(c) Contents of Record on Appeal. Upon the filing of a notice of appeal and upon the posting of any advance costs by the appellant, as are required for the preparation of a record, unless the appellant is granted leave to proceed as an indigent, the clerk of the county court shall prepare and issue as soon as possible a record of the proceedings in the county court, including the summons and complaint or warrant, the separate complaint if any has been issued, and the judgment. The record shall also include a transcription or a joint stipulation of such part of the actual evidence and other proceedings as the parties designate. If the proceedings have been recorded electronically, the transcription of designated evidence and proceedings shall be prepared in the office of the clerk of the court, either by him or her or under his or her supervision, within 42 days after the filing of the notice of appeal or within such additional time as may be granted by the county court. The clerk shall notify in writing the opposing parties of the completion of the record, and such parties shall have 14 days within which to file objections. If none are received, the record shall be certified forthwith by the clerk. If objections are made, the parties shall be called for hearing and the objections settled by the county judge and the record then certified.

(d) Filing of Record. When the record has been duly certified and any additional fees therefor paid, it shall be filed with the clerk of the district court by the clerk of the county court, and the opposing parties shall be notified by the clerk of the county court of such filing.

(e) Briefs. A written brief setting out matters relied upon as constituting error and outlining any arguments to be made shall be filed in the district court by the appellant within 21 days after certification of the record. A copy of the appellant's brief shall be served upon the appellee. The appellee may file an answering brief within 21 days after such service. A reply brief may be filed within 14 days after service of the answering brief. In the discretion of the district court, the time for filing briefs and answers may be extended.

(f) Stay of Execution. Pending the docketing of the appeal, a stay of execution shall be granted by the county court upon request. If a sentence of imprisonment has been imposed, the defendant may be required to post bail, and if a fine and costs have been imposed, a deposit of the amount thereof may be required by the county court. Upon a request for stay of execution made any time after the docketing of the appeal, such action may be taken by the district court. Stays of execution granted by the county court or district court and, with the written consent of the sureties if any, bonds posted with such courts shall remain in effect until after final disposition of the appeal, unless modified by the district court.

(g) Trials de Novo; Penalty Not Increased. If for any reason an adequate record cannot be certified to the district court the case shall be tried de novo in that court. No action on appeal shall result in an increase in penalty.

(h) Judgment; How Enforced. Unless there is further review by the Supreme Court upon writ of certiorari pursuant to the rules of such court, after final disposition of the appeal the judgment on appeal entered by the district court shall be certified to the county court for action as directed by the district court, except in cases tried de novo by the district court or in cases in which the district court modifies the county court judgment, and in such cases, the judgment on appeal shall be that of the district court and so enforceable.

(i) Appeals to Superior Court. In counties in which a superior court has been established, appeals from the county court shall be taken to the superior court rather than the district court. All of the provisions of this section governing appeals from the county court to the district court are applicable when the appeal is taken to the superior court, and the term ''district court'' as used in this section shall be understood to include the superior court.

Appeals between county and superior courts. The district court has no jurisdiction to interfere with the appeal process between the county and superior courts. Petry v. County Court, 666 P.2d 1125 (Colo. App. 1983).

This rule does not give authority to the court of appeals to hear an appeal of a district court judgment modifying a county court decision. The modified county judgment becomes a district court judgment only for purposes of enforcement. People v. Smith, 874 P.2d 452 (Colo. App. 1993).

Because appellant's conviction originated in a municipal court of record, appellant had 30 days following the judgment of conviction to file the notice of appeal pursuant to § 13-10-116, this rule, and C.M.C.R. 237. Normandin v. Town of Parachute, 91 P.3d 383 (Colo. 2004).

Finality attaches upon expiration of 30 days from judgment. Where judgment and sentence had been entered in the county court, at the expiration of 30 days — no notice of appeal having been filed — it became final. Mills v. People, 181 Colo. 168, 509 P.2d 594 (1973).

And time to file appeal not automatically extended by new trial motion. The filing of a motion for a new trial does not have the effect of automatically extending the time to file a notice of appeal as prescribed by this rule. Mills v. People, 181 Colo. 168, 509 P.2d 594 (1973).

Appeals filing period begins to run when the judgment becomes final — that is when sentence has been passed — even though sentencing has been delayed for over a year due to defendant's voluntary unavailability. Hellman v. Rhodes, 741 P.2d 1258 (Colo. 1987).

Section 16-2-114 (6) and section (f) of this rule require a county court, upon request, to grant a stay of execution of a defendant's sentence pending appeal of a misdemeanor conviction to the district court. People v. Steen, 2014 CO 9, 318 P.3d 487.

For purposes of appeal, a final judgment must include the sentence. Therefore, after the sentence was vacated on appeal, an order withdrawing plea of guilty was not a final judgment. Ellsworth v. People, 987 P.2d 264 (Colo. 1999).

A trial de novo conducted by the district court is not a review of the county court judgment; it is an entirely new proceeding. Bovard v. People, 99 P.3d 585 (Colo. 2004).

Only in cases tried de novo by the district court will the district court judgment be subject to direct appeal. Justifiably, then, the defendant may seek direct appeal when the district court enters its judgment from a de novo trial. Bovard v. People, 99 P.3d 585 (Colo. 2004).

Certiorari review does not suffice as an appellate review from a final judgment of the district court. Bovard v. People, 99 P.3d 585 (Colo. 2004).

Transcript of all evidence presented to lower court relevant to challenged ruling required. Where an appellant challenges a ruling that was based, either in whole or in part, on evidence presented to the lower court, a transcript of all evidence pertaining to the decision must be included in the record; however, the appellant is not required by Crim. P. 37(b), to include in the record a transcript of evidence that is not relevant to the issues raised on appeal. Holcomb v. City & County of Denver, 199 Colo. 251, 606 P.2d 858 (1980); People v. Campbell, 174 P.3d 860 (Colo. App. 2007).

Filing a notice of appeal in the county court is not a jurisdictional requirement of section (a), but timely docketing an appeal in the district court is sufficient to invoke the appellate jurisdiction of that court. Peterson v. People, 113 P.3d 706 (Colo. 2005).

Timely filing of a brief is not jurisdictional under this rule, and a trial court's discretion to extend the time to file a brief under section (e) is not restricted to extensions requested within the normal filing time. People v. Chapman, 192 Colo. 322, 557 P.2d 1211 (1977).

Excusable or inexcusable neglect considered in deciding whether to reinstate after late brief. Although no ''excusable neglect'' prerequisite appears in section (e), the court may consider excusable or inexcusable neglect among other factors in deciding whether to grant a motion to reinstate after late filing of a brief. People v. Chapman, 192 Colo. 322, 557 P.2d 1211 (1977).

Unavailability or inadequacy of record mandates trial de novo. If the record is unavailable, a defendant should not suffer for the lack thereof, but should be afforded an entirely new trial; if a record is inadequate, the district court must grant a trial de novo under section (g). It has no discretion in the matter. Hawkins v. Superior Court, 196 Colo. 86, 580 P.2d 811 (1978).

When a felony case starts in county court pursuant to § 16-5-101 (1)(c) and is resolved by a plea to only misdemeanor charges, it is a county court matter and an appeal must be made to the district court. People v. Vargas-Reyes, 2018 COA 181, 434 P.3d 1198.

Applied in People v. Lessar, 629 P.2d 577 (Colo. 1981); People v. Luna, 648 P.2d 624 (Colo. App. 1982); Waltemeyer v. People ex rel. City of Arvada, 658 P.2d 264 (Colo. 1983); Dike v. People, 30 P.3d 197 (Colo. 2001).

Rule 37.1. Interlocutory Appeal from County Court

(a) Grounds. The prosecuting attorney may file an interlocutory appeal in the district court from a ruling of a county court granting a motion made in advance of trial by the defendant for return of property and to suppress evidence or granting a motion to suppress evidence or granting a motion to suppress an extra-judicial confession or admission; provided that the prosecuting attorney certifies to the judge who granted such motion and to the district court that the appeal is not taken for purposes of delay and that the evidence is a substantial part of the proof of the charge pending against the defendant.

(b) Filing Notice of Appeal. The prosecuting attorney shall file the notice of appeal with the clerk of the district court and shall serve the defendant and the clerk of the trial court with a copy thereof. Such notice of appeal shall be filed within 14 days of the entry of the order being appealed and any docket fee shall be paid at the time of the filing.

(c) Contents of Record on Appeal. The record for an interlocutory appeal shall consist of the information or charging document, the motions filed by the defendant or defendants and the grounds stated in section (a) above, a transcript of all testimony taken at the hearing on said motions and such exhibits or reasonable copies, facsimiles, or photographs thereof as the parties may designate (subject to the provisions in C.A.R. 11(b) pertaining to exhibits of bulk), the order of court ruling on said motions and the date, if one has been fixed, that the case is set for trial or a certificate by the clerk that the case has not been set for trial. The record shall be filed within 14 days of the date of filing the notice of appeal, and may be supplemented by order of the district court.

(d) Briefs. Within 14 days after the record has been filed in the district court, the prosecuting attorney shall file an opening brief. Within 14 days after service of said opening brief, the defendant shall file an answer brief, and the prosecuting attorney shall have 7 days after service of said answer brief to file a reply brief.

(e) Disposition of Cause. Unless oral argument is ordered by the court and it rules on the record and in the presence of the parties, the decision of the court shall be by written opinion, copies of which shall be transmitted by the clerk of the court by mail to the trial judge and to all parties. No petition for rehearing shall be permitted. A certified copy of the judgment and directions to the county court, and a copy of the written opinion, if any, shall constitute the mandate of the district court, concluding the appeal and restoring jurisdiction to the county court. Such mandate shall issue and be transmitted by the clerk of the court by mail to the trial judge and all parties on the 44th day after the district court's oral or written order, unless the district court is given notice by one of the parties that it has sought further review by the supreme court upon a writ of certiorari pursuant to the rules of that court, in which case the mandate shall issue upon notification that certiorari has been denied or upon receiving the remittitur of the supreme court.

(f) Time. The time limits herein may only be enlarged by order of the appropriate court before the existing time limit has expired.

(g) If no procedure is specifically prescribed by this rule, the court shall look to the Rules of Appellate Procedure for guidance.

(h) Nothing in this Rule 37.1 shall be construed to deprive the county court of jurisdiction to consider bail issues during the pendency of the interlocutory appeal.

The 10-day time frame under subsection (b) for filing an interlocutory appeal is to be calculated according to C.A.R. 26(a), with intervening Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays excluded in the computation. People v. Zhuk, 239 P.3d 437 (Colo. 2010).

Rule 38. Appeals from the District Court

Appeals from the district court shall be conducted pursuant to the Colorado Appellate Rules.

Rule 39. Stays

The filing of an interlocutory appeal or an appeal from an order that dismisses one or more counts of a charging document prior to trial automatically stays all proceedings until final determination of the appeal, unless the appellate court lifts such stay in whole or in part.

Rule 40. (Reserved)

VIII. SUPPLEMENTARY AND SPECIAL PROCEEDINGS

Rule 41. Search, Seizure, and Confession

(a) Authority to Issue Warrant. A search warrant authorized by this Rule may be issued by any judge of a court of record.

(b) Grounds for Issuance. A search warrant may be issued under this Rule to search for and seize any property:

(1) Which is stolen or embezzled; or

(2) Which is designed or intended for use as a means of committing a criminal offense; or

(3) Which is or has been used as a means of committing a criminal offense; or

(4) The possession of which is illegal; or

(5) Which would be material evidence in a subsequent criminal prosecution in this state or in another state; or

(6) The seizure of which is expressly required, authorized, or permitted by any statute of this state; or

(7) Which is kept, stored, maintained, transported, sold, dispensed, or possessed in violation of a statute of this state, under circumstances involving a serious threat to public safety or order, or to public health.

(c) Application for Search Warrant. (1) A search warrant shall issue only on affidavit sworn or affirmed to before the judge, except as provided in (c)(3). Such affidavit shall relate facts sufficient to:

(I) Identify or describe, as nearly as may be, the premises, person, place, or thing to be searched;

(II) Identify or describe, as nearly as may be, the property to be searched for, seized, or inspected;

(III) Establish the grounds for issuance of the warrant, or probable cause to believe that such grounds exist; and

(IV) Establish probable cause to believe that the property to be searched for, seized, or inspected is located at, in, or upon the premises, person, place, or thing to be searched.

(2) The affidavit required by this section may include sworn testimony reduced to writing and signed under oath by the witness giving the testimony before issuance of the warrant. A copy of the affidavit and a copy of the transcript of testimony taken in support of the request for a search warrant shall be attached to the search warrant filed with the court.

(2.5) A no-knock search warrant, which means, for purposes of this section, a search warrant authorized by the court to be executed by law enforcement officers through a forcible entry without first announcing their identity, purpose, and authority, shall be issued only if the affidavit for such warrant:

(I) Complies with the provisions of subsections (1) and (2) of this section (c) and section 16-3-303(4), C.R.S.;

(II) Specifically requests the issuance of a no-knock search warrant;

(III) Relates sufficient circumstances to support the issuance of a no-knock search warrant;

(IV) Has been reviewed and approved for legal sufficiency and signed by a district attorney with the date and his or her attorney registration number on the affidavit, pursuant to section 20-1-106.1(2), C.R.S.; and

(V) If the grounds for the issuance of a no-knock warrant are established by a confidential informant, the affidavit for such warrant shall contain a statement by the affiant concerning when such grounds became known or were verified by the affiant, but such statement shall not identify the confidential informant.

(3) Application and Issuance of a Warrant by fascimile or Electronic Transmission. A warrant, signed affidavit, and accompanying documents may be transmitted by electronic fascimile transmission (fax) or by electronic transfer with electronic signatures to the judge, who may act upon the transmitted documents as if they were originals. A warrant affidavit may be sworn to or affirmed by administration of the oath over the telephone by the judge. The affidavit with electronic signature received by the judge or magistrate and the warrant approved by the judge or magistrate, signed with electronic signature, shall be deemed originals. The judge or magistrate shall facilitate the filing of the original affidavit and original warrant with the clerk of the court and shall take reasonable steps to prevent the tampering with the affidavit and warrant. The issuing judge or magistrate shall also forward a copy of the warrant and affidavit, with electronic signatures, to the affiant. This subsection (c)(3) does not authorize the court to issue warrants without having in its possession either a faxed copy of the signed affidavit and warrant or an electronic copy of the affidavit and warrant with electronic signatures.

COMMITTEE COMMENT

For purposes of this rule, the term ''electronic signature'' has the same meaning as used in C.R.S. § 16-1-106(4)(c).

(d) Issuance, Contents, Execution, and Return of Warrant. (1) If the judge is satisfied that grounds for the application exist, or that there is probable cause to believe that such grounds exist, he shall issue a search warrant, which shall:

(I) Identify or describe, as nearly as may be, the premises, person, place, or thing to be searched;

(II) Identify or describe, as nearly as may be, the property to be searched for, seized, or inspected;

(III) State the grounds or probable cause for its issuance; and

(IV) State the names of the persons whose affidavits of testimony have been taken in support thereof.

(2) The search warrant may also contain such other and further orders as the judge may deem necessary to comply with the provisions of a statute, charter, or ordinance, or to provide for the custody or delivery to the proper officer of any property seized under the warrant, or otherwise to accomplish the purposes of the warrant.

(3) Unless the court otherwise directs, every search warrant authorizes the officer executing the same:

(I) To execute and serve the warrant at any time; and

(II) To use and employ such force as may reasonably be necessary in the performance of the duties commanded by the warrant.

(4) Joinder. The search of one or more persons, premises, places, or things, may be commanded in a single warrant or in separate warrants, if compliance is made with Rule 41(c)(1)(IV) of these Rules.

(5) Execution and Return. (I) Except as otherwise provided in this Rule, a search warrant shall be directed to any officer authorized by law to execute it in the county wherein the property is located.

(II) Any judge issuing a search warrant, for the search of a person or for the search of any motor vehicle, aircraft, or other object which is mobile or capable of being transported may make an order authorizing a peace officer to be named in such warrant to execute the same, and the person named in such order may execute such warrant anywhere in the state. All sheriffs, coroners, police officers, and officers of the Colorado State Patrol, when required, in their respective counties, shall aid and assist in the execution of such warrant. The order authorized by this subsection (5) may also authorize execution of the warrant by any officer authorized by law to execute it in the county wherein the property is located.

(III) When any officer, having a warrant for the search of a person or for the search of any motor vehicle, aircraft, or other object which is mobile or capable of being transported, shall be in pursuit thereof and such person, motor vehicle, aircraft, or other object shall cross or enter into another county, such officer is authorized to execute the warrant in such other county.

(IV) It shall be the duty of all peace officers into whose hands any search warrant shall come, to execute the same, in their respective counties or municipalities, and make due return thereof.

(V) The officers executing a search warrant shall first announce their identity, purpose, and authority, and if they are not admitted, may make a forcible entry into the place to be searched; however, the officers may make forcible entry without such prior announcement if the warrant expressly authorizes them to do so or if the particular facts and circumstances known to them at the time the warrant is to be executed adequately justify dispensing with this requirement.

(VI) A search warrant shall be executed within 14 days after its date. The officer taking property under the warrant shall give to the person from whom or from whose premises the property was taken a copy of the warrant and a receipt for the property or shall leave the copy and receipt at the place from which the property was taken. The return shall be made promptly and shall be accompanied by a written inventory of any property taken. The inventory shall be made in the presence of the applicant for the warrant and the person from whose possession or premises the property was taken, if they are present, or in the presence of at least one credible person other than the applicant for the warrant or the person from whose possession or premises the property was taken, and shall be verified by the officer. In a case involving the seizure of electronic storage media or the seizure or copying of electronically stored information, the inventory may be limited to describing the physical storage media that were seized or copied. The officer may retain a copy of the electronically stored information that was seized or copied. The judge upon request shall deliver a copy of the inventory to the person from whom or from whose premises the property was taken and to the applicant for the warrant.

(VII) A warrant under Rule 41(b) may authorize the seizure of electronic storage media or the seizure or copying of electronically stored information. Unless otherwise specified, the warrant authorizes a later review of the media or information consistent with the warrant. The time for executing the warrant in Rule 41(d)(5)(VI) refers to the seizure or on-site copying of the media or information, and not to any later off-site copying or review.

(e) Motion for Return of Property and to Suppress Evidence. A person aggrieved by an unlawful search and seizure may move the district court for the county where the property was seized for the return of the property and to suppress for use as evidence anything so obtained on the ground that:

(1) The property was illegally seized without warrant; or

(2) The warrant is insufficient on its face; or

(3) The property seized is not that described in the warrant; or

(4) There was not probable cause for believing the existence of the grounds on which the warrant was issued; or

(5) The warrant was illegally executed.

The judge shall receive evidence on any issue of fact necessary to the decision of the motion. If the motion is granted the property shall be restored unless otherwise subject to lawful detention and it shall not be admissible in evidence at any hearing or trial. The motion to suppress evidence may also be made in the court where the trial is to be had. The motion shall be made and heard before trial unless opportunity therefor did not exist or the defendant was not aware of the grounds for the motion, but the court, in its discretion, may entertain the motion at the trial.

(f) Return of Papers to Clerk. The judge who has issued a warrant shall attach to the warrant a copy of the return, inventory, and all other documents in connection therewith, including any affidavit in application for the warrant, and shall file them with the clerk of the district court for the county of origin. If a case has been filed in the district court after issuance of the warrant, the clerk of the district court shall notify the clerk of the county court which issued it that the warrant has been filed in the district court. When the warrant has been issued by the county judge and there is no subsequent filing in the district court, after the issuance of the warrant, the documents shall remain in the county court. Any documents transmitted by fax or electronic transmission to the judge to obtain the warrant and the documents transmitted by the judge to the applicant shall be filed with the clerk of the court.

(g) Suppression of Confession or Admission. A defendant aggrieved by an alleged involuntary confession or admission made by him, may make a motion under this Rule to suppress said confession or admission. The motion shall be made and heard before trial unless opportunity therefor did not exist or defendant was not aware of the grounds for the motion, but the court, in its discretion, may entertain the motion at the trial. The judge shall receive evidence on any issue of fact necessary to the decision of the motion.

(h) Scope and Definition. This Rule does not modify any statute, inconsistent with it, regulating search, seizure, and the issuance and execution of search warrants in circumstances for which special provision is made.

COMMITTEE COMMENT

This rule is intended to facilitate the issuance of warrants by eliminating the need to physically carry the supporting affidavit to the judge.

II. CONSTITUTIONAL PROTECTIONS.

State courts to resolve search and seizure problems in light of constitutional guarantees. Mapp v. Ohio, 367 U.S. 643, 81 S. Ct. 1684, 6 L. Ed. 2d 1081 (1961), does not by its terms nationalize the law of search and seizure, but it does compel state courts to examine and resolve the problems arising from the search for and the seizure of evidence in the light of state and federal constitutional guarantees against unlawful searches and seizures. Hernandez v. People, 153 Colo. 316, 385 P.2d 996 (1963).

And state rules proper, provided they do not violate federal constitution. Rules establishing workable state procedures governing searches and seizures, even though they may not be strictly in accord with federal procedures, are proper provided that such rules do not violate the fourth amendment proscription against unreasonable searches and seizures. Hernandez v. People, 153 Colo. 316, 385 P.2d 996 (1963).

Thus, this rule issued to implement constitutional guarantees. As a result of Mapp v. Ohio, 367 U.S. 643, 81 S. Ct. 1684, 6 L. Ed. 2d 1081 (1961), and to implement the constitutional guarantees against unlawful searches and seizures, the supreme court of Colorado on November 1, 1961, initially issued this rule providing for the manner in which search warrants should be issued and making property obtained by an unlawful search and seizure inadmissible in evidence in the courts of this state, provided timely motions to suppress are made. Hernandez v. People, 153 Colo. 316, 385 P.2d 996 (1963).

Though use of search warrant has long been encouraged in Colorado. It has long been the policy of the supreme court of Colorado and other courts to encourage the use of the search warrant as a most desirable method of protecting and preserving the constitutional rights of the accused. People v. Whisenhunt, 173 Colo. 109, 476 P.2d 997 (1970).

But previous statute on issuance of search warrants held unconstitutional. People v. Leahy, 173 Colo. 339, 484 P.2d 778 (1970); People v. Singleton, 174 Colo. 138, 482 P.2d 978 (1971) (decided under § 48-5-11(3), C.R.S. 1963).

Federal constitution guarantees security of persons against unreasonable searches. The fourth amendment to the United States Constitution does not guarantee the security of persons against all searches but only those which are unreasonable. Moore v. People, 171 Colo. 338, 467 P.2d 50 (1970).

And practical accuracy determines whether warrant complies with constitutional requirements. The standard for determining whether search warrant complies with constitutional requirements is one of practical accuracy rather than technical nicety. People v. Ragulsky, 184 Colo. 86, 518 P.2d 286 (1974).

No constitutional violation when prison cells "shaken down". Considering normal and necessary prison practices and the charge placed upon prison officials to supervise the operation of state prisons, to preserve order and discipline therein, and to maintain prison security, there is no violation of the fourth amendment prohibition against unreasonable search and seizure when prison cells are searched or ''shaken down'' in carrying out this charge. Moore v. People, 171 Colo. 338, 467 P.2d 50 (1970).

So long as searches not cruel, or conducted for harassing or humiliating purposes. Searches conducted by prison officials entrusted with the orderly operation of the prisons are not unreasonable so long as they are not conducted for the purpose of harassing or humiliating the inmate or in a cruel or unusual manner. Moore v. People, 171 Colo. 338, 467 P.2d 50 (1970).

And seizure of business records not unconstitutional where records instrumentalities of crime. Seizure of records does not violate defendant's privilege against self-incrimination where defendant is not ''compelled'' to produce the papers, the papers are not communicative in nature, they are business records of which others must have knowledge rather than personal and private writings, and they are instrumentalities of the crime with which defendant is charged. People v. Tucci, 179 Colo. 373, 500 P.2d 815 (1972).

Voluntary surrender of nontestimonial evidence waives any constitutional protections. People v. Mattas, 645 P.2d 254 (Colo. 1982).

III. APPLICABILITY OF RULE.

Validity of a search warrant is to be judged under this rule. People v. Leahy, 173 Colo. 339, 484 P.2d 778 (1970); People v. Ferris, 173 Colo. 494, 480 P.2d 552 (1971).

Consequently, it is necessary for search warrant to comply with provisions of this rule. People v. Henry, 173 Colo. 523, 482 P.2d 357 (1971).

But only unlawfully seized or obtained evidence or confession suppressed. This rule provides only for motions to suppress physical evidence unlawfully seized, as well as confessions and statements unlawfully obtained, from accused defendants. People v. McNulty, 173 Colo. 491, 480 P.2d 560 (1971).

Mandatory pretrial suppression of evidence hearing only for matters listed in rule. There is nothing in the Colorado Rules of Criminal Procedure which contemplates a mandatory pretrial suppression of evidence hearing other than for the matters listed in sections (e) and (g) of this rule, viz., evidence obtained because of an illegal search and seizure or an extrajudicial confession or admission. People v. Thornburg, 173 Colo. 230, 477 P.2d 372 (1970).

Therefore, this rule does not encompass motions for suppression of testimonial evidence. People v. McNulty, 173 Colo. 491, 480 P.2d 560 (1971).

Nor motions for suppression of identification testimony. Where the defendant contends that he was not afforded counsel during a lineup and that the lineup was overly suggestive, so that identification testimony should not be allowed into evidence, such a matter is to be resolved at trial rather than pursuant to this rule. People v. Thornburg, 173 Colo. 230, 477 P.2d 372 (1970).

Likewise, whether an arrest is without probable cause is a subject which may not properly be considered under a motion to suppress. People v. Henry, 173 Colo. 523, 482 P.2d 357 (1971).

Interlocutory appeals by state made only from adverse suppression rulings governed by rules. C.A.R. 4.1, which provides for interlocutory appeals by the state, is designed to review rulings of the trial court made upon suppression hearings under sections (e) and (g) of this rule; where objections to proposed evidence do not come within these sections, rulings on the same are not subject to review under C.A.R. 4.1. People v. Thornburg, 173 Colo. 230, 477 P.2d 372 (1970); People v. McNulty, 173 Colo. 491, 480 P.2d 560 (1971); People v. Henry, 173 Colo. 523, 482 P.2d 357 (1971); People v. Patterson, 175 Colo. 19, 485 P.2d 494 (1971); People v. Fidler, 175 Colo. 90, 485 P.2d 725 (1971) (all cases decided prior to 1979 amendment of C.A.R. 4.1).

Under C.A.R. 4.1, interlocutory appeals may only be made by the state from adverse rulings by a district court to motions made pursuant to sections (e) and (g) of this rule and Crim. P. 41.1(i). People v. Morgan, 619 P.2d 64 (Colo. 1980).

A person who has property unlawfully seized by law enforcement officers and who has not been charged with a crime has standing to bring a claim for return of the property under section (e). Boudette v. State, 2018 COA 109, 425 P.3d 1228.

Although there was no criminal complaint or information filed against the property owner, this rule still governs his claim, and section (e) does not require a person to be a criminal defendant to file a motion under this rule. Boudette v. State, 2018 COA 109, 425 P.3d 1228.

IV. AUTHORITY TO ISSUE WARRANT.

Only judicial officer may issue search warrant. Hernandez v. People, 153 Colo. 316, 385 P.2d 996 (1963); Mayorga v. People, 178 Colo. 106, 496 P.2d 304 (1972).

And only such authority may modify warrant. It is axiomatic that the right to alter, modify, or correct a warrant is necessarily vested only in a judicial authority. Hernandez v. People, 153 Colo. 316, 385 P.2d 996 (1963); Mayorga v. People, 178 Colo. 106, 496 P.2d 304 (1972).

So, alteration of search warrant by police officer is usurpation of judicial function and is therefore improper. Hernandez v. People, 153 Colo. 316, 385 P.2d 996 (1963).

But warrant modified before issued by judge not subject to challenge. Where changes and modifications on a search warrant take place before it is signed and issued by a judge, the validity of the search warrant is not subject to challenge. People v. Ferris, 173 Colo. 494, 480 P.2d 552 (1971).

V. APPLICATION FOR WARRANT.

A. General Procedural Requirements.

Rule requires affidavit to support search warrant, which establishes the grounds for the issuance of the warrant, and demands that the affidavit be sworn to before a judge. People v. Brethauer, 174 Colo. 29, 482 P.2d 369 (1971).

Which must comply with United States supreme court standards. If a search warrant is to be sustained, the affidavit must comply with the standards set forth in Aguilar v. Texas, 378 U.S. 108, 84 S. Ct. 1509, 12 L. Ed. 2d 723, 10 A.L.R.3d 359 (1966), and in Spinelli v. United States, 393 U.S. 410, 89 S. Ct. 584, 21 L. Ed. 2d 637 (1969). People v. Brethauer, 174 Colo. 29, 482 P.2d 369 (1971).

But technical requirements and elaborate specificity are not required in the drafting of affidavits for search warrants. People v. Padilla, 182 Colo. 101, 511 P.2d 480 (1973).

Probable cause must be supported by oath or affirmation reduced to writing. The fourth amendment to the United States constitution requires probable cause supported by oath or affirmation as a condition precedent to the valid issuance of a search warrant; § 7 of art. II, Colo. Const., is even more restrictive and provides that probable cause must be supported by oath or affirmation reduced to writing. Hernandez v. People, 153 Colo. 316, 385 P.2d 996 (1963); People v. Brethauer, 174 Colo. 29, 482 P.2d 369 (1971).

Under the Colorado Constitution, the warrant can only be issued upon probable cause supported by oath or affirmation which is ''reduced to writing''. People v. Brethauer, 174 Colo. 29, 482 P.2d 369 (1971).

And verbal communication insufficient. Verbal communication of facts, as contrasted with written communication, will not suffice to establish probable cause. People v. Padilla, 182 Colo. 101, 511 P.2d 480 (1973).

Previously, this rule did not require affidavit to be attached to search warrant. People v. Ferris, 173 Colo. 494, 480 P.2d 552 (1971); People v. Singleton, 174 Colo. 138, 482 P.2d 978 (1971).

Admission of evidence seized from a defendant's residence pursuant to a defective warrant did not constitute reversible error, even though warrant was issued based on an affidavit inadvertently failing to allege facts linking defendant to the residence to be searched. People v. Deitchman, 695 P.2d 1146 (Colo. 1985).

Failure for good cause to comply with section (c)(1), which requires affidavits for search warrants to be sworn to or affirmed before the issuing judge, does not constitute a constitutional violation that automatically triggers the exclusionary rule. People v. Fournier, 793 P.2d 1176 (Colo. 1990).

B. Role of Courts and Police.

Probable cause determined by detached magistrate, not police officer. Search warrants must be supported by evidentiary affidavits containing sufficient facts to allow ''probable cause'' to be determined by a detached magistrate instead of the accusing police officer. Brown v. Patterson, 275 F. Supp. 629 (D. Colo. 1967), aff'd, 393 F. 2d 733 (10th Cir. 1968).

Existence of probable cause must be determined by a member of the judiciary rather than by a law enforcement officer who is employed to apprehend criminals and to bring before the courts for trial those who would violate the law. People v. Brethauer, 174 Colo. 29, 482 P.2d 369 (1971).

Be it a judge of the supreme, district, county, or superior court. The determination of whether probable cause exists is a judicial function to be performed by the issuing magistrate, which in Colorado may be any judge of the supreme, district, county, or superior court under this rule, and is not a matter to be left to the discretion of a police officer. Hernandez v. People, 153 Colo. 316, 385 P.2d 996 (1963); People v. Brethauer, 174 Colo. 29, 482 P.2d 369 (1971).

And to dispense with this requirement would render search warrant itself meaningless, since it would allow a police officer to subjectively determine probable cause. Brown v. Patterson, 275 F. Supp. 629 (D. Colo. 1967), aff'd, 393 F.2d 733 (10th Cir. 1968).

Police officer's role limited to providing judge with facts to make proper determination. The role of the police officer in search warrant practice is limited solely to providing the judge with facts and trustworthy information upon which he, as a neutral and detached judicial officer, may make a proper determination. People v. Brethauer, 174 Colo. 29, 482 P.2d 369 (1971).

Affidavits for warrants interpreted by magistrates in common-sense fashion. Affidavits for search warrants must be tested and interpreted by magistrates and courts in a common-sense and realistic fashion. People v. Whisenhunt, 173 Colo. 109, 476 P.2d 997 (1970).

And judge, in determining sufficiency, looks to four corners of affidavit. In determining whether the affidavit is sufficient, the judge must look within the four corners of the affidavit to determine whether there are grounds for the issuance of a search warrant. People v. Brethauer, 174 Colo. 29, 482 P.2d 369 (1971); People v. Woods, 175 Colo. 34, 485 P.2d 491 (1971); People v. Padilla, 182 Colo. 101, 511 P.2d 480 (1973).

Issuing magistrate need only state result that probable cause exists. This rule was not intended to require the issuing magistrate to reiterate his mental process for reaching the result that probable cause exists, but rather to require only that he state that the result has been reached. People v. Singleton, 174 Colo. 138, 482 P.2d 978 (1971); People v. Noble, 635 P.2d 203 (Colo. 1981).

Reasons given for search judicially reviewed by standards appropriate for reasonable police officer. Where an officer believes he has probable cause to search and states his reasons, an appellate court will not examine such reasons grudgingly, but will measure them by standards appropriate for a reasonable, cautious, and prudent police officer trained in the type of investigation which he is making. People v. Singleton, 174 Colo. 138, 482 P.2d 978 (1971).

For negative attitude by reviewing courts discourages police from submitting evidence before acting. A grudging or negative attitude by reviewing courts toward warrants will tend to discourage police officers from submitting their evidence to a judicial officer before acting. People v. Whisenhunt, 173 Colo. 109, 476 P.2d 997 (1970).

C. Underlying Facts and Circumstances.

Issuing magistrate to be apprised of underlying facts and circumstances showing probable cause. Before the issuing magistrate can properly perform his official function he must be apprised of the underlying facts and circumstances which show that there is probable cause to believe that proper grounds for the issuance of the warrant exist. Hernandez v. People, 153 Colo. 316, 385 P.2d 996 (1963); Brown v. Patterson, 275 F. Supp. 629 (D. Colo. 1967), aff'd, 393 F.2d 733 (10th Cir. 1968); People v. Brethauer, 174 Colo. 29, 482 P.2d 369 (1971); People v. Padilla, 182 Colo. 101, 511 P.2d 480 (1973); People v. Clavey, 187 Colo. 305, 530 P.2d 491 (1975).

The police must show to the issuing magistrate the underlying facts and circumstances upon which the magistrate can determine that probable cause exists for the issuance of a warrant. People v. Massey, 178 Colo. 141, 495 P.2d 1141 (1972).

And it is elementary and of no consequence that police have additional information which could provide a basis for the issuance of the warrant. People v. Brethauer, 174 Colo. 29, 482 P.2d 369 (1971).

Mere affirmance of the belief or suspicion on the officer's part is not enough, for to hold otherwise would attach controlling significance to the officer's belief rather than to the magistrate's judicial determination. Hernandez v. People, 153 Colo. 316, 385 P.2d 996 (1963); People v. Brethauer, 174 Colo. 29, 482 P.2d 369 (1971).

Mere conclusory belief or suspicion by an affiant officer is not enough upon which to base the issuance of a search warrant. People v. Clavey, 187 Colo. 305, 530 P.2d 491 (1975).

Nor will affiant's conclusory declaration that he has probable cause add strength to the showing made. People v. Padilla, 182 Colo. 101, 511 P.2d 480 (1973).

For without facts, affidavits fatally defective. Affidavits containing only the conclusion of the police officer that he believes that certain property is on the premises or person and that such property is designed, or intended, or is, or has been, used as a means of committing a criminal offense, or the possession of which is illegal, without setting forth facts and circumstances from which the judicial officer can determine whether probable cause exists are fatally defective. Hernandez v. People, 153 Colo. 316, 385 P.2d 996 (1963).

And warrant issued on basis of mere conclusion deemed nullity. Where the mere conclusions by an officer provide nothing from which the judge can make an independent determination of probable cause, a warrant issued on the basis of such an affidavit is a nullity. People v. Baird, 172 Colo. 112, 470 P.2d 20 (1970).

But a search warrant may be based on hearsay, as long as a substantial basis for crediting the hearsay exists. People v. Woods, 175 Colo. 34, 485 P.2d 491 (1971).

Police officer's statements in affidavit that are erroneous and false must be stricken and may not be considered in determining whether the affidavit will support the issuance of a search warrant. People v. Malone, 175 Colo. 31, 485 P.2d 499 (1971).

Where the information supplied by an affiant which supports the issuance of a search warrant is false, the trial court has no alternative but to strike the admittedly erroneous information which the affiant supplied. People v. Hampton, 196 Colo. 466, 587 P.2d 275 (1978).

But other information supplied by affidavit not ignored. Fact that some portions of affidavit are erroneous does not require the issuing magistrate to ignore the other information supplied by the affidavit. People v. Hampton, 196 Colo. 466, 587 P.2d 275 (1978).

And where affidavit still sufficient, court will not strike down warrant. Where the affidavit still contains material facts sufficient as a matter of law to support the issuance of a warrant after the deletion of erroneous statements, the court will not strike down the warrant because the affidavit is not completely accurate. People v. Malone, 175 Colo. 31, 485 P.2d 499 (1971).

Verbal communications cannot correct deficient affidavit. Verbal communications, to the magistrate, of additional supporting information cannot correct an affidavit which is basically deficient in its statement of the underlying facts and the circumstances relied upon. People v. Padilla, 182 Colo. 101, 511 P.2d 480 (1973).

But sworn testimony to supplement warrant, or amendment of affidavit, may be required. Should the judge to whom application has been made for the issuance of a search warrant determine that the affidavit is insufficient, he can require that sworn testimony be offered to supplement the warrant or can demand that the affidavit be amended to disclose additional facts, if a search warrant is to be issued. People v. Brethauer, 174 Colo. 29, 482 P.2d 369 (1971).

Affidavit containing stale information. Although crimes were perpetrated eight months prior to application for search warrant, because officers proceeded with all due diligence upon discovery of information upon which to base request for a search warrant, the affidavit was sufficient to establish probable cause. People v. Cullen, 695 P.2d 750 (Colo. App. 1984).

Anticipatory warrants are barred by language of rule and identical language in § 16-3-303 requiring that property to be searched for, seized, or inspected ''is located at, in, or upon'' premise, person, place, or thing to be searched. People v. Poirez, 904 P.2d 880 (Colo. 1995).

D. Finding of Probable Cause.

Police entry into individual's private domain made only upon showing of probable cause. It is only upon a showing of probable cause that the legal doors are opened to allow the police to gain official entry into an individual's domain of privacy for the purpose of conducting a search or to make an official seizure under the constitution. People v. Brethauer, 174 Colo. 29, 482 P.2d 369 (1971).

Not necessary to specifically allege that possession of articles illegal. To establish the grounds in an affidavit it is not necessary that the person seeking the search warrant specifically allege therein the conclusion that the possession of the articles is illegal. People v. Whisenhunt, 173 Colo. 109, 476 P.2d 997 (1970); People v. Martin, 176 Colo. 322, 490 P.2d 924 (1971).

Or that the use thereof is illegal. Where an affidavit identifies the articles in question and alleges where they are located, but does not state that the possession or use thereof is illegal, the fact that the illegality is not set forth in the affidavit does not prevent the issuance of a search warrant. People v. Martin, 176 Colo. 322, 490 P.2d 924 (1971).

But warrant issues upon judge finding grounds established, or probable cause therefor. This rule provides that if the judge is satisfied from the facts alleged in the affidavit that the existence of one or more of the grounds for the issuance of a warrant has been established or that there is probable cause to believe that one or more grounds for issuing the warrant exist, then it should issue. People v. Whisenhunt, 173 Colo. 109, 476 P.2d 997 (1970); People v. Martin, 176 Colo. 322, 490 P.2d 924 (1971).

Warrant authorized upon connection being provided between evidence and criminal activity. One test for authorizing a search warrant for the seizure of certain articles is: Does the evidence in itself or with facts known to the officer prior to the search, excluding any facts subsequently developed, provide a connection between the evidence and criminal activity? People v. Henry, 173 Colo. 523, 482 P.2d 357 (1971).

Probable cause exists where facts warrant reasonable belief offense committed. Probable cause exists where the facts and circumstances within the officers' knowledge, and of which they had reasonably trustworthy information, are sufficient in themselves to warrant a man of reasonable caution in the belief that an offense has been, or is being, committed. People v. Brethauer, 174 Colo. 29, 482 P.2d 369 (1971); Finley v. People, 176 Colo. 1, 488 P.2d 883 (1971).

Moreover, in dealing with probable cause, one deals with probabilities; these are not technical; they are the factual and practical considerations of everyday life on which reasonable and prudent men, not legal technicians, act. People v. Brethauer, 174 Colo. 29, 482 P.2d 369 (1971); Finley v. People, 176 Colo. 11, 488 P.2d 883 (1971).

Hence, the odor of a decomposing body is certainly probable cause for obtaining a search warrant. Condon v. People, 176 Colo. 212, 489 P.2d 1297 (1971).

Affidavit must support probable cause finding as to each place searched. The fact that places to be searched were apartments rather than single-family residences does not alter the rule that an affidavit must support a finding of probable cause as to each separate place to be searched. People v. Arnold, 181 Colo. 432, 509 P.2d 1248 (1973).

Affidavit detailing various items at named address presents sufficient facts showing probable cause. Where the affidavit of a police officer in support of a search warrant sets forth at length the various items of information regarding the presence of certain articles at a named address, elaborating in detail on the items of police surveillance and discovery of such, such an affidavit presents ample and sufficient facts showing probable cause for the issuance of the search warrant. People v. Ferris, 173 Colo. 494, 480 P.2d 552 (1971).

Officers rightly in defendant's residence entitled to seize stolen items in plain view. If the supporting affidavit was sufficient to provide probable cause for issuance of a warrant, are the searching officers are rightfully in the defendant's residence, then the officers are entitled to seize items in plain view which they recognize as stolen. People v. Espinoza, 195 Colo. 127, 575 P.2d 851 (1978).

Even if not false, statements of officer-affiants may be so misleading that a finding of probable cause may be deemed erroneous. People v. Winden, 689 P.2d 578 (Colo. 1984).

Probable cause to issue a search warrant for a residence was sufficiently established by affidavit that was based primarily on information provided by confidential police informant and only thinly corroborated by independent police investigation. The ''totality of circumstances'' test for determining whether probable cause existed for issuing warrant was met. People v. Paquin, 811 P.2d 394 (Colo. 1991).

Where only non-criminal activity is corroborated by independent police investigation, the question of whether probable cause exists focuses on the degree of suspicion that attaches to the types of corroborated non-criminal acts and whether the informant provides details that are not easily obtained. People v. Pacheco, 175 P.3d 91 (Colo. 2006).

E. Informers.

Affidavit for search warrant based on an informant's information must meet a two-pronged test requiring that the officer establish: (1) The underlying circumstances from which the informant concluded what he claims, and (2) some of the underlying circumstances from which the officer concludes that the informant is credible or his information reliable. People v. Peppers, 172 Colo. 556, 475 P.2d 337 (1970); People v. Glaubman, 175 Colo. 41, 485 P.2d 711 (1971); Stork v. People, 175 Colo. 324, 488 P.2d 76 (1971).

The standards of probable cause for issuance of search warrant based on information given to affiant police officer by unidentified informant are that the affidavit must: (1) Allege facts from which the issuing magistrate can independently determine whether there are reasonable grounds to believe that an illegal activity is being carried on in the place to be searched; and (2) set forth sufficient facts to allow the magistrate to determine independently if the informer is credible or his information reliable. People v. Peschong, 181 Colo. 29, 506 P.2d 1232 (1973); People v. Harris, 182 Colo. 75, 510 P.2d 1374 (1973); People v. Baird, 182 Colo. 284, 512 P.2d 629 (1973); People v. Masson, 185 Colo. 65, 521 P.2d 1246 (1974).

The two-pronged test which emphasizes the basis upon which an informer's tip will provide a foundation for the issuance of a search warrant requires that the affidavit set forth: (1) The underlying circumstances necessary to enable the magistrate independently to judge the validity of the informant's conclusion; and (2) support of the affiant's claim that the informant was credible or his information reliable. People v. McGill, 187 Colo. 65, 528 P.2d 386 (1974); People v. Dailey, 639 P.2d 1068 (Colo. 1982).

And informant's personal knowledge satisfies first prong of test. Personal observation by informant of the objects of the search within the place to be searched satisfied the first prong of establishing probable cause. People v. Ward, 181 Colo. 246, 508 P.2d 1257 (1973); People v. Harris, 182 Colo. 75, 510 P.2d 1374 (1973).

The requirement that the affidavit for a search warrant set forth underlying circumstances so as to enable a magistrate to independently judge the validity of the informant's conclusion that criminal activity exists can be satisfied by the assertion of personal knowledge of the informant. People v. Montoya, 189 Colo. 106, 538 P.2d 1332 (1975).

Where the affiant states that the informant personally observed illegal property in the premises to be searched, this statement is sufficient to permit the issuing magistrate to determine independently that there were reasonable grounds to believe that illegal activity was being carried on in the place to be searched. People v. Harris, 182 Colo. 75, 510 P.2d 1374 (1973).

Where it appears that the informant personally saw an illegal narcotic on the premises, that he was given an illegal narcotic by someone on the premises and that he observed other illegal narcotics at the time he left the premises, these facts are sufficient to allow a magistrate to determine whether there was probable cause to determine presence of illegal activity. People v. Baird, 182 Colo. 284, 512 P.2d 629 (1973).

But informant's information insufficient where place searched not connected with illegal substance. An affidavit, while stating that an informant was present when defendants sold contraband, but does not state that he was ever in the defendants' place, that he had seen such contraband in the defendants' place, or that he had witnessed the sale of such in the defendants' place is not sufficient information upon which to base a search warrant of defendants' place. People v. Massey, 178 Colo. 141, 495 P.2d 1141 (1972).

Also, affidavit insufficient if no explanation of how information received. An affidavit is insufficient to support a finding of probable cause where the officer does not more than state that he received information from an investigator who received the information from a reliable source and there is nothing in the affidavit concerning personal knowledge of the facts on the part of either officer, the facts upon which the informant based his information, or the circumstances from which the officers could conclude that the informant is credible or his information reliable. People v. Baird, 172 Colo. 112, 470 P.2d 20 (1970).

An affidavit does not meet the test if there is no explanation as to how the police obtained the information, nor does the affidavit set forth who made the observation or whether the information was obtained from an eyewitness or from a person who received the information indirectly. People v. Myers, 175 Colo. 109, 485 P.2d 877 (1971).

Magistrate must be shown facts to form basis for believing informant's information reliable. Some facts must also be shown to a magistrate upon which he can form a basis for believing information supplied by an informer is credible or the informer reliable. People v. Massey, 178 Colo. 141, 495 P.2d 1141 (1972).

There must be a comprehensive statement of underlying facts upon which the magistrate can make an independent determination that the informant is credible or his information reliable. People v. Aragon, 187 Colo. 206, 529 P.2d 644 (1974).

And merely stating informant known to be reliable does not establish his credibility. An affidavit does not establish the credibility of an informant by merely stating that the informant is known to be reliable, nor does an affidavit establish the credibility of an informant by merely stating that the informant is known to be reliable based on ''past information'' supplied by the informer which has proved to be accurate. Although the words ''past information'' might conjure up in the mind of the officer some knowledge of the underlying circumstances from which the officer might conclude that the informant is reliable, the judge has not been apprised of such facts, and consequently, he cannot make a disinterested determination based upon such facts. People v. Brethauer, 174 Colo. 29, 482 P.2d 369 (1971).

As a basis for issuing a search warrant, the mere assertion of reliability is not sufficient to establish an informant's credibility. People v. Aragon, 187 Colo. 206, 529 P.2d 644 (1974).

An affidavit for a search warrant seeking to show an informant's credibility is not satisfactory by merely stating that the informant is reliable, or that he has supplied information in the past which proved to be accurate. Nor are irrelevant, albeit correct, details sufficient. People v. Montoya, 189 Colo. 106, 538 P.2d 1332 (1975).

Where the only recital in the affidavit for a search warrant bearing upon the informant's credibility or the reliability of the information supplied was as follows: ''That the confidential informant has related information to the affiant regarding several previous narcotics and dangerous drugs sellers and users which has been confirmed and proven reliable by the affiant'', this was totally conclusory and devoid of details sufficient to support an independent finding of credibility or reliability. People v. Bowen, 189 Colo. 126, 538 P.2d 1336 (1975).

Neither does allegation of suspect's criminal reputation. An allegation of suspect's criminal reputation standing alone does not set forth sufficient facts to allow a magistrate to determine independently reliability of information supplied by an informant. People v. Peschong, 181 Colo. 29, 506 P.2d 1232 (1973).

But three ways to allow magistrate to determine reliability of informant's information. There are at least three ways in which an affidavit might allow a magistrate to determine the reliability of an informant's information so as to issue a search warrant: (1) By stating that the informant had previously given reliable information; (2) by presenting the information in detail which clearly manifests its reliability; and (3) by presenting facts which corroborate the informant's information. People v. Masson, 185 Colo. 65, 521 P.2d 1246 (1974).

Reliability of informant. Where an affidavit is based upon an informer's tip, the totality of the circumstances inquiry looks to all indicia of reliability, including the informer's veracity, the basis of his knowledge, the amount of detail provided by the informer, and whether the information provided was current. People v. Leftwich, 869 P.2d 1260 (Colo. 1994); People v. Randolph, 4 P.3d 477 (Colo. 2000); People v. Pacheco, 175 P.3d 91 (Colo. 2006).

Assertion that informant previously furnished solid information of criminal activity shows his credibility. The requirement that the affiant-police officer support his request for a search warrant with information showing that the informant was credible, or his information was reliable, may be satisfied by an assertion that the informant has previously furnished solid material information of specified criminal activity. People v. Montoya, 189 Colo. 106, 538 P.2d 1332 (1975).

Previously furnished information leading to arrests sufficient to find informant reliable. Where the affidavit related that the informant had, within the past 14 months, supplied information which led to the arrest and conviction of an individual for possession of a narcotic drug, and that the informant had, within the past 24 hours, supplied information which resulted in arrests and the seizure of a quantity of marijuana, this information was sufficient to permit the issuing magistrate to find that the informant was reliable. People v. Harris, 182 Colo. 75, 510 P.2d 1374 (1973).

Where the affidavit states that the informant has ''given information in the past that has resulted in seizures and arrests'' and that the informant ''reported that he has just left this location and observed the described articles'', then a fair reading of these statements compels one to conclude that the informant is personally aware of the location and the identity of the articles and additional details, such as the name of the person who led the informant to the location of the articles; these constitute examples of that type of essential information that allows the judge who issues the warrant to determine the underlying circumstances from which the officer who signs the affidavit concluded that these articles are on the premises.

Where informant had furnished information which ''has been the cause of approximately 20 narcotic and dangerous drug arrests in the past year'', the magistrate could independently conclude that the police would not repeatedly accept information from one who has not proven by experience to be reliable, and hence, the magistrate could determine that the informant was credible. People v. Baird, 182 Colo. 284, 512 P.2d 629 (1973).

Additionally, reliability of informant can be corroborated by descriptions in police reports. Where defendant contends that an affidavit does not contain sufficient corroborative information as to reliability of informant, such is without merit when the similarity of descriptions given by the informant, as well as by police employee, of articles matches descriptions contained in police (e.g., theft) reports; this is sufficient independent proof of reliability of informant, and employee, and constitutes sufficient probable cause for issuance of a warrant. People v. Greathouse, 173 Colo. 103, 476 P.2d 259 (1970).

Citizen-informer not considered on same basis as ordinary informant. Colorado follows the citizen-informer rule and will recognize that a citizen who is identified by name and address and was a witness to criminal activity cannot be considered on the same basis as the ordinary informant. People v. Glaubman, 175 Colo. 41, 485 P.2d 711 (1971).

And not necessary that affidavit contains facts showing reliability of citizen-informer. Where the citizen-informant rule applies to information contained in an affidavit for issuance of a search warrant, it is not necessary that the affidavit contain a statement of facts showing the reliability of the citizen-informant, as is the case when the informant is confidential and unidentified. People v. Schamber, 182 Colo. 355, 513 P.2d 205 (1973).

Totality of circumstances test adopted. People v. Pannebaker, 714 P.2d 904 (Colo. 1986).

VI. ISSUANCE, CONTENTS, EXECUTION, AND RETURN.

A. Issuance and Contents.

Affidavit must support finding of probable cause as to each warrant issued. While more than one search warrant may be issued on the basis of a single affidavit, the affidavit must support a finding of probable cause as to each separate warrant or each separate place to be searched. People v. Arnold, 181 Colo. 432, 509 P.2d 1248 (1973).

Search warrant should not be broader than the justifying basis of facts. People v. Clavey, 187 Colo. 305, 530 P.2d 491 (1975).

Description sufficient where person presented with warrant knows place authorized to be searched. The description in a warrant is sufficient where any person, upon being presented with the warrant, would know immediately in which place the search is authorized. People v. Peppers, 172 Colo. 556, 475 P.2d 337 (1970).

And number of place searched not required where location specifically indicated. It is unrealistic to require the technicality of indicating the number of the place to be searched when the location is otherwise indicated with reasonable specificity. People v. Peppers, 172 Colo. 556, 475 P.2d 337 (1970).

Warrant describing house as within Denver when in fact the house lay one-half block outside Denver was not for that reason invalid. People v. Martinez, 898 P.2d 28 (Colo. 1995).

Illicit property may be described generally. If the purpose of search is to seize not a specific property but any property of a specified character which by reason of its character is illicit or contraband, a specific particular description of the property is unnecessary, and it may be described generally as to its nature or character. People v. Benson, 176 Colo. 421, 490 P.2d 1287 (1971).

Such as "a quantity of narcotic drugs". Where the affidavit contains information which justifies the magistrate in believing that upon a search of the particular premises not only marijuana but other narcotics might be found, a warrant describing ''a quantity of narcotic drugs'' is in order. People v. Benson, 176 Colo. 421, 490 P.2d 1287 (1971).

Historically, problem has arisen in execution of warrant at night. Historically, there has not been a question about executing a search warrant during the daytime; the problem has arisen in the execution of a warrant at night when the warrant did not specifically so authorize such execution. People v. Henry, 173 Colo. 523, 482 P.2d 357 (1971).

Thus, under rule, warrant without specified time may be executed in daytime. Under this rule, when a search warrant does not specify the time at which it is to be served, or that it may be served at any time, its validity is not affected, and it may be executed in the daytime. People v. Henry, 173 Colo. 523, 482 P.2d 357 (1971).

Or at any time. Unless and until a warrant specifically indicates that it must be served in the daytime, it may be served at any time. People v. Singleton, 174 Colo. 138, 482 P.2d 978 (1971).

Language sufficient to identify affiant. People v. Singleton, 174 Colo. 138, 482 P.2d 978 (1971).

B. Execution and Return.

The fourth amendment generally requires officers to knock before executing a search warrant except when the warrant specifically authorizes a ''no-knock'' or the particular facts and circumstances known to them at the time the warrant is executed adequately justify dispensing with the requirement to knock. In this case the officers had reasonable suspicion that knocking would result in destruction of the drugs subject to seizure. People v. King, 292 P.3d 959 (Colo. App. 2011).

Execution means searching premises authorized to be searched in warrant. The execution of a search warrant means carrying out the judicial command of the warrant to conduct a search of the premises authorized to be searched. Mayorga v. People, 178 Colo. 106, 496 P.2d 304 (1972).

Warrant directed to ''authorized'' officers sufficient, as name of specific officer not required. The contention that a search warrant which directs ''all sheriffs and peace officers'' is improperly directed and should be specifically directed to officers in a certain county is without merit where it is implicit after considering all the language of the warrant that its direction or command is to officers in a certain county and that in this respect it complies with section (d). People v. Ferris, 173 Colo. 494, 480 P.2d 552 (1971).

A search warrant addressed to ''any person authorized by law to execute warrants within the state of Colorado'' complies with the provisions of this rule and is not deemed insufficient merely because it does not contain the name of the officer who would execute it. People v. Henry, 173 Colo. 523, 482 P.2d 357 (1971).

Rule's requirements relating to making of return and inventory are ministerial in nature. People v. Schmidt, 172 Colo. 285, 473 P.2d 698 (1970).

And the failure to make a proper return can always be corrected at a later time in the proceedings. Deficiencies, if any exist in the return, can always be corrected by order of court. People v. Schmidt, 172 Colo. 285, 473 P.2d 698 (1970).

Technical perfection not required. Where warrant specified a street address that was adjacent to defendant's residence and owned by the same owner, and defendant's residence was not itself searched, both the warrant and the search were valid. People v. Schrader, 898 P.2d 33 (Colo. 1995).

Not every violation of section (c)(1) requires suppression of evidence under the exclusionary rule. Where search warrant was executed one-half block outside officers' jurisdiction, but city boundaries were not clear and officers promptly notified the proper authorities when the error was discovered, no violation of defendant's constitutional rights occurred. People v. Martinez, 898 P.2d 28 (Colo. 1995).

VII. MOTION TO SUPPRESS EVIDENCE.

A. In General.

Annotator's note. For further annotations concerning search and seizure, see § 7 of art. II, Colo. Const., part 3 of article 3 of title 16, and Crim. P. 26.

Previously, evidence obtained in unlawful search was admissible in criminal prosecution. Until June 19, 1961, when the supreme court of the United States decided Mapp v. Ohio, 367 U.S. 643, 81 S. Ct. 1684, 6 L. Ed. 2d 1081 (1961), the rule in Colorado was that evidence, even though obtained as a result of an unlawful search and seizure, was admissible in a prosecution for a criminal offense. Hernandez v. People, 153 Colo. 316, 385 P.2d 996 (1963).

But now is inadmissible. The fruits of an unlawful search are, by Mapp v. Ohio, 367 U.S. 643, 81 S. Ct. 1684, 6 L. Ed. 2d 1081 (1961), and by this rule, inadmissible in evidence. Hernandez v. People, 153 Colo. 316, 385 P.2d 996 (1963).

This rule specifically provides for motion to suppress. A motion to suppress is excluded by definition from Crim. P. 12(b), but section (e) of this rule specifically provides for such a motion. Adargo v. People, 173 Colo. 323, 478 P.2d 308 (1970).

Only purpose served by suppressing evidence is preventing use by prosecution. The only purpose that can be served by suppressing the evidence which is seized by the police is to prevent its use by the prosecution at the trial. Lucero v. People, 164 Colo. 247, 434 P.2d 128 (1967).

Habeas corpus is not correct vehicle to raise the issue of illegal evidence having been secured through wiretapping. Ferrell v. Vogt, 161 Colo. 549, 423 P.2d 844 (1967).

Not every violation of section (c)(1) requires suppression of evidence under the exclusionary rule. Where search warrant was executed one-half block outside officers' jurisdiction, but city boundaries were not clear and officers promptly notified the proper authorities when the error was discovered, no violation of defendant's constitutional rights occurred. People v. Martinez, 898 P.2d 28 (Colo. 1995).

Trial court erred in holding that defendant abandoned the motions to suppress when he failed to appear at the suppression hearings. The court could have heard and decided the motions on the merits though defendant was absent. People v. Dashner, 77 P.3d 787 (Colo. App. 2003).

Defendant's incriminating statements were obtained in violation of his Miranda rights, and trial court's order to suppress the statements was appropriate. A reasonable person in defendant's circumstances would have felt deprived of his or her freedom of action in a manner similar to a formal arrest. Therefore, defendant was in custody and subject to interrogation without being advised of his Miranda rights. People v. Holt, 233 P.3d 1194 (Colo. 2010).

B. Aggrieved Party.

Defendant has the burden of showing that he is an aggrieved person under the provisions of this rule. People v. Towers, 176 Colo. 295, 490 P.2d 302 (1971).

And where burden not established, motion denied. Where the defendant does not meet his burden and does not establish that he has standing to object to the search and seizure, his motion to suppress is properly denied. People v. Towers, 176 Colo. 295, 490 P.2d 302 (1971).

Prosecutor bears no burden at suppression hearing to prove that defendant was the victim of the claimed illegal police conduct because, when a defendant files a motion to suppress claiming his or her fourth amendment rights were violated, this initial allegation suffices to establish that he or she was the victim or aggrieved party of the alleged invasion of privacy. People v. Jorlantin, 196 P.3d 258 (Colo. 2008).

Defendant legitimately on premises when search occurs possesses standing to object. A defendant has standing to object to a search or to a seizure if he is legitimately on the premises when the search occurs. People v. Towers, 176 Colo. 295, 490 P.2d 302 (1971).

When fruits of search to be used against him. Anyone legitimately on the premises where a search occurs may challenge its legality by way of a motion to suppress, when its fruits are proposed to be used against him. Lanford v. People, 176 Colo. 109, 489 P.2d 210 (1971).

Including a child subject to delinquency adjudication. Since a child subject to a delinquency adjudication is entitled to same constitutional safeguards as adult accused of crime, evidence obtained as result of unlawful search should be suppressed. In re People in Interest of B.M.C., 32 Colo. App. 79, 506 P.2d 409 (1973).

Hence, defendant "aggrieved" where search occurs in sister's home while defendant there. Where the search and seizure which a defendant challenges occurred in the home of his sister and the defendant was there with the permission of his sister, the defendant qualifies under this rule as a person "aggrieved", where the search, if valid, produces evidence which is relevant to the issue of his guilt, for under the circumstances, he has standing to have the question of the validity of the search determined upon its merits. Adargo v. People, 173 Colo. 323, 478 P.2d 308 (1970).

One not legitimately on the premises has no standing to move to suppress the fruits of a search and seizure of those premises. People v. Trusty, 183 Colo. 291, 516 P.2d 423 (1973).

And defendant cannot urge standing on basis of fleeting presence before search. Where a defendant neither claims nor has a possessory interest in premises and has no personal expectation of privacy, he cannot successfully urge standing on the basis of his fleeting presence in the premises before the search. People v. Towers, 176 Colo. 295, 490 P.2d 302 (1971).

State precluded from denying defendant's possessory interest when possession essential element of offense. When possession of the seized evidence is itself an essential element of the offense charged, the state is precluded from denying that the defendant has the requisite possessory interest to challenge the admission of the evidence. People v. Towers, 176 Colo. 295, 490 P.2d 302 (1971).

Defendant did not have automatic standing to challenge automobile search. Where the defendant was found unconscious inside an automobile which upon a search was found to contain the deceased's body, and it was not an instance where the basis for defendant's prosecution was possession of the vehicle, the defendant did not have automatic standing to challenge the vehicle's search and seizure. People v. Trusty, 183 Colo. 291, 516 P.2d 423 (1973).

Likewise, where defendant has abandoned a car, he has no standing to suppress the evidence seized in a warrantless search of the car as "a person aggrieved". Kurtz v. People, 177 Colo. 306, 494 P.2d 97 (1972).

A person who has abandoned a vehicle is not an "aggrieved" person under section (e) and has no standing to suppress evidence seized in a search of that vehicle. People v. Parker, 189 Colo. 370, 541 P.2d 74 (1975).

Jail not place where defendant can claim constitutional immunity from search. A public jail is not the equivalent of a man's "house" or a place where he can claim constitutional immunity from search or seizure of his person, his papers, or his effects. A jail shares none of the attributes of privacy of a home, an automobile, an office, or a hotel room. In prison, official surveillance has traditionally been the order of the day. Moore v. People, 171 Colo. 338, 467 P.2d 50 (1970).

C. Grounds.

1. In General.

Motion has limited reach. A brief examination of the five grounds that support a motion to suppress discloses the limited reach of the motion. People v. Fidler, 175 Colo. 90, 485 P.2d 725 (1971).

A court cannot exclude all of a witness's testimony based on a violation of the constitution. The court has the authority to suppress only the tainted evidence, not the untainted evidence. People v. Cowart, 244 P.3d 1199 (Colo. 2010).

Entrapment does not present a question of admissibility of evidence, but presents rather the proposition that a conviction may not be obtained, no matter what the evidence, where the authorities instigated the acts complained of, and this is generally a question of fact for a jury; therefore, entrapment is not within the scope of section (e) of this rule, which deals solely with the question of admissibility. People v. Patterson, 175 Colo. 19, 485 P.2d 494 (1971).

Absence of "chain of evidence" not within rule's perimeters. When the defendant argues that there is no ''chain of evidence'' to establish that a specimen analyzed is one obtained from the defendant, then, in the absence of any averment of constitutional overtones for this claim, this ground does not fall within the perimeters set forth in section (e) of this rule, and to which interlocutory appeals are limited. People v. Kokesh, 175 Colo. 206, 486 P.2d 429 (1971).

Where no constitutional rights invaded under official authority, motion denied. Where no constitutional rights are invaded by or under color of official authority, a motion to suppress will be denied. People v. Benson, 176 Colo. 421, 490 P.2d 1287 (1971).

Rule not expanded to exclude evidence obtained by private persons. Even though the rule as to the exclusion of evidence obtained by an unreasonable search and seizure has been broadened and expanded, it has not been expanded to the extent that evidence obtained by persons not acting in concert with either state or federal officials must be excluded. People v. Benson, 176 Colo. 421, 490 P.2d 1287 (1971).

But question whether items seized inadmissible on other grounds determined at trial. The question of whether the items seized are inadmissible in evidence on grounds other than those specified in this rule must be determined at the time of trial. People v. Towers, 176 Colo. 295, 490 P.2d 302 (1971).

Rule applicable to evaluate validity of arrest prior to search. This rule does apply when the validity of an arrest must be evaluated before the court can rule upon a motion to suppress items seized in a search incident to the arrest. People v. Lott, 197 Colo. 78, 589 P.2d 945 (1979).

Evidence need not be suppressed if it is obtained in violation of a statutory provision unless it also amounts to a constitutional violation. People v. Mandez, 997 P.2d 1254 (Colo. App. 1999).

Police search of cloth glove not unconstitutional. Like the plain view doctrine, the plain feel doctrine allows police to seize contraband discovered through the sense of touch during an otherwise lawful search; therefore, trial court erred in suppressing evidence. People v. Brant, 252 P.3d 459 (Colo. 2011).

Where search warrant validly is obtained, motion to suppress evidence is not valid. People v. Buttorff, 179 Colo. 406, 500 P.2d 979 (1972).

Preservation of hazardous substances not required. The destruction of evidence rule cannot be applied mechanically in a way that endangers the lives of public safety officers or forces the police to preserve hazardous substances which cannot be stored safely. People v. Clements, 661 P.2d 267 (Colo. 1983).

Such as high explosives. The prosecution does not have the duty to preserve high explosives, homemade bombs or dangerous materials if that requirement would endanger lives and the public safety. People v. Clements, 661 P.2d 267 (Colo. 1983).

Failure for good cause to comply with section (c)(1), which requires affidavits for search warrants to be sworn to or affirmed before the issuing judge, does not constitute a constitutional violation that automatically triggers the exclusionary rule. People v. Fournier, 793 P.2d 1176 (Colo. 1990).

2. Illegal Seizure Without Warrant.

Not every search that is conducted without search warrant is "unreasonable" or "illegal" as those words are used in the United States Constitution and in this rule. More v. People, 171 Colo. 338, 467 P.2d 50 (1970).

Nor does Mapp decision exclude all evidence incident to arrest without warrant. The decision of the supreme court of the United States in Mapp v. Ohio, 367 U.S. 643, 81 S. Ct. 1684, 6 L. Ed. 2d 1081 (1961), went no further than to exclude in state courts the use of evidence obtained by unreasonable search and seizure prohibited by the fourth amendment; it does not exclude all evidence which might be obtained as an incident to a lawful arrest, nor does it preclude admission of all evidence which may have been obtained without the sanction of a search warrant. Peters v. People, 151 Colo. 35, 376 P.2d 170 (1962).

But probable cause requirements are at least as strict in warrantless searches as in those pursuant to a warrant. People v. Thompson, 185 Colo. 208, 523 P.2d 128 (1974).

