso Municipal Sch., 43 F.3d 1373 (10th Cir. 1994); Funplex Partnership v. FDIC, 19 F. Supp. 2d 1202 (D. Colo. 1998).

A motion to disqualify under section (a) will rarely, if ever, raise an ''identical'' issue to a disqualification motion in another case because the analysis under section (a) of whether the prior and current matters are substantially related will differ in each case. Villas at HP, H.A. v. Villas at HP, LLC, 2017 CO 53, 394 P.3d 1144.

Trial court abused its discretion by disqualifying petitioner's retained counsel of choice in a criminal proceeding. The record was insufficient to support a finding that the parties' interests were materially adverse. People v. Hoskins, 2014 CO 70, 333 P.3d 828.

Trial court abused its discretion in relying on issue preclusion to deny the disqualification motion instead of conducting the requisite analysis under section (a). Villas at HP, H.A. v. Villas at HP, LLC, 2017 CO 53, 394 P.3d 1144-1159.

Attorney's former representation of the alternate suspect in criminal case prohibited him from representing the criminal defendant where the cases were substantially related because the murder victim in the present case was the informant in the former client's case. People ex rel. Peters v. District Court, 951 P.2d 926 (Colo. 1998).

An attorney needs only to receive consent from his or her former client to represent a new client when the matter the attorney represented the former client in is substantially related to the representation of the new client. The two matters are ''substantially related'' when they involve the same transaction or legal dispute or if there is substantial risk that confidential factual information as would be normally be obtained by defense counsel in prior representation would materially advance the position of the new client in the current proceeding. The record does not support a finding that there was a substantial risk that confidential factual information as would be normally be obtained by defense counsel in prior representation would materially advance the position of the new client in the current proceeding. People v. Frisco, 119 P.3d 1093 (Colo. 2005).

Applied in English Feedlot, Inc. v. Norden Laboratories, Inc., 833 F. Supp. 1498 (D. Colo. 1993).

Rule 1.10. Imputation of Conflicts of Interest: General Rule

(a) While lawyers are associated in a firm, none of them shall knowingly represent a client when any one of them practicing alone would be prohibited from doing so by Rules 1.7 or 1.9, unless the prohibition is based on a personal interest of the prohibited lawyer and does not present a significant risk of materially limiting the representation of the client by the remaining lawyers in the firm.

(b) When a lawyer has terminated an association with a firm, the firm is not prohibited from thereafter representing a person with interests materially adverse to those of a client represented by the formerly associated lawyer and not currently represented by the firm, unless:

(1) the matter is the same or substantially related to that in which the formerly associated lawyer represented the client; and

(2) any lawyer remaining in the firm has information protected by Rules 1.6 and 1.9(c) that is material to the matter.

(c) A disqualification prescribed by this Rule may be waived by the affected client under the conditions stated in Rule 1.7.

(d) The disqualification of lawyers associated in a firm with former or current government lawyers is governed by Rule 1.11.

(e) When a lawyer becomes associated with a firm, no lawyer associated in the firm shall knowingly represent a person in a matter in which that lawyer is disqualified under Rule 1.9 unless:

(1) the matter is not one in which the personally disqualified lawyer substantially participated;

(2) the personally disqualified lawyer is timely screened from any participation in the matter and is apportioned no part of the fee therefrom;

(3) the personally disqualified lawyer gives prompt written notice (which shall contain a general description of the personally disqualified lawyer's prior representation and the screening procedures to be employed) to the affected former clients and the former clients' current lawyers, if known to the personally disqualified lawyer, to enable the former clients to ascertain compliance with the provisions of this Rule; and

(4) the personally disqualified lawyer and the partners of the firm with which the personally disqualified lawyer is now associated reasonably believe that the steps taken to accomplish the screening of material information are likely to be effective in preventing material information from being disclosed to the firm and its client.

COMMENT

GENERAL RULE

Definition of "Firm"

[1] For purposes of the Rules of Professional Conduct, the term ''firm'' denotes lawyers in a law partnership, professional corporation, sole proprietorship or other association authorized to practice law; or lawyers employed in a legal services organization or the legal department of a corporation or other organization. See Rule 1.0(c). Whether two or more lawyers constitute a firm within this definition can depend on the specific facts. See Rule 1.0, Comments [2] - [4].

Principles of Imputed Disqualification

[2] The rule of imputed disqualification stated in paragraph (a) gives effect to the principle of loyalty to the client as it applies to lawyers who practice in a law firm. Such situations can be considered from the premise that a firm of lawyers is essentially one lawyer for purposes of the rules governing loyalty to the client, or from the premise that each lawyer is vicariously bound by the obligation of loyalty owed by each lawyer with whom the lawyer is associated. Paragraph (a) operates only among the lawyers currently associated in a firm. When a lawyer moves from one firm to another, the situation is governed by Rules 1.9(b) and 1.10(b).

[3] The rule in paragraph (a) does not prohibit representation where neither questions of client loyalty nor protection of confidential information are presented. Where one lawyer in a firm could not effectively represent a given client because of strong political beliefs, for example, but that lawyer will do no work on the case and the personal beliefs of the lawyer will not materially limit the representation by others in the firm, the firm should not be disqualified. On the other hand, if an opposing party in a case were owned by a lawyer in the law firm, and others in the firm would be materially limited in pursuing the matter because of loyalty to that lawyer, the personal disqualification of the lawyer would be imputed to all others in the firm.

[4] The rule in paragraph (a) also does not prohibit representation by others in the law firm where the person prohibited from involvement in a matter is a nonlawyer, such as a paralegal or legal secretary. Nor does paragraph (a) prohibit representation if the lawyer is prohibited from acting because of events before the person became a lawyer, for example, work that the person did while a law student. Such persons, however, ordinarily must be screened from any personal participation in the matter to avoid communication to others in the firm of confidential information that both the nonlawyers and the firm have a legal duty to protect. See Rules 1.0(k) and 5.3.

[5] Rule 1.10(b) operates to permit a law firm, under certain circumstances, to represent a person with interests directly adverse to those of a client represented by a lawyer who formerly was associated with the firm. The Rule applies regardless of when the formerly associated lawyer represented the client. However, the law firm may not represent a person with interests adverse to those of a present client of the firm, which would violate Rule 1.7. Moreover, the firm may not represent the person where the matter is the same or substantially related to that in which the formerly associated lawyer represented the client and any other lawyer currently in the firm has material information protected by Rules 1.6 and 1.9(c).

[6] Rule 1.10(c) removes imputation with the informed consent of the affected client or former client under the conditions stated in Rule 1.7. The conditions stated in Rule 1.7 require the lawyer to determine that the representation is not prohibited by Rule 1.7(b) and that each affected client or former client has given informed consent to the representation, confirmed in writing. In some cases, the risk may be so severe that the conflict may not be cured by client consent. For a discussion of the effectiveness of client waivers of conflicts that might arise in the future, see Rule 1.7, Comment [22]. For a definition of informed consent, see Rule 1.0(e).

[7] Where a lawyer has joined a private firm after having represented the government, imputation is governed by Rule 1.11(b) and (c), not this Rule. Under Rule 1.11(d), where a lawyer represents the government after having served clients in private practice, nongovernmental employment or in another government agency, former-client conflicts are not imputed to government lawyers associated with the individually disqualified lawyer.

[8] Where a lawyer is prohibited from engaging in certain transactions under Rule 1.8, paragraph (k) of that Rule, and not this Rule, determines whether that prohibition also applies to other lawyers associated in a firm with the personally prohibited lawyer.

The purpose of this rule and rule 1.9 is to protect a client's confidential communications with his attorney. Funplex Partnership v. FDIC, 19 F. Supp. 2d 1202 (D. Colo. 1998).

The rule of imputed disqualification can be considered from the premise that a firm of attorneys is essentially one attorney for purposes of the rules governing loyalty to the client, or from the premise that each attorney is vicariously bound by the obligation of loyalty owed by each lawyer in the firm. Rule 1.11. Special Conflicts of Interest for Former and Current Government Officers and Employees

(a) Except as law may otherwise expressly permit, a lawyer who has formerly served as a public officer or employee of the government:

(1) is subject to Rule 1.9(c); and

(2) shall not otherwise represent a client in connection with a matter in which the lawyer participated personally and substantially as a public officer or employee, unless the appropriate government agency gives its informed consent, confirmed in writing, to the representation.

(b) When a lawyer is disqualified from representation under paragraph (a), no lawyer in a firm with which that lawyer is associated may knowingly undertake or continue representation in such a matter unless:

(1) the disqualified lawyer is timely screened from any participation in the matter and is apportioned no part of the fee therefrom; and

(2) the personally disqualified lawyer gives prompt written notice (which shall contain a general description of the personally disqualified lawyer's prior participation in the matter and the screening procedures to be employed), to the government agency to enable the government agency to ascertain compliance with the provisions of this Rule; and

(3) the personally disqualified lawyer and the partners of the firm with which the personally disqualified lawyer is now associated, reasonably believe that the steps taken to accomplish the screening of material information are likely to be effective in preventing material information from being disclosed to the firm and its client.

(c) Except as law may otherwise expressly permit, a lawyer having information that the lawyer knows is confidential government information about a person acquired when the lawyer was a public officer or employee, may not represent a private client whose interests are adverse to that person in a matter in which the information could be used to the material disadvantage of that person. As used in this Rule, the term ''confidential government information'' means information that has been obtained under governmental authority and which, at the time this Rule is applied, the government is prohibited by law from disclosing to the public or has a legal privilege not to disclose and which is not otherwise available to the public. A firm with which that lawyer is associated may undertake or continue representation in the matter only if the disqualified lawyer is timely screened from any participation in the matter and is apportioned no part of the fee therefrom.

(d) Except as law may otherwise expressly permit, a lawyer currently serving as a public officer or employee:

(1) is subject to Rules 1.7 and 1.9; and

(2) shall not:

(i) participate in a matter in which the lawyer participated personally and substantially while in private practice or nongovernmental employment, unless the appropriate government agency gives its informed consent, confirmed in writing; or

(ii) negotiate for private employment with any person who is involved as a party or as lawyer for a party in a matter in which the lawyer is participating personally and substantially, except that a lawyer serving as a law clerk to a judge, other adjudicative officer or arbitrator may negotiate for private employment as permitted by Rule 1.12(b) and subject to the conditions stated in Rule 1.12(b).

(e) As used in this Rule, the term ''matter'' includes:

(1) any judicial or other proceeding, application, request for a ruling or other determination, contract, claim, controversy, investigation, charge, accusation, arrest or other particular matter involving a specific party or parties, and

(2) any other matter covered by the conflict of interest rules of the appropriate government agency.

COMMENT

[1] A lawyer who has served or is currently serving as a public officer or employee is personally subject to the Rules of Professional Conduct, including the prohibition against concurrent conflicts of interest stated in Rule 1.7. In addition, such a lawyer may be subject to statutes and government regulations regarding conflict of interest. Such statutes and regulations may circumscribe the extent to which the government agency may give consent under this Rule. See Rule 1.0(e) for the definition of informed consent.

[2] Paragraphs (a)(1), (a)(2) and (d)(1) restate the obligations of an individual lawyer who has served or is currently serving as an officer or employee of the government toward a former government or private client. Rule 1.10 is not applicable to the conflicts of interest addressed by this Rule. Rather, paragraph (b) sets forth a special imputation rule for former government lawyers that provides for screening and notice. Because of the special problems raised by imputation within a government agency, paragraph (d) does not impute the conflicts of a lawyer currently serving as an officer or employee of the government to other associated government officers or employees, although ordinarily it will be prudent to screen such lawyers.

[3] Paragraphs (a)(2) and (d)(2) apply regardless of whether a lawyer is adverse to a former client and are thus designed not only to protect the former client, but also to prevent a lawyer from exploiting public office for the advantage of another client. For example, a lawyer who has pursued a claim on behalf of the government may not pursue the same claim on behalf of a later private client after the lawyer has left government service, except when authorized to do so by the government agency under paragraph (a). Similarly, a lawyer who has pursued a claim on behalf of a private client may not pursue the claim on behalf of the government, except when authorized to do so by paragraph (d). As with paragraphs (a)(1) and (d)(1), Rule 1.10 is not applicable to the conflicts of interest addressed by these paragraphs.

[4] This Rule represents a balancing of interests. On the one hand, where the successive clients are a government agency and another client, public or private, the risk exists that power or discretion vested in that agency might be used for the special benefit of the other client. A lawyer should not be in a position where benefit to the other client might affect performance of the lawyer's professional functions on behalf of the government. Also, unfair advantage could accrue to the other client by reason of access to confidential government information about the client's adversary obtainable only through the lawyer's government service. On the other hand, the rules governing lawyers presently or formerly employed by a government agency should not be so restrictive as to inhibit transfer of employment to and from the government. The government has a legitimate need to attract qualified lawyers as well as to maintain high ethical standards. Thus a former government lawyer is disqualified only from particular matters in which the lawyer participated personally and substantially. The provisions for screening and waiver in paragraph (b) are necessary to prevent the disqualification rule from imposing too severe a deterrent against entering public service. The limitation of disqualification in paragraphs (a)(2) and (d)(2) to matters involving a specific party or parties, rather than extending disqualification to all substantive issues on which the lawyer worked, serves a similar function.

[5] When a lawyer has been employed by one government agency and then moves to a second government agency, it may be appropriate to treat that second agency as another client for purposes of this Rule, as when a lawyer is employed by a city and subsequently is employed by a federal agency. However, because the conflict of interest is governed by paragraph (d), the latter agency is not required to screen the lawyer as paragraph (b) requires a law firm to do. The question of whether two government agencies should be regarded as the same or different clients for conflict of interest purposes is beyond the scope of these Rules. See Rule 1.13 Comment [6].

[6] Paragraphs (b) and (c) contemplate a screening arrangement. See Rule 1.0(k) (requirements for screening procedures). These paragraphs do not prohibit a lawyer from receiving a salary or partnership share established by prior independent agreement, but that lawyer may not receive compensation directly relating the lawyer's compensation to the fee in the matter in which the lawyer is disqualified.

[7] Notice, including a description of the screened lawyer's prior representation and of the screening procedures employed, generally should be given as soon as practicable after the need for screening becomes apparent.

[8] Paragraph (c) operates only when the lawyer in question has knowledge of the information, which means actual knowledge; it does not operate with respect to information that merely could be imputed to the lawyer.

[9] Paragraphs (a) and (d) do not prohibit a lawyer from jointly representing a private party and a government agency when doing so is permitted by Rule 1.7 and is not otherwise prohibited by law.

[10] For purposes of paragraph (e) of this Rule, a ''matter'' may continue in another form. In determining whether two particular matters are the same, the lawyer should consider the extent to which the matters involve the same basic facts, the same or related parties, and the time elapsed.

Trial court abused its discretion in disqualifying entire state public defender's office from representing defendant where no direct conflict of interest existed because neither individual public defender representing defendant was involved in prior representation of witnesses, potential conflicts that may have existed with regard to other public defenders within the statewide office could not be imputed under this rule to individuals representing defendant, and defendant knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily waived any conflict. Rule 1.12. Former Judge, Arbitrator, Mediator or Other Third-party Neutral

(a) Except as stated in paragraph (d), a lawyer shall not represent anyone in connection with a matter in which the lawyer participated personally and substantially as a judge or other adjudicative officer or law clerk to such a person or as an arbitrator, mediator or other third-party neutral, unless all parties to the proceeding give informed consent, confirmed in writing.

(b) A lawyer shall not negotiate for employment with any person who is involved as a party or as lawyer for a party in a matter in which the lawyer is participating personally and substantially as a judge or other adjudicative officer or as an arbitrator, mediator or other third-party neutral. A lawyer serving as a law clerk to a judge or other adjudicative officer may negotiate for employment with a party or lawyer involved in a matter in which the clerk is participating personally and substantially, but only after the lawyer has notified the judge or other adjudicative officer.

(c) If a lawyer is disqualified by paragraph (a), no lawyer in a firm with which that lawyer is associated may knowingly undertake or continue representation in the matter unless:

(1) the disqualified lawyer is timely screened from any participation in the matter and is apportioned no part of the fee therefrom; and

(2) the personally disqualified lawyer gives prompt written notice (which shall contain a general description of the personally disqualified lawyer's prior participation in the matter and the screening procedures to be employed), to the parties and any appropriate tribunal, to enable the parties and the tribunal to ascertain compliance with the provisions of this Rule; and

(3) the personally disqualified lawyer and the partners of the firm with which the personally disqualified lawyer is now associated, reasonably believe that the steps taken to accomplish the screening of material information are likely to be effective in preventing material information from being disclosed to the firm and its client.

(d) An arbitrator selected as a partisan of a party in a multimember arbitration panel is not prohibited from subsequently representing that party.

COMMENT

[1] This Rule generally parallels Rule 1.11. The term ''personally and substantially'' signifies that a judge who was a member of a multimember court, and thereafter left judicial office to practice law, is not prohibited from representing a client in a matter pending in the court, but in which the former judge did not participate. So also the fact that a former judge exercised administrative responsibility in a court does not prevent the former judge from acting as a lawyer in a matter where the judge had previously exercised remote or incidental administrative responsibility that did not affect the merits. Compare the Comment to Rule 1.11. The term ''adjudicative officer'' includes such officials as judges pro tempore, referees, special masters, hearing officers and other parajudicial officers, and also lawyers who serve as part-time judges. Paragraph III(B) of the Application Section of the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct provides that a part-time judge ''shall not act as a lawyer in a proceeding in which the judge has served as a judge or in any other proceeding related thereto.'' Rule 2.11(A)(5)(a) of the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct requires a judge to disqualify himself or herself in a proceeding in which the judge served as a lawyer in the matter in controversy, or the judge was associated with a lawyer who participated substantially as a lawyer in the matter during such association. Although phrased differently from this Rule, those Rules correspond in meaning.

[2] Like former judges, lawyers who have served as arbitrators, mediators or other third-party neutrals may be asked to represent a client in a matter in which the lawyer participated personally and substantially. This Rule forbids such representation unless all of the parties to the proceedings give their informed consent, confirmed in writing. See Rule 1.0(b) and (e). Other law or codes of ethics governing third-party neutrals may impose more stringent standards of personal or imputed disqualification. See Rule 2.4.

[3] Although lawyers who serve as third-party neutrals do not have information concerning the parties that is protected under Rule 1.6, they typically owe the parties an obligation of confidentiality under law or codes of ethics governing third-party neutrals. Thus, paragraph (c) provides that conflicts of the personally disqualified lawyer will be imputed to other lawyers in a law firm unless the conditions of this paragraph are met.

[4] Requirements for screening procedures are stated in Rule 1.0(k). Paragraph (c) (1) does not prohibit the screened lawyer from receiving a salary or partnership share established by prior independent agreement, but that lawyer may not receive compensation directly related to the matter in which the lawyer is disqualified.

[5] Notice, including a description of the screened lawyer's prior representation and of the screening procedures employed, generally should be given as soon as practicable after the need for screening becomes apparent.

Rule 1.13. Organization as Client

(a) A lawyer employed or retained by an organization represents the organization acting through its duly authorized constituents.

(b) If a lawyer for an organization knows that an officer, employee or other person associated with the organization is engaged in action, intends to act or refuses to act in a matter related to the representation that is a violation of a legal obligation to the organization, or a violation of law that reasonably might be imputed to the organization, and is likely to result in substantial injury to the organization, the lawyer shall proceed as is reasonably necessary in the best interest of the organization. Unless the lawyer reasonably believes that it is not necessary in the best interest of the organization to do so, the lawyer shall refer the matter to higher authority in the organization, including, if warranted by the circumstances, to the highest authority that can act on behalf of the organization as determined by applicable law.

(c) Except as provided in paragraph (d), if

(1) despite the lawyer's efforts in accordance with paragraph (b) the highest authority that can act on behalf of the organization insists upon or fails to address in a timely and appropriate manner an action, or a refusal to act, that is clearly a violation of law, and

(2) the lawyer reasonably believes that the violation is reasonably certain to result in substantial injury to the organization, then the lawyer may reveal information relating to the representation whether or not Rule 1.6 permits such disclosure, but only if and to the extent the lawyer reasonably believes necessary to prevent substantial injury to the organization.

(d) Paragraph (c) shall not apply with respect to the information relating to a lawyer's representation of an organization to investigate an alleged violation of law, or to defend the organization or an officer, employee or other constituent associated with the organization against a claim arising out of an alleged violation of law.

(e) A lawyer who reasonably believes that he or she has been discharged because of the lawyer's actions taken pursuant to paragraph (b) or (c), or who withdraws under circumstances that require or permit the lawyer to take action under either of those paragraphs, shall proceed as the lawyer reasonably believes necessary to assure that the organization's highest authority is informed of the lawyer's discharge or withdrawal.

(f) In dealing with an organization's directors, officers, employees, members, shareholders or other constituents, a lawyer shall explain the identity of the client when the lawyer knows or reasonably should know that the organization's interests are adverse to those of the constituents with whom the lawyer is dealing.

(g) A lawyer representing an organization may also represent any of its directors, officers, employees, members, shareholders or other constituents, subject to the provisions of Rule 1.7. If the organization's consent to the dual representation is required by Rule 1.7, the consent shall be given by an appropriate official of the organization other than the individual who is to be represented, or by the shareholders.

COMMENT

The Entity as the Client

[1] An organizational client is a legal entity, but it cannot act except through its officers, directors, employees, shareholders and other constituents. Officers, directors, employees and shareholders are the constituents of the corporate organizational client. The duties defined in this Comment apply equally to unincorporated associations. "Other constituents" as used in this Comment means the positions equivalent to officers, directors, employees and shareholders held by persons acting for organizational clients that are not corporations.

[2] When one of the constituents of an organizational client communicates with the organization's lawyer in that person's organizational capacity, the communication is protected by Rule 1.6. Thus, by way of example, if an organizational client requests its lawyer to investigate allegations of wrongdoing, interviews made in the course of that investigation between the lawyer and the client's employees or other constituents are covered by Rule 1.6. This does not mean, however, that constituents of an organizational client are the clients of the lawyer. The lawyer may not disclose to such constituents information relating to the representation except for disclosures explicitly or impliedly authorized by the organizational client in order to carry out the representation or as otherwise permitted by Rule 1.6.