Where search illegal at inception, nothing intervening can render search legal. Where a search is illegal at its inception, nothing intervening, including the last minute obtaining of a search warrant, can render any part of the search legal. Condon v. People, 176 Colo. 212, 489 P.2d 1297 (1971).

But where warrantless entry and arrest legal, evidence seized not inadmissible. Where warrantless entry and arrest are based on probable cause and a search warrant is issued subsequent to the entry and arrest, the evidence seized is not inadmissible because the entry and arrest were without warrant. People v. Vaughns, 175 Colo. 369, 489 P.2d 591 (1971).

Except where supposed legitimate entry utterly vitiated by method of entry. Where any supposed legitimate entry is utterly vitiated by the method of entry, the evidence observed by the officers is tainted, cannot be used as the basis for probable cause to arrest or seized as incident to a lawful arrest, and is therefore properly suppressed. People v. Godinas, 176 Colo. 391, 490 P.2d 945 (1971).

Warrant needed where article believed concealed. A belief, no matter how well-founded, that an article sought is concealed in a dwelling furnishes no justification for the search of the dwelling without a lawful warrant. People v. McGahey, 179 Colo. 401, 500 P.2d 977 (1972).

Defendant's allegedly criminal acts were sufficiently attenuated from any illegal conduct of sheriff's deputies so that exclusion of evidence was not appropriate. Evidence of a new crime committed in response to an unlawful trespass is admissible. People v. Doke, 171 P.3d 237 (Colo. 2007).

"Emergency doctrine" tested on particular facts of each case. In applying the ''emergency doctrine'' to warrantless searches each case must be tested on its own particular facts. Condon v. People, 176 Colo. 212, 489 P.2d 1297 (1971).

And the test is reasonableness under the circumstances. Condon v. People, 176 Colo. 212, 489 P.2d 1297 (1971).

But odor of decomposing body not emergency. The detection of an odor which might be that of a decomposing body does not create, in and of itself, an emergency sufficient to justify a warrantless search. Condon v. People, 176 Colo. 212, 489 P.2d 1297 (1971).

Burden of proving probable cause for arrest without warrant is on the prosecution. People v. Chacon, 177 Colo. 368, 494 P.2d 79 (1972).

As is burden to establish probable cause for warrantless search. The burden is upon the state at a suppression hearing to establish that probable cause existed which would justify a warrantless search of the defendant's person. People v. Ware, 174 Colo. 419, 484 P.2d 103 (1971).

Burden of proof for warrantless arrest and search. Where defendant is arrested without a warrant and moves to suppress evidence seized in course of his arrest, burden of proof is upon prosecution to prove constitutional validity of arrest and search. People v. Crow, 789 P.2d 1104 (Colo. 1990).

"Reasonable" search may be made in the place where a lawful arrest occurs in order to find and seize articles connected with the crime as its fruits or as the means by which it was committed. Hernandez v. People, 153 Colo. 316, 385 P.2d 996 (1963).

And police entitled to made contemporaneous search of person. When a person is lawfully arrested, the police have the right, without a search warrant, to made a contemporaneous search of the person of the accused for weapons or for the fruits of or implements used to commit a crime. People v. Vigil, 175 Colo. 421, 489 P.2d 593 (1971).

And such searches not violative of constitutions. Even if there is a search, where the arrest is legal the search is not violative of the state and federal constitutions regarding unreasonable search and seizure. People v. Clark, 173 Colo. 129, 476 P.2d 564 (1970).

So long as not too much time between search and arrest. The lapse of too much time between the inception of the search and the arrest falls short of the requirement that the two acts (search and arrest) be nearly simultaneous and constitute for all practical purposes one transaction. People v. Drumright, 172 Colo. 577, 475 P.2d 329 (1970).

Search incident to arrest limited to evidence related to offense. The scope of a warrantless evidentiary search incident to arrest is limited to evidence related to offense for which arrest is made. In re People in Interest of B. M. C., 32 Colo. App. 79, 506 P.2d 409 (1973).

And extends to things under accused's immediate control and place of arrest. The right to search and seize without a search warrant incident to a lawful arrest extends to things under the accused's immediate control and to an extent, depending on the circumstances of the case, to the place where he is arrested. People v. Vigil, 175 Colo. 421, 489 P.2d 593 (1971).

Including police station. A police station, immediately following an arrest, cannot be held to be too remote from the place of arrest in a search and seizure case. Glass v. People, 177 Colo. 267, 493 P.2d 1347 (1972).

Search following arrest may also be conducted as inventory procedure. A warrantless search of defendant's purse that followed her arrest for drug use and the seizure of the contraband found therein may be upheld either as a search incident to an arrest or as an inventory procedure conducted prior to incarceration. Avalos v. People, 179 Colo. 88, 498 P.2d 1141 (1972).

Where probable cause for a warrantless arrest is lacking, subsequent search is invalid. People v. Trujillo, 179 Colo. 428, 500 P.2d 1176 (1972).

And fact contraband found in search does not make arrest valid. Where police officers when they arrest a defendant have no idea of what the charge is for which they are arresting him, the fact that contraband is found in an illegal search does not make such an arrest valid. Gallegos v. People, 157 Colo. 173, 401 P.2d 613 (1965).

Fruits of unlawful arrest inadmissible. The prosecution's failure to present evidence to support a determination that the arrest of the defendant was supported by probable cause leaves the court with no alternative but to hold that the arrest was unlawful and its fruits inadmissible. People v. Chacon, 177 Colo. 368, 494 P.2d 79 (1972).

And the defendant's motion to suppress should be granted where the police conducted a warrantless search and arrest without probable cause. People v. Henderson, 175 Colo. 400, 487 P.2d 1108 (1971).

Test of admissibility of evidence seized in lawful search following unlawful search is whether, granting establishment of the primary illegality, the evidence to which instant objection is made has been arrived at by exploitation of that illegality, or instead by means sufficiently distinguishable to be purged of the primary taint. People v. Hannah, 183 Colo. 9, 514 P.2d 320 (1973).

"Pat down" or "stop and frisk" search justified for potentially armed individual. It is well established that an officer may conduct a limited search for weapons (a so-called ''pat down'' or ''stop and frisk'') for his own safety when he is justified in believing that he is dealing with a potentially armed and dangerous individual. Finley v. People, 176 Colo. 1, 488 P.2d 883 (1971).

Limited searches of person for weapons during investigative detention, where probable cause for arrest is lacking, is permissible, but there must be: (a) Some reason for the officer to confront the citizen in the first place; (b) something in the circumstances, including the citizen's reaction to the confrontation, must give the officer reason to suspect that the citizen may be armed and, thus, dangerous to the officer or others; and (c) the search must be limited to a frisk directed at discovery and appropriation of weapons and not at evidence in general. People v. Martineau, 185 Colo. 194, 523 P.2d 126 (1974).

And evidence of crime uncovered is competent and admissible. Where the search was limited to a frisk directed at the discovery and appropriation of weapons, and not to uncover evidence as such, evidence of a crime having thus been lawfully uncovered, it is competent and admissible in evidence as relevant proof of the charges of which defendant is accused. People v. Martineau, 185 Colo. 194, 523 P.2d 126 (1974).

Objects in plain view of officer subject to seizure. Objects falling in the plain view of an officer who has a right to be in the position to have that view are subject to seizure and may be introduced in evidence. People v. McGahey, 179 Colo. 401, 500 P.2d 977 (1972).

Where the record fails to support defendant's contention that the officers were engaged in a search when they observed the evidence in plain view, suppression is not required. Blincoe v. People, 178 Colo. 34, 494 P.2d 1285 (1972).

As such does not constitute a search. The discovery of the fruits of a crime or of contraband lying free in the open does not constitute any kind of search. Alire v. People, 157 Colo. 103, 402 P.2d 610 (1965).

Police protective search of passenger compartment of vehicle justified. People v. Brant, 252 P.3d 459 (Colo. 2011).

Applying the "plain feel" doctrine, police properly seized evidence discovered in cloth glove. People v. Brant, 252 P.3d 459 (Colo. 2011).

Validity of automobile searches turn upon their own peculiar circumstances. Kurtz v. People, 177 Colo. 306, 494 P.2d 97 (1972).

Police officer entitled to approach suspicious parked automobile and look inside. Where a police officer approaches a parked automobile, in which the defendant is seated, he has a right to flash his light inside, and any contraband which he sees in the automobile and seizes is admissible against the defendant. People v. Shriver, 186 Colo. 405, 528 P.2d 242 (1974).

Plain view exception applies to contraband in defendant's home observed by officers using a flashlight to view inside defendant's residence. Officers who were lawfully on defendant's porch when defendant left front door open could use flashlights to peer into the home. The fact that the officers used their flashlights to see inside defendant's home did not transform their plain view observations into an illegal search because, had it been daylight, the contraband on the table inside the home would have been plainly visible to the officers. People v. Glick, 250 P.3d 578 (Colo. 2011).

Lawful to stop vehicle for investigatory purposes, and search where probable cause. Where police officer obtained probable cause to search a vehicle and seize evidence in the process of making a lawful stop for threshold investigatory purposes, the defendant's motion to suppress this evidence was properly denied. People v. Lucero, 182 Colo. 39, 511 P.2d 468 (1973).

Stopping automobile not "unreasonable" where probable cause offense committed. Stopping an automobile and conducting a search and seizure is not ''unreasonable'' where the officer conducting it has a probable and reasonable belief that an offense has been committed. Hopper v. People, 152 Colo. 405, 382 P.2d 540 (1963).

If probable cause to search car, right to search without warrant. If there is probable cause to obtain a warrant to search a car, police officers have the right to stop and search it without a warrant. People v. Chavez, 175 Colo. 25, 485 P.2d 708 (1971).

And items found admissible into evidence. Where police officers have probable cause to search defendants' automobile, the search of defendants' automobile without a warrant is proper, and it is not error to admit the items found into evidence. Atwood v. People, 176 Colo. 183, 489 P.2d 1305 (1971).

Search of vehicle which is made substantially contemporaneously with an arrest is permissible as an incident to the arrest. People v. Olson, 175 Colo. 140, 485 P.2d 891 (1971).

And evidence seized during arrest not suppressed. The denial of a motion to suppress evidence seized during a warrantless arrest of fleeing felons in an automobile should be affirmed. People v. Duncan, 179 Colo. 253, 500 P.2d 137 (1972).

Where defendant stopped for careless driving, exposed contraband seized. The fact that a defendant is stopped by police officers because of his careless driving will not prevent them from seizing contraband found lying exposed on the seat of the automobile. Alire v. People, 157 Colo. 103, 402 P.2d 610 (1965).

As inspection protected by "plain view rule". Where a police officer properly stops a car for careless driving, that officer has every right to look into the car and seize anything that is contraband, for such an inspection is held to be protected by the ''plain view rule''. People v. Teague, 173 Colo. 120, 476 P.2d 751 (1970).

And items in "plain view" admissible in evidence. Where an arrest is made with probable cause, any items in ''plain view'' after the defendant exits from a vehicle can properly be used in evidence against him. People v. Clark, 173 Colo. 129, 476 P.2d 564 (1970).

Probable cause must exist at moment arrest or automobile search made. In order for a warrantless search of an automobile to be excused under exigent circumstances, probable cause must exist at the moment the arrest or the search is made. People v. Thompson, 185 Colo. 208, 523 P.2d 128 (1974).

Factors which lead to the conclusion that a warrantless search of a car was reasonable include the commission of a felony, abandonment of the car by the suspects at the scene of the crime, and their flight from the scene on foot into the night and their remaining at large. Kurtz v. People, 177 Colo. 306, 494 P.2d 97 (1972).

Suspicious demeanor and odor supports probable cause for possession of marijuana in car. The combination of the suspicious demeanor of the occupants of a vehicle and the subsequent odor of marijuana emanating from within the car moments after the occupants had exited was a sufficient basis upon which to predicate probable cause for the belief that the offense of possession of marijuana had been recently committed. People v. Olson, 175 Colo. 140, 485 P.2d 891 (1971).

Moreover, it is unnecessary for officer to have a chemical analysis of a suspected narcotic prior to making a valid seizure; it is only necessary that he have reason to believe that the article seized is a narcotic. Alire v. People, 157 Colo. 103, 402 P.2d 610 (1965).

But mere exploratory search not sustained. Where a police officer has no cause to believe that a car contains any contraband, a search is exploratory only and cannot be sustained. People v. Singleton, 174 Colo. 138, 482 P.2d 978 (1971).

Search not incident to arrest where defendant in custody, car outside search area. The defendant was in custody so there was no danger of his destroying any evidence in his car, and the car was without the area authorized to be searched by a warrant, the search was not incident to the arrest. People v. Singleton, 174 Colo. 138, 482 P.2d 978 (1971).

Suppression of evidence proper where it was undisputed that defendant had already been arrested, handcuffed, and placed in patrol car at the time of the search of defendant's vehicle and because it would not have been reasonable for officers to believe that defendant's vehicle might contain evidence relevant to the false reporting crime. People v. Chamberlain, 229 P.3d 1054 (Colo. 2010).

Permissive search is not unreasonable search and seizure within the coverage of Mapp v. Ohio (367 U.S. 643, 81 S. Ct. 1684, 6 L. Ed. 2d 1081 (1961)). Peters v. People, 151 Colo. 35, 376 P.2d 170 (1962).

Hence, a search loses its illegal effect when defendant gives permission for such a search of the premises, as this consent removes the applicability of the constitutional guaranty. Williams v. People, 136 Colo. 164, 315 P.2d 189 (1957); Hopper v. People, 152 Colo. 405, 382 P.2d 540 (1963).

But search must be voluntary. A search conducted without a warrant but with the voluntary consent of the person whose place is searched is reasonable and not in violation of the state or federal constitutions. Phillips v. People, 170 Colo. 520, 462 P.2d 594 (1969).

And voluntary means that the consent is intelligently and freely given. Phillips v. People, 170 Colo. 520, 462 P.2d 594 (1969).

Burden of proof as to consent to warrantless search on people. The burden of proof in the determination of whether a consent to a warrantless search is intelligently and freely given rests firmly on the people. People v. Neyra, 189 Colo. 367, 540 P.2d 1077 (1975).

Whether consent voluntary determined from each case's total circumstances. Whether or not the consent which is given to a search in a particular case is voluntary is a question to be determined from the totality of the circumstances in each case. The circumstances of a case may indicate that a defendant was fully aware that the police were his adversaries and that evidence seized by them could be used against him at trial. Phillips v. People, 170 Colo. 520, 462 P.2d 594 (1969).

Miranda decision not applicable to fourth amendment searches and seizures. Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 86 S. Ct. 1602, 16 L. Ed. 2d 694 (1966), has no application to the area of fourth amendment searches and seizures, since the ruling therein was designed as a prophylactic rule to correct and prevent abusive police practices in the area of confessions, and the United States Supreme Court has not acted to extend the rule in Miranda to the fourth amendment. Phillips v. People, 170 Colo. 520, 462 P.2d 594 (1969).

But warning that defendant does not have to consent to search constitutionally sufficient. Where a defendant is informed that he does not have to consent to a warrantless search of his premises, such a warning is sufficient to apprise the defendant of his rights under the fourth amendment of the U. S. Constitution and § 7 of art. II, Colo. Const. Phillips v. People, 170 Colo. 520, 462 P.2d 594 (1969).

Resident of a place has the ability to consent to a search of the premises, and a search based on such consent is not illegal. Lanford v. People, 176 Colo. 109, 489 P.2d 210 (1971).

Likewise, one of two or more persons occupying premises may authorize search. When two or more persons have an equal right of ownership, occupancy, or other possessory interest in the premises searched or the property seized, any one of such persons may authorize a search and seizure thereof thereby binding the others, waiving their rights to object. Lanford v. People, 176 Colo. 109, 489 P.2d 210 (1971).

But a landlord is not a proper person to give consent to the search of his tenant's residence. Condon v. People, 176 Colo. 212, 489 P.2d 1297 (1971).

After consent has been granted to conduct search, that consent cannot be withdrawn. People v. Kennard, 175 Colo. 479, 488 P.2d 563 (1971).

Prisoner cannot expect to be free from warrantless searches. A prison cell is not a place in which the occupant can expect to be free from all searches unless accompained by a warrant. Moore v. People, 171 Colo. 338, 467 P.2d 50 (1970).

3. Warrant Insufficient on Face.

Affidavits have not been required to be attached to warrants. People v. Leahy, 173 Colo. 339, 484 P.2d 778 (1970).

Warrant not insufficient because affidavit does not allege possession of articles is crime. Where an affidavit upon which a search warrant is issued does not allege that possession of the articles in question is a crime, this does not render the warrant insufficient. People v. Whisenhunt, 173 Colo. 109, 476 P.2d 997 (1970).

The fact that the affidavit details activities that are lawful does not cause it to be a bare bones affidavit; a combination of otherwise lawful circumstances may well lead to a legitimate inference of criminal activity. People v. Altman, 960 P.2d 1164 (Colo. 1998).

But, constitutionally, probable cause must appear on face of affidavit. The express Colorado constitutional requirement of a written oath or affirmation makes it clear beyond a doubt that sufficient facts to support a magistrate's determination of probable cause must appear on the face of a written affidavit. People v. Baird, 172 Colo. 112, 470 P.2d 20 (1970).

Otherwise, warrants issued on such fatally defective affidavits are nullities, any search conducted under them was unlawful, and the fruits of such a search are inadmissible in evidence. Hernandez v. People, 153 Colo. 316, 385 P.2d 996 (1963); People v. Baird, 173 Colo. 112, 470 P.2d 20 (1970); People v. Brethauer, 174 Colo. 29, 482 P.2d 369 (1971).

Affidavit in support of warrant held fatally defective. People v. Peschong, 181 Colo. 29, 506 P.2d 1232 (1973).

On review, search warrants are tested and interpreted in common sense and realistic fashion. People v. Lamirato, 180 Colo. 250, 504 P.2d 661 (1972).

Where statements concerning reliability of informer are not true, warrant cannot stand. Where information attributed to an informer is sufficient upon which to base a warrant, but statements made to the issuing magistrate by a policeman concerning the reliability of the informer are not true, a search warrant issued by the magistrate based on the false allegations of the police officer cannot stand. People v. Massey, 178 Colo. 141, 495 P.2d 1141 (1972).

Warrant's validity cannot be challenged where modified before issuance. Where changes and modifications on a search warrant take place before it is signed and issued by a judge, the validity of the search warrant is not subject to challenge. People v. Ferris, 173 Colo. 494, 480 P.2d 552 (1971).

Warrant not invalidated because descriptions therein vary from affidavit's. That there exists a variation between the descriptions in the warrant and in the affidavit does not in itself render the warrant invalid, unless the variance is material. People v. Peppers, 172 Colo. 556, 475 P.2d 337 (1970).

So long as description adequately identifies premises. A slight variation from the description in the affidavit will not affect the validity of a search warrant as long as the remainder of the descriptive language adequately identifies the premises to be searched. People v. Peppers, 172 Colo. 556, 475 P.2d 337 (1970).

And warrant specifically describing premises not rendered insufficient by command portion of warrant. A command portion of search warrant which reads: ''You are therefore commanded to search forthwith the above described property for the property described'' did not render the warrant insufficient on its face where the property to be searched had been specifically described ''above'' in the warrant. People v. Ragulsky, 184 Colo. 86, 518 P.2d 286 (1974).

Test for determining whether the sufficiency of a description in a search warrant is adequate is if the officer executing the warrant can with reasonable effort ascertain and identify the place intended to be searched. People v. Ragulsky, 184 Colo. 86, 518 P.2d 286 (1974).

Where city not specified in warrant, absence not fatal where location clear. Where a warrant specified the place to be searched as to street, county, and state, although not as to city, but the district attorney made a showing to the trial court that the place searched was the only one in the indicated county having such a street address, and the trial court found that there was sufficient clarity as to the location in the minds of all parties involved, then the absence of the name of the city was not fatal or prejudicial. People v. Leahy, 173 Colo. 339, 484 P.2d 778 (1970).

But omission of description of property to be seized not excused. Where in the space provided in a warrant for the description of the property to be seized there appears a description of the location of the place to be searched, then, although it may be presumed that this incorrect language doubtless was inserted by mistake and that the person who completed the warrant intended to insert the required description of the property to be seized, this is, however, not the type of mere ''technical omission'' that is excused, since it goes rather to the very essence of the constitutional requirement that a warrant describe ''the person or thing to be seized, as near as may be'' contained in § 7 of art. II, Colo. Const. People v. Drumright, 172 Colo. 577, 475 P.2d 329 (1970).

Warrant commanding officers to enter designated place for certain property valid. A search warrant directed to all peace officers which in essence states that certain articles are concealed at a designated address, that complaint made by a named person set forth reasons which show that probable cause exists, and commands such persons to enter the place and search for certain property fully sets forth the information required by this rule, and is therefore valid. People v. Ferris, 173 Colo. 494, 480 P.2d 552 (1971).

Failure to insert names indicating to whom return to be made is ministerial deficiency. The failure to insert names in blank spaces provided in a search warrant for purpose of indicating to whom return is to be made and to whom written inventory of seized property is to be made is ministerial deficiency and not such as to render a warrant invalid. Brown v. People, 158 Colo. 561, 408 P.2d 981 (1965).

Substantial compliance with contemporary objection rule exists where continuous general objection is made on ground that evidence is product of search under invalid warrant. Brown v. Patterson, 275 F. Supp. 629 (D. Colo. 1967), aff'd, 393 F.2d 733 (10th Cir. 1968).

But even if objection insufficient, federal habeas relief not precluded. Even if failure to specifically attack insufficiency of affidavit supporting warrant renders objection insufficient under this rule, a state court conviction based thereon will not preclude procuring federal habeas corpus relief. Brown v. Patterson, 275 F. Supp. 629 (D. Colo. 1967), aff'd, 393 F.2d 733 (10th Cir. 1968).

4. Property Not Described in Warrant.

Description of items to be seized in search warrant must be specific. People v. Clavey, 187 Colo. 305, 530 P.2d 491 (1975).

And items seized under warrant with insufficient description suppressed. All items seized under a search warrant that failed to describe the things to be seized with sufficient particularity should be suppressed. People ex rel. McKevitt v. Harvey, 176 Colo. 447, 491 P.2d 563 (1971).

But the seizure of property not specified does not render specified items inadmissible. People v. Greathouse, 173 Colo. 103, 476 P.2d 259 (1970).

Warrant not too broad where authorizes seizure of "narcotics" and "paraphernalia". The language in a warrant which specifies the items to be seized is not so broad and ambiguous as to make it a general warrant where the warrant authorizes seizure of: (1) Any and all narcotics and dangerous drugs as defined by the applicable Colorado statutes, the possession of which is illegal; and (2) all implements, paraphernalia, articles, papers, and records pertaining to, or which would be evidence of, the illegal use, possession, or sale of narcotics and/or dangerous drugs. People v. Leahy, 173 Colo. 339, 484 P.2d 778 (1970).

And "narcotics" includes marijuana. Where a search warrant authorizes a search for ''narcotics, dangerous drugs, and narcotics paraphernalia'', then, since the word ''narcotics'' includes marijuana, the seizure of marijuana is properly authorized under the warrant. People v. Henry, 173 Colo. 523, 482 P.2d 357 (1971).

Term "narcotics paraphernalia" is not so vague as to make document general warrant. People v. Henry, 173 Colo. 523, 482 P.2d 357 (1971).

Seized items held sufficiently within warrant description. People v. Lamirato, 180 Colo. 250, 504 P.2d 661 (1972).

Search must be conducted for specific articles. The search, whether under a valid search warrant or whether as incident to a lawful arrest, must be one in which the officers are looking for specific articles and must be conducted in a manner reasonably calculated to uncover such articles. Hernandez v. People, 153 Colo. 316, 385 P.2d 996 (1963); People v. Drumright, 172 Colo. 577, 475 P.2d 329 (1970).

And any search more extensive than this constitutes a general exploratory search and is squarely within the interdiction of the constitutional guarantee against unreasonable search and seizure. Hernandez v. People, 153 Colo. 316, 385 P.2d 996 (1963); People v. Drumright, 172 Colo. 577, 475 P.2d 329 (1970); In re People in Interest of B.M.C., 32 Colo. App. 79, 506 P.2d 409 (1972).

Entire search only becomes invalid if general tenor is that of exploratory search for evidence not specifically related to the search warrant. People v. Tucci, 179 Colo. 373, 500 P.2d 815 (1972).

And where execution of warrant in good faith, not all evidence obtained suppressed. Where evidence is without conflict that the persons executing the search warrant were trying in good faith to obtain items relating to that prescribed in the warrant, a ruling requiring suppression of all evidence obtained during the search of defendant's premises is disapproved. People v. Tucci, 179 Colo. 373, 500 P.2d 815 (1972).

Evidence seized during general exploratory search will be suppressed. Where evidence was seized during a general exploratory search for which no probable cause existed, defendant's motion to suppress the evidence will be granted. People v. Valdez, 182 Colo. 80, 511 P.2d 472 (1973).

"Other" articles found in course of "proper" search are admissible. If an officer is conducting a search, either under a valid search warrant or incident to a valid arrest, where the search is such as is reasonably designed to uncover the articles for which he is looking and in the course of such search discovers contraband or articles the possession of which is a crime, other than those for which he was originally searching, he is not required to shut his eyes and refrain from seizing that material under the penalty that if he does seize it, it cannot be admitted in evidence. Hernandez v. People, 153 Colo. 316, 385 P.2d 996 (1963).

And no suppression of fruits or instruments of crime, and contraband. Harris v. United States, 331 U.S. 145, 67 S. Ct. 1098, 91 L. Ed. 1399 (1947), upheld the validity of seizure of fruits of a crime, instrumentalities of a crime, and contraband articles; such items may be referred to as ''Harris articles'', and where items are ''Harris articles'', a trial court is correct in denying a suppression motion with respect to them. People v. Henry, 173 Colo. 523, 482 P.2d 357 (1971).

But burden on state where such articles not connected with crime "per se". When a defendant demonstrates that an article is not specifically described in the search warrant and it is not ''per se'' connected with criminal activity, the burden of showing that it is so connected falls upon the state. People v. Henry, 173 Colo. 523, 482 P.2d 357 (1971); People v. Wilson, 173 Colo. 536, 482 P.2d 355 (1971).

And if state sustains burden, the articles should not be suppressed. People v. Wilson, 173 Colo. 536, 482 P.2d 355 (1971).

However, where showing not made, nonspecified articles suppressed. When the district attorney fails to make the requisite showing, the trial court should sustain the motion as it relates to nonspecified articles not ''per se'' connected with criminal activity. People v. Wilson, 173 Colo. 536, 482 P.2d 355 (1971).

"Mere evidence" seized must be shown to have a "nexus" with case and defendant. ''Mere evidence'' consists of articles which are not fruits, instrumentalities, or contraband, and which are not ''per se'' associated with criminal activity, but which an officer executing a warrant has probable cause to believe are associated with criminal activity, and ''mere evidence'' which is seized within the scope of the search authorized by a warrant must be shown to have a ''nexus'' with the case in which a motion to suppress is filed and with at least one of the defendants in the case. People v. Henry, 173 Colo. 523, 482 P.2d 357 (1971); People v. LaRocco, 178 Colo. 196, 496 P.2d 314 (1972).

5. No Probable Cause.

Matter of probable cause not "res judicata". The trial court is not bound to conclude that because a search warrant had been issued the matter of the existence of probable cause for the issuance thereof was ''res judicata'', inasmuch as it is for the judge who determines the adversary proceeding to decide all questions relating to the admissibility of the evidence offered by the litigants. Gonzales v. District Court, 164 Colo. 433, 435 P.2d 384 (1967).

Warrant routinely issued at request of accusing officer clearly unconstitutional. Where a search warrant was routinely issued at the request of the accusing officer, without the slightest showing of probable cause, it therefore clearly violates the fundamental principle that the basis for the issuance of a search warrant must be determined by a judicial officer based on facts and not on the conclusion of the applicant. Consequently, such a search warrant is issued in violation of long-established fundamental constitutional standards, and any evidence seized under its authority should be excluded from evidence in the trial court, unless there is other legal basis for its admission. Brown v. Patterson, 275 F. Supp. 629 (D. Colo. 1967), aff'd, 393 F.2d 733 (10th Cir. 1968).

Independent determination of probable cause to search specified place. The fact that the police did not request a warrant to search additional places likely to contain incriminating evidence is irrelevant to the independent determination of probable cause to search the place specified in the warrant. People v. Chase, 675 P.2d 315 (Colo. 1984).

Affidavit introduced where warrant challenged for lack of probable cause. When a search warrant is challenged for lack of probable cause, the supporting affidavit is an essential element to be introduced in evidence. People v. Espinoza, 195 Colo. 127, 575 P.2d 851 (1978).

Where supporting affidavit lacks probable cause, warrant invalid. Where the affidavit upon which a search warrant was issued was not sufficient to establish probable cause, the search and resultant arrest of defendant are part of the illegal fruits of an invalid warrant. Zamora v. People, 175 Colo. 340, 487 P.2d 1116 (1971).

Warrant based on observations of police employee in response to invitation not invalid. Where a visit by a police employee is legitimately in response to an invitation by the defendant, a later search is not invalidated by the fact that the employee made observations which became part of the basis for the warrant. People v. Greathouse, 173 Colo. 103, 476 P.2d 259 (1970).

Affidavit in support of search warrant was not insufficient because it was predicated upon "double hearsay". People v. Quintana, 183 Colo. 81, 514 P.2d 1325 (1973).

But where the affidavit upon which a search warrant was predicated was based on ''double hearsay'', such does not render the warrant invalid. People v. Leahy, 173 Colo. 339, 484 P.2d 778 (1970).

Such as where the information is conveyed by one police officer to another police officer. People v. Quintana, 183 Colo. 81, 514 P.2d 1325 (1973).

Even if hearsay turns out to be incorrect. If the material in the affidavit is stated to be or appears to be hearsay information obtained from an informant or other person and the information turns out to be incorrect, a court will not use hindsight as a test to determine whether the search warrant should or should not have been issued. People v. Woods, 175 Colo. 34, 485 P.2d 491 (1971).

Reliability of detective need not be shown. The fact that the affidavit did nothing to disclose the reliability of a detective—except the fact that he was a detective—does not affect its validity, since there is nothing requiring a showing of reliability of a detective. People v. Leahy, 173 Colo. 339, 484 P.2d 778 (1970).

Facts held sufficient to establish probable cause. People v. Henry, 173 Colo. 523, 482 P.2d 357 (1971); People v. Vigil, 175 Colo. 421, 489 P.2d 593 (1971); Atwood v. People, 176 Colo. 183, 489 P.2d 1305 (1971).

Facts held not sufficient to establish probable cause. People v. Brethauer, 174 Colo. 29, 482 P.2d 369 (1971).

6. Illegal Execution.

Trial court erred in assigning to the prosecution the initial burden of proving search warrant was legally executed. As the moving party seeking suppression of evidence seized through a search warrant, the defendant has the burden of alleging and showing that a search or seizure violated his or her right to privacy under the fourth amendment of the U.S. Constitution. If the defendant satisfies this burden, it is then upon the prosecution to show that defendant's fourth amendment rights were not violated. People v. Cunningham, 2013 CO 71, 314 P.3d 1289.

Officers must identify themselves before forced entry. Even with a valid warrant, before police officers attempt a forced entry into a place, they must first identify themselves and make their purpose known. People v. Godinas, 176 Colo. 391, 490 P.2d 945 (1971).

And forceful entries include entries without permission. Forceful entries need not involve the actual breaking of doors and windows, but may include merely entries made without permission. Thus, where officers enter through a door which is ajar without right and they do not announce their purpose, a subsequent knock on an interior door is made after an illegal entry and without announcing identity and purpose. People v. Godinas, 176 Colo. 391, 490 P.2d 945 (1971).

Copy of warrant need not be left personally with one confined in jail. The argument that the execution of a search warrant did not comply with this rule in that a copy of the warrant was not left with defendant personally is without merit where at the time of the search defendant was confined in jail, the officer upon whose affidavit the warrant was issued exhibited the warrant, receipt, and inventory of what was seized to defendant after seizure, and the copy of the warrant, receipt, and inventory was then placed in defendant's locker in the jail which contained his other personal belongings; in the absence of a showing of any prejudice resulting from this particular procedure, there is no reversible error. People v. Aguilar, 173 Colo. 260, 477 P.2d 462 (1970).

Warrant need not have copy of affidavit attached. There is nothing which requires that a person given a warrant must receive a copy of the underlying affidavit or that a copy thereof must be attached to the copy of the warrant which is served at the time of the search. People v. Papez, 652 P.2d 619 (Colo. App. 1982).

Where one recites he has "duly executed" warrant, authority to execute inferred. Where in the return and inventory made following the execution of a warrant, one recites that he has ''duly executed the within search warrant'', this alone justifies an inference and finding that the individual was authorized by law to execute such, and it thereupon becomes incumbent upon the defendant to show that he was not. People v. Henry, 173 Colo. 523, 482 P.2d 357 (1971).

Warrant not invalidated by failure to follow requirements as to return and inventory. Since the requirements of this rule relating to the making of the return and inventory are ministerial in nature, a failure to comply does not render the search warrant or the seizure of the property pursuant thereto invalid. People v. Schmidt, 172 Colo. 285, 473 P.2d 698 (1970).

Hence, failure to file the return within 10 days does not invalidate a search. People v. Wilson, 173 Colo. 536, 482 P.2d 355 (1971).

D. Hearing.

1. When Motion Made.

Suppression remedy not extended to grand jury proceedings. The remedy of suppression of evidence applies to a trial once an indictment has been returned, but has not been extended to grand jury proceedings considering an indictment. People ex rel. Dunbar v. District Court, 179 Colo. 321, 500 P.2d 819 (1972).

Purpose of rule to prevent introduction of issue of police misconduct into trial. The purpose of this rule is to prevent, whenever possible, the introduction of a collateral issue, that of whether the police acted improperly, into the trial on the issue of guilt. Morgan v. People, 166 Colo. 451, 444 P.2d 386 (1968).

Rule on time to serve motions preserves right to raise fourth amendment issues. Crim. P. 45(d), which must be read in conjunction with this rule, can adequately preserve the defendant's right to raise fourth amendment issues, while carrying out the salutary purpose of not commingling the fourth amendment issues with the guilt issue. Morgan v. People, 166 Colo. 451, 444 P.2d 386 (1968).

Motion to suppress filed on the morning of the trial is not timely. Morgan v. People, 166 Colo. 451, 444 P.2d 386 (1968).

Trial court's consideration of merits of a suppression motion does not render moot ruling by trial court that the motion was untimely. People v. Tyler, 874 P.2d 1037 (Colo. 1994).

Nor is motion filed day before trial, where grounds raised therein previously apparent. Where defendant files his motion to suppress on the afternoon before the day on which the trial is to begin, but all the grounds raised therein were clearly apparent in the record from the very first time counsel appeared, then under such circumstances the motion is not timely filed. Morgan v. People, 166 Colo. 451, 444 P.2d 386 (1968).

Motion untimely where defendant possesses all pertinent information prior to trial. Where defendant possessed prior to trial all pertinent information relative to the seizure of evidence and its possible suppression, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in declaring the motion to suppress untimely. People v. Hinchman, 40 Colo. App. 9, 574 P.2d 866 (1977), rev'd on other grounds, 196 Colo. 526, 589 P.2d 917, cert. denied, 442 U.S. 941, 99 S. Ct. 2883, 61 L. Ed. 2d 311 (1979).

But trial court has discretionary power to entertain a suppression motion at trial. People v. Stevens, 183 Colo. 399, 517 P.2d 1336 (1973).

And if court rules on untimely motion, matter not waived unless discretion abused. If the trial court elects to rule on a untimely suppression motion raised at trial, an appellate court should not consider the matter waived unless it can be shown that the trial court abused its discretion in ruling on the merits of the motion. People v. Stevens, 183 Colo. 399, 517 P.2d 1336 (1973).

Defendant not to be penalized because belated motion to suppress heard. There cannot be read into this rule any intendment that the defendant is to be penalized because the court chose to hear and consider his belated motion to suppress. People v. Voss, 191 Colo. 338, 552 P.2d 1012 (1976).

Where proper pretrial request denied, court errs in not holding hearing at trial. Where the defendant is entitled to such a pretrial hearing which he requests, then a court which fails to grant a pretrial hearing again errs in not holding a hearing at the time the property objected to is offered in evidence by the prosecution; the defendant having made a proper request, the trial court errs in not holding a hearing. Adargo v. People, 173 Colo. 323, 478 P.2d 308 (1970).

Pretrial ruling on a motion to suppress does not necessarily bind the trial judge, and under certain circumstances, the trial court has a duty to consider "de novo" the issue of suppression. Gibbons v. People, 167 Colo. 83, 445 P.2d 408 (1968).

And within judge's discretion to hold additional evidentiary hearing. If it is necessary for the trial judge to hold an additional evidentiary hearing in order to arrive at the truth concerning a suppression of evidence motion, it is within his discretion to do so. People v. Duncan, 179 Colo. 253, 500 P.2d 137 (1972).

2. Procedure.

Rule provides for procedure to be followed when motion to suppress is filed. Adargo v. People, 173 Colo. 323, 478 P.2d 308 (1970).

Motion to suppress is interlocutory in character, and neither res judicata nor collateral estoppel applies to a ruling which is less than a final judgment. People v. Lewis, 659 P.2d 676 (Colo. 1983).

Court makes inquiry and bases determination solely on evidence presented. The trial court shall make an inquiry concerning the validity of the search and base its determination solely upon the evidence presented upon a hearing conducted by it on the motion of the petitioners. Gonzales v. District Court, 164 Colo. 433, 435 P.2d 384 (1967).

Burden is upon the state at a suppression hearing to show a connection between the evidence seized and the criminal activity for which the search was initiated in order that the evidence not be suppressed. People v. LaRocco, 178 Colo. 196, 496 P.2d 314 (1972).

Trial court erred in assigning to the prosecution the initial burden of proving search warrant was legally executed. As the moving party seeking suppression of evidence seized through a search warrant, the defendant has the burden of alleging and showing that a search or seizure violated his or her right to privacy under the fourth amendment of the U.S. Constitution. If the defendant satisfies this burden, it is then upon the prosecution to show that defendant's fourth amendment rights were not violated. People v. Cunningham, 2013 CO 71, 314 P.3d 1289.

When granting or denying a motion, the court should state appropriate findings of fact. People v. Vigil, 175 Colo. 373, 489 P.2d 588 (1971).

It is the function of the court to determine the factual issues presented by a motion to suppress, and this fact in turn requires the judge to make findings of fact whenever he rules on a motion to suppress. People v. Duncan, 176 Colo. 427, 498 P.2d 941 (1971); People v. Brazzel, 18 P.3d 1285 (Colo. 2001).

And making conclusion of law instead is error. In a suppression hearing, when the court makes a conclusion of law rather than a required finding of fact, there is error. People v. Duncan, 176 Colo. 427, 498 P.2d 941 (1972).

But findings in second case may suffice for findings in identical first case. Where in one case the judge, in denying the motion to suppress, does not make sufficient findings, but in another case the findings upon denial of the motion to suppress are amply sufficient, then where the findings in the second case are by the same court although by a different judge, the rulings by both judges are the same, and the parties and the search — and in substantial effect the testimony — are identical, an appellate court is justified in considering the findings in the second case as governing the first case, for it would be useless to remand the first case for findings. People v. Ramey, 174 Colo. 250, 483 P.2d 374 (1971).

Finding that lesser crimes not included in wiretap statute, grounds for suppression. A finding that lesser crimes are not intended by congress to be included in the class of crimes for which a wiretap can be authorized does not render an entire state statute invalid, but is merely grounds for suppression. People v. Martin, 176 Colo. 322, 490 P.2d 924 (1971).

District judge may reconsider a motion to suppress previously denied by another district judge. People v. Lewis, 659 P.2d 676 (Colo. 1983).

Fourth amendment exclusionary rule is designed to deter police misconduct. Illegal police searches and district attorney preparedness are unrelated. The court ruling granting suppression of all evidence was tantamount to dismissal of the case, which was outside the court's authority to dismiss. People v. Bakari, 780 P.2d 1089 (Colo. 1989).

Suppression for a procedural flaw in argument does not serve the purpose of the exclusionary rule, which is solely to deter police misconduct, not prosecutorial error. People v. Kirk, 103 P.3d 918 (Colo. 2005).

3. Return of Property.

No right to return of illegal property. If property is legally seized and it is designed or intended for use as a means of committing a criminal offense or the possession of which is illegal, there is no right to have it returned. People v. Angerstein, 194 Colo. 376, 572 P.2d 479 (1977).

A person who has property unlawfully seized by law enforcement officers and who has not been charged with a crime has standing to bring a claim for return of the property under section (e). Boudette v. State, 2018 COA 109, 425 P.3d 1228.

Although there was no criminal complaint or information filed against the property owner, this rule still governs his claim, and section (e) does not require a person to be a criminal defendant to file a motion under this rule. Boudette v. State, 2018 COA 109, 425 P.3d 1228.

Return can be made only upon determination by judge. If certain property is seized under and by virtue of a search warrant, it was incumbent upon the officers seizing same to deal with it only in accordance with the provisions and terms of this rule; consequently, they cannot rightfully restore it to the party from whom taken until a judge has examined witnesses and made a determination. Guyton v. Neal, 48 Colo. 549, 111 P. 84 (1910).

Mandamus lies to compel officer to obey order to return goods. Where goods seized under a search warrant are ordered by the magistrate, on a hearing pursuant to this rule, to be returned by the officer to the person from whose premises they were taken, mandamus lies to compel the discharge of this ministerial duty. Bell v. Thomas, 49 Colo. 76, 111 P. 76, 31 L.R.A. (n.s.) 664 (1910).

But mandamus cannot lie to return goods while proceedings still pending. Mandamus will not lie to compel an officer to surrender goods seized upon a search warrant, in excess of what is described therein, while the proceedings under the search warrant are still pending. Guyton v. Neal, 48 Colo. 549, 111 P. 84 (1910).

A decision on a motion for return of property is ordinarily interlocutory and therefore unappealable, but actions for return of property prior to the initiation of any civil or criminal proceedings may be reviewed. In re Search Warrant for 2045 Franklin, Denver, 709 P.2d 597 (Colo. App. 1985).

4. Judicial Review.

Appellate procedures cannot be invoked to test propriety of suppression order. The order of a trial court by which a motion to suppress evidence is sustained is not a final judgment and, accordingly, does not come within any exceptions provided by rule or statute under which appellate procedures can be invoked to test the propriety of the order. People v. Hernandez, 155 Colo. 519, 395 P.2d 733 (1964).

But interlocutory appeals may be taken pursuant to C.A.R. 4.1. People v. Thornburg, 173 Colo. 230, 477 P.2d 372 (1970); People v. McNulty, 173 Colo. 491, 480 P.2d 560 (1971); People v. Henry, 173 Colo. 523, 482 P.2d 357 (1971); People v. Patterson, 175 Colo. 19, 485 P.2d 494 (1971); People v. Fidler, 175 Colo. 90, 485 P.2d 725 (1971).

Contemporaneous objection rule applies to search and seizure issues. Brown v. People, 162 Colo. 406, 426 P.2d 764 (1967).

Issue of illegal evidence should be brought to attention of the trial court either by a pretrial motion to suppress or at the trial when the prosecution offers evidence which the defendant claims is ''tainted'' because of the manner in which it was obtained by the prosecution. Ferrell v. Vogt, 161 Colo. 549, 423 P.2d 844 (1967).

And failure to raise objection tantamount to waiver. The failure to raise the objection of an illegal search and seizure by proper objection at the trial level is tantamount to a waiver. Brown v. People, 162 Colo. 406, 426 P.2d 764 (1967).

To preserve an issue for appeal, defendant must alert trial court to the particular issue. In case where defendant argued on appeal that search of his vehicle violated the fourth amendment and that trial court erred in admitting evidence found in the vehicle, defendant had waived the issue by failing to contest it at trial. Trial court's ruling that the search and seizure of the evidence was proper did not negate the waiver or preserve the issue for appeal. People v. Cordova, 293 P.3d 114 (Colo. App. 2011).

In absence of motion, ground of error disregarded. In the absence of a motion for return of items or to suppress them as evidence on the ground of illegal search and seizure, an alleged ground of error based thereon will be disregarded. Salazar v. People, 153 Colo. 93, 384 P.2d 725 (1963).

Where defendant denies possessory interest at hearing, cannot later claim possessory interest. At a suppression hearing where a defendant denies that he has a possessory interest in any of the items found, he cannot be allowed to later claim a possessory interest unsupported by the record and in direct contradiction of his own testimony in order to challenge the admission of the seized evidence. People v. Towers, 176 Colo. 295, 490 P.2d 302 (1971).

And guilty plea makes question of search's validity moot. The question of the validity of the search for and seizure of contraband goods becomes moot upon the entry of the plea of guilty. Lucero v. People, 164 Colo. 247, 434 P.2d 128 (1967).

Suppression order sustained where facts not shown on record on appeal. Order sustaining motion to suppress admission in evidence of items seized in execution of search warrant will be affirmed where record on appeal does not show essential facts on which trial court predicated its ruling. People v. Cram, 180 Colo. 418, 505 P.2d 1299 (1973).

Granting of motion to suppress held invalid. People v. McGahey, 179 Colo. 401, 500 P.2d 977 (1972).

Denial of motion to suppress upheld. People v. Hankin, 179 Colo. 70, 498 P.2d 1116 (1972); People v. Tucci, 179 Colo. 373, 500 P.2d 815 (1972); People v. Cram, 180 Colo. 418, 505 P.2d 1299 (1973).

VIII. RETURN OF PAPERS TO CLERK.

Warrant not invalidated by failure to indicate to whom papers to be returned. The failure to insert the names in the blank spaces provided in a search warrant for the purpose of indicating to whom the return is to be made and to whom a written inventory of the seized property is to be made is a deficiency of a ministerial nature and not such as to render a warrant invalid. Brown v. People, 158 Colo. 561, 408 P.2d 981 (1965).

And where return made to issuing court, no prejudice to defendant. Where the record supports the conclusion that the return was made to the court which issued the warrant, then, such being the state of the record and the obvious intent of the issuing magistrate, there can be no finding of prejudice to the defendant in regard to such an alleged deficiency of the warrant. Brown v. People, 158 Colo. 561, 408 P.2d 981 (1965).

IX. SUPPRESSION OF CONFESSION OR ADMISSION.

A. Grounds.

Confession deemed acknowledgment of truth of guilty fact. A confession is an acknowledgment in express words, by the accused in a criminal case, of the truth of the guilty fact charged or of some essential part of it. Jones v. People, 146 Colo. 40, 360 P.2d 686 (1961).

Statement taken as result of and following an unlawful arrest must be suppressed. People v. Moreno, 176 Colo. 488, 491 P.2d 575 (1971).

And no distrinction between "inculpatory" or "exculpatory" statements. No distinction may be drawn between ''inculpatory'' statements made by defendant and statements alleged to be merely ''exculpatory'', following an unlawful arrest. People v. Moreno, 176 Colo. 488, 491 P.2d 575 (1971).

Not between formal arrest and police custody. The fact that the defendant is not under formal arrest at the time he made such statements is unimportant where he is in police custody, he is the main suspect, and the accusing finger is surely directed at defendant, in which case the questions of a police officer in this posture are obviously for the main purpose of eliciting incriminating statements from the defendant, and therefore, the trial court should exclude any oral incriminating statements. Nez v. People, 167 Colo. 23, 445 P.2d 68 (1968).

Prosecution has burden at suppression hearing to show that defendant was lawfully arrested. People v. Moreno, 176 Colo. 488, 491 P.2d 575 (1971).

Judge may suppress statements made by defendant before he was given "Miranda warning", but deny the suppression of statements made after the warning has been given. People v. Garrison, 176 Colo. 516, 491 P.2d 917 (1971).

Confession obtained after inadequate warning should be suppressed. Where defendant's confession is obtained after a warning of his rights, which does not meet the requirements of Miranda, a motion to suppress the confession should be granted. People v. Vigil, 175 Colo. 373, 489 P.2d 588 (1971).

Suppression of incriminating statements warranted when defendant was subject to interrogation by police officers before being advised of Miranda rights. A routine encounter turned into a custodial situation, as defendant was physically surrounded by officers, was not free to go during questioning, and had ''objective reasons to believe that he was under arrest''; such circumstances constituted custody. People v. Null, 233 P.3d 670 (Colo. 2010).

Stereotype warning cannot be the sole basis of the court's determination that a statement was voluntary and that the defendant was aware of his rights and waived and relinquished those rights. People v. Moreno, 176 Colo. 488, 491 P.2d 575 (1971).

If written confession is direct exploitation of prior illegality, it is inadmissible as the ''fruit of the poisonous tree''. People v. Algien, 180 Colo. 1, 501 P.2d 468 (1972).

Similarly, search conducted pursuant to illegal confession must be suppressed. Where the sole basis of a probable cause for the search of the defendant's home presented in the affidavit is his confession and that confession was illegally obtained, then, under the ''fruit of the poison tree'' doctrine, any articles obtained must be suppressed. People v. Vigil, 175 Colo. 373, 489 P.2d 588 (1971).

Good faith basis required to challenge warrant affidavits. As conditions to a veracity hearing testing the truth of averments contained in a warrant affidavit, a motion to suppress must be supported by one or more affidavits reflecting a good faith basis for the challenge and contain a specification of the precise statements challenged. People v. Dailey, 639 P.2d 1068 (Colo. 1982).

Voluntariness should be determined based on the totality of the circumstances, including the occurrences and events surrounding the confession and the presence or absence of official misconduct. People v. Sparks, 748 P.2d 795 (Colo. 1988); People v. Mounts, 801 P.2d 1199 (Colo. 1990).

Confession given after proper warnings not defective just because prior statements illegal. A confession obtained after proper constitutional warnings are given is not defective just because prior statements might be tainted with illegality. People v. Potter, 176 Colo. 510, 491 P.2d 974 (1971).

But time lapse between interrogations found insufficient to remove original taint from confession. People v. Algien, 180 Colo. 1, 501 P.2d 468 (1972).

"Totality of circumstances" standard. Courts must determine whether a confession given in a noncustodial setting is voluntary under the "totality of circumstances" standard. People v. Johnson, 671 P.2d 958 (Colo. 1983).

Confession properly suppressed where defendant's will was overborne by coercive conduct of police. Defendant's statements concerning drugs in his pockets were made after sustaining serious facial fractures and other injuries from the police and while he feared the police would use further force. People v. Vigil, 242 P.3d 1092 (Colo. 2010).

Trial court must consider all attendant circumstances to determine whether coercion of first confession infected second confession. Officers receiving subsequent confessions cannot merely be the beneficiaries of earlier pressure improperly applied to defendant. Defendant declined further medical treatment for his serious injuries, was released to the same officers who had inflicted the injuries, and was interrogated by those officers at 2:00 a.m. The evidence supports the trial court's ruling that defendant's subsequent statements were made under the lingering coercion of the physical force used against him and were thus properly suppressed. People v. Vigil, 242 P.3d 1092 (Colo. 2010).

B. When Motion Made.

Defendant entitled to object to confession's use at some stage in proceedings. A defendant has a constitutional right at some stage in the proceedings to object to the use of a confession and to have a "fair and reliable determination" on the issue of voluntariness. Compton v. People, 166 Colo. 419, 444 P.2d 263 (1968); Whitman v. People, 170 Colo. 189, 460 P.2d 767 (1969).

But pretrial hearing not constitutional requirement. While the better practice, at least with questions involving the admissibility of confessions and admissions, is to conduct a hearing before the jury becomes aware that the evidence exists, such has never made a pretrial hearing a constitutional requirement. Whether or not a reference to such evidence before the jury might result in a denial of the defendant's constitutional rights is a matter to be considered on a case-by-case basis. People v. Renfrow, 172 Colo. 399, 473 P.2d 957 (1970).

Issue of timeliness of motion moot when court entertains motion. When the court determines to entertain a motion to suppress and conduct a hearing thereon, the issue of the timeliness of the motion becomes moot and can no longer be a proper ground for denial thereof. People v. Robertson, 40 Colo. App. 386, 577 P.2d 314 (1978).

C. Procedure.

Procedural guidelines same for determining admissibility of confession and "voluntariness" of blood test. It is proper for a trial judge to resolve the matter as to the "voluntariness" of the blood alcohol test along the same procedural lines as would be followed in determining the admissibility, or nonadmissibility, of a confession. Compton v. People, 166 Colo. 419, 444 P.2d 263 (1968).

Express or contemporaneous objection to admission of confession unnecessary where voluntariness issue evident. It is not necessary that there be an express objection by the defendant to the admission of the confession by a motion to suppress or by contemporaneous objection, for the trial judge is required to conduct a hearing when it becomes evident to him that voluntariness is in issue, and an awareness on the part of the trial judge that the defendant is questioning the circumstances under which the statements were obtained is sufficient. Whitman v. People, 170 Colo. 189, 460 P.2d 767 (1969).

Denial of hearing on voluntariness is error. The denial of defense counsel's request for a hearing to determine whether defendant's statements following his arrest were voluntarily made is error. Hervey v. People, 178 Colo. 38, 495 P.2d 204 (1972).

Trial judge, and not the jury, determines the admissibility of a confession where objection is made on the ground that the confession was involuntarily made. Compton v. People, 166 Colo. 419, 444 P.2d 263 (1968).

And court must make findings of fact and law. Before incriminating statements or confessions, to which objections have been made, can be admitted in evidence, the court must make findings of fact and law that the statements and confessions under consideration were voluntarily given with full understanding of the accused's rights. Compton v. People, 166 Colo. 419, 444 P.2d 263 (1968); Espinoza v. People, 178 Colo. 391, 497 P.2d 994 (1972).

Before a trial court may rule that a confession is voluntary and admissible, or that it is involuntary and must be suppressed, the court must make sufficiently clear and detailed findings of fact and conclusions of law on the record to permit meaningful appellate review. People v. McIntyre, 789 P.2d 1108 (Colo. 1990).

And the mere denial of defendant's motion to suppress, without more, does not satisfy these requirements. Espinoza v. People, 178 Colo. 391, 497 P.2d 994 (1972).

Showings required for admission of confession. On a motion to suppress a confession made to police officers without assistance of an attorney, the prosecution must prove, by clear and convincing evidence, that the defendant knowingly, voluntarily and intelligently waived his right to counsel and his right against self-incrimination and must prove, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the confession was made voluntarily. People v. Fish, 660 P.2d 505 (Colo. 1983).

Court finds whether statement voluntary, and whether defendant voluntarily waived constitutional privileges. Where the defendant makes a motion under this rule, it is incumbent upon the trial court to find whether the statement was given freely and voluntarily without any improper compelling influences and whether the defendant voluntarily, knowingly, and intelligently waived his privilege against self-incrimination and his right to retained or appointed counsel. Espinoza v. People, 178 Colo. 391, 497 P.2d 994 (1972).

And trial judge must find that the statement was voluntary beyond a reasonable doubt. People v. Moreno, 176 Colo. 488, 491 P.2d 575 (1971).

Jury precluded from fully resolving issue of voluntariness. Under the federal constitution, a fair and reliable determination of the voluntariness of a confession precludes the conficting jury from fully resolving the issue. Compton v. People, 166 Colo. 419, 444 P.2d 263 (1968).

Including the taking of a blood alcohol test. The defendant has the right to a ''fair and reliable determination'' on the issue as to whether he gave his consent to the taking of a blood alcohol test, and therefore, it is improper for the trial court to permit the jury to ''fully resolve'' this matter. Compton v. People, 166 Colo. 419, 444 P.2d 263 (1968).

But where issues resolved against defendant, weight given to confession left to jury. Where the trial court conducts a full ''in camera'' hearing to determine whether defendant's confession was voluntary and to ascertain whether defendant was advised of rights afforded him by Miranda v. Arizona, then, where these issues are resolved against defendant, the weight to be given to defendant's confession is properly left to jury. People v. Lovato, 180 Colo. 445, 506 P.2d 361 (1973).

And where evidence not sufficient to require exclusion, confession's voluntariness question for jury. Whenever there is evidence, not sufficient to require exclusion of the alleged confession, but sufficient to raise a question as to the weight to which it is entitled at the hands of the jury, the court must refer the question of the voluntariness of the confession to the jury under proper instructions. Baker v. People, 168 Colo. 11, 449 P.2d 815 (1969) (but see Compton v. People, 166 Colo. 419, 444 P.2d 263 (1968); People v. Lovato, 180 Colo. 445, 506 P.2d 361 (1973).

However, judge must first affirmatively find confession voluntarily given before submitted to jury. The fact that the jury determines the weight to be given a confession, or, as is sometimes the practice, the fact that the issue of the voluntariness of a confession, though already determined by the trial court, is also submitted to the jury under proper instructions, in nowise alters the fundamental rule that before a confession is admitted into evidence the trial judge must first affirmatively find that the confession was voluntarily given. Compton v. People, 166 Colo. 419, 444 P.2d 263 (1968).

Or that blood alcohol test was taken with consent. Where an objection is made by a defendant to the introduction into evidence of the results of a blood alcohol test on the ground that the test was taken without his consent, the trial court, after hearing, must make a specific and affirmative finding that such consent was given before this line of testimony may with propriety be submitted to the jury for its consideration. Compton v. People, 166 Colo. 419, 444 P.2d 263 (1968).

When no evidence on voluntariness, matter not submitted to jury. When there is no evidence which raises a question as to the voluntariness of a confession, the matter need not be submitted to the jury. Baker v. People, 168 Colo. 11, 449 P.2d 815 (1969).

Evidence held sufficient to support finding of voluntary confession. People v. Valencia, 181 Colo. 36, 506 P.2d 743 (1973).

Rule 41.1. Court Order for Nontestimonial Identification

(a) Authority to Issue Order. A nontestimonial identification order authorized by this Rule may be issued by any judge of the Supreme, District, Superior, County Court, or Court of Appeals.

(b) Time of Application. A request for a nontestimonial identification order may be made prior to the arrest of a suspect, after arrest and prior to trial or, when special circumstances of the case make it appropriate, during trial.

(c) Basis for Order. An order shall issue only on an affidavit or affidavits sworn to or affirmed before the judge, or by the procedures set forth in Crim. P. 41(c)(3), and establishing the following grounds for the order:

(1) That there is probable cause to believe that an offense has been committed;

(2) That there are reasonable grounds, not amounting to probable cause to arrest, to suspect that the person named or described in the affidavit committed the offense; and

(3) That the results of specific nontestimonial identification procedures will be of material aid in determining whether the person named in the affidavit committed the offense.

(d) Issuance. Upon a showing that the grounds specified in section (c) exist, the judge shall issue an order directed to any peace officer to take the person named in the affidavit into custody to obtain nontestimonial identification. The judge shall direct that the designated nontestimonial identification procedures be conducted expeditiously. After such identification procedures have been completed, the person shall be released or charged with an offense.

(e) Contents of Order. An order to take into custody for nontestimonial identification shall contain:

(1) The name or description of the individual who is to give the nontestimonial identification;

(2) The names of any persons making affidavits for issuance of the order;

(3) The criminal offense concerning which the order has been issued and the nontestimonial identification procedures to be conducted specified therein;

(4) A mandate to the officer to whom the order is directed to detain the person for only such time as is necessary to obtain the nontestimonial identification;

(5) The typewritten or printed name of the judge issuing the order and his signature.

(f) Execution and Return.

(1) Nontestimonial identification procedures may be conducted by any peace officer or other person designated by the judge. Blood tests shall be conducted under medical supervision, and the judge may require medical supervision for any other test ordered pursuant to this section when he deems such supervision necessary. No person who appears under an order of appearance issued pursuant to this section (f) shall be detained longer than is reasonably necessary to conduct the specified nontestimonial identification procedures unless he is arrested for an offense.

(2) The order may be executed and returned only within 14 days after its date.

(3) The order shall be executed in the daytime unless the issuing judge shall endorse thereupon that it may be served at any time, because it appears that the suspect may flee the jurisdiction if the order is not served forthwith.

(4) The officer executing the order shall give a copy of the order to the person upon which it is served.

(5) No search of the person who is to give nontestimonial identification may be made, except a protective search for weapons, unless a separate search warrant has been issued.

(6) A return shall be made to the issuing judge showing whether the person named has been:

(I) Detained for such nontestimonial identification;

(II) Released or arrested.

(7) If, at the time of such return, probable cause does not exist to believe that such person has committed the offense named in the affidavit or any other offense, the person named in the affidavit shall be entitled to move that the judge issue an order directing that the products of the nontestimonial identification procedures, and all copies thereof, be destroyed. Such motion shall, except for good cause shown, be granted.

(g) Nontestimonial Identification Order at Request of Defendant. A person arrested for or charged with an offense may request a judge to order a nontestimonial identification procedure. If it appears that the results of specific nontestimonial identification procedures will be of material aid in determining whether the defendant committed the offense, the judge shall order the state to conduct such identification procedure involving the defendant under such terms and conditions as the judge shall prescribe.

(h) Definition of Terms. As used in this Rule, the following terms have the designated meanings:

(1) ''Offense'' means any felony, class 1 misdemeanor, or other crime which is punishable by imprisonment for more than one year.

(2) ''Nontestimonial identification'' includes, but is not limited to, identification by fingerprints, palm prints, footprints, measurements, blood specimens, urine specimens, saliva samples, hair samples, specimens of material under fingernails, or other reasonable physical or medical examination, handwriting exemplars, voice samples, photographs, appearing in lineups, and trying on articles of clothing.

(i) Motion to Suppress. A person aggrieved by an order issued under this Rule may file a motion to suppress nontestimonial identification seized pursuant to such order and the said motion shall be granted if there were insufficient grounds for the issuance or the order was improperly issued. The motion to suppress the use of such nontestimonial identification as evidence shall be made before trial unless opportunity therefor did not exist or the defendant was not aware of the grounds for the motion, but the court, in its discretion, may entertain the motion at the trial.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For comment, ''Beyond the Davis Dictum: Reforming Nontestimonial Identification Evidence Rules and Statutes'', see 79 U. Colo. L. Rev. 189 (2008).

Limited intrusions into privacy on less than probable cause are constitutional when: (1) There must be an articulable and specific basis in fact for suspecting criminal activity at the outset; (2) the intrusion must be limited in scope, purpose, and duration; (3) the intrusion must be justified by substantial law-enforcement interests; and (4) there must be an opportunity at some point to subject the intrusion to the neutral and detached scrutiny of a judicial officer before the evidence obtained therefrom may be admitted in a criminal proceeding against the accused. People v. Madson, 638 P.2d 18 (Colo. 1981); People v. Harris, 762 P.2d 651 (Colo. 1988), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 985, 109 S. Ct. 541, 102 L. Ed. 2d 572 (1988).

This rule is limited to nontestimonial identification evidence only and does not authorize the acquisition of testimony of communications protected by the privilege against self-incrimination. People v. Harris, 729 P.2d 1000 (Colo. App. 1986), aff'd, 762 P.2d 651 (Colo. 1988), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 985, 109 S. Ct. 541, 102 L. Ed. 2d 572 (1988).

And this rule constitutional. This rule does not violate either the fourth amendment to the federal constitution or § 7 of art. II, Colo. Const. People v. Madson, 638 P.2d 18 (Colo. 1981); People v. Harris, 729 P.2d 1000 (Colo. 1986), aff'd, 762 P.2d 651 (Colo. 1988), cert. denied, 485 U.S. 985, 109 S. Ct. 541, 102 L. Ed. 2d 572 (1988); People v. Wilson, 2012 COA 163M, 411 P.3d 11, rev'd on other grounds, 2015 CO 54M, 351 P.3d 1126.

Voluntary surrender of nontestimonial evidence waives constitutional protections. People v. Mattas, 645 P.2d 254 (Colo. 1982).

Propriety of examination determined by totality of circumstances. When the propriety of an identification is at issue, such as a lineup identification, the question of whether there is a substantial likelihood of irreparable misidentification is determined by examining the totality of the circumstances. People v. Johnson, 653 P.2d 737 (Colo. 1982).

Judicial order necessary only when authorities take someone into custody. Authorities must obtain a judicial order pursuant to this rule only when they take someone presently at liberty into custody for purposes of the nontestimonial identification. People v. Peoples, 200 Colo. 509, 616 P.2d 131 (1980).

And rule not applicable to suspect under arrest. The authority of law-enforcement officers to photograph, fingerprint, and measure a suspect while he is under arrest, confined, or awaiting trial has long been recognized, as well as the propriety of using photographs obtained thereby for identification purposes, and this rule is not applicable under those circumstances. People v. Reynolds, 38 Colo. App. 258, 559 P.2d 714 (1976).

This rule is not applicable to nontestimonial identifications of persons already in police custody pursuant to a lawful arrest. People v. Peoples, 200 Colo. 509, 616 P.2d 131 (1980).

Once probable cause exists to arrest, this rule is inapplicable. People v. Harris, 729 P.2d 1000 (Colo. App. 1986), aff'd, 762 P.2d 651 (Colo. 1988), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 985, 109 S. Ct. 541, 102 L. Ed. 2d 572 (1988).

Nor where defendant voluntarily submits to investigatory procedures. The court need not concern itself with the investigatory procedures of this rule where defendants voluntarily submit to fingerprinting, thereby waiving their constitutional protections. People v. Hannaman, 181 Colo. 82, 507 P.2d 466 (1973).

Rule applies only to obtaining nontestimonial identification from the defendant himself and not to procedures on a third party. People v. Braxton, 807 P.2d 1214 (Colo. App. 1990).

Prosecution could not be sanctioned for police conduct in which it did not participate. Trial court may not preclude prosecution from applying for and obtaining order for nontestimonial identification evidence though blood and hair samples obtained by police through a warrantless search were suppressed. People v. Diaz, 55 P.3d 1171 (Colo. 2002).

Judge may order fingerprints of individual to be obtained when it is shown by an affidavit that: (1) A known criminal offense has been committed; (2) there is reason to suspect that the individual is connected with the perpetration of a crime; and (3) the individual's fingerprints are not in the files of the applying agency. Stone v. People, 174 Colo. 504, 485 P.2d 495 (1971).

Information obtained from anonymous tip may form basis for affidavit used to obtain an order for nontestimonial identification pursuant to this rule. People v. Davis, 669 P.2d 130 (Colo. 1983).

Nontestimonial evidence suppressed where prosecution fails to establish that affidavits sworn to. Where the prosecution fails to establish at trial that the affidavits required by section (c) were sworn to or affirmed before the court which issued the nontestimonial identification order, the nontestimonial evidence is properly suppressed. People v. Hampton, 198 Colo. 566, 603 P.2d 133 (1979).

No deprivation of procedural safeguards when county court issued a nontestimonial identification order even though the offenses involved were committed in another jurisdiction. Ginn v. County Court, 677 P.2d 1387 (Colo. App. 1984).

Admissibility of statements of defendant while in custody for nontestimonial identification procedures. A statement of a suspect who is detained pursuant to an order to obtain nontestimonial evidence may be admissible under circumstances in which the suspect initiates a conversation with police and, despite a lack of coercion or interrogation, voluntarily offers information. People v. Wilson, 841 P.2d 337 (Colo. App. 1992).

This rule not for exclusive use of Colorado officials investigating offenses occurring in Colorado. Where the requirements of this rule are met, it is not an abuse of discretion for a county court to issue a nontestimonial identification order even though the offenses involved were committed in another jurisdiction. Ginn v. County Court, 677 P.2d 1387 (Colo. App. 1984).

Statement in affidavit not a judicial admission. Statement that probable cause for arrest did not yet exist in an affidavit in support of an order for nontestimonial identification is not a judicial admission. People v. Page, 907 P.2d 624 (Colo. App. 1995).

Court erred in suppressing DNA evidence obtained during identification procedure under this rule. Defendant effectively waived right to the presence of counsel appointed in one case through a knowing and voluntary Miranda waiver during an investigation of a crime in another county that may have yielded evidence in the first county's case. Defendant invoked the right to counsel after a proper Miranda warning. The detectives in the second county followed the Edwards v. Arizona (451 U.S. 477 (1981)) bright line rule and ceased questioning defendant until defendant reinitiated contact with the detectives. An effective waiver of fifth amendment rights, including the right to counsel, will usually effect a waiver of sixth amendment rights, even after appointment of counsel, so long as the defendant is aware of the particular offense being investigated. People v. Luna-Solis, 2013 CO 21, 298 P.3d 927.