[3] When constituents of the organization make decisions for it, the decisions ordinarily must be accepted by the lawyer even if their utility or prudence is doubtful. Decisions concerning policy and operations, including ones entailing serious risk, are not as such in the lawyer's province. Paragraph (b) makes clear, however, that, when the lawyer knows that the organization is likely to be substantially injured by action of an officer or other constituent that violates a legal obligation to the organization or is in violation of law that might be imputed to the organization, the lawyer must proceed as is reasonably necessary in the best interest of the organization. As defined in Rule 1.0(f), knowledge can be inferred from circumstances, and a lawyer cannot ignore the obvious.

[4] In determining how to proceed under paragraph (b), the lawyer should give due consideration to the seriousness of the violation and its consequences, the responsibility in the organization and the apparent motivation of the person involved, the policies of the organization concerning such matters, and any other relevant considerations. Ordinarily, referral to a higher authority would be necessary. In some circumstances, however, it may be appropriate for the lawyer to ask the constituent to reconsider the matter; for example, if the circumstances involve a constituent's innocent misunderstanding of law and subsequent acceptance of the lawyer's advice, the lawyer may reasonably conclude that the best interest of the organization does not require that the matter be referred to higher authority. If a constituent persists in conduct contrary to the lawyer's advice, it will be necessary for the lawyer to take steps to have the matter reviewed by a higher authority in the organization. If the matter is of sufficient seriousness and importance or urgency to the organization, referral to higher authority in the organization may be necessary even if the lawyer has not communicated with the constituent. Any measures taken should, to the extent practicable, minimize the risk of revealing information relating to the representation to persons outside the organization. Even in circumstances where a lawyer is not obligated by Rule 1.13 to proceed, a lawyer may bring to the attention of an organizational client, including its highest authority, matters that the lawyer reasonably believes to be of sufficient importance to warrant doing so in the best interest of the organization.

[5] Paragraph (b) also makes clear that when it is reasonably necessary to enable the organization to address the matter in a timely and appropriate manner, the lawyer must refer the matter to higher authority, including, if warranted by the circumstances, the highest authority that can act on behalf of the organization under applicable law. The organization's highest authority to whom a matter may be referred ordinarily will be the board of directors or similar governing body. However, applicable law may prescribe that under certain conditions the highest authority reposes elsewhere, for example, in the independent directors of a corporation.

Relation to Other Rules

[6] The authority and responsibility provided in this Rule are concurrent with the authority and responsibility provided in other Rules. In particular, this Rule does not limit or expand the lawyer's responsibility under Rules 1.8, 1.16, 3.3 or 4.1. Paragraph (c) of this Rule supplements Rule 1.6(b) by providing an additional basis upon which the lawyer may reveal information relating to the representation, but does not modify, restrict, or limit the provisions of Rule 1.6(b)(1) - (7). Under paragraph (c) the lawyer may reveal such information only when the organization's highest authority insists upon or fails to address threatened or ongoing action that is clearly a violation of law, and then only to the extent the lawyer reasonably believes necessary to prevent reasonably certain substantial injury to the organization. It is not necessary that the lawyer's services be used in furtherance of the violation, but it is required that the matter be related to the lawyer's representation of the organization. If the lawyer's services are being used by an organization to further a crime or fraud by the organization, Rules 1.6(b)(2), 1.6(b)(3) and 1.6(b)(4) may permit the lawyer to disclose confidential information. In such circumstances Rule 1.2(d) may also be applicable, in which event, withdrawal from the representation under Rule 1.16(a)(1) may be required.

[7] Paragraph (d) makes clear that the authority of a lawyer to disclose information relating to a representation in circumstances described in paragraph (c) does not apply with respect to information relating to a lawyer's engagement by an organization to investigate an alleged violation of law or to defend the organization or an officer, employee or other person associated with the organization against a client arising out of an alleged violation of law. This is necessary in order to enable organizational clients to enjoy the full benefits of legal counsel in conducting an investigation or defending against a claim.

[8] A lawyer who reasonably believes that he or she has been discharged because of the lawyer's actions taken pursuant to paragraph (b) or (c), or who withdraws in circumstances that require or permit the lawyer to take action under either of these paragraphs, must proceed as the lawyer reasonably believes necessary to assure that the organization's highest authority is informed of the lawyer's discharge or withdrawal.

Government Agency

[9] The duty defined in this Rule applies to governmental organizations. Defining precisely the identity of the client and prescribing the resulting obligations of such lawyers may be more difficult in the government context and is a matter beyond the scope of these Rules. See Scope [18]. Although in some circumstances the client may be a specific agency, it may also be a branch of government, such as the executive branch, or the government as a whole. For example, if the action or failure to act involves the head of a bureau, either the department of which the bureau is a part or the relevant branch of government may be the client for purposes of this Rule. Moreover, in a matter involving the conduct of government officials, a government lawyer may have authority under applicable law to question such conduct more extensively than that of a lawyer for a private organization in similar circumstances. Thus, when the client is a governmental organization, a different balance may be appropriate between maintaining confidentiality and assuring that the wrongful act is prevented or rectified, for public business is involved. In addition, duties of lawyers employed by the government or lawyers in military service may be defined by statutes and regulation. This Rule does not limit that authority. See Scope.

Clarifying the Lawyer's Role

[10] There are times when the organization's interest may be or become adverse to those of one or more of its constituents. In such circumstances the lawyer should advise any constituent, whose interest the lawyer finds adverse to that of the organization of the conflict or potential conflict of interest, that the lawyer cannot represent such constituent, and that such person may wish to obtain independent representation. Care must be taken to assure that the individual understands that, when there is such adversity of interest, the lawyer for the organization cannot provide legal representation for that constituent individual, and that discussions between the lawyer for the organization and the individual may not be privileged.

[11] Whether such a warning should be given by the lawyer for the organization to any constituent individual may turn on the facts of each case.

Dual Representation

[12] Paragraph (g) recognizes that a lawyer for an organization may also represent a principal officer or major shareholder.

Derivative Actions

[13] Under generally prevailing law, the shareholders or members of a corporation may bring suit to compel the directors to perform their legal obligations in the supervision of the organization. Members of unincorporated associations have essentially the same right. Such an action may be brought nominally by the organization, but usually is, in fact, a legal controversy over management of the organization.

[14] The question can arise whether counsel for the organization may defend such an action. The proposition that the organization is the lawyer's client does not alone resolve the issue. Most derivative actions are a normal incident of an organization's affairs, to be defended by the organization's lawyer like any other suit. However, if the claim involves serious charges of wrongdoing by those in control of the organization, a conflict may arise between the lawyer's duty to the organization and the lawyer's relationship with the board. In those circumstances, Rule 1.7 governs who should represent the directors and the organization.

Rule 1.14. Client with Diminished Capacity

(a) When a client's capacity to make adequately considered decisions in connection with a representation is diminished, whether because of minority, mental impairment or for some other reason, the lawyer shall, as far as reasonably possible, maintain a normal client-lawyer relationship with the client.

(b) When the lawyer reasonably believes that the client has diminished capacity, is at risk of substantial physical, financial or other harm unless action is taken and cannot adequately act in the client's own interest, the lawyer may take reasonably necessary protective action, including consulting with individuals or entities that have the ability to take action to protect the client and, in appropriate cases, seeking the appointment of a guardian ad litem, conservator or guardian.

(c) Information relating to the representation of a client with diminished capacity is protected by Rule 1.6. When taking protective action pursuant to paragraph (b), the lawyer is impliedly authorized under Rule 1.6(a) to reveal information about the client, but only to the extent reasonably necessary to protect the client's interests.

COMMENT

[1] The normal client-lawyer relationship is based on the assumption that the client, when properly advised and assisted, is capable of making decisions about important matters. When the client is a minor or suffers from a diminished mental capacity, however, maintaining the ordinary client-lawyer relationship may not be possible in all respects. In particular, a severely incapacitated person may have no power to make legally binding decisions. Nevertheless, a client with diminished capacity often has the ability to understand, deliberate upon, and reach conclusions about matters affecting the client's own well-being. For example, children as young as five or six years of age, and certainly those of ten or twelve, are regarded as having opinions that are entitled to weight in legal proceedings concerning their custody. So also, it is recognized that some persons of advanced age can be quite capable of handling routine financial matters while needing special legal protection concerning major transactions.

[2] The fact that a client suffers a disability does not diminish the lawyer's obligation to treat the client with attention and respect. Even if the person has a legal representative, the lawyer should as far as possible accord the represented person the status of client, particularly in maintaining communication.

[3] The client may wish to have family members or other persons participate in discussions with the lawyer. When necessary to assist in the representation, the presence of such persons generally does not affect the applicability of the attorney-client evidentiary privilege. Nevertheless, the lawyer must keep the client's interests foremost and, except for protective action authorized under paragraph (b), must to look to the client, and not family members, to make decisions on the client's behalf.

[4] If a legal representative has already been appointed for the client, the lawyer should ordinarily look to the representative for decisions on behalf of the client. In matters involving a minor, whether the lawyer should look to the parents as natural guardians may depend on the type of proceeding or matter in which the lawyer is representing the minor. If the lawyer represents the guardian as distinct from the ward, and is aware that the guardian is acting adversely to the ward's interest, the lawyer may have an obligation to prevent or rectify the guardian's misconduct. See Rule 1.2(d).

Taking Protective Action

[5] If a lawyer reasonably believes that a client is at risk of substantial physical, financial or other harm unless action is taken, and that a normal client-lawyer relationship cannot be maintained as provided in paragraph (a) because the client lacks sufficient capacity to communicate or to make adequately considered decisions in connection with the representation, then paragraph (b) permits the lawyer to take protective measures deemed necessary. Such measures could include: consulting with family members, using a reconsideration period to permit clarification or improvement of circumstances, using voluntary surrogate decision making tools such as durable powers of attorney or consulting with support groups, professional services, adult-protective agencies or other individuals or entities that have the ability to protect the client. In taking any protective action, the lawyer should be guided by such factors as the wishes and values of the client to the extent known, the client's best interests and the goals of intruding into the client's decision making autonomy to the least extent feasible, maximizing client capacities and respecting the client's family and social connections.

[6] In determining the extent of the client's diminished capacity, the lawyer should consider and balance such factors as: the client's ability to articulate reasoning leading to a decision, variability of state of mind and ability to appreciate consequences of a decision; the substantive fairness of a decision; and the consistency of a decision with the known long-term commitments and values of the client. In appropriate circumstances, the lawyer may seek guidance from an appropriate diagnostician.

[7] If a legal representative has not been appointed, the lawyer should consider whether appointment of a guardian ad litem, conservator or guardian is necessary to protect the client's interests. Thus, if a client with diminished capacity has substantial property that should be sold for the client's benefit, effective completion of the transaction may require appointment of a legal representative. In addition, rules of procedure in litigation sometimes provide that minors or persons with diminished capacity must be represented by a guardian or next friend if they do not have a general guardian. In many circumstances, however, appointment of a legal representative may be more expensive or traumatic for the client than circumstances in fact require. Evaluation of such circumstances is a matter entrusted to the professional judgment of the lawyer. In considering alternatives, however, the lawyer should be aware of any law that requires the lawyer to advocate the least restrictive action on behalf of the client.

Disclosure of the Client's Condition

[8] Disclosure of the client's diminished capacity could adversely affect the client's interests. For example, raising the question of diminished capacity could, in some circumstances, lead to proceedings for involuntary commitment. Information relating to the representation is protected by Rule 1.6. Therefore, unless authorized to do so, the lawyer may not disclose such information. When taking protective action pursuant to paragraph (b), the lawyer is impliedly authorized to make the necessary disclosures, even when the client directs the lawyer to the contrary. Nevertheless, given the risks of disclosure, paragraph (c) limits what the lawyer may disclose in consulting with other individuals or entities or seeking the appointment of a legal representative. At the very least, the lawyer should determine whether it is likely that the person or entity consulted with will act adversely to the client's interests before discussing matters related to the client. The lawyer's position in such cases is an unavoidably difficult one.

Emergency Legal Assistance

[9] In an emergency where the health, safety or a financial interest of a person with seriously diminished capacity is threatened with imminent and irreparable harm, a lawyer may take legal action on behalf of such a person even though the person is unable to establish a client-lawyer relationship or to make or express considered judgments about the matter, when the person or another acting in good faith on that person's behalf has consulted with the lawyer. Even in such an emergency, however, the lawyer should not act unless the lawyer reasonably believes that the person has no other lawyer, agent or other representative available. The lawyer should take legal action on behalf of the person only to the extent reasonably necessary to maintain the status quo or otherwise avoid imminent and irreparable harm. A lawyer who undertakes to represent a person in such an exigent situation has the same duties under these Rules as the lawyer would with respect to a client.

[10] A lawyer who acts on behalf of a person with seriously diminished capacity in an emergency should keep the confidences of the person as if dealing with a client, disclosing them only to the extent necessary to accomplish the intended protective action. The lawyer should disclose to any tribunal involved and to any other counsel involved the nature of his or her relationship with the person. The lawyer should take steps to regularize the relationship or implement other protective solutions as soon as possible. Normally, a lawyer would not seek compensation for such emergency actions taken.

Annotator's note. Rule 1.14 is similar to Rule 1.14 as it existed prior to the 2007 repeal and readoption of the Colorado rules of professional conduct. Relevant cases construing that provision have been included in the annotations to this rule.

When a substantial question exists regarding the mental competence of a spouse in a domestic relations proceeding, the preferred procedure is for the trial court to conduct a hearing to determine whether or not the spouse is competent, so that a guardian ad litem may be appointed if needed. In re Sorensen, 166 P.3d 254 (Colo. App. 2007).

Because wife's second attorney was allowed to simply withdraw the motion filed by wife's first attorney for the appointment of a guardian ad litem for his client, and because a factual question clearly existed regarding the wife's ability to understand the nature of the proceedings and direct counsel, trial court was required to hold an evidentiary hearing on the issue of wife's competency. In re Sorensen, 166 P.3d 254 (Colo. App. 2007).

The presence of a third party during attorney-client communications will ordinarily destroy the attorney-client privilege unless the third party's presence is reasonably necessary to the consultation. Fox v. Alfini, 2018 CO 94, 432 P.3d 596.

The presence of the client's parents at the client's consultation with her attorney was not reasonably necessary to the client's communication with the attorney where there was evidence that the client did not have diminished capacity to the extent necessitating the presence of her parents to assist her in the communication. Rule 1.15. Safekeeping Property

Repealed and readopted as Rules 1.15A - 1.15E, effective June 17, 2014.

Rule 1.15A. General Duties of Lawyers Regarding Property of Clients and Third Parties

(a) A lawyer shall hold property of clients or third persons that is in the lawyer's possession in connection with a representation separate from the lawyer's own property. Funds shall be kept in trust accounts maintained in compliance with Rule 1.15B. Other property shall be appropriately safeguarded. Complete records of such funds and other property of clients or third parties shall be kept by the lawyer in compliance with Rule 1.15D.

(b) Upon receiving funds or other property of a client or third person, a lawyer shall, promptly or otherwise as permitted by law or by agreement with the client or third person, deliver to the client or third person any funds or other property that the client or third person is entitled to receive and, promptly upon request by the client or third person, render a full accounting regarding such property.

(c) When in connection with a representation a lawyer is in possession of property in which two or more persons (one of whom may be the lawyer) claim interests, the property shall be kept separate by the lawyer until there is a resolution of the claims and, when necessary, a severance of their interests. If a dispute arises concerning their respective interests, the portion in dispute shall be kept separate by the lawyer until the dispute is resolved. The lawyer shall promptly distribute all portions of the property as to which the interests are not in dispute.

(d) The provisions of Rule 1.15B, Rule 1.15C, Rule 1.15D, and Rule 1.15E apply to funds and other property, and to accounts, held or maintained by the lawyer, or caused by the lawyer to be held or maintained by a law firm through which the lawyer renders legal services, in connection with a representation.

COMMENT

Note: The following six comments are applicable to this Rule 1.15A and to Rule 1.15B, Rule 1.15C, Rule 1.15D, and Rule 1.15E.

[1] Trust accounts containing funds of clients or third persons held in connection with a representation must be interest-bearing or dividend-paying for the benefit of the clients or third persons or, if the funds are nominal in amount or expected to be held for a short period of time, for the benefit of the Colorado Lawyer Trust Account Foundation (''COLTAF''). A lawyer should exercise good faith judgment in determining initially whether funds are of such nominal amount or are expected to be held by the lawyer for such a short period of time that the funds should not be placed in an interest-bearing account for the benefit of the client or third person. The lawyer should also consider such other factors as (i) the costs of establishing and maintaining the account, service charges, accounting fees, and tax report procedures; (ii) the nature of the transaction(s) involved; and (iii) the likelihood of delay in the relevant proceedings. A lawyer should review at reasonable intervals whether changed circumstances require further action respecting the deposit of such funds, including without limitation the action described in paragraph 1.15B(i).

[2] If a lawyer or law firm participates in Interest on Lawyer Trust Account (''IOLTA'') programs in more than one jurisdiction, including Colorado, IOLTA funds that the lawyer or law firm holds in connection with the practice of law in Colorado should be held in the lawyer or law firm's COLTAF account (as defined in Rule 1.15B(2)(b)). The lawyer or law firm should exercise good faith judgment in determining which IOLTA funds it holds in connection with the practice of law in Colorado.

[3] Lawyers often receive funds from third parties from which the lawyer's fee will be paid. If there is risk that the client may divert funds without paying the fee, the lawyer is not required to remit the portion from which the fee is to be paid. However, a lawyer may not hold funds to coerce a client into accepting the lawyer's contention. The disputed portion of the funds should be kept in trust and the lawyer should suggest means for prompt resolution of the dispute, such as arbitration. The undisputed portion of the funds should be promptly distributed.

[4] Third parties, such as a client's creditors, may have just claims against funds or other property in a lawyer's custody. A lawyer may have a duty under applicable law to protect such third-party claims against wrongful interference by the client, and accordingly may refuse to surrender the property to the client. However, a lawyer should not unilaterally assume to arbitrate a dispute between the client and the third party.

[5] The obligations of a lawyer under this Rule are independent of those arising from activity other than rendering legal services. For example, a lawyer who serves as an escrow agent is governed by the applicable law relating to fiduciaries even though the lawyer does not render legal services in the transaction. See Rule 1.16(d) for standards applicable to retention of client papers.

[6] The duty to keep separate from the lawyer's own property any property in which any other person claims an interest exists whether or not there is a dispute as to ownership of the property. Likewise, although the second sentence of Rule 1.15A(c) deals specifically with disputed ownership, the first sentence of that provision applies even if there is no dispute as to ownership.

[7] What constitutes ''reasonable efforts,'' within the meaning of Colo. RPC 1.15B(k), will depend on whether the lawyer does not know the identity of the owner of certain funds held in a COLTAF account, or the lawyer knows the identity of the owner of the funds but not the owner's location or the location of a deceased owner's heirs or personal representative. When the lawyer does not know the identity of the owner of the funds or a deceased owner's heirs or personal representative, reasonable efforts include an audit of the COLTAF account to determine how and when the funds lost their association to a particular owner or owners, and whether they constitute attorneys' fees earned by the lawyer or expenses to be reimbursed to the lawyer or a third person. When the lawyer knows the identity but not the location of the owner of the funds or the location of the owner's heirs or personal representative, reasonable efforts include attempted contact using last known contact information, reviewing the file to identify and contact third parties who may know the location of the owner or the owner's heirs or personal representative, and conducting internet searches. After making reasonable but unsuccessful efforts to identify and locate the owner of the funds or the owner's heirs or personal representative, a lawyer's decision to continue to hold funds in a COLTAF or other trust account, as opposed to remitting the funds to COLTAF, does not relieve the lawyer of the obligation to maintain records pursuant to Rule 1.15D(a)(1)(A) or to determine whether it is appropriate to maintain the funds in a COLTAF account, as opposed to a non-COLTAF trust account, pursuant to Colo. RPC 1.15B(b). When COLTAF has made a refund to a lawyer following the lawyer's determination of the identity and the location of their owner or the identity and location of the owner's heirs or personal representative, the lawyer's obligations with respect to those funds are set forth in Colo. RPC 1.15A or are subject to applicable probate procedures or orders. The disposition of unclaimed funds held in the COLTAF account of a deceased lawyer is to be determined in accordance with written procedures published by COLTAF.

Annotator's note. The following annotations include cases decided under former provisions similar to this rule.

Supreme court has made the underlying ethical principle of this rule explicit: An attorney earns a fee only when the attorney provides a benefit or service to the client. In re Sather, 3 P.3d 403 (Colo. 2000).

Under this rule, all client funds, including engagement retainers, advance fees, flat fees, lump sum fees, etc., must be held in trust until there is a basis on which to conclude that the attorney "earned" the fee. In re Sather, 3 P.3d 403 (Colo. 2000).

This rule requires that attorneys segregate client funds, including those paid as advance fees, from the attorney's property; however, this holding is made prospective. In re Sather, 3 P.3d 403 (Colo. 2000).

In limited circumstances, an attorney may earn a fee before performing any legal services (engagement retainers) or the attorney and client may agree that the attorney may treat advance fees as the attorney's property before the attorney earns the fees by supplying a benefit or performing a service. However, the fee agreement must clearly explain the basis for this arrangement and explain how the client's rights are protected by the arrangement. But, under either arrangement, the fees are always subject to refund if excessive or unearned and the attorney cannot communicate otherwise to a client. In re Sather, 3 P.3d 403 (Colo. 2000).

Attorneys cannot enter into "non-refundable" retainer or fee agreements. In re Sather, 3 P.3d 403 (Colo. 2000).

Failure to provide accounting with respect to fees charged and failure to return unearned fees in conjunction with neglect of civil rights suit warranted a 30-day suspension. People v. Fritsche, 849 P.2d 31 (Colo. 1993).