Applied in People v. Morgan, 619 P.2d 64 (Colo. 1980); Richardson v. District Court, 632 P.2d 595 (Colo. 1981); People v. District Court, 664 P.2d 247 (Colo. 1983).

Rule 41.2. Interlocutory Appeal from the County Court

Repealed July 16, 1992, effective November 1, 1992.

Rule 41.3. Interlocutory Appeal from District Court

See Colorado Appellate Rules.

Rule 42. No Colorado Rule

Rule 43. Presence of the Defendant

(a) Presence Required. The defendant shall be present at the preliminary hearing, at the arraignment, at the time of the plea, at every stage of the trial including the impaneling of the jury and the return of the verdict, and at the imposition of sentence, except as otherwise provided by this rule.

(b) Continued Presence Not Required. The trial court in its discretion may complete the trial, and the defendant shall be considered to have waived his right to be present, whenever a defendant, initially present:

(1) Voluntarily absents himself after the trial has commenced, whether or not he has been informed by the court of his obligation to remain during the trial, or

(2) After being warned by the court that disruptive conduct will cause him to be removed from the courtroom, persists in conduct which is such as to justify his being excluded from the courtroom.

(c) Presence Not Required. A defendant need not be present in the following situations:

(1) A corporation may appear by counsel for all purposes.

(2) At a conference or argument upon a question of law.

(3) At a reduction of sentence under Rule 35.

(d) Waiver. The voluntary failure of the defendant to appear at the preliminary hearing may be construed by the court as an implied waiver of his right to a preliminary hearing.

(e) Presence of the Defendant by Interactive Audiovisual Device.

(1) Definitions. As used in this Rule 43:

(I) ''Interactive audiovisual device'' means a television or computer based audiovisual system capable of two-way transmission and of sufficient audio and visual quality that persons using the system can view and converse with each other with a minimum of disruption.

(2) A defendant may be present within the meaning of this Rule 43 by the use of an interactive audiovisual device, in lieu of the defendant's physical presence, for the following hearings:

(I) First appearances pursuant to Crim.P. 5, for the purpose of advisement and setting of bail, including first appearances on probation or deferred sentence revocation complaints;

(II) Further appearances for the filing of charges or for setting the preliminary hearing;

(III) Hearings to modify bail;

(IV) Entry of pleas and associated sentencing or probation violation hearings in misdemeanor, petty offense, and traffic cases where the offense charged is not included within those offenses enumerated in C.R.S. 24-4.1-302 (I).

(V) Waivers of preliminary hearing;

(VI) Restitution hearings;

(VII) Appeal bond hearings;

(VIII) Crim.P. 35(B) hearings.

(3) Minimum standards. Every use of an interactive audiovisual device must comply with the following minimum standards in addition to those set forth in Crim.P. 43(e)(l):

(I) If defense counsel appears, such appearance shall be at the same physical location as the defendant if so requested by the defendant. If defense counsel does not appear in the same location as the defendant, a separate confidential communication line, such as a phone line, shall be provided to allow for private and confidential communication between the defendant and counsel.

(II) No defendant shall be compelled to appear by interactive video device at a hearing pursuant to subsection (e)(2)(III), (VI) or (VIII) of this rule.

(III) Installation of the interactive audiovisual device in the courtroom shall be done in such a manner that members of the public are reasonably able to observe, and, where appropriate, participate in the hearing.

(IV) Any hearing held pursuant to Crim.P. 43(e)(2)(IV) shall be conducted with the written consent of the defendant. The court shall advise a defendant of the following prior to obtaining a defendant's written consent and prior to any plea discussions being conducted:

(a) The rights enumerated in Crim.P. 5(2).

(b) The defendant has the right to appear in person and will not be prejudiced if he chooses to do so.

(c) The defendant has the right to have his or her counsel appear with him or her at the same physical location.

(d) The defendant's decision to appear by use of an interactive audiovisual device must be voluntary on the defendant's part and must not be the result of undue influence or coercion on the part of anyone.

(e) If the defendant is pro se, the identity and role of all individuals with whom the defendant may have contact through the interactive audiovisual device.

(V) An interactive audiovisual system used for hearings pursuant to Crim.P. 43(e)(2)(IV) shall include the ability to electronically transfer documents between the defendant and the court and such transferred documents shall be considered the same as originals.

(4) Nothing in this rule shall require a court to use an interactive audiovisual device.

(5) In the event of inclement weather or other exceptional circumstances, which would otherwise prevent a hearing from occurring under Crim.P. 5, the court may conduct the hearing by use of an interactive audiovisual procedure which does not comply with the minimum standards set forth in subsection (3).

COMMENT

The court recommends that defendants be informed of their rights pursuant to this rule by showing such defendants a pre-recorded video containing the judicial advisement contained in this rule. The video should be shown prior to any jail authorities asking whether a defendant planned to elect to participate by audiovisual device. The court recognized that such audiovisual devices will be used to conduct plea discussions. Accordingly, the pre-recorded video should also explain the plea discussion process.

ANNOTATION

Waiver required for absence from trial. The trial court must establish a voluntary and intelligent waiver by a defendant concerning an absence from trial. People v. Campbell, 785 P.2d 153 (Colo. App. 1989), rev'd on other grounds, 814 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1991).

Waiver must be knowing, intelligent, and voluntary. Waiver is knowing and intelligent when a defendant has had notice of the consequences of not appearing. People v. Stephenson, 165 P.3d 860 (Colo. App. 2007).

Absence from trial compelled by medical necessity may generally be deemed voluntary, and the determination of whether defendant is ''voluntarily absent'' requires a fact-specific inquiry into the type of medical condition, the circumstances surrounding the absence, and defendant's conduct and statements. People v. Stephenson, 165 P.3d 860 (Colo. App. 2007).

A defendant's absence may be deemed voluntary when the record establishes that defendant created the medical necessity by attempting suicide in order to effect his or her absence from trial. People v. Price, 240 P.3d 557 (Colo. App. 2010).

Removal of defendant from court during trial did not abridge defendant's constitutional rights. Where defendant had been warned numerous times about his courtroom behavior including getting up from his seat and moving towards judge on one occasion and physically attacking a witness on the witness stand on another so that court would either have to shackle, bind, and gag defendant in court or remove him to another room where he could watch the trial via closed-circuit television and freely talk to his attorney by telephone, trial court used constitutionally permissible method pursuant to (b)(2) to deal with disruptive defendant. People v. Davis, 851 P.2d 239 (Colo. App. 1993).

Removing defendant from the courtroom, rather than the child witness, violated defendant's due process right where defendant did not stipulate to the removal. People v. Aldridge, 2018 COA 131, __ P.3d __.

Although the trial court failed to include the mandatory parole period during the sentencing period and mittimus, it is not a violation of the defendant's right to be present at sentencing to subsequently correct the mittimus to include the mandatory parole period. People v. Nelson, 9 P.3d 1177 (Colo. App. 2000).

Trial court's action in making its resentencing decision the subject of a written order, rather than reconvening a hearing to announce that decision, was harmless. Defendant was present at both his sentencing and resentencing hearings when the information relied upon by the court for its sentencing decision was presented, and defendant raised no objection when, at the completion of the resentencing hearing, the court reserved its decision on resentencing and stated its intention to announce that decision at a later date. People v. Luu, 983 P.2d 15 (Colo. App. 1998).

Due process does not require the defendant's presence when his presence would be useless, or the benefit nebulous. People v. Luu, 983 P.2d 15 (Colo. App. 1998).

Rule 44. Appearance of Counsel

(a) Appointment of Counsel. If the defendant appears in court without counsel, the court shall advise the defendant of the right to counsel. In an appropriate case, if, upon the defendant's affidavit or sworn testimony and other investigation, the court finds that the defendant is financially unable to obtain counsel, an attorney shall be assigned to represent the defendant at every stage of the trial court proceedings. In any misdemeanor case the court may appoint as counsel law students who shall act under the provisions of C.R.C.P. 205.7. No lawyer need be appointed for a defendant who, after being advised, with full knowledge of his rights thereto, elects to proceed without counsel. Except in a case in which a law student has been appointed, unless good cause exists otherwise, the court shall appoint the state public defender.

(b) Multiple Representation by Counsel. Whenever two or more defendants have been jointly charged pursuant to Rule 8(b) or have been joined for trial pursuant to Rule 13, and are represented by the same retained or assigned counsel or by retained or assigned counsel who are associated in the practice of law, the court shall promptly inquire with respect to such joint representation and shall personally advise each defendant of the right to the effective assistance of counsel, including separate representation. Unless it appears that there is good cause to believe no conflict of interest is likely to arise, the court shall take such measures as may be appropriate to protect each defendant's right to counsel.

(c) Request for Withdrawal of a Lawyer During Proceedings. Except as provided in section (e), withdrawal of a lawyer in a criminal case is a matter within the sound discretion of the court. In exercising such discretion, the court shall balance the need for orderly administration of justice with the facts underlying the request.

(d) Procedure for Withdrawal During Proceedings.

(1) A lawyer may withdraw from a case only upon order of the court. In the discretion of the court, a hearing on a motion to withdraw may be waived with the consent of the prosecution and if a written substitution of counsel is filed which is signed by current counsel, future counsel and the defendant. A request to withdraw shall be in writing or may be made orally in the discretion of the court and shall state the grounds for the request. A request to withdraw shall be made as soon as practicable upon the lawyer becoming aware of the grounds for withdrawal. Advance notice of a request to withdraw shall be given to the defendant before any hearing, if practicable. Such notice to withdraw shall include:

(I) That the attorney wishes to withdraw;

(II) The grounds for withdrawal;

(III) That the defendant has the right to object to withdrawal;

(IV) That a hearing will be held and withdrawal will only be allowed if the court approves;

(V) That the defendant has the obligation to appear at all previously scheduled court dates;

(VI) That if the request to withdraw is granted, then the defendant will have the obligation to hire other counsel, request the appointment of counsel by the court or elect to represent himself or herself.

(2) Upon setting of a hearing on a motion to withdraw, the lawyer shall make reasonable efforts to give the defendant actual notice of the date, time and place of the hearing. No hearing shall be conducted without the presence of the defendant unless the motion is made subsequent to the failure of the defendant to appear in court as scheduled. A hearing need not be held and notice need not be given to a defendant when a motion to withdraw is filed after a defendant has failed to appear for a scheduled court appearance and has not reappeared within six months.

(e) Termination of Representation.

(1) Unless otherwise directed by the trial court or extended by an agreement between counsel and a defendant, counsel's representation of a defendant, whether retained or appointed, shall terminate at the conclusion of trial court proceedings and after a final determination of restitution. Trial court proceedings shall conclude at the point in time:

(I) When dismissal is granted by the court and no timely appeal has been filed;

(II) When an order enters granting a deferred prosecution, deferred sentence, or probation;

(III) After a sentence to incarceration is imposed upon conviction when no motion has been timely filed pursuant to Crim.P. 35(b) or such motion so filed is ruled on; or

(IV) When a notice of appeal is filed by the defendant.

(2) At the time a deferred prosecution or deferred sentence is granted or at the time sentence is imposed upon conviction, the court shall inform the defendant when representation shall terminate.

Court to advise defendant of right to counsel and to make financial inquiry. The rule imposes upon the trial court an affirmative duty to advise all criminal defendants, whether affluent or indigent, who appear without counsel of the right to counsel, and to inquire into the defendant's financial ability to employ counsel if pertinent. Allen v. People, 157 Colo. 582, 404 P.2d 266 (1965).

However, a defendant is not entitled to a presumption of poverty. Allen v. People, 157 Colo. 582, 404 P.2d 266 (1965).

Defendant with sufficient means accorded reasonable opportunity to employ attorney. If it appears that a defendant has sufficient means to employ an attorney of his own choosing, then he must be accorded a reasonable opportunity to do so. Allen v. People, 157 Colo. 582, 404 P.2d 266 (1965).

Attorney assigned to represent indigent defendant at every stage of trial court proceedings. If upon the defendant's affidavit or sworn testimony and other investigation the court finds that the defendant is financially unable to obtain counsel, an attorney shall be assigned to represent him at every stage of the trial court proceedings. Allen v. People, 157 Colo. 582, 404 P.2d 266 (1965).

Including imposition of sentence. This rule provides that in the case of an indigent defendant in a criminal proceeding, an attorney shall be assigned to represent him at every stage of the trial court proceedings, which includes imposition of sentence. The imposition of sentence is certainly one stage of the proceedings before the trial court; indeed, it is perhaps the most critical stage of the proceeding. John Doe v. People, 160 Colo. 215, 416 P.2d 376 (1966); Gehl v. People, 161 Colo. 535, 423 P.2d 332 (1967).

So, if a defendant later insists on this right, he is entitled to have the sentence vacated and a new one imposed, at which time he should be represented by an attorney and provided counsel if he is unable to employ his own lawyer. Gehl v. People, 161 Colo. 535, 423 P.2d 332 (1967).

Right to counsel extended to contempt proceedings resulting in imprisonment. The right to counsel must be extended to all contempt proceedings, whether labeled civil or criminal, which result in the imprisonment of the witness. Padilla v. Padilla, 645 P.2d 1327 (Colo. App. 1982).

Previously, appointment of counsel on appeal was generally denied to indigents in all cases except capital. In re Petition of Griffin, 152 Colo. 347, 382 P.2d 202 (1963).

Court must establish that waiver of right made knowingly and intelligently. Once it is established that a defendant has a right to counsel, the court must establish that any waiver of that constitutional right is made knowingly and intelligently. Padilla v. Padilla, 645 P.2d 1327 (Colo. App. 1982).

Court obligated to see that appointed counsel of sufficient ability and experience. When a court is called upon to appoint counsel for a defendant in a criminal case, it is its duty to see that counsel of sufficient ability and experience is assigned to fairly represent the defendant. Carlson v. People, 91 Colo. 418, 15 P.2d 625 (1932).

Structural error applies when defendant's counsel was allowed to withdraw in violation of sections (c) and (d)(2) because permitting counsel to withdraw over defendant's objection, based on information provided to the court outside of defendant's presence, and without balancing the need for orderly administration of justice with the facts underlying the request, denied him his counsel of choice. People v. Cardenas, 2015 COA 94M, 411 P.3d 956.

Failure to include defendant in hearing on his attorney's motion to withdraw requires reversal of convictions. Defendant was not present in chambers when his attorney spoke to the judge about withdrawal. Because defendant's presence was required by section (d)(2), the judge abused his discretion in granting the motion without including defendant in the proceedings. People v. Cardenas, 2015 COA 94M, 411 P.3d 956.

Failure to inquire about defendant's objections to or confusion about attorney's motion to withdraw before allowing attorney to withdraw requires reversal of convictions. People v. Cardenas, 2015 COA 94M, 411 P.3d 956.

One consenting to representation by counsel employed by another cannot complain counsel ineffective. One who has knowledge that he could have court appoint counsel if desired but consents to representation by counsel employed by another for him, cannot complain that counsel was ineffective without a showing of substantial prejudice to the defendant because of counsel's representation. Bresnahan v. People, 175 Colo. 286, 487 P.2d 551 (1971).

Joint representation does not result in a per se violation of the right to effective counsel. Neither defendant testified, so defense counsel was not faced with the possibility of commenting on the credibility of one to the detriment of the other. People v. Tafoya, 833 P.2d 841 (Colo. App. 1992).

Trial counsel was counsel of record at the time the 45-day period for filing a notice of appeal under C.A.R. 4(b) expired where trial counsel filed a Crim. P. 35(b) motion before appellate counsel was appointed and trial counsel had not moved to withdraw. People v. Baker, 104 P.3d 893 (Colo. 2005).

Counsel's representation of defendant did not terminate pursuant to the fee agreement between counsel and defendant. Counsel's representation terminates upon the occurrence of an event set forth in section (e) of this rule. Counsel may not enter into an agreement with defendant to terminate representation at an earlier date than prescribed by section (e). People v. Lancaster, 2018 COA 168, __ P.3d __.

After trial court found that defendant was engaging in trial-delaying conduct, it abused its discretion by denying defense counsels' motion to withdraw. The court arbitrarily, unreasonably, and unfairly determined that defense attorneys could effectively represent defendant despite his discharge of them and the court's previous finding that a conflict of interest existed between defense counsel and defendant because of a malpractice and breach of contract lawsuit defendant had commenced against them. The court should have granted defense counsels' motion to withdraw and advised defendant, in accordance with section (a), that he had the obligation to hire other counsel, request the appointment of counsel by the court, or elect to represent himself. In view of defendant's delay-causing conduct, the court should have explained to defendant the consequences of engaging in the conduct, which can result in an implied waiver of the right to counsel, and explained the risks of proceeding without counsel. People v. DeAtley, 2014 CO 45, 333 P.3d 61.

Rule 45. Time

(a) Computation. In computing any period of time prescribed or allowed by these rules, the day of the event from which the designated period of time begins to run is not to be included. Thereafter, every day shall be counted including holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays. The last day of the period so computed is to be included, unless it is a Saturday, a Sunday, or a legal holiday, in which event the period runs until the end of the next day which is not a Saturday, a Sunday, or a legal holiday. The ''next day'' is determined by continuing to count forward when the period is measured after an event and backward when measured before an event. As used in these Rules, ''legal holiday'' includes the first day of January, observed as New Year's Day; the third Monday in January, observed as Martin Luther King Day; the third Monday in February, observed as Washington-Lincoln Day; the last Monday in May, observed as Memorial Day; the fourth day of July, observed as Independence Day; the first Monday in September, observed as Labor Day; the second Monday in October, observed as Columbus Day; the 11th day of November, observed as Veteran's Day; the fourth Thursday in November, observed as Thanksgiving Day; the twenty-fifth day of December, observed as Christmas Day, and any other day except Saturday or Sunday when the court is closed.

(b) Enlargement. When an act is required or allowed to be performed at or within a specified time, the court for cause shown may at any time in its discretion:

(1) With or without motion or notice, order the period enlarged if application therefor is made before expiration of the period originally prescribed or of that period as extended by a previous order; or,

(2) Upon motion, permit the act to be done after expiration of the specified period if the failure to act on time was the result of excusable neglect.

(c) to (e) Repealed.

(f) Inmate Filings. A document filed by an inmate confined in an institution is timely filed with the court if deposited in the institution's internal mailing system on or before the last day for filing. If an institution has a system designed for legal mail, the inmate must use that system to receive the benefit of this rule.

COMMENT

After the particular effective date, time computation in most situations is intended to incorporate the Rule of Seven. Under the Rule of Seven, a day is a day, and because calendars are divided into 7-day week intervals, groupings of days are in 7-day or multiples of 7-day intervals. Groupings of less than 7 days have been left as they were because such small numbers do not interfere with the underlying concept. Details of the Rule of Seven reform are set forth in an article by Richard P. Holme, 41 Colo. Lawyer, Vol. 1, P 33 (January 2012).

Time computation is sometimes ''forward,'' meaning starting the count at a particular stated event [such as date of filing] and counting forward to the deadline date. Counting ''backward'' means counting backward from the event to reach the deadline date [such as a stated number of days being allowed before the commencement of trial]. In determining the effective date of the Rule of Seven time computation/time interval amendments having a statutory basis, said amendments take effect on July 1, 2012 and regardless of whether time intervals are counted forward or backward, both the time computation start date and deadline date must be after June 30, 2012. Further, the time computation/time interval amendments do not apply to modify the settings of any dates or time intervals set by an order of a court entered before July 1, 2012.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, '''Rule of Seven' for Trial Lawyers: Calculating Litigation Deadlines'', see 41 Colo. Law. 33 (January 2012).

Rule preserves defendant's right to raise fourth amendment issue. Section (d) of this rule which must be read in conjunction with Rule 41(e), Crim. P., adequately preserves a defendant's right to raise a fourth amendment issue, while carrying out the salutary purpose of not commingling the fourth amendment issue with the guilt issue. Morgan v. People, 166 Colo. 451, 444 P.2d 386 (1968).

Purpose of section (d) is to allow time for adequate preparation. People v. District Court, 189 Colo. 159, 538 P.2d 887 (1975).

And notice served same day as pretrial hearing clear violation of rule. Where notice of motion to disqualify the district attorney from further participation in a criminal case is given to the district attorney's office the same morning that the hearing on the motion was held, the consideration of this motion by the trial court when the district attorney did not have fair notice and an opportunity to defend himself is a clear violation of the provisions of this rule. People v. District Court, 189 Colo. 159, 538 P.2d 887 (1975).

But failure to object to lack of notice constitutes waiver. If defendant fails to object to the lack of notice at the hearing prior to trial or fails to request a continuance, his silence constitutes a waiver of the five-day notice. Maraggos v. People, 175 Colo. 130, 486 P.2d 1 (1971).

Timely motion for new trial is not jurisdictional in the sense that without it the court would lack authority to adjudicate the subject matter. People v. Moore, 193 Colo. 81, 562 P.2d 749 (1977).

Rather, it is a procedural prerequisite intended to assure that the matters appealed have been considered by the trial court. People v. Moore, 193 Colo. 81, 562 P.2d 749 (1977).

And prosecution's failure to object waives timeliness issue on appeal. The people, by failing to object to the trial court's hearing and deciding the new trial motion, waived their right to raise the timeliness issue on appeal. People v. Moore, 193 Colo. 81, 562 P.2d 749 (1977).

Excusable neglect. A trial court may extend the time for filing a motion on the basis that failure to act on time was the result of excusable neglect if there was a factual finding to support a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel. Swainson v. People, 712 P.2d 479 (Colo. 1986).

Excusable neglect does not include family considerations or lack of knowledge of the law for purposes of extending the time to file a Crim. P. 35 motion. People v. Delgado, 83 P.3d 1144 (Colo. App. 2003), rev'd on other grounds, 105 P.3d 634 (Colo. 2005).

Burden of showing excusable neglect under section (b) is upon the defendant. People v. Dillon, 655 P.2d 841 (Colo. 1982).

Defendant wrongfully believing appeal being processed by attorney allowed to file untimely motion. In light of the defendant's uncontroverted belief that his attorney is processing his appeal, the trial court abuses its discretion when it later denies defendant's motion to file an untimely motion and thereby perfect his appeal. People v. Dillon, 631 P.2d 1153 (Colo. App. 1981).

Considerations governing determination of effect of time limitations in criminal cases and in civil cases. People v. Moore, 193 Colo. 81, 562 P.2d 749 (1977).

Mere speculation regarding the court's disposition of a motion for a continuance or to recall a witness does not obviate the defendant's duty to seek such procedures if the defendant is to base his claim of prejudice on the inability to prepare new theories of defense or to cross-examine past witnesses in light of previously undisclosed evidence. Salazar v. People, 870 P.2d 1215 (Colo. 1994).

Applied in People v. Masamba, 39 Colo. App. 187, 563 P.2d 382 (1977); People v. Houpe, 41 Colo. App. 253, 586 P.2d 241 (1978); People v. Peterson, 656 P.2d 1301 (Colo. 1983).

Rule 46.1. Bail — County Courts

Repealed April 2, 1987, effective September 1, 1987.

Rule 47. Motions

(a) An application to the court for an order shall be by motion. A motion other than one made during a trial or hearing shall be in writing unless the court permits it to be made orally. It shall state the grounds upon which it is made and shall set forth the relief or order sought. It may be supported by affidavit.

(b) A written motion, other than one which may be heard ex parte, and notice of the hearing thereof, shall be served not later than 7 days before the time specified for the hearing unless a different period is fixed by rule or order of the court. For cause shown such an order may be made on ex parte application. When a motion is supported by affidavit, the affidavit shall be served with the motion, and opposing affidavits may be served not less than one day before the hearing unless the court permits them to be served at a later time.

ANNOTATION

Court is justified in considering statements in affidavits in support of motion to dismiss indictments as evidence of the facts asserted. People v. Lewis, 183 Colo. 236, 516 P.2d 416 (1973).

If party disagrees with allegations in affidavits attached to motion to dismiss indictments, he should file counter affidavits or call witnesses to dispute the allegations. People v. Lewis, 183 Colo. 236, 516 P.2d 416 (1973).

Applied in People v. Martinez, 43 Colo. App. 419, 608 P.2d 359 (1979); People v. Buggs, 631 P.2d 1200 (Colo. App. 1981).

Rule 48. Dismissal

(a) By the State. No criminal case pending in any court shall be dismissed or a nolle prosequi therein entered by any prosecuting attorney or his deputy, unless upon a motion in open court, and with the court's consent and approval. Such a motion shall be supported or accompanied by a written statement concisely stating the reasons for the action. The statement shall be filed with the record of the particular case and be open to public inspection. Such a dismissal may not be filed during the trial without the defendant's consent.

(b) By the Court.

(1) If, after the filing of a complaint, there is unnecessary delay in finding an indictment or filing an information against a defendant who has been held to answer in a district court, the court may dismiss the prosecution. Except as otherwise provided in this Rule, if a defendant is not brought to trial on the issues raised by the complaint, information, or indictment within six months from the entry of a plea of not guilty, he shall be discharged from custody if he has not been admitted to bail, the pending charges shall be dismissed, whether he is in custody or on bail, and the defendant shall not again be indicted, informed against, or committed for the same offense, or for another offense based upon the same act or series of acts arising out of the same criminal episode.

(2) If trial results in conviction which is reversed on appeal, any new trial must be commenced within six months after the date of the receipt by the trial court of the mandate from the appellate court.

(3) If a trial date has been fixed by the court, and thereafter the defendant requests and is granted a continuance for trial, the period within which the trial shall be had is extended for an additional six months period from the date upon which the continuance was granted.

(3.5) If a trial date has been fixed by the court and the defendant fails to make an appearance in person on the trial date, the period in which the trial shall be had is extended for an additional six months' period from the date of the defendant's next appearance.

(4) If a trial date has been fixed by the court, and thereafter the prosecuting attorney requests and is granted a continuance, the time is not thereby extended within which the trial shall be had, as is provided in subsection (b)(1) of this Rule, unless the defendant in person or by his counsel in open court of record expressly agrees to the continuance. The time for trial, in the event of such agreement, is then extended by the number of days intervening between the granting of such continuance and the date to which trial is continued.

(5) To be entitled to a dismissal under subsection (b)(1) of this Rule, the defendant must move for dismissal prior to the commencement of his trial or the entry of a plea of guilty to the charge or an included offense. Failure so to move is a waiver of the defendant's rights under this section.

(5.1) If a trial date is offered by the court to a defendant who is represented by counsel and neither the defendant nor his counsel expressly objects to the offered date as beyond the time within which the trial shall be had pursuant to this rule, then the period within which the trial shall be had is extended until such trial date and may be extended further pursuant to any other applicable provision of this rule.

(6) In computing the time within which a defendant shall be brought to trial as provided in subsection (b)(1) of this Rule, the following periods of time shall be excluded:

(I) Any period during which the defendant is incompetent to stand trial or is unable to appear by reason of illness or physical disability or is under observation or examination at any time after the issue of insanity, incompetency or impaired mental condition is raised;

COMMITTEE COMMENT

This amendment to Crim. P. 48(b)(6)(I) is designed to bring this Rule into conformity with its corresponding statute, Section 18-1-405(6)(A), 8B C.R.S. (1994 Supp.).

(II) The period of delay caused by an interlocutory appeal, an appeal from an order that dismisses one or more counts of a charging document prior to trial, or after issuance of a rule to show cause in an original action brought under Colorado Appellate Rule 21, whether commenced by the defendant or by the prosecution;

(III) A reasonable period of delay when the defendant is joined for trial with a codefendant as to whom the time for trial has not run and there is good cause for not granting a severance;

(IV) The period or delay resulting from the voluntary absence or unavailability of the defendant; however, a defendant shall be considered unavailable whenever his whereabouts are known but his presence for trial cannot be obtained, or he resists being returned to the state for trial;

(V) The period of delay caused by any mistrial, not to exceed three months for each mistrial;

(VI) The period of delay caused at the instance of the defendant;

(VII) The period of delay not exceeding six months resulting from a continuance granted at the request of the prosecuting attorney, without the consent of the defendant, if:

(A) The continuance is granted because of the unavailability of evidence material to the state's case, when the prosecuting attorney has exercised due diligence to obtain such evidence and there are reasonable grounds to believe that such evidence will be available at the later date; or

(B) The continuance is granted to allow the prosecuting attorney additional time in felony cases to prepare the state's case and additional time is justified because of exceptional circumstances of the case and the court entered specific findings with respect to the justification.

(VIII) The period of delay between the new date set for trial following the expiration of the time periods excluded by paragraphs (I), (II), (III), (IV), and (V) of this subsection (6), not to exceed three months.

(IX) The period of delay between the filing of a motion pursuant to section 18-1-202 (11) and any decision by the court regarding such motion, and if such decision by the court transfers the case to another county, the period of delay until the first appearance of all the parties in a court of appropriate jurisdiction in the county to which the case has been transferred, and in such event the provisions of subsection (7) of this section shall apply.

(7) If a trial date has been fixed by the court and the case is subsequently transferred to a court in another county, the period within which trial must be had is extended for an additional three months from the date of the first appearance of all of the parties in a court of appropriate jurisdiction in the county to which the case has been transferred.

Annotator's note. For other annotations concerning speedy trials, see § 16 of art. II, Colo. Const., and § 18-1-405.

Intent of rule. This rule was designed to render the federal and state constitutional rights to a speedy trial more effective. Sweet v. Myers, 200 Colo. 50, 612 P.2d 75 (1980); People v. Sanchez, 649 P.2d 1049 (Colo. 1982).

An accused person's right to a speedy trial is ultimately grounded on the federal and state constitutions, and statutes relating to speedy trial are intended to render these constitutional guarantees more effective. Simakis v. District Court, 194 Colo. 436, 577 P.2d 3 (1978).

This rule was designed to substantially conform to § 18-1-405. Carr v. District Court, 190 Colo. 125, 543 P.2d 1253 (1975).

Both simplify constitutional parameters. This rule and § 18-1-405 clarify and simplify the parameters of the constitutional right to a speedy trial. Carr v. II. BY THE STATE.

District attorney's common-law power to enter nolle prosequi. Prior to the enactment of this rule, the common-law rule was that the district attorney had the power to enter a nolle prosequi in a criminal case without the consent of the court. People v. Lichtenstein, 630 P.2d 70 (Colo. 1981).

Dismissal is function of district attorney. Neither the complaining witness nor the trial judge may dismiss a prosecution on behalf of the state; that is the function of the district attorney. People v. Dennis, 164 Colo. 163, 433 P.2d 339 (1967).

Trial court's discretion in reviewing motion to dismiss. In exercising its discretion in reviewing a motion to dismiss charges, the trial court should not serve merely as a rubber stamp for the prosecutor's decision. People v. Lichtenstein, 630 P.2d 70 (Colo. 1981).

The trial court's refusal to consent to a dismissal of charges is appropriate only where the evidence is clear and convincing that the interests of the defendant or the public are jeopardized by the district attorney's refusal to prosecute. People v. Lichtenstein, 630 P.2d 70 (Colo. 1981).

Court abused its discretion in denying prosecution's motion to dismiss absent finding that prosecution was not acting in good faith in seeking to dismiss charges. The question is not whether there may be good reasons to deny the prosecution's motion to dismiss, such as the victim's opposition to dismissal, but whether the prosecution sought to dismiss the charges based upon a good faith exercise of prosecutorial discretion, in this case, a candid assessment of the strength of the victim's and potential witnesses' testimony. While the prosecution's evidentiary concerns might not be insurmountable, it is not the trial court's role to determine whether those weaknesses may be overcome, but whether the prosecution's analysis was conducted in good faith. People v. Storlie, 2014 CO 47, 327 P.3d 243.

III. BY THE COURT.

A. In General.

Rule is independent of constitutional provisions. This rule is tied to the historical right and the inherent power of the court to dismiss a case for want of prosecution and is separate and independent of the constitutional right to a speedy trial. People ex rel. Coca v. District Court, 187 Colo. 280, 530 P.2d 958 (1975).

The right to a speedy trial is guaranteed by § 16 of art. II, Colo. Const., and this constitutional protection is independent of any right established by statute or rule. People v. Slender Wrap, Inc., 36 Colo. App. 11, 536 P.2d 850 (1975).

Provisions of this rule and the constitutional issue as to denial of speedy trial are mutually exclusive, and the resolution of one does not necessarily determine the resolution of the other. Potter v. District Court, 186 Colo. 1, 525 P.2d 429 (1974).

The obvious purpose of this rule is to prevent ''dillydallying'' on the part of the district attorney or the court in a criminal proceeding. People v. Bates, 155 Colo. 277, 394 P.2d 134 (1964); Jaramillo v. District Court, 174 Colo. 561, 484 P.2d 1219 (1971).

Dismissal of charges sufficient to protect defendant's rights. Where defendant's trial took place within six months of defendant's plea of not guilty to the charges in the second indictment, and while the trial was not held until more than six months after defendant's plea to the charges of the original indictment, those charges were dismissed by the trial court, such dismissal was sufficient to protect defendant's rights under § 18-1-405 and section (b)(1) of this rule. People v. Wilkinson, 37 Colo. App. 531, 555 P.2d 1167 (1976).

Speedy trial is calculated separately for each criminal complaint. When charges in a complaint are properly dismissed within the speedy trial period without prejudice, they are a nullity. If defendant is arraigned under new charges, even if they are identical to the dismissed charges, the speedy trial period begins anew. Huang v. County Court of Douglas County, 98 P.3d 924 (Colo. App. 2003).

No dismissal where not authorized by rule or due process. The trial court may not, on its own motion, dismiss an action on behalf of the defendant prior to trial over the objection of the district attorney where such dismissal is not authorized under the rules and is not required by due process. People v. Butz, 37 Colo. App. 212, 547 P.2d 262 (1975).

Outrageous governmental conduct need not be prejudicial to defendant to constitute a violation of due process. People v. Auld, 815 P.2d 956 (Colo. App. 1991).

Trial court had no authority to dismiss case based on the theory that it was an abuse of prosecutorial discretion to retry the case. A district attorney has broad discretion in determining who shall be prosecuted and what crimes shall be charged, and such discretion may not be controlled or limited by judicial intervention, except in unusual circumstances which result in a denial of a particular defendant's due process right to fundamental fairness. People v. Schwartz, 678 P.2d 1000 (Colo. 1984).

Court's practice of postponing arraignment until all pretrial matters are concluded thwarts purpose of this rule and § 18-1-405. People v. Chavez, 779 P.2d 375 (Colo. 1989).

It is the joint responsibility of the district attorney and the trial court to assiduously avoid any occasion for a useless and unnecessary delay in the trial of a criminal case. People v. Murphy, 183 Colo. 106, 515 P.2d 107 (1973).

Relief in nature of prohibition appropriate remedy. Relief in the nature of prohibition under C.A.R. 21, is an appropriate remedy when a district court is proceeding without jurisdiction to try a defendant in violation of his right to a speedy trial. Marquez v. District Court, 200 Colo. 55, 613 P.2d 1302 (1980).

Relation of section (b) to Rule 248(b), C.M.C.R. Section (b) is the parallel rule to Rule 248(b), C.M.C.R. Bachicha v. Municipal Court, 41 Colo. App. 198, 581 P.2d 746 (1978).

Uniform Mandatory Disposition of Detainers Act controls in conflict with rule. When there is a conflict with the general speedy trial provisions of the Uniform Mandatory Disposition of Detainers Act and this rule, the provisions of the uniform act control. People v. Swazo, 199 Colo. 486, 610 P.2d 1072 (1980).

B. Right to Speedy Trial.

Right to a speedy trial is not only for the benefit of the accused, but also for the protection of the public. It is essential that an early determination of guilt be made so that the innocent may be exonerated and the guilty punished. Jaramillo v. District Court, 174 Colo. 561, 484

P.2d 1219 (1971); People v. Martin, 732 P.2d 1210 (Colo. 1987).

Speedy trial provisions are designed to foster more effective prisoner treatment and rehabilitation by eliminating, as expeditiously as possible, the uncertainties surrounding outstanding criminal charges. Simakis v. District Court, 194 Colo. 436, 577 P.2d 3 (1978).

Court lacks jurisdiction to try defendant in violation of speedy trial right. A court would be proceeding without jurisdiction if it were to try criminal defendant in violation of his rights under the Colorado speedy trial statute and the rules of the Colorado supreme court. Hampton v. District Court, 199 Colo. 104, 605 P.2d 54 (1980).

Determination of denial of speedy trial is judicial question. The question of determining when an accused has been denied a speedy trial under this rule, or under the constitution, is necessarily a judicial question. Jaramillo v. District Court, 174 Colo. 561, 484 P.2d 1219 (1971).

Appealability. Where determination that delays in bringing defendant to trial involved resolutions of fact questions, the district attorney could not appeal such determinations. People v. Murphy, 183 Colo. 106, 515 P.2d 107 (1973).

Speedy public trial is a relative concept requiring judicial determination on a case-by-case basis. Lucero v. People, 171 Colo. 167, 465 P.2d 504 (1970).

Determined by circumstances of each case. A speedy public trial is a relative concept, because the circumstances of each case determine whether it has been afforded. Maes v. People, 169 Colo. 200, 454 P.2d 792 (1969).

The circumstances of each case must be examined to determine whether a speedy trial has been afforded, and in making this determination the court must consider the length of the pretrial delay, the reasons for it, whether the defendant has demanded a speedy trial, and whether any prejudice actually resulted to the defendant. All of these factors are interrelated and must be considered together with any other relevant circumstances. Gelfand v. People, 196 Colo. 487, 586 P.2d 1331 (1978).

Such as defendant's understanding of when six-month period begins to run. Where defendant's expressed understanding was that the six-month period of the speedy trial statute would commence to run at the end of his continuance, the failure to try defendant within six months of the granting of the continuance does not entitle him to dismissal of charges. Baca v. District Court, 198 Colo. 486, 603 P.2d 940 (1979).

The speedy trial statute (§ 18-1-405) is intended to implement the constitutional right to a speedy trial by requiring dismissal of the case whenever the defendant is not tried within the six-month period and the delay does not qualify for one of the express exclusionary categories set out in the statute. People v. Deason, 670 P.2d 792 (Colo. 1983).

Section (b) and § 18-1-405 are virtually identical. Since section (b) of this rule is the procedural counterpart to the speedy trial statute and is virtually identical to § 18-1-405, the resolution of a speed trial issue if the same whether the analysis proceeds from the statute or the rule. People v. Deason, 670 P.2d 792 (Colo. 1983).

Section 18-1-405 refers to trial resolving ultimate guilt or innocence. The phrase ''brought to trial on the issues raised by the ... information'', as used in § 18-1-405, refers to a trial which resolves the ultimate guilt or innocence of the accused as to the charges filed against him and not a sanity trial, even when the defendant pleads not guilty by reason of insanity. People v. Deason, 670 P.2d 792 (Colo. 1983).

And commencement of a sanity trial is not the functional equivalent of a trial on the merits for purposes of satisfying the state's speedy trial obligation. People v. Deason, 670 P.2d 792 (Colo. 1983).

Constitutional right to speedy trial not controlled by six-month statutory period. A defendant is not precluded from asserting her constitutional right to a speedy trial simply because the trial was held within the required statutory period; the defendant, however, has the burden of proving that her constitutional speedy trial right has been denied. Gelfand v. People, 196 Colo. 487, 586 P.2d 1331 (1978).

Simply because a trial is held within six months, the defendant is not precluded from raising his right to a speedy public trial as embodied in § 16 of art. II, Colo. Const. Casias v. People, 160 Colo. 152, 415 P.2d 344, cert. denied, 385 U.S. 979, 87 S. Ct. 523, 17 L. Ed. 2d 441 (1966).

For the six-month proscription of this rule defines the outside limits for prosecution. People v. Small, 177 Colo. 118, 493 P.2d 15 (1972).

This rule is not a statement of the minimum time that must expire before a defendant can look for relief for denial of a speedy trial. People v. Mayes, 178 Colo. 429, 498 P.2d 1123 (1972).

The six-month provision sets up a maximum limitation beyond which a defendant shall not be tried for the offense charged, provided the delay was not occasioned by his action or request. Casias v. People, 160 Colo. 152, 415 P.2d 344, cert. denied, 385 U.S. 979, 87 S. Ct. 523, 17 L. Ed. 2d 441 (1966).

Prejudice to the defendant could dictate that a case be dismissed for failure to grant a speedy trial, even though the six-month period set forth in the rule has not expired. People v. Small, 177 Colo. 118, 493 P.2d 15 (1972).

Six-month limitation begins to run. The six-month limitation of both § 18-1-405 and section (b)(1) of this rule runs from the date that defendant's plea is entered. People v. Wilkinson, 37 Colo. App. 531, 555 P.2d 1167 (1976).

Section (b)(1) plainly requires that the defendant be brought to trial within six months of the date upon which he enters a plea of not guilty to the charges set forth in the information. People v. Romero, 196 Colo. 520, 587 P.2d 789 (1978).

The six-month period commences upon the arraignment for the last information. People v. Dunhill, 40 Colo. App. 137, 570 P.2d 1097 (1977).

The six-month period, provided for in section (b), commences to run upon the defendant's arraignment on the last of three informations where two prior informations have been dismissed. People v. Lopez, 41 Colo. App. 206, 587 P.2d 792 (1978).

Record to show compliance. The burden of establishing compliance with the speedy trial statute includes making a record sufficient for an appellate court to determine such statutory compliance. Marquez v. District Court, 200 Colo. 55, 613 P.2d 1302 (1980).

Court cannot dismiss on own motion. Where defendant and counsel failed to appear at trial date, this rule does not authorize a district court, on its own motion, to dismiss a criminal case over the district attorney's objection, even though it appears that further prosecution will be useless and unnecessarily costly. People v. Hale, 194 Colo. 503, 573 P.2d 935 (1978).

Speedy trial requirements apply in juvenile proceedings. Trial courts are bound by the statutory and constitutional speedy trial requirements in juvenile as well as adult proceedings; fundamental fairness requires no less. P.V. v. District Court, 199 Colo. 357, 609 P.2d 110 (1980).

A trial court conducting a juvenile proceeding is bound by the same statutory and constitutional speedy trial requirements that are applicable in adult proceedings. People in Interest of T.F.B., 199 Colo. 474, 610 P.2d 501 (1980).

But not in trial de novo for violation of ordinance. Six-month speedy trial rule does not apply in a trial de novo in the county court for violation of a municipal ordinance. Rainwater v. County Court, 43 Colo. App. 477, 604 P.2d 1195 (1979).

Special time limitations of § 24-60-501 prevail, when conflicts arise, over the more general criminal procedure provisions of § 18-1-405 and this rule. Simakis v. District Court, 194 Colo. 436, 577 P.2d 3 (1978).

Defendant must enter plea before he may take advantage of the restriction of § 18-1-405 and section (b)(1) of this rule. People v. Wilkinson, 37 Colo. App. 531, 555 P.2d 1167 (1976).

Where no plea has been entered, there has been no violation of the rule. Potter v. District Court, 186 Colo. 1, 525 P.2d 429 (1974).

Defendant only required to move for dismissal. The burden of insuring compliance with the time requirements of section (b) is on the prosecution and the trial court, to the point that the only affirmative action required on the part of the defendant is that he move for a dismissal prior to trial. People v. Abeyta, 195 Colo. 338, 578 P.2d 645 (1978).

To properly raise the question, the accused may apply for his discharge or for dismissal for lack of a speedy trial. Jaramillo v. District Court, 174 Colo. 561, 484 P.2d 1219 (1971).

And must show he was not afforded speedy trial. A motion for discharge or for dismissal for want of due prosecution of a charge of crime must be sustained by the accused, as he has the burden of showing that he was not afforded a speedy trial. Jaramillo v. District Court, 174 Colo. 561, 484 P.2d 1219 (1971).

The burden is upon the defendant to show that an expeditious trial was denied him. Maes v. People, 169 Colo. 200, 454 P.2d 792 (1969); Ziatz v. People, 171 Colo. 58, 465 P.2d 406 (1970).

The burden is upon the defendant to establish that he has been denied a speedy trial in violation of the statute or rule or that his constitutional right to a speedy trial requires dismissal. Saiz v. District Court, 189 Colo. 555, 542 P.2d 1293 (1975); People v. Chavez, 779 P.2d 375 (Colo. 1989).

Although there is considerable delay in bringing the defendants to trial, such is immaterial where it is still accomplished within the six-month requirement, and defendants fail to meet the burden of showing they were denied an expeditious trial, and that they were prejudiced thereby. Casias v. Patterson, 398 F.2d 486 (10th Cir. 1968), cert. denied, 393 U.S. 1108, 89 S. Ct. 918, 21 L. Ed. 2d 804 (1969).

Although not because bail is granted. The right to a speedy trial is not dissipated by the fact that the defendant is granted bail. Jaramillo v. District Court, 174 Colo. 561, 484 P.2d 1219 (1971).

Consistent with court's trial docket. The burden is upon defendant who asserts denial of speedy trial to show facts establishing that, consistent with court's trial docket conditions, he could have been afforded trial. Rowse v. District Court, 180 Colo. 44, 502 P.2d 422 (1972).

As a speedy trial envisions a public trial consistent with the court's business. Lucero v. People, 171 Colo. 167, 465 P.2d 504 (1970).

The constitutional right to a speedy trial means a trial consistent with the court's business. People v. Mayes, 178 Colo. 429, 498 P.2d 1123 (1972).

And not immediately after apprehension and indictment. Speedy public trial does not mean trial immediately after the accused is apprehended and indicted, but public trial consistent with the court's business. Maes v. People, 169 Colo. 200, 454 P.2d 792 (1969).

Congestion of docket must be considered. One circumstance to be considered in determining whether the defendant received a speedy trial is the extent of congestion of the docket of the trial court. Lucero v. People, 171 Colo. 167, 465 P.2d 504 (1970).

Although it is clear that docket congestion would not warrant a retrial later than the three-month maximum period for delay caused by a mistrial, it is a factor in determining the reasonableness of the delay within the statutory and procedural time periods of § 18-1-405 (6)(e) and section (b)(6)(V) of this rule. Pinelli v. District Court, 197 Colo. 555, 595 P.2d 225 (1979).

When a trial court continues a case due to docket congestion, but makes a reasonable effort to reschedule within the speedy trial period, and defense counsel's scheduling conflict does not permit a new date within the speedy trial deadline, the resulting delay is attributable to defendant. The period of delay is excludable from time calculations for purposes of the applicable speedy trial provision. Hills v. Westminster Mun. Court, 245 P.3d 947 (Colo. 2011).

Delays which are occasioned by a district attorney are to be considered by a trial court in determining whether defendant had been denied his constitutional right to a speedy trial. People v. Mayes, 178 Colo. 429, 498 P.2d 1123 (1972).

Deliberate election of district attorney to postpone trial is denial. Where the facts clearly establish that a defendant was denied a speedy trial through no fault of his own and as a result of the deliberate election of the district attorney to postpone the trial, the defendant has been denied a speedy trial under the provisions of section (b) of this rule. Jaramillo v. District Court, 174 Colo. 561, 484 P.2d 1219 (1971).

Delay caused by change of venue. When a change of venue is granted after arraignment, it is incumbent upon the prosecuting attorney to make a motion to obtain additional time to bring the defendant to trial because of the exceptional circumstances of the case, and the trial court must then make specific findings with respect to the justification. People v. Colantonio, 196 Colo. 242, 583 P.2d 919 (1978).

State cannot dismiss and refile charges indiscriminately and avoid the mandate of this rule. Schiffner v. People, 173 Colo. 123, 476 P.2d 756 (1970).

The prosecution cannot indiscriminately dismiss and refile charges in order to avoid the mandate of § 18-1-405 and section (b)(1) of this rule. People v. Wilkinson, 37 Colo. App. 531, 555 P.2d 1167 (1976).

And subsequent indictment charging same offense must be dismissed. Where defendant was charged with an offense in one indictment and was subject to jurisdiction of court for more than one year, a subsequent indictment charging the defendant with same offense had to be dismissed for lack of speedy trial. Rowse v. District Court, 180 Colo. 44, 502 P.2d 422 (1972).

Provided defendant proves presecution's course of action. To be entitled to dismissal on these grounds, the defendant must affirmatively establish the existence of such a course of action on the part of the prosecution. People v. Wilkinson, 37 Colo. App. 531, 555 P.2d 1167 (1976).

The burden of establishing that the prosecution indiscriminately dismissed and refiled charges in order to avoid the mandate of § 18-1-405 and section (b)(1) of this rule is not satisfied by proof only that the district attorney sought and obtained a subsequent indictment for different offenses arising from the same transaction. People v. Wilkinson, 37 Colo. App. 531, 555 P.2d 1167 (1976).

But where actions of district attorney in refiling are result of change in circumstances which justify that action, no violation of this rule occurs. Schiffner v. People, 173 Colo. 123, 476 P.2d 756 (1970).

As where federal sanctions are nullified after state action is dismissed. Where the district attorney was acting for the benefit of the defendant when he dismissed the original information based on the assumption that the defendant should not be punished twice for the same transaction, then when it becomes apparent that the defendant is to escape federal sanctions by reason of a technical objection, it is certainly proper for the district attorney to refile the state charges, and the actions of the district attorney are within the spirit of this rule. Schiffner v. People, 173 Colo. 123, 476 P.2d 756 (1970).

Effect of prosecution's filing amended complaint. When the prosecution files an amended complaint charging new material after the defendant's initial guilty plea, the period of time for dismissal under the speedy trial provisions is measured from the second guilty plea unless the prosecution has shown bad faith in amending the complaint. If the amended complaint does not charge new material, the time period is measured from the original guilty plea. Amon v. People, 198 Colo. 172, 597 P.2d 569 (1979).

Mistrials due to prosecutor's actions not treated differently. Neither subparagraph (b)(6)(V) of this rule nor § 18-1-405 (6)(e), treats mistrials due to the prosecutor's actions differently from mistrials due to other reasons. People v. Erickson, 194 Colo. 557, 574 P.2d 504 (1978).

For purposes of six-month period, new trial order similar to reversal. A new trial order pursuant to a new trial motion is similar to a reversal on appeal for purposes of the speedy trial provisions and results in a six-month speedy trial period. People v. Jamerson, 196 Colo. 63, 580 P.2d 805 (1978).

Failure to demand dismissal waives speedy trial objection. Failure to bring defendant to trial within the allotted time does not automatically deprive the trial court of jurisdiction, because defendant's failure to demand dismissal prior to trial waives any speedy trial objection. People v. Anderson, 649 P.2d 720 (Colo. App. 1982).

In accordance with the express language of § 18-1-405 (5), defendant waived his right to a speedy trial by failing to move for dismissal of charges prior to entering a guilty plea. This did not, however, automatically waive the defendant's constitutional right to a speedy trial. Moody v. Corsentino, 843 P.2d 1355 (Colo. 1993).

Delay caused by briefing and determining defendant's motion to dismiss properly charged to defendant. Williamsen v. People, 735 P.2d 176 (Colo. 1987).

Determination that delay was caused by substitution of counsel not supported by record and not properly chargeable to defendant. Defendant's actions did not require a substitution of counsel, he was not counseled by the court on a need for a continuance, and court did not attempt to find other counsel who could meet the deadline. People ex rel. Gallagher v. District Court, 933 P.2d 583 (Colo. 1997).

Express waiver or other affirmative conduct evidencing a waiver of the right to a speedy trial must be shown before a trial court may deny a dismissal motion. People v. Gallegos, 192 Colo. 450, 560 P.2d 93 (1977); Rance v. County Court, 193 Colo. 220, 564 P.2d 422 (1977); People v. Abeyta, 195 Colo. 338, 578 P.2d 645 (1978).

Mere silence by a defense counsel to a trial setting beyond the speedy trial period shall not be construed as a waiver of a defendant's right to a speedy trial. Rance v. County Court, 193 Colo. 220, 564 P.2d 422 (1977); People v. Abeyta, 195 Colo. 338, 578 P.2d 645 (1978); People v. Lopez, 41 Colo. App. 206, 587 P.2d 792 (1978).

Defendant's waiver limited. Where petitioner moved to continue his arraignment date, his written motion contained a statement to the effect that "the defendant waives his right to a speedy trial", this statement was intended only as a waiver of the right to challenge any speedy trial violation caused by the request for a continuance of the arraignment date and was not effective with respect to any subsequently occurring statutory speedy trial violation. Sweet v. Myers, 200 Colo. 50, 612 P.2d 75 (1980).

Failure of each defendant to interpose any objection to a trial setting in county court beyond the six-month speedy trial period did not waive his right to a speedy trial. Rance v. County Court, 193 Colo. 220, 564 P.2d 422 (1977).

Waiver after six-month period questionable. It is questionable whether a waiver of the right to a dismissal for failure to be granted a speedy trial could ever occur after the right to dismissal has already accrued. People v. Abeyta, 195 Colo. 338, 578 P.2d 645 (1978).

Presence of defendant or counsel for section (b)(6)(VII)(A) continuance. It is not clear under section (b)(6)(VII)(A) whether the presence of the defendant or his counsel in open court is required. People v. Baker, 38 Colo. 101, 556 P.2d 90 (1976).

Showing required by section (b)(6)(VII)(A). Section (b)(6)(VII)(A) requires a showing not only that the evidence is material and unavailable but also that the prosecuting attorney has exercised due diligence to obtain it. People v. Baker, 38 Colo. 101, 556 P.2d 90 (1976).

C. Exclusion of Periods of Delay.

Exclusion of delay caused by defendant. This rule excludes delay which is caused by, agreed to, or created at the instance of the defendant. Saiz v. District Court, 189 Colo. 555, 542 P.2d 1293 (1975).

Where the delay has been initially caused by the defendant, he cannot invoke this rule. Lucero v. People, 171 Colo. 167, 465 P.2d 504 (1970).

A defendant is not entitled to be discharged if he requests a postponement of his trial or otherwise causes the delay. People v. Bates, 155 Colo. 277, 394 P.2d 134 (1964).

Where attributable to affirmative action by defendant. In computing the time within which a defendant must be brought to trial, in order for the delay to be charged to the defendant, it must be attributable to affirmative action on defendant's part, or to defendant's express consent to the delay, or to other affirmative conduct evidencing such consent. Tassett v. Yeager, 195 Colo. 190, 576 P.2d 558 (1978).

An express consent to the delay or other affirmative conduct evidencing such consent must be shown before the delay is chargeable to the defendant. People v. Lopez, 41 Colo. App. 206, 587 P.2d 792 (1978).

Since the six-month provision of this rule is conditioned upon the proposition that the delay is not caused by the action or request of the defendant. Lucero v. People, 171 Colo. 167, 465 P.2d 504 (1970).

Factors authorized a continuance and thereby extended the speedy trial time where a period of delay was attributable to the inability of the prosecution, despite its exercise of due diligence, to obtain the victim's presence for trial and prosecution demonstrated the victim would be available to testify at a later date. People v. Grenemyer, 827 P.2d 603 (Colo. App. 1992).

Period of delay was excluded from the speedy trial period under the provisions of section (b)(6)(III). The trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to grant a severance, therefore the continuance granted to the codefendant was chargeable to the defendant, and the defendant was not denied his right to a speedy trial. People v. Backus, 52 P.2d 846 (Colo. App. 1998).

Exclusion applies to entire period fairly attributed to absence. The exclusion provision applicable to the defendant's voluntary absence or unavailability applies to the entire period of delay that may be fairly attributed to such absence. People v. Sanchez, 649 P.2d 1049 (Colo. 1982); People v. Gray, 710 P.2d 1149 (Colo. App. 1985).

Defendant confined to mental institution. When a defendant is confined to a mental institution or hospital for observation or examination prior to a determination of mental competency, he cannot complain of a denial of his constitutional right to a speedy trial because of the delay occasioned by that confinement, People v. Jones, 677 P.2d 383 (Colo. App. 1983), aff'd in part, rev'd in part on other grounds, 711 P.2d 1270 (Colo. 1986).

Excludable period may be longer than period of absence. The excludable period of delay resulting from defendant's absence, may, in some cases, be longer than merely the period of defendant's absence. People v. Alward, 654 P.2d 327 (Colo. App. 1982), cert. dismissed, 677 P.2d 948 (Colo. 1984).

The period between a mistrial and commencement of a completed trial is properly excludable from the statutory speedy trial period requirement. People v. Martinez, 712 P.2d 1070 (Colo. App. 1985).

Short delay is of no consequence where there have been numerous appearances already. The record is devoid of any showing that the trial was not held as soon as consistent with the court's business or that defendant suffered any prejudice by reason of the short delay when, between the date of charge and the date of trial, defendant, with his counsel, made numerous appearances in court to dispose of various pretrial matters. Maes v. People, 169 Colo. 200, 454 P.2d 792 (1969).

Prearrest delay excluded from computation. Section (b)(1) supports a motion to dismiss only when the delay occurs after charges are made or an arrest has been effected and is not directed to delay which transpires prior to arrest. People ex rel. Coca v. District Court, 187 Colo. 280, 530 P.2d 958 (1975).

Where a complaint was filed against defendant and a warrant for his arrest was issued, but there was no evidence that defendant was in the county during the period between the complaint and his arrest, the defendant was not entitled to a dismissal under this rule. People v. Tull, 178 Colo. 151, 497 P.2d 3 (1972).

Period tolled by defendant's failure to make court appearance. When a defendant fails to make a scheduled bond appearance before the trial court, the six-month speedy trial period is tolled until he makes himself available to the court, even where some of time that he is unavailable he is incarcerated in another jurisdiction. People v. Moye, 635 P.2d 194 (Colo. 1981).

Where defendant's criminal behavior causes him to be in the penitentiary when his case is set for trial, the delay that occurs cannot be interpreted to be a violation of his constitutional rights. Scott v. People, 176 Colo. 289, 490 P.2d 1295 (1971).

Period of delay caused by mistrial not included. The computation of the six-month period allowed for in section (b)(1) shall not include any period of delay caused by a mistrial, nor the extension provided following a mistrial, being part of the delay caused thereby. Pinelli v. District Court, 197 Colo. 555, 595 P.2d 225 (1979).

The length of delay "caused by any mistrial" must be calculated to include the days on which the aborted trial or trials were in progress. People v. Erickson, 194 Colo. 557, 574 P.2d 504 (1978).

Three-month exclusion following mistrial. Section 18-1-405(6)(e) and section (b)(6)(V) of this rule grant the prosecution a three-month exclusion in which to retry a case after a mistrial, provided that the delays are reasonable. People v. Pipkin, 655 P.2d 1360 (Colo. 1982); Mason v. People, 932 P.2d 1377 (Colo. 1997).

The general assembly intended to grant no more than three months as an exclusion from the speedy trial period, which is one-half of the statutory speedy trial period, following a mistrial. People v. Pitkin, 655 P.2d 1360 (Colo. 1982).

Whether jeopardy has attached is irrelevant. If the court is forced to dismiss the jurors, or prospective jurors, and reschedule the trial, whether jeopardy has yet attached is irrelevant in computing the length of delay excluded due to mistrial. People v. Erickson, 194 Colo. 557, 574 P.2d 504 (1978).

Where continuances requested to effect plea bargain. A defendant was not denied a speedy trial when the trial was held more than one year after he was charged where the delay was occasioned, to a large extent, by the defendant who requested and obtained numerous continuances in an attempt to effectuate a plea bargain. Maynes v. People, 178 Colo. 88, 495 P.2d 551 (1972).

Speedy trial period tolled by appeal. The period of time necessary to go through the appellate process, where the appeal stems from a dismissal upon the defendant's motion, tolls the statutory speedy trial period. People v. Jamerson, 198 Colo. 92, 596 P.2d 764 (1979).

This rule excludes from the computation of the time for speedy trial purposes the period of delay caused by an interlocutory appeal, but an original proceeding under C.A.R. 21 is, technically speaking, not an interlocutory appeal. People v. Medina, 40 Colo. App. 490, 583 P.2d 293 (1978).

And for filing of psychiatric reports. When a defendant pleads not guilty by reason of insanity, the period from the time of commitment until the filing of the final psychiatric report, if filed within a reasonable time, is excludable for purposes of the six-month period. People v. Renfrow, 193 Colo. 131, 564 P.2d 411 (1977).

The defendant need not be committed to an institution for examination before a reasonable time can be excluded from the speedy trial computation for the filing of psychiatric reports. People v. Brown, 44 Colo. App. 397, 622 P.2d 573 (1980).

Tactical decision to seek continuance chargeable to defendant, absent prosecutor's bad faith. For purposes of section (b), a tactical decision to seek a continuance is chargeable to the defendant in the absence of a showing of bad faith on the part of the prosecutor. People v. Medina, 40 Colo. App. 490, 583 P.2d 293 (1978).

In the absence of a showing of bad faith on the part of the prosecutor in endorsing a witness on the day of the trial, the delay resulting from the defendant's tactical decision to seek a continuance as a result of the late endorsement is chargeable to her. People v. Steele, 193 Colo. 87, 563 P.2d 6 (1977).

Defense counsel's action held tantamount to request for continuance. When defense counsel insists he could not try the case prior to expiration of the six-month speedy trial period, this is tantamount to a request for a continuance. People v. Chavez, 650 P.2d 1310 (Colo. App. 1982).

Counsel may obtain continuance without defendant's consent. Defendant's attorney, without defendant's personal consent, may obtain a continuance of a trial setting subject to the discretion of the trial court,and the continuance will extend the speedy trial deadline an additional six months from the granting of the continuance. People v. Anderson, 649 P.2d 720 (Colo. App. 1982).

Defendant's speedy trial rights were not violated when, in response to the testimony of defendant's mental health expert during a suppression hearing that defendant's statements were involuntary because of a mental disorder, prosecution requested, and was granted, three month continuance in order to arrange for expert testimony and analyze the alleged mental disorder. People v. Whalin, 885 P.2d 293 (Colo. App. 1994).

Rule 49. Service and Filing of Papers

(a) Service — When Required. Written motions other than those which are heard ex parte, written notices, and similar papers shall be served upon the adverse parties. A motion or other pleading that includes a claim alleging a state statute or municipal ordinance is unconstitutional shall also be served upon the Attorney General.

(b) Service — How Made. Whenever under these Rules or by court order service is required or permitted to be made upon a party represented by an attorney, the service shall be made upon the attorney unless service upon the party himself is ordered by the court. Service upon the attorney or upon a party shall be made in the manner provided for civil actions unless otherwise ordered by the court.

(c) Notice of Orders. Immediately upon entry of any order made out of the presence of the parties after the information or indictment is filed, the clerk shall mail to each party affected a notice of the order and shall note the mailing in the docket.

Source: (a) amended and effective October 18, 2007.

Cross references: For the manner of service in civil actions, see C.R.C.P. 5.

ANNOTATION

Reversal of verdict on the basis of failure to disclose certain information to the defendant is mandated only where the information might have affected the outcome of the trial. However, failure of prosecution to give notice to defendant of grants of immunity to two witnesses was not reversible error in that the ex parte order was available to the defense counsel in court records and there was nothing to indicate that the defense counsel's lack of knowledge regarding the grants of immunity might have in any way prejudiced the defendant so as to have affected the outcome of the trial. People v. Hickam, 684 P.2d 228 (Colo. 1984).

Rule 49.5. Electronic Filing and Service System

(a) Types of Cases Applicable. E-Filing and E-Service may be used for certain cases filed in the courts of Colorado as the service becomes available.

(b) E-Filing May be Mandated. With the permission of the Chief Justice, a chief judge may mandate E-Filing within a county or judicial district for specific case classes or types of cases. A judicial officer may mandate E-Filing and E-Service in that judicial officer's division for specific cases, for submitting documents to the court, and for serving documents on case parties. Where E-Filing is mandatory, the court may thereafter accept a document in paper form and the court shall scan the document and upload it to the E-System Provider. After notice to an attorney that all future documents are to be E-Filed, the court may charge a fee of $50 per document for the service of scanning and uploading a document filed in paper form. Where E-Filing and E-Service are mandatory, the chief judge or appropriate judicial officer may exclude pro se parties from mandatory E-Filing requirements.

(c) Definitions.

(1) Document. A pleading, motion, writing, or other paper filed or served under the E-System.

(2) E-Filing/Service System. The E-Filing/Service System ("E-System") approved by the Colorado Supreme Court for filing and service of documents via the Internet through the Court-authorized E-System Provider.

(3) Electronic Filing. Electronic filing ("E-Filing") is the transmission of documents to the clerk of the court, and from the court, via the E-System.

(4) Electronic Service. Electronic service ("E-Service") is the transmission of documents to any party in a case via the E-System. Parties who have subscribed to the E-System have agreed to receive service of filings via the E-System, except when personal service is required.

(5) E-System Provider. The E-Filing/E-Service System Provider authorized by the Colorado Supreme Court.

(6) Signatures.

(I) Electronic Signature. An electronic sound, symbol, or process attached to or logically associated with an electronic record and executed or adopted by the person with the intent to sign the E-Filed or E-Served document.

(II) Scanned Signature. A graphic image of a handwritten signature.

(d) To Whom Applicable.

(1) Attorneys licensed or certified to practice law in Colorado, or admitted pro hac vice under C.R.C.P. 205.3 or 205.5 may register to use the E-System. The E-System Provider will provide an attorney permitted to appear pursuant to C.R.C.P 205.3 or 205.5 with a special user account for purposes of E-Filing and E-Service only in the case identified by a court order approving pro hac vice admission. In districts where E-Filing is mandated pursuant to Subsection (b) of this Rule 49.5, attorneys must register and use the E-System.

(2) Where the system and necessary equipment are in place to permit it, pro se parties and government entities and agencies may register to use the E-System.

(e) E-Filing — Date and Time of Filing. Documents filed in cases on the E-System may be filed under Crim. P. 49 through E-Filing. A document transmitted to the E-System Provider by 11:59 p.m. Colorado time shall be deemed to have been filed with the clerk of the court on that date.

(f) E-Service — When Required — Date and Time of Service. Documents submitted to the court through E-Filing shall be served in accordance with Crim. P. 49 by E-Service to parties who have subscribed to the E-System. A document transmitted to the E-System Provider for service by 11:59 p.m. Colorado time shall be deemed to have been served on that date.

(g) Filing Party to Maintain the Signed Copy — Paper Document Not to be Filed -Duration of Maintaining of Document. A printed or printable copy of an E-Filed or E-Served document with original, electronic, or scanned signatures shall be maintained by the filing party and made available for inspection by other parties or the court upon request, but shall not be filed with the court. Documents shall be maintained in accordance with the Rules of Professional Conduct.

(h) Documents Requiring E-Filed Signatures. For E-Filed and E-Served documents, signatures of attorneys, parties, witnesses, notaries and notary stamps may be affixed electronically or hand-written and scanned.

(i) Documents Under Seal. A motion for leave to file documents under seal may be E-Filed. Documents to be filed under seal pursuant to an order of the court, if filed electronically, must be submitted separately from the Motion to Seal.

(j) Transmitting of Orders, Notices, and Other Court Entries. Courts shall distribute orders, notices, and other court entries using the E-System in cases where E-Filings were received from any party.

(k) Form of E-Filed Documents. C.R.C.P. 10 shall apply to E-Filed documents.

(l) Relief in the Event of Technical Difficulties. (1) The court may enter an order permitting a document to be filed nunc pro tunc to the date it was first attempted to be sent electronically upon satisfactory proof that E-Filing or E-Service of the document was not completed because of:

(I) an error in the transmission of the document to the E-System Provider which was unknown to the sending party;

(II) a failure of the E-System Provider to process the E-Filed document(s) when received; or

(III) other technical problems experienced by the filer or E-System Provider.

(2) Upon satisfactory proof that an E-Served document was not received by or unavailable to a party served, the court may enter an order extending the time for responding to that document.

(m) Form of Electronic Documents.

(1) Electronic Document Format, Size, and Density. Electronic document format, size, and density shall be as specified by Chief Justice Directive # 11-01.

(2) Multiple Documents. Multiple documents (including proposed orders) may be filed in a single electronic filing transaction. Each document (including proposed orders) in that filing must bear a separate document title.

(3) Proposed Orders. Proposed orders shall be E-Filed in editable format. Proposed orders that are E-Filed in a non-editable format shall be rejected by the clerk's office and must be resubmitted. In courts where proposed orders are not required, a proposed order need not be filed with the court.