Although a lawyer's possession of a third party's property in a Colorado Lawyer Turst Account Foundation (COLTAF) account gives rise to ethical obligations under this rule, it does not create a fiduciary duty to the third party. Third-party medical providers could not maintain a breach of fiduciary duty tort action against a lawyer based on the lawyer's obligations as trustee of a COLTAF account, even though the medical providers were owed money held in the COLTAF account. Accident & Injury Med. Sp. v. Mintz, 2012 CO 50, 279 P.3d 658.

Supreme court's conclusion that former § 12-5-120 (now § 13-93-115) does not authorize an attorney to assert a retaining lien over a United States passport and that the attorney was therefore obligated to return the passport pursuant to C.R.C.P. 1.16(d) applies equally to section (b), which requires an attorney to return to any ''client or third person any funds or other property that the client or third person is entitled to receive . . .''. Matter of Attorney G., 2013 CO 27, 302 P.3d 248.

Public censure appropriate for failure by respondent to return clients' original tax returns in a timely manner and to inform the clients that the tax returns were in fact missing, in addition to other conduct violating rules. People v. Berkley, 858 P.2d 699 (Colo. 1993).

Public censure appropriate where attorney neglected and made misrepresentations in two separate legal matters. People v. Eagan, 902 P.2d 841 (Colo. 1995).

Public censure appropriate where the attorney filed the client's retainer in the operating account, rather than the trust account, and when the client fired the attorney and asked for a refund on the retainer, the attorney wrote the client a refund check that was returned for insufficient funds. People v. Pooley, 917 P.2d 712 (Colo. 1996).

Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules, where mitigating factors were present, warrants public censure. People v. Davis, 950 P.2d 586 (Colo. 1998).

Commingling personal and client funds in trust account and writing 45 insufficient funds checks on trust account warrants six-month suspension where court found that no clients complained about misuses of funds, all checks were eventually honored, and attorney agreed to make restitution to bank for fees and cooperated in disciplinary proceedings. Court found that 120 days would have been insufficient in light of attorney's two prior admonitions and one prior private censure. People v. Davis, 893 P.2d 775 (Colo. 1995).

Sufficient evidence that respondent converted client's funds for personal use because respondent's failure to disclose client's identity and the fee agreement warranted an adverse inference that respondent's client did not consent to respondent's use of funds. People v. McNamara, 275 P.3d 792 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2011).

Suspension for one year and one day appropriate when attorney neglected to return client files upon request. People v. Honaker, 847 P.2d 640 (Colo. 1993); People v. Fager, 925 P.2d 280 (Colo. 1996).

Suspension for one year and one day is warranted for commingling and misuse of client funds. The hearing board found that the respondent acted recklessly, rather than knowingly, in misappropriating client funds. People v. Zimmermann, 922 P.2d 325 (Colo. 1996).

Suspension for one year and one day appropriate where attorney violated paragraphs (a) and (b) by not returning or accounting for client funds held for emergencies after the clients fired the attorney and for negligently converting other client funds to the attorney's own use. People v. Johnson, 944 P.2d 524 (Colo. 1997).

Disbarment appropriate where attorney accepted fees from a number of clients prior to terminating her legal practice, failed to inform her clients of such termination, failed to refund clients' retainer fees, failed to place clients' funds in separate account, and gave clients' files to other lawyers without clients' consent. People v. Tucker, 904 P.2d 1321 (Colo. 1995).

When a lawyer accepts fees from clients and then abandons those clients while keeping their money and causing serious harm, disbarment is appropriate. People v. Steinman, 930 P.2d 596 (Colo. 1997).

Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules is sufficient to justify public censure. People v. Titoni, 893 P.2d 1322 (Colo. 1995); People v. Woodrum, 911 P.2d 640 (Colo. 1996); People v. Todd, 938 P.2d 1160 (Colo. 1997); People v. O'Donnell, 955 P.2d 53 (Colo. 1998).

Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules is sufficient to justify suspension. People v. Robinson, 853 P.2d 1145 (Colo. 1993); People v. Wechsler, 854 P.2d 217 (Colo. 1993); People v. Kerwin, 859 P.2d 895 (Colo. 1993); People v. Murray, 912 P.2d 554 (Colo. 1996); People v. Paulson, 930 P.2d 582 (Colo. 1997); People v. Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules is sufficient to justify disbarment. People v. Kelley, 840 P.2d 1068 (Colo. 1992); People v. Rule 1.15B. Account Requirements

(a) Every lawyer in private practice in this state shall maintain in the lawyer's own name, or in the name of the lawyer's law firm:

(1) A trust account or accounts, separate from any business and personal accounts and from any other fiduciary accounts that the lawyer or the law firm may maintain as executor, guardian, trustee, or receiver, or in any other fiduciary capacity, into which the lawyer shall deposit, or shall cause the law firm to deposit, all funds entrusted to the lawyer's care and any advance payment of fees that have not been earned or advance payment of expenses that have not been incurred. A lawyer shall not be required to maintain a trust account when the lawyer is not holding such funds or payments.

(2) A business account or accounts into which the lawyer shall deposit, or cause the law firm to deposit, all funds received for legal services. Each business account, as well as all deposit slips and all checks drawn thereon, shall be prominently designated as a ''business account,'' an ''office account,'' an ''operating account,'' or a ''professional account,'' or with a similarly descriptive term that distinguishes the account from a trust account and a personal account.

(b) One or more of the trust accounts may be a Colorado Lawyer Trust Account Foundation (''COLTAF'') account. A ''COLTAF account'' is a pooled trust account for funds of clients or third persons that are nominal in amount or are expected to be held for a short period of time, and as such would not be expected to earn interest or pay dividends for such clients or third persons in excess of the reasonably estimated cost of establishing, maintaining, and accounting for trust accounts for the benefit of such clients or third persons. Interest or dividends paid on a COLTAF account shall be paid to COLTAF, and the lawyer and the law firm shall have no right or claim to such interest or dividends.

(c) Each trust account, as well as all deposits slips and checks drawn thereon, shall be prominently designated as a ''trust account,'' provided that each COLTAF account shall be designated as a ''COLTAF Trust Account.'' A trust account may bear any additional descriptive designation that is not misleading.

(d) Except as provided in this paragraph (d), each trust account, including each COLTAF account, shall be maintained in a financial institution that is approved by the Regulation Counsel pursuant to Rule 1.15E. If each client and third person whose funds are in the account is informed in writing by the lawyer that Regulation Counsel will not be notified of any overdraft on the account, and with the informed consent of each such client and third person, a trust account in which interest or dividends are paid to the clients or third persons need not be in an approved institution.

(e) Each trust account, including each COLTAF account, shall be an interest- bearing, or dividend-paying, insured depository account; provided that, with the informed consent of each client or third person whose funds are in the account, an account in which interest or dividends are paid to clients or third persons need not be an insured depository account. For the purpose of this provision, an ''insured depository account'' shall mean a government insured account at a regulated financial institution, on which withdrawals or transfers can be made on demand, subject only to any notice period which the financial institution is required to reserve by law or regulation.

(f) The lawyer may deposit, or may cause the law firm to deposit, into a trust account funds reasonably sufficient to pay anticipated service charges or other fees for maintenance or operation of the account. Such funds shall be clearly identified in the lawyer's or law firm's records of the account.

(g) All funds entrusted to the lawyer shall be deposited in a COLTAF account unless the funds are deposited in a trust account described in paragraph (h) of this Rule. The foregoing requirement that funds be deposited in a COLTAF account does not apply in those instances where it is not feasible for the lawyer or the law firm to establish a COLTAF account for reasons beyond the control of the lawyer or law firm, such as the unavailability in the community of a financial institution that offers such an account; but in such case the funds shall be deposited in a trust account described in paragraph (h) of this Rule.

(h) If funds entrusted to the lawyer are not held in a COLTAF account, the lawyer shall deposit, or shall cause the law firm to deposit, the funds in a trust account that complies with all requirements of paragraphs (c), (d), and (e) of this Rule and for which all interest earned or dividends paid (less deductions for service charges or fees of the depository institution) shall belong to the clients or third persons whose funds have been so deposited. The lawyer and the law firm shall have no right or claim to such interest or dividends.

(i) If the lawyer or law firm discovers that funds of a client or third person have mistakenly been held in a COLTAF account in a sufficient amount or for a sufficiently long time so that interest or dividends on the funds being held in such account exceeds the reasonably estimated cost of establishing, maintaining, and accounting for a trust account for the benefit of such client or third person (including without limitation administrative costs of the lawyer or law firm, bank service charges, and costs of preparing tax reports of such income to the client or third person), the lawyer shall request, or shall cause the law firm to request, a refund from COLTAF, for the benefit of such client or third persons, of the interest or dividends in accordance with written procedures that COLTAF shall publish and make available through its website and shall provide to any lawyer or law firm upon request.

(j) Every lawyer or law firm maintaining a trust account in this state shall, as a condition thereof, be conclusively deemed to have consented to the reporting and production requirements by financial institutions mandated by Rule 1.15E and shall indemnify and hold harmless the financial institution for its compliance with such reporting and production requirement.

(k) If a lawyer discovers that the lawyer does not know the identity or the location of the owner of funds held in the lawyer's COLTAF account, or the lawyer discovers that the owner of the funds is deceased, the lawyer must make reasonable efforts to identify and locate the owner or the owner's heirs or personal representative. If, after making such efforts, the lawyer cannot determine the identity or the location of the owner, or the owner's heirs or personal representative, the lawyer must either (1) continue to hold the unclaimed funds in a COLTAF or other trust account or (2) remit the unclaimed funds to COLTAF in accordance with written procedures published by COLTAF and available through its website or upon request. A lawyer remitting unclaimed funds to COLTAF must keep a record of the remittance pursuant to Rule 1.15D(a)(1)(C). If, after remitting unclaimed funds to COLTAF, the lawyer determines both the identity and the location of the owner or the owner's heirs or personal representative, the lawyer shall request a refund for the benefit of the owner or the owner's estate, in accordance with written procedures that COLTAF shall publish and make available through its website and shall provide upon request.

Annotator's note. The following annotations include cases decided under former provisions similar to this rule.

Supreme court has made the underlying ethical principle of this rule explicit: An attorney earns a fee only when the attorney provides a benefit or service to the client. In re Sather, 3 P.3d 403 (Colo. 2000).

Under this rule, all client funds, including engagement retainers, advance fees, flat fees, lump sum fees, etc., must be held in trust until there is a basis on which to conclude that the attorney "earned" the fee. In re Sather, 3 P.3d 403 (Colo. 2000).

This rule requires that attorneys segregate client funds, including those paid as advance fees, from the attorney's property; however, this holding is made prospective. In re Sather, 3 P.3d 403 (Colo. 2000).

In limited circumstances, an attorney may earn a fee before performing any legal services (engagement retainers) or the attorney and client may agree that the attorney may treat advance fees as the attorney's property before the attorney earns the fees by supplying a benefit or performing a service. However, the fee agreement must clearly explain the basis for this arrangement and explain how the client's rights are protected by the arrangement. But, under either arrangement, the fees are always subject to refund if excessive or unearned and the attorney cannot communicate otherwise to a client. In re Sather, 3 P.3d 403 (Colo. 2000).

Attorneys cannot enter into "non-refundable" retainer or fee agreements. In re Sather, 3 P.3d 403 (Colo. 2000).

Although a lawyer's possession of a third party's property in a Colorado Lawyer Turst Account Foundation (COLTAF) account gives rise to ethical obligations under this rule, it does not create a fiduciary duty to the third party. Third-party medical providers could not maintain a breach of fiduciary duty tort action against a lawyer based on the lawyer's obligations as trustee of a COLTAF account, even though the medical providers were owed money held in the COLTAF account. Accident & Injury Med. Sp. v. Mintz, 2012 CO 50, 279 P.3d 658.

Depositing personal funds into COLTAF account, paying personal bills from that account, and then knowingly failing to respond to the investigation into the use of the account justifies 60-day suspension with conditions of reinstatement. People v. Herrick, 191 P.3d 172 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2008).

Depositing personal funds into a COLTAF account to hide personal assets from creditors supports a 90-day suspension with conditions of reinstatement. People v. Alster, 221 P.3d 1088 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2009).

Suspension for one year and one day is warranted for commingling and misuse of client funds. The hearing board found that the respondent acted recklessly, rather than knowingly, in misappropriating client funds. People v. Zimmermann, 922 P.2d 325 (Colo. 1996).

Suspension for one year and one day appropriate where attorney violated paragraphs (a) and (b) by not returning or accounting for client funds held for emergencies after the clients fired the attorney and for negligently converting other client funds to the attorney's own use. People v. Johnson, 944 P.2d 524 (Colo. 1997).

Disbarment warranted where attorney intended to convert client funds, regardless of whether attorney intended to replace the funds at some point. Even consideration of attorney's personal and emotional problems was irrelevant where attorney violated this rule by knowingly converting client funds, as well as violating several other rules of professional conduct. People v. Marsh, 908 P.2d 1115 (Colo. 1996).

Disbarment not warranted where there was mitigating evidence concerning attorney's mental and physical disabilities. Instead, the board imposed a three-year suspension with a condition for reinstatement that professional medical evidence be presented that the disabilities do not interfere with the attorney's ability to practice law. People v. Stewart, 892 P.2d 875 (Colo. 1995).

Previously disbarred attorney who violated this rule would be forced to pay restitution to clients as a condition of readmission. People v. Vigil, 945 P.2d 1385 (Colo. 1997).

Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules sufficient to justify disbarment where the attorney continued to practice law while on suspension, repeatedly neglecting his clients and failing to take reasonable steps to protect clients' interests. People v. Fager, 938 P.2d 138 (Colo. 1997).

Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules is sufficient to justify public censure. People v. Titoni, 893 P.2d 1322 (Colo. 1995); People v. Woodrum, 911 P.2d 640 (Colo. 1996); People v. Todd, 938 P.2d 1160 (Colo. 1997); People v. O'Donnell, 955 P.2d 53 (Colo. 1998).

Rule 1.15C. Use of Trust Accounts

(a) A lawyer shall not use any debit card or automated teller machine card to withdraw funds from a trust account. Cash withdrawals from trust accounts and checks drawn on trust accounts payable to ''Cash'' are prohibited. All trust account funds intended for deposit shall be deposited intact without deductions or ''cash out'' from the deposit, and the duplicate deposit slip that evidences the deposit shall be sufficiently detailed to identify each item deposited.

(b) All trust account withdrawals and transfers shall be made only by a lawyer admitted to practice law in this state or by a person supervised by such lawyer. Such withdrawals and transfers may be made only by authorized bank or wire transfer or by check payable to a named payee. Only a lawyer admitted to practice law in this state or a person supervised by such lawyer shall be an authorized signatory on a trust account.

(c) No less than quarterly, a lawyer admitted to practice law in this state or a person supervised by such a lawyer shall reconcile the trust account records both as to individual clients or other persons and in the aggregate with the bank statements issued by the bank in which the trust account is maintained.

Rule 1.15D. Required Records

(a) A lawyer shall maintain, or shall cause the lawyer's law firm to maintain, in a current status and shall retain or cause the lawyer's law firm to retain for a period of seven years after the event that they record:

(1) An appropriate record-keeping system identifying each separate person for whom the lawyer or the law firm holds funds or other property and adequately showing the following:

(A) For each trust account the date and amount of each deposit; the name and address of each payor of the funds deposited; the name and address of each person for whom the funds are held and the amount held for the person; a description of the reason for each deposit; the date and amount of each charge against the trust account and a description of the charge; the date and amount of each disbursement; and the name and address of each person to whom the disbursement is made and the amount disbursed to the person.

(B) For each item of property other than funds, the nature of the property; the date of receipt of the property; the name and address of each person from whom the property is received, the name and address of each person for whom the property is held and, if interests in the property are held by more than one person, a statement of the nature and extent of each person's interest in the property, to the extent known; a description of the reason for each receipt; the date and amount of each charge against the property and a description of the charge; the date of each delivery of the property by the lawyer; and the name and address of each person to whom the property is delivered by the lawyer.

(C) For any unclaimed funds remitted to COLTAF pursuant to Rule 1.15B(k), the name and last known address of the owner of the funds, if the owner of the funds is known; the date of death of a deceased owner if the owner of the funds is known; the efforts made to identify or locate the owner of the funds or a deceased owner's heirs or personal representative; the amount of the funds remitted; the period of time during which the funds were held in the lawyer's or law firm's COLTAF account; and the date the funds were remitted.

(2) Appropriate records of all deposits in and withdrawals from all other bank accounts maintained in connection with the lawyer's legal services, specifically identifying the date, payor, and description of each item deposited as well as the date, payee, and purpose of each disbursement;

(3) Copies of all written communications setting forth the basis or rate for the fees charged by the lawyer as required by Rule 1.5(b), and copies of all writings, if any, stating other terms of engagement for legal services;

(4) Copies of all statements to clients and third persons showing the disbursement of funds or the delivery of property to them or on their behalves;

(5) Copies of all bills issued to clients;

(6) Records showing payments to any persons, not in the lawyer's regular employ, for services rendered or performed; and

(7) Paper copies or electronic copies of all bank statements and of all canceled checks.

(b) The records required by this Rule shall be maintained in accordance with one or more of the following recognized accounting methods: the accrual method, the cash basis method, or the income tax method. All such accounting methods shall be consistently applied. Bookkeeping records may be maintained by computer provided they otherwise comply with this Rule and provided further that printed copies can be made on demand in accordance with this Rule. They shall be located at the principal Colorado office of the lawyer or of the lawyer's law firm.

(c) Upon the dissolution of a law firm, the lawyers who rendered legal services through the law firm shall make appropriate arrangements for the maintenance or disposition of records and client files in accordance with this Rule and Rule 1.16A. Upon the departure of a lawyer from a law firm, the departing lawyer and the lawyers remaining in the law firm shall make appropriate arrangements for the maintenance or disposition of records and client files in accordance with this Rule and Rule 1.16A.

(d) Any of the records required to be kept by this Rule shall be produced in response to a subpoena duces tecum issued by the Regulation Counsel in connection with proceedings pursuant to C.R.C.P. 251. When so produced, all such records shall remain confidential except for the purposes of the particular proceeding, and their contents shall not be disclosed by anyone in such a way as to violate the attorney-client privilege of the lawyer's client.

ANNOTATION

Sufficient evidence that respondent converted client's funds for personal use because respondent's failure to disclose client's identity and the fee agreement warranted an adverse inference that respondent's client did not consent to respondent's use of funds. People v. McNamara, 275 P.3d 792 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2011) (decided under rule in effect prior to 2014 repeal and readoption).

Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules is sufficient to justify suspension. People v. Snyder, 418 P.3d 550 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2018).

Rule 1.15E. Approved Institutions

(a) This Rule applies to each trust account that is subject to Rule 1.15B, other than a trust account that is maintained in other than an approved financial institution pursuant to the second sentence of Rule 1.15B(d).

(b) Each trust account shall be maintained at a financial institution that is approved by the Regulation Counsel, pursuant to the provisions and conditions contained in this Rule. The Regulation Counsel shall maintain a list of approved financial institutions, which it shall renew not less than annually. Offering a trust account or a COLTAF account is voluntary for financial institutions.

(c) The Regulation Counsel shall approve a financial institution for use for lawyers' trust accounts, including COLTAF accounts, if the financial institution files with the Regulation Counsel an agreement, in a form provided by the Regulation Counsel, with the following provisions and on the following conditions:

(1) The financial institution does business in Colorado;

(2) The financial institution agrees to report to the Regulation Counsel in the event a properly payable trust account instrument is presented against insufficient funds, irrespective of whether the instrument is honored. That agreement shall apply to all branches of the financial institution and shall not be canceled except on thirty-days' notice in writing to the Regulation Counsel.

(3) The financial institution agrees that all reports made by the financial institution shall be in the following format: (i) in the case of a dishonored instrument, the report shall be identical to the overdraft notice customarily forwarded to the depositor; (ii) in the case of an instrument that is presented against insufficient funds but that is honored, the report shall identify the financial institution, the lawyer or law firm for whom the account is maintained, the account number, the date of presentation for payment, and the date paid, as well as the amount of the overdraft created thereby. Report of a dishonored instrument shall be made simultaneously with, and within the time provided by law for, notice of dishonor, if any. If no such time is provided by law for notice of dishonor, or if the financial institution has honored an instrument presented against insufficient funds, then the report shall be made within five banking days of the date of presentation of the instrument.

(4) The financial institution agrees to cooperate fully with the Regulation Counsel and to produce any trust account records on receipt of a subpoena for the records issued by the Regulation Counsel in connection with any proceeding pursuant to C.R.C.P. 251. Nothing herein shall preclude a financial institution from charging a lawyer or law firm for the reasonable cost of producing the reports and records required by this Rule, but such charges shall not be a transaction cost to be charged against funds payable to the COLTAF program.

(5) The financial institution agrees to cooperate with the COLTAF program and shall offer a COLTAF account to any lawyer or law firm who wishes to open one.

(6) With respect to COLTAF accounts, the financial institution agrees:

(A) To remit electronically to COLTAF monthly interest or dividends, net of allowable reasonable COLTAF fees as defined in subparagraph (c)(10) of this Rule, if any; and

(B) To transmit electronically with each remittance to COLTAF a statement showing, as to each COLTAF account, the name of the lawyer or law firm on whose account the remittance is sent; the account number; the remittance period; the rate or rates of interest or dividends applied; the account balance or balances on which the interest or dividends are calculated; the amount of interest or dividends paid; the amount and type of fees, if any, deducted; the amount of net earnings remitted; and such other information as is reasonably requested by COLTAF.

(7) The financial institution agrees to pay on any COLTAF account not less than (i) the highest interest or dividend rate generally available from the financial institution on non-COLTAF accounts when the COLTAF account meets the same eligibility requirements, if any, as the eligibility requirement for non-COLTAF accounts; or (ii) the rate set forth in subparagraph (c)(9) below. In determining the highest interest or dividend rate generally available from the financial institution to its non-COLTAF customers, the financial institution may consider factors customarily considered by the financial institution when setting interest or dividend rates for its non-COLTAF accounts, including account balances, provided that such factors do not discriminate between COLTAF accounts and non-COLTAF accounts. The financial institution may choose to pay on a COLTAF account the highest interest or dividend rate generally available on its comparable non-COLTAF accounts in lieu of actually establishing and maintaining the COLTAF account in the comparable highest interest or dividend rate product.