(n) Document Security Level. Documents filed in a criminal case will not be electronically available to persons other than the parties until reviewed and provided by the clerk of court or his or her designee.

(o) Protective Orders. Nothing in these rules shall prohibit a court from ordering the limitation or prohibition of a nonparty's remote electronic access to a document filed with the court.

Rule 50. Calendars

The courts of record may provide for placing criminal proceedings upon appropriate calendars. Preference shall be given to criminal proceedings.

Rule 51. Exceptions Unnecessary

Exceptions to ruling or orders of the court are unnecessary. For all purposes for which an exception has heretofore been necessary it is sufficient that a party, at the time the court ruling or order is made or sought, makes known to the court the action which he desires the court to take or his objection to the court's action and the grounds therefor. But if a party has no opportunity to object to a ruling or order, the absence of an objection does not thereafter prejudice him.

ANNOTATION

Allegation of prejudice gives standing for review, regardless of lack of objection. A defendant's claim that the trial court's ruling adversely affected the exercise of his right to testify in his own defense alleges sufficient prejudice to give him standing to seek review of that ruling, whether or not he objected when the ruling was made. People v. Evans, 630 P.2d 94 (Colo. App. 1981).

Court must allow contemporaneous objections to evidence and the court's rulings. Without a contemporaneous record of the grounds that a party stated at the time of a objection, disputes as to the grounds asserted for error may arise. Jones v. District Court, 780 P.2d 526 (Colo. 1989).

Applied in People v. Peterson, 656 P.2d 1301 (Colo. 1983).

Rule 52. Harmless Error and Plain Error

(a) Harmless Error. Any error, defect, irregularity, or variance which does not affect substantial rights shall be disregarded.

(b) Plain Error. Plain errors or defects affecting substantial rights may be noticed although they were not brought to the attention of the court.

II. HARMLESS ERROR.

No reversal where insufficient error. Where there is no error of sufficient magnitude, reversal of judgment of conviction is not required. Early v. People, 178 Colo. 167, 496 P.2d 1021 (1972).

Ordinary, not constitutional, harmless error applies in determining whether an error requires reversal under People v. Novotny, 2014 CO 18, 320 P.3d 1194, because the deprivation of a right to use peremptory challenges is statutory, not derived from the constitution. People v. Wise, 2014 COA 83, 348 P.3d 482.

The mere loss of a peremptory challenge alone is insufficient to require reversal. A defendant must show that a biased or incompetent juror participated in deciding his or her guilt. People v. Wise, 2014 COA 83, 348 P.3d 482.

Harmless, constitutional error. The admission of an in-court identification without first determining that it is not tainted by an illegal lineup but is of independent origin may be constitutional error; but such error may be considered harmless even if there has been an illegal lineup confrontation, if the identification witness makes an in-court identification based on sufficient independent observations of the defendant, disassociated from the pretrial lineup. Espinoza v. People, 178 Colo. 391, 497 P.2d 994 (1972).

Constitutional errors may be characterized as harmless only when the case against a defendant is so overwhelming that the constitutional violation is harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. People v. Matthews, 662 P.2d 1108 (Colo. App. 1983); People v. Jensen, 747 P.2d 1247 (Colo. 1987); Topping v. People, 793 P.2d 1168 (Colo. 1990); People v. Denton, 91 P.3d 388 (Colo. App. 2003); People v. Delgado-Elizarras, 131 P.3d 1110 (Colo. App. 2005).

Before an error affecting a defendant's constitutional right to testify in his own behalf can be deemed harmless, an appellate court must determine beyond a reasonable doubt that the error did not contribute to the verdict. People v. Evans, 630 P.2d 94 (Colo. App. 1981); Crespin v. People, 721 P.2d 688 (Colo. 1986); Topping v. People, 793 P.2d 1168 (Colo. 1990).

Absence of defense counsel at critical stage of proceedings, which is a constitutional error, can be harmless if the error is a ''trial error'' that can be quantitatively assessed on appellate review as opposed to ''structural defect'' that affects the framework within which the trial proceeds. Key v. People, 865 P.2d 822 (Colo. 1994).

The standard for harmless error is the prosecution must show that the error did not contribute to a defendant's conviction. If there is reasonable probability from review of the entire record that a defendant could be prejudiced the error is not harmless. Key v. People, 865 P.2d 822 (Colo. 1994).

An ex parte scheduling conference with jurors during deliberations occurred at a critical stage of the criminal proceedings and was not harmless error. Key v. People, 865 P.2d 822 (Colo. 1994).

Markings from codefendant's trial on exhibits harmless. Fact that certain exhibits used in defendant's trial had court reporter's identification marks on them remaining from their use in the codefendant's trial, did not result in any prejudice and, at most, the marks constituted harmless error which is not ground for reversal. People v. Gallegos, 181 Colo. 264, 509 P.2d 596 (1973).

As may be use of void prior convictions for impeachment. The error implicit in the use of void prior convictions for impeachment purposes need not necessarily require reversal, particularly where the error is found to be harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. People v. Neal, 187 Colo. 12, 528 P.2d 220 (1974).

Or failure to properly instruct jury. Where jury instruction failed to include an essential part of the two-witness rule in prosecution for perjury, i.e., that the corroborating evidence must be deemed of equal weight to the testimony of another witness, this omission was harmless error inasmuch as there was direct testimony by three witnesses contradicting the defendant's grand jury testimony. People v. Mazza, 182 Colo. 166, 511 P.2d 885 (1973).

Where the admissions of a defendant as either extrajudicial statements or a confession is not an issue of significance, the giving of an instruction on them is not grounds for relief. Yerby v. People, 176 Colo. 115, 489 P.2d 1308 (1971).

Where one is benefited by an error in submitting or failing to submit an instruction, he cannot claim prejudicial error. Atwood v. People, 176 Colo. 183, 489 P.2d 1305 (1971).

Where evidence of a petty offense by defendants is introduced during a felony trial, the trial judge should instruct the jury as to its limited purpose, but his failure to do so is harmless error, considering the nature of the petty offense as compared with the gravity of the charge against the defendants. Kurtz v. People, 177 Colo. 306, 494 P.2d 97 (1972).

Where a court errs in giving an instruction that prejudices the state rather than the defendant in that it increases the state's burden beyond that required, no grounds for reversal are created. Early v. People, 178 Colo. 167, 496 P.2d 1021 (1972).

While it is unnecessary and poor practice to give the jury a separate instruction on the credibility of a defendant as a witness, the giving of such an instruction does not constitute reversible error. People v. Hankin, 179 Colo. 70, 498 P.2d 1116 (1972).

Where there is overwhelming evidence of the defendant's deliberation in a first degree murder case, the use of an outmoded jury instruction on the law of deliberation is harmless error. People v. Key, 680 P.2d 1313 (Colo. App. 1984).

Inclusion of allegation of aggravation in jury instruction for simple robbery charge which was basis of felony murder charge constituted harmless error as instruction inured to benefit of defendant. People v. Driggers, 812 P.2d 702 (Colo. App. 1991).

Or admission of challenged statement. Where the defendant's substantial rights were not affected by the admission into evidence of a challenged statement, no reversible error occurs. People v. McKnight, 626 P.2d 678 (Colo. 1981).

Or improper questioning concerning coconspirator's guilty plea. While a prosecutor should not elicit testimony concerning a coconspirator's guilty plea, when the evidence of a defendant's guilt is overwhelming, reference to the guilty plea is harmless error, especially when defense counsel questions the witness about this guilty plea in an effort to impeach his credibility. People v. Craig, 179 Colo. 115, 498 P.2d 942, cert. denied, 409 U.S. 1077, 93 S. Ct. 690, 34 L. Ed. 2d 666 (1972).

Or error in admitting testimony of codefendant. Error, if any, in admitting testimony as to admissions which were made by codefendant who under prosecution theory was principal perpetrator of robbery and murder that constituted basis for first-degree murder charge of defendant as an accessory, which indicated that another person was present and the admission of which allegedly violated defendant's sixth amendment right of confrontation was harmless, where additional evidence consisting of testimony of three eyewitnesses also established that the robbery was committed by two men. People v. Knapp, 180 Colo. 280, 505 P.2d 7 (1973).

It is not reversible error to admit evidence concerning a description of defendants just because it is testimony of a codefendant as to whom the severance has been granted, thereby operating so as either to deprive defendants of an opportunity to cross-examine or to require a waiver of the benefits of a severance to which they are entitled, where in view of the inconclusive nature of the identification, it cannot be said that there is any prejudice to the defendants from the admission of this evidence, although it would clearly be a better procedure to conceal the source of the extrajudicial identifications. Kurtz v. People, 177 Colo. 306, 494 P.2d 97 (1972).

Failure to grant continuance or mistrial where witness fails to appear held harmless error. People v. Lee, 180 Colo. 376, 506 P.2d 136 (1973).

Failure to provide definition of "custody" and "confinement" to the jury was harmless error under the circumstances portrayed by the record. A trial court is under an obligation to instruct the jury properly, and a failure to do so as to every element of a crime charged is error. However, the lack of instruction by the court as to the meanings of ''custody'' and ''confinement'' inured to the defendant's benefit and thus the instructional failure here constituted harmless error. People v. Atkins, 885 P.2d 243 (Colo. App. 1994).

Failure to grant motion for mistrial not an abuse of discretion where trial court sustained defendant's objection to question suggesting prior criminal conduct, defendant did not request that a curative instruction be given to the jury and none was given, and no substantial prejudice to defendant was demonstrated. People v. Talley, 677 P.2d 394 (Colo. App. 1983).

Improper admission of defendant's refusal to sign a written Miranda advisement held harmless error. People v. Mack, 638 P.2d 257 (Colo. 1981).

Improper admission of evidence to which hearsay exceptions did not apply held harmless error since the admission did not contribute to defendant's conviction, nor did it prejudice the proceedings. People v. Blecha, 940 P.2d 1070 (Colo. App. 1996), aff'd, 962 P.2d 931 (Colo. 1998).

When misstatements at trial do not require reversal. Where misstatements do not so inflict the trial as to require more than an admonition given to the jury by the trial judge in the exercise of his discretion and no motion for mistrial on these grounds is made at the time of the statements, there are not substantial grounds for reversal. Fernandez v. People, 176 Colo. 346, 490 P.2d 690 (1971).

Nor improper argument by prosecutor. A prosecutor's argument is not prejudicial and does not require reversal when the trial judge tells the prosecution to terminate the line of argument and instructs the jury that argument is not evidence. People v. Motley, 179 Colo. 77, 498 P.2d 339 (1972).

Attorney prohibited from characterizing a witness's testimony or his character for truthfulness with any form of the word ''lie''. A violation of this prohibition, although sanctionable in other ways, does not warrant reversal if it was harmless. Domingo-Gomez v. People, 125 P.3d 1043 (Colo. 2005); Crider v. People, 186 P.3d 39 (Colo. 2008).

Prosecutor prohibited from making generic tailoring arguments, which are improper because they are not based on reasonable inferences from evidence in the record. Martinez v. People, 244 P.3d 135 (Colo. 2010).

Prosecutor's closing argument that defendant who testified at trial had an opportunity to listen to all of the testimony and tailor his testimony to fit that of other witnesses improper. Martinez v. People, 244 P.3d 135 (Colo. 2010).

Prosecutor's generic tailoring comments harmless, however, because defendant commented on and expressly incorporated testimony of prior witnesses and because of substantial evidence calling into question defendant's credibility. No reasonable probability existed that prosecutor's generic tailoring argument, even though improper, influenced jury's determination of defendant's credibility or guilt. Martinez v. People, 244 P.3d 135 (Colo. 2010).

Nor giving of stock instruction. The giving of a stock instruction on the presumption of innocence does not constitute reversible error just because of its historical use. Jorgensen v. People, 178 Colo. 8, 495 P.2d 1130 (1972).

Nor failure to allow examination of grand jury testimony. The failure of a trial judge to grant a defendant and his counsel the right to examine grand jury testimony is not reversible error. Robles v. People, 178 Colo. 181, 496 P.2d 1003 (1972).

Nor inclusion of hearsay. The admission of a death certificate containing the statement that the victim was ''helping neighbor investigate burglary of neighbor's store and was shot by one of the burglars during this investigation'' is not reversible error, particularly when the court later instructs the jury to ignore that portion of the certificate, although it would be much better practice to delete such included hearsay. Kurtz v. People, 177 Colo. 306, 494 P.2d 97 (1972).

Even if extrajudicial identifications are inadmissible hearsay, when in light of the other material evidence relating defendants to the crime, such identification is clearly cumulative, and any error is harmless. Kurtz v. People, 177 Colo. 306, 494 P.2d 97 (1972).

Nor verbal slip by judge. A defendant is not prejudiced by the trial judge's use of the word ''offense'' when the judge gives the jury a cautionary oral instruction at the time evidence of another transaction is introduced, and it is not reversible error. Howe v. People, 178 Colo. 248, 496 P.2d 1040 (1972).

Nor failure to administer an oath or affirmation of true translation to interpreter. People v. Avila, 797 P.2d 804 (Colo. App. 1990).

Nor failure to conduct a hearing on the admissibility of scientific evidence. Where DNA evidence relates solely to similar transaction evidence, the admission of such evidence, absent a preliminary hearing on its admissibility, is harmless error. People v. Groves, 854 P.2d 1310 (Colo. App. 1992).

Nor failure to swear jury prior to beginning of testimony where jury sworn before deliberations. People v. Clouse, 859 P.2d 228 (Colo. App. 1992).

Nor where comment on defendant's failure to testify. A comment by the district attorney on defendant's failure to testify was not prejudicial enough to warrant reversal because the trial court properly instructed the jury that the defendant's failure to testify cannot be considered as evidence of guilt or innocence and it is generally accepted that defense counsel may by improper argumentative comment open the door to a response by the prosecuting attorney. Kurtz v. People, 177 Colo. 306, 494 P.2d 97 (1972).

When the prosecution calls oblique attention to the possible silence of the defendant, but does not make direct reference to the defendant's silence, there is error, but not reversible error. People v. Calise, 179 Colo. 162, 498 P.2d 1154 (1972).

Nor admission of defendant's mug shot. Where the evidence of guilt is substantial, the sole error of admitting the defendant's mug shot does not, in and of itself, constitute reversible error. People v. Bugarin, 181 Colo. 57, 507 P.2d 879 (1973).

If testimony accompanying introduction of a mug shot does not imply that defendant has a past criminal history, the introduction of the mug shot does not necessitate the granting of a mistrial. People v. Borghesi, 40 P.3d 15 (Colo. App. 2001), aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds, 66 P.3d 93 (Colo. 2003).

Nor where material witness functions as officer of court. Where the court, over defendants' objection, allowed the sheriff, who was a material witness for the state, to take part in the conduct of the trial by daily calling the court to order as well as select a few prospective jurors on open venire and the court also refused to give an instruction to the effect that no particular weight was to be attached to the sheriff's testimony by reason of his court functions, but he was not placed in charge of the jury at any time, then reversible error was not committed, although it is a better practice not to permit a material witness to function as an officer of the court. Kurtz v. People, 177 Colo. 306, 494 P.2d 97 (1972).

Nor limitation of cross-examination of defendant's coconspirator by refusing to allow inquiry into coconspirator's subjective understanding of his plea arrangement is not reversible error. People v. McCall, 43 Colo. App. 117, 603 P.2d 950 (1979), rev'd on other grounds, 623 P.2d 397 (Colo. 1981).

Variance between charge and proof held not fatal. People v. Incerto, 180 Colo. 366, 505 P.2d 1309 (1973).

Where transaction charged and the one proved are substantially the same, although not all those allegedly involved in conspiracy are found to have participated, and the object of conspiracy is proved as laid, variance is not reversible error as substantial rights of defendant are not affected. People v. Incerto, 180 Colo. 366, 505 P.2d 1309 (1973).

Witness's statement that defendant had been in jail several times held not prejudicial. People v. Gallegos, 179 Colo. 211, 499 P.2d 315 (1972).

Failure to record final arguments in a trial to the court is not prejudicial error. People in Interest of B.L.M. v. B.L.M., 31 Colo. App. 106, 500 P.2d 146 (1972).

Despite defendant's contention that unauthorized persons were allowed in grand jury room and proceedings were not kept secret, the alleged violations did not affect defendant's substantial rights. Petit jury's subsequent guilty verdict made alleged error in grand jury proceeding harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. People v. Cerrone, 867 P.2d 143 (Colo. App. 1993); aff'd on other grounds, 900 P.2d 45 (Colo. 1995).

Presence of alternate juror amounts to harmless error when the evidence supporting the defendant's guilt was overwhelming and the juror was only present for jury's deliberations for approximately ten minutes. James v. People, 2018 CO 72, 426 P.3d 336.

Prejudicial opening statement made in bad faith reversible. Error cannot be predicated upon opening statement of attorney as to what he expects to prove, although his statement is not completely supported by evidence adduced at trial, unless unsupported portion of statement was made in bad faith and was manifestly prejudicial. People v. Jacobs, 179 Colo. 182, 499 P.2d 615 (1972).

Trial judge to determine effect of potentially prejudicial evidence on jury. The trial judge is in preeminent position to determine potential effects of allegedly prejudicial statements on jurors, and his judgment will only be overturned upon an abuse of discretion. People v. Jacobs, 179 Colo. 182, 499 P.2d 615 (1972).

Where the judge examines the jury as to the effect certain knowledge would have upon their ability to render a fair and impartial verdict in a criminal proceeding and is satisfied that their ability would not be impaired, his denial of motion for mistrial is not an abuse of discretion and will not be disturbed on review. Atwood v. People, 176 Colo. 183, 489 P.2d 1305 (1971).

Error may be rendered harmless and therefore become not reversible by subsequent proceedings in the case or by the result thereof. Walker v. People, 175 Colo. 173, 489 P.2d 584 (1971).

A harmless error argument does not apply when the trial court erroneously disqualifies a defendant's retained counsel of choice. Anaya v. People, 764 P.2d 779 (Colo. 1988).

Since testimony implicated another person and not defendant, the testimony was not prejudicial to defendant. Any error in the admission of such testimony is harmless. People v. Mapps, 231 P.3d 5 (Colo. App. 2009).

Admission of testimony was harmless since it did not substantially influence the verdict or impair the fairness of defendant's trial. People v. Mapps, 231 P.3d 5 (Colo. App. 2009).

Error was not harmless when the court permitted the jury to adopt the prosecutor's misstated version of the law that effectively imposed a duty to retreat on the defendant, when no such duty existed. People v. Monroe, 2018 COA 110, __ P.3d __.

III. PLAIN ERROR.

Authority of appellate court to consider plain error. Section (b) permits an appellate court to consider an alleged error which was not brought to the attention of the trial court, if the error affects the substantial rights of the defendant and it is ''plain error''. Vigil v. People, 196 Colo. 522, 587 P.2d 1196 (1978).

A trial error to which no objection is made is forfeited and, therefore, not reviewable. However, such errors can be reviewed for plain error, which means an error must be plain and must affect a substantial right of a party. People v. O'Connell, 134 P.3d 460 (Colo. App. 2005).

If no contemporaneous objection to alleged prosecutorial misconduct is made at trial, section (b) limits appellate review to a determination of plain error. People v. Fell, 832 P.2d 1015 (Colo. App. 1991).

Appellate court cannot correct an error pursuant to section (b) unless the error is clear under current law. People v. O'Connell, 134 P.3d 460 (Colo. App. 2005).

If the law is unsettled at the time of trial, the plain error analysis will be conducted using the status of the law at the time of trial. People v. O'Connell, 134 P.3d 460 (Colo. App. 2005).

Relief under section (b) is a matter of discretion, not of right. People v. Butcher, 2018 COA 54M, __ P.3d __.

"Plain error" means error both obvious and substantial and those grave errors which seriously affect substantial rights of the accused. People v. Barker, 180 Colo. 28, 501 P.2d 1041 (1972); People v. Koon, 724 P.2d 1367 (Colo. App. 1986); People v. Roberts, 738 P.2d 380 (Colo. App. 1986).

''Plain'' is synonymous with ''clear'' or, equivalently, ''obvious''. People v. O'Connell, 134 P.3d 460 (Colo. App. 2005).

A plain error is an error seriously affecting substantial rights of the accused. People v. Miller, 37 Colo. App. 294, 549 P.2d 1092 (1976), aff'd, 193 Colo. 415, 566 P.2d 1059 (1977); People v. Constant, 44 Colo. App. 544, 623 P.2d 63 (1980), rev'd on other grounds, 645 P.2d 843 (Colo. 1982); People v. Green, 759 P.2d 814 (Colo. App. 1988); Harris v. People, 888 P.2d 259 (Colo. 1995).

Only error which is obvious and grave can rise to the status of plain error. People v. Mills, 192 Colo. 260, 557 P.2d 1192 (1976); People v. Vialpando, 804 P.2d 219 (Colo. App. 1990).

Plain error is error which is ''obvious and grave''. People v. Peterson, 656 P.2d 1301 (Colo. 1983); People v. Vialpando, 804 P.2d 219 (Colo. App. 1990).

The proper inquiry in determining a harmless error question is whether the error substantially influenced the verdict or affected the fairness of the trial proceedings. People v. Quintana, 665 P.2d 605 (Colo. 1983).

Plain error occurs when, after review of entire record, the error so undermined trial's fundamental fairness as to cast serious doubt on reliability of conviction. People v. Kruse, 839 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1992); People v. Hampton, 857 P.2d 441 (Colo. App. 1992), aff'd, 876 P.2d 1236 (Colo. 1994); People v. Herr, 868 P.2d 1121 (Colo. App. 1993); Harris v. People, 888 P.2d 259 (Colo. 1995); People v. Kerber, 64 P.3d 930 (Colo. App. 2002); People v. Mullins, 104 P.3d 299 (Colo. App. 2004).

An error is generally not obvious when nothing in state statutory or prior case law would have alerted the trial court to the error. An error is not obvious when the supreme court or a division of the court of appeals has previously rejected an argument being advanced by a subsequent party who is asserting plain error. Scott v. People, 2017 CO 16, 390 P.3d 832.

A plain error analysis requires a consideration of various factors including the strength of the evidence against the defendant, the posture of the defense, and any persistent, improper remarks by the defendant. People v. Mullins, 104 P.3d 299 (Colo. App. 2004).

To meet the burden of plain error, there must be a reasonable possibility that the alleged error contributed to the defendant's conviction. People v. Valdez, 725 P.2d 29 (Colo. App. 1986), aff'd, 789 P.2d 406 (Colo. 1990).

No definition of plain error will fit every case, and each case must be resolved on the particular facts or laws which are in issue. People v. Barker, 180 Colo. 28, 501 P.2d 1041 (1972).

Each case must be resolved on the particular facts and law at issue. People v. Miller, 37 Colo. App. 294, 549 P.2d 1092 (1976), aff'd, 193 Colo. 415, 566 P.2d 1059 (1977).

Each case in which it is argued that plain error has been committed must be resolved in light of its particular facts and the law that applies to those facts. People v. Mills, 192 Colo. 260, 557 P.2d 1192 (1976); People v. Peterson, 656 P.2d 1301 (Colo. 1983).

And reviewing court to determine existence of plain error. It is incumbent upon a reviewing court, from its own reading of the record, to determine whether ''plain error'' occurred. People v. Barker, 180 Colo. 28, 501 P.2d 1041 (1972).

Even though raised for first time on appeal. Where plain error affecting substantial rights appears, an appellate court, in the interest of justice, may, and should, deal with it, even though it is raised for the first time on appeal. People v. Archuleta, 180 Colo. 156, 503 P.2d 346 (1972); People v. Meller, 185 Colo. 389, 524 P.2d 1366 (1974); People v. Bridges, 620 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1980).

Issues not properly preserved at trial can serve as a basis for reversal only if they involve plain error. People v. Mattas, 44 Colo. App. 139, 618 P.2d 675 (1980), aff'd, 645 P.2d 254 (Colo. 1982).

Unpreserved double jeopardy claims are reviewable for plain error. Reyna-Abarca v. People, 2017 CO 15, 390 P.3d 816; Scott v. People, 2017 CO 16, 390 P.3d 832; Zubiate v. People, 2017 CO 17, 390 P.3d 394.

An error in trial proceedings to which the accused fails to make a contemporaneous objection will not support reversal unless it casts serious doubt upon the basic fairness of the trial. Wilson v. People, 743 P.2d 415 (Colo. 1987); People v. Winters, 765 P.2d 1010 (Colo. 1988); People v. Lybarger, 790 P.2d 855 (Colo. App. 1989); Woertman v. People, 804 P.2d 188 (Colo. 1991); People v. Schuett, 833 P.2d 44 (Colo. 1992).

Where defendant did not object to use of photocopy, its use did not so undermine the fundamental fairness of trial as to cast serious doubt on the reliability of conviction. People v. Chavez, 764 P.2d 371 (Colo. App. 1988).

If a plain error does not seriously affect the fairness, integrity, or public reputation of judicial proceedings, an appellate court, exercising its discretion, may still decline to reverse the trial court. People v. Butcher, 2018 COA 54M, __ P.3d __.

Miscalculation of interest on restitution award was plain error but did not seriously affect the fairness, integrity, or public reputation of judicial proceedings. Therefore, the judgment was not reversed. People v. Butcher, 2018 COA 54M, __ P.3d __.

Because defendant did not object to a jury instruction at trial the court's action is reviewed pursuant to section (b) under a plain error standard, with a finding of error only if review of the entire record demonstrates a reasonable possibility that the improper instruction contributed to the defendant's conviction. People v. Blecha, 940 P.2d 1070 (Colo. App. 1996), aff'd, 962 P.2d 931 (Colo. 1998).

The court committed harmless error in failing to give the jury cautionary hearsay instructions after each hearsay witnesses' testimony. Three hearsay witnesses testified in sequence, the court gave the cautionary instruction following the testimony of the last hearsay witness and during the general charge to the jury, and the hearsay testimony corroborated the testimony of other witnesses. People v. Valdez, 874 P.2d 415 (Colo. App. 1994.)

If a defendant does not object to statements he feels are prejudicial, a plain error standard of review applies. People v. Pennese, 830 P.2d 1085 (Colo. App. 1991); People v. Mendez, 897 P.2d 868 (Colo. App. 1995); People v. Kerber, 64 P.3d 930 (Colo. App. 2002).

No error where witness stated defendant was out of prison and that defendant had previously threatened him, where statements were part of the total picture surrounding the offense, the witness's description of defendant's threats were mentioned during defendant's cross-examination of witness, and defendant made no objections or mistrial motions. People v. Pennese, 830 P.2d 1085 (Colo. App. 1991).

As long as a fundamental or substantial right has purportedly been violated. Although defendant's trial counsel did not make any contemporaneous objections nor raise the issue in his post-trial motion, an appellate court will consider, nevertheless, alleged error where it involves a fundamental right which has purportedly been violated. Hines v. People, 179 Colo. 4, 497 P.2d 1258 (1972).

Even though defendant's counsel neither tendered an instruction on the presumption of innocence nor objected to the court's failure to instruct the jury on the presumption of innocence, because the failure to instruct on the presumption of innocence affects such a substantial right, the supreme court may take cognizance of the error pursuant to section (b). People v. Hill, 182 Colo. 253, 512 P.2d 257 (1973).

To constitute reversible error, the introduction of the statement of aggravating factors which was not objected to at trial must affect the substantial rights of a defendant. People v. McKnight, 626 P.2d 678 (Colo. 1981).

Whether a defendant has received effective assistance of counsel is a question concerning a fundamental right. Armstrong v. People, 701 P.2d 17 (Colo. 1985).

Which is prejudicial. An appellate court will consider issues not raised below where serious prejudicial error was made and justice requires the consideration. Larkin v. People, 177 Colo. 156, 493 P.2d 1 (1972).

Effect of failure to object at trial. Where instructions used by the trial court failed to define the statutory terms, failure to object to the tendered instructions or raise any constitutional objection to the statute at the trial court level raises the standard of review to one of ''plain error''. People v. Cardenas, 42 Colo. App. 61, 592 P.2d 1348 (1979); People v. Campbell, 678 P.2d 1035 (Colo. App. 1983).

Where the issue is raised for the first time on appeal, review is confined to a consideration of whether the error falls within the definition of plain error. People v. Barker, 180 Colo. 28, 501 P.2d 1041 (1972).

Where a defendant failed to object to the adequacy of the jury instructions in his motion for a new trial, a judgment will not be reversed unless plain error occurred. People v. Frysig, 628 P.2d 1004 (Colo. 1981).

Failure to make timely and sufficient objection at trial prevents consideration of issue on appeal unless it involves plain error. People v. Kruse, 839 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1992).

Unless a prosecutor's misconduct is ''glaringly or tremendously'' improper, it is not plain error under section (b) where no objection to the behavior was raised. People v. Jensen, 55 P.3d 135 (Colo. App. 2001).

And review limited when issue not cited in motion for new trial. Where defense counsel objected to the admission of certain evidence, but failed to cite its admission in his motion for a new trial, it may not be considered on appeal unless the introduction of that evidence constituted plain error. People v. Abbott, 638 P.2d 781 (Colo. 1981).

Reversal justified where error contributed to conviction. Only when there is at least a reasonable possibility that the action claimed to be plain error contributed to the defendant's conviction can it justify reversal. People v. Aragon, 186 Colo. 91, 525 P.2d 1134 (1974); People v. Mills, 192 Colo. 260, 557 P.2d 1192 (1976).

Unless there is a reasonable possibility that the alleged error contributed to defendant's conviction, reversal of the proceedings below is not required. People v. Miller, 37 Colo. App. 294, 549 P.2d 1092 (1976), aff'd, 193 Colo. 415, 566 P.2d 1059 (1977).

Where the minds of an average jury would not have found the prosecution's case significantly less persuasive by the elimination of the error and the evidence of guilt of the defendant is overwhelming, a defendant is not entitled to reversal based on plain error. People v. Barker, 180 Colo. 28, 501 P.2d 1041 (1972).

In order for the court to find plain error, there must be a reasonable possibility that an alleged erroneous instruction contributed to the defendant's conviction. The existence of this possibility must be determined by an examination of the particular facts of the case. People v. Dillon, 655 P.2d 841 (Colo. 1982).

Plain error affects substantial rights of the accused, and the record must demonstrate a reasonable possibility that the alleged erroneous instruction contributed to defendant's conviction. People v. Cowden, 735 P.2d 199 (Colo. 1987); People v. Lybarger, 790 P.2d 855 (Colo. App. 1989).

Plain error is present only if an appellate court, after reviewing the entire record, can say with fair assurance that the error so undermined the fundamental fairness of the trial itself as to cast serious doubt on the reliability of the judgment of conviction. People v. Fell, 832 P.2d 1015 (Colo. App. 1991).

Deprivation of affirmative defense deemed plain error. The contention that a defendant has been deprived of an affirmative defense, if meritorious, is plain error. People v. Beebe, 38 Colo. App. 80, 557 P.2d 840 (1976).

Improper testimony regarding the procedure for obtaining an arrest warrant and the prosecutor's mistaken statements that only defendant could claim self-defense sufficiently undermined confidence in the reliability of the judgment of conviction. These errors constituted plain error entitling defendant to a new trial. People v. Mullins, 104 P.3d 299 (Colo. App. 2004).

To allege insufficiency of evidence as to indispensable element of a crime is to assert plain error. People v. Harris, 633 P.2d 1095 (Colo. App. 1981).

But admission of uncounseled statements by defendant may not be plain error. Fact that defendant's attorney was not notified that questioning of his client was going to take place did not make the admission of statements made by defendant during such questioning plain error since the record did not show that the interrogator knew that the defendant had an attorney, and the defendant took the stand and repeated his statements. People v. Pool, 185 Colo. 131, 522 P.2d 102 (1974).

Trial court's failure to submit instruction to defense counsel for review prior to reading the instruction to the jury is not plain error. People v. Martin, 670 P.2d 22 (Colo. App. 1983).

Prosecutor's argument did not result in plain error. People v. Gilmore, 97 P.3d 123 (Colo. App. 2003); People v. Kendall, 174 P.3d 791 (Colo. App. 2007).

''Plain error'' rule must be read in harmony with Crim. P. 30, which provides that no party may assign as error the giving of an instruction to which he has not objected before the instructions are submitted to the jury. People v. Green, 178 Colo. 77, 495 P.2d 549 (1972); People v. Barker, 180 Colo. 28, 501 P.2d 1041 (1972); People v. Aragon, 186 Colo. 91, 525 P.2d 1134 (1974).

Unless manifest prejudice or plain error. Where defendant does not object to the instruction given or tender any alternate instruction which might more adequately set forth the law, an assignment of error is not valid unless there is manifest prejudice amounting to plain error. People v. Bercillio, 179 Colo. 383, 500 P.2d 975 (1972).

Because a defendant must make all objections he has to instructions prior to their submission to the jury, where the defendant failed to make any such objection prior to submission of the instructions, absent plain error, the court would not consider the defendant's arguments on review. People v. Tilley, 184 Colo. 424, 520 P.2d 1046 (1974).

Where no specific objection was made prior to submission of instructions to the jury as required by Crim. P. 30, absent plain error, reviewing court will not consider these arguments on appeal. People v. Casey, 185 Colo. 58, 521 P.2d 1250 (1974).

Where defendant only made a general objection to jury instructions, and failed to make a timely specific objection, supreme court on appeal will not consider argument by defendant that instructions were in error absent plain error. People v. O'Donnell, 184 Colo. 104, 518 P.2d 945 (1974).

No prejudicial error if jury is adequately informed. Where the defendant objected to various instructions given to the jury by the trial court, but under the instructions as a whole the jury is adequately informed as to the law, there is no prejudicial error. People v. Lovato, 181 Colo. 99, 507 P.2d 860 (1973).

Where instruction on trespass was given to jury in statutory language and instructions were, as a whole, adequate to inform jury of the law on these issues and defendant did not request or tender proposed instruction to define term ''unlawfully'', failure to instruct on that term did not rise to the level of plain error. People v. Wortham, 690 P.2d 876 (Colo. App. 1984).

Prosecutor's comment that evidence of prior similar transactions between the sexual assault victim and the defendant, her father, explained the victim's response to two assaults and her failure to report them earlier is not improper considering the testimony of the victim and the limiting instructions given by the trial court regarding the proper use of the similar transaction evidence. People v. Fell, 832 P.2d 1015 (Colo. App. 1991).

Doctrine of invited error precludes defendant from challenging jury instruction as prejudicial error since defendant approved and submitted comparable instruction to court. People v. Driggers, 812 P.2d 702 (Colo. App. 1991).

Although failure to instruct on essential elements constitutes plain error. The trial court has a duty to properly instruct the jury on every issue presented, and the failure to do so with respect to the essential elements of the crime charged constitutes plain error. People v. Archuleta, 180 Colo. 156, 503 P.2d 346 (1972); People v. Hardin, 199 Colo. 229, 607 P.2d 1291 (1980); People v. Mattas, 645 P.2d 254 (Colo. 1982); People v. Williams, 707 P.2d 1023 (Colo. App. 1985).

As does erroneous instruction. Where a given instruction permits the jury to convict without proof of essential element of the crime, there is plain error, and reversal is required. People v. Butcher, 180 Colo. 429, 506 P.2d 362 (1973).

The giving of an instruction which allows the jury to find the defendant guilty upon a lesser degree of culpability than that required by the statute constitutes plain error. People v. Etchells, 646 P.2d 950 (Colo. App. 1982).

Or inadequate instruction. Where a general instruction on specific intent does not particularly direct the jury's attention to defendant's theory that he could not have possessed the requisite specific intent, it is the duty of the court either to correct the tendered instruction or to give the substance of it in an instruction drafted by the court, and a court's refusal to give such an adequate instruction is error. Nora v. People, 176 Colo. 454, 491 P.2d 62 (1971).

Under some circumstances, a court's failure to instruct sua sponte on intoxication may result in reversible error. People v. Mattas, 645 P.2d 254 (Colo. 1982).

But not failure to instruct on lesser included offense. Failure of the court to instruct on a lesser included offense does not affect the substantial rights of defendant and is therefore not cognizable as plain error. People v. Chavez, 179 Colo. 316, 500 P.2d 365 (1972); People v. Sharpe, 183 Colo. 64, 514 P.2d 1138 (1973); People v. Brown, 677 P.2d 406 (Colo. App. 1983).

Failure to instruct on element of "knowingly". The trial court's failure to include the element of ''knowingly'' in a second-degree kidnapping instruction is plain error. People v. Clark, 662 P.2d 1100 (Colo. App. 1982).

It was not plain error for trial court to submit to the jury the ''result'' factor and omit the ''conduct-and-circumstance'' factor in the definitional instruction of ''knowingly'' in a first degree criminal trespass case because the instruction could neither mislead nor confuse the jury. People v. Wortham, 690 P.2d 876 (Colo. App. 1984).

Failure to give definition of "attempt". The trial court's failure to include the definition of attempt found in the criminal attempt statute in instructions for the pertinent provisions of the second degree assault statute was not plain error. People v. Weller, 679 P.2d 1077 (Colo. 1984).

Omission of the definition of "sexual penetration" from jury instructions did not rise to the level of plain error because the issue of whether sexual penetration occurred was not contested at trial. People v. Lozano-Ruiz, 2018 CO 86, 429 P.3d 577.

Jury instruction on aggravated robbery did not constitute plain error as defendant was given notice by language in the information that he was being charged with both methods of committing crime even though instruction differed from language in the information. People v. Driggers, 812 P.2d 702 (Colo. App. 1991).

Failure to give definition of "without lawful justification". Where this phrase appeared in second-degree kidnapping statute without further definition, and defendant made no claim of legal authority to transport nonconsenting victim, trial court's instruction to jury to give phrase ''the common meaning that the words imply'' was not plain error. People v. Schuett, 833 P.2d 44 (Colo. 1992).

Trial court's failure to ascertain reasons for defendant's waiver of right to testify not plain error where defendant did not raise issue in his motion for a new trial and did not allege or present evidence that the waiver was not knowing, intelligent, or voluntary. People v. Wortham, 690 P.2d 876 (Colo. App. 1984).

Failure to issue a contemporaneous limiting instruction. Failure of the court to issue a limiting instruction contemporaneously with the history of arrest testimony, which testimony related to a crime separate and unrelated to the crime for which defendant was being tried, did not constitute plain error. People v. White, 680 P.2d 1318 (Colo. App. 1984).

Failure to instruct the jury on gender bias was not a ''structural defect'' or plain error requiring reversal of third degree sexual assault conviction where gender bias was not raised during the trial and the jury was instructed sympathy or prejudice should not influence its decision. People v. Johnson, 870 P.2d 571 (Colo. App. 1993).

Although the general rule is that there may be no appellate review of issues not raised in a new trial motion, there is an exception for claims that the trial court committed plain error. People v. Ullerich, 680 P.2d 1306 (Colo. App. 1983).

Where court presented the jury with irreconcilable statements about the requisite culpability for a securities fraud violation, a conviction cannot be permitted to rest on such an equivocal direction to the jury on one of the basic elements of the crime. People v. Riley, 708 P.2d 1359 (Colo. 1985).

The cumulative effect of a proper jury instruction with improper jury instructions that contained erroneous statements of law which relegated to the jury the function of determining whether an affirmative defense was available in a case and which had the effect of relieving the prosecution of its burden of proof in regard to the affirmative defense was insufficient to dispel the potential harm created by the erroneous jury instructions and was, therefore, plain error. Lybarger v. People, 807 P.2d 570 (Colo. 1991).

Joint operation instruction does not remove case from plain error rule. When the jury was told that specific intent applies to every element of aggravated robbery, that specific intent applies only to the intention to kill, maim, or wound, and that ''knowingly'' applies if the intent was to put the victim in fear of death or bodily injury, jury could not be expected to know what, if any, culpable mental state applied. People v. Pickering, 725 P.2d 5 (Colo. App. 1985).

Error of constitutional dimension. Ordinarily, plain error requires reversal only if there is a reasonable possibility that it contributed to the defendant's conviction. However, if the asserted error is of constitutional dimension, reversal is required unless the court is convinced that the error was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. Graham v. People, 705 P.2d 505 (Colo. 1985).

An error in the admission of evidence, even if of constitutional dimension, does not require reversal of a criminal conviction if the error was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. People v. Martinez, 83 P.3d 1174 (Colo. App. 2003).

Trial court's actions cannot be considered as harmless error where the court's removal of the determination of the authority of a defendant charged with theft to borrow the victim's money from the province of the jury violated the defendant's sixth amendment right to a jury trial. People v. Gracey, 940 P.2d 1050 (Colo. App. 1996).

In determining whether prosecutorial impropriety mandates a new trial, appellate courts are obliged to evaluate the severity and frequency of the misconduct, any curative measures taken to alleviate the misconduct, and the likelihood that the misconduct constituted a material factor leading to defendant's conviction. People v. Jones, 832 P.2d 1036 (Colo. App. 1991).

Reversible error exists if there are grounds for believing that the jury was substantially prejudiced by improper conduct. Where the prosecutor's ill-advised and improper comments were so numerous and highly prejudicial, the defendant was deprived of a fair trial requiring that the judgment of conviction be reversed. People v. Jones, 832 P.2d 1036 (Colo. App. 1991).

Prosecution's comments during closing argument did not rise to the level of reversible error where comments were small part of lengthy closing; prosecutor fairly summarized the evidence; prosecutor emphasized the jury's prerogative to make an independent determination of the facts; and trial court sustained defense counsel's objections and prosecutor withdrew her comments. People v. Griffith, 58 P.3d 1111 (Colo. App. 2002).

Prosecutor's use of Burke quotation was an improper attempt to persuade jurors; however, the error was harmless as it was an isolated incident in an otherwise proper closing argument in which the prosecutor repeatedly urged the jury to apply the rules of law to the evidence adduced at trial. People v. Clemons, 89 P.3d 479 (Colo. App. 2003).

The determination of whether a prosecutor's statements constitute inappropriate prosecutorial argument is generally a matter for the exercise of trial court discretion; however, if an appellate court concludes that prejudice created by a prosecutor's conduct was so great as to result in a miscarriage of justice, a new trial may be granted notwithstanding the trial court's failure to impose such sanction. Harris v. People, 888 P.2d 259 (Colo. 1995).

A new trial is the appropriate remedy for the deprivation of the defendant's right to a fair trial where, in view of the prosecutor's repeated remarks, the temporal context of the trial, and the critical role of witness credibility in the case, there was substantial likelihood that the prosecutor's improper comments impermissibly prejudiced the defendant's right to have his guilt determined by an impartial jury applying applicable legal standards to facts found on an objective evaluation of the evidence. Harris v. People, 888 P.2d 259 (Colo. 1995).

The sufficiency of evidence presented at trial will be considered on appeal when evaluating claims of prosecutorial misconduct. The conclusion that the prosecutor's comments, repeated over the course of the entire closing argument, were substantially prejudicial was compelled when the conflicting and inconclusive nature of the evidence presented at trial was taken into consideration. Harris v. People, 888 P.2d 259 (Colo. 1995).

In determining whether prosecutor's improper statements so prejudiced the jury as to affect the fundamental fairness of the trial, the court shall consider the language used, the context in which the statements were made, and the strength of the evidence supporting the conviction. Domingo-Gomez v. People, 125 P.3d 1043 (Colo. 2005); Crider v. People, 186 P.3d 39 (Colo. 2008).

Only through examining the totality of the circumstances can the court determine whether the error, prosecutorial misconduct, affected the fundamental fairness of the trial. The court evaluates the cumulative effect of the prosecutor's statements by considering the exact language used, the nature of the misconduct, the degree of prejudice associated with the misconduct, the surrounding context, and the strength of the other evidence of guilt. People v. Fortson, 2018 COA 46M, 421 P.3d 1236.

In light of evidence demonstrating defendant's guilt, prosecutor's conduct was not flagrant or tremendously improper. Although prosecutor made improper statements implying that defendant had a bad character, evidence of the defendant's guilt was strong, defense counsel made no contemporaneous objections to the statements, and the statements were infrequent and a small part of prosecutor's argument. Therefore, the statements did not so undermine the trial's fundamental fairness as to cast doubt on the reliability of the judgment of conviction. People v. Cordova, 293 P.3d 114 (Colo. App. 2011).

In light of evidence demonstrating defendant's guilt, prosecutor's conduct was not so glaringly improper as to warrant reversal under the plain error standard. Although the prosecutor erred in continually referring to the toothbrush as a dangerous instrument and attempting to elicit testimony to that effect, the defendant acknowledged the toothbrush was his and could be used to injure someone. People v. Jamison, 2018 COA 121, 436 P.3d 569.

It is prosecutorial misconduct for an attorney to characterize a witness's testimony or his character for truthfulness with any form of the word "lie". A violation of this prohibition, although sanctionable in other ways, does not warrant reversal if it was harmless. Domingo-Gomez v. People, 125 P.3d 1043 (Colo. 2005); Crider v. People, 186 P.3d 39 (Colo. 2008).

Review of jury instruction for constitutional error where such instruction was submitted by the defendant is barred by application of invited error doctrine. People v. Zapata, 779 P.2d 1307 (Colo. 1989).

Failure to instruct jury as to presumption of innocence is plain error. People v. Aragon, 665 P.2d 137 (Colo. App. 1982).

Instructions held not to constitute "plain error". People v. Otwell, 179 Colo. 119, 498 P.2d 956 (1972); People v. Majors, 179 Colo. 204, 499 P.2d 1200 (1972); People v. Buckner, 180 Colo. 65, 504 P.2d 669 (1972); People v. Eades, 187 Colo. 74, 528 P.2d 382 (1974).

Instruction to the jury on the credibility of the witnesses, where the words ''including the defendant'' were crossed out but were not totally obliterated and could be deciphered by the jury, did not constitute plain error. People v. Miller, 37 Colo. App. 294, 549 P.2d 1092 (1976), aff'd, 193 Colo. 415, 566 P.2d 1059 (1977).

Where the defendant is charged with aggravated robbery and conspiracy to commit aggravated robbery, and is not entitled to an instruction on theft, an error in a theft instruction is harmless. Graham v. People, 199 Colo. 439, 610 P.2d 494 (1980).

Trial court's failure to instruct the jury that voluntary intoxication may apply to sexual assault on a child does not constitute plain error for there is doubt whether the issue is yet settled. People v. O'Connell, 134 P.3d 460 (Colo. App. 2005).

No plain error where jury instruction did not identify the particular victim named in the charging document. People v. Smith, 2018 CO 33, 416 P.3d 886.

Challenges to interpreter must be made. When an interpreter is necessary for the court to translate testimony and the defense makes no challenge to the interpreter's qualifications or competency, the doctrine of plain error may not be applied in motion for new trial. People v. Bercillio, 179 Colo. 383, 500 P.2d 975 (1972).

As must challenge of medical expert, unless plain error. Where defendant failed to interpose a timely objection to the trial court's qualification of a prosecution witness as a medical expert, any error in this regard did not rise to the level of plain error and thus was not recognized on appeal. People v. Litsey, 192 Colo. 19, 555 P.2d 974 (1976).

As well as objections to admonishment of defense counsel. Where the trial court recesses in the middle of the cross-examination and admonishes defense counsel in the presence of the jury to the effect that counsel should change his attitude, and defendant's counsel does not object to the recess or the admonishment, it is not of a level to be ''plain error''. People v. Lovato, 181 Colo. 99, 507 P.2d 860 (1973).

Determination of whether the misconduct at trial was plain error turns not on the nature of the misconduct but on the impact of the misconduct upon the result. People v. Constant, 44 Colo. App. 544, 623 P.2d 63 (1980), rev'd on other grounds, 645 P.2d 843 (Colo. 1982).

Prosecutorial misconduct provides a basis for reversal because of plain error only where there is a substantial likelihood that it affected the verdict or deprived a defendant of a fair and impartial trial. People v. Constant, 645 P.2d 843 (Colo. 1982).

Prosecutor's statement in closing argument held not to be plain error as comment in context was not calculated or intended to direct attention to defendant's failure to testify in his own behalf. People v. Wieghard, 727 P.2d 383 (Colo. App. 1986).

Prosecutor's remark not plain error where remark may have been invited by defense counsel, remark was tangential and could not have prejudiced defendant, and there was overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt. People v. Joyce, 68 P.3d 521 (Colo. App. 2002).

Although prosecutor's remark during summation that the defendant had lied during his testimony and allusions to defendant's friends' cocaine habit was inappropriate, it did not constitute plain error. The improper comments were isolated ones included in a lengthy summation and could not have affected the verdict. People v. Herr, 868 P.2d 1121 (Colo. App. 1993).

The scope of final arguments rests in the sound discretion of the trial court and its ruling will not be disturbed on appeal in the absence of gross abuse of discretion resulting in prejudice and a denial of justice. People v. Pennese, 830 P.2d 1085 (Colo. App. 1991).

Prosecutorial misconduct must be flagrantly improper to be classified as plain error. Prosecutor's comment that the evidence of similar transactions between the victim and her father explained the victim's response to the assaults and her failure to report them earlier was not error considering the testimony of the victim and the limiting instructions given by the trial court regarding the proper use of similar transactions evidence. People v. Fell, 832 P.2d 1015 (Colo. App. 1991).

Prosecutor's characterization of defendant's statement held "plain error". The prosecutor's characterization in his summation of defendant's written pretrial statement as ''riddled with lies'' constituted plain error affecting defendant's substantial rights. People v. Trujillo, 624 P.2d 924 (Colo. App. 1980).

As is exposure of handcuffed defendant. A denial of a fair trial occurs where a defendant appears before a jury in handcuffs when the exposure was unnecessary and prejudicial. People v. Rael, 199 Colo. 201, 612 P.2d 1095 (1980).

As is improper admission of evidence of other offenses. Admission into evidence of offenses not alleged as basis of habitual criminality during the second phase of a bifurcated trial constitutes reversible error. People v. Lucero, 200 Colo. 335, 615 P.2d 660 (1980).

The giving of a "time-fuse" instruction (which grants the jury a time limit to finish its deliberations, at the end of which the jury will be dismissed) constitutes plain error and requires reversal. Allen v. People, 660 P.2d 896 (Colo. 1983).

Failure to provide transcript of prior mistrial is of such magnitude that it requires a new trial. People v. St. John, 668 P.2d 988 (Colo. App. 1983).

Where enhancement of sentence for crime of violence is plain error. Where a defendant is convicted of first-degree murder, and the mittimus reads that he was found to have committed a ''crime of violence'', but the jury was not instructed on the elements of crime of violence nor given a separate verdict form or interrogatory as required, enhancement of sentence for having committed a crime of violence would be plain error. The cause must be remanded for correction of the mittimus to show conviction of first-degree murder only, and for imposition of sentence on that crime only. People v. Thrower, 670 P.2d 1251 (Colo. App. 1983).

Fact that testimony of hospital employee regarding defendant's statements made while confined for sanity examination used to rebut defendant's self-defense theory was given in prosecution's case-in-chief rather than as rebuttal testimony did not constitute plain error. People v. Kruse, 839 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1992).

Because the trial record contained significant evidence of defendant's guilt, any error by the trial court in admitting certain testimony was not plain error. People v. Mapps, 231 P.3d 5 (Colo. App. 2009).

Testimony by the victim and police officer describing the robber does not constitute plain error. The evidence corroborated other properly admitted evidence and although arguably cumulative, did not have a tendency to confuse or inflame the jury's passions or undermine the fairness of the trial. People v. Boehmer, 872 P.2d 1320 (Colo. App. 1993).

Allowing a jury unsupervised access to videotape and transcript of a drug transaction between the defendant and a police informant was not plain error. People v. Aponte, 867 P.2d 183 (Colo. App. 1993).

Prejudicial error found. People v. Snook, 729 P.2d 1026 (Colo. App. 1986), aff'd, 745 P.2d 647 (Colo. 1987).

Allowing defendant to stand trial in orange jump suit, which defendant described as prison garb, was not plain error. People v. Green, 759 P.2d 814 (Colo. App. 1988).

Declaration of mistrial to correct error at trial. Zamora v. People, 175 Colo. 340, 487 P.2d 1116 (1971); Howe v. People, 178 Colo. 248, 496 P.2d 1040 (1972); People v. Medina, 185 Colo. 101, 521 P.2d 1257 (1974); People v. Lankford, 185 Colo. 445, 524 P.2d 1382 (1974); People v. Goff, 187 Colo. 103, 530 P.2d 514 (1974); People v. Rogers, 187 Colo. 128, 528 P.2d 1309 (1974); People v. Becker, 187 Colo. 344, 531 P.2d 386 (1975).

Rule 53. Regulation of Conduct in the Courtroom

Conduct in the courtroom pertaining to the publication of judicial proceedings shall conform to Canon 3 of the Canons of Judicial Ethics, as adopted by the Supreme Court of Colorado.

Rule 54. Application and Exception

(a) Courts. These Rules apply to all criminal proceedings in all courts of record in the state of Colorado. These Rules do not apply to municipal ordinance and charter violations.

(b) Proceedings.

(1) Peace Bonds. These Rules do not alter the power of judges to hold for security of the peace and for good behavior as provided by law, but in such cases the procedure shall conform to these rules so far as they are applicable.

(2) Other Proceedings. These Rules are not applicable to extradition and rendition of fugitives; forfeiture of property for violation of a statute or the collection of fines and penalties; nor to any other special proceedings where a statutory procedure inconsistent with these Rules is provided.

(c) Application of Terms. ''Law'' includes statutes and judicial decisions. ''Civil action'' refers to a civil action in a court of record. ''Oath'' includes affirmations. ''Prosecuting attorney'' means the attorney general, a district attorney or his assistant or deputy or special prosecutor. The words ''demurrer'', ''motion to quash'', ''plea in abatement'', ''plea in bar'', and ''special plea in bar'', or words to the same effect in any statute, shall be construed to mean the motion raising a defense or objection provided in Rule 12.

(d) Numbering — Meaning of "No Colorado Rule". Insofar as practicable, the order and numbering of these Rules follows that of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. In some instances, usually because of differences in judicial systems or of jurisdiction, there is no Colorado rule corresponding in number with an existing federal rule. In these instances to maintain the general numbering scheme, the phrase ''No Colorado Rule'' appears opposite the number for which there is a federal rule but not a Colorado rule. The phrase ''No Colorado Rule'' means only that there is no rule included in these Rules covering the subject of the federal rule bearing that number. The phrase does not imply either that there is or that there is not constitutional, statutory or case law in Colorado covering the subject of the corresponding federal rule.

ANNOTATION

Rules of criminal procedure not applicable to extradition proceedings. Allowing full discovery in extradition proceedings would defeat the limited purpose of the habeas corpus hearing. Temen v. Barry, 695 P.2d 745 (Colo. 1984).

Rules of criminal procedure govern all proceedings in criminal actions in courts of record. People ex rel Shinn v. District Court, 172 Colo. 23, 469 P.2d 732 (1970).

But not trial de novo for violation of ordinance. The municipal court rules and not the rules of criminal procedure apply in a trial de novo in the county court for violation of a municipal ordinance. Rainwater v. County Court, 43 Colo. App. 477, 604 P.2d 1195 (1979).

Rules of criminal procedure not applicable to extradition proceedings. Allowing full discovery in extradition proceedings would defeat the limited purpose of the habeas corpus hearing. Temen v. Barry, 695 P.2d 745 (Colo. 1984).

Applied in People v. Brisbin, 175 Colo. 423, 488 P.2d 63 (1971); People v. Reliford, 39 Colo. App. 474, 568 P.2d 496 (1977).

Rule 55. Records

(a) Register of actions (criminal docket). The clerk shall keep a record known as the register of actions and shall enter those items set forth below. The register of actions may be in any form or style prescribed by chief justice directive or approved by the State Court Administrator.

A register of actions shall be prepared for each case filed. The file number of each case shall be entered in the court case management system. All documents filed with the clerk, all process issued and returns made thereon, all costs, appearances, orders, verdicts, and judgments shall be noted chronologically in the register of actions. The entries shall be brief but shall show the date and title of each document filed, order or writ issued, data transfer submitted or received, and the substance of each order or judgment of the court and the returns showing execution of process. The notation of an order or judgment shall show the date the notation is made. The notation of the judgment in the register of actions shall constitute the entry of judgment.

(b) Criminal Record. Repealed effective September 4, 1974.

(c) Indices; Calendars. The clerk shall keep indices of all records. The clerk shall also keep as directed by the court, calendars of all hearings and all cases ready for trial, which shall distinguish trials to a jury from trials to the court. Indices and calendars may be in any form or style prescribed by chief justice directive or approved by the State Court Administrator.

(d) Files. Repealed effective June 6, 2019.

(e) Reporter's Notes; Custody, Use, Ownership, Retention. For proceedings in district court, the practice and procedure concerning court reporter notes and electronic or mechanical recordings shall be as prescribed in Chief Justice Directive 05-03, Management Plan for Court Reporting and Recording Services. For proceedings in county court, that practice and procedure shall be as prescribed in C.R.C.P. 380.

(f) Retention and Disposition of Records. The clerk shall retain and dispose of all court records in accordance with the Colorado Judicial Department's records retention manual.

Source: (e) amended February 14, 2019, effective immediately; (a), (c), and (f) amended and (d) repealed effective June 6, 2019.

ANNOTATION

Court of record has an affirmative duty to contemporaneously record all proceedings. Reconstruction of the record at a later time is not an adequate substitute for a contemporaneous record. Jones v. District Court, 780 P.2d 526 (Colo. 1989).

Bench or side-bar conferences are not to be conducted off the record unless the parties so request or so consent. Jones v. District Court, 780 P.2d 526 (Colo. 1989).

But a failure to record all trial proceedings will not always result in reversible error. Trial court's failure to record certain bench conferences and pretrial conference was harmless where defense counsel never objected to unrecorded proceedings, defendant cannot show how error prejudiced her, and there is sufficient information on the record to rule on appeal. People v. Pineda, 40 P.3d 60 (Colo. App. 2001).

The court did not err by taking judicial notice of defendant's probation status after determining the status from the state computer system. Since § 13-1-119 and this rule expressly approve of records kept and maintained in a state computer system, the court may take judicial notice of the court records contained in the system. People v. Linares-Guzman, 195 P.3d 1130 (Colo. App. 2008).

Rule 56. Courts and Clerks

(a) All Courts Deemed Open. All courts of record shall be deemed always open for the purpose of filing any proper paper, of issuing and returning process and of making motions and orders. The clerk's office with the clerk or a deputy in attendance shall be open during business hours on all days except Sundays, legal holidays and such other days as the courthouse of the particular court shall be closed as provided by federal or state statute.

(b) County Courts Away from County Seat. When a county court is held regularly at a location other than the county seat, the county judge shall designate by rule when such place shall be open for the transaction of court matters. The clerk's office, with the clerk or ex officio clerk or a deputy in attendance, shall be open during business hours on all days except Sundays, legal holidays, and such other days as the courthouse of the particular court shall be closed as provided by federal or state statute.

Rule 57. Rules of Court

(a) Rules of Courts of Record. All local court rules, including local county court procedures and standing orders having the effect of local court rules regarding the criminal courts, enacted before February 1, 1992, are hereby repealed. Each court, by a majority of its judges, may from time to time propose local court rules and amendments of the local court rules. A proposed local rule or amendment shall not be inconsistent with the Colorado Rules of Criminal Procedure or with any directive of the Supreme Court regarding the conduct of formal judicial proceedings in criminal courts. A proposed local rule or amendment shall not be effective until it is approved by the Supreme Court. To obtain approval, three copies of any proposed local rule or amendment shall be submitted to the Supreme Court through the office of the State Court Administrator. Reasonable uniformity of local court rules is required. Numbering and format of any local court rule shall be as prescribed by the Supreme Court. Numbering and format requirements are on file at the office of the State Court Administrator. Upon approval by the Supreme Court of the local rule or amendment, a copy shall be furnished to the office of the Judicial Administrator to the end that all rules as provided herein may be published promptly and that copies may be available to the public. The Supreme Court's approval of a local court rule or local procedure shall not preclude review of that rule or procedure under the law or circumstances of a particular case. Nothing in this rule is intended to affect the authority of a court to adopt internal administrative procedures not relating to the conduct of formal judicial proceedings as prescribed by the Colorado Rules of Criminal Procedure.

(b) Procedure Not Otherwise Specified. If no procedure is specifically prescribed by rule, the court may proceed in any lawful manner not inconsistent with these Rules of Criminal Procedure or with any directive of the Supreme Court regarding the conduct of formal judicial proceedings in the criminal courts, and shall look to the Rules of Civil Procedure and to the applicable law if no Rule of Criminal Procedure exists.

❑YES ❑NO If yes, please attached an indigency application (JDF 208).

CLAIMS

Briefly specify every ground on which you claim that you are being held unlawfully.

- STATE THE FACTS RELATED TO YOUR CLAIM ON ONE PAGE AND PUT ANY LEGAL AUTHORITY ON A SEPARATE PAGE.
- YOU SHOULD RAISE IN THIS PETITION ALL THE CLAIMS FOR RELIEF THAT RELATE TO THE CONVICTION OR SENTENCE UNDER ATTACK. IF YOU DO NOT RAISE ALL CLAIMS HERE, THE COURT MAY NOT HAVE TO ENTERTAIN LATER MOTIONS FOR SIMILAR RELIEF.

GROUNDS OF PETITION

Specify every ground on which you claim that you are being held unlawfully, by placing a check mark in the appropriate box below and providing the required information. Include all facts. Attach pages stating the grounds and the facts referenced to each claim.

8. The grounds for this Petition are as follows: (check all that apply)

a. ❑ The Defendant has sought appeal of a conviction within the time prescribed, and judgment on that conviction has not then been affirmed upon appeal, and there has been a significant change in the law which if applied to this conviction or sentence, the interests of justice allow the retroactive application of the changed legal standard. (In other words, there was a change in the law and the Defendant is allowed the positive retroactive effect of the change.)

b. No review of a conviction of crime was sought by appeal within the time prescribed therefore, or a judgment of conviction was affirmed upon appeal. However, in good faith the Defendant alleges one or more of the following:

(1) ❑ That the conviction was obtained or sentence imposed in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States or the constitution or laws of this state.

(2) ❑ That the Defendant was convicted under a statute that is in violation of the Constitution of the United States or the constitution of this state, or that the conduct for which the applicant was prosecuted is constitutionally protected.

(3) ❑ That the court rendering judgment was without jurisdiction over the person of the applicant or the subject matter.

(4) ❑ That there exists evidence of material facts, not theretofore presented and heard, which, by the exercise of reasonable diligence, could not have been known to or learned by the Defendant or his attorney prior to the submission of the issues to the court or jury, and which requires vacation of the conviction or sentence in the interest of justice.

(5) ❑ Any other ground otherwise properly the basis for collateral attack upon a criminal judgment.

(6) ❑ That the sentence imposed has been fully served or that there has been unlawful revocation of parole, probation, or conditional release.

For any box checked, YOU MUST attach a separate sheet of paper with the ground listed at the top of the page and number it accordingly, 8(a), 8(b)(1), 8(b)(2), 8(b)(3), 8(b)(4), 8(b)(5), 8(b)(6), and/or 8(b)(7). On each separate sheet of paper list each and every fact you feel supports that claim. Be specific and give details.

9. Colorado Revised Statutes §16-5-402(1) provides that a person who has been convicted under a criminal statute in Colorado or another state may collaterally attack the validity of that conviction only if such attack is brought within a specified time period or completion of the direct appeal process for that conviction, unless one of the exceptions listed in §16-5-402(2), C.R.S. are applicable. The specified time periods are as follows:

All class 1 felonies:	No limit
All other felonies:	Three years
Misdemeanors:	Eighteen months
Petty offenses:	Six months

a. Was this petition filed within the time limits set forth in §16-5-402(1), 6 C.R.S. (above)?

❑ YES ❑ NO

b. If not, check any applicable exceptions listed in §16-5-402(2), 6 C.R.S., and state the FACTS that relate to the exception. DO NOT MAKE LEGAL ARGUMENTS.

(1) ❑ The court entering judgment of conviction did not have jurisdiction over the subject matter of the alleged offense;

(2) ❑ The court entering judgment of conviction did not have jurisdiction over the person of the Defendant;

(3) ❑ The failure to seek relief within the applicable time period was caused by an adjudication of incompetence or by commitment of the Defendant to an institution for treatment as a mentally ill person; or

(4) ❑ The failure to seek relief within the applicable time period was the result of circumstances amounting to justifiable excuse or excusable neglect.

❑ By checking this box, I am acknowledging I am filling in the blanks and not changing anything else on the form.

❑ By checking this box, I am acknowledging that I have made a change to the original content of this form. (Checking this box requires you to remove JDF number and copyright at the bottom of the form)

For every ground you checked as grounds for this petition not being filed within the statutory time limits, YOU MUST attach a separate sheet of paper with that ground listed at the top of the page and numbered accordingly* 9(b)(1), 9(b)(2), 9(b)(3), *and/or 9(b)(4). On this separate sheet of paper list each and every fact you feel supports this claim. Be specific and give details.

SUCCESSIVE PETITIONS

Important Notice Regarding Additional Petitions:

With specific exceptions provided for in Criminal Procedure Rule 35(c)(3)(VII), the court shall deny any claim that could have been presented in an appeal or postconviction proceeding previously brought.

Therefore, all claims related to the conviction under attack in this petition must be listed in this petition, or future motions may be denied.

Wherefore, petitioner prays that the Court grant relief to which petitioner may be entitled in this proceeding.

CHAPTER 29.3

The Colorado Rules Governing the Creation, Appointment, Terms, and Procedure for the Public Defender Commission

---

Adopted by the

SUPREME COURT OF COLORADO

Effective September 13, 1979

COLORADO RULES GOVERNING THE CREATION, APPOINTMENT, TERMS, AND PROCEDURE FOR THE PUBLIC DEFENDER COMMISSION

(1) Pursuant to Section 21-1-101, Colorado Revised Statutes, as amended, the Colorado Supreme Court hereby creates and establishes the Colorado Public Defender Commission. The commission shall have the following duties:

a. To appoint the Colorado State Public Defender;

b. To receive and act upon complaints made against the Public Defender; and

c. To remove the Public Defender upon a showing of adequate cause as set forth in these rules.

(2) The commission shall consist of five members appointed by the Chief Justice for staggered five-year terms beginning July 1, 1979. The Chief Justice shall determine the length of the initial term of each member, if such term is less than five years, to create the staggered full terms. In making appointments to the commission, the Chief Justice shall adhere to the qualifications and disqualifications set forth in Section 21-1-101(2), Colorado Revised Statutes, as amended, and shall take into consideration those matters set forth in the statute regarding place of residence, sex, race, and ethnic background.

(3) Any vacancy in the membership of the commission shall be filled by appointment by the Chief Justice in accordance with the membership qualifications stated above, and for the balance of the term remaining for the vacant position. A member of the commission shall be deemed to have resigned if that member is absent from three consecutive commission meetings.

(4) Any member of the commission may be reappointed for one full term following that member's initial term.

(5) The commission shall select a chairman from among its members. The chairman shall serve at the pleasure of the commission, and the chairman shall suffer no disqualification or impediment to his vote as a consequence of his occupying the position of chairman of the commission. The commission shall keep minutes of its meeting.

(6) The commission shall meet at least annually, and also upon the call of the chairman when necessary to consider appointment, tenure, or removal of the Public Defender.

(7) Three members shall constitute a quorum of the commission. The affirmative vote of four members of the commission is required for a decision to appoint or remove the Public Defender. Any other act of the commission requires the affirmative vote of a majority of the quorum, or, if more than a quorum is present, of the members present.

(8) In accordance with the procedure set forth below, the person serving as the Public Defender may be removed for permanent physical or mental disability seriously interfering with the performance of his duties, willful misconduct in office, willful or persistent failure to perform his duties, conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice, documented incompetence, or violation of any applicable canon or disciplinary rule contained in the Code of Professional Responsibility.

(9) Members of the Public Defender Commission shall serve without compensation but shall be reimbursed for actual and reasonable expenses incurred in the performance of their duties.