(8) A COLTAF account may be established by a lawyer or law firm and a financial institution as:

(A) A checking account paying preferred interest rates, such as market-based or indexed rates;

(B) A public funds interest-bearing checking account, such as an account used for other non-profit organizations or government agencies;

(C) An interest-bearing checking account, such as a negotiable order of withdrawal (NOW) account, or business checking account with interest; or

(D) A business checking account with an automated investment feature in overnight daily financial institution repurchase agreements or money market funds. A daily financial institution repurchase agreement shall be fully collateralized by U.S. Government Securities (meaning U.S. Treasury obligations and obligations issued or guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States government) and may be established only with an approved institution that is ''well-capitalized'' or ''adequately capitalized'' as those terms are defined by applicable federal statutes and regulations. A ''money market fund'' is a fund maintained as a money market fund by an investment company registered under the Investment Company Act of 1940, as amended, which fund is qualified to be held out to investors as a money market fund under Rules and Regulations adopted by the Securities and Exchange Commission pursuant to said Act. A money market fund shall be invested solely in U.S. Government Securities, or repurchase agreements fully collateralized by U.S. Government Securities, and, at the time of the investment, shall have total assets of at least two hundred fifty million dollars ($250,000,000).

(9) In lieu of a rate set forth in paragraph (c)(7)(i), the financial institution may elect to pay on all deposits in its COLTAF accounts, a benchmark rate, which COLTAF is authorized to set periodically, but not more frequently than every six months, to reflect an overall comparable rate offered by financial institutions in Colorado net of allowable reasonable COLTAF fees. Election of the benchmark rate is optional, and financial institutions may choose to maintain their eligibility by paying the rate set forth in paragraph (c)(7)(i).

(10) ''Allowable reasonable COLTAF fees'' are per-check charges, per-deposit charges, fees in lieu of minimum balances, federal deposit insurance fees, sweep fees, and reasonable COLTAF account administrative fees. The financial institution may deduct allowable reasonable COLTAF fees from interest or dividends earned on a COLTAF account, provided that such fees (other than COLTAF account administrative fees) are calculated and imposed in accordance with the approved institution's standard practice with respect to comparable non-COLTAF accounts. The financial institution agrees not to deduct allowable reasonable COLTAF fees accrued on one COLTAF account in excess of the earnings accrued on the COLTAF account for any period from the principal of any other COLTAF account or from interest or dividends accrued on any other COLTAF account. Any fee other than allowable reasonable COLTAF fees are the responsibility of, and the financial institution may charge them to, the lawyer or law firm maintaining the COLTAF account.

(11) Nothing contained in this Rule shall preclude the financial institution from paying a higher interest or dividend rate on a COLTAF account than is otherwise required by the financial institution's agreement with the Regulation Counsel or from electing to waive any or all fees associated with COLTAF accounts.

(12) Nothing in this Rule shall be construed to require the Regulation Counsel or any lawyer or law firm to make independent determinations about whether a financial institution's COLTAF account meets the comparability requirements set forth in paragraph (c)(7). COLTAF will make such determinations and at least annually will inform Regulation Counsel of the financial institutions that are in compliance with the comparability provisions of this Rule.

(13) Each approved financial institution shall be immune from suit arising out of its actions or omissions in reporting overdrafts or insufficient funds or producing documents under this Rule. The agreement entered into by a financial institution with the Regulation Counsel shall not be deemed to create a duty to exercise a standard of care and shall not constitute a contract for the benefit of any third parties that may sustain a loss as a result of lawyers overdrawing lawyer trust accounts.

Rule 1.16. Declining or Terminating Representation

(a) Except as stated in paragraph (c), a lawyer shall not represent a client or, where representation has commenced, shall withdraw from the representation of a client if:

(1) the representation will result in violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct or other law;

(2) the lawyer's physical or mental condition materially impairs the lawyer's ability to represent the client; or

(3) the lawyer is discharged.

(b) Except as stated in paragraph (c), a lawyer may withdraw from representing a client if:

(1) withdrawal can be accomplished without material adverse effect on the interests of the client;

(2) the client persists in a course of action involving the lawyer's services that the lawyer reasonably believes is criminal or fraudulent;

(3) the client has used the lawyer's services to perpetrate a crime or fraud;

(4) the client insists upon taking action that the lawyer considers repugnant or with which the lawyer has a fundamental disagreement;

(5) the client fails substantially to fulfill an obligation to the lawyer regarding the lawyer's services and has been given reasonable warning that the lawyer will withdraw unless the obligation is fulfilled;

(6) the representation will result in an unreasonable financial burden on the lawyer or has been rendered unreasonably difficult by the client; or

(7) other good cause for withdrawal exists.

(c) A lawyer must comply with applicable law requiring notice to or permission of a tribunal when terminating a representation. When ordered to do so by a tribunal, a lawyer shall continue representation notwithstanding good cause for terminating the representation.

(d) Upon termination of representation, a lawyer shall take steps to the extent reasonably practicable to protect a client's interests, such as giving reasonable notice to the client, allowing time for employment of other counsel, surrendering papers and property to which the client is entitled and refunding any advance payment of fee or expense that has not been earned or incurred. The lawyer may retain papers relating to the client to the extent permitted by other law.

COMMENT

[1] A lawyer should not accept representation in a matter unless it can be performed competently, promptly, without improper conflict of interest and to completion. Ordinarily, a representation in a matter is completed when the agreed-upon assistance has been concluded. See Rules 1.2(c) and 6.5. See also Rule 1.3, Comment [4].

Mandatory Withdrawal

[2] A lawyer ordinarily must decline or withdraw from representation if the client demands that the lawyer engage in conduct that is illegal or violates the Rules of Professional Conduct or other law. The lawyer is not obliged to decline or withdraw simply because the client suggests such a course of conduct; a client may make such a suggestion in the hope that a lawyer will not be constrained by a professional obligation.

[3] When a lawyer has been appointed to represent a client, withdrawal ordinarily requires approval of the appointing authority. See also Rule 6.2. Similarly, court approval or notice to the court is often required by applicable law before a lawyer withdraws from pending litigation. Difficulty may be encountered if withdrawal is based on the client's demand that the lawyer engage in unprofessional conduct. The court may request an explanation for the withdrawal, while the lawyer may be bound to keep confidential the facts that would constitute such an explanation. The lawyer's statement that professional considerations require termination of the representation ordinarily should be accepted as sufficient. Lawyers should be mindful of their obligations to both clients and the court under Rules 1.6 and 3.3.

Discharge

[4] A client has a right to discharge a lawyer at any time, with or without cause, subject to liability for payment for the lawyer's services. Where future dispute about the withdrawal may be anticipated, it may be advisable to prepare a written statement reciting the circumstances.

[5] Whether a client can discharge appointed counsel may depend on applicable law. A client seeking to do so should be given a full explanation of the consequences. These consequences may include a decision by the appointing authority that appointment of successor counsel is unjustified, thus requiring self-representation by the client.

[6] If the client has severely diminished capacity, the client may lack the legal capacity to discharge the lawyer, and in any event the discharge may be seriously adverse to the client's interests. The lawyer should make special effort to help the client consider the consequences and may take reasonably necessary protective action as provided in Rule 1.14.

Permissive Withdrawal

[7] A lawyer may withdraw from representation in some circumstances. The lawyer has the option to withdraw if it can be accomplished without material adverse effect on the client's interests. Withdrawal is also justified if the client persists in a course of action that the lawyer reasonably believes is criminal or fraudulent, for a lawyer is not required to be associated with such conduct even if the lawyer does not further it. Withdrawal is also permitted if the lawyer's services were misused in the past even if that would materially prejudice the client. The lawyer may also withdraw where the client insists on taking action that the lawyer considers repugnant or with which the lawyer has a fundamental disagreement.

[8] A lawyer may withdraw if the client refuses to abide by the terms of an agreement relating to the representation, such as an agreement concerning fees or court costs or an agreement limiting the objectives of the representation.

Assisting the Client upon Withdrawal

[9] Even if the lawyer has been unfairly discharged by the client, a lawyer must take all reasonable steps to mitigate the consequences to the client. The lawyer may retain papers as security for a fee only to the extent permitted by law. See Rule 1.16(d).

Annotator's note. Rule 1.16 is similar to Rule 1.16 as it existed prior to the 2007 repeal and readoption of the Colorado rules of professional conduct. Relevant cases construing that provision have been included in the annotations to this rule.

Attorney discharged without cause may not recover damages under a non-contingency contract for services not rendered before the discharge. It is important to balance the attorney-client relationship and the attorney's right to receive fair and adequate compensation. interests. Olsen & Brown v. City of Englewood, 889 P.2d 673 (Colo. 1995).

Because former § 12-5-120 (now § 13-93-115) does not authorize an attorney to assert a lien on a United States passport, there is no "other law" under section (d) that would permit attorney to withhold passport of client's wife pending payment for legal services rendered. Accordingly, although the supreme court did not disturb the hearing board's dismissal of the complaint, it disapproved of its rationale. Matter of Attorney G., 2013 CO 27, 302 P.3d 248.

The decision as to whether defense counsel should be permitted to withdraw lies within the sound discretion of the court. If the trial court has a reasonable basis for concluding that the attorney-client relationship has not deteriorated to the point at which counsel is unable to give effective assistance in the presentation of a defense, then the court is justified in refusing to appoint new counsel. People v. Rocha, 872 P.2d 1285 (Colo. App. 1993).

Disagreement concerning the refusal of defense counsel to call certain witnesses is not sufficient per se to require the trial court to grant a motion to withdraw. People v. Rocha, 872 P.2d 1285 (Colo. App. 1993).

Among the factors a trial court must consider in determining whether withdrawal is warranted is the possibility that any new counsel will be confronted with the same irreconcilable conflict. People v. Rocha, 872 P.2d 1285 (Colo. App. 1993).

Public censure instead of private censure was appropriate where attorney failed to respond to discovery requests and motions for summary judgment and the findings of the board did not support the applicability of ABA Standard 9.32(i) as a mitigating factor since there was no medical evidence that attorney was affected by chemical dependency or that alcohol contributed to or caused the misconduct. People v. Brady, 923 P.2d 887 (Colo. 1996).

Attorney's restitution agreement was neither an aggravating nor mitigating factor since the attorney did not propose or attempt any form of restitution until after a request for investigation had been filed with the office of disciplinary counsel. People v. Brady, 923 P.2d 887 (Colo. 1996).

Attorney's argument that public discipline is not appropriate because it would stigmatize a recovering alcoholic was rejected since overriding concern in discipline proceedings is to protect the public through the enforcement of professional standards of conduct. People v. Brady, 923 P.2d 887 (Colo. 1996).

Attorney's professional misconduct involving the improper collection of attorney's fees in six instances, and the failure to withdraw upon client's request in one instance justified 45-day suspension. People v. Peters, 849 P.2d 51 (Colo. 1993).

An attorney is entitled only to compensation for the reasonable value of the services rendered if the attorney is employed under a fixed fee contract to render specific legal services and is discharged by the client without cause. The client was entitled to discharge the attorneys without cause and without incurring any further liability, other than payment for services rendered on a quantum meruit theory. Olsen & Brown v. City of Englewood, 867 P.2d 96 (Colo. App. 1993).