(10) Procedure for Appointment of the Public Defender. Any time a vacancy exists in the position of Public Defender, either by removal or resignation of the person serving as Public Defender or at the expiration of the term of any incumbent Public Defender, the commission shall select and appoint a person to serve as Colorado State Public Defender. The commission may reappoint an incumbent Public Defender. The selection and appointment of the Public Defender shall be based solely upon the merit of the appointee, pursuant to such procedures as the commission may adopt and in conformity with the qualifications set forth in section 21-1-102, C.R.S., as amended.

(11) Hearing Examiner. The commission may appoint one or more hearing examiners to conduct hearings in removal cases. Each hearing examiner shall be an attorney who has practiced law in Colorado for at least five years. A hearing examiner may be appointed for a two-year term to handle cases referred to him during his term by the commission. He shall be compensated on the basis of the actual time spent on commission matters at a rate to be established by the commission, in addition to reimbursement for actual expenses incurred. A hearing examiner and any commission member shall have the power to administer oaths and to issue subpoenas and subpoenas duces tecum for hearings conducted under these rules.

(12) Procedure for Removal of the Public Defender.

a. Any person seeking discharge of the Public Defender shall file a written complaint with the commission chairman requesting the Public Defender's discharge and stating all facts the complainant deems necessary to justify the discharge of the Public Defender. The complainant shall transmit copies of his complaint to the Public Defender.

b. The Public Defender shall file a response to the complaint with the commission chairman within ten days following receipt of the complaint, responding to the allegations of the complaint, and justifying whatever action is the subject of the complaint.

c. One member of the commission, selected by rotation of the commission members, shall consider the complaint and response and shall recommend to the commission either that the allegations and response justify a hearing or that the matter should be ruled upon by the commission without a hearing. The commission shall thereupon decide whether or not to hold a hearing. The Public Defender shall not be discharged unless a hearing is held.

d. If the commission determines not to hold a hearing, it shall so notify the parties, stating the matters considered and reasons for denying the hearing. The commission shall then decide the matter of the complaint upon the documents submitted by the parties without a hearing and shall dismiss the complaint or order such remedial action as the commission deems appropriate under the circumstances. The commission shall notify the complainant and the Public Defender of the commission's decision.

e. If the commission determines to hold a hearing, it shall so notify the parties, the hearing examiner, and all the interested and concerned parties. The hearing examiner shall set a convenient date and place for the hearing, to be held within thirty days after notification by the commission. Hearings shall be open to the public, unless a closed hearing is requested by the complainant or the Public Defender and ordered by the hearing examiner, and shall be recorded verbatim either stenographically or electronically.

f. Hearings shall be conducted in accordance with the provisions and procedures prescribed by Section 24-4-105, C.R.S., as amended, and the hearing examiner shall have the power therein granted, except that where such provisions are in conflict with the provisions of these rules, these rules shall control.

g. The hearing examiner shall conduct the hearing and shall afford the parties opportunity to introduce evidence, including testimony and statements of the complainant, his representative, if any, the Public Defender, his representative, if any, and other witnesses, and to cross-examine witnesses. The testimony received shall be under oath or affirmation.

h. Rules of evidence shall not be applied strictly, but the hearing examiner shall exclude irrelevant or unduly repetitious evidence.

i. The burden of initially going forward to show jurisdiction of the commission and the factual basis for the requested discharge of the Public Defender shall be upon the complainant. If the hearing examiner is satisfied that the complainant has met this burden after hearing the complainant's evidence, the hearing examiner shall so rule, and the burden of going forward shall then shift to the Public Defender to show that the action complained of did not occur, or if it did occur, that it was based upon good or justifiable cause.

j. Upon hearing the evidence and statements of the parties, and after such deliberation as necessary, the hearing officer shall make findings and a recommended decision on the issue of whether the Public Defender should be discharged, or whether the complaint should be dismissed. Any recommended decision of the hearing examiner to discharge the Public Defender shall be based upon clear and convincing evidence.

k. The hearing examiner shall issue a written decision and shall send copies thereof to the commission and to the parties and their representatives, if any. The decision shall contain findings, recommendations for any action, and notification of the right of either party to appeal directly to the commission. The decision shall include an analysis of the findings and a statement of the reasons for the conclusions reached. The commission, on its own motion or upon petition to review by an interested party, may affirm, modify, reverse, or set aside any decision of a hearing examiner on the basis of the evidence previously submitted in the case. The commission may also take additional evidence, or it may remand to the hearing examiner for the taking of additional evidence and a new decision. Unless the commission acts to the contrary, the decision of the hearing examiner shall become the decision of the commission and shall be carried into effect within twenty calendar days after issuance by the hearing examiner.

l. Either party may appeal the decision of the hearing examiner to the full commission. Such appeal shall be filed with the chairman of the commission. An appeal to the commission shall be in writing, setting forth the reasons for the appeal, and shall be filed with the commission within fifteen calendar days after the receipt of the decision of the hearing examiner. The commission may extend this time limit when a party shows that circumstances beyond his control prevent the filing of the appeal within the time limit. If an appeal is filed, the decision shall not be given effect until the commission has decided the appeal.

m. The commission shall review the record of the proceedings, all relevant written representations, and the decision of the hearing examiner. The record of proceedings may include such portions of the transcript of the hearing as may be necessary to consider the exceptions. Transcripts shall be furnished by the party appealing. The commission, may, in its discretion, afford the parties opportunity to appear and present oral arguments and representations.

n. The commission shall issue a written decision, which may consist of an affirmation without comment of the decision of the hearing examiner, and shall send copies thereof to the parties and their representatives, if any. Such decision of the commission shall be subject to court review, as provided below.

(13) Court Review.

a. No action, proceeding, or suit to set aside a commission decision or to enjoin the enforcement thereof shall be brought unless the petitioning party has first petitioned the commission for review of its decision, and no matter not brought to the commission's attention in the petition for review shall be considered on judicial review.

b. Actions, proceedings, or suits to set aside, vacate, or amend any final decision of the commission or to enjoin the enforcement of any final decision of the commission shall be on the record only and commenced in the Supreme Court within twenty days after notification of the final decision.

c. The commission may certify to the Supreme Court questions of law involved in any of its decisions.

d. In judicial proceedings under this article, the findings of the commission as to the facts, if supported by substantial evidence and in the absence of fraud, shall be conclusive.

e. Actions, proceedings, and suits to review any final decision of the commission or questions certified to the Supreme Court by the commission shall be heard in an expedited manner and shall be given precedence over all other civil cases.

f. A commission decision may be set aside only upon the following grounds:

1. That the commission acted without or in excess of its powers;

2. That the decision was procured by fraud;

3. That the findings of fact do not support the decision;

4. That the decision is erroneous as a matter of law.

g. In any action in which the plaintiff seeks judicial review of a commission final decision made after a hearing, the parties shall file briefs within the time periods specified in the Colorado appellate rules, and the matter shall be set promptly for oral argument.

h. Pending judicial review of a final decision of the commission discharging the Public Defender, the commission shall appoint an acting Public Defender, and the discharged Public Defender shall be in the status of suspension without pay. If the reviewing court reverses the commission and reinstates the Public Defender, the Public Defender shall be entitled to full compensation from the time of his being placed in status of suspension.

The Colorado Rules for County Court Traffic Violations Bureaus

---

Adopted by the

SUPREME COURT OF COLORADO

December 15, 1977,

Effective January 10, 1978

ANALYSIS BY RULE

COLORADO RULES FOR COUNTY COURT TRAFFIC VIOLATIONS BUREAUS

Rule 1. Establishment of Traffic Violations Bureaus

There is hereby established in every county court in this state a traffic violations bureau for the processing of cases as hereinafter provided.

Rule 2. Purpose and Construction

These rules are intended to provide for the just and speedy disposition of minor traffic cases without appearance before a judge. They shall be construed to secure simplicity and uniformity in procedure and to minimize expense and delay while preserving the rights of defendants.

Rule 3. Definitions

Unless otherwise provided, the following definitions shall apply throughout these rules:

(a) ''Process'' means to dispose of cases in a traffic violations bureau without appearance before a judge or referee.

(b) ''Clerk'' means the clerk or deputy clerk of a county court.

Rule 4. Cases Processed by Traffic Violations Bureaus

(a) A county court traffic violations bureau may process any case involving violations contained in articles 2, 3, and 4 of title 42, C.R.S., as amended, except the following:

(1) Cases commenced by the issuance of a penalty assessment notice under section 42-4-1701 (5) (a), C.R.S., as amended;

(2) Cases involving any violation designated as a class 1 or class 2 traffic offense under article 4 of title 42, C.R.S., as amended;

(3) Cases involving charges of driving without a valid driver's license or while the driver's license is suspended, denied, or revoked, or while the driver's license has been expired for more than one year;

(4) Cases involving false, altered, or fraudulent drivers' licenses or false, altered, or fraudulent safety inspection stickers;

(5) Cases in which the summons indicates that a traffic accident or collision was involved;

(6) Cases in which the offense charged is a felony;

(7) Cases involving violations contained in sections 42-2-101 (3), 42-2-106, 42-2-132, 42-2-136, 42-2-139, 42-3-133 (1) (b) to (1) (h), 42-3-142, 42-4-222, 42-4-233, 42-4-606, 42-4-1904, 42-4-712, and 42-4-1208, C.R.S., as amended; and

(8) Cases involving multiple charges, one or more of which is not eligible for processing in a traffic violations bureau, or to one or more of which a defendant desires to enter a plea of not guilty.

(b) In traffic cases not eligible for processing in the traffic violations bureau, and except for penalty assessment notices paid properly and timely to the motor vehicle division of the department of revenue, an appearance before a judge or referee shall be required.

Source: (a)(1) and (a)(7) corrected and effective November 12, 1999.

Rule 5. Venue

A traffic violations bureau may process only those summonses issued for return in the county court in which the traffic violations bureau is situated.

Rule 6. Plea Agreements Prohibited

No charge shall be reduced, dismissed, or amended, and no new charge shall be added to any summons or complaint processed by any traffic violations bureau. A traffic violations bureau shall accept only a plea of guilty to each offense stated or charged in the notice or summons and complaint.

Rule 7. Acknowledgment and Waiver of Rights

(a) Before processing any case in a traffic violations bureau, the clerk shall ascertain that the defendant has been advised in writing of each of the following:
(1) The right to appear before a judge or a referee;
(2) The right to plead not guilty, and to have a trial by a judge, a referee, or a jury;
(3) The right to be represented by an attorney, and, if the defendant is indigent, to request the appointment of an attorney;
(4) The right to remain silent, and that any statement made by the defendant can and may be used against him;
(5) That any plea entered must be voluntary and not the result of undue influence or coercion on the part of anyone;
(6) The amount of fines and costs to be imposed, and that penalty points may be assessed against the driving privilege; and
(7) That if a plea of guilty is entered, the defendant waives the foregoing rights as well as any right of appeal.
(b) A document shall be delivered to the defendant providing a place for the defendant to execute a written acknowledgment and waiver of the rights set forth above, and to enter a plea of guilty to the offense or offenses charged.
(c) Such advisement, waiver, and plea may be incorporated in either of the following documents:
(1) The summons or notice served upon the defendant; or
(2) A separate document delivered to the defendant by the peace officer serving the summons or notice, or by the clerk at the traffic violations bureau when the defendant appears in person.

Rule 8. Procedure in Traffic Violations Bureaus

(a) Every traffic case shall be filed and indexed in the county court in the same manner, whether eligible or ineligible for processing in the traffic violations bureau.
(b) A traffic violations bureau shall accept guilty pleas and no others.
(c) A traffic violations bureau shall accept pleas of guilty only to the offense or offenses charged in the notice or summons and complaint and to no other offense. Such pleas may be entered in person, by counsel, or by mail.
(d) Every plea entered at a traffic violations bureau shall be in writing. The clerk shall not accept such plea or payment of fines and costs unless and until the defendant, or defendant's counsel, has executed an acknowledgment and waiver of rights as provided in Rule 7.
(e) Every county court shall post in a conspicuous place in the clerk's office a schedule of the fines and costs and the penalty points as provided by law for the offenses eligible for processing in the traffic violations bureau.
(f) After accepting a plea of guilty, the clerk shall assess and collect the appropriate fines as provided in Rule 9, together with costs as provided in Rule 10, and shall enter the plea and the amount of the fines and costs on the register of actions. After completing the foregoing, the clerk shall sign the register of actions. The completed entries and collections as set forth above shall constitute a judgment of conviction.

(g) The clerk shall provide a written receipt to each defendant, or defendant's attorney, who pays any fine or costs in person, or who provides a stamped, self-addressed envelope for such purpose when making payment by mail.

(h) The clerk shall account for moneys received in the traffic violations bureau in the same manner as in other traffic cases.

(i) The clerk shall report each conviction in the traffic violations bureau to the motor vehicle division of the department of revenue pursuant to section 42-2-124, C.R.S., as amended.

Source: (i) corrected and effective November 12, 1999.

Rule 9. Amounts of Fines

The amounts of fines which shall be assessed in a traffic violations bureau for those violations set forth in the schedule contained in section 42-4-1701 (4) (a), C.R.S., as amended, shall be the amounts specified in that schedule.

Source: Entire rule corrected and effective November 12, 1999.

Rule 10. Costs

Each defendant entering a plea of guilty and paying a fine shall be charged the docket fee provided for traffic violations bureaus by section 13-32-105, C.R.S., as amended, in addition to such fine.

Rule 11. Application

These rules shall be uniform in all county courts in this state and shall apply to all traffic cases except as limited by Rule 4 herein.

Rule 12. Effective Date

These rules take effect January 10, 1978, and shall apply to violations alleged to have been committed on or after that date.

Rule 13. Citation

These rules shall be known and cited as the Colorado Rules for County Court Traffic Violations Bureaus, or R.T.V.B.

COUNTY COURT TRAFFIC VIOLATIONS BUREAUS

CHAPTER 29.7

The Colorado Rules for Traffic Infractions

Adopted by the

SUPREME COURT OF COLORADO

December 9, 1982,

Effective January 1, 1983

ANALYSIS BY RULE

CHAPTER 29.7

COLORADO RULES FOR TRAFFIC INFRACTIONS

Rule 1. Scope and Purpose

These rules are promulgated pursuant to section 13-6-501 (9), C.R.S., and govern practice and procedures for the handling of noncriminal traffic infractions, which are defined as civil offenses in section 42-4-1701 (1), C.R.S. The purpose of these rules is to provide for the orderly, expeditious, and fair disposition of this class of traffic offenses. For this purpose, the rules apply concepts of both civil and criminal law, as deemed appropriate, to establish informal hearing procedures in the county courts.

Source: Entire rule corrected and effective November 12, 1999.

Rule 2. Application

These rules apply to actions in which only the commission of statutory traffic infractions are charged. In any action in which the commission of a traffic infraction and a criminal offense are alleged in one complaint, all charges shall be returnable and judgment shall be entered pursuant to section 42-4-1708 (1), C.R.S., and the action shall be treated as one proceeding governed by the rules and statutes applicable to the alleged criminal offense.

Source: Entire rule corrected and effective November 12, 1999.

Rule 3. Definitions

The following definitions shall apply in these rules:

(a) ''Charging document'' means the document commencing or initiating the traffic infraction matter, whether denoted as a complaint, summons and complaint, citation, penalty assessment notice, or other document charging the person with the commission of a traffic infraction or infractions.

(b) ''Defendant'' means any person charged with the commission of a traffic infraction, including but not limited to the following terms used in the implementing legislation: ''cited person,'' ''cited party,'' ''individual,'' ''person charged with a traffic violation,'' ''violator,'' or ''accused.''

(c) ''Docket fee'' means a fee assessed according to the provisions of section 42-4-1710 (2), (3), or (4), C.R.S., or a fee in the same amount as provided in these rules.

(d) ''Judgment'' means the admission of guilt or liability for any traffic infraction, the entry of judgment of guilt or liability, or the entry of default judgment as used in section 42-4-1709 (7), C.R.S., against any person for the commission of a traffic infraction.

(e) ''Officer'' means a law enforcement agent who tenders or serves a charging document under these rules.

(f) ''Penalty'' means a fine pursuant to sections 42-4-1701 (4) (a) and 42-4-1710, C.R.S., if the charging document is a penalty assessment notice; or a fine pursuant to sections 42-4-1701 (3) (a) (I) and 42-4-1701 (5) (c) (II), C.R.S., if the charging document is any document other than a penalty assessment notice.

(g) ''Referee'' means any person appointed as a referee under section 13-6-501, C.R.S., and any judge acting as a referee to hear traffic infractions.

Source: (c), (d), and (f) corrected and effective November 12, 1999; (f) corrected and effective November 30, 1999.

Rule 4. Commencement of Action

An action under these rules is commenced by the tender or service of a charging document upon a defendant and by the filing of a charging document with the court.

Editor's note: Letter designation "(a)" removed on revision (2018).

Rule 5. Prohibition of Plea Agreements

Repealed June 16, 1988, effective January 1, 1989.

Rule 6. Payment Before Appearance

(a) The clerk of court shall accept payment of a penalty assessment notice by a defendant without an appearance before the referee, if payment is made before the time scheduled for the first appearance.

(b) At the time of payment, the defendant shall sign a waiver of rights and acknowledgment of guilt or liability, as set forth in Form A in the appendix to these rules, pay a docket fee, and agree to complete any additional court ordered sanction.

(c) This procedure shall constitute an entry and satisfaction of judgment.

Source: (b) amended and effective September 7, 2006; (a) amended and effective June 16, 2011.

Rule 7. First Hearing

(a) If the defendant has not previously acknowledged guilt or liability and satisfied the judgment, he shall appear before the referee at the time scheduled for first hearing.

(b) The defendant may appear in person or by counsel, who shall enter appearance in the case, providing, however, if an admission of guilt or liability is entered, the referee may require the presence of the defendant for the assessment of the penalty.

(c) If the defendant appears in person, the referee shall advise him in open court of the following:

(1) The nature of the infractions alleged in the charging document;

(2) The penalty and docket fee that may be assessed and the penalty points that may be assessed against the driving privilege;

(3) The consequences of the failure to appear at any subsequent hearing including entry of judgment against the defendant and reporting the judgment to the state motor vehicle division, which may assess points against the driving privilege and may deny an application for a driver's license;

(4) The right to be represented by an attorney at the defendant's expense;

(5) The right to deny the allegations and to have a hearing before the referee;

(6) The right to remain silent, because any statement made by the defendant may be used against him;

(7) Guilt or liability must be proven beyond a reasonable doubt;

(8) The right to testify, subpoena witnesses, present evidence, and cross-examine any witnesses for the state;

(9) Any answer must be voluntary and not the result of undue influence or coercion on the part of anyone; and

(10) An admission of guilt or liability constitutes a waiver of the foregoing rights and any right to appeal.

(d) The defendant personally or by counsel shall answer the allegations in the charging document either by admitting guilt or liability or by denying the allegations.

(e) If the defendant admits guilt or liability, the referee shall enter judgment and assess the appropriate penalty and the docket fee, after determining that the defendant understood the matters set forth in Rule 7(c) and has made a voluntary, knowing, and intelligent waiver of rights.

(f) If the defendant denies the allegations, the matter shall be set for final hearing, and the defendant and officer shall be notified.

Rule 8. Discovery

(a) Discovery shall not be available prior to final hearing.

(b) At the time of final hearing, the defendant is entitled to inspect all documents prepared by the officer which the officer intends to use in the presentation of evidence.

Rule 9. Subpoena

(a) A subpoena shall be issued only for the attendance of a witness or for the production of documentary evidence at final hearing.

(b) A subpoena shall be issued to any county within the state either by the clerk of court at the request of the officer or the defendant, or by counsel who has entered an appearance in the case.

(c) The service of a subpoena shall be by first class mail, if the person to whom it is directed waives personal service, as provided in Form B in the appendix to these rules. No fees or mileage need be tendered with service by mail.

(d) If the person to whom a subpoena is directed does not waive personal service, the issuance and service of a subpoena shall be as provided in Rule 345, C.R.C.P., except as otherwise provided in this rule.

Rule 10. Dismissal Before Final Hearing

(a) Except as provided in Rule 15, the charges shall be dismissed with prejudice if the officer fails to appear at the final hearing.

(b) The charges shall be dismissed if the final hearing is not held within six months from the defendant's answer, pursuant to the provisions of section 42-4-1710 (3), C.R.S.

Source: (b) corrected and effective November 12, 1999.

Rule 11. Final Hearing

(a) The hearing of all cases shall be informal, the object being to dispense justice promptly and economically. The referee shall ensure that evidence shall be offered and questioning shall be conducted in an orderly and expeditious manner and according to basic notions of fairness. The referee may call and question any witness consistent with the referee's obligation to be an impartial fact finder favoring neither the state nor the defense.

(b) The order of proceedings at the hearing shall be as follows:

(1) Before commencement of the hearing, the referee shall briefly describe and explain the purposes and procedures of the hearing.

(2) The officer shall offer sworn testimony and evidence to the facts concerning the alleged infraction. After such testimony, the referee and the defendant or counsel may examine the officer.

(3) Thereafter, the defendant may offer sworn testimony and evidence and shall answer questions, if such testimony is offered, as may be asked by the referee.

(4) If the testimony of additional witnesses is offered, the order of testimony and the extent of questioning shall be within the discretion of the referee.

(5) Upon the conclusion of such testimony and examination, the referee may further examine or allow examination and rebuttal testimony and evidence as deemed appropriate.

(6) At the conclusion of all testimony and examination, the defendant or counsel shall be permitted to make a closing statement.

(c) The Colorado Rules of Evidence do not apply to hearings under these rules.

Rule 12. Judgment After Final Hearing

(a) If all elements of a traffic infraction are proven beyond a reasonable doubt, the referee shall find the defendant guilty or liable and enter appropriate judgment.

(b) If any element of a traffic infraction is not proven beyond a reasonable doubt, the referee shall dismiss the charge and enter appropriate judgment, provided, however, that the referee may find the defendant guilty of or liable for a lesser included traffic infraction, if based on the evidence offered, and enter appropriate judgment.

(c) If the defendant is found guilty or liable, the referee shall assess the appropriate penalty and the docket fee, and any additional costs authorized by section 13-16-122 (1), C.R.S, and order the completion of any additional court ordered sanctions.

(d) The judgment shall be satisfied upon payment to the clerk of the total amount assessed as set forth above and performance of additional sanctions.

(e) If the defendant fails to satisfy the judgment in the time allowed, such failure shall be treated as a default under section 42-4-1710 (3) or (4), C.R.S. The provisions of Rule 16(d) and (e) shall apply to a default under this rule.

Source: (e) corrected and effective November 12, 1999; (c) and (d) amended and effective September 7, 2006.

Rule 13. Posthearing Motions and Appeal

(a) There shall be no posthearing motions except for a motion to set aside a default judgment as provided in Rule 16.

(b) Appeal procedure shall be according to section 13-6-504, C.R.S., and Rule 37, Crim. P.

Rule 14. Venue

Venue shall be as provided by statute.

Rule 15. Continuances

Continuances may be granted on a showing of good cause by the officer, his supervisor, or the defendant.

Rule 16. Default

(a) If the defendant fails to appear for any hearing, the referee shall enter judgment against the defendant.

(b) The amount of the judgment shall be the appropriate penalty assessed after a finding of guilt or liability, the docket fee, and any additional costs assessable under these rules.

(c) The referee may set aside a judgment entered under this rule on a showing of good cause or excusable neglect by the defendant. A motion to set aside the judgment shall be made to the court not more than seven calendar days after entry of judgment.

(d) The defendant may satisfy a judgment entered under this rule by paying the clerk and providing proof of compliance with any additional court orders.

(e) No warrant shall issue for the arrest of a defendant who fails to appear at a hearing or fails to satisfy a judgment.

Source: (d) amended and effective September 7, 2006.

Rule 17. Effective Date

These rules take effect January 1, 1983, and shall apply to traffic infractions alleged to have been committed on or after that date.

Rule 18. Title

These rules shall be known and cited as the Colorado Rules for Traffic Infractions, or C.R.T.I.

SPECIAL FORM INDEX

Form A

WAIVER OF RIGHTS AND ADMISSION OF GUILT OR LIABILITY
UNDER THE COLORADO RULES FOR TRAFFIC INFRACTIONS
(Rule 6, C.R.T.I.)

You have been accused of violating the traffic infraction laws of the State of Colorado. A simplified procedure is available for the payment of any fines if you voluntarily admit your guilt or liability after being advised of the following rights.

You have the right to:

1. Be represented by an attorney at your own expense;
2. Remain silent because any statement you make may be used against you;
3. Deny the allegations against you and have a hearing, at which the allegations must be proven beyond a reasonable doubt;
4. Testify at your own choosing, subpoena witnesses, present evidence, and cross-examine witnesses for the state;
5. Appeal a judgment against you.

Any answer you make must be voluntary and not the result of undue influence, and you must understand that points may be assessed against your driving records if you admit guilt or liability.

Admission of Guilt or Liability

I have read or been advised of the rights described above. I hereby waive these rights and voluntarily admit my guilt or liability.

Date _____ Signature _____

Please Note Carefully

Your failure EITHER to sign the above and pay the clerk the fine and costs OR to appear as directed in your notice will result in a judgment against you. The judgment will be reported to the state Motor Vehicle Division, which may assess points against your driving record and delay your application for a driver's license until you have paid the court the full amount of the judgment against you.

ANNOTATION

Municipal court rules of procedure are applicable to home-rule municipal courts. Hardamon v. Municipal Court, 178 Colo. 271, 497 P.2d 1000 (1972).

Nature of case determines which rules apply. It is the nature of the case, and not the court in which the case is being tried, that determines whether the municipal court rules or the rules of criminal procedure apply. Rainwater v. County Court, 43 Colo. App. 477, 604 P.2d 1195 (1979).

Rules apply in trial de novo for violation of ordinance. The municipal court rules, and not the rules of criminal procedure, apply in a trial de novo in the county court for violation of a municipal ordinance. Rainwater v. County Court, 43 Colo. App. 477, 604 P.2d 1195 (1979).

Absent rules, power exercised in court's discretion. The absence of procedural rules as to exercise of power to permit the consolidation of charges, to permit amendments thereto, or to permit the charging party to withdraw any one or more of the charges made, does not destroy the power, but merely indicates that the manner of its exercise rests in the sound discretion of the court. Paukovich v. County Court, 44 Colo. App. 208, 615 P.2d 54 (1980).

Rule 202. Purpose and Construction

These rules are intended to provide for the just determination of all municipal charter and ordinance violations. They shall be construed to secure simplicity in procedure, fairness in administration, and the elimination of unjustifiable expense and delay.

ANNOTATION

Applied in Patterson v. Cronin, 650 P.2d 531 (Colo. 1982).

Rule 203. Definitions

As used in these rules, the following terms shall have the following meanings:

(a) ''Complaint'' means a written statement of the essential facts constituting a violation;

(b) ''Law'' includes municipal charters and ordinances, statutes, and judicial decisions;

(c) ''Oath'' includes affirmations;

(d) ''Peace officer'' means a duly appointed law enforcement officer of the state of Colorado or any political subdivision thereof, authorized by the constitution, statutes, charter, or ordinances to enforce municipal charter and ordinance violations;

(e) ''Prosecution'' means the prosecutor, if present, or the complaining witness, if the prosecutor is not present;

(f) ''Prosecutor'' means an attorney representing the municipality in a municipal court;

(g) ''Summons'' means a notice to appear before the court;

(h) ''Summons and complaint'' means a single document containing all the requisites of both a summons and a complaint.

Rule 204. Simplified Procedure for Trial of Municipal Charter and Ordinance Violations

The following simplified procedure shall apply:

(a) Initiation of Prosecution.

(1) Prosecution of a violation under simplified procedure shall be commenced by:

(I) The issuance of a summons and complaint;

(II) The issuance of a summons following the filing of a complaint;

(III) The filing of a complaint following an arrest; or

(IV) The filing of a summons and complaint following arrest.

(b) Summons, Summons and Complaint — By Whom Issued; How Served; Failure to Appear; Contents; Amendment.

(1) Summons. Summons is issued by the clerk of the court following the filing of a sworn complaint when it appears from the complaint that there is probable cause to believe that a violation has been committed and that the defendant committed it. The summons need only contain the name of the defendant, the date, time, and place of appearance of the defendant. A copy of the complaint shall be served therewith, and a copy of the summons and the complaint shall be supplied to the prosecutor.

(2) Warrant. In lieu of a summons a warrant may be issued at the discretion of the court following the filing of a sworn complaint.

(3) Summons and Complaint. A summons and complaint may be issued by a peace officer for an offense constituting a violation which was committed in the peace officer's presence or, if not committed in the peace officer's presence, when the peace officer has reasonable grounds for believing that the offense was committed in fact and that the offense was committed by the person charged. A copy of the summons and complaint so issued shall be filed immediately with the court before which appearance is required. A second copy shall be supplied to the prosecutor if so requested.

(4) Contents of Complaint or Summons and Complaint. The complaint shall contain the name of the defendant; the date and approximate location of the offense; identification of the offense charged, citing the charter or ordinance section alleged to have been violated; and a brief statement or description of the offense charged, which statement or description shall be sufficient if it states the type of offense to which the charter or ordinance relates. The summons and complaint shall contain all the foregoing information and shall also direct the defendant to appear before a specified court at a stated date, time, and place, or in the office of the court clerk or violations bureau as provided in subsection (5) below.

(5) The summons or summons and complaint shall direct the defendant to appear before a specified court at a stated date, time, and place, or to appear or to respond at the office of the court clerk or violations bureau of a specified court at a stated date and time or within a stated period of time after service of said summons or summons and complaint.

(6) Amendment of complaint or summons and complaint. The court may permit a complaint or summons and complaint to be amended as to form or substance at any time prior to trial; the court may permit it to be amended as to form at any time before the verdict or finding if no additional or different offense is charged and if substantial rights of the defendant are not prejudiced.

(c) Procedure After Initiation of Prosecution by Issuance of Summons or Summons and Complaint Without Arrest. Arraignment shall be conducted at the time of the defendant's first appearance in court in response to the direction to appear contained in the summons or summons and complaint, unless arraignment is continued as provided in Rule 210.

(d) Procedure After Initiation of Prosecution by Issuance of Complaint or Summons and Complaint Following Arrest.

(1) Any person arrested under a warrant issued upon a complaint, unless admitted to bail, shall be taken without unnecessary delay before a judge of the court which issued the warrant and shall be given a copy of the complaint and warrant. The defendant shall at such time be arraigned in accordance with the provisions of Rule 210, unless arraignment is continued as provided therein.

(2) A person arrested without a warrant for an offense constituting a municipal charter or ordinance violation shall either (i) be served with a summons and complaint and admitted to bail or released upon personal recognizance, or (ii) be taken without unnecessary delay before the judge, whereupon a complaint or summons and complaint shall be filed forthwith with the court and a copy served upon the accused person, unless earlier filed and served. The accused person shall at such time be arraigned in accordance with the provisions of Rule 210, unless arraignment is continued as provided therein.

(e) Service of Summons and Complaint. A copy of a summons or summons and complaint issued pursuant to these rules shall be served personally upon the defendant. In lieu of personal service, service may be made by leaving a copy of the summons or summons and complaint at the defendant's usual place of abode with some person over the age of eighteen years residing therein or by mailing a copy to the defendant's last known address by certified mail, return receipt requested, not less than 7 days prior to the time the defendant is required to appear.

(f) Failure to Appear. If a person upon whom a summons or summons and complaint has been served pursuant to this Rule fails to appear in person or by counsel at the place and time specified therein, a bench warrant may issue for the person's arrest.

ANNOTATION

Annotator's note. The following annotations include cases decided under former provisions similar to this rule.

Personal service of parking summons not required. Fundamental principles of due process do not require personal service of parking summonses. Patterson v. Cronin, 650 P.2d 531 (Colo. 1982).

As affixing to windshield suffices. The practice of affixing a summons and complaint to the windshield of an unattended motor vehicle is sufficient for the limited purpose of notifying the owner of the motor vehicle of a parking violation. Patterson v. Cronin, 650 P.2d 531 (Colo. 1982).

Purpose of section (6)(4) requirement that ''identification of the offense charged, citing the charter or ordinance section alleged to have been violated'' is to provide for simplicity in procedure and fairness in administration. Alessi v. Municipal Court, 38 Colo. App. 153, 556 P.2d 87 (1976).

Adequate notice of offense. Where the city and municipal court name is printed on the face of a ticket, the section number together with a reference to the ''local ordinance'' provides adequate notice to the defendant of the offense allegedly violated. Alessi v. Municipal Court, 38 Colo. App. 153, 556 P.2d 87 (1976).

As to a "uniform traffic ticket and complaint" containing sufficient information as required for a summons and complaint under this rule, see Alessi v. Municipal Court, 38 Colo. App. 153, 556 P.2d 87 (1976).

Applied in Garcia v. City of Pueblo, 176 Colo. 96, 489 P.2d 200 (1971).

Rules 205 to 207. No Colorado Rules

Rule 208. Joinder of Offenses and of Defendants

(a) Joinder of Offenses. If several offenses are known to the prosecutor at the time of commencing the prosecution, all such offenses which are subject to the jurisdiction of the municipal court, upon which the prosecutor elects to proceed, must be prosecuted by separate counts in a single prosecution if they are based on the same act or series of acts arising from the same criminal episode. Any such offense not thus joined by separate count cannot thereafter be the basis of a subsequent prosecution.

(b) Joinder of Defendants. Two or more defendants may be charged in the same complaint or summons and complaint if they are alleged to have participated in the same act or transaction or in the same series of acts or transactions constituting an offense or offenses. Such defendants may be charged on one or more counts together or separately, and all the defendants need not be charged on each count.

Rule 210. Arraignment

(a) In Court.

(1) Arraignment shall be held upon defendant's first appearance in court, unless defendant is granted a continuance to seek assistance of counsel, to determine which plea to enter, or for other good and sufficient reasons. The court shall advise each defendant of the right to have the arraignment continued upon request for good cause shown, and if no such request is made, the court may proceed with the arraignment.

(2) Arraignment shall be conducted in open court, and the defendant may appear in person or by counsel. If a plea of guilty or nolo contendere is entered by counsel in the absence of the defendant, the court may command the appearance of the defendant in person for the imposition of sentence.

(3) Upon arraignment, the defendant or counsel shall be furnished with a copy of the complaint or summons and complaint if one has not been previously served.

(4) A defendant appearing without counsel at arraignment shall be advised by the court of the nature of the charges contained in the complaint and of the maximum penalty which the court may impose in the event of a conviction; in addition, the court shall inform the defendant of the following rights:

(I) To bail;

(II) To make no statement, and that any statement made can and may be used against the defendant;

(III) To be represented by counsel, and, if indigent, the right to appointed counsel as applicable;

(IV) To have process issued by the court, without expense to the defendant, to compel the attendance of witnesses in defendant's behalf;

(V) To testify or not to testify in defendant's own behalf;

(VI) To a trial by jury where such right is granted by statute or ordinance, together with the requirement that the defendant, if desiring a jury trial, demand such trial by jury in writing within 21 days after arraignment or entry of a plea; also the number of jurors allowed by law, and of the requirement that the defendant, if desiring a jury trial, tender to the court within 21 days after arraignment or entry of a plea a jury fee of $25 unless the fee be waived by the judge because of the indigence of the defendant.

(VII) To appeal.

(b) At Office of Court Clerk or Violations Bureau.

(1) Except where arraignment and immediate trial are available, the court, in order to eliminate unnecessary court appearances, may provide that a defendant desiring to enter a plea of not guilty may enter an appearance and such a plea at the clerk's office or violations bureau, in person or by counsel, and have the case assigned for trial at a future date. The clerk shall furnish notice of such entry of plea to the prosecutor without delay.

(2) Before a plea of guilty is received, the defendant shall be arraigned in court as provided in section (a) above, unless the offense is included in a uniform schedule of fines imposed by the court in accordance with the provisions of subsection (5) below, and the defendant elects such procedure.

(3) Under the conditions specified in subsection (4) herein, a court where authorized may establish a procedure for the payment to the court clerk or violations bureau according to a schedule of fines. In such matters the violations bureau shall act under the direction and control of the court.

(4) Any court subject to these rules may by order, which may from time to time be amended, supplemented, or repealed, designate the violations, the penalties for which may be paid at the office of the court clerk or violations bureau. In no event shall the order of reference, or any amendment or supplement thereto, designate for processing any of the following traffic violations:

(I) Offenses resulting in an accident causing personal injury, death, or appreciable damage to the property of another;

(II) Reckless driving;

(III) Exceeding the speed limit by more than twenty-four miles per hour;

(IV) Exhibition of speed or speed contest.

(5) Schedule of Fines. The court, in addition to any other notice, by published order to be prominently posted in a place where fines are to be paid, shall specify by suitable schedules the amount of fines to be imposed for violations, designating each violation specifically in the schedules. Such fines shall be within the limits declared by ordinance. Fines and costs shall be paid to, receipted by, and accounted for by the violations clerk or court clerk in accordance with these rules.

Rule 211. Pleas

(a) Generally. A defendant, in person or by counsel, may plead guilty, not guilty, or, with the consent of the court, nolo contendere.

(b) Pleas of Guilty and Nolo Contendere. The court shall not accept a plea of guilty or a plea of nolo contendere without first determining that the defendant has been advised of all rights set forth in Rule 210 (a)(4) and also determining:

(1) That the defendant understands the nature of the charge and the effect of the plea;

(2) That the plea is voluntary and is not the result of undue influence or coercion on the part of anyone;

(3) That the defendant understands the right to trial by court, or by jury, if applicable, and that the plea waives the right to trial on all issues;

(4) That the defendant understands the possible penalty or penalties.

(c) Absence of the Defendant. The court may accept, in the absence of the defendant, any plea entered in writing by the defendant or counsel or orally made by counsel.

(d) Failure or Refusal to Plead. If a defendant refuses to plead or if the court refuses to accept a plea of guilty, or a plea of nolo contendere, or if a corporation fails to appear, the court shall enter a plea of not guilty. If for any reason the arraignment here provided for has not been had, the case shall for all purposes be considered as one in which a plea of not guilty has been entered.

Source: Entire chapter amended June 30, 1988, effective January 1, 1989.

ANNOTATION

Although the defendant was advised of several rights and the possible penalties, he was not advised of his constitutional right to be represented by counsel, and the trial court properly ruled that the municipal court's advisement of the defendant was illegal since it did not meet the mandatory requirements set forth in this rule. Mulkey v. Sullivan, 753 P.2d 1226 (Colo. 1988).

Where the defendant has entered a plea of guilty and later wishes to withdraw such plea, the burden is on the defendant to present a prima facie case that the plea was not knowingly and understandingly made. City of Colo. Springs v. Forance, 776 P.2d 1107 (Colo. 1989).

Rule 212. Pleadings and Motions Before Trial

(a) Pleadings and Motions. Pleadings shall consist of the complaint or summons and complaint and pleas of guilty, not guilty, or nolo contendere. All other pleas, demurrers, and motions to quash are abolished, and defenses and objections raised before trial which heretofore could have been raised by one or more of them shall be raised only by motion to dismiss or to grant appropriate relief, or as provided in these rules.

(b) Oral or Written Motions. All motions shall be oral unless otherwise ordered by the court.

(c) Defenses and Objections Which May be Raised. Any defense or objection which is capable of determination without the trial of the general issue may be raised by motion.

(d) Defenses and Objections Which Must Be Raised. Defenses and objections based on defects in the institution of the prosecution or in the complaint or summons and complaint other than that it fails to show jurisdiction in the court or to charge an offense may be raised only by motion. The motion shall include all such defenses and objections then available to the defendant. Failure thus to present any such defense or objection constitutes a waiver of it, but the court for cause shown may grant relief from the waiver. Lack of jurisdiction or the failure of the complaint or summons and complaint to charge an offense shall be noticed by the court at any time during the proceeding.

(e) Time for Making Motion. The motion shall be made before the plea is entered, but the court may permit it to be made within a reasonable time thereafter.

(f) Hearing on Motion. A motion before trial raising defenses or objections under section (c) or (d) shall be determined before the day of trial unless the court orders that it be deferred for determination at or after the trial of the general issue.

(g) Effect of Determination. If a motion is determined adversely to the defendant, the defendant shall be permitted to plead if no plea has previously been made. A plea previously entered shall stand.

Rule 213. Trial Together of Complaints or Summons and Complaints

Subject to the provisions of Rule 214, the court may order two or more complaints or summons and complaints to be tried together if the offenses, and the defendants if there are more than one, could have been joined in a single complaint or summons and complaint. The procedure shall be the same as if the prosecution were under such single complaint or summons and complaint.

Source: Entire chapter amended June 30, 1988, effective January 1, 1989.

Rule 214. Relief From Prejudicial Joinder

If it appears that a defendant or the prosecution is prejudiced by a joinder of offenses or of defendants in a complaint or summons and complaint or by such joinder for trial together, the court may order an election or separate trials of counts, grant a severance of defendants, or provide whatever other relief justice requires. Upon motion any defendant shall be granted a separate trial as of right if the court finds that the prosecution probably will present against a joint defendant evidence, other than reputation or character testimony, which would not be admissible in a separate trial of the moving defendant, and that such evidence would be prejudicial to those against whom it is not admissible. In ruling on a motion by a defendant for severance, the court may order the prosecutor to deliver to the court for inspection in camera any statements or confessions made by the defendants which the prosecution intends to introduce in evidence at the trial.

Rule 216. Discovery and Inspection

(a) By Defendant. Upon the motion of a defendant or upon the court's own motion at any time after the filing of the complaint or summons and complaint the court may order the prosecution to permit the defendant to inspect and copy or photograph any books, papers, documents, photographs, or tangible objects that are within the prosecution's possession and control, upon a showing that the items sought may be material to the preparation of the defense and that the request is reasonable. The order shall specify the time, place, and manner of making the inspection and of taking the copies or photographs and may prescribe such terms and conditions as are just.

(b) Witness's Statements. At any time after the filing of the complaint or summons and complaint, upon the request of a defendant or upon the order of court, the prosecution shall disclose to the defendant the names and addresses of persons whom the prosecution intends to call as witnesses at the hearing or trial, together with any witness statements.

(c) Irrelevant Matters. If the prosecution claims that any material or statement ordered to be produced under this rule contains matter which does not relate to the subject matter of the witness's testimony, the court shall order it to deliver the statement for the court's inspection in chambers. Upon such delivery the court shall excise the portions of the statement which do not relate to the subject matter of the witness's testimony, then the court shall direct delivery of the statement to the defendant.

(d) Statement Defined. The term ''statement'' as used in sections (b) and (c) of this Rule in relation to any witness who may be called by the prosecution means:

(1) A written statement made by such witness and signed or otherwise adopted or approved by the witness;

(2) A mechanical, electrical, or other recording, or a transcription thereof, which is a recital of an oral statement made by such witness; or

(3) Stenographic or written statements or notes which are in substance recitals of an oral statement made by such witness and which were reduced to writing contemporaneously with the making of such oral statement.

(e) Additional Rules. Municipal courts may make such additional rules for discretionary or mandatory discovery by the defense or by the prosecution as are consistent with these rules and with any applicable law.

ANNOTATION

Request for production of documents held unreasonable and oppressive. Clary v. County Court, 651 P.2d 908 (Colo. App. 1982).

A municipal court has the discretion to order pretrial discovery of the statements of prosecution witnesses to the extent necessary to promote judicial economy and fundamental fairness, even though no such power is granted expressly in the rules. City of Englewood v. Municipal Court, 687 P.2d 521 (Colo. App. 1984).

Rule 217. Subpoena

(a) For Attendance of Witnesses — Form — Issuance. A subpoena shall be issued either by the court or by the clerk of the court or by counsel whose appearance has been entered in the particular case in which the subpoena is sought. It shall state the name of the court and the title, if any, of the proceeding, and shall command each person to whom it is directed to attend and give testimony at the time and place specified therein. The court or clerk shall issue a subpoena signed and sealed but otherwise in blank to a party requesting it, who shall fill in the blanks before it is served.

(b) For Production of Documentary Evidence and of Objects. Upon order of the court which may be issued ex parte, a subpoena may also command the person to whom it is directed to produce the books, papers, documents, photographs, or other objects designated therein. The court on motion made promptly may quash or modify the subpoena if compliance would be unreasonable or oppressive. The court may direct that books, papers, documents, photographs, or objects designated in the subpoena be produced before the court at a time prior to the trial or prior to the time when they are to be offered in evidence and may upon their production permit the books, papers, documents, photographs, or objects or portions thereof to be inspected by the parties and their attorneys.

(c) Service. Unless service is admitted or waived, a subpoena may be served by any peace officer or any other person who is not a party and who is not less than eighteen years of age. Service of a subpoena may be made by delivering a copy thereof to the person named. Service is also valid if the person named has signed a written admission or waiver of personal service.

(d) Contempt. Failure by any person without adequate excuse to obey a subpoena may be deemed a contempt of the court from which the subpoena issued.

Rules 218 to 222. No Colorado Rules

Rule 223. Trial by Jury or by the Court

(a) Trial by Jury. Trial shall be to the court, unless the defendant is entitled to a jury trial under the constitution, ordinance, charter, or general laws of the state, in which case the defendant shall have a jury, if, within 21 days after arraignment or entry of a plea, the defendant files with the court a written jury demand and at the same time tenders to that court a jury fee of $25, unless the fee is waived by the judge because of the indigence of the defendant. If the action is dismissed or the defendant is acquitted of the charge, or if the defendant, having paid the jury fee, files with the court at least 7 days before the scheduled trial date a written waiver of jury trial, the jury fee shall be refunded. A defendant who fails to file with the court the written jury demand as provided above waives the right to a jury trial.

(b) Numbers of Jurors. When a jury trial is granted pursuant to section (a) of this Rule, the jury shall consist of three jurors unless a greater number, not to exceed six, is requested by the defendant in the jury demand.

(c) Trial Without a Jury. In a case tried without a jury, the court shall make a general finding and in addition on request shall make oral findings of fact and conclusions of law.

ANNOTATION

Right to jury trial not abridged by trial forum. The statutory right to a jury trial cannot be abridged on account of the forum in which the petty offense is tried. City of Aurora ex rel. People v. Erwin, 706 F.2d 295 (10th Cir. 1983).

Statutory provision on jury trial governs. Inasmuch as the right to a jury trial in petty offenses is a substantive right granted to all citizens of this state, § 16-10-109(2), governs over section (a) of this rule. Lininger v. City of Sheridan, 648 P.2d 1097 (Colo. App. 1982).

Prerequisites of a written demand and twenty-five dollar fee for a jury trial do not violate defendant's right to a jury trial or deprive him of equal protection of the laws under the federal constitution. Christie v. People, 837 P.2d 1237 (Colo. 1992).

By failing to file a written jury demand and proceeding to a bench trial with counsel, plaintiff knowingly and intelligently waived his right to a jury trial for purposes of federal firearms law. Ward v. Tomsick, 30 P.3d 824 (Colo. App. 2001).

Rule 224. Trial Jurors

(a) Summoning and Selecting Prospective Jurors.

(1) Each municipality shall establish a procedure for summoning and selecting prospective jurors, which procedure shall be calculated to provide the defendant with a fair opportunity for obtaining on the jury a representative cross section of the population of the area served by the court.

(2) For the purposes of this rule, the term ''area served by the court'' means the entire territorial boundaries of the municipality, even if the boundaries encompass portions of more than one county or other political subdivision.

(b) Challenge to the Array. No array or panel of any trial jury shall be quashed, nor shall any verdict in any case be set aside or averted, by reason of the fact that the court or jury commissioner has returned such jury or any of them in any informal or irregular manner, if in the opinion of the court the irregularity is unimportant and insufficient to vitiate the return of such jury. All issues of fact arising on any challenge to the array shall be tried by the court.

(c) Orientation and Examination of Jurors. An orientation and examination shall be conducted to inform prospective jurors about their duties and service and to obtain information about prospective jurors to facilitate an intelligent exercise of challenges for cause and peremptory challenges.

(1) The jury commissioner or court employee in charge of summoning prospective jurors is authorized to examine and, when appropriate, excuse prospective jurors who do not satisfy the statutory qualifications for jury service, or who are entitled to a postponement, or as otherwise authorized by appropriate court order.

(2) When prospective jurors have reported to the courtroom, the judge shall explain to them in plain and clear language:

(I) The grounds for challenge for cause;

(II) Each juror's duty to volunteer information that would constitute a disqualification or give rise to a challenge for cause;

(III) The identities of the parties and their counsel;

(IV) The nature of the case using applicable instructions if available or, alternatively, a joint statement of factual information intended to provide a relevant context for the prospective jurors to respond to questions asked of them. Alternatively, at the request of counsel and in the discretion of the judge, counsel may present such information through brief non-argumentative statements;

(V) General legal principles applicable to the case including presumption of innocence, burden of proof, definition of reasonable doubt, elements of charged offenses and other matters that jurors will be required to consider and apply in deciding issues.

(3) The judge shall ask prospective jurors questions concerning their qualifications to serve as jurors. The court may, in its discretion, allow the parties or their counsel to supplement the court's interrogation by asking additional questions of prospective jurors. In the discretion of the judge, juror questionnaires, poster boards and other methods may be used. In order to minimize delay, the judge may reasonably limit the time available to the parties or their counsel for juror examination. The court may limit or terminate repetitious, irrelevant, unreasonably lengthy, abusive or otherwise improper examination.

(4) Jurors shall not be required to disclose personal locating information, such as address or place of business, in open court and such information shall not be maintained in files open to the public. The trial judge shall assure that parties and counsel have access to appropriate and necessary locating information.

(5) Once the jury is impaneled, the judge shall again explain in more detail the general principles of law applicable to criminal cases, the procedural guidelines regarding conduct by jurors during the trial, case specific legal principles and definitions of technical or special terms expected to be used during presentation of the case.

(d) Challenges for Cause.

(1) Challenges for cause may be taken on one or more of the following grounds:

(I) Absence of any qualification prescribed by statute to render a person competent as a juror except that, for the purpose of this rule, any requirement that a prospective juror be a resident of a the county shall be deemed satisfied if the prospective juror is a resident of the area served by the court as defined in section (a)(2) of this rule;

(II) Relationship within the third degree, by blood, adoption, or marriage, to a defendant or to any attorney of record or attorney engaged in the trial of the case;

(III) Standing in the relation of guardian and ward, employer and employee, landlord and tenant, debtor and creditor, or principal and agent to, or being a member of the household of, or associated in business with, or surety on any bond or obligation for, any defendant;

(IV) The juror is or has been a party adverse to the defendant in a civil action, or has complained against or been accused by the defendant in a criminal prosecution;

(V) The juror has served on any investigatory body which inquired into the facts of the offense charged;

(VI) The juror was a juror at a former trial arising out of the same factual situation or involving the same defendant;

(VII) The juror was a juror in a civil action against the defendant arising out of the act charged as a crime;

(VIII) The juror was a witness to any matter related to the crime or its prosecution;

(IX) The juror occupies a fiduciary relationship to the defendant or a person alleged to have been injured by the crime or the person on whose complaint the prosecution was instituted;

(X) The existence of a state of mind in a juror manifesting a bias for or against the defendant, or for or against the prosecution, or the acknowledgment of a previously formed or expressed opinion regarding the guilt or innocence of the defendant shall be grounds for disqualification of the juror, unless the court is satisfied that the juror will render an impartial verdict based solely upon the evidence and the instructions of the court;

(XI) Repealed.

(XII) The juror is an employee of a public law enforcement agency or public defender's office.

(2) If either party desires to introduce evidence, other than the sworn responses of the prospective juror, for the purpose of establishing grounds to disqualify or challenge the juror for cause, such evidence shall be heard and all issues related thereto shall be determined by the court out of the presence of the other prospective jurors. All matters pertaining to the qualifications and competency of the prospective jurors shall be deemed waived by the parties if not raised prior to the swearing in of the jury to try the case, except that the court for good cause shown or upon a motion for mistrial or other relief may hear such evidence during the trial out of the presence of the jury and enter such orders as are appropriate.

(e) Peremptory Challenges and Manner of Exercise. Unless otherwise ordered by the court, the jury shall be impaneled as follows: The box shall be filled with prospective jurors exceeding by six the number of jurors requested by the defendant pursuant to Rule 223 (b) above. Prospective jurors shall be sworn, voir dire examination conducted, and challenges for cause taken and determined. Jurors excused by virtue of successful challenge for cause shall be replaced and replacements sworn, examined, and subjected to challenge for cause. When there are no remaining jurors subject to challenges for cause, the prosecution and defendant each shall be entitled to three peremptory challenges, all of which must be exercised either orally or by striking names from a list prepared by the court, and to be exercised alternatively by the parties commencing with the prosecution. In any case where there are multiple defendants, each side shall have an additional peremptory challenge for each defendant after the first, but not to exceed ten. The number of jurors called to the box in cases involving multiple defendants shall be consistent with the number of peremptory challenges permitted to be exercised.

(f) Alternate jurors. The court may, on its own motion or on the motion of either the prosecution or defense, direct that not more than one alternate juror be impaneled. Such juror shall have the same qualifications, shall be subject to the same examination and challenges, and shall have the same functions, powers, facilities and privileges as the regular jurors.

(g) Custody of Jury.

(1) The court should only sequester jurors in extraordinary cases. Otherwise, jurors should be permitted to separate during all trial recesses, both before and after the case has been submitted to the jury for deliberation. Cautionary instructions as to their conduct during all recesses shall be given to the jurors by the court.

(2) The jurors shall be in the custody of the bailiff or other person designated by the court whenever that are deliberating and at any other time as ordered by the court.

(3) If the jurors are permitted to separate during any recess of the court, the court shall order them to return at a day and hour appointed by the court for the purpose of continuing the trial, or for resuming their deliberations if the case has been submitted to the jury.

(h) Juror Questions. Jurors shall be allowed to submit written questions to the court for the court to ask of witnesses during trial, in compliance with procedures established by the trial court. The trial court shall have the discretion to prohibit or limit questioning in a particular trial for good cause.

Rule 225. Disability of Judge

If by reason of absence, death, sickness, or other disability, the judge before whom the defendant was tried is unable to perform the duties to be performed by the court after a verdict or finding, any other judge regularly sitting in or assigned to the court may perform those duties. But if the substitute judge is satisfied that those duties cannot be performed because the judge did not preside at the trial, or for any other reason, a new trial may be granted.

Rule 227. Proof of Official Record

An official record or an entry therein or the lack of such a record or entry may be proved in the same manner as in civil actions.

Rule 229. Motion for Acquittal

(a) Motion for Judgment of Acquittal. Motions for directed verdict are abolished and motions for judgment of acquittal shall be used in their place. The court, on motion of a defendant or on its own motion, shall order the entry of judgment of acquittal of one or more offenses charged in the complaint or summons and complaint after the evidence on either side is closed, if the evidence is insufficient to sustain a conviction of such offense or offenses. If a defendant's motion for judgment of acquittal at the close of the prosecution's evidence is not granted, the defendant may offer evidence without having reserved the right. The court may not reserve ruling on a motion for judgment of acquittal made at the close of the prosecution's case.

(b) Reservation of Decision on Motion. If a motion for judgment of acquittal is made at the close of all the evidence, the court may reserve decision on the motion, submit the case to the jury, and decide the motion either before the jury returns a verdict or after it returns a verdict of guilty or is discharged without having returned a verdict.

(c) Motion after Verdict or Discharge of Jury. If the jury returns a verdict of guilty or is discharged without having returned a verdict, a motion for judgment or acquittal may be made or renewed within 14 days after the jury is discharged or within such further time as the court may fix during the 14-day period. If a verdict of guilty is returned, the court may on such motion set aside the verdict and enter judgment of acquittal. If no verdict is returned, the court may enter judgment of acquittal. It shall not be necessary to the making of such a motion that such a similar motion has been made prior to the submission of the case to the jury.

Rule 230. Instructions

The court shall disclose to the parties the instructions which it intends to give to the jury. At the same time, parties may tender instructions in duplicate, one copy of which shall be submitted to the opposite party, who shall make objection thereto if so desired. All instructions to the jury shall be given orally by the judge before argument. If the court is a court of record, a record shall be made of all objections to the proposed instructions of the court, and all instructions tendered by the parties and refused by the court shall be filed with the clerk with the endorsement of the action of the court.

Rule 231. Verdict

(a) Submission and Finding.

(1) Form of Verdict. Before the jury retires the court shall submit to it written forms of verdict for its consideration.

(2) Retirement of Jury. When the jury retires to consider its verdict, the bailiff or other person designated by the court shall be sworn or affirmed to conduct the jury to some private and convenient place, and to the best of that person's ability to keep the jurors together until they have agreed upon a verdict. The bailiff or other person designated by the court shall not speak to any juror about the case except to ask if a verdict has been reached, nor shall that person allow others to speak to the jurors. When they have agreed upon a verdict, which shall be unanimous and signed by the foreman, the bailiff or other person designated by the court shall return the jury into court. In any case in which the jury agrees upon a verdict during a recess or adjournment of court for the day, it shall seal its verdict, which shall be retained by the foreman to be delivered to the judge at the opening of the court, and thereupon the jury may separate to meet in the jury box at the opening of the court. Such a sealed verdict shall be received by the court as the lawful verdict of the jury.

(b) Several Defendants. If there are two or more defendants, the jury, at any time during its deliberations, may return a verdict or verdicts with respect to a defendant or defendants as to whom it has agreed; if the jury cannot agree with respect to all, the defendant or defendants as to whom it does not agree may be tried again.

(c) Poll of Jury. When a verdict is returned and before it is recorded, the jury shall be polled at the request of any party or upon the court's own motion. If upon the poll there is not unanimous concurrence, the jury may be directed to retire for further deliberations or may be discharged.

Rule 232. Sentence and Judgment

(a) Sentence. Sentence shall be imposed without unreasonable delay. Pending sentence, the court may commit the defendant or may continue or alter the bail. Before imposing sentence the court may direct a pre- sentence investigation by a probation officer and a report filed thereby. The court shall, before imposing sentence, afford the defendant an opportunity to make a statement and to present any information in mitigation of punishment. The prosecution shall be given an opportunity to be heard on any matter material to the imposition of sentence.

(b) Judgment. A judgment of conviction shall consist of a recital of the plea, the verdict or findings, the sentence, and costs if any are awarded against the defendant. If the defendant is found not guilty or for any other reason is entitled to be discharged, judgment shall be entered accordingly.

(c) Costs. When a judgment for costs is entered in the docket provided for in Rule 255, execution may be had thereon as in civil actions.

(d) Withdrawal of Plea of Guilty. A motion to withdraw a plea of guilty or of nolo contendere may be made only before sentence is imposed.

(e) Probation. After conviction of an offense, the defendant may be placed on probation as provided by law.

(f) Compliance with the Compact for the Supervision of Adult Offenders. Any sentence imposed shall comply with the Compact for the Supervision of Adult Offenders, found at sections 24-60-2801 et seq., C.R.S., as may be amended in the future.

ANNOTATION

Grant of allocution mandatory. This rule, granting defendant the right of allocution before imposition of sentence, is mandatory and should be granted in every case. Erickson v. City & County of Denver, 179 Colo. 412, 500 P.2d 1183 (1972).

Rules 233 and 234. No Colorado Rules

Rule 235. Correction or Vacation of Sentence

(a) Correction of Illegal Sentence. The court may correct an illegal sentence at any time and may correct a sentence imposed in an illegal manner within the time provided herein for the reduction of sentence.

(b) Reduction of Sentence. The court may reduce the sentence provided that a motion for reduction of sentence is filed (1) within 91 days (13 weeks) after the sentence is imposed, or (2) within 91 days (13 weeks) after receipt by the court of a remittitur issued upon affirmance of the judgment or sentence or dismissal of the appeal, or (3) within 91 days (13 weeks) after entry of any order or judgment of the appellate court denying review or having the effect of upholding a judgment of conviction or sentence. The court may, after considering the motion and supporting documents, if any, deny the motion without a hearing. The court may reduce a sentence on its own initiative within any of the above periods of time.

(c) Other Remedies. A person convicted of a municipal ordinance violation may move the court for post-conviction review on the grounds that said conviction was obtained or sentenced imposed in violation of the constitution or laws of the United States, or of the constitution or laws of this state, or of the municipality's charter or ordinance. Said motion shall be made within six months after the date of conviction unless the applicant can show good cause for the delay.

ANNOTATION

A sentence imposed after the municipal court's acceptance of a constitutionally infirm guilty plea is an illegal sentence and the court had authority under this rule to permit the defendant to withdraw his guilty plea even though sentencing had already taken place. Mulkey v. Sullivan, 753 P.2d 1226 (Colo. 1988).

Rule 236. Clerical Mistakes

Clerical mistakes in judgments, orders, or other parts of the record and errors in the record arising from oversight or omission may be corrected by the court at any time and after such notice, if any, as the court orders.

Rule 237. Appeals

(a) Appeals From Courts Not of Record. Appeals from courts not of record shall be in accordance with sections 13-10-116 to 13-10-125, C.R.S. Rulings on motions in such courts are not appealable.

(b) Appeals From Courts of Record. Appeals from courts of record shall be in accordance with Rule 37 of the Colorado Rules of Criminal Procedure.

Source: Entire chapter amended June 30, 1988, effective January 1, 1989.

ANNOTATION

Because appellant's conviction originated in a municipal court of record, appellant had 30 days following the judgment of conviction to file the notice of appeal pursuant to § 13-10-116, this rule, and Crim. P. 37. Normandin v. Town of Parachute, 91 P.3d 383 (Colo. 2004).

Transcript of all relevant evidence must be included in record on appeal. Where an appellant challenges a ruling that was based, either in whole or in part, on evidence presented to the lower court, a transcript of all evidence pertaining to the decision must be included in the record; however, the appellant is not required to include a transcript of evidence that is not relevant to the issues raised on appeal. Holcomb v. City & County of Denver, 199 Colo. 251, 606 P.2d 858 (1980).

Rules 238 to 240. No Colorado Rules

Rule 241. Search and Seizure

(a) Authority to Issue Warrant. A judge of any court shall have power to issue a search warrant under this Rule only when:

(1) It relates to a charter or ordinance violation involving a serious threat to public safety or order; and

(2) The violation is not also a violation prohibited by state statute for which a search warrant could be issued by a district or county court.

(b) Grounds for Issuance.

(1) A search warrant may be issued to search for and seize property which is located within the municipality and which:

(I) Is designated or intended for use in committing a charter or ordinance violation;

(II) Has been used as a means of committing a charter or ordinance violation; or

(III) The possession of which is prohibited by charter or ordinance.

(2) A search warrant may be issued for the inspection of private premises by an authorized public inspector upon showing that:

(I) The premises are located within the municipality;

(II) The inspection is required or authorized by charter or ordinance in the interest of public safety; and

(III) The owner or occupant of such private premises has refused entry to the public inspector, or the premises are locked and the public inspector has been unable to obtain permission of the owner or occupant to enter. This rule shall not be construed to require the issuance of a warrant for emergency inspections, or in any other case where warrants are not presently required by law.

(c) Issuance and Contents. A search warrant shall issue only on affidavit sworn to or affirmed before the judge and establishing the grounds for issuing the warrant. If the judge is satisfied that grounds for the application exist, or that there is probable cause to believe that they exist, the judge shall issue a search warrant identifying the property and naming or describing the person or place to be searched. The search warrant shall be directed to any officer authorized by law to execute it in the municipality wherein the property is located. It shall state the grounds or probable cause for its issuance and the names of the persons whose affidavits have been taken in support thereof. It shall command the officer to search forthwith the person or place named for any property specified. The search warrant shall direct that it be served in the daytime, but if the affidavits are positive that the property is on the person or in the place to be searched, the warrant may direct that it be served at any time. It shall designate the judge to whom it shall be returned.

(d) Execution and Return With Inventory. The search warrant may be executed and returned only within 14 days after its date. The officer taking property under the warrant shall give to the person from whom or from whose premises the property was taken a copy of the warrant and receipt for any property taken or shall leave the copy and receipt at the place from which the property was taken. The return shall be made promptly and shall be accompanied by a written inventory of any property taken. The inventory shall be made in the presence of the applicant for the warrant and the person from whose possession or premises the property was taken, if they are present, or in the presence of at least one credible person other than the applicant for the warrant for the person from whose possession or premises the property was taken, and shall be verified by the officer. The judge upon request shall deliver a copy of the inventory to the person from whom or from whose premises the property was taken and to the applicant for the warrant.

(e) Motion for Return of Property and to Suppress Evidence. A person aggrieved by unlawful search and seizure may move the municipal court for the municipality where property was seized for the return of the property and to suppress for use as evidence anything so obtained on the ground that:

(1) The property was illegally seized without warrant;

(2) The warrant is insufficient on its face;

(3) The property seized is not that described in the warrant;

(4) There was not probable cause for believing the existence of the grounds on which the warrant was issued;

(5) The warrant was illegally executed.

The judge shall receive evidence on any issue of fact necessary to the decision of the motion. If the motion is granted the property shall be restored unless otherwise subject to lawful detention, and it shall not be admissible in evidence at any hearing or trial. The motion to suppress evidence may also be made in the court where the trial is to be had. The motion shall be made before trial or hearing unless opportunity therefor did not exist or the defendant was not aware of the grounds for the motion, but the court in its discretion may entertain the motion at the trial or hearing.

(f) Scope and Definition. This Rule does not modify any statute inconsistent with it regulating search, seizure, and the issuance and execution of search warrants in circumstances for which special provision is made.

Rules 242 and 243. No Colorado Rules

Rule 244. Assignment of Counsel

(a) If the defendant appears in court without counsel, the court shall advise the defendant of the right to retain counsel. In an appropriate case, if, upon the defendant's affidavit or sworn testimony and other investigation, the court finds that the defendant is financially unable to obtain counsel, an attorney shall be assigned to represent the defendant at every stage of the trial court proceedings. In any case in which counsel must be appointed, the court may appoint law students who shall act under the provisions of C.R.C.P. 226. No lawyer need be appointed for a defendant who, after being advised, with full knowledge of the right to counsel, elects to proceed without counsel.

(b) Whenever two or more defendants have been jointly charged pursuant to Rule 208(b) or have been joined for trial pursuant to Rule 213, and are represented by the same retained or assigned counsel or by retained or assigned counsel who are associated in the practice of law, the court shall promptly inquire with respect to such joint representation and shall personally advise each defendant of the right to the effective assistance of counsel, including separate representation. Unless it appears that there is good cause to believe no conflict of interest is likely to arise, the court shall take such measures as may be appropriate to protect each defendant's right to counsel.

Rule 245. Time

(a) Computation. In computing any period of time, prescribed or allowed by these rules, the day of the event from which the designated period of time begins to run is not to be included. Thereafter, every day shall be counted including holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays. The last day of the period so computed is to be included, unless it is a Saturday, a Sunday, or a legal holiday, in which event the period runs until the end of the next day which is not a Saturday, a Sunday, or a legal holiday. The ''next day'' is determined by continuing to count forward when the period is measured after an event and backward when measured before an event. As used in these Rules, ''legal holiday'' includes the first day of January, observed as New Year's Day; the third Monday in January, observed as Martin Luther King Day; the third Monday in February, observed as Washington-Lincoln Day; the last Monday in May, observed as Memorial Day; the fourth day of July, observed as Independence Day; the first Monday in September, observed as Labor Day; the second Monday in October, observed as Columbus Day; the 11th day of November, observed as Veteran's Day; the fourth Thursday in November, observed as Thanksgiving Day; the twenty-fifth day of December, observed as Christmas Day, and any other day except Saturday or Sunday when the court is closed.

(b) Enlargement. When an act is required or allowed to be performed at or within a specified time, the court for cause shown may at any time in its discretion:

(1) Upon motion, with or without notice, order the period enlarged if application therefor is made before expiration of the period originally prescribed or of that period as extended by a previous order; or

(2) Upon motion permit the act to be done after expiration of the specified period if the failure to act on time was the result of excusable neglect.

(c) Repealed.

(d) For Motions — Affidavits. A written motion, other than one which may be heard ex parte, and notice of the hearing thereon, shall be served not later than 7 days before the time specified for the hearing, unless a different period is fixed by rule or order of court. For cause shown, such an order may be made on ex parte application. When a motion is supported by affidavit, the affidavit shall be served with the motion, and opposing affidavits may be served not less than one day before the hearing, unless otherwise ordered by the court.

(e) Repealed.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, ''Rule of Seven' for Trial Lawyers: Calculating Litigation Deadlines'', see 41 Colo. Law. 33 (Jan. 2012).

Rule 246. Bail

(a) Right to Bail. All persons shall be bailable by sufficient sureties as provided in the constitution of the state of Colorado, in this Rule, and in local rules not inconsistent therewith.

(1) Before Conviction. If a judge is not immediately available for purposes of admission to bail of persons arrested and brought to the court or jail on charges of committing a municipal charter or ordinance violation, such persons may be admitted to bail, pursuant to court rule, by the clerk or other responsible and appropriate officer designated by the court. The court shall provide by rule for the conditions and circumstances under which such admission to bail will be granted pending appearance before the judge. The primary condition of the bail bond, and the only condition for a breach of which a surety or security on the bond may be subjected to forfeiture, is that the released person appear to answer the charged at a place and upon a date certain and at any place or upon any date to which the proceeding may be transferred or continued. In addition to the primary condition, the court may impose reasonable additional conditions upon the conduct of the defendant. Bail so required may be, at the election of the accused, in the form of cash, security, real property, tangible or intangible personal property, an acceptable corporate surety bond, or adequate or acceptable private sureties. In cases when so permitted under the Rules promulgated pursuant to this section (a), bail may be upon personal recognizance without security or surety.

(2) After Conviction. Bail may be allowed in arrest of judgment or during any stay of execution or pending appeal or review by a higher court, unless it appears the review is sought on frivolous grounds or is taken for delay. Pending appeal or review by the Supreme Court, bail may be allowed by the municipal court, the appellate judge, or by the Supreme Court or a justice thereof. Any court or any judge or justice granting bail may at any time alter or revoke the order admitting the defendant to bail.

(b) Amount. A defendant shall be admitted to bail in an amount which in the judgment of the court, judge, or justice will insure the defendant's presence. If fine and costs have been imposed, a deposit in the amount thereof or the posting of a bond for the payment thereof may be required by the trial court.

(c) Form and Place of Deposit. A person permitted to give bail shall execute a bond to appear in court on a designated day, or on the first day of the next term of court, and from day to day thereafter, as the court may deem appropriate. One or more sureties may be required or the defendant may furnish cash security or, in the discretion of the court, no security or surety need be required. If bond is made in a place other than the clerk's office, the bond shall be transferred to and deposited in the clerk's office.

(1) Declaration. If there is a breach of condition of a bond, the court shall declare a forfeiture of the bail.

(2) Setting Aside. The court may direct that a forfeiture be set aside, upon such conditions as the court may impose, if it appears that justice does not require the enforcement of the forfeiture.

(3) Enforcement When Forfeiture Not Set Aside. By entering into a bond each obligor, whether the principal or a surety, submits to the jurisdiction of the court. Liability under the bond may be enforced, without the necessity of an independent action, as follows: The court shall order the issuance of a citation directed to the obligor to show cause, if any there be, why judgment should not be entered forthwith and execution issue thereon. Said citation shall issue promptly may be served personally or by first class mail upon the obligor directed to the addresses given in the bond. Hearing on the citation shall be held not less than 21 days after service. The defendant and the prosecution shall be given notice of the hearing. At the conclusion of the hearing, the court may enter a judgment against the obligor, and execution shall issue thereon as on other judgments.

(4) Remission. After entry of such judgment, the court may remit it in whole or in part under the conditions applying to the setting aside of forfeiture in paragraph (2) of this section (d). If a bond forfeiture has been paid into the general fund of the municipality, the appropriate city or town official shall be notified of the order for remission.

(5) Meaning of "Court". Wherever used in section (d) the word ''court'' means a court in which a principal has undertaken by bond to appear.

(e) Exoneration. The obligor shall be exonerated as follows:

(1) When the condition of the bond has been satisfied;

(2) When the amount of the forfeiture has been paid; or

(3) Upon surrender of the defendant into custody before judgment upon an order to show cause and upon payment of all costs occasioned thereby. A surety may seize and surrender the defendant to a peace officer within the municipality wherein the bond shall be taken, and it is the duty of such peace officer, on such surrender and delivery of a certified copy of the bond by which the surety is bound, to take such person into custody, and to acknowledge such surrender in writing.

(f) Continuation of Bonds. In the discretion of the court and with the consent of the surety or sureties, the same bond may be continued until the final disposition of the case in the court or pending disposition of the case on appeal or review.

Rule 248. Dismissal

(a) By the Prosecution. No case pending in any court shall be dismissed or a nolle prosequi therein entered by the prosecution, unless upon a motion in open court and with the court's consent and approval. Such a motion shall be supported by a statement concisely stating the reasons for the action. Such a dismissal may not be entered during the trial without the defendant's consent.

(b) By the Court. If there is unnecessary delay in the trial of a defendant, the court may dismiss the case. If the trial of a defendant is delayed more than 91 days (13 weeks) after the arraignment of the defendant, or unless the delay is occasioned by the action or request of the defendant, the court shall dismiss the case and the defendant shall not thereafter be tried for the same offense; except that if on the day of a trial set within the last 7 days of the above time limit a necessity for a continuance arises which the court in the exercise of sound judicial discretion determines would warrant an additional delay, then one continuance, not exceeding 28 days, may be allowed, after which the dismissal shall be entered as above provided if trial is not held within the additional time allowed.

Source: Entire chapter amended June 30, 1988, effective January 1, 1989; (b) amended and adopted December 14, 2011, effective January 1, 2012, for all cases pending on or filed on or after January 1, 2012, pursuant to C.R.C.P. 1(b).

ANNOTATION

Mandatory limit to initiate prosecution. ''Unnecessary delay'' in section (b) does not merely codify the defendant's basic constitutional right to a speedy trial, since the reference to 90 days, rather than being a guideline for the court's discretion, is a mandatory limit. Bachicha v. Municipal Court, 41 Colo. App. 198, 581 P.2d 746 (1978).

Delay caused by defendant. The defendant may not whipsaw the court between its obligation to protect his right of confrontation and his right to a speedy trial. When, as a result of defendant's actions, the court cannot determine whether he has waived his right to be present at trial, it is clear that defendant has delayed proceedings within the meaning of this rule.

Crandall v. Municipal Court ex rel. City of Sterling, 650 P.2d 1324 (Colo. App. 1982).

Where defendant requested a pretrial conference for the purpose of achieving a disposition of his case without going to trial, and agreed to the terms of the disposition, defendant could not complain of the delay occasioned by his unsuccessful efforts to meet the conditions for disposition. Alley v. Kal, 44 Colo. App. 561, 616 P.2d 191 (1980).

Right to speedy trial under this rule violated where defendant is not brought to trial in county court within 90 days of filing of appeal requesting a trial de novo. Rainwater v. County Court, 43 Colo. App. 477, 604 P.2d 1195 (1979).

The computation of the speedy trial period begins from the entry of the last not-guilty plea. People of City of Aurora v. Allen, 885 P.2d 207 (Colo. 1994).

If the charges brought against the defendant are dismissed without prejudice, they become a nullity. Dismissal of all the charges is a final judgment on the case. If and when the defendant is arraigned under a subsequent information, the speedy trial period begins anew, even if the charges are identical. People of City of Aurora v. Allen, 885 P.2d 207 (Colo. 1994).

Speedy trial is tolled while an appeal is pending. People of City of Aurora v. Allen, 885 P.2d 207 (Colo. 1994).

When a trial court continues a case due to docket congestion, but makes a reasonable effort to reschedule within the speedy trial period, and defense counsel's scheduling conflict does not permit a new date within the speedy trial deadline, the resulting delay is attributable to defendant. The period of delay is excludable from time calculations for purposes of the applicable speedy trial provision. Hills v. Westminster Mun. Court, 245 P.3d 947 (Colo. 2011).

Rule 249. Service and Filing of Papers

(a) Service — When Required. Written motions other than those which are heard ex parte, written notices, and similar papers shall be served upon the adverse parties.

(b) Service — How Made. Whenever under these rules, or by court order, service is required or permitted to be made upon a party represented by an attorney, the service shall be made upon the attorney unless service upon the party himself is ordered by the court. Service upon the attorney or upon a party shall be made in the manner provided for civil actions unless otherwise ordered by the court.

(c) Notice of Orders. Immediately upon entry of any order made out of the presence of the parties and after the complaint or summons and complaint is filed, the clerk shall mail to each party affected a notice of the order and shall note the mailing in the docket.

Rule 251. Exceptions Unnecessary

Exceptions to rulings or orders of the court are unnecessary. For all purposes for which an exception has heretofore been necessary, it is sufficient that a party, at the time the court ruling or order is made or sought, makes known to the court the court action sought or the objection to the court's action and the grounds therefor. But if a party has no opportunity to object to a ruling or order, the absence of an objection does not thereafter prejudice that party.

Rule 252. Harmless Error and Plain Error

(a) Harmless Error. Any error, defect, irregularity, or variance which does not affect substantial rights shall be disregarded.

(b) Plain Error. Plain errors or defects affecting substantial rights may be noticed, although they were not brought to the attention of the court.

Rule 253. Regulation of Conduct in Courtroom

Conduct in the courtroom pertaining to the publication of judicial proceedings shall conform to Canon 3 of the Code of Judicial Conduct, as adopted by the supreme court of Colorado.

Rule 255. Records

(a) Docket. The court or clerk thereof shall keep a record known as the court docket and shall enter thereon each action to which these rules are applicable. Said docket shall be appropriately indexed so that all entries may be readily located.

(b) Transcript. A transcript of record in each traffic case wherein the defendant was convicted, as the word ''convicted'' is used in all statutes and ordinances applicable to the municipal court, shall, upon conclusion of the case, be promptly forwarded to the motor vehicle division of the state department of revenue.

Rule 256. Terms of Court

The presiding judge shall designated, by rule or order, regular times when the court shall be open for the transaction of court matters, for the purpose of filing any proper papers, of issuing and returning process, and of making of motions and orders.

Rule 257. Rules of Court

All municipal court local rules, including local municipal procedures and standing orders having the effect of municipal court local rules, enacted before February 1, 1992, are hereby repealed. Each municipal court, by a majority of its judges, may from time to time propose municipal court local rules and amendments of municipal court local rules. Proposed rules and amendments shall not be inconsistent with the Colorado Rules of Municipal Court Procedure or with any directive of the Supreme Court regarding the conduct of formal judicial proceedings in municipal courts. A proposed local rule or amendment shall not be effective until it is approved by the Supreme Court. To obtain approval, three copies of any proposed local rule or amendment shall be submitted to the Supreme Court through the office of the State Court Administrator. Reasonable uniformity of municipal court local rules is required. Numbering and format of any municipal court local rule shall be as prescribed by the Supreme Court. Numbering and format requirements are on file at the office of the State Court Administrator. The Supreme Court's approval of a municipal court local rule or local procedure shall not preclude review of that rule or procedure under the law or circumstances of a particular case. Nothing in this rule is intended to affect the authority of a municipal court to adopt internal administrative procedures not relating to the conduct of formal judicial proceedings as prescribed by the Colorado Rules of Municipal Court Procedure.

ANNOTATION

Effect of failure to submit proposed rules to supreme court. The fact that a municipal court had not submitted a proposed rule dealing with amendments to a ''summons and complaint'' to the Colorado supreme court pursuant to section (a) did not mean that the municipal court was without authority to permit amendments. Paukovich v. County Court, 44 Colo. App. 208, 615 P.2d 54 (1980).

Absent rules, power to be exercised in court's discretion. The absence of procedural rules as to the exercise of power to permit the consolidation of charges, to permit amendments thereto, or to permit the charging party to withdraw any one or more of the charges made, does not destroy the power, but merely indicates that the manner of its exercise rests in the sound discretion of the court. Paukovich v. County Court, 44 Colo. App. 208, 615 P.2d 54 (1980).

The power to permit the consolidation of charges, to permit amendments thereto, or to permit the charging party to withdraw any one or more of the charges made need not be expressly granted as each is inherently a part of the power to receive and hear such charges. Paukovich v. County Court, 44 Colo. App. 208, 615 P.2d 54 (1980).

Rule 259. Effective Date

These Rules take effect on January 1, 1989. Amendments take effect on the date indicated. They govern all proceedings in municipal charter and ordinance violations brought after they take effect and also in all further proceedings in actions then pending.

APPLICABILITY OF RULES

1. These rules of appellate procedure are intended to embrace appeals of both criminal and civil matters. The appeal replaces the writ of error.

2. Rules 1 through 48, except where specifically noted otherwise, apply to appeals to either the supreme court or to the court of appeals. Whenever ''appellate court'' is used it refers to either court. Whenever in these rules the supreme court or court of appeals is referred to specifically the rule shall apply to procedure in that court and no other, e.g., C.A.R. 4.1.

3. As near as practicable these rules are patterned on the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure for the United States Courts of Appeal as of July 1, 1968. However, several of the rules peculiarly apply to procedure in the state practice.

4. Procedure for invoking original jurisdiction of and for remedial writs in the supreme court are embraced in Rule 21 and 21.1. Certiorari proceedings to the supreme court from the court of appeals or from the district court when applicable are embraced in Rules 49 through 57.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, ''Colorado Appellate Rule Changes: A Commentary'', see 12 Colo. Law. 1927 (1983).

Colorado appellate rules are patterned directly on the federal rules of appellate procedure. Almarez v. Carpenter, 347 F. Supp. 597 (D. Colo. 1972).

Rule-making authority of supreme court. The supreme court has authority to adopt rules for the regulation of the business of the courts and the procedure to be followed by litigants in doing that business. Nonetheless, absent constitutional authority, the supreme court cannot adopt a rule which changes jurisdiction of a court contrary to a provision of a statute. Bill Dreiling Motor Co. v. Court of Appeals, 171 Colo. 448, 468 P.2d 37 (1970).

Appellate rules do not apply when appealing a county court judgment to a district court. While the case may be an appeal from the county court, the district court is not an appellate court. Mercantile Adjustment Bureau v. Flood, 2012 CO 38, 278 P.3d 348.

Rule 1. Scope of Rules

(a) Matters Reviewable. An appeal to the appellate court may be taken from:

(1) A final judgment of any district, probate, or juvenile court in all actions or special proceedings whether governed by these rules or by the statutes;

(2) A judgment and decree, or any portion thereof, in a proceeding concerning water rights; and an order refusing, granting, modifying, cancelling, affirming or continuing in whole or in part a conditional water right, or a determination that reasonable diligence or progress has or has not been shown in an enterprise granted a conditional water right;

(3) An order granting or denying a temporary injunction;

(4) An order appointing or denying the appointment of, or sustaining or overruling a motion to discharge, a receiver.

(b) Limitation on Taking Appeals. The taking of appeals shall be in accordance with these rules except for special proceedings in which a different time period is set by statute for the taking of an appeal.

(c) Appeal Substitute for Writs of Error. Matters designated by statute to be reviewable by writ of error shall be reviewed on appeal as herein provided.

(d) Ground for Reversal, etc. Briefs filed pursuant to C.A.R. 28(a) shall state clearly and briefly the grounds upon which the party relies in seeking a reversal or modification of the judgment or the correction of adverse findings, orders, or rulings of the trial court. The party will be limited to the grounds so stated although the court may in its discretion notice any error appearing of record. When an appeal has been taken, it shall not be dismissed upon motion of an appellant without notice to all interested parties whose appearances have been entered in the appellate court, and order of the court permitting such dismissal; if dismissal is objected to by any such interested party, the party may, in the court's discretion, seek reversal, modification, or correction of the judgment.

(e) Review of Water Matters. The notice of appeal (see C.A.R. 4) for review of the whole or any part of a judgment and decree or order as defined in subsection (a)(2) of this Rule shall designate as appellant the party or parties filing the notice of appeal and as appellee all other parties whose rights may be affected by the appeal and who in the trial court entered an appearance, by application, protest, or in any other authorized manner. If not an appellant, the division engineer shall be an appellee; provided that upon application, a dismissal may be entered as to the division engineer in the absence of objection made by any party to the appeal within 14 days from the mailing to such party of such application. The notice of appeal shall describe the water rights with sufficient particularity to apprise each appellee of the issues sought to be reviewed. The notice of appeal shall otherwise comply with the requirements of C.A.R. 3(d).

ANNOTATION

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Law reviews. For article, ''Necessity for Writs of Error and Motions for New Trial for a Review in Colorado'', see 2 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 99 (1930). For article, ''The Grounds for Reversal of Criminal Cases in Colorado, 1864 to 1948'', see 22 Rocky Mtn. L. Rev. 117 (1950). For note, ''Colorado Appellate Procedure'', see 40 U. Colo. L. Rev 551 (1968). For article, ''Preserving Issues for Appeal'', discussing the requirement of an offer of proof, see 20 Colo. Law. 879 (1991). For article, ''Perfecting Appeals to the Colorado Court of Appeals'', see 21 Colo. Law. 2385 (1992). For article, ''There is Still a Chance: Raising Unpreserved Arguments on Appeal'', see 42 Colo. Law. 29 (June 2013).

Appeal is a matter of right. Monti v. Bishop, 3 Colo. 605 (1877); Hull v. Denver Tramway Corp., 97 Colo. 523, 50 P.2d 791 (1935); Wheeler Kelly Hagny Trust Co. v. Williamson, 111 Colo. 515, 143 P.2d 685 (1943).

Appeal is adequate remedy to judgment of trial court. If, by any judgment entered by a trial court, the parties feel aggrieved, their remedy by appeal is speedy and altogether adequate for the protection of their rights, and there is no occasion for invoking the original jurisdiction of the supreme court. Prinster v. District Court, 137 Colo. 393, 325 P.2d 938 (1958).

Original proceeding may not be substituted for appeal. C.A.R. 21 concerning original proceedings may not be utilized to avoid the requirements of finality of judgments and orders set forth in this rule. Groendyke Transp., Inc. v. District Court, 140 Colo. 190, 343 P.2d 535 (1959).

Original proceedings in the supreme court may not be used as a substitute for appeal. Douglas v. Municipal Court, 151 Colo. 358, 377 P.2d 738 (1963); DeLong v. District Court, 151 Colo. 364, 377 P.2d 737 (1963).

Nor may writ of habeas corpus. Habeas corpus will not lie where an appeal is adequate and may not be used as a substitute for appeal.

Nickle v. Reeder, 144 Colo. 593, 357 P.2d 921 (1960); Medberry v. Patterson, 142 Colo. 180, 350 P.2d 571 (1960), cert. denied, 368 U.S. 839, 82 S. Ct. 59, 7 L. Ed. 2d 39 (1961).

A party seeking only to affirm a lower court so that its holding may be used as precedent in other cases has not presented adequate grounds for an appeal, because the party is not seeking the reversal, modification, or correction of the holding as required under section (d). Broomfield v. Farmers Reservoir & Irrigation Co., 235 P.3d 296 (Colo. 2010).

Appellant must be party or aggrieved by lower court's decision. One of two tests must be met before a party may prosecute an appeal to the supreme court. He must either be a party to the action or he must be a person substantially aggrieved by the disposition of the case in the lower court. Tower v. Tower, 147 Colo. 480, 364 P.2d 565 (1961).

Only parties aggrieved may appeal. The word aggrieved refers to a substantial grievance, the denial to the party of some claim of right, either of property or of person, or the imposition upon him of some burden or obligation. Miller v. Reeder, 157 Colo. 134, 401 P.2d 604 (1965).

Guarantors of a surety company on a criminal recognizance, who are permitted to intervene in the trial court, and who are the only persons who would suffer loss from a forfeiture, are parties to the record and entitled to seek a review in the supreme court by appeal. Allison v. People, 132 Colo. 156, 286 P.2d 1102 (1955).

The attorney is properly before the supreme court on a motion for fees because he is a party substantially aggrieved by the disposition in the trial court. Equity demands that he be treated as an intervenor and he was so considered by the trial court and the parties because his motion for fees was on behalf of himself and not for the wife. Tower v. Tower, 147 Colo. 480, 364 P.2d 565 (1961).

Else appellant lacks standing. Where appellants are not proper parties in an action, they have no standing in the court of appeals to question the validity of a judgment. Duke v. Pickett, 30 Colo. App. 438, 494 P.2d 120 (1972).

Standing, for purposes of an appeal, means that a party must have alleged an injury in fact and that injury must be to a legally protected or cognizable interest. The right to appeal of a matter of law follows the property interest. City of Aspen v. Artes-Roy, 855 P.2d 22 (Colo. App. 1993).

Due process not denied by limitation on filing appeals. Prejudicial irregularity in a trial court proceeding must be asserted by an appeal, and where a party sues out an appeal to review a judgment, and thereafter dismisses the same and because of the lapse of time may not again apply for an appeal, due process of law is not denied. Davidson Chevrolet, Inc. v. City & County of Denver, 138 Colo. 171, 330 P.2d 1116 (1958), cert. denied, 359 U.S. 926, 79 S. Ct. 609, 3 L. Ed. 2d 629 (1959).

Time limitations are procedural. Limitations of time within which an appeal may be brought is procedural and may be fixed by the supreme court. Sitler v. Brians, 126 Colo. 370, 251 P.2d 319 (1952).

Motion for a new trial is a prerequisite to review on appeal in cases involving questions of law only as well as in cases involving questions of fact. Colo. State Bd. of Exam'rs of Architects v. Marshall, 136 Colo. 200, 315 P.2d 198 (1957).

It is mandatory upon the party claiming error to move the trial court for a new trial, unless an order dispensing with same is entered. Security Bldg. Co. v. Lewis, 127 Colo. 139, 255 P.2d 405 (1953).

This applies to temporary injunctions. Sections (b) and (f) of C.R.C.P. 59, requiring a motion for a new trial or an order dispensing therewith, apply to appeals brought to determine validity of orders granting or denying temporary injunctions under this rule. Minshall v. Pettit, 151 Colo. 501, 379 P.2d 394 (1963); CF&I Steel, L.P. v. United Steel Workers of Am., 990 P.2d 1124 (Colo. App. 1999), aff'd on other grounds, 23 P.3d 1197 (Colo. 2001).

Failure to move for new trial requires dismissal of appeal. Where no motion for new trial was filed, and no order dispensing with such filing was entered, the requirements of this rule were not complied with, and the appeal is accordingly dismissed. People ex rel. Dunbar v. South Platt Water Conservancy Dist., 139 Colo. 503, 343 P.2d 812 (1959).

In an action on a promissory note where judgment notwithstanding the verdict was entered for plaintiff, and defendant failed to file a motion for a new trial, and the necessity for such a motion was not dispensed with pursuant to C.R.C.P. 59(f), an appeal to review such judgment will be dismissed. Boyd v. Adjustment Bureau, Inc., 148 Colo. 233, 365 P.2d 813 (1961).

As does insufficient motion for new trial. This rule presupposes that a motion for a new trial be filed with the trial court, and an appeal was dismissed where the motion which was filed was couched in such broad and general language that it informed the court that appellants were dissatisfied with the judgment, as if no motion for new trial was ever filed. Martin v. Opdyke Agency, Inc., 156 Colo. 316, 398 P.2d 971 (1965).

Substantial noncompliance with procedure requires dismissal. Where the rules relating to procedure on appeal in the supreme court are ignored or disregarded in substantial particulars, an appeal will be dismissed. Farrell v. Bashor, 140 Colo. 408, 344 P.2d 692 (1959).

But strict compliance not necessary where status of children at stake. While a motion may fail to comply strictly with the requirements of C.R.C.P. 59, when the status of minor children is at stake, a court of appeals will notice error in the trial court proceedings, and remand for findings. In re Brown, 626 P.2d 755 (Colo. App. 1981).

Supreme court may dismiss an appeal on its own motion where there is no jurisdiction to review the case. Unzicker v. Unzicker, 74 Colo. 211, 220 P. 495 (1923); Diebold v. Diebold, 74 Colo. 557, 223 P. 46 (1924).

Jurisdiction of district court while appeal pending. Once a case is in the supreme court on appeal, a trial court is without jurisdiction to vacate its judgment or enter another or different judgment. Davidson Chevrolet, Inc. v. City & County of Denver, 138 Colo. 171, 330 P.2d 1116 (1958), cert. denied, 359 U.S. 926, 79 S. Ct. 609, 3 L. Ed. 2d 629 (1959).

Appellate court must not, upon review, sit as thirteenth juror and set aside a verdict because it might have drawn different conclusion from all evidence. People v. Vigil, 180 Colo. 104, 502 P.2d 418 (1972).

If sentences imposed are within statutory bounds, and if they do not shock the conscience of the court, they will not be disturbed on the grounds that they constitute cruel and unusual punishment. Trujillo v. People, 178 Colo. 136, 496 P.2d 1026 (1972).

Transfer to court of appeals does not violate rule. Section 13-4-110(2), providing that cases within the jurisdiction of the court of appeals may be transferred from the supreme court, is not void and the statutory procedure is not contrary to this rule. Bill Dreiling Motor Co. v. Court of Appeals, 171 Colo. 448, 468 P.2d 37 (1970).

There is a recognized distinction between "proceedings" and "special proceedings". Hewitt v. Landis, 75 Colo. 277, 225 P. 842 (1924); Silter v. Brians, 126 Colo. 370, 251 P.2d 319 (1952).

Applied in Graham v. Swift, 123 Colo. 309, 228 P.2d 969 (1951); Hart v. Herzig, 131 Colo. 458, 283 P.2d 177 (1955); Cline v. McDowell, 132 Colo. 37, 284 P.2d 1056 (1955); Addressograph-Multigraph Corp. v. Kelly, 146 Colo. 550, 362 P.2d 184 (1961); Schwab v. Martin, 165 Colo. 547, 441 P.2d 17 (1968); Reed v. Reed, 29 Colo. App. 199, 481 P.2d 125 (1971); People v. Morris, 190 Colo. 215, 545 P.2d 151 (1976); In re Gardella, 190 Colo. 402, 547 P.2d 928 (1976); Sanderson v. District Court, 190 Colo. 431, 548 P.2d 921 (1976); Bd. of Water Works v. Pueblo Water Works Employees Local 1045, 196 Colo. 308, 586 P.2d 18 (1978); In re Estate of Dandrea, 40 Colo. App. 547, 577 P.2d 1112 (1978); People v. Rael, 198 Colo. 225, 597 P.2d 584 (1979); Gardner v. State, 200 Colo. 221, 614 P.2d 357 (1980); Abts v. Bd. of Educ., 622 P.2d 518 (Colo. 1980); Ward v. Indus. Comm'n, 44 Colo. App. 301, 612 P.2d 1164 (1980); People in Interest of G.L., 631 P.2d 1118 (Colo. 1981); In re Rominiecki v. McIntyre Livestock Corp., 633 P.2d 1064 (Colo. 1981); Schuster v. Zwicker, 659 P.2d 687 (Colo. 1983); M.E.G. v. R.B.D., 676 P.2d 1250 (Colo. App. 1983).

II. MATTERS REVIEWABLE.

A. In General.

Practice under the former code of civil procedure is analogous to the practice under this rule. Burks v. Maudlin, 109 Colo. 281, 124 P.2d 601 (1942).

Appeals are not allowed for mere purpose of delay, or to present purely abstract legal questions, however important or interesting, but to correct errors injuriously affecting the rights of some party to the litigation. Miller v. Reeder, 157 Colo. 134, 401 P.2d 604 (1965).

Jurisdiction cannot be conferred by act of parties. Jurisdiction of an appeal which otherwise does not exist cannot be conferred by act of the parties. Sons of Am. Bldg. & Inv. Ass'n v. City of Denver, 15 Colo. 592, 25 P. 1091 (1890); Bd. of Comm'rs v. McIntire, 23 Colo. 137, 46 P. 638 (1896).

An appellate court will consider only those questions properly raised by the appealing parties. Denver United States Nat'l Bank v. People ex rel. Dunbar, 29 Colo. App. 93, 480 P.2d 849 (1970).

And issues between parties to appeal. Appellate review is limited to a consideration of issues between the parties to an appeal. Mills v. Saunders, 30 Colo. App. 462, 494 P.2d 1309 (1972).

Constitutional challenges to sales and use tax provisions of municipal code made to an administrative agency but were not made in declaratory judgment action in district court are not properly preserved for appellate review. Arapahoe Roofing & Sheet Metal v. Denver, 831 P.2d 451 (Colo. 1992).

Colorado rules and decisions discourage the review of a cause piecemeal. Vandy's, Inc. v. Nelson, 130 Colo. 51, 273 P.2d 633 (1954); Berry v. Westknit Originals, Inc., 145 Colo. 48, 357 P.2d 652 (1960); Levine v. Empire Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 34 Colo. App. 235, 527 P.2d 910 (1974), aff'd, 189 Colo. 64, 536 P.2d 1134 (1975).

Only section (a) orders are appealable. One seeking review of a judgment or order must bring his case within one of the categories under section (a); otherwise, it is not an appealable order. Freshpict Foods, Inc. v. Campos, 30 Colo. App. 354, 492 P.2d 867 (1971).

A denial of a summary judgment motion is not generally considered a final decision that is immediately appealable under this rule. City of Lakewood v. Brace, 919 P.2d 231 (Colo. 1996).

The denial of a motion for summary judgment is not an appealable ruling. Herrera v. Gene's Towing, 827 P.2d 619 (Colo. App. 1992).

Interlocutory appeal proper on denial of county department of social services employees' motion for summary judgment based on qualified immunity where denial was based on trial court's finding that plaintiff children pleaded facts sufficient to establish a violation by county employees of a clearly established constitutional right. Interlocutory review is proper but limited to the trial court's legal conclusions, taking plaintiff children's factual allegations as true. Shirk v. Forsmark, 2012 COA 3, 272 P.3d 1118.

Temporary restraining order is not appealable. Under this rule an ex parte temporary restraining order entered by the trial court is not an order granting a ''temporary injunction'' which is subject to review on appeal. Simpson v. Simpson, 151 Colo. 88, 376 P.2d 55 (1962).

A temporary restraining order issued under C.R.C.P. 65(b), is not an appealable order under section (a) of this rule. Freshpict Foods, Inc. v. Campos, 30 Colo. App. 354, 492 P.2d 867 (1971); O'Connell v. Colo. State Bank, 633 P.2d 511 (Colo. App. 1981).

But order granting preliminary injunction is reviewable. An order granting a preliminary injunction restraining the board of optometric examiners from enforcing its regulation is reviewable by appeal. Colo. State Bd. of Optometric Exam'rs v. Dixon, 165 Colo. 488, 440 P.2d 287 (1968).

Order appointing or overruling motion to discharge a receiver is reviewable on appeal before final judgment. Boyd v. Brown, 79 Colo. 568, 247 P. 181 (1926).

This rule provides opportunity to seek a receiver's discharge and have review if the trial court should refuse the request. Thompson v. Beck, 92 Colo. 441, 21 P.2d 712 (1933).

An order entered on a motion to discharge a receiver, although intermediate in a sense, is expressly made reviewable on appeal before final judgment. Melville v. Weybrew, 108 Colo. 520, 120 P.2d 189 (1941), cert. denied, 315 U.S. 811, 62 S. Ct. 795, 86 L. Ed. 1210, reh'g denied, 315 U.S. 830, 62 S. Ct. 913, 86 L. Ed. 1224 (1942).

But appeal from interlocutory order not mandatory. Although an order granting or denying the appointment of a receiver is appealable as of right, pursuant to this rule, it is not mandatory that an appeal be taken from such an interlocutory order. Jouflas v. Wyatt, 646 P.2d 946 (Colo. App. 1982).

If an interlocutory appeal is not taken from an order appointing a receiver, a party may still appeal the subject matter of the interlocutory order upon the entry of a final judgment. Application of Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co., 703 P.2d 1314 (Colo. App. 1985).

And matters not disposed of by trial court not considered on review. Where a petition in intervention is filed in an action involving the appointment of a receiver, questions raised by the petition which have not been disposed of by the trial court will not be considered on review of the order appointing the receiver. Woods v. Capitol Hill State Bank, 70 Colo. 221, 199 P. 964 (1921).

Prosecutor's appeal pursuant to § 16-12-102 subject to the final judgment requirement of this rule. People v. Guatney, 214 P.3d 1049 (Colo. 2009).

An order declining to revoke probation is not a final judgment within meaning of this rule, thus the court of appeals lacked jurisdiction to entertain the appeal. People v. Guatney, 214 P.3d 1049 (Colo. 2009).

Probation revocation order reviewable. Nothing in § 16-12-101, prohibits a direct appeal of a probation revocation order under this rule. People v. Carr, 185 Colo. 293, 524 P.2d 301 (1974).

Appellate review of a county court's decision is available by direct appeal to the Colorado supreme court. Abts v. Bd. of Educ., 622 P.2d 518 (Colo. 1980).

Appeal may not be taken from order denying application to compel arbitration on an employment contract entered into before July 14, 1975. Monatt v. Pioneer Astro Indus., Inc., 42 Colo. App. 265, 592 P.2d 1352 (1979).

Chartering decisions of banking board not within rule. Proceedings in the court of appeals to review chartering decisions of the banking board do not fall within the rules applicable to appeals generally. Columbine State Bank v. Banking Bd., 34 Colo. App. 11, 523 P.2d 474 (1974).

B. Final Judgment.

Appeal may be taken from final judgment only. Doane v. Glenn, 1 Colo. 417 (1872); Hadley v. Fish, 3 Colo. 51 (1876); Alvord v. McGaushey, 5 Colo. 244 (1880); Wehle v. Kerbs, 6 Colo. 167 (1882); Meyer v. Brophy, 15 Colo. 572, 25 P. 1090 (1890); Tatarsky v. Smith, 78 Colo. 491, 242 P. 971 (1926); Colo. State Bank v. Bird, 79 Colo. 625, 247 P. 802 (1926); People ex rel. Ernst v. Eldred, 86 Colo. 174, 279 P. 41 (1929); Martin v. Way, 86 Colo. 232, 280 P. 488 (1929); Commercial Credit Co. v. Higbee, 88 Colo. 300, 295 P. 792 (1931); Marysville & Colo. Land Co. v. Heyde, 93 Colo. 523, 27 P.2d 498 (1933); Crews-Beggs Dry Goods Co. v. Bayle, 96 Colo. 19, 40 P.2d 233 (1934); Julius Hyman & Co. v. Velsicol Corp., 119 Colo. 121, 201 P.2d 380 (1948);

North Sterling Irrigation Dist. v. Knifton, 132 Colo. 212, 286 P.2d 612 (1955); People v. Hernandez, 155 Colo. 519, 395 P.2d 733 (1964) (decided prior to adoption of C.A.R. 4.1 providing for interlocutory appeals in criminal cases).

Entry of final judgment is a prerequisite to the right to prosecute an appeal. Stonebraker v. Konugres, 117 Colo. 429, 188 P.2d 894 (1948).

An order entered by a trial court which is a final judgment is subject to review on appeal, and on such appeal an adequate remedy is available. DeLong v. District Court, 151 Colo. 364, 377 P.2d 737 (1963).

Other than to orders of the kinds specifically enumerated, an appeal may be taken only from a final judgment, and questions with respect to other interlocutory orders may be presented only on review of the final judgment. State v. Harrah, 118 Colo. 468, 196 P.2d 256 (1948); Vandy's, Inc. v. Nelson, 130 Colo. 51, 273 P.2d 633 (1954).

The supreme court cannot determine the propriety of the order of the district court dismissing the action as against the bank where the order or judgment, which the appellant has brought up for review is not a final judgment, but interlocutory, to which an appeal does not lie unless some statute expressly authorizes it. Boxwell v. Greenley Union Nat'l Bank, 89 Colo. 574, 5 P.2d 868, 80 A.L.R. 1179 (1931).

Or from order mentioned in sections (a)(2), (3), or (4). Save in the exceptional instances mentioned in sections (a)(2), (3), and (4), an appeal may be taken from a final judgment only. Burks v. Maudlin, 109 Colo. 281, 124 P.2d 601 (1942); Vandy's, Inc. v. Nelson, 130 Colo. 51, 273 P.2d 633 (1954).

But not interlocutory order. An appeal may not be taken to review an interlocutory order unless expressly authorized by rule or statute. Vandy's, Inc. v. Nelson, 130 Colo. 51, 273 P.2d 633 (1954); Lucas v. District Court, 140 Colo. 510, 345 P.2d 1064 (1959).

An appeal to review an interlocutory order of a district court may not be taken. Town of Glendale v. City & County of Denver, 137 Colo. 188, 322 P.2d 1053 (1958).

Appeal dismissed if no final judgment. If it appears on review that there is no final judgment, the appeal will be dismissed. People ex rel. Ernst v. Eldred, 86 Colo. 174, 279 P. 41 (1929); Martin v. Way, 86 Colo. 232, 280 P. 488 (1929); Stuchlik v. Talpers, 90 Colo. 277, 8 P.2d 762 (1932); Marysville & Colo. Land Co. v. Heyde, 93 Colo. 523, 27 P.2d 498 (1933); Morron v. McDaniel, 127 Colo. 180, 254 P.2d 862 (1953); Vandy's, Inc. v. Nelson, 130 Colo. 51, 273 P.2d 633 (1954); Schoenwald v. Schoen, 132 Colo. 142, 286 P.2d 341 (1955); Cutting v. DeAndrea, 135 Colo. 501, 313 P.2d 315 (1957); Groendyke Transp., Inc. v. District Court, 140 Colo. 190, 343 P.2d 535 (1959); Ortega v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 657 P.2d 989 (Colo. App. 1982).

Where record discloses only the sustaining of a motion to dismiss the action without the entry of any order of dismissal, no "matter reviewable" being presented, the appeal will be dismissed. Slifka v. Viettie, 110 Colo. 138, 131 P.2d 417 (1942).

Where there was no final judgment for money against appellants, only an injunction to desist from manufacturing and selling their products, and an accounting was still to be had, an appeal may not be taken and must be dismissed. Julius Hyman & Co. v. Velsicol Corp., 119 Colo. 121, 201 P.2d 380 (1948).

Because case improperly before appellate court. Where the so-called judgment and orders of the court from which an appeal is taken do not constitute a final judgment, a case is therefore improperly before an appellate court on appeal. People v. People in Interest of G.L.T., 177 Colo. 196, 493 P.2d 20 (1972).

Judicial notice of absence of final judgment. Although the absence of a final judgment was not raised by any of the parties, the court is required to take notice thereof. Hait v. Miller, 38 Colo. App. 503, 559 P.2d 260 (1977).

"Final judgment" is one which ends the particular action in which it is entered, leaving nothing further for the court pronouncing it to do in order to completely determine the rights of the parties involved in the proceeding. People v. Cochran, 176 Colo. 364, 490 P.2d 684 (1971); People in Interest of D.H., 37 Colo. App. 544, 552 P.2d 29 (1976), aff'd, 192 Colo. 542, 561 P.2d 5 (1977); Moore v. Gardner, 40 Colo. App. 194, 571 P.2d 318 (1977); People in Interest of E.A., 638 P.2d 278 (Colo. 1981); Harding Glass Co. v. Jones, 640 P.2d 1123 (Colo. 1982); People in Interest of P.L.B., 743 P.2d 980 (Colo. App. 1987); Foothills Meadow v. Myers, 832 P.2d 1097 (Colo. App. 1992); Things Remembered v. Fireman's Ins. Co., 924 P.2d 1089 (Colo. App. 1996).

The supreme court has consistently defined a final judgment as one which concludes a case to the extent that no further action is required in order to completely determine the rights of the parties involved. Levine v. Empire Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 34 Colo. App. 235, 527 P.2d 910 (1974), aff'd, 189 Colo. 64, 536 P.2d 1134 (1975).

Until a final judgment has been rendered and entered, no substantial rights of the parties have been determined or effected. North Sterling Irrigation Dist. v. Knifton, 132 Colo. 212, 286 P.2d 612 (1955).

Otherwise, it is interlocutory. If the order entered in a cause does not put an end to the action, but leaves something further to be done before the rights of the parties are determined, it is interlocutory and not final, for, to be final, it must end the particular suit in which it is entered. Dusing v. Nelson, 7 Colo. 184, 2 P. 922

(1883); Rice v. Van Why, 49 Colo. 7, 111 P. 599 (1910); District Court v. Eagle Rock Gold Mining & Reduction Co., 50 Colo. 365, 115 P. 706 (1911); Goodknight v. Harper, 70 Colo. 41, 197 P. 237 (1921); Peters v. Peters, 82 Colo. 503, 261 P. 874 (1927); Boxwell v. Greeley Union Nat'l Bank, 89 Colo. 574, 5 P.2d 868, 80 A.L.R. 1179 (1931); Julius Hyman & Co. v. Velsicol Corp., 119 Colo. 121, 201 P.2d 380 (1948); Morron v. McDaniel, 127 Colo. 180, 254 P.2d 862 (1953); Vandy's, Inc. v. Nelson, 130 Colo. 51, 273 P.2d 633 (1954); Jones v. Galbasini, 134 Colo. 64, 299 P.2d 503 (1956); Groendyke Transp., Inc. v. District Court, 140 Colo. 190, 343 P.2d 535 (1959); Berry v. Westknit Originals, Inc., 145 Colo. 48, 357 P.2d 652 (1960); Andrews v. Hayward, 149 Colo. 585, 369 P.2d 980 (1962); Stillings v. Davis, 158 Colo. 308, 406 P.2d 337 (1965).

Final judgment must terminate the litigation between the parties. Boxwell v. Greeley Union Nat'l Bank, 89 Colo. 574, 5 P.2d 868, 80 A.L.R. 1179 (1931); Johnson v. Johnson, 132 Colo. 236, 287 P.2d 49 (1955); Jones v. Balbasini, 134 Colo. 64, 299 P.2d 503 (1956).

A judgment or decree is not final which determines the action as to less than all of the defendants. Berry v. Westknit Originals, Inc., 145 Colo. 48, 357 P.2d 652 (1960).

Until such time as the issue raised by the plea of not guilty by reason of insanity be resolved, there can be no final judgment from which an appeal could be taken, as the litigation has not yet been terminated on its merits. Rupert v. People, 156 Colo. 277, 398 P.2d 434 (1965).

Final judgment must leave nothing to be done except ministerial act of execution. Boxwell v. Greeley Union Nat'l Bank, 89 Colo. 574, 5 P.2d 868, 80 A.L.R. 1179 (1931).

Where there was no order dismissing or otherwise disposing of the claim against the appellee nor was there any order entered in accordance with C.R.C.P. 54(b), there was no final judgment to support an appeal. Hait v. Miller, 38 Colo. App. 503, 559 P.2d 260 (1977).

Certification of order does not constitute final adjudication. If an order does not constitute final adjudication of a claim, certification of it as such does not operate to make it so. Levine v. Empire Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 34 Colo. App. 235, 527 P.2d 910 (1974), aff'd, 189 Colo. 64, 536 P.2d 1134 (1975).

No particular form of words necessary. A judgment must adjudicate the issues and be complete in itself. Apart from statute, no particular form of words is necessary to constitute a judgment. Jones v. Galbasini, 134 Colo. 64, 299 P.2d 503 (1956).

The court should regard the substance and effect of an order, rather than its form, to determine whether it is subject to review. Cent. Locomotive & Car Works v. Smith, 27 Colo. App. 449, 150 P. 241 (1915).

The character of an instrument, whether a judgment or an order, is to be determined by its contents and substance, and not by its title. Johnson v. Johnson, 132 Colo. 236, 287 P.2d 49 (1955).

Counsel, by the simple step of relabeling the procedure by which review is sought, generally may not make a judicial order that is interlocutory in nature reviewable before a final judgment is entered in a case. Groendyke Transp., Inc. v. District Court, 140 Colo. 190, 343 P.2d 535 (1959).

In dissolution proceeding, where trial court incorporated partial separation agreement as well as oral supplemental agreement into the decree of dissolution, there was a final, appealable order notwithstanding the fact that wife's counsel failed to prepare and file a written form of the supplemental agreement. The decree was dated and signed by the trial court and, by expressly incorporating both the partial separation agreement and the supplemental agreement, it left nothing further for the court to do in order to completely determine the rights of the parties. In re Sorensen, 166 P.3d 254 (Colo. App. 2007).

Relief granted may be equitable or legal. A final determination of a cause is a judgment whether the relief granted is equitable or legal. Johnson v. Johnson, 132 Colo. 236, 287 P.2d 49 (1955).

Multiple claims or parties. Final adjudication of a particular claim in a case involving multiple claims or multiple parties may be certified as a final judgment. Levine v. Empire Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 34 Colo. App. 235, 527 P.2d 910 (1974), aff'd, 189 Colo. 64, 536 P.2d 1134 (1975).

In a multi-count information, dismissal of some charges is a final order appealable under this rule. People v. Jefferson, 748 P.2d 1223 (Colo. 1988).

Decision to remand is final judgment where based on denial of procedural due process. The trial court's decision to remand is a final judgment where the remand is premised solely on the conclusion that the party seeking review has been denied procedural due process. Soon Yee Scott v. City of Englewood, 672 P.2d 225 (Colo. App. 1983).

District court's dismissal without prejudice was not final and appealable order. Court's dismissal, without prejudice, of plaintiff's claims under 42 U.S.C. §§ 1983 and 1988 on the basis that claims were not properly joined with claim for judicial review under § 42-2-122, was not a final and appealable order, and dismissal of appeal was therefore proper. Norby v. Charnes, 764 P.2d 407 (Colo. App. 1988).

The denial of a motion for judgment on the pleadings is not a final judgment subject to review on appeal. It is an interlocutory order.

Central Locomotive & Car Works v. Smith, 27 Colo. App. 449, 150 P. 241 (1915); North Sterling Irrigation Dist. v. Knifton, 132 Colo. 212, 286 P.2d 612 (1955).

When denial of summary judgment is not appealable. Denial of a motion for summary judgment is not an appealable order when it does not otherwise put an end to the litigation. Glennon Heights, Inc. v. Cent. Bank & Trust, 658 P.2d 872 (Colo. 1983).

Pretrial ruling that statute is unconstitutional does not constitute a "final judgment" for purposes of appeal. People v. Young, 814 P.2d 834 (Colo. 1991).

A default is not a final judgment. Moore v. Gardner, 40 Colo. App. 194, 571 P.2d 318 (1977).

Neither is an order quashing service of summons. An order quashing service of summons and denying a default, but entering no judgment against plaintiff, is not a final judgment that can be reviewed in the appellate court. Brockway v. W. & T. Smith Co., 17 Colo. App. 96, 66 P. 1073 (1902).

Nor order striking bench warrants. An order of the trial court striking all bench warrants issued in aid of an execution and discharging defendant from custody is not a final judgment from which an appeal may be taken. Latimer Constr. Co. v. Cram, 152 Colo. 533, 383 P.2d 315 (1963).

Nor an order for costs. An order of the district court requiring defendants to pay for the additions to the record requested by them was not such a final judgment as would form basis for an allegation of error. Hays v. City & County of Denver, 127 Colo. 154, 254 P.2d 860 (1953).

An order of a trial court rendering judgment for costs alone, but not adjudicating the case proper is not such a final judgment as would be subject to review on appeal. Free v. Chandler, 155 Colo. 128, 393 P.2d 9 (1964).

Nor an order for sales under powers. Proceedings under C.R.C.P. 120, providing for orders for sales under powers are not an adversary proceeding in which the court determines issues and enters a final judgment, and no appeal may be taken to review the same. Hastings v. Sec. Thrift & Mtg. Co., 145 Colo. 36, 357 P.2d 919 (1960).

Nor an order on motion to vacate a judgment. An order overruling a motion to vacate a judgment is not final in the sense that it may be reviewed on appeal. Polk v. Butterfield, 9 Colo. 325, 12 P. 216 (1886); Hughes v. Felton, 11 Colo. 489, 19 P. 444 (1888); Miller v. Buyer, 77 Colo. 329, 236 P. 990 (1925); Van Dyke v. Fishman, 77 Colo. 333, 236 P. 990 (1925).

An order of a trial court in setting aside its former judgment is not a final judgment; therefore, an appeal is premature. Schtul v. Christ, 132 Colo. 293, 287 P.2d 661 (1955).

An appeal may not be taken from an order of the trial court vacating a judgment since that order is not a final judgment within the scope and meaning of this rule. Westerkamp v. Westerkamp, 155 Colo. 534, 395 P.2d 737 (1964).

Order setting aside default. The only proper procedure to secure review of a trial court's order granting an application to set aside a default judgment is by appeal after final judgment. Gen. Aluminum Corp. v. Arapahoe County Dist. Court, 165 Colo. 445, 439 P.2d 340 (1968).

Additur to verdict. An order of the trial court granting additur to verdict of jury, or, if either party elected not to accept such additur, granting a new trial is not a final judgment from which an appeal may be taken until, following an election to stand upon the record, the action proceeds to judgment. Herzog v. Murad, 147 Colo. 345, 363 P.2d 645 (1961).

Orders for intervention. The nature of orders for intervention is interlocutory. An order granting intervention does no more than add a new party plaintiff. Such an order is not final, and no appeal from it lies until after entry of final judgment in an action. Groendyke Transp., Inc. v. District Court, 140 Colo. 190, 343 P.2d 535 (1959).

Denial of motion to join third parties. An order denying defendant's motion to make another a third-party plaintiff, being interlocutory and not a final judgment, could be presented only on review of the final judgment as an appeal cannot be taken to review such order. Burks v. Maudlin, 109 Colo. 281, 124 P.2d 601 (1942).

Denial of a motion to make a party or parties third-party defendants is not a final judgment subject to review on appeal. Weaver v. Bankers Life & Cas. Co., 146 Colo. 157, 360 P.2d 807 (1961).

Order for temporary possession. In an eminent domain proceeding an appeal may not be taken to review an interlocutory order granting immediate temporary possession. Lucas v. District Court, 140 Colo. 510, 345 P.2d 1064 (1959).

Remand of license application without affirmance or reversal. Where a trial court remands a license application case without affirming or reversing, but with instructions for further proceedings, the order is not final and appealable. Safeway Stores, Inc. v. City of Trinidad, 31 Colo. App. 75, 497 P.2d 1277 (1972).

Appeal while motion for new trial is pending is premature. Plaintiff's appeal is premature, inasmuch as the trial court has not yet entered any final judgment resolving once and for all the controversy at the trial court level, because plaintiff's motion for new trial is still pending. Commercial Credit Corp. v. Frederick, 164 Colo. 5, 431 P.2d 1016 (1967).

A judgment under § 10-3-1116 (1) is not final until a determination of attorney fees and costs is made because attorney fees and costs are components of damages under the statute. Hall v. Am. Standard Ins. Co. of Wis., 2012 COA 201, 292 P.3d 1196.

Order granting or denying a motion for a new trial is not appealable. Gonzales v. Trujillo, 133 Colo. 64, 291 P.2d 1063 (1956).

Where a motion for new trial is granted the issues stand undisposed of; hence an appeal taken from the granting of such motion will be dismissed. Gonzales v. Trujillo, 133 Colo. 64, 291 P.2d 1063 (1956); Andrews v. Hayward, 149 Colo. 585, 369 P.2d 980 (1962).

Where a court has ordered that the defendant be tried again on the same charge, such a ruling is not appealable, for the judgment is not final. People v. Cochran, 176 Colo. 364, 490 P.2d 684 (1971).

The granting of "a motion for new trial" is not a motion from which the state can appeal an adverse ruling, for an order granting a motion for new trial does not constitute a final judgment. People v. Cochran, 176 Colo. 364, 490 P.2d 684 (1971).

Child custody order reviewable. An order determining custody of children, like an order determining alimony, is reviewable in the supreme court. Miller v. Miller, 129 Colo. 462, 271 P.2d 411 (1954); People in Interest of K.L. and A.L., 681 P.2d 535 (Colo. App. 1984).

Even though child custody order states that it is "temporary", the order is permanent and appealable if it is a permanent adjudication of custody. In re Murphy, 834 P.2d 1287 (Colo. App. 1992).

Delinquency proceedings subject to finality requirements. Delinquency proceedings are no less subject to the finality requirements of section (a)(1) than any other type of proceeding. People in Interest of D.H., 37 Colo. App. 544, 552 P.2d 29 (1976), aff'd, 192 Colo. 542, 561 P.2d 5 (1977).

Dependency and neglect proceedings are subject to the finality requirements of section (a)(1). People in Interest of P.L.B., 743 P.2d 980 (Colo. App. 1987); People in Interest of C.L.S., 934 P.2d 851 (Colo. App. 1996).

Following an adjudication of dependency and neglect, the initial disposition order adopting a treatment plan constitutes a "decree of disposition" and renders the adjudication and the initial dispositional order final for purposes of appeal. People in Interest of C.L.S., 934 P.2d 851 (Colo. App. 1996).

Modification of an order for out-of-home placement of a child is interlocutory and not appealable as such modification does not affect the legal custody of the child. People in Interest of P.L.B., 743 P.2d 980 (Colo. App. 1987).

Permanency order in juvenile proceedings held interlocutory in nature. People in Interest of H.R., 883 P.2d 619 (Colo. App. 1994).

Adjudication of a child as dependent or neglected, with the dispositional hearing continued to a future date, does not become a final judgment until a decree of disposition is entered. People in Interest of E.A., 638 P.2d 278 (Colo. 1981).

Order of juvenile division of district court waiving jurisdiction. It is evident from the provisions of §§ 19-3-108 (4), 19-3-106, and 19-3-109, that an order of the juvenile division of the district court waiving jurisdiction is not a final disposition of the action. People in Interest of D.H., 37 Colo. App. 544, 552 P.2d 29 (1976), aff'd, 192 Colo. 542, 561 P.2d 5 (1977).

Whether a probate court order is final and appealable must be determined on a case-by-case basis. The test for finality is whether the order disposes of and is conclusive of the controverted claim for which the proceeding was brought. Estate of Binford v. Gibson, 839 P.2d 508 (Colo. App. 1992).

An order which completely determines the issues of the trustee's indebtedness to and compensation from the estate is a final judgment on those issues. Retainer of jurisdiction by the probate court to later modify the trustee's rate of compensation does not change the order into an interlocutory order. Estate of Binford v. Gibson, 839 P.2d 508 (Colo. App. 1992).

The same rules of finality apply in probate cases as in other civil cases. An order of the probate court is final if it ends the particular action in which it is entered and leaves nothing further for the court pronouncing it to do in order to completely determine the rights of the parties as to that proceeding. In re Estate of Scott, 119 P.3d 511 (Colo. App. 2004), aff'd, 136 P.3d 892 (Colo. 2006).

C.R.C.P. 54(b) governs the interlocutory appeal of a probate court order. In re Estate of Scott, 119 P.3d 511 (Colo. App. 2004), aff'd, 136 P.3d 892 (Colo. 2006).

Where probate court's order of partial summary judgment adjudicated fewer than all of the parties' claims, it was not a final judgment, and party could not appeal the order without C.R.C.P. 54(b) certification. In re Estate of Scott, 119 P.3d 511 (Colo. App. 2004), aff'd, 136 P.3d 892 (Colo. 2006).

Order granting a stay in action pending resolution of case involving similar issues in another state was not a final appealable order where the issues and parties were not identical in the two proceedings and the order did not preclude plaintiff from seeking to lift the stay based upon a showing of prejudice. Things Remembered v. Fireman's Ins. Co., 924 P.2d 1089 (Colo. App. 1996).

Granting a motion to dismiss a complaint is not in and of itself a final and reviewable order of judgment from which an appeal may be taken. District 50 Metro. Rec. Dist. v. Burnside, 157 Colo. 183, 401 P.2d 833 (1965).

But entry of judgment on dismissal is final. A written ruling by a trial court ordering a complaint to be dismissed and the entry of judgment of dismissal by the clerk pursuant thereto, constitutes a final judgment. Jones v. Galbasini, 134 Colo. 64, 299 P.2d 503 (1956).

An order of a trial court dismissing an action for failure to prosecute is a final judgment. Johnson v. Johnson, 132 Colo. 236, 287 P.2d 49 (1955).

An appeal could be taken from a judgment of dismissal entered on the motion of the district attorney. People v. Hernandez, 155 Colo. 519, 395 P.2d 733 (1964).

A plaintiff who voluntarily accepted an award through stipulation is estopped by his conduct from claiming any further right to relief by appeal. Farmers Elevator Co. v. First Nat'l Bank, 30 Colo. App. 529, 497 P.2d 352 (1972), aff'd, 181 Colo. 231, 508 P.2d 1261 (1973).

Where parties stipulate that judgment be satisfied, and the stipulation is approved by the court, an appeal becomes moot. Farmers Elevator Co. v. First Nat'l Bank, 30 Colo. App. 529, 497 P.2d 352 (1972), aff'd, 181 Colo. 231, 508 P.2d 1261 (1973).

Unless there is no inconsistency between enforcement and appeal. A party who accepts an award or legal advantage under any order, judgment, or decree ordinarily waives his right to any such review of the adjudication as may again put in issue his right to the benefit which he has accepted, unless the decree is such or the circumstances such that there is no inconsistency between such enforcement and the appeal. Farmers Elevator Co. v. First Nat'l Bank, 30 Colo. App. 529, 497 P.2d 352 (1972), aff'd, 181 Colo. 231, 508 P.2d 1261 (1973).

Dimissal of class action aspects of case held to constitute final judgment. Levine v. Empire Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 192 Colo. 188, 557 P.2d 386 (1976).

Judgment of district court on appeal from assessment reviewable. Under section (a)(1), the supreme court may review the judgment of the district court rendered in a statutory proceeding relating to appeals from assessments made by the county assessor. In re Hover Motors, Inc., 120 Colo. 511, 212 P.2d 99 (1949).

Revocation of deferred sentence appealable. A defendant may either appeal an order revoking a deferred sentence pursuant to this rule, or file a motion for postconviction review, pursuant to Crim. P. 35(c). People v. Boykin, 631 P.2d 1149 (Colo. App. 1981).

A postjudgment collection order is final if the order ends the particular part of the action in which it is entered, leaves nothing further for the court pronouncing it to do in order to completely determine the rights of the parties as to that part of the proceeding, and is more than a ministerial or administrative determination. Luster v. Brinkman, 250 P.3d 664 (Colo. App. 2010).

State cannot appeal delinquency case. An appeal on behalf of the state to review decisions of trial courts on questions of law arising in criminal cases cannot lie for a proceeding in delinquency case, for such is not a criminal case. People in Interest of P.L.V., 176 Colo. 342, 490 P.2d 685 (1971).

Rather, the state's right to appeal exists only where the trial court's decision terminates a prosecution. People v. Cochran, 176 Colo. 364, 490 P.2d 684 (1971).

When final judgment entered. For purposes of appeal, the final judgment was entered when trial court reversed its previous order imposing costs on the defendant, and therefore state's appeal taken more than 30 days after sentencing was proper. People v. Fisher, 539 P.2d 1253 (1975).

Since the trial court reserved ruling on defendant's request to withdraw his guilty plea, there is no final appealable order, so appellate review is not available. People v. Durapau, 12 COA 67, 280 P.3d 42.

C. Review of Water Matters.

The supreme court has jurisdiction to review a general adjudication decree settling the priorities of the reservoirs upon a particular stream, and this necessarily involves the power to determine whether a reservoir to which a priority has been awarded is entitled to any priority whatsoever. Greeley & Loveland Irrigation Co. v. Huppe, 60 Colo. 535, 155 P. 386 (1916).

And may make and direct the entry of a proper amended decree. On appeal to review an adjudication decree, when any part of the decree is reversed, and where practicable, the supreme court shall make and direct the entry of a proper amended decree. Greeley & Loveland Irrigation Co. v. Handy Ditch Co., 77 Colo. 487, 240 P. 270 (1925).

The supreme court has jurisdiction over an appeal from a water court judgment that is a full, final, and complete determination of claims presented. The only claim at issue was a city's application for a refill right, and the mere presence of a signature line for the federal court, per the parties' stipulation, did not affect the validity of the water court's decree nor did it transfer authority to the federal court. City of Grand Junction v. Denver, 960 P.2d 675 (Colo. 1998).

All water users are proper parties. Where a proceeding is conducted pursuant to statutory direction, all users of water affected by said proceeding are, in effect, parties and have full right to protect their rights had they so desired. Green v. Chaffee Ditch Co., 150 Colo. 91, 371 P.2d 775 (1962).

But appellants must be aggrieved by judgment to prosecute appeal. Where the only parties designated as appellees and served with notice of appeal for supreme court review were the plaintiffs in the trial court whose claims therein were dismissed and judgment entered therein in favor of the appellants, the appellants being in no wise aggrieved by the judgment, the appeal will be dismissed. Camenisch v. Nuccitelli, 150 Colo. 141, 372 P.2d 85 (1962).

Incomplete judgment on claims reversed. Where a statutory water adjudication proceeding is brought up for review, and it appears that there was an incomplete determination of some of the claims before the trial court, the judgment is reversed on that ground only, the supreme court declining to pass upon the case piecemeal. Northern Colo. Irrigation Co. v. City & County of Denver, 86 Colo. 54, 278 P. 592 (1929).

In a proceeding to adjudicate priority of rights to the use of water, a general water adjudication was held not final, where it failed to determine all claims presented. Northern Colo. Irrigation Co. v. City & County of Denver, 86 Colo. 54, 278 P. 592 (1929).

III. GROUNDS FOR REVERSAL.

No judicial obligation is more imperative than the accomplishment of justice in any particular case where the trial record does not reflect as an absolute that every evidentiary requirement for sustaining a guilty verdict was fulfilled. People v. Emeson, 179 Colo. 308, 500 P.2d 368 (1972).

Specification of points no longer required. The rules of civil procedure, apparently having been confusing to the bar as to the distinction between the ''specification of points'' and the ''statement of each point intended to be urged'' formerly required, were amended to eliminate specification of points. Mauldin v. Lowery, 127 Colo. 234, 255 P.2d 976 (1953); Allison v. Heller, 132 Colo. 415, 289 P.2d 160 (1955).

Incorrect instruction may be error. Where the instruction affects substantial rights of the plaintiffs, the supreme court may elect to address the correctness of the instruction in order to prevent injustice. Blueflame Gas, Inc. v. Van Hoose, 679 P.2d 579 (Colo. 1984).

General statement of error insufficient. A statement of grounds for reversal so general that it covers any possible question involved in the record is not sufficient to authorize its consideration on review. Allison v. Heller, 132 Colo. 415, 289 P.2d 160 (1955).

A general specification of points is insufficient and will not be considered upon review. Farrell v. Bashor, 140 Colo. 408, 344 P.2d 692 (1959).

An assertion that the findings and orders of a trial court are contrary to the evidence and contrary to the law is not sufficient to authorize its consideration upon review. Allison v. Heller, 132 Colo. 415, 289 P.2d 160 (1955); Phipps v. Hurd, 133 Colo. 547, 297 P.2d 1048 (1956).

Generally stating that evidence was insufficient to support trial court's determinations, and failing to make specific arguments, identify supporting facts, or set forth specific authorities to support contention of error was insufficient to authorize consideration upon review. People ex rel. D.B-J., 89 P.3d 530 (Colo. App. 2004).

Court may decline to notice errors where statement is deficient. Where a proper statement of grounds for reversal is lacking, or where it fails to direct attention to the alleged error, the supreme court may decline to notice alleged errors presented in the argument. Allison v. Heller, 132 Colo. 415, 289 P.2d 160 (1955).

Brief must direct attention of court to alleged error. A statement of grounds required under section (d) that fails to direct attention to any alleged error is meaningless and does not comply with this rule. Allison v. Heller, 132 Colo. 415, 289 P.2d 160 (1955).

Even though matter alleged to be error is mentioned in the defendant's motion for new trial, it was not mentioned in his brief to the supreme court, and therefore, it was waived. People v. Pleasant, 182 Colo. 144, 511 P.2d 488 (1973).

Contemporaneous objection required. An appellate court need not review errors where counsel fails to make a contemporaneous objection. City & County of Denver v. Hinsey, 177 Colo. 178, 493 P.2d 348 (1972); People v. Chavez, 179 Colo. 316, 500 P.2d 365 (1972); People v. Routa, 180 Colo. 386, 505 P.2d 1298 (1973).

Where defendant fails to object during trial to statements made by prosecutor, he waives further objection as matter of right on appeal. People v. Jacobs, 179 Colo. 182, 499 P.2d 615 (1972).

Absent defect affecting substantial right. The failure to timely object will preclude an appellate from reversing on the ground that there is an absence of a showing of defects affecting the substantial rights. Crespin v. People, 175 Colo. 509, 488 P.2d 877 (1971).

Lack of contemporaneous objection at trial constitutes waiver of objections to admission of evidence, and issues may not be raised on appeal; if they are, they will not be considered unless errors are so fundamental as to seriously prejudice basic rights of defendant. People v. Vigil, 180 Colo. 104, 502 P.2d 418 (1972).

Or where contemporaneous objection impossible. Where purported impropriety of comments in prosecutor's opening statement cannot be alleged until prosecutor fails to support statements during presentation of case, and strict contemporaneous objection by defense counsel following opening statement is therefore impossible, the failure to object immediately to prosecutor's statements does not constitute waiver of right to object as matter of right on appeal. People v. Jacobs, 179 Colo. 182, 499 P.2d 615 (1972).

This rule modifies C.R.C.P. 51. C.R.C.P. 51, providing that only grounds specified in objections to instructions will be considered on appeal is modified by this rule permitting the supreme court at its discretion to notice any error of record, and such discretion will be exercised when necessary to do justice. Warner v. Barnard, 134 Colo. 337, 304 P.2d 898 (1956).

Court may notice error of record on its own motion. Although counsel are confined to the points properly specified, the supreme court, under special circumstances, frequently notices error appearing of record and takes appropriate action to protect the right of a litigant to have his cause determined under well-established principles of law. Warner v. Barnard, 134 Colo. 337, 304 P.2d 898 (1956); Mt. Emmons Mining Co. v. Town of Crested Butte, 690 P.2d 231 (Colo. 1984); People v. Herrera, 734 P.2d 136 (Colo. App. 1986).

The discretionary power of the supreme court to notice any error appearing of record is granted by this rule even where the plaintiff in the lower court failed to make appropriate objections and exceptions thereto. Mumm v. Adam, 134 Colo. 493, 307 P.2d 797 (1957).

Under the provisions of this rule the supreme court may notice error appearing on the face of the record when in the interest of justice to a litigant it is appropriate to do so. Kendall v. Hargrave, 142 Colo. 120, 349 P.2d 993 (1960).

The right and duty of an appellate court to notice error on appeal and to reverse under section (d) has generally been applied to those situations where the error could be characterized as ''fundamental'' or where it is the cause of a ''miscarriage of justice''. Polster v. Griff's of Am., Inc., 184 Colo. 418, 520 P.2d 745 (1974).

Such as error in amount of verdict. An error in the amount of a verdict not properly before the supreme court, as for excessive damages, is one which is of enough importance to consider on the supreme court's own motion when such a course is considered necessary to do complete justice. Lamborn v. Eshom, 132 Colo. 242, 287 P.2d 43 (1955).

Where counsel failed to tender suitable instructions on the measure of damages in a personal injury action, it was the duty of the court to so instruct on its own motion. In such circumstances, the supreme court exercised its discretion in noticing error appearing on the face of the record even though not raised by the parties. Kendall v. Hargrave, 142 Colo. 120, 349 P.2d 993 (1960).

Error noticed on record was not prejudicial. Clark v. Bunnell, 172 Colo. 32, 470 P.2d 42 (1970).

Ground waived in motion for new trial unavailable on appeal. In an action to foreclose a deed of trust, where defendants' motion for a new trial waived the defense of tender before the trial court, it cannot be reasserted in the supreme court on appeal. Bernklau v. Stevens, 150 Colo. 187, 371 P.2d 765 (1962).

When defendant claims that evidence is insufficient to convict, an appellate court should view evidence in light most favorable to prosecution. People v. Vigil, 180 Colo. 104, 502 P.2d 418 (1972).

Rule 2. Suspension of Rules

In the interest of expediting decision, or for other good cause shown, the appellate court may, except as otherwise provided in C.A.R. 26(b), suspend the requirements or provisions of any of these rules in a particular case on application of a party or on its own motion and may order proceedings in accordance with its direction.