Under a flat fee agreement between an attorney and client, the attorney was entitled to a portion of the fee under a quantum meruit theory, and was not required to return the full advance payment to the client when the representation ended early. In re Gilbert, 2015 CO 22, 346 P.3d 1018.

Any contractual provision that constrains a client from exercising the right freely to discharge his or her attorney is unenforceable. A client has an unfettered right to discharge freely its attorney without incurring liability under ordinary breach of contract principles. Olsen & Brown v. City of Englewood, 867 P.2d 96 (Colo. App. 1993).

Disbarment appropriate where attorney accepted fees from a number of clients prior to terminating her legal practice, failed to inform her clients of such termination, failed to refund clients' retainer fees, failed to place clients' funds in separate account, and gave clients' files to other lawyers without clients' consent. People v. Tucker, 904 P.2d 1321 (Colo. 1995).

Previously disbarred attorney who violated this rule would be forced to pay restitution to clients as a condition of readmission. People v. Vigil, 945 P.2d 1385 (Colo. 1997).

Conduct violating this rule, in conjunction with other disciplinary rules, sufficient to justify disbarment where the attorney continued to practice law while on suspension, repeatedly neglecting his clients and failing to take reasonable steps to protect clients' interests. People v. Fager, 938 P.2d 138 (Colo. 1997).

Suspension for one year and one day appropriate where attorney violated section (d) by not returning or accounting for client funds held for emergencies after the clients fired the attorney and for negligently converting other client funds to the attorney's own use. People v. Johnson, 944 P.2d 524 (Colo. 1997).

Two-year suspension appropriate where attorney violated sections (a)(2) and (d), in conjunction with other disciplinary rules, causing her clients actual harm by failing to communicate with them. A formal reinstatement proceeding is required to demonstrate attorney's rehabilitation and fitness for practicing law. People v. Mendus, 360 P.3d 1049 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2015).

Suspension for three years, rather than disbarment, was appropriate where violation of this rule and others caused serious harm to attorney's clients, but mitigating factors were present, including no previous discipline in 14 years of practice, personal and emotional problems, and cooperation and demonstrated remorse in proceedings. People v. Henderson, 967 P.2d 1038 (Colo. 1998).

Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules is sufficient to justify public censure. People v. Williams, 936 P.2d 1289 (Colo. 1997); People v. Barr, 957 P.2d 1379 (Colo. 1998).

Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules is sufficient to justify suspension. People v. Crews, 901 P.2d 472 (Colo. 1995); People v. Kuntz, 908 P.2d 1110 (Colo. 1996); People v. Johnson, 946 P.2d 469 (Colo. 1997); People v. Rishel, 956 P.2d 542 (Colo. 1998); In re Corbin, 973 P.2d 1273 (Colo. 1999); People v. Rule 1.16A. Client File Retention

(a) A lawyer in private practice shall retain a client's files respecting a matter unless:

(1) the lawyer delivers the file to the client or the client authorizes destruction of the file in a writing signed by the client and there are no pending or threatened legal proceedings known to the lawyer that relate to the matter; or

(2) the lawyer has given written notice to the client of the lawyer's intention to destroy the file on or after a date stated in the notice, which date shall not be less than thirty days after the date of the notice, and there are no pending or threatened legal proceedings known to the lawyer that relate to the matter.

(b) At any time following the expiration of a period of ten years following the termination of the representation in a matter, a lawyer may destroy a client's files respecting the matter without notice to the client, provided there are no pending or threatened legal proceedings known to the lawyer that relate to the matter and the lawyer has not agreed to the contrary.

(c) Notwithstanding paragraphs (a) and (b) above, a lawyer in a criminal matter shall retain a client's file for the following time periods:

(1) for the life of the client, if the matter resulted in a conviction and a sentence of death, life without parole, or an indeterminate sentence, including a sentence pursuant to the Colorado Sex Offender Lifetime Supervision Act of 1998, section 18-1.3-1001 et seq., C.R.S.

(2) for eight years from the date of sentencing, if the matter resulted in a conviction for any other felony and the conviction and/or sentence was appealed;

(3) for five years from the date of sentencing, if the matter resulted in a conviction for any other felony and neither the conviction nor the sentence was appealed.

(d) A lawyer may satisfy the notice requirements of paragraph (a)(2) of this Rule by establishing a written file retention policy consistent with this Rule and by providing a notice of the file retention policy to the client in a fee agreement or a in writing delivered to the client not later than thirty days before destruction of the client's file or incorporated into a fee agreement.

(e) This Rule does not supersede or limit a lawyer's obligations to retain a client's file that are imposed by law, court order, or rules of a tribunal.

Source: Entire rule and comment added and effective February 10, 2011; comment [1] and [3] amended, effective April 6, 2016.

COMMENT

[1] Rule 1.16A is not intended to impose an obligation on a lawyer to preserve documents that the lawyer would not normally preserve, such as multiple copies or drafts of the same document. A client's files, within the meaning of Rule 1.16A, consist of those things, such as papers and electronic data, relating to a matter that the lawyer would usually maintain in the ordinary course of practice. A lawyer's obligations with respect to client ''property'' are distinct. Those obligations are addressed in Rules 1.15A and 1.16(d). ''Property'' generally refers to jewelry and other valuables entrusted to the lawyer by the client, as well as documents having intrinsic value or directly affecting valuable rights, such as securities, negotiable instruments, deeds, and wills.

[2] A lawyer may comply with Rule 1.16A by maintaining a client's files in, or converting the file to, electronic form, provided the lawyer is capable of producing a paper version if necessary. Rule 1.16A does not require multiple lawyers in the same law firm to retain duplicate client files or to retain a unitary file located in one place. ''Law firm'' is defined in Rule 1.0 to include lawyers employed in a legal services organization or the legal department of a corporation or other organization. Rule 5.1(a) addresses the responsibility of a partner in a law firm to ''make reasonable efforts to ensure that the firm has in effect measures giving reasonable assurance that all lawyers in the firm conform to the Rules of Professional Conduct.'' Generally, lawyers employed by a private corporation or other entity as in-house counsel represent such corporation or entity as employees and the client's files are considered to be in the possession of the client and not the lawyer, such that Rule 1.16A would be inapplicable. Where lawyers are employed as public defenders or by a legal services organization or a government agency to represent third parties under circumstances where the third-party client's files are considered to be files and records of the organization or agency, the lawyer must take reasonable measures to ensure that the client's files are maintained by the organization or agency in accordance with this rule.

[3] Rule 1.16A does not supersede obligations imposed by other law, court order, or rules of a tribunal. The maintenance of law firm financial and accounting records is governed exclusively by Rules 1.15A and 1.15D. Similarly, Rule 1.16A does not supersede specific retention requirements imposed by other rules, such as Rule 5.5(d)(2) (two-year retention of written notification to client of utilization of services of suspended or disbarred lawyer), Rule 4, Chapter 23.3 C.R.C.P. (six-year retention of contingent fee agreement and proof of mailing following completion or settlement of the case) and C.R.C.P. 121, § 1-26(7) (two-year retention of signed originals of e-filed documents). A document may be subject to more than one retention requirement, in which case the lawyer should retain the document for the longest applicable period. Rule 1.16A does not prohibit a lawyer from maintaining a client's files beyond the periods specified in the Rule.

[4] A lawyer may not destroy a client's file when the lawyer has knowledge of pending or threatened proceedings relating to the matter. The Rule does not affect a lawyer's obligations under Rule 1.16(d) with respect to the surrender of papers and property to which the client is entitled upon termination of the representation. A client's receipt of papers forwarded from time to time by the lawyer during the course of the representation does not alleviate the lawyer's obligations under Rule 1.16A.

[5] The destruction of a client's files under paragraph (a) of Rule 16A is subject to two sets of preconditions. First, the lawyer must have given written notice to the client of the lawyer's intention to destroy the files on or after a date certain, which date is not less than thirty days after the date the notice was given or the client has authorized the destruction of the files in a writing signed by the client. As provided in paragraph (d), the notice requirement in paragraph (a) can be satisfied by timely giving the client a written statement of the applicable file retention policy; for example, that policy could be contained in a written fee agreement. A lawyer should make reasonable efforts to locate a client for purposes of giving written notice when such notice was not provided during the representation. If the lawyer is unable to locate the client, written notice sent to the client's last known address is sufficient under paragraph (a) Rule 1.16A. Second, the lawyer may not destroy the files if the lawyer knows that there are legal proceedings pending or threatened that relate to the matter for which the lawyer created the files, if the file is subject to paragraph (c) of this Rule, or if the lawyer has agreed otherwise. If these preconditions are satisfied, the lawyer may destroy the files in a manner consistent with the lawyer's continuing obligation to maintain the confidentiality of information relating to the representation under Rules 1.6 and 1.9. Nothing in this Rule is intended to mandate that a lawyer destroy a file in the absence of a client's instruction to do so. Notwithstanding a client's instruction to destroy or return a file, a lawyer may retain a copy of the file or any document in the file.

ANNOTATION

Conduct violating this rule in conjunction with other disciplinary rules is sufficient to justify disbarment. People v. Doherty, 354 P.3d 1150 (Colo. O.P.D.J. 2015).

Rule 1.17. Sale of Law Practice

A lawyer or a law firm may sell or purchase a law practice, or an area of practice, including good will, if the following conditions are satisfied:

(a) the seller ceases to engage in the private practice of law in Colorado, or in the area of practice in Colorado that has been sold;

(b) the entire practice, or the entire area of practice, is sold to one or more lawyers or law firms;

(c) the seller gives written notice to each of the seller's clients regarding:

(1) the proposed sale;

(2) the client's right to retain other counsel or to take possession of the file; and

(3) the fact that the client's consent to the transfer of the client's files will be presumed if the client does not take any action or does not otherwise object within sixty (60) days of mailing of the notice to the client at the client's last known address; and

(d) the fees charged clients shall not be increased by reason of the sale.

COMMENT

[1] The practice of law is a profession, not merely a business. Clients are not commodities that can be purchased and sold at will. Pursuant to this Rule, when a lawyer or an entire firm ceases to practice, or ceases to practice in an area of law, and other lawyers or firms take over the representation, the selling lawyer or firm may obtain compensation for the reasonable value of the practice as may withdrawing partners of law firms. See Rules 5.4 and 5.6.

Termination of Practice by the Seller

[2] The requirement that all of the private practice, or all of an area of practice, be sold is satisfied if the seller in good faith makes the entire practice, or the area of practice, available for sale to the purchasers. The fact that a number of the seller's clients decide not to be represented by the purchasers but take their matters elsewhere, therefore, does not result in a violation. Return to private practice as a result of an unanticipated change in circumstances does not necessarily result in a violation. For example, a lawyer who has sold the practice to accept an appointment to judicial office does not violate the requirement that the sale be attendant to cessation of practice if the lawyer later resumes private practice upon being defeated in a contested or a retention election for the office or resigns from a judiciary position.

[3] The requirement that the seller cease to engage in the private practice of law does not prohibit employment as a lawyer on the staff of a public agency or a legal services entity that provides legal services to the poor, or as in-house counsel to a business.