ANNOTATION

The supreme court may retain and review an appeal of a declaratory order of the state personnel board that should have been filed with the court of appeals. The court's authority rests in its power under C.A.R. 50(b) to review cases pending in the court of appeals prior to judgment and under this rule to suspend the rules of appellate procedure. Colorado Ass'n of Pub. Emp. v. DOH, 809 P.2d 988 (Colo. 1991).

This rule permits an appellate court to expedite decisions and order proceedings in accordance with its direction even though C.A.R. 3.4 does not extend to permanent custody orders entered in dependency or neglect proceedings. People ex rel. K.A., 155 P.3d 558 (Colo. App. 2006).

Applied in Rivera v. Civil Serv. Comm'n, 34 Colo. App. 152, 529 P.2d 1347 (1974); Converse v. Zinke, 635 P.2d 1228 (Colo. App. 1979); People v. Williams, 736 P.2d 1229 (Colo. App. 1986).

APPEALS FROM JUDGMENTS AND ORDERS OF TRIAL COURTS AND AGENCIES

Rule 3. Appeal as of Right — How Taken

(a) Filing the Notice of Appeal in Appeals from Trial Courts. An appeal permitted by law from a trial court to the appellate court must be taken by filing a notice of appeal with the clerk of the appellate court within the time allowed by C.A.R. 4. Upon the filing of the notice of appeal, the appellate court shall have exclusive jurisdiction over the appeal and all procedures concerning the appeal unless otherwise specified by these rules. An advisory copy of the notice of appeal must be served on the clerk of the trial court within the time for its filing in the appellate court. Failure of an appellant to take any step other than the timely filing of a notice of appeal in the appellate court does not affect the validity of the appeal, but is a ground only for such action as the appellate court deems appropriate, which may include dismissal of the appeal. Content of the notice of appeal is not jurisdictional.

(b) Filing the Notice of Appeal or Petition for Review in Appeals from State Agencies. An appeal permitted by statute from a state agency directly to the court of appeals or appellate review from a district court must be in the manner and within the time prescribed by the particular statute.

(c) Joint or Consolidated Appeals. If two or more persons are entitled to appeal from a judgment or order of a trial court and their interests are such as to make joinder practicable, they may file a joint notice of appeal, or may join in appeal after filing separate timely notices of appeal, and they may thereafter proceed on appeal as a single appellant. Appeals may be consolidated by order of the appellate court upon its own motion or upon motion of a party, or by stipulation of the parties to the several appeals.

(d) Contents of the Notice of Appeal in Civil Cases (Other Than District Court Review of Agency Actions and Appeals From State Agencies). The notice of appeal must set forth:

(1) A caption that complies in form with C.A.R. 32;

(2) A brief description of the nature of the case including:

(A) A general statement of the nature of the controversy (not to exceed one page);

(B) The judgment, order or parts being appealed and a statement indicating the basis for the appellate court's jurisdiction;

(C) Whether the judgment or order resolved all issues pending before the trial court including attorneys' fees and costs;

(D) Whether the judgment was made final for purposes of appeal pursuant to C.R.C.P. 54(b);

(E) The date the judgment or order was entered (if there is a question of the date, set forth the details) and the date of mailing to counsel;

(F) Whether there were any extensions granted to file any motion(s) for post-trial relief, and, if so, the date of the request, whether the request was granted, and the date to which filing was extended;

(G) The date any motion for post-trial relief was filed;

(H) The date any motion for post-trial relief was denied or deemed denied under C.R.C.P. 59(j); and

(I) Whether there were any extensions granted to file any notice(s) of appeal, and, if so, the date of the request, whether the request was granted, and the date to which filing was extended;

(3) An advisory listing of the issues to be raised on appeal;

(4) Whether the transcript of any evidence taken before the trial court or any administrative agency is necessary to resolve the issues raised on appeal;

(5) Whether the order on review was issued by a magistrate where consent was necessary. If the order on review was issued by a magistrate where consent was not necessary, whether a petition for review of the order was filed in the trial court and ruled on by a trial court judge pursuant to the Colorado Rules for Magistrates;

(6) The names of counsel for the parties, their addresses, telephone numbers, e-mail addresses, and registration numbers;

(7) An appendix containing a copy of the judgment or order being appealed, the findings of the court, if any, the motion for new trial, if any, and a copy of the trial court's order granting or denying leave to proceed in forma pauperis if appellant is filing without docket fee pursuant to C.A.R. 12(b); and

(8) A certificate of service, in compliance with C.A.R. 25 showing service of a copy of the notice of appeal (with attachments) on the trial court and all other parties to the action in the trial court.

(e) Contents of Notice of Appeal from State Agencies (Other Than the Industrial Claim Appeals Office) Directly to the Court of Appeals. The notice of appeal must set forth:

(1) A caption that complies in form with C.A.R. 32;

(2) A brief description of the nature of the case including:

(A) A general statement of the nature of the controversy (not to exceed one page);

(B) The order being appealed and a statement indicating the basis for the appellate court's jurisdiction;

(C) Whether the order resolved all issues pending before the agency;

(D) Whether the order is final for purposes of appeal; and

(E) The date of service of the final order entered in the action by the agency. The date of service of an order is the date on which a copy of the order is delivered in person, or, if service is by mail, the date of mailing;

(3) An advisory listing of the issues to be raised on appeal;

(4) Whether the transcript of any evidence taken before the administrative agency is necessary to resolve the issues raised on appeal;

(5) The names of counsel for the parties, their addresses, telephone numbers, e-mail addresses, and registration numbers;

(6) An appendix containing a copy of the order being appealed and the findings of the agency, if any; and

(7) A certificate of service in compliance with C.A.R. 25 showing service of a copy of the notice of appeal (with attachments) on the state agency and all other persons who have appeared as parties to the action before the agency, or as required by section 24-4-106(4), C.R.S. concerning rule-making appeals.

(f) Contents of Notice of Appeal from District Court Review of Agency Actions. The notice of appeal must set forth:

(1) A caption that complies in form with C.A.R. 32;

(2) A brief description of the nature of the case including:

(A) A general statement of the nature of the controversy (not to exceed one page);

(B) The decision or order being appealed and a statement indicating the basis for the appellate court's jurisdiction;

(C) Whether the decision or order resolved all issues pending before the agency;

(D) Whether the decision or order is final for purposes of appeal;

(E) The date the decision or order was entered (if there is a question of the date, set forth the details) and the date of mailing to counsel;

(F) Whether there were any extensions granted to file any motion(s) for post-trial relief, and, if so, the date of the request, whether the request was granted, and the date to which filing was extended;

(G) The date any motion for post-trial relief was filed;

(H) The date any motion for post-trial relief was denied or deemed denied under C.R.C.P. 59(j);

(I) The date the notice of intent to seek appellate review was filed with the district court pursuant to C.R.S. 24-4-106(9), C.R.S.; and

(J) Whether there were any extensions granted to file any notice(s) of appeal, and, if so, the date of the request, whether the request was granted, and the date to which filing was extended;

(3) An advisory listing of the issues to be raised on appeal;

(4) Whether the transcript of any evidence taken before the administrative agency is necessary to resolve the issues raised on appeal;

(5) The names of counsel for the parties, their addresses, telephone numbers, e-mail addresses, and registration numbers;

(6) An appendix containing a copy of the decision or order being appealed, the agency order and the findings of the agency, if any; and

(7) A certificate of service in compliance with C.A.R. 25 showing service of a copy of the notice of appeal (with attachments) on the reviewing court, the agency and all other persons who have appeared as parties to the district court proceedings.

(g) Contents of the Notice of Appeal in Criminal Cases. The notice of appeal must set forth:

(1) A caption that complies in form with C.A.R. 32;

(2) A brief description of the nature of the case including:

(A) A general statement of the nature of the case;

(B) The charges upon which defendant was tried;

(C) The charges for which defendant was convicted;

(D) The date judgment of conviction or the order granting or denying a motion for postconviction relief was entered;

(E) The date the sentence was imposed;

(F) The sentence; and

(G) A statement indicating the basis for the appellate court's jurisdiction;

(3) Whether an appeal bond was granted and, if so, the amount of the bond;

(4) An advisory listing of the issues to be raised on appeal;

(5) Whether any transcript of evidence taken at trial is necessary to resolve the issues on appeal;

(6) The names of counsel for the parties, their addresses, telephone numbers, e-mail addresses, and registration numbers;

(7) An appendix containing a copy of the judgment or order being appealed, the mittimus, the findings of the court, if any, the motion for new trial, if any, and a copy of the trial court's order granting or denying leave to proceed in forma pauperis if appellant is filing without docket fee pursuant to C.A.R. 12(b); and

(8) A certificate of service in compliance with C.A.R. 25 showing service of a copy of the notice of appeal (with attachments) on the trial court and all other parties to the action in the trial court.

Comment: In most criminal cases, the State of Colorado is represented by the Office of the Attorney General. See §24-31-101(1)(a), C.R.S.

(h) Contents of any Notice of Cross-Appeal. A notice of cross-appeal must set forth the same information required for a notice of appeal and must set forth the party initiating the cross-appeal and designate all cross-appellees.

COMMENT

Rule 3 combines the notice of appeal, designation of parties, and preliminary statement into one document, and requests certain jurisdictional information. The rule also requires the attachment of a copy of the order being appealed to the notice of appeal. It also requires a notice of appeal in criminal cases and should include information about counsel for the parties as is now required in the notices for all other types of appeal.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, ''Appellate Procedure and the New Supreme Court Rules'', see 30 Dicta 1 (1953).

Purpose of the notice of appeal is simply to put the other party on notice that an appeal will be taken and to identify the action of the trial court from which the appeal is to be taken. Widener v. District Court, 200 Colo. 398, 615 P.2d 33 (1980).

The particular function of the notice of appeal is to require the clerk of the court, in which the judgment complained of is entered, to certify the record for review. Hull v. Denver Tramway Corp., 97 Colo. 523, 50 P.2d 791 (1935); Wheeler Kelly Hagny Trust Co. v. Williamson, 111 Colo. 515, 143 P.2d 685 (1943); People v. Bost, 770 P.2d 1209 (Colo. 1989).

Purpose of requiring notice where less than the entire record is designated on appeal is to permit the appellee an opportunity to add to the designated portions. People v. Slender Wrap, Inc., 36 Colo. App. 11, 536 P.2d 850 (1975).

Timely filing of notice of appeal is mandatory and jurisdictional. Chapman v. Miller, 29 Colo. App. 8, 476 P.2d 763 (1970); Cline v. Farmers Ins. Exchange, 792 P.2d 305 (Colo. App. 1990).

Failure to file a notice of appeal within the prescribed time deprives the appellate court of jurisdiction and precludes a review of the merits. Widener v. District Court, 200 Colo. 398, 615 P.2d 33 (1980).

The filing of a notice of appeal is mandatory and a jurisdictional prerequisite for appellate review of a lower court decision to deny a Rule 35(a), Crim. P. motion. People v. Silvola, 198 Colo. 228, 597 P.2d 583 (1979).

Notice of appeal not timely filed. Earlier notice of appeal, which related to probate of will, did not provide notice of appeal of order vacating notices of lis pendens to estate property, and since no timely appeal was filed, court lacked jurisdiction over appeal. Matter of Estate of Anderson, 727 P.2d 867 (Colo. App. 1986)(decided under former rule).

Untimely service of notice of appeal to appellee does not affect court's jurisdiction to hear appeal. B.A. Leasing Corp. v. State Bd. of Equal., 745 P.2d 254 (Colo. App. 1987), aff'd sub nom. Gates Rubber Co. v. Bd. of Equalization, 770 P.2d 1189 (Colo. 1989).

Notice of appeal is not "pleading" within strict definition of term, and therefore failure to serve copies of notice as directed by trial court did not warrant court of appeals decision to dismiss appeal. Matter of Estate of Jones, 704 P.2d 845 (Colo. 1985) (decided under former rule).

Dismissal of appeal for failure to serve notice of designation of record is made discretionary by section (a). People v. Slender Wrap, Inc., 36 Colo. App. 11, 536 P.2d 850 (1975).

Substantial compliance with section (c) is all that is required. Widener v. District Court, 200 Colo. 398, 615 P.2d 33 (1980); See People v. Bost, 770 P.2d 1209 (Colo. 1989).

Lack of designation in the caption that the document is a notice of appeal will not defeat substantial compliance. Widener v. District Court, 200 Colo. 398, 615 P.2d 33 (1980).

Where defendant objected to venue by filing a proper motion prior to answering complaint, issue was preserved for appeal regardless of lack of specific reference to venue in notice of appeal. Resolution Trust Corp. v. Parker, 824 P.2d 102 (Colo. App. 1991).

Defect in the notice of appeal was harmless where appellant failed to list all of the parties to the appeal, but complied with all other provisions of the rule. Turkey Creek, LLC v. Rosania, 953 P.2d 1306 (Colo. App. 1998).

When sanctions are imposed against a litigant's attorney, the attorney is a real party in interest and must appeal in his or her own name. Because plaintiffs' attorney did not file a separate notice of appeal and the plaintiffs' notice of appeal did not name the attorney as an appellant, the court is jurisdictionally barred from deciding whether the trial court abused its discretion in imposing sanctions against the attorney. Maul v. Shaw, 843 P.2d 139 (Colo. App. 1992), impliedly overruled in Cruz v. Benine, 984 P.2d 1173 (Colo. 1999).

To have standing to appeal an award of attorney fees only against a party's attorney, the attorney must file a separate appeal or be added as an appellant to the party's appeal. Anglum v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 166 P.3d 191 (Colo. App. 2007).

Abuse of discretion. In light of the significance of the issues on appeal (i.e., the state's obligation to maintain state prisoners in state correctional facilities and to reimburse counties for confining state prisoners) and the fact that both petitioner and respondent sought appellate review, the court of appeals abused its discretion in dismissing case for failure to timely transmit the record. Dept. of Corr. v. Pena, 788 P.2d 143 (Colo. 1990).

Substantiality of issues. When determining whether dismissal is an appropriate sanction for failure to timely transmit the record, an appellate court should consider the substantiality of the issues on appeal and the full range of possible sanctions and should select the sanction most appropriate under the circumstances. Dept. of Corr. v. Pena, 788 P.2d 143 (Colo. 1990).

Court elected to suspend strict requirements of this rule. Serv. Oil Co. v. Rhodus, 179 Colo. 335, 500 P.2d 807 (1972); Converse v. Zinke, 635 P.2d 1228 (Colo. App. 1979), aff'd in part, and rev'd on other grounds, 635 P.2d 882 (Colo. 1981).

Supersedeas not required. The appeal and the supersedeas are two separate things, and the appeal can be sustained without a supersedeas. Monks v. Hemphill, 119 Colo. 378, 203 P.2d 503 (1949).

Rule inapplicable to industrial commission orders. This rule has no application to the review of orders of the industrial commission. Trujillo v. Indus. Comm'n, 31 Colo. App. 297, 501 P.2d 1344 (1972).

Applied in Beadles v. Metayka, 135 Colo. 366, 311 P.2d 711 (1957); In re Peterson, 40 Colo. App. 115, 572 P.2d 849 (1977); Catron v. Catron, 40 Colo. App. 476, 577 P.2d 322 (1978); Gillespie v. Dir. of Dept. of Rev., 41 Colo. App. 561, 592 P.2d 418 (1978); Dayhoff v. State, Motor Vehicle Div., 42 Colo. App. 91, 595 P.2d 1051 (1979); People v. Moore, 674 P.2d 354 (Colo. 1984).

Rule 3.1. Appeals from Industrial Claim Appeals Office

(a) How Taken. Appeals from orders and awards of the Industrial Claim Appeals Office shall be in the manner and within the time prescribed by statute. On appeal from orders and awards entered upon review of cases determined by the Industrial Claim Appeals Office, the record of the proceedings shall be arranged in chronological order, with all duplicates omitted. The record shall be properly paginated and fully indexed and bound by the agency.

(b) 14 days after return of the record, the appellant shall file an opening brief. Within 14 days after service of the opening brief, the appellee shall file an answer brief. Within 7 days after service of the answer brief, the appellant may file a reply brief. Briefs may be printed, typewritten, mimeographed, or otherwise reproduced in conformity with the provisions of C.A.R. 28.

(c) Priority of Industrial Claim Appeals Office Cases. All appeals from the Industrial Claim Appeals Office shall have precedence over any civil cause of a different nature pending in said court, and the Court of Appeals shall always be deemed open for the determination thereof, and shall be determined by the Court of Appeals in the manner as provided for other appeals.

(d) Contents of Notice of Appeal from the Industrial Claim Appeals Office Directly to the Court of Appeals. The notice of appeal shall set forth:

(1) A caption that complies in form with C.A.R. 32. In the caption:

(A) The case title in compliance with C.A.R. 12(a);

(B) The party or parties initiating the appeal;

(C) All others who have appeared as parties to the action before the agency; and

(D) The agency case number.

(2) A brief description of the nature of the case including:

(A) A general statement of the nature of the controversy (not to exceed one page);

(B) The order being appealed and a statement indicating the basis for the appellate court's jurisdiction;

(C) Whether the order resolved all issues pending before the agency;

(D) Whether the order is final for purposes of appeal; and

(E) The date of the certificate of mailing of the final order.

(3) An advisory listing of the issues to be raised on appeal;

(4) The names of counsel for the parties, their addresses, telephone numbers, and registration numbers;

(5) An appendix containing a copy of the order being appealed and the findings of the agency, if any; and

(6) A certificate of service in compliance with C.A.R. 25 showing service of a copy of the notice of appeal (with attachments) on the Industrial Claim Appeals Office panel in workmen's compensation cases, and on the Division of Employment and Training in unemployment insurance cases, and on all other persons who have appeared as parties to the action before the agency.

ANNOTATION

Procedural requirements mandatory and jurisdictional. The procedural requirements for obtaining administrative or appellate review of the commission's orders are mandatory and jurisdictional. Hildreth v. Dir. of Div. of Labor, 30 Colo. App. 415, 497 P.2d 350 (1972).

One seeking to exercise a statutory right of review or appeal must follow and comply with the procedures prescribed, and failure to do so deprives the court of jurisdiction. Trujillo v. Indus. Comm'n, 31 Colo. App. 297, 501 P.2d 1344 (1972).

There is no authority for the filing of notice of appeal in proceedings in the appellate court for review of final orders of the industrial commission; therefore, such notice is inoperative for any purpose and, being a nullity, does not extend the time prescribed for commencing the review. Trujillo v. Indus. Comm'n, 31 Colo. App. 297, 501 P.2d 1344 (1972).

With respect to the service of process requirement of § 8-53-119 (3), (now § 8-43-307) service upon the attorney general constitutes service upon industrial commission (now industrial claim appeals office). Butkovich v. Indus. Comm'n, 723 P.2d 1306 (Colo. 1985).

No damages may be awarded under this section as a sanction for a frivolous review petition. Haynes v. Interior Investments, 725 P.2d 100 (Colo. App. 1986).

Notice of appeal sufficient to satisfy requirements of § 8-53-119 (now § 8-43-307) and to invoke the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals where the document complied with the requirements of this rule and of that section but merely failed to bear the caption ''Petition for Review''. Hawkins v. State Comp. Ins. Authority, 790 P.2d 893 (Colo. App. 1990).

Rule 3.2. Appeals from the Denial of a Petition for Waiver of Parental Notification Requirements

Appeals from orders denying a petition for waiver of the parental notification requirements of Section 12-37.5-104, C.R.S., shall be in the manner and within the time prescribed in Rule 3 of Chapter 23.5 of the Colorado Rules of Civil Procedure.

Editor's note: This rule was originally adopted as rule 3.2 of chapter 1, C.R.C.P., on September 18, 2003, but was relocated pursuant to corrective order on June 16, 2004.

Rule 3.3. Appeals of Grant or Denial of Class Certification

An appeal from an order granting or denying class certification under C.R.C.P. 23(f) may be allowed pursuant to the procedures set forth in that rule and C.R.S. § 13-20-901.

Rule 3.4. Appeals from Proceedings in Dependency or Neglect

(a) How Taken. Appeals from judgments, decrees, or orders in dependency or neglect proceedings, as permitted by section 19-1-109 (2) (b) and (c), C.R.S., including an order allocating parental responsibilities pursuant to section 19-1-104 (6), C.R.S., final orders entered pursuant to section 19-3-612, C.R.S., and final orders of permanent legal custody entered pursuant to section 19-3-702 and 19-3-605, C.R.S., must be in the manner and within the time prescribed by this rule.

(b) Time for Appeal.

(1) A Notice of Appeal and Designation of Transcripts (JDF 545) must be filed with the clerk of the court of appeals with an advisory copy served on the clerk of the trial court within 21 days after the entry of the judgment, decree, or order. The trial court continues to have jurisdiction to hear and decide a motion under C.R.C.P. 59 regardless of the filing of a notice of appeal, provided the C.R.C.P. 59 motion is timely filed under C.R.C.P. 59 (a) and determined within the time specified in C.R.C.P. 59 (j). An order is entered within the meaning of this rule when it is entered pursuant to C.R.C.P. 58. If notice of the entry of judgment, decree, or order is transmitted to the parties by mail or E-Service, the time for the filing of the notice of appeal commences from the date of mailing or E-Service of the notice.

(2) If a timely notice of appeal is filed by a party, any other party may file a Notice of Cross-Appeal and Designation of Transcripts (JDF 545) within 7 days of the date on which the notice of appeal was filed or within the 21 days for the filing of the notice of appeal, whichever period last expires.

(3) The time in which to file a notice of appeal or a notice of cross-appeal and the designation of transcripts will not be extended, except upon a showing of good cause pursuant to C.A.R. 2 and C.A.R. 26 (b).

(4) In appeals filed by respondent parents who were represented by counsel in the trial court, it is trial counsel's obligation to ensure a timely notice of appeal is filed. This obligation is met if different counsel for appeal timely files a notice of appeal. Self-represented parties are obligated to timely file a notice of appeal on their own behalf.

(c) Contents of the Notice of Appeal. A Notice of Appeal and Designation of Transcripts (JDF 545) must include:

(1) identification of the party or parties initiating the appeal;

(2) identification of the judgment, decree, or order from which the appeal is taken;

(3) the date the judgment, decree, or order from which the appeal is taken was signed by the trial court;

(4) a certificate of service in compliance with C.A.R. 25; and

(5) a copy of the judgment, decree, or order from which the appeal is taken.

(d) Composition of the Record on Appeal.

(1) The record on appeal must include the trial court file, including all exhibits. No designation of record is necessary for the trial court file and all exhibits. The record on appeal may also include any transcripts designated and ordered by the parties pursuant to this rule.

(2) It is the duty of the appellant and any cross-appellant to complete and properly serve the designation of transcripts portion of JDF 545 upon the trial court's managing court reporter at the time the notice of appeal is filed.

(3) The designation of transcripts portion of JDF 545 must set forth the dates of the proceedings for which transcripts are requested and the names of the court reporters, if applicable.

(4) Within 7 days after service of JDF 545, any appellee may complete and file a Supplemental Designation of Transcripts (JDF 547) with the clerk of the trial court and the clerk of the court of appeals and serve it on the trial court's managing court reporter.

(5) The designating party or public entity responsible for the cost of transcription must make arrangements for payment with the managing court reporter within 7 days after serving the designation. Within 14 days after service of JDF 545, the court reporter must file a statement with the clerk of the trial court and the clerk of the court of appeals indicating whether arrangements for payment have been made.

(e) Transmission of Record.

(1) Within 42 days after the filing of JDF 545, the record, composed as set forth in subsection (d), must be transmitted to the court of appeals in accordance with C.A.R. 10(c).

(2) The appellant may request an extension of time of no more than 14 days in which to file the record, which will be granted only upon a showing of good cause. If a request of more than 14 days is based on a court reporter's or transcriber's inability to complete the transcript, it must be supported by an affidavit of the reporter, transcriber, managing court reporter, or clerk of the trial court.

(f) Opening Brief on Appeal.

(1) Within 21 days after the record is filed, the appellant must file a brief. The appellant's brief must be entitled ''Opening Brief'' and must contain the following under appropriate headings in the order indicated:

(A) a caption in compliance with C.A.R. 32 (d);

(B) a certificate of compliance as required by C.A.R. 32 (h);

(C) a table of contents, with page references;

(D) a table of authorities—cases (alphabetically arranged), statutes, and other authorities—with references to the pages of the brief where they are cited;

(E) a statement of compliance with the Indian Child Welfare Act (ICWA) with citation(s) to the location(s) in the designated record of:

(i) each date when the court made an inquiry to determine whether the child is or could be an Indian child, and a statement of any identified tribe(s) or potential tribe(s);

(ii) copies of ICWA notices (including for foster care placement and termination of parental rights proceedings, if applicable), and other communications intended to provide such notice, sent to the child's parents, the child's Indian custodian(s), the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA), or the child's tribe(s) or potential tribe(s) may be found;

(iii) the postal return receipts for Indian child welfare notices sent to the child's parents, the child's Indian custodian(s), the BIA, or the child's tribe(s) or potential tribe(s) may be found;

(iv) responses from the parent(s) or Indian custodian(s) of the child, the BIA, and child's tribe(s) or potential tribe(s) may be found;

(v) additional notices (including for a termination hearing) were sent to non-responding tribe(s), or the BIA; and

(vi) date(s) of any ruling as to whether the child is or is not an Indian child;

(F) a statement of the issues presented for review;

(G) a concise statement identifying the nature of the case, the relevant facts and procedural history, and the ruling, judgment, or order presented for review, with appropriate references to the record (see C.A.R. 28 (e));

(H) a summary of the arguments, which must:

(i) contain a succinct, clear, and accurate statement of the arguments made in the body of the brief;

(ii) articulate the major points of reasoning employed as to each issue presented for review; and

(iii) not merely repeat the argument headings or issues presented for review;

(I) the arguments, which must contain:

(i) under a separate heading placed before the discussion of each issue, statements of the applicable standard of review with citation to authority, whether the issue was preserved, and if preserved, the precise location in the record where the issue was raised and where the court ruled; and

(ii) appellant's contentions and reasoning, with citations to the authorities and parts of the record on which the appellant relies; and

(J) a short conclusion stating the precise relief sought.

(2) The appellant may request one extension of time of no more than 7 days in which to file the opening brief.

(3) The opening brief must contain no more than 7,500 words, excluding attachments and/or any addendum containing statutes, rules, regulations, etc. A self-represented party who does not have access to a word-processing system must file a typewritten or legibly handwritten opening brief of not more than 25 double-spaced and single-sided pages. Such a brief must otherwise comply with this rule and C.A.R. 32.

(g) Answer Brief on Appeal.

(1) Within 21 days after service of the appellant's opening brief, any appellee may file an answer brief that must be entitled ''Answer Brief,'' and any cross-appellant may file an opening/answer brief that must be entitled ''Cross-Appeal Opening/Answer Brief.''

(2) Under a separate heading following the table of authorities, the brief must contain a statement of whether the appellee agrees with the appellant's statements concerning compliance with the ICWA, and if not, why not.

(3) The brief must conform to the requirements of C.A.R. 3.4 (f) except that separate headings titled statement of the issues or of the case need not be included unless the appellee is dissatisfied with the appellant's statement. For each issue, the answer brief must, under a separate heading placed before the discussion of the issue, state whether the appellee agrees with the appellant's statements concerning the standard of review with citation to authority and preservation for appeal, and if not, why not.

(4) A party may request one extension of time of no more than 7 days to file an answer brief or cross-appeal opening/answer brief.

(5) The answer brief or cross-appeal opening/answer brief must contain no more than 7,500 words, excluding attachments and/or any addendum containing statutes, rules, regulations, etc. A self-represented party who does not have access to a word-processing system must file a typewritten or legibly handwritten brief of not more than 25 double-spaced and single-sided pages. Such a brief must otherwise comply with this rule and C.A.R. 32.

(6) In cases involving more than one appellant and in which the appellee chooses to file an answer brief, the appellee must file a combined answer brief addressing the legal issues raised by all appellants. The combined answer brief must be filed within 28 days of service of the last opening brief filed and must contain no more than 9,500 words.

(7) In cases involving more than one appellee, the court encourages coordination among appellees to avoid repetition within the answer briefs. A joint answer brief may, but is not required to, be filed by appellees.

(h) Reply Brief. Within 14 days after service of the appellee's answer brief, any appellant may file a reply brief, which must be entitled ''Reply Brief,'' in reply to the answer brief. A reply brief must comply with C.A.R. 3.4 (f)(1)(A)-(D) and must contain no more than 5,700 words. A self-represented party who does not have access to a word-processing system must file a typewritten or legibly handwritten reply brief of not more than 19 double-spaced and single-sided pages. Such a brief must otherwise comply with this rule and C.A.R. 32. No further briefs may be filed except with leave of court.

(i) Oral Argument. Oral argument will be allowed upon the written request of a party or upon the court's own motion, unless the court, in its discretion, dispenses with oral argument. A request for oral argument must be made in a separate, appropriately titled document filed no later than 7 days after briefs are closed. Unless otherwise ordered, argument may not exceed 15 minutes for the appellant and 15 minutes for the appellee.

(j) Advancement on the Docket. Appeals in dependency or neglect proceedings must be advanced on the calendar of the appellate courts pursuant to section 19-1-109 (1), C.R.S., and will be set for disposition at the earliest practical time.

(k) Petition for Rehearing. A petition for rehearing in the form prescribed by C.A.R. 40 (b) may be filed within 14 days after entry of judgment. The time in which to file the petition for rehearing will not be extended.

(l) Petition for Writ of Certiorari. Review of the judgment of the court of appeals may be sought by filing a petition for writ of certiorari in the supreme court in accordance with C.A.R. 51. The petition must be filed within 14 days after the expiration of the time for filing a petition for rehearing or the date of denial of a petition for rehearing by the court of appeals. The filing of the petition results in an automatic stay of proceedings in the court of appeals. Any cross-petition or opposition brief to a petition for writ of certiorari must be filed within 14 days after the filing of the petition. The petition for writ of certiorari, any cross-petition, and any opposition brief must be in the form prescribed by C.A.R. 53 (a)-(c) and filed and served in accordance with C.A.R. 53 (h).

(m) Issuance of Mandate. The mandate must be in the form prescribed by C.A.R. 41 (a) and must issue 29 days after entry of the judgment. The timely filing of a petition for rehearing will stay the mandate until the court of appeals has ruled on the petition. If the petition is denied, the mandate must issue 14 days after entry of the order denying the petition. The mandate may also be stayed in accordance with C.A.R. 41.

(n) Filing and Service. All papers required or permitted by this rule must be filed and served in accordance with C.A.R. 25.

(o) Computation and Extension of Time. Computation and extension of any time period prescribed by this rule must be in accordance with C.A.R. 26.

Court of appeals has jurisdiction to address the constitutionality of this rule as promulgated by the Colorado supreme court. People ex rel. T.D., 140 P.3d 205 (Colo. App.), cert. denied, 549 U.S. 1020, 127 S. Ct. 564, 166 L. Ed. 2d 411, and 549 U.S. 1024, 127 S. Ct. 565, 166 L. Ed. 2d 419 (2006).

Expedited procedure under this rule does not violate procedural due process because it benefits parents by quickly correcting decisions in which their rights were terminated erroneously; benefits children, whose parents have had their rights terminated, by decreasing the time before they are either returned to their parents or permitted to be legally adopted; and furthers the state's interest in protecting children. People ex rel. T.D., 140 P.3d 205 (Colo. App.), cert. denied, 549 U.S. 1020, 127 S. Ct. 564, 166 L. Ed. 2d 411, and 549 U.S. 1024, 127 S. Ct. 565, 166 L. Ed. 2d 419 (2006).

Expedited process does not violate procedural due process by placing court of appeals in the role of an advocate on legal issues because it does not alter the court's responsibility to thoroughly examine the record on factual issues. People ex rel. T.D., 140 P.3d 205 (Colo. App.), cert. denied, 549 U.S. 1020, 127 S. Ct. 564, 166 L. Ed. 2d 411, and 549 U.S. 1024, 127 S. Ct. 565, 166 L. Ed. 2d 419 (2006).

This rule sufficiently protects parents in dependency and neglect cases against the risk of an erroneous deprivation of their appellate rights by (1) allowing appellate counsel for the parents a reasonable opportunity to review an unedited transcript and to raise possible issues for appeal, and (2) allowing the assigned division of the court of appeals to review the complete record and order supplemental briefing when appropriate. People ex rel. T.D., 140 P.3d 205 (Colo. App.), cert. denied, 549 U.S. 1020, 127 S. Ct. 564, 166 L. Ed. 2d 411, and 549 U.S. 1024, 127 S. Ct. 565, 166 L. Ed. 2d 419 (2006).

This rule does not violate plaintiff's constitutional right to equal protection because parents whose rights are terminated under article 5 of the Colorado Children's Code are not similarly situated to parents whose rights are involuntarily terminated under article 3 of the code. This rule applies to parents subject to dependency and neglect proceedings under article 3 of the Colorado Children's Code. As such, the proceedings focus primarily on the protection and safety of the children, not on the custodial interests of the parent. Further, such a proceeding can be initiated only by the state. People ex rel. T.D., 140 P.3d 205 (Colo. App.), cert. denied, 549 U.S. 1020, 127 S. Ct. 564, 166 L. Ed. 2d 411, and 549 U.S. 1024, 127 S. Ct. 565, 166 L. Ed. 2d 419 (2006).

Fact finder's "no adjudication" finding with respect to one party is not a proper basis for a motion notwithstanding the verdict and is not a final appealable order under section (a) of this rule or § 19-1-109 (2)(c). Statute provides that an order decreeing a child neglected or dependent is a final and appealable order. Father's dismissal from the petition based on a jury verdict that the child was not dependent and neglected with respect to him is not subject to direct appeal under this rule. People in Interest of S.M-L, 2016 COA 173, __ P.3d __, aff'd sub nom. People in Interest of R.S., 2018 CO 31, 416 P.3d 905.

Constitutional right to effective assistance of counsel is not violated because of a lack of a complete record because this rule provides access to an unedited transcript for preparation of the petition on appeal and an opportunity to identify the issues on appeal. People ex rel. T.D., 140 P.3d 205 (Colo. App.), cert. denied, 549 U.S. 1020, 127 S. Ct. 564, 166 L. Ed. 2d 411, and 549 U.S. 1024, 127 S. Ct. 565, 166 L. Ed. 2d 419 (2006).

C.A.R. 2 permits an appellate court to expedite decisions and order proceedings in accordance with its direction even though this rule does not extend to permanent custody orders entered in dependency or neglect proceedings. People ex rel. K.A., 155 P.3d 558 (Colo. App. 2006).

The plain language of section (a) shows that this rule does not apply to paternity actions. Because C.A.R. 4 does not list specific orders that are appealable, and in the absence of any limiting language, a judgment of paternity is subject to that rule. People in Interest of N.S., 2017 COA 8, 413 P.3d 172.

The Colorado rules of civil procedure apply and govern the appropriate methods of service in dependency and neglect cases because neither the Colorado Children's Code nor the Colorado rules of juvenile procedure address the method by which a trial court may serve orders on parties. People ex rel. S.M.A.M.A., 172 P.3d 958 (Colo. App. 2007).

Three days must be added to the deadline for filing a notice of appeal pursuant to subsection (b) when the order appealed is served on the parties by delivery to attorney's courthouse mailbox, which constitutes service by mail. People ex rel. S.M.A.M.A., 172 P.3d 958 (Colo. App. 2007).

Appellant mother's consent is a substantive condition precedent to a valid notice of appeal. Mother's counsel was not empowered to file a notice of appeal without mother's signature or specific authorization, and her defective notice did not invoke the court's jurisdiction even overlooking the untimeliness of the notice. People ex rel. R.D., 259 P.3d 562 (Colo. App. 2011).

An allocation of parental responsibilities order filed under § 19-1-104 (6) in the district court of the county where the child resides is final and appealable. Once a final and appealable order has been entered, a party who wishes to appeal must file a notice of appeal within twenty-one days under this rule. People In Interest of M.R.M., 2018 COA 10, __ P.3d __.

The language of subsection (b)(3) prohibiting extensions of time does not preclude enlarging or suspending the deadline for filing a notice of appeal for good cause. An appellate court remains empowered to extend or suspend deadlines based on a showing of good cause. People ex rel. A.J., 143 P.3d 1143 (Colo. App. 2006).

Based on the "unique circumstances exception", court of appeals has the authority to extend the deadline for filing the notice of appeal in a dependency and neglect case. The ''no extensions'' provision in section (b) does not preclude application of the unique circumstances exception, because it is an exception to procedural rules limiting a court's authority to grant exceptions. Here, the trial court must bear some responsibility for the late filing because of an ambiguous ruling and subsequent written orders. People ex rel. A.J.H, 134 P.3d 528 (Colo. App. 2006).

Substitution of both parents' counsel appropriate. Applying the criminal standard, there was good cause for the substitution of both parents' counsel in dependency and neglect proceedings when the motions judge ordered supplemental briefing on the issue in Anders v. California, 386 U.S. 738, 87 S. Ct. 1396, 18 L. Ed. 2d 493, and the substitution of mother's counsel after the announcement of A.L.L. v. People, 226 P.3d 1054 (Colo. 2010). People ex rel. C.Z., 262 P.3d 895 (Colo. App. 2010).

The good cause standard is the same standard recognized in criminal cases, not the standard for civil cases set forth in C.R.C.P. 121 § 1-1(2)(b). People ex rel. C.Z., 262 P.3d 895 (Colo. App. 2010).

Matter is moot where guardian ad litem (GAL) failed to offer facts in supplemental brief demonstrating a current basis to terminate mother's parental rights. Although the GAL argued on appeal that the court improperly failed to terminate mother's rights, the child has been returned to the mother and all parties believed that the child should remain in the mother's custody. A matter is moot when the relief sought, if granted, would have no practical legal effect on the existing controversy. People ex rel. L.O.L., 197 P.3d 291 (Colo. App. 2008).

Rule 4. Appeal as of Right — When Taken

(a) Appeals in Civil Cases (Other than Appeals or Appellate Review Within C.A.R. 3.1, 3.2, 3.3 and 3.4). Except as provided in Rule 4(e), in a civil case in which an appeal is permitted by law as of right from a trial court to the appellate court, the notice of appeal required by C.A.R. 3 shall be filed with the appellate court with an advisory copy served on the clerk of the trial court within 49 days of the date of the entry of the judgment, decree, or order from which the party appeals. In appeals from district court review of agency actions, such notice of appeal shall be in addition to the statutory 45-day notice of intent to seek appellate review filed with the district court required by C.R.S. 24-4-106(9). If a timely notice of appeal is filed by a party, any other party may file a notice of appeal within 14 days of the date on which the first notice of appeal is filed, or within the time otherwise prescribed by this section (a), whichever period last expires.

The running of the time for filing a notice of appeal is terminated as to all parties by a timely motion filed in the trial court by any party pursuant to the Colorado Rules of Civil Procedure hereafter enumerated in this sentence, and the full time for appeal fixed by this section (a) commences to run and is to be computed from the entry of any of the following orders made upon a timely motion under such rules: (1) Granting or denying a motion under C.R.C.P. 59 for judgment notwithstanding verdict; (2) granting or denying a motion under C.R.C.P. 59, to amend findings of fact, whether or not an alteration of the judgment would be required if the motion is granted; (3) granting or denying a motion under C.R.C.P. 59, to alter or amend the judgment; (4) denying a motion for a new trial under C.R.C.P. 59; (5) expiration of a court granted extension of time to file motion(s) for post-trial relief under C.R.C.P. 59, where no motion is filed. The trial court shall continue to have jurisdiction to hear and decide a motion under C.R.C.P. 59 regardless of the filing of a notice of appeal, provided the C.R.C.P. 59 motion is timely filed under C.R.C.P. 59(a) and determined within the time specified in C.R.C.P. 59(j). During such time, all proceedings in the appellate court shall be stayed. A judgment or order is entered within the meaning of this section (a) when it is entered pursuant to C.R.C.P. 58. If notice of the entry of judgment, decree, or order is transmitted to the parties by mail or E-Service, the time for the filing of the notice of appeal shall commence from the date of the mailing or E-Service of the notice.

Upon a showing of excusable neglect, the appellate court may extend the time for filing the notice of appeal by a party for a period not to exceed 35 days from the expiration of the time otherwise prescribed by this section (a). Such an extension may be granted before or after the time otherwise prescribed by this section (a) has expired; but if a request for an extension is made after such time has expired, it shall be made by motion with such notice as the court shall deem appropriate.

Comment: C.A.R. 4(a) provides for the notice of appeal to be filed with the appellate court and a copy to be served upon the trial court. Time for filing the notice of appeal is increased to 49 days.

(b) Appeals in Criminal Cases.

(1) Except as provided in Rule 4(e), in a criminal case the notice of appeal by a defendant shall be filed in the appellate court and an advisory copy served on the clerk of the trial court within 49 days after the entry of the judgment or order appealed from. A notice of appeal filed after the announcement of a decision, sentence, or order but before entry of the judgment or order shall be treated as filed on the date of such entry. If a timely motion in arrest of judgment or for a new trial on any ground other than newly discovered evidence has been made, an appeal from a judgment of conviction may be taken within 49 days after the entry of an order denying the motion. A motion for a new trial based on the ground of newly discovered evidence will similarly extend the time for appeal from a judgment of conviction if the motion is made within 14 days after entry of the judgment. A judgment or order is entered within the meaning of this section (b) when it is entered in the criminal docket. Upon a showing of excusable neglect the appellate court may, before or at any time after the time has expired, with or without motion and notice, extend the time for filing a notice of appeal for a period not to exceed 35 days from the expiration of the time otherwise prescribed by this section (b).

Comment: C.A.R. 4(b) has been altered to make it conform more closely to C.A.R. 4(a).

(2) Unless otherwise provided by statute or Colorado appellate rule, when an appeal by the state or the people is authorized by statute, the notice of appeal shall be filed in the Court of Appeals within 49 days after the entry of judgment or order appealed from. The Court of Appeals, after consideration of said appeal, shall issue a written decision answering the issues in the case and shall not dismiss the appeal as without precedential value.

The final decision of the Court of Appeals is subject to petition for certiorari to the Supreme Court.

(3) Prosecutorial Appeals in Criminal Cases. An appeal by the state or the people from an order dismissing one or more but less than all counts of a charging document prior to trial, including a finding of no probable cause at a preliminary hearing, shall be filed in the court of appeals unless the order is based on a determination that a statute, municipal charter provision, or ordinance is unconstitutional, in which case the appeal shall be filed in the supreme court. Appeals of orders dismissing one or more but less than all counts of a charging document shall otherwise be conducted pursuant to the procedures set forth in Rule 4.1, except petitions for rehearing and certiorari shall be permitted, and mandates shall issue, as provided by these rules.

(c) Appellate Review of Felony Sentences.

(1) Availability of Review. Except in those cases provided for in subsection (e) of this Rule, a person upon whom sentence is imposed for conviction of a felony shall have the right to one appellate review of the propriety of the sentence, having regard to the nature of the offense, the character of the offender, the public interest, and the sufficiency and accuracy of the information on which the sentence was based.

(I) If the appeal review of conviction is sought in a case where there has been a trial and conviction on the merits, appellate review of the propriety of the sentence will be a part of and be treated in the same manner as the review of the conviction.

(II) If the appeal is to review a sentence following a plea of guilty or nolo contendere, or resentencing, where the imposition of sentence was the only issue before the court, then the following abbreviated procedure for appellate review of sentences will be utilized:

(A) The notice of appeal must be filed within 49 days from the date of the imposition of sentence. The notice shall be filed with the appellate court with an advisory copy served on the clerk of the trial court which imposed the sentence. The time for filing the notice of appeal may be extended by the appellate court.

(B) Except as provided by this Rule, the Colorado Appellate Rules governing criminal appeals shall apply to appellate review of sentences.

Comment: The change in the title and deletion of subsection (d) of this rule became necessary because of repeal of C.R.S. 18-1-409(2.1) and (2.2) and repeal of C.R.S. 18-1-409.5 effective July 1, 1981. In 1984 this rule was changed to make it conform more closely to C.A.R. 4(a) and (b).

(d) Appeals of Cases in Which a Sentence of Death Has Been Imposed.

(1) Availability of Review. Whenever a sentence of death is imposed, the Supreme Court shall review the propriety of the sentence, having regard to the nature of the offense, the character and record of the offender, the public interest, and the manner in which the sentence was imposed, including the sufficiency and accuracy of the information upon which it was based.

If the Supreme Court determines that the sentence was imposed under the influence of passion, prejudice, or any other arbitrary factor, or that, as a matter of law, the sentence is not supported by the evidence, a sentence of death shall not thereafter be imposed.

(2) Procedure. The procedure for pursuing appeals in cases in which a sentence of death has been imposed is as set forth in Rule 32.2 of the Colorado Rules of Criminal Procedure.

(3) Record on Appeal. In appeals under subsection (e) of this Rule, the following items shall be included in the record on appeal:

(I) The indictment or information upon which the sentence is based; a verbatim transcript of the entire sentencing proceeding; the instructions given by the trial court and tendered by the parties in the sentencing proceeding; all exhibits admitted or offered during the trial and at the sentencing proceeding; all verdict forms submitted to the jury; and the judgment, sentence, and mittimus.

(II) Such other portions of the record as may be designated under C.A.R. 10(b) or as may be ordered by the Supreme Court.

(e) Appeal by an Inmate Confined in an Institution. If an inmate confined in an institution files a notice of appeal in either a civil case or a criminal case, the notice of appeal is timely filed if it is deposited in the institution's internal mail system on or before the last day for filing. If an institution has a system designed for legal mail, the inmate must use that system to receive the benefit of this rule.

ANNOTATION

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Law reviews. For article, ''Defects in Ineffective Assistance Standards Used By State Courts'', see 50 U. Colo. L. Rev. 389 (1979). For article, ''The Problem of Delay in the Colorado Court of Appeals'', see 58 Den. L.J. 1 (1980). For article, ''Colorado Felony Sentencing'', see 11 Colo. Law. 1478 (1982).

Compliance with the rules of court is prerequisite to appellate jurisdiction, and actions undertaken to avoid application of those rules, whether by the parties or by the trial court, cannot operate to confer jurisdiction. Dill v. County Court, 37 Colo. App. 75, 541 P.2d 1272 (1975); Moore & Co. v. Williams, 657 P.2d 984 (Colo. App. 1982).

Although adherence to strict jurisdictional notions may sometimes create a needless waste of judicial resources. In re Ross, 670 P.2d 26 (Colo. App. 1983).

Rule is procedural requirement without jurisdictional significance. Trial court's preparation and transmission of findings with an order nunc pro tunc to date of original sentencing was valid because trial court did not lose jurisdiction by initial oversight. People v. Abeyta, 677 P.2d 393 (Colo. App. 1983).

New requirement that notice of appeal be filed with the appellate court with an advisory copy served on the clerk of the trial court is jurisdictional, and strict compliance with the rule is required. Therefore, a notice of appeal erroneously filed in the trial court was of no effect under the new rules, and the trial court was without authority to grant an extension of time to correctly file a notice of appeal. Collins v. Boulder Urban Renewal Auth., 684 P.2d 952 (Colo. App. 1984).

The timely filing of notice of appeal is a jurisdictional prerequisite to appellate review. Estep v. People, 753 P.2d 1241 (Colo. 1988); Hillen v. Colo. Comp. Ins. Auth., 883 P.2d 586 (Colo. App. 1994).

Reduction of charge. In reducing a charge, the court in effect dismisses the greater charge and substitutes a lesser one. Through such action, the court does not dismiss the case in its entirety; therefore, the appeal of the case is governed by the procedures set forth in section (b)(3) of this rule and in C.A.R. 4.1, not section (b)(2), and must be filed within 10 days of the date of the order. People v. Severin, 122 P.3d 1073 (Colo. App. 2005).

Court does not pass upon plaintiff's claim that stay order was improperly entered where he did not formally protest that order by filing either a notice of appeal under this rule or a motion under C.A.R. 8. DiMarco v. Dept. of Rev., MVD, 857 P.2d 1349 (Colo. App. 1993).

This rule is inapplicable to review of orders of the industrial appeals panel. Picken v. Indus. Claim Appeals Office, 874 P.2d 485 (Colo. App. 1994).

Trial court may not correct jurisdictional defects in the appeal. Dill v. County Court, 37 Colo. App. 75, 541 P.2d 1272 (1975).

Rule on appellate review of criminal sentences controls over conflicting statute, § 18-1-409, which had not been amended after rule was changed. People v. Arevalo, 835 P. 2d 552 (Colo. App. 1992).

However, § 18-1-409 prevails over a conflicting supreme court rule in substantive matters. To the extent that section (c)(1) of this rule provides that every defendant may seek review of the propriety of his or her sentence, it conflicts with the substantive provisions of § 18-1-409 (1). People v. Prophet, 42 P.3d 61 (Colo. App. 2001).

A nunc pro tunc judgment may not be used to circumvent the time requirements of the rules of procedure. Dill v. County Court, 37 Colo. App. 75, 541 P.2d 1272 (1975).

Denver v. Bd. of Adjustment, 31 Colo. App. 324, 505 P.2d 44 (1972); People v. Samora, 188 Colo. 74, 532 P.2d 946 (1975); People v. Martinez, 190 Colo. 507, 549 P.2d 758 (1976); People v. Hinchman, 40 Colo. App. 9, 574 P.2d 866 (1977); Emerick v. Greene, 40 Colo. App. 246, 575 P.2d 441 (1977); Schenk v. Indus. Comm'n, 40 Colo. App. 350, 579 P.2d 1171 (1978); People v. McKnight, 41 Colo. App. 372, 588 P.2d 886 (1978); People v. Reyes, 42 Colo. App. 73, 589 P.2d 1385 (1979); People v. Mikkleson, 42 Colo. App. 77, 593 P.2d 975 (1979); People v. Malacara, 199 Colo. 243, 606 P.2d 1300 (1980); Widener v. District Court, 200 Colo. 398, 615 P.2d 33 (1980); People v. Foster, 200 Colo. 283, 615 P.2d 652 (1980); People v. Martinez, 628 P.2d 608 (Colo. 1981); People v. Francis, 630 P.2d 82 (Colo. 1981); People v. Hunt, 632 P.2d 572 (Colo. 1981); People v. Byerley, 635 P.2d 542 (Colo. 1981); People v. District Court, 638 P.2d 65 (Colo. 1981); People v. Boivin, 632 P.2d 1038 (Colo. App. 1981); In re Van Camp, 632 P.2d 1062 (Colo. App. 1981); Danielson v. Kerbs AG., Inc., 646 P.2d 363 (Colo. 1982); People v. Rafferty, 644 P.2d 102 (Colo. App. 1982); People v. Dennis, 649 P.2d 321 (Colo. 1982); People v. Cole, 648 P.2d 687 (Colo. App. 1982); People v. II. CIVIL CASES.

Timely filing of a notice of appeal is mandatory and jurisdictional. Chapman v. Miller, 29 Colo. App. 8, 476 P.2d 763 (1970); Concelman v. Ray, 36 Colo. App. 181, 538 P.2d 1343 (1975); In re Foster, 39 Colo. App. 130, 564 P.2d 429 (1977).

Compliance with section (a) is mandatory. Failure to comply deprives the appellate court of jurisdiction and precludes a review of the merits. Bosworth Data Servs., Inc. v. Gloss, 41 Colo. App. 530, 587 P.2d 1201 (1978).

Time limitation contained in section (a) is jurisdictional. Fed. Lumber Co. v. Hanley, 33 Colo. App. 18, 515 P.2d 480 (1973).

The filing of a notice of appeal is mandatory and a jurisdictional prerequisite for appellate review of a lower court decision. People v. Silvola, 198 Colo. 228, 597 P.2d 583 (1979).

Strict compliance with section (a) is essential. Laugesen v. Witkin Homes Inc., 29 Colo. App. 58, 479 P.2d 289 (1970).

A judgment of paternity is subject to this rule. This rule does not list specific orders that are appealable, and in the absence of any limiting language, a judgment of paternity is subject to it. People in Interest of N.S., 2017 COA 8, 413 P.3d 172.

Any appeal of the dismissal of a claim as barred by the Colorado Governmental Immunity Act, article 10 of title 24, C.R.S., must be sought immediately within the time limits specified in this rule, or it is barred. Buckles v. State, Div. of Wildlife, 952 P.2d 855 (Colo. App. 1998).

Jurisdictional defect created which warranted dismissal. Where trial court took no action with respect to appellant's posttrial motion within 60 days after that motion was filed, that motion was ''deemed denied'', pursuant to C.R.C.P. 59(j), so that appellant's failure to file notice of appeal within 45 days after the posttrial motion was ''deemed denied'' created a jurisdictional defect in the appeal which warranted dismissal under this rule. Baum v. State Bd. for Cmty. Colls., 715 P.2d 346 (Colo. App. 1986); Anderson v. Molitor, 738 P.2d 402 (Colo. App. 1987).

Lack of a proper order determining a C.R.C.P. 59 motion was not fatal to appeal where party appealed from underlying order of dissolution of marriage, not from denial of the rule 59 motion. In re Christen, 899 P.2d 339 (Colo. App. 1995).

Temporary orders as to maintenance are reviewable as a final judgment even if there has not been a final judgment in the form of a decree of dissolution. In re Nussbeck, 899 P.2d 347 (Colo. App. 1995), rev'd on other grounds, 974 P.2d 493 (Colo. 1999).

Post-trial motions for attorney fees are subject to the provisions of C.R.C.P. 59 and the effect of such motions upon the time limitations of this rule are as specified in C.R.C.P. 59. Torrez v. Day, 725 P.2d 1184 (Colo. App. 1986).

Requirements of this rule must be met for appeals of judgments for attorney fees. The award of attorney fees in a case is sufficiently separate from an underlying judgment on the merits to require that a separate notice of appeal be filed within the time limits of this rule from the judgment awarding attorney fees independently of the judgment entered on the merits of the underlying case. If this is not done, the court of appeals is not vested with subject matter jurisdiction to determine issues related to the award of attorney fees. Dawes Agency v. Am. Prop. Mortg., 804 P.2d 255 (Colo. App. 1990).

Judgment awarding prejudgment interest is not final until the amount of such interest is reduced to a sum certain. Grand County Custom Homebuilding, LLC v. Bell, 148 P.3d 398 (Colo. App. 2006).

Timely filing of motion for reconsideration of a completed post-trial ruling on an attorney fees issue tolls the time for filing a notice of appeal under this rule until the court determines the motion or the motion is deemed denied after 60 days pursuant to C.R.C.P. 59(j). Jensen v. Runta, 80 P.3d 906 (Colo. App. 2003).

The court of appeals is not usually precluded from reviewing an appeal merely because the notice of appeal was premature. Bush v. Winker, 892 P.2d 328 (Colo. App. 1994).

Calculation of timeliness of notice of appeal. The timeliness of a notice of appeal is calculated from the date the judgment appealed from is entered on the register of actions. Moore & Co. v. Williams, 672 P.2d 999 (Colo. 1983).

Construction given "announced" within context of section (a) for purposes of resolving timeliness of notices of appeal. Oral ruling on posttrial motions in presence of parties and their counsel did not constitute ''announcement'' of trial court's judgment. Judgment was not ''announced'' until signing of the order in its final form thereby deferring commencement of the running of the time to appeal until the parties were notified by mail of such action. City of Colo. Springs v. Timberland Assocs., 783 P.2d 287 (Colo. 1989).

For purposes of timeliness of notice of appeal, order of dismissal is final judgment and motion for reconsideration operated to suspend the running of time until the ruling thereon. Small v. Gen. Motors, 694 P.2d 374 (Colo. App. 1984).

Failure to file timely notice of appeal requires dismissal. An appeal must be dismissed when appellant has failed to file a timely notice of appeal under section (a). Fed. Lumber Co. v. Hanley, 33 Colo. App. 18, 515 P.2d 480 (1973).

Jurisdictionally defective notice insufficient. A notice of appeal which is jurisdictionally defective is not a ''timely notice of appeal'' as contemplated in section (a). Watered Down Farms v. Rowe, 39 Colo. App. 169, 566 P.2d 710 (1977), rev'd on other grounds, 195 Colo. 152, 576 P.2d 172 (1978).

Notice of appeal not timely filed. Earlier notice of appeal, which related to probate of will, did not provide notice of appeal of order vacating notices of lis pendens to estate property, and since no timely appeal was filed, court lacked jurisdiction over appeal. Matter of Estate of Anderson, 727 P.2d 867 (Colo. App. 1986).

Wife's creditor's claim was barred because she failed to timely file a notice of appeal for that specific claim. Although wife filed two claims on the same day addressing different elements of a singular probate case, each claim was distinctive, and the probate court ruled on each claim on separate dates. Because wife's creditor's claim was governed by a proceeding independent of the petition for spouse's elective share, the probate court's order barring wife's creditor's claim was a final order, and wife failed to timely appeal that particular claim pursuant to section (a). In re Estate of Gadash, 2017 COA 54, 413 P.3d 272.

Proponent's notice of appeal as to the probate court's November order denying a partial summary judgment was timely filed in March since the November court order adjudicated fewer than all of proponent's pending claims in the proceedings and, therefore, did not constitute a final judgment, but the court's intervening February order resolved the remaining issue pending between the parties. In re Estate of Scott, 119 P.3d 511 (Colo. App. 2004), aff'd, 136 P.3d 892 (Colo. 2006).

Notice of appeal timely filed when filed within 45 days of amended order. In trial involving title to a road segment, original order expressly deferred determination of road segment's width to a later date, and the notice of appeal was timely filed after trial court amended the order to incorporate the road segment's width. Camp Bird Colo., Inc. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs of Ouray, 215 P.3d 1277 (Colo. App. 2009).

Defendant's notice of appeal from automatic denial of motion to alter and amend judgment pursuant to C.R.C.P. 59(j) was untimely and prevents prosecution of the appeal. Sandoval v. Trinidad Area Health Ass'n, 752 P.2d 1062 (Colo. App. 1988).

When second motion to alter or amend not prerequisite to filing of notice. Where an appellant seeks no greater or different relief on appeal than that asked of the trial court in the motion directed to the original judgment, where appellant is not urging any new alleged errors arising from the amended judgment, and where the amended judgment is not the result of a post-judgment hearing involving controverted issues of fact, the appellant need not file another motion to alter or amend or for a new trial after entry of the amended judgment as a prerequisite to the filing of his notice of appeal. In re Foster, 39 Colo. App. 130, 564 P.2d 429 (1977).

Effect of filing motion for new trial. The running of the time for filing a notice of appeal is terminated upon the timely filing of a motion for new trial, and the time begins to run anew when that motion is denied. A subsequent motion for new trial that raises issues that either were or could have been raised in the movant's prior motion does not affect the running of the time for filing the notice of appeal. Wright Farms, Inc. v. Weninger, 669 P.2d 1054 (Colo. App. 1983); United Bank of Boulder, N.A. v. Buchanan, 836 P.2d 473 (Colo. App. 1992).

Denial of motion for new trial starts filing period. Until such time as the motion, for new trial is denied, plaintiff's time within which it may file an appeal in the supreme court does not even start to run. Commercial Credit Corp. v. Frederick, 164 Colo. 5, 431 P.2d 1016 (1967).

Where final order appealed from is denial of a C.R.C.P. 60(b) motion for relief from judgment, and C.R.C.P. 59 motion to reconsider such denial has been filed, time for filing notice of appeal runs from denial of C.R.C.P. 59 motion, not from the date of the underlying judgment. United Bank of Boulder, N.A. v. Buchanan, 836 P.2d 473 (Colo. App. 1992).

Final entry of judgment for purposes of timely notice of appeal under this rule based on denial of new trial motion is date on which court filed written judgment in fixed amount on special verdict. Vallejo v. Eldridge, 764 P.2d 417 (Colo. App. 1988).

Rule 60(b) motion is appealable independently of an underlying judgment, and, where the notice of appeal was timely as to the trial court's order denying defendant's motion to set aside the judgment dismissing the action, the appellate court has jurisdiction to consider it. Guevara v. Foxhoven, 928 P.2d 793 (Colo. App. 1996).

A notice of appeal must be filed within 45 days from the entry of an order granting or denying a motion filed pursuant to C.R.C.P. 59. Campbell v. McGill, 810 P.2d 199 (Colo. 1991).

When a party timely files a C.R.C.P. 59 motion, the running of the 45 days for the notice of appeal under section (a) of this rule is terminated and does not begin to run anew until either a ruling on the motion within 60 days or when the motion is deemed denied at the end of the 60-day period. Stone v. People, 895 P.2d 1154 (Colo. App. 1995).

If a C.R.C.P. 59 motion is timely filed, the time for filing a notice of appeal commences when the trial court determines that motion or when the motion is deemed denied under the rule. Guevara v. Foxhoven, 928 P.2d 793 (Colo. App. 1996).

One method by which to calculate the forty-nine-day period is from the date the court grants or denies a C.R.C.P. 59 motion. Semler v. Hellerstein, 2016 COA 143, 428 P.3d 555, rev'd on other grounds sub nom. Bewley v. Semler, 2018 CO 79, 432 P.3d 582.

Thus, the timely filing of a motion pursuant to C.R.C.P. 59 tolls the time for filing a notice of appeal. Goodwin v. Homeland Cent. Ins. Co., 172 P.3d 938 (Colo. App. 2007); Semler v. Hellerstein, 2016 COA 143, 428 P.3d 555, rev'd on other grounds sub nom. Bewley v. Semler, 2018 CO 79, 432 P.3d 582.

Filing notice gives extra time to all parties. The timely filing of a notice of appeal by any party affords an additional 14 days to all other parties, regardless of whether the party subsequently appealing was an appellee in the initial appeal. Kitto v. Gilbert, 39 Colo. App. 374, 570 P.2d 544 (1977).

Effect of filing motion to alter or amend judgment. The filing of a motion to alter or amend a judgment tolls the running of the time for filing notice of appeal. Valenzuela v. Mercy Hosp., 34 Colo. App. 5, 521 P.2d 1287 (1974).

Amendment of judgment does not extend filing period. Generally where an appellant procures an amendment of a judgment, the time period in which to file an appeal will not be extended. In re Everhart, 636 P.2d 1321 (Colo. App. 1981); Mosley v. Indus. Claim Appeals Office, 78 P.3d 1150 (Colo. App. 2003).

Neither does petition to show cause. The filing of a petition to show cause in the supreme court within a 10-day period following entry of final judgment, coupled with the filing of a motion in a trial court to suspend proceedings, does not stay the time to file a motion for a new trial under C.R.C.P. 59 or the time to proceed under C.A.R. 11 or this rule. Walter v. Walter, 136 Colo. 405, 318 P.2d 221 (1957).

Nor does pendency of motion for attorney fees and costs. The pendency of such a motion does not preclude a judgment on the merits from becoming final or toll the running of the 45-day period for filing a notice of appeal, at least where attorney fees are sought pursuant to a statutory fee-shifting provision rather than as damages. Goodwin v. Homeland Cent. Ins. Co., 172 P.3d 938 (Colo. App. 2007).

Parties may not waive requirement of timely filing. Parties may not by their independent action amend or waive the jurisdictional requirement of timely filing of a notice of appeal under section (a). Concelman v. Ray, 36 Colo. App. 181, 538 P.2d 1343 (1975).

Court may extend the time for filing a notice of appeal upon a showing of excusable neglect only in cases that are appealed from a trial court. Section (a) does not apply to appeals from rulings of an administrative agency. Martinez v. Colo. State Pers. Bd., 28 P.3d 978 (Colo. App. 2001).

Upon showing of excusable neglect, trial court may extend the time for filing the notice of appeal for a period not to exceed 30 days. Chapman v. Miller, 29 Colo. App. 8, 476 P.2d 763 (1970).

Finding of excusable neglect is supported by the record and binding upon review. F.W. Woolworth Co. v. State Dept. of Rev., 699 P.2d 1 (Colo. App. 1984).

Reason for late filing critical in determination of excusable neglect. Although the number of days that a filing is late may be one factor in determining whether neglect is excusable for purposes of extending time to file notice of appeal, the critical question is the reason for the late filing. Bosworth Data Servs., Inc. v. Gloss, 41 Colo. App. 530, 587 P.2d 1201 (1978).

Negligence of counsel generally is not considered "excusable neglect" which would justify the late filing of a notice of appeal under section (a). Trujillo v. Indus. Comm'n, 648 P.2d 1094 (Colo. App. 1982).

Nor attorney's press of work. The press of work or other activities of an attorney do not constitute excusable neglect. Cox v. Adams, 171 Colo. 37, 464 P.2d 513 (1970); Laugesen v. Witkin Homes, Inc., 29 Colo. App. 58, 479 P.2d 289 (1970).

Miscounting days within which to file notice of appeal does not constitute excusable neglect. Bosworth Data Servs., Inc. v. Gloss, 41 Colo. App. 530, 587 P.2d 1201 (1978); Kronkow, Inc. v. Wood, 44 Colo. App. 462, 615 P.2d 71 (1980).

Reliance on post office's assurance of timely delivery of notice of appeal did not constitute excusable neglect. Ford v. Henderson, 691 P.2d 754 (Colo. 1984).

Reliance on office staff to make appropriate filings did not constitute excusable neglect. Hillen v. Colo. Comp. Ins. Auth., 883 P.2d 586 (Colo. App. 1994).

Doctrine of "unique circumstances" and finding of excusable neglect. When counsel erroneously filed motion for extension of time to file notice of appeal of an order terminating parental rights with trial court instead of appellate court within 45-day period and counsel relied on trial court's erroneous extension of deadline and filed notice of appeal after the 45-day period but within the 30-day extension period for excusable neglect, court of appeals had jurisdiction to consider a request for late filing under ''unique circumstances'' doctrine and failure to find excusable neglect to justify extension of time was abuse of discretion. P.H. v. People in Interest of S.H., 814 P.2d 909 (Colo. 1991).

Refusal of extension was not abuse of discretion. Where there is no showing of excusable neglect, there is no abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court in its refusal to extend the time for filing the notice of appeal. Long v. Ross, 30 Colo. App. 436, 494 P.2d 128 (1972).

Forty-five-day time limit for filing appeal with court of appeals in tax assessment cases, rather than statutory time period, is applicable when appeal has first been filed with state board of assessment appeals and not in district court. Denver v. Bd. of Assessment Appeals, 748 P.2d 1306 (Colo. App. 1987).

"Unique circumstances" doctrine may be applied to allow the filing of notice of appeal in a kinship adoption proceeding governed by C.A.R. 4(a) beyond the 75-day jurisdictional deadline. Court shall consider the totality of the circumstances in decision to apply doctrine. In re C.A.B.L., 221 P.3d 433 (Colo. App. 2009).

Doctrine of unique circumstances not applicable because case does not involve a fundamental liberty interest and the doctrine should be rarely invoked. Petition of Heostis v. Dept. of Educ., 2016 COA 6, 375 P.3d 1232.

III. CRIMINAL CASES.

Appellate court may, for good cause shown, enlarge the time for filing under section (b). People v. Allen, 182 Colo. 395, 513 P.2d 1060 (1973); People v. Baker, 104 P.3d 893 (Colo. 2005).

Where public defender was notified of appointment to represent petitioner on last day on which petitioner could file late notice of appeal, court of appeals should have either allowed notice of appeal or given petitioner additional time to gather more supporting information rather than denying motion for out of time filing. Weason v. Colo. Court of Appeals, 731 P.2d 736 (Colo. 1987).

A motion filed after entry of the order challenged on appeal does not extend the time for the prosecution to file its notice past the 45 days allowed by this rule. People v. Retallack, 804 P.2d 279 (Colo. App. 1990).

But trial court cannot extend time for filing past 75 days. A trial court has no authority or jurisdiction to extend the time for filing of notice of appeal from criminal conviction past 60 days (now 75 days) after the entry of the judgment. People v. Allen, 182 Colo. 395, 513 P.2d 1060 (1973).

The excusable neglect provision does not apply to appeals by the people. People v. Gilmore, 97 P.3d 123 (Colo. App. 2003).

The civil cross-appeal rule that allows for sequential submissions does not apply in criminal cases. People v. Gilmore, 97 P.3d 123 (Colo. App. 2003).

An order granting a new trial is a final order pursuant to § 16-12-102, therefore, prosecution must file its appeal within 45 days of the order. People v. Curren, 228 P.3d 253 (Colo. App. 2009).

Order granting motion for a new trial not final judgment for purposes of appeal, and therefore people's failure to file appeal within 45 days of such order did not render subsequent appeal untimely. People v. Campbell, 738 P.2d 1179 (Colo. 1987).

Alleged errors must be preserved by objection and motion. Proper procedure necessitates that alleged error, including errors of a constitutional nature, be preserved by raising same by objection during the trial and by motion for a new trial. People v. Sanchez, 180 Colo. 119, 503 P.2d 619 (1972).

Timely but defective notice was adequate to invoke appellate jurisdiction. People v. Bost, 770 P.2d 1209 (Colo. 1989).

Perfection of appeal divests trial court of jurisdiction. Unless otherwise specifically authorized by statute or rule, once an appeal has been perfected, the trial court has no jurisdiction to issue further orders in the case relative to the order or judgment appealed from. Consequently, should it be necessary for the trial court to act, other than in aid of the appeal or pursuant to specific statutory authorization, the proper course would be for a party to obtain a limited remand from the appellate court. People v. Dillon, 655 P.2d 841 (Colo. 1982).

Sentence imposed after revocation of probation is final judgment. Where the trial court has initially imposed sentence on a defendant and has suspended execution of the sentence and granted probation, which is thereafter revoked, the resulting sentence imposed after revocation of probation is the final judgment. People v. Jenkins, 40 Colo. App. 140, 575 P.2d 13 (1977).

As is reversal of order imposing costs. The final judgment for purposes of appeal was entered when trial court reversed its previous order imposing costs on the defendant, and therefore state's appeal taken more than 30 days after sentencing was proper. People v. Fisher, 189 Colo. 297, 539 P.2d 1258 (1975).

When the court vacates a sentence, the time to file an appeal starts to run from the date when the court imposes the new sentence. People v. Hunsaker, 2013 COA 5, 411 P.3d 36, aff'd, 2015 CO 46, 351 P.3d 388.

Because § 16-12-102 (1) authorizes the people to appeal any decision of the trial court in a criminal case upon any question of law, section (b)(2) of this rule requires an appellate court to issue a written decision. People v. Wilburn, 2013 COA 135, 343 P.3d 998.

IV. REVIEW OF SENTENCES.

Misdemeanor sentence. There is no provision for appellate review of the propriety of a misdemeanor sentence. People v. Roberts, 668 P.2d 977 (Colo. App. 1983).

Sentencing by its very nature is a discretionary decision which requires the weighing of various factors and striking a fair accommodation between the defendant's need for rehabilitation or corrective treatment and society's interest in safety and deterrence. People v. Watkins, 200 Colo. 163, 613 P.2d 633 (1980).

Wide latitude will be given the trial court's final decision since it is in the best position to balance the many factors which must be considered in tailoring an appropriate sentence in each individual case. People v. Valencia, 630 P.2d 85 (Colo. 1981).

But discretion not unrestricted. The discretion implicit in the sentencing decision is not an unrestricted discretion devoid of reason or principle. People v. Watkins, 200 Colo. 163, 613 P.2d 633 (1980).

Sentencing decisions should reflect rational selection from various sentencing alternatives in a manner consistent with the dominant aims of the sentencing process. People v. Watkins, 200 Colo. 163, 613 P.2d 633 (1980).

Record to include reasons for imposition of sentence. Hereafter in felony convictions involving the imposition of a sentence to a correctional facility, the sentencing judge must state on the record the basic reasons for the imposition of sentence. People v. Watkins, 200 Colo. 163, 613 P.2d 633 (1980).

The statement of reasons that sentencing judge must state on record need not be lengthy, but should include the primary factual considerations bearing on the judge's sentencing decision. People v. Watkins, 200 Colo. 163, 613 P.2d 633 (1980).

Factors considered in sentencing. Some of the more common considerations significant to the sentencing process are: The gravity of the offense in terms of harm to person or property; the gravity of the offense in terms of the culpability requirement of the law; the defendant's history of prior criminal conduct; the degree of danger the defendant might present to the community if released forthwith; the likelihood of future criminality in the absence of corrective incarceration or treatment; the prospects for rehabilitation under some less drastic sentencing alternative, such as probation, and the likelihood of depreciating the seriousness of the offense were a less drastic sentencing alternative chosen. People v. Watkins, 200 Colo. 163, 613 P.2d 633 (1980).

In reviewing the district court's imposition of sentence, the supreme court is to consider the following factors: The nature of the offense, the character of the offender, the public interest in safety and deterrence, and the sufficiency and accuracy of the information on which the sentence was based. People v. Mattas, 645 P.2d 254 (Colo. 1982).

An appellate court must consider the nature of the offense, the character of the offender, and the public interest in safety and deterrence in reviewing a sentence claimed to be excessive. People v. Valencia, 630 P.2d 85 (Colo. 1981).

Review of propriety of sentence limited. Neither the court of appeals nor the supreme court of Colorado has jurisdiction to review the propriety of a sentence except on direct appeal from the initial sentence, and then only under the limitations established in this rule and in § 18-1-409. Mikkleson v. People, 199 Colo. 319, 618 P.2d 1101 (1980).

Record to justify extended term sentence. Where a sentence is imposed for an extended term, the record must clearly justify the decision of the sentencing judge. People v. Valencia, 630 P.2d 85 (Colo. 1981).

Sentence cannot be modified absent abuse of discretion. In reviewing the record in a proceeding under this rule, the sentence imposed cannot be modified unless it appears to the appellate court that the trial judge abused his discretion in imposing the sentence. People v. Walker, 189 Colo. 545, 542 P.2d 1283 (1975).

Trial court does not err in failing to hold hearing. When a defendant does not raise a question or move for a new trial, but raises the question for the first time on appeal of conviction, the trial court does not err in failing to hold a hearing "sua sponte" to determine such. People v. Sanchez, 180 Colo. 119, 503 P.2d 619 (1972).

Invoking fifth amendment at codefendant's trial. Where a defendant is appealing his sentence and fears that his testimony in the trial of his codefendant might be used at a subsequent hearing to enhance the sentence should it be vacated, he may invoke his fifth amendment right against self-incrimination. People v. Villa, 671 P.2d 971 (Colo. App. 1983).

The language of section (b)(2) is plain and unambiguous and dictates that if an appeal by the People is authorized by statute, the court of appeals must issue a written decision. People v. Jackson, 972 P.2d 698 (Colo. App. 1998).

Rule 4.1. Interlocutory Appeals in Criminal Cases

(a) Grounds. The state may file an interlocutory appeal in the Supreme Court from a ruling of a district court granting a motion under Crim. P. 41(e) and (g) and Crim. P. 41.1(i) made in advance of trial by the defendant for return of property and to suppress evidence or granting a motion to suppress an extra-judicial confession or admission; provided that the state certifies to the judge who granted such motion and to the Supreme Court that the appeal is not taken for purposes of delay and the evidence is a substantial part of the proof of the charge pending against the defendant.

(b) Limitation on Time of Issuance. An interlocutory appeal must be filed within 14 days after the entry of the order complained of. It shall not be a condition for the filing of such interlocutory appeal that a motion for a new trial or rehearing shall have been filed and denied in the trial court.

(c) How Filed. To file an interlocutory appeal the state, within the time fixed by this Rule, shall file the notice of appeal with the clerk of the appellate court with an advisory copy served on the clerk of the trial court.

(d) Record. The record for an interlocutory appeal shall consist of the information or indictment, the plea of the defendant or the defendants, the motions filed by the defendant or defendants on the grounds stated in section (a) above, the reporter's transcript of all testimony taken at the hearing on said motions and such exhibits or reasonable copies, facsimiles, or photographs thereof as the parties may designate (subject to the provisions in C.A.R. 10(c)(3) pertaining to exhibits of bulk), the order of court ruling on said motions together with the date, if one has been fixed, that the case is set for trial or a certificate by the clerk that the case has not been set for trial. After the filing of the record, such other exhibits or reasonable copies, facsimiles, or photographs thereof shall be transmitted by the clerk of the trial court to the appellate court as the appellate court may order. The record shall be filed within 14 days of the date of filing the notice of appeal.

(e) Appearances. The state in these proceedings shall be represented by the district attorney, and briefs shall be prepared by the district attorney's office and responsive briefs or pleadings served upon that office.

(f) Briefs. Within 14 days after the record has been filed in the Supreme Court, the state shall file its brief, and within 14 days thereafter, the appellee shall file the answer brief, and the state shall have 7 days after service of the answer brief to file any reply brief.

(g) Disposition of Cause. No oral argument shall be permitted except when ordered by the court. The decision of the court shall be by written opinion, copies of which shall be transmitted by the clerk of the court to the trial judge and to one attorney on each side of the case. No petition for rehearing shall be permitted. Remittitur shall accompany said opinion.

(h) Time. The time limits herein may only be enlarged by order of the appropriate court before the existing time limit has expired.

Source: (b), (d), and (f) amended and adopted December 14, 2011, effective January 1, 2012, for all cases pending on or filed on or after January 1, 2012, pursuant to C.R.C.P. 1(b); entire rule amended and effective June 23, 2014; (d) amended and adopted October 26, 2017, effective January 1, 2018.

ANNOTATION

Rule not violative of equal protection. The provisions of this rule permitting only the prosecution to enter an interlocutory appeal are not violative of equal protection, since the prosecution is precluded from placing the defendant in double jeopardy after the final verdict has been reached, and its only meaningful avenue of appeal must be found in a prejudgment proceeding. People v. Traubert, 199 Colo. 322, 608 P.2d 342 (1980).

This rule requires filing of an interlocutory appeal within ten days after entry of an appealable order. However, where there was no indication that entry of a motion to reconsider was an attempt to circumvent the appeals process or delay the proceedings, the prosecution complied with this rule by filing an appeal within ten days after the modified ruling. People v. Melton, 910 P.2d 672 (Colo. 1996).

In order to toll the time for filing an interlocutory appeal, a motion to reconsider a trial court order of suppression must be filed within ten days of the date of the order of suppression. People v. Powers, 47 P.3d 686 (Colo. 2002).

This rule provides an appeal for the prosecution rather than defendant, therefore, the court does not have jurisdiction to address any issues resolved by the trial court in favor of the prosecution. People v. Gothard, 185 P.3d 180 (Colo. 2008).

Issues raised by defendant are not normally included. An interlocutary appeal by the people under this rule does not normally include issues raised by the defendant. People v. Barton, 673 P.2d 1005 (Colo. 1984).

The supreme court has no jurisdiction to address a ruling adverse to the defendant in an interlocutory appeal under this rule. People v. Oates, 698 P.2d 811 (Colo. 1985); People v. Griffin, 727 P.2d 55 (Colo. 1986); People v. Weston, 869 P.2d 1293 (Colo. 1994).

This rule does not interfere with defendant's rights to appeal his conviction after a verdict has been reached. People v. Traubert, 199 Colo. 322, 608 P.2d 342 (1980).

This rule is designed as procedural device to facilitate review, and does not represent a constitutional right on the part of either the defendant or the state. People v. Renfrow, 172 Colo. 399, 473 P.2d 957 (1970).

Reduction of charge. In reducing a charge, the court in effect dismisses the greater charge and substitutes a lesser one. Through such action, the court does not dismiss the case in its entirety; therefore, the appeal of the case is governed by the procedures set forth in C.A.R. 4(b)(3) and in this rule, not C.A.R. 4(b)(2), and must be filed within 10 days of the date of the order. People v. Severin, 122 P.3d 1073 (Colo. App. 2005).

Interlocutory appeals may not be employed to obtained pretrial review of issues not covered by this rule. People v. Dailey, 639 P.2d 1068 (Colo. 1982); People v. Cummings, 706 P.2d 766 (Colo. 1985); People v. Weston, 869 P.2d 1293 (Colo. 1994).

Interlocutory appeal rule may not be employed to "piggyback" issues not embraced by that rule for pretrial review. People v. Morrison, 196 Colo. 319, 583 P.2d 924 (1978).

Where a suppression order is based on conclusions that statements were the product of an illegal arrest and of a custodial interrogation not preceded by Miranda warnings, a district court must make sufficient findings of fact and conclusions of law to identify each of the statements at issue and to permit appellate review of its rulings with regard to whether the statements must be suppressed. People v. Haurey, 859 P.2d 889 (Colo. 1993).

Appellate court has the responsibility of ascertaining whether the trial court's legal conclusions are supported by sufficient evidence and whether the trial court applied the correct legal standard. People v. Brazzel, 18 P.3d 1285 (Colo. 2001).

Trial court's findings of fact are entitled to deference by a reviewing court, but when the absence of factual findings regarding key contested issues hinders appellate review, or when unresolved evidentiary conflicts exist with regard to material facts, case must be remanded to the trial court for further fact-finding. People v. Brazzel, 18 P.3d 1285 (Colo. 2001).

Review of suppression hearings. This rule is designed to review rulings of the trial court made upon suppression hearings under Crim. P. 41(e) and Crim. P. 41(g). People v. Thornburg, 173 Colo. 230, 477 P.2d 372 (1970); People v. Cobbin, 692 P.2d 1069 (Colo. 1984).

Interlocutory appeals are limited to motions to suppress, and it is contemplated that the motion be disposed of prior to trial. People v. Voss, 191 Colo. 338, 552 P.2d 1012 (1976).

And only from adverse rulings. Interlocutory appeals under this rule may only be appealed from adverse rulings on Crim. P. 41 motion. People v. Fidler, 175 Colo. 90, 485 P.2d 725 (1971). See People v. McNulty, 173 Colo. 491, 480 P.2d 560 (1971).

Unless an adverse trial court ruling is within the scope of Crim. P. 41(e) and Crim. P. 41(g), it is not within an appellate court's jurisdiction on interlocutory appeal under this rule. People v. Patterson, 175 Colo. 19, 485 P.2d 494 (1971). See People v. Thornburg, 173 Colo. 230, 477 P.2d 372 (1970); People v. Braunthal, 31 P.3d 167 (Colo. 2001).

Only three circumstances for interlocutory appeal of a suppression order. Review is proper where evidence was suppressed due to:

(1) An unlawful search and seizure; (2) an involuntary confession or admission; or (3) an improperly ordered or insufficiently supported, nontestimonial identification. People v. Braunthal, 31 P.3d 167 (Colo. 2001).

Prosecution's brief and the record do not support certification that defendant's statements form a substantial part of the evidence where defendant's statements were made during transport as a part of a non-material, benign interchange meant to solace the defendant and where the officer did not immediately prepare any notes or reports documenting the statements. People v. MacCallum, 925 P.2d 758 (Colo. 1996).

Statements suppressed by trial court held to constitute substantial part of proof of charges pending against defendant; therefore, prosecution was entitled to bring interlocutory appeal. People v. Mendoza-Rodriguez, 790 P.2d 810 (Colo. 1990).

Suppression order based upon sanctions was not reviewable under this rule. However, the court could consider the issue on an interlocutory appeal under C.A.R. 21. People v. Casias, 59 P.3d 853 (Colo. 2002).

Supreme court will not expand jurisdiction. The supreme court will not stray beyond the scope of its interlocutory appeal jurisdiction set forth in this rule and will not consider rulings issued in a preliminary hearing held in conjunction with a motion to suppress. People v. Singleton, 174 Colo. 138, 482 P.2d 978 (1971).

If the evidence or statement suppressed is not a ''substantial part'' of the proof which may be offered against the defendant, the supreme court will not address the substantive issues raised by the interlocutory appeal. People v. Harding, 671 P.2d 975 (Colo. App. 1983).

Where review of the record provided on appeal convinced court that the defendant's statement, suppressed under Crim. P. 41(g) did not form a ''substantial part'' of the proof to be offered against the defendant, the court refused to address the substantive issues raised by the prosecution. People v. Valdez, 621 P.2d 332 (Colo. 1981).

An order granting a motion to sever a count for separate trial is not within scope of rule. People v. Wallace, 724 P.2d 670 (Colo. 1986).

Proceeding is interlocutory in nature if it intervenes between the commencement and the final decision of a case. People v. Medina, 40 Colo. App. 490, 583 P.2d 293 (1978).

An appeal could not be interlocutory where it was from a final order after trial. People v. Voss, 191 Colo. 338, 552 P.2d 1012 (1976).

Ruling granting a defendant's pretrial motion to suppress is subject to interlocutory appeal under this rule. People v. Nunez, 658 P.2d 879 (Colo. 1983).

Lineup identification is question for trial, and not interlocutory appeal. The question of whether eyewitness identification evidence was obtained from a lineup that was overly suggestive is a matter to be resolved at trial; it is not within the ambit of the interlocutory appeal rule since it is not a proper subject of a pretrial suppression hearing. People v. Thornburg, 173 Colo. 230, 477 P.2d 372 (1970).

Order suppressing statement which prosecution sought to use only for impeachment purposes if defendant elected to testify is not subject to interlocutory appeal because it was not a substantial part of the prosecution's proof. People v. Garner, 736 P.2d 413 (Colo. 1987).

But suppression order was properly the subject of an interlocutory appeal under this rule where the suppressed statements concerned a murder conspiracy, jointly fabricated alibi, and videotaped confession that constituted a substantial part of the proof of the pending charges. People v. Matheny, 46 P.3d 453 (Colo. 2002).

Court exercised its discretion to review district court's full pretrial order even though order did not ''neatly'' fall within the scope of this rule. People v. Luna-Solis, 2013 CO 21, 298 P.3d 927.

A ruling limiting the scope of cross-examination of a witness in a criminal case is not appealable under this rule. People v. Haurey, 859 P.2d 889 (Colo. 1993).

Record did not support the prosecution's certification that statements were a substantial part of the evidence. People v. Mounts, 801 P.2d 1199 (Colo. 1990).

Interlocutory appeal unavailable in delinquency proceedings. An interlocutory appeal is not available to either the state or the respondent in a delinquency proceeding under the Colorado children's code. People in Interest of P.L.V. v. P.L.V., 172 Colo. 269, 472 P.2d 127 (1970); People in Interest of G.D.K. v. G.D.K., 30 Colo. App. 54, 491 P.2d 81 (1971). See People in Interest of P.L.V., 176 Colo. 342, 490 P.2d 685 (1971).

Findings on second motion held sufficient to support ruling in earlier case. Where in one case the district judge, in denying the motion to suppress, did not make sufficient findings, but in another case the findings upon denial of the motion to suppress were amply sufficient, since the findings in the second case were by the same court, although by a different judge, since the rulings by both judges were the same, and since the parties and the search — and in substantial effect the testimony — are identical, the supreme court is justified in considering the findings in the second case as governing the first case. It would be useless to remand the first case for findings. People v. Ramey, 174 Colo. 250, 483 P.2d 374 (1971).

Applied in People v. McGahey, 179 Colo. 401, 500 P.2d 977 (1972); People v. District Court, 196 Colo. 401, 586 P.2d 31 (1978); People v. Lott, 197 Colo. 78, 589 P.2d 945 (1979); People v. Hillyard, 197 Colo. 83, 589 P.2d 939 (1979); People in Interest of M.R.J., 633 P.2d 474 (Colo. 1981); People v. Ferguson, 653 P.2d 725 (Colo. 1982); People v. Crippen, 223 P.3d 114 (Colo. 2010).

Rule 4.2. Interlocutory Appeals in Civil Cases

(a) Discretionary Interlocutory Appeals. Upon certification by the trial court, or stipulation of all parties, the court of appeals may, in its discretion, allow an interlocutory appeal of an order in a civil action. This rule applies only to cases governed by C.R.S. 13-4-102.1.

(b) Grounds for Granting Interlocutory Appeal. Grounds for certifying and allowing an interlocutory appeal are:

(1) Where immediate review may promote a more orderly disposition or establish a final disposition of the litigation; and

(2) The order involves a controlling and unresolved question of law. For purposes of this rule, an ''unresolved question of law'' is a question that has not been resolved by the Colorado Supreme Court or determined in a published decision of the Colorado Court of Appeals, or a question of federal law that has not been resolved by the United States Supreme Court.

(c) Procedure in the Trial Court. The party seeking to appeal shall move for certification or submit a stipulation signed by all parties within 14 days after the date of the order to be appealed, stating that the appeal is not being sought for purposes of delay. The trial court may, in its discretion, certify an order as immediately appealable, but if all parties stipulate, the trial court must forthwith certify the order. Denial of a motion for certification is not appealable.

(d) Procedure in the Appellate Court. If the trial court certifies an order for an interlocutory appeal, the party seeking an appeal shall file a petition to appeal with the clerk of the court of appeals with an advisory copy served on the clerk of the trial court within 14 days of the date of the trial court's certification.

(1) Docketing of Petition and Fees; Form of Papers. Upon the filing of a petition to appeal, appellant shall pay to the clerk of the court of appeals the applicable docket fee. All papers filed under this rule shall comply with C.A.R. 32.

(2) Number of Copies to be Filed and Served. An original of any petition or brief shall be filed. One set of supporting documents shall be filed.

(3) Content of Papers and Service.

(A) The petition shall contain a caption that complies with C.A.R. 3(d)(1) and C.A.R. 32.

(B) To enable the court to determine whether the petition should be granted, the petition shall disclose in sufficient detail the following:

(i) The identities of all parties and their status in the proceeding below;

(ii) The order being appealed;

(iii) The reasons why immediate review may promote a more orderly disposition or establish a final disposition of the litigation and why the order involves a controlling and unresolved question of law;

(iv) The issues presented;

(v) The facts necessary to understand the issues presented;

(vi) Argument and points of authority explaining why the petition to appeal should be granted and why the relief requested should be granted; and

(vii) A list of supporting documents, or an explanation of why supporting documents are not available.

(C) The petition shall include the names, addresses, email addresses and telephone and fax numbers, if any, of all parties to the proceeding below; or, if a party is represented by counsel, the attorney's name, address, email address and telephone and fax numbers.

(D) The petition shall be served upon each party and the court below.

(4) Supporting Documents. A petition shall be accompanied by a separate, indexed set of available supporting documents adequate to permit review. Some or all of the following documents may be necessary:

(A) The order being appealed;

(B) Documents and exhibits submitted in the proceeding below that are necessary for a complete understanding of the issues presented;

(C) A transcript of the proceeding leading to the order below.

(5) No Initial Response to Petition Allowed. Unless requested by the court of appeals, no response to the petition shall be filed prior to the court's determination of whether to grant or deny the petition.

(6) Briefs. If the court grants the petition to appeal, the petition to appeal shall serve as appellant's opening brief. The appellee shall file an answer brief and the appellant may file a reply brief according to a briefing schedule established by the court in its order granting the petition to appeal. The petition and briefs shall comply with the limitations on length contained in C.A.R. 28(g).

(7) Oral Argument. Oral argument is governed by C.A.R. 34.

(8) Petition for Rehearing. In all proceedings under this Rule 4.2, where the court of appeals has issued an opinion on the merits of the interlocutory appeal, a petition for rehearing may be filed in accordance with the provisions of C.A.R. 40.

(e) Stay of Trial Court Proceedings.

(1) The filing of a petition under this rule does not stay any proceeding below or the running of any applicable time limit. If the appellant seeks temporary stay pending the court's determination of whether to grant the petition to appeal, a stay ordinarily shall be sought in the first instance from the trial court. If a request for stay below is impracticable or not promptly ruled upon or is denied, the appellant may file a separate motion for temporary stay in the court of appeals supported by accompanying materials justifying the requested stay.

(2) An order granting the petition to appeal by the court of appeals automatically stays all proceedings below until final determination of the interlocutory appeal in the court of appeals unless the court, sua sponte, or upon motion lifts such stay in whole or in part.

(f) Effect of Failure to Seek or Denial of Interlocutory Review. Failure to seek or obtain interlocutory review shall not limit the scope of review upon an appeal from entry of the final judgment.

(g) Supreme Court Review. Denial of a petition to appeal is not subject to certiorari review. A decision of the court of appeals on the merits shall be subject to certiorari review. No provision of this rule limits the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under C.A.R. 21.

(h) All matters in the Court of Appeals under this rule shall be heard and determined by a special or regular division of three judges as assigned by the Chief Judge.

Interlocutory resolution would not promote a more orderly disposition. Where plaintiff petitioned for interlocutory review of district court's order that economic loss rule barred plaintiff's other claims against defendants, immediate review would not have avoided a trial.

Therefore, interlocutory resolution of the economic loss question would not promote a more orderly disposition of the litigation. Wahrman v. Golden W. Realty, 313 P.3d 674 (Colo. App. 2011).

Trial court cannot certify sua sponte an issue for interlocutory review. In Interest of M.K.D.A.L., 2014 COA 148, 410 P.3d 559.

A trial court has no authority to extend the deadline contained in section (c). This rule itself says nothing about extending the deadlines established therein. Further, a trial court lacks inherent authority to extend that deadline. Farm Deals, LLLP v. State, 2012 COA 6, 300 P.3d 921.

The 14-day deadline in section (d) is jurisdictional. A party's failure to timely file a petition to appeal deprives the appellate court of jurisdiction to consider the appeal. Farm Deals, LLLP v. State, 2012 COA 6, 300 P.3d 921.

An appellate court may, for good cause, extend the time for filing under section (d) of this rule. Pursuant to C.A.R. 26(b), an appellate court may, for good cause shown, enlarge time prescribed under the Colorado appellate rules. Farm Deals, LLLP v. State, 2012 COA 6, 300 P.3d 921.

Motion to trial court to reconsider disqualification order did not toll the provisions of section (c) requiring the filing of a motion or stipulation for certification by the trial court within 14 days after the date of the disqualification order. The trial court does not have authority pursuant to C.R.C.P 6(b) to extend the 14-day deadline for filing a motion for certification of issues in the trial court. The department of human services' motion for reconsideration was not a C.R.C.P. 59 motion. Further, C.A.R. 26(b) does not apply because the failure to timely file was not the result of excusable neglect. People in Interest of A.M.C., 2014 COA 31, 411 P.3d 90.

Generally, an issue of contract interpretation that applies well-settled principles is not a "question of law" for purposes of this rule. Rich v. Ball Ranch P'ship, 2015 COA 6, 345 P.3d 980.

Applied in Kowalchik v. Brohl, 2012 COA 25, 277 P.3d 885; Triple Crown v. Vill. Homes of Colo., 2013 COA 144, 389 P.3d 888.

Rule 5. Entry of Appearance and Withdrawal

(a) Entry of Appearance. No attorney shall appear in any matter before the court until the attorney has entered an appearance by filing an Entry of Appearance or signing a pleading. An entry of appearance shall state (a) the identity of the party for whom the appearance is made; (b) the attorney's office address; (c) the attorney's telephone number; and (d) the attorney registration number.

(b) Withdrawal. An attorney may withdraw from a case only upon order of court. Such approval shall rest in the sound discretion of the court, and shall not be granted until the attorney seeking to withdraw has made reasonable efforts to give actual notice to the client:

(1) That the attorney wishes to withdraw;

(2) That the court retains jurisdiction;

(3) That the client has the burden of keeping the court informed where notices, pleadings or other papers may be served;

(4) That the client has the obligation to prepare for all appellate proceedings, or secure other counsel to so prepare;

(5) That if the client fails or refuses to meet these burdens, the court may impose appropriate sanctions;

(6) Of the dates of any proceedings and that the holding of such proceedings will not be affected by the withdrawal of counsel;

(7) If the client is not a natural person, that it must be represented by counsel in any appellate proceeding unless it is a closely held entity and first complies with section 13-1-127, C.R.S.;

(8) That process may be served upon the client at his last known address; and

(9) Of the client's right to object within 14 days of the date of the notice.

(c) Written Notification Certificate. The attorney seeking to withdraw shall prepare a notification certificate stating that the above notification requirements have been met and the manner by which such notification was given to the client, and setting forth the client's last known address and telephone number. The notification certificate shall be filed with the court and a copy mailed to the client and all other parties. The client and opposing counsel shall have 14 days prior to entry of an order permitting withdrawal or such lesser time as the court may permit within which to file objections to the withdrawal. After order permitting withdrawal, the client shall be notified by the withdrawing attorney of the effective date of the withdrawal and all pleadings, notices or other papers may be served on the party directly by mail at the last known address of the party until new counsel enters an appearance.

(d) Entries of Appearance and Withdrawals by Members or Employees of Law Firms, Professional Corporations or Clinics. The entry of an appearance or withdrawal by an attorney who is a member or an employee of a law firm, professional corporation or clinic shall relieve other members or employees of the same law firm, professional corporation or clinic from the necessity of filing additional entries of appearance or withdrawal in the same litigation unless otherwise indicated.

(e) Notice of Limited Representation Entry of Appearance and Withdrawal. An attorney may undertake to provide limited representation to a pro se party involved in a civil appellate proceeding. Upon the request and with the consent of a pro se party, an attorney may make a limited appearance for the pro se party to file a notice of appeal and designation of transcripts in the court of appeals or the supreme court, to file or oppose a petition or cross-petition for a writ of certiorari in the supreme court, to respond to an order to show cause issued by the supreme court or the court of appeals, or to participate in one or more specified motion proceedings in either court, if the attorney files and serves with the court and the other parties and attorneys (if any) a notice of the limited appearance prior to or simultaneous with the proceeding(s) for which the attorney appears. At the conclusion of such proceeding(s), the attorney's appearance terminates without the necessity of leave of court, upon the attorney filing a notice of completion of limited appearance in the appellate court in which the attorney appeared, a copy of which may be filed in any other court, except that an attorney filing a notice of appeal or petition or cross-petition for writ of certiorari is obligated, absent leave of court, to respond to any issues regarding the appellate court's jurisdiction. Service on an attorney who makes a limited appearance for a party shall be valid only in connection with the specific proceedings(s) for which the attorney appears. The provisions of this C.A.R. 5(e) shall not apply to an attorney who has filed an opening or answer brief pursuant to C.A.R. 31.

(f) Termination of Representation. When an attorney has entered an appearance, other than a limited appearance pursuant to C.A.R. 5(e), on behalf of a party in an appellate court without having previously represented that party in the matter in any other court, the attorney's representation of the party shall terminate at the conclusion of the proceedings in the appellate court in which the attorney has appeared, unless otherwise directed by the appellate court or agreed to by the attorney and the party represented. Counsel may file a notice of such termination of representation in any other court.

COMMENT

The purpose of C.A.R. 5(e) is to establish a procedure similar to that set forth in Colorado Rule of Civil Procedure 121 Section 1-1(5). This procedure provides assurance that an attorney who makes a limited appearance for a pro se party in a specified appellate case proceeding(s), at the request of and with the consent of the pro se party, can withdraw from the case upon filing a notice of completion of the limited appearance, without leave of court. The purpose of C.A.R. 5(f) is to make clear that when an attorney appears for a party, whom he or she has not previously represented, in an appellate court and the proceedings in that court have concluded, the attorney is not obligated to represent the party in any other proceeding on remand or in any review of the appellate court's decision by any other court. Nothing in this provision would prevent the attorney from entering a limited or general appearance on behalf of the party in another court (for example, on a writ of certiorari to the supreme court), if agreed to by the attorney and the party.

Rule 6. No Colorado Rule

Rule 7. Bond for Costs on Appeal in Civil Cases

Unless an appellant is exempted by law, or has filed a supersedeas bond or other undertaking which includes security for the payment of costs on appeal, in civil cases a bond for costs on appeal or equivalent security shall be filed by the appellant in the trial court with the notice of appeal; but security shall not be required of an appellant who is not subject to costs. The bond or equivalent security shall be in the sum or value of $250 unless the trial court fixes a different amount. A bond for costs on appeal shall have sufficient surety, and it or any equivalent security shall be conditioned to secure the payment of costs if the appeal is finally dismissed or the judgment affirmed, or of such costs as the appellate court may direct if the judgment is modified. If a bond or equivalent security in the sum or value of $250 is given, no approval thereof is necessary. After a bond for costs on appeal is filed, an appellee may raise for determination by the clerk of the trial court objections to the form of the bond or to the sufficiency of the surety. The provisions of C.A.R. 8(b) apply to a surety upon a bond given pursuant to this Rule.

An indigent plaintiff should be allowed to proceed on appeal under this rule without payment of a cost bond. In re Delahoussaye, 924 P.2d 1210 (Colo. App. 1996).

This rule does not apply to an appeal filed directly from an administrative agency. For the purposes of this rule, an administrative hearing is not a ''civil case''. Anheuser Busch, Inc. v. Indus. Claim Appeals Office, 28 P.3d 969 (Colo. App. 2001).

Applied in Caldwell v. Armstrong, 642 P.2d 47 (Colo. App. 1981).

Rule 8. Stay or Injunction Pending Appeal

(a) Motions for Stay.

(1) Initial Motion in District Court. A party must ordinarily move first in the district court for the following relief:

(A) a stay of the judgment or order of a district court pending appeal;

(B) approval of a supersedeas bond; or

(C) an order suspending, modifying, restoring, or granting an injunction while an appeal is pending.

(2) Motion in Appellate Court; Conditions on Relief. A motion for relief under Rule 8(a)(1) may be made to the appellate court or to an appellate justice or judge.

(A) any such motion must:

(i) show that moving first in the district court would be impracticable, or

(ii) show that the district court has denied an application, or has failed to afford the relief requested, and state the reasons given by the district court for its action.

(B) The motion must also include:

(i) the reasons for granting the relief requested and the facts relied on;

(ii) originals or copies of affidavits or other sworn statements if the facts are in dispute; and

(iii) relevant parts of the record.

(C) The moving party must give reasonable notice of the motion to all parties.

(D) A motion under this Rule 8(a)(2) must be filed with the clerk but in exceptional cases where such filing would be impracticable due to the requirements of time, the motion may be made to and considered by a single justice or judge.

(E) Except as provided in Rule 8(c), the appellate court may condition relief on a party's filing a bond or other appropriate security in the district court.

(b) Proceedings Against Sureties. If a party gives security in the form of a bond or stipulation or other undertaking with one or more sureties, each surety submits to the jurisdiction of the district court and irrevocably appoints the district court clerk as the surety's agent on whom any documents affecting the surety's liability on the bond or undertaking may be served. On motion, the surety's liability may be enforced in the district court without the necessity of an independent action. The motion and any notice that the district court prescribes may be served on the district court clerk, who must mail a copy to each surety whose address is known.

(c) When Bond Not Required. The appellate court may, in its discretion, dispense with or limit the amount of bond when the appellant is an executor, administrator, conservator, or guardian of an estate and has given sufficient bond as such. The appellate court shall not require the following to furnish bond:

(1) the state;

(2) the county commissioners of the various counties;

(3) cities;

(4) towns;

(5) school districts;

(6) charitable, educational, and reformatory institutions under the patronage or control of the state; and

(7) public officials when suing or defending in their official capacities for the benefit of the public.

(d) Bond; Release of Lien or of Notice of Lis Pendens. If a money judgment has been made a lien upon real estate, the lien will be released when a bond is given. The clerk of the court that granted a stay will issue a certificate that the judgment has been stayed. The certificate may be recorded with the recorder of the county in which the real estate is situated. The certificate may also be served on any officer holding an execution. Upon such service, all proceedings under such execution must be discontinued, and the officer must return the same to the issuing court together with the certificate served on the officer. The return must indicate what the officer has done under the execution.

ANNOTATION

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Law reviews. For article, ''Supreme Court Proceedings: Rules 111-119'', see 23 Rocky Mtn. L. Rev. 618 (1951). For article, ''Appellate Procedure and the New Supreme Court Rules'', see 30 Dicta 1 (1953). For article, ''Some Observations on Colorado Appellate Practice'', see 34 Dicta 363 (1957).

This rule must be observed, and the supreme court will grant the application for supersedeas only after compliance with the rule. Alsup v. Alsup, 76 Colo. 260, 230 P. 796 (1924).

Trial court's jurisdiction usually lost upon perfection of appeal. Under normal appellate procedures a trial court loses its jurisdiction over a case as soon as an appeal is perfected in an appellate court. Hylton v. City of Colo. Springs, 32 Colo. App. 9, 505 P.2d 26 (1973).

But jurisdiction reinvested upon appellate court's decision. When an appellate court announces its decision to affirm, reverse, remand, or modify then a trial court is automatically reinvested with jurisdiction. Hylton v. City of Colo. Springs, 32 Colo. App. 9, 505 P.2d 26 (1973).

No power to stay writ of habeas corpus. A court has no power to stay proceedings upon an order of discharge of a prisoner upon a writ of habeas corpus. Geer v. Alaniz, 137 Colo. 432, 326 P.2d 71 (1958).

Court does not pass upon plaintiff's claim that the stay order was improperly entered when he did not formally protest that order by filing either a notice of appeal under C.A.R. 4 or a motion under this rule. DiMarco v. Dept. of Rev., MVD, 857 P.2d 1349 (Colo. App. 1993).

Although a habeas corpus proceeding is a civil action, this rule and Rule 62, C.R.C.P., do not apply, and stays of execution are not appropriate in such a proceeding. Geer v. Alaniz, 137 Colo. 432, 326 P.2d 71 (1958).

Applied in Bernstein v. Goldberg, 81 Colo. 39, 253 P. 477 (1927); Shotking v. Atchison, T. & S.F.R.R., 124 Colo. 141, 235 P.2d 990 (1951); Williams v. Guaranty Nat'l Ins. Co., 152 Colo. 457, 382 P.2d 802 (1963).

II. APPLICATION FOR STAY OR INJUNCTION.

"Supersedeas" defined. Supersedeas is merely an auxiliary process designed to supersede the enforcement of the judgment of the court below brought up on appeal for review. Monks v. Hemphill, 119 Colo. 378, 203 P.2d 503 (1949).

Appeal may be had without supersedeas. The appeal and supersedeas are two separate things, and the appeal can be sustained without a supersedeas. Monks v. Hemphill, 119 Colo. 378, 203 P.2d 503 (1949).

But stay of execution must be sought by supersedeas. Where a stay of execution is desired by appellant, such relief must be sought by application for supersedeas. Alden Sign Co. v. Roblee, 119 Colo. 409, 203 P.2d 915 (1949).

Record must be complete before supersedeas will be granted. While the record must be complete before an application for supersedeas will be granted, in a case involving many parties and many causes of action and counterclaims, if it is complete so far as concerns those controversies in which error is assigned, it will be sufficient. Murray v. Stuart, 77 Colo. 167, 234 P. 1113 (1925).

Supersedeas not granted until application made therefor. Whether or not a supersedeas should be granted will not be considered until an application is made for the writ. Ward v. Ward, 89 Colo. 396, 3 P.2d 415 (1931).

Trial court may issue a stay either before or after a notice of appeal is filed. Odd Fellows Bldg. & Inv. Co. v. City of Englewood, 667 P.2d 1358 (Colo. 1983).

To determine whether to stay an order denying or granting an injunction, a court must consider four factors: (1) Whether the stay applicant has made a strong showing that he or she is likely to succeed on the merits; (2) whether the applicant will be irreparably injured absent a stay; (3) whether issuance of the stay will substantially injure the other parties interested in the proceeding; and (4) where the public interest lies. Romero v. City of Fountain, 307 P.3d 120 (Colo. App. 2011).

The probability of success that must be demonstrated is inversely proportional to the amount of irreparable injury a plaintiff will suffer absent the stay. More of one excuses less of the other. Romero v. City of Fountain, 307 P.3d 120 (Colo. App. 2011).

Supersedeas not granted to stay execution for costs. Where a supersedeas would serve only to stay an execution for costs application for the writ will be denied. Hunter v. Stapleton, 77 Colo. 456, 236 P. 1013 (1925).

Stay of proceedings ordered. Zaharia v. County Court ex rel. County of Jefferson, 673 P.2d 378 (Colo. App. 1983).

III. BOND; SURETIES; WHEN BOND NOT REQUIRED.

Law reviews. For article, "Bonds in Colorado Courts: A Primer for Practitioners", see 34 Colo. Law. 59 (March 2005).

Trial court erred in entering an order staying all proceedings relative to enforcement of family support order without requiring appellant to file supersedeas bond. Muck v. Arapahoe County Dist. Court, 814 P.2d 869 (Colo. 1991).

Charitable institution may execute supersedeas bond as principal. Buchhalter v. Solomon, 78 Colo. 227, 241 P. 718 (1925), appeal dismissed, 273 U.S. 640, 47 S. Ct. 106, 71 L. Ed. 818 (1926).

Bond in form of cost bond not within rule. A bond in the form prescribed by § 13-16-101 for a cost bond is not a supersedeas bond and is not within this rule. Fifer v. Fifer, 120 Colo. 10, 206 P.2d 336 (1949).

Sureties subject themselves to judgment. In entering into the bond the sureties agreed, in effect, to abide by the law permitting the entry of judgment. Buchhalter v. Solomon, 78 Colo. 227, 241 P. 718 (1925), appeal dismissed, 273 U.S. 640, 47 S. Ct. 106, 71 L. Ed. 818 (1926).

Burden to show cause why the execution should not issue. In a proceeding by scire facias to obtain execution upon a judgment on a supersedeas bond, the burden is upon the surety to show cause why the execution should not issue. Bosworth v. Garwood, 79 Colo. 391, 246 P. 555 (1926).

Corporation held not under patronage or control of state. Buchhalter v. Solomon, 78 Colo. 227, 241 P. 718 (1925), appeal dismissed, 273 U.S. 640, 47 S. Ct. 106, 71 L. Ed. 818 (1926).

Rule 8.1. Stays in Criminal Cases

(a) Stay of Execution.

(1) Death. A sentence of death shall be stayed upon the filing of a notice of appeal.

(2) Imprisonment. A sentence of imprisonment shall be stayed if a notice of appeal is filed and a defendant elects not to commence service of the sentence or is admitted to bail. The sentencing court shall, upon written notice of the defendant for a stay and stating that he intends to seek review, stay a sentence of imprisonment but for not more than sixty days if the defendant is not admitted to bail.

(3) Fine. A sentence to pay a fine or a fine and costs may be stayed by the trial court upon such terms as the court deems proper if a notice of appeal is filed. The court may require the defendant to deposit the whole or any part of the fine and costs in the registry of the trial court or to give bond for the payment thereof, or to submit to an examination of assets, and it may make an appropriate order to restrain the defendant from dissipating his assets.

(4) Probation. An order placing the defendant on probation shall remain in effect pending review by an appellate court unless the court grants a stay of probation.

(b) Bail. Admission to bail pending the determination of review as provided in Rule 46, Crim. P.

(c) Application for Relief Pending Review. If an application is made to an appellate court, or justice or judge thereof, for bail pending review or for an extension of time for filing the record or for any other relief which might have been granted by the trial court, the application shall be upon notice and shall show that application to the court below or a judge thereof is not practicable or that application has been made and denied, with the reasons given for the denial, or that the lower court action on the application did not afford the relief to which the applicant considers himself entitled.

Source: (a)(4) amended and effective January 26, 1995.

ANNOTATION

Defendant who elects not to commence service of his sentence cannot receive credit for time spent in jail pending disposition of an appeal. People v. Scott, 176 Colo. 86, 489 P.2d 198 (1971). See People v. Falgout, 176 Colo. 94, 489 P.2d 195 (1971).

Once the choice has been made, the defendant is bound by his election not to commence service of his sentence. People v. Scott, 176 Colo. 86, 489 P.2d 198 (1971).

Once probationary period has expired and an order terminating defendant's probation is entered, the prosecution cannot rely on the notice of appeal filed by defendant at the start of the probationary period as grounds that defendant's probation was stayed and that he never commenced his probation. People v. Chesnick, 797 P.2d 812 (Colo. App. 1990).

Section (a)(4) automatically stays a probation order when a notice of appeal is filed, and the trial court lacked jurisdiction to revoke defendant's probation. Defendant did not waive the right to a stay of the probation order by participating in the probation program. People v. Taylor, 876 P.2d 130 (Colo. App. 1994) (decided prior to 1995 amendment to section (a)(4)).

No automatic stay of probation order pending appeal. Under section (a)(4), as amended, the trial court retains jurisdiction to modify and terminate probation during the pendency of an appeal. People v. Widhalm, 991 P.2d 291 (Colo. App. 1999).

Applied in People v. District Court, 191 Colo. 558, 554 P.2d 1105 (1976).

Rule 9. Release in Criminal Cases

(a) Appeals from Orders Respecting Release Entered Prior to a Judgment of Conviction. An appeal authorized by law from an order refusing or imposing conditions of release shall be determined promptly. Upon entry of an order refusing or imposing conditions of release, the trial court shall state in writing the reasons for the action taken. The appeal shall be heard without the necessity of briefs after reasonable notice to the appellee upon such papers, affidavits, and portions of the record as the parties shall present. An appellate court, or justice or judge thereof, may order the release of the appellant pending the appeal.

(b) Release Pending Appeal from a Judgment of Conviction. Application for release after a judgment of conviction shall be made in the first instance in the trial court. If the trial court refuses release pending appeal, or imposes conditions of release, the court shall state in writing the reasons for the action taken. Thereafter, if an appeal is pending, a motion for release, or for modification of the conditions of release, pending review may be made to an appellate court, or justice or judge thereof. The motion shall be determined promptly upon such papers, affidavits, and portions of the record as the parties shall present and after reasonable notice to the appellee. An appellate court, or justice or judge thereof, may order the release of the appellant pending disposition of the motion.

ANNOTATION

The trial court retains jurisdiction to grant or deny an appeal bond even after the defendant has filed a notice of appeal. The trial court retains jurisdiction to act with respect to matters that are not relative to or do not affect the order or judgment on appeal. Since the granting or denial of an appeal bond has no impact or bearing upon the underlying conviction or related issues pending on appeal, the trial court retains jurisdiction. People v. Stewart, 26 P.3d 17 (Colo. App. 2000), rev'd on other grounds, 55 P.3d 107 (Colo. 2002).

Rule 10. Record on Appeal

(a) Composition of the Record on Appeal. The record on appeal in all cases consists of:

(1) All documents filed in the trial court case as of the date of filing of a notice of appeal or any amended notice of appeal; and

(A) Transcripts designated by counsel as set forth in section (d); or

(B) In limited circumstances, such as when the transcript is unavailable, a statement of the evidence or proceedings certified by the trial court as set forth in section (e).

(2) If a timely filed motion pursuant to C.R.C.P. 59 has been filed, the record must also include that motion, any responses, and any order on the C.R.C.P. 59 motion.

(b) Format of the Record.

(1) Electronic Record. If all or part of the record is maintained in electronic format by the trial court, the clerk of the trial court is authorized to transmit the record electronically in accordance with procedures established by the appellate court.

(2) Paper Record. If all or part of the record is transmitted in paper format, the original papers in the record must be submitted. The paper-filed portion of the record must be properly paginated and fully indexed and must be prepared and bound in accordance with procedures established by the appellate court.

(c) Transmission.

(1) Complete Record. The clerk of the trial court must transmit the record to the clerk of the appellate court when it is complete. If the record includes any transcripts, the clerk of the trial court will not transmit the record to the clerk of the appellate court until transcripts are available.

(2) Time. The record on appeal must be transmitted to the appellate court within 63 days (9 weeks) after the date of filing of the notice of appeal unless the time is shortened or extended by an order of the appellate court.

(A) For good cause shown, the appellate court may extend the time for transmitting the record. A request for extension must be made by the clerk of the trial court or the clerk of the trial court's designee within the time originally prescribed or as previously extended.

(B) Any request for extension of the period of time based upon a court reporter's inability to complete the transcript must be supported by an affidavit of the reporter specifying why the transcript has not yet been prepared and the date by which the transcript will be completed. If the reason stated in a court reporter's affidavit for the reporter's inability to complete the record is the failure of the designating party to make adequate arrangement for payment of the transcripts, the designating party must file a response to the affidavit with the appellate court within 7 days.

(C) The appellate court may direct the trial court to expedite the preparation and transmittal of the record on appeal and, upon motion or of its own initiative, take other appropriate action regarding preparation and completion of the record.

(3) Oversized Exhibits. Documents of unusual bulk or weight and physical exhibits will not be transmitted by the clerk of the trial court unless directed to do so by the appellate court.

(4) Sexually Exploitative Material. Transmission of sexually exploitative material will be in accordance with Chief Justice Directive 16-03.

(d) Designation of Transcripts.

(1) If appellant intends to include transcripts of any hearings or trial included in the record on appeal, the appellant must file a designation of transcripts with the trial court and an advisory copy with the appellate court within 7 days of the date of filing the appellant's notice of appeal.

(2) Form 8 must be used to file any designation of transcripts. Any party designating transcripts must comply with the policies adopted by the appellate and trial courts for designating transcripts.

(3) The appellant must include in the record transcripts of all proceedings necessary for considering and deciding the issues on appeal. Unless the entire transcript is to be included, the appellant must include in the designation of transcript a description of the part of the transcript that the appellant intends to include in the record and a statement of the issues to be presented on appeal. The appellee may, within 14 days after the notice of appeal is filed, file with the trial court and an advisory copy with the appellate court its own designation of transcripts if the appellee deems additional transcripts or parts thereof necessary.

(e) Statement of the Evidence or Proceedings. Upon the agreement of the parties, or in cases where a transcript of the evidence or proceedings at a hearing or trial is unavailable, the parties may file a statement of the evidence or proceedings in lieu of designating transcripts with the trial court, and the trial court must certify a statement of the evidence or proceedings in lieu of a transcript.

(f) Supplementing the Record on Appeal.

(1) Before Record is Transmitted. If any material part of the trial court record is omitted or missing from the trial court's record or is misstated therein by error or accident before the record is transmitted to the appellate court, the parties, by stipulation, or the trial court may direct that the omission or misstatement be corrected.

(2) After Record is Transmitted. If any material part of the trial court record is omitted or missing from the record by error or accident or is misstated therein after the record is transmitted to the appellate court, the appellate court, on motion or of its own initiative, may order that the supplemental record be certified and transmitted. Form 9 must be used by any party requesting to supplement the record after the record has been filed in the appellate court.

(g) Settling the Record on Appeal.

(1) If any difference arises as to whether the record truly discloses what occurred in the trial court or a portion of the record is not in the possession of the trial court, the difference must be submitted to and settled by the trial court. The party moving to settle the record must file a motion to stay the appellate court proceedings in the appellate court while the trial court considers the motion to settle the record.

(2) All other questions as to the form and content of the record must be presented to the appellate court.

COMMENT

2018

[1] The rule contains the substance of former C.A.R. 11, Transmission of Record. With the adoption of the 2018 revisions, C.A.R. 11 has been deleted from the Colorado Appellate Rules.

[2] The amendments are designed to provide better organization and to create a more comprehensive records rule. With the 2018 revisions, designation of the record, found in prior versions of C.A.R. 10, has been deleted from the rule.

[3] Two new forms, Designation of Transcripts (Form 8) and Motion to Supplement the Record (Form 9) were adopted with the rule change.

Cross references: For inclusion of cost of reporter's transcript in taxable costs of appeal, see C.A.R. 39.

ANNOTATION

I. General Consideration.
II. Transmission of Record.
III. Enlargement of Time.

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Law reviews. For article, "The Problem of Delay in the Colorado Court of Appeals", see 58 Den. L.J. 1 (1980).

Annotator's note. Since former C.A.R. 11 is similar to this rule as amended in 2017, the following annotations refer to cases decided under former C.A.R. 11 and rules antecedent to that rule.

Supreme court requires strict compliance with this rule providing the time within which a reporter's transcript must be lodged. Cox v. Adams, 171 Colo. 37, 464 P.2d 513 (1970).

Compliance with the rules in the preparation, certification and lodging of the reporter's transcript is imperative if it is desired to make it a part of the record on error. Smith v. Woodall, 129 Colo. 435, 270 P.2d 746 (1954).

This rule must be interpreted to give it a practical effect. Pueblo v. Mace, 130 Colo. 162, 273 P.2d 1015 (1954).

Applied in People v. Boivin, 632 P.2d 1038 (Colo. App. 1981).

II. TRANSMISSION OF RECORD.

Duties of appellant in appellate and trial courts. A litigant desiring a review of his case upon appeal is confronted with the accomplishment of two projects: One in the supreme court and the other in the trial court. In the supreme court he must make certain that the notice of appeal is timely filed and that his record on appeal is filed within the time prescribed by this rule, or such enlargement thereof as may be fixed. In the trial court, where preparation of the record on appeal is under the jurisdiction of the trial court in manner as provided by C.A.R. 10, he must see to it that the reporter's transcript, if he desires that it be included in the record on appeal, is prepared and lodged within the time fixed therefor by said C.A.R. 10 and this rule, or within such extended period as may be granted by appropriate court order. Cont'l Air Lines v. City & County of Denver, 129 Colo. 1, 266 P.2d 400 (1954).

Appellant's duty to designate portions of record he deems necessary for appeal, and to see that the record is transmitted, and the appellant will not be permitted to take advantage of his own failure to designate the pertinent portions of the transcript as part of the record on appeal. Till v. People, 196 Colo. 126, 581 P.2d 299 (1978).

Transcript may not be filed only when "convenient". Transcripts, like briefs, may not be filed whenever or wherever counsel may find it convenient. Smith v. Woodall, 129 Colo. 435, 270 P.2d 746 (1954); Freeman v. Cross, 134 Colo. 437, 305 P.2d 759 (1957).

Transcript stricken for inexcusable delay in transmission. Cont'l Air Lines v. City & County of Denver, 129 Colo. 1, 266 P.2d 400 (1954); Freeman v. Cross, 134 Colo. 437, 305 P.2d 759 (1957); Furer v. Allied Steel Co., 174 Colo. 171, 483 P.2d 212 (1971).

Where transcript of testimony is not certified to either the court of appeals or to the supreme court, the findings made by the trial court are binding upon the supreme court. Hobbs v. Smith, 177 Colo. 299, 493 P.2d 1352 (1972).

III. ENLARGEMENT OF TIME.

Petition to show cause does not stay time to proceed. The filing of a petition to show cause in the supreme court within a 10-day period following entry of final judgment, coupled with the filing of a motion in a trial court to suspend proceedings, does not stay the time to file a motion for a new trial under Rule 59, C.R.C.P., or stay the time to proceed under C.A.R. 4 and this rule. Walter v. Walter, 136 Colo. 405, 318 P.2d 221 (1957) (decided prior to 1983 amendment).

Enlargement of time primarily a function of the trial court. While the supreme court has the inherent power to enlarge the time within which a reporter's transcript may be lodged, this function lies primarily and especially within the province and jurisdiction of the trial court. Smith v. Woodall, 129 Colo. 435, 270 P.2d 746 (1954) (decided prior to 1983 amendment).

Granting of extension rests in discretion of court. The granting of an extension of the period allowed under section (a) of this rule for the filing of a reporter's transcript rests within the sound discretion of the trial court, and the action taken will not be disturbed on review in the absence of a clear showing of abuse of that discretion. Mitchell v. Espinosa, 125 Colo. 267, 243 P.2d 412 (1952) (decided prior to 1983 amendment).

Effective date of final judgment in the trial court does not terminate the authority of the judge of that court. This rule extends the authority of the trial court to order extensions of time. King v. Williams, 131 Colo. 286, 281 P.2d 163 (1955) (decided prior to 1983 amendment).

Failure to apply for enlargement under C.R.C.P. 6 rarely excusable. Under C.R.C.P. 6(b)(1), enlargements of time are so readily obtainable where application is made therefor within apt time that there is rarely an occasion where failure to do so would appear to be excusable. Smith v. Woodall, 129 Colo. 435, 270 P.2d 746 (1954).

The press of work or other activities of an attorney does not constitute excusable neglect. Cox v. Adams, 171 Colo. 37, 464 P.2d 513 (1970); Laugesen v. Witkins Homes, Inc., 29 Colo. App. 58, 479 P.2d 289 (1970).

Cases Decided Under Former C.A.R. 10

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Law reviews. For article, ''Supreme Court Proceedings: Rules 111-119'', see 23 Rocky Mtn. L. Rev. 618 (1951). For article, ''Appellate Procedure and the New Supreme Court Rules'', see 30 Dicta 1 (1953). For article, ''Some Observations on Colorado Appellate Practice'', see 34 Dicta 363 (1957). For note, ''Colorado Appellate Procedure'', see 40 U. Colo. L. Rev. 551 (1968). For article, ''The Problem of Delay in the Colorado Court of Appeals'', see 58 Den. L.J.1 (1980).

This rule is not inherently constitutionally invalid. Almarez v. Carpenter, 347 F. Supp. 597 (D. Colo. 1972).

Intent of this rule, in dealing with the preparation of transcripts, is to insure that the appellate court will be given sufficient information to arrive at a just and reasoned decision. City of Aurora v. Webb, 41 Colo. App. 11, 585 P.2d 288 (1978); People in Interest of J.L.P., 870 P.2d 1252 (Colo. App. 1994).

For three-part test to determine whether a new trial is warranted as relief for an inadequate or missing court record, see Knoll v. Allstate Fire & Cas. Ins., 216 P.3d 615 (Colo. App. 2009).

Trial court to supervise preparation of record. The intention of this rule is that the trial court shall supervise the preparation of the record on appeal as designated by the party seeking same. Cont'l Air Lines v. City & County of Denver, 129 Colo. 1, 266 P.2d 400 (1954).

Appellant must overcome adverse judgment by record. A judgment entered by a court of general jurisdiction is presumed to be correct. A litigant suffering an adverse judgment has the burden of overcoming this presumption, and the supreme court must look to the record alone to determine whether the trial court acted properly in the premises. Laessig v. May D & F, 157 Colo. 260, 402 P.2d 183 (1965).

Appellant's duty to obtain record. The party prosecuting an appeal shall do any and all things necessary under this rule to obtain the record on appeal. Cont'l Air Lines v. City & County of Denver, 129 Colo. 1, 266 P.2d 400 (1954).

It is the appellant's duty to designate portions of record he deems necessary for appeal, and to see that the record is transmitted, and the appellant will not be permitted to take advantage of his own failure to designate the pertinent portions of the transcript as part of the record on appeal. Till v. People, 196 Colo. 126, 581 P.2d 299 (1978); People v. Tippett, 733 P.2d 1183 (Colo. 1987).

It is the responsibility of an appellant to designate the record on appeal or such parts thereof as he deems necessary for his appeal and to ensure that the record is transmitted to the appellate court. People v. Velarde, 200 Colo. 374, 616 P.2d 104 (1980); People v. Rollins, 759 P.2d 816 (Colo. App. 1988).

Duty rests upon counsel to present a complete record in cases brought to the supreme court. Nutter v. Wright, 132 Colo. 304, 287 P.2d 655 (1955).

Appeal subject to dismissal for failure to comply with rule. Where a record on review fails to conform with this rule, the appeal may be dismissed either on motion or the court's own initiative. Williams v. Williams, 110 Colo. 473, 135 P.2d 1016 (1943); George W. Clayton Coll. v. District Court, 110 Colo. 365, 135 P.2d 138 (1943).

A reviewing court may of its own motion dismiss a proceeding where the record is confused or incomplete. Hinshaw v. Dyer, 166 Colo. 394, 443 P.2d 992 (1968).

Appellant's appeal dismissed when appellant argued insufficient evidence but failed to designate the entire transcript. Appellee not required to supplement the appellant's designation. Northstar Project Mgmt. v. DLR Group, 2013 CO 12, 295 P.3d 956.

But court has discretion to pass on questions presented. Although a record on appeal may not comply with this rule, the supreme court may, in its discretion, elect to pass upon questions presented in order that further delay and expense to the parties may be avoided. Williams v. Williams, 110 Colo. 473, 135 P.2d 1016 (1943).

Appellant who does not correctly anticipate appellee's and court's conceptions of what should be included in a record should not forfeit his case. City of Aurora v. Webb, 41 Colo. App. 11, 585 P.2d 288 (1978).

Presumption that trial court's findings are supported by evidence. An appellate court must presume that the trial court's findings and conclusions are supported by the evidence where the appellant has failed to provide a complete record on appeal. People v. Morgan, 199 Colo. 237, 606 P.2d 1296 (1980); People v. Alberico, 817 P.2d 573 (Colo. App. 1991).

Where no transcript of evidence considered by lower court is made part of record on appeal and there is no showing to contrary, an appellate court must presume that findings are supported by evidence presented to and considered by court. People v. Gallegos, 179 Colo. 211, 499 P.2d 315 (1972).

Where the record does not contain any of the trial court's instructions, a reviewing court will presume that an instruction given by the trial court correctly and clearly stated the law and that defendant's objection is that the evidence does not support the giving of the instruction. Nunn v. People, 177 Colo. 87, 493 P.2d 6 (1972).

Claim not raised in trial court will not be considered on appeal. Cmty. Mgt. Ass'n v. Tousley, 32 Colo. App. 33, 505 P.2d 1314 (1973).

An issue not before the trial court in the motion for new trial will not be considered on appeal. Cady v. City of Arvada, 31 Colo. App. 85, 499 P.2d 1203 (1972).

Ineffective assistance of counsel claim procedurally barred where appellant failed to specially designate on appeal any and all exhibits that were necessary to a resolution of the claim. Bunton v. Atherton, 613 F.3d 973 (10th Cir. 2010).

Defendant cannot bottom error upon occurrence in a portion of the trial which he has specifically agreed is not to be reported, for there is no way for an appellate court to review the alleged error. Taylor v. People, 176 Colo. 316, 490 P.2d 292 (1971).

Issue must be raised by parties, not "amicus curiae". Where issue is not raised by parties to appeal, but is raised in brief of "amicus curiae" issue will not be considered by appellate court. Eugene Cervi & Co. v. Russell, 31 Colo. App. 525, 506 P.2d 748 (1972), aff'd, 184 Colo. 282, 519 P.2d 1189 (1974).

Error cannot be asserted on prosecution's evidence alone. Where upon trial court's denial of defendant's motion for acquittal at close of people's case, defendant proceeds to offer evidence warranting submission of case to jury, defendant cannot assert error on people's evidence alone. People v. Olinger, 180 Colo. 58, 502 P.2d 79 (1972).

II. COMPOSITION OF RECORD.

A. In General.

Purpose of the notice of appeal is to require the clerk of the court in which the judgment complained of is entered to certify the record for review. Hull v. Denver Tramway Corp., 97 Colo. 523, 50 P.2d 791 (1935); Wheeler Kelly Hagny Trust Co. v. Williamson, 111 Colo. 515, 143 P.2d 685 (1943).

This rule retains a vestige of the bill of exceptions procedure not contained in the federal rules, for section (a) requires certification of the reporter's transcript by the trial judge, but Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 10(a) has no such requirement. Almarez v. Carpenter, 347 F. Supp. 597 (D. Colo. 1972).

The right to an appeal is not denied by the absence of written findings of fact or conclusions of law in the record. Neither C.R.C.P. 52(a) nor this rule, requires written findings of fact and conclusions of law. Dunbar v. District Court, 131 Colo. 483, 283 P.2d 182 (1955).

Trial court's findings held adequate for purpose of appellate review. In re People in Interest of D.S., 31 Colo. App. 300, 502 P.2d 95 (1972).

No requirement that appellate record be all inclusive. This rule does not require that every folio with any conceivable relationship to an issue raised on appeal be designated as part of the appellate record. Rather, this rule gives the appellant the discretion to determine what is necessary, and the appellant himself may, if it appears he has not included enough, supplement the record; or an appellee who feels that the designated record is lacking in some essential respect may file and serve on the appellant a designation of additional parts of the record to be included. City of Aurora v. Webb, 41 Colo. App. 11, 585 P.2d 288 (1978).

Certification of the record is an official act of the inferior tribunal. Civil Serv. Comm'n v. Doyle, 174 Colo. 149, 483 P.2d 380 (1971).

And is not necessarily contingent upon certification of the transcript of the proceedings by a certified shorthand reporter. Civil Serv. Comm'n v. Doyle, 174 Colo. 149, 483 P.2d 380 (1971).

Judicial notice may generally not be taken of municipal ordinances or resolutions, and thus, it is a party's responsibility to introduce into the record copies of municipal ordinances or resolutions on which reliance is placed. Concrete Contractors v. City of Arvada, 621 P.2d 320 (Colo. 1981).

Where the district court considered the provisions of a city's charter, a municipal ordinance, and a municipal resolution in reaching its decision, the court of appeals abused its discretion in failing to ensure that those provisions of municipal law were made a part of the record in the case. Concrete Contractors v. City of Arvada, 621 P.2d 320 (Colo. 1981).

B. Judgment.

"Judgment" construed. To constitute a judgment there must be an express adjudication to that effect, but, subject to the requirements of statute or court rule or practice, no particular form or verbal formula is required in a court proceeding to render its order a judgment, provided the rights of the parties may be ascertained therefrom. Jones v. Galbasini, 134 Colo. 64, 299 P.2d 503 (1956).

Inclusion of the judgment in the record is mandatory. J. & R. A. Savageau, Inc. v. Larsen, 117 Colo. 229, 185 P.2d 1012 (1947); Horlbeck v. Walther, 131 Colo. 36, 279 P.2d 434 (1955). French v. Haarhues, 132 Colo. 261, 287 P.2d 278 (1955); Nutter v. Wright, 132 Colo. 304, 287 P.2d 655 (1955); Abbott v. Poynter, 153 Colo. 147, 385 P.2d 120 (1963).

Failure to include judgment requires dismissal. Without a compliance with this rule requiring the inclusion of the judgment in the record, there is nothing for this court to review; consequently, an order of dismissal should be entered. J. & R. A. Savageau, Inc. v. Larsen, 117 Colo. 229, 185 P.2d 1012 (1947); Horlbeck v. Walther, 131 Colo. 36, 279 P.2d 434 (1955).

Unless a final judgment appears in the record, the appeal will be dismissed. Sutley v. Davis, 131 Colo. 75, 279 P.2d 848 (1955); French v. Haarhues, 132 Colo. 261, 287 P.2d 278 (1955); Nutter v. Wright, 132 Colo. 304, 287 P.2d 655 (1955).

Where the record did not disclose any final judgment entered in the court below in violation of this rule, there was nothing presented for review. Howard v. Am. Law Book Co., 121 Colo. 5, 212 P.2d 1006 (1949).

Litigant has duty to ensure record contains proper judgment. The entry of judgment upon the court's order is a ministerial duty of the clerk, but if a litigant desires a review on appeal, it is his duty to see that the record on appeal is properly prepared and contains a final judgment; otherwise dismissal will follow. French v. Haarhues, 132 Colo. 216, 287 P.2d 278 (1955); Nutter v. Wright, 132 Colo. 304, 287 P.2d 655 (1955).

It is the duty of one who seeks review in the supreme court to see to it that an actual judgment has been pronounced by the trial court and entered by the clerk and that such judgment appears in the record on appeal. Jones v. Galbasini, 134 Colo. 64, 299 P.2d 503 (1956); Abbott v. Poynter, 153 Colo. 147, 385 P.2d 120 (1963).

Ruling is not substitute for judgment. A ruling by the trial court at the close of plaintiff's evidence granting a motion to dismiss and dispensing with the motion for new trial does not rise to the dignity of a judgment, and its inclusion in the record is not a substitute for the requirement of this rule that the record must include the judgment to be reviewed. Jones v. Galbasini, 134 Colo. 64, 299 P.2d 503 (1956); Abbott v. Poynter, 153 Colo. 147, 385 P.2d 120 (1963).

Where the designation of record on error requests that the record include the judgment entered and the direction for entry of the same judgment, the record contains the ''order and judgment'' and the order to the clerk of the court for entry of judgment, and this rule requires no more. Flournoy v. McComas, 175 Colo. 526, 488 P.2d 1104 (1971).

C. Reporter's Transcript.

Compliance with rule imperative. Compliance with the rules in the preparation, certification, and lodging of the transcript is imperative if it is desired to make it a part of the record on appeal. Freeman v. Cross, 134 Colo. 437, 305 P.2d 759 (1957).

Transcript is not an absolute necessity in the reviewing court. Almarez v. Carpenter, 173 Colo. 284, 477 P.2d 792 (1970).

Because it is only part of record. The reporter's transcript is not the record on appeal, but only a part thereof. Cont'l Air Lines v. City & County of Denver, 129 Colo. 1, 266 P.2d 400 (1954).

Transcript is not, by definition, a writ, process, or proceeding. Almarez v. Carpenter, 173 Colo. 284, 477 P.2d 792 (1970).

Only relevant portions of the trial proceedings need be included in the record, as may be necessary to present the issues on appeal. Almarez v. Carpenter, 173 Colo. 284, 477 P.2d 792 (1970); Almarez v. Carpenter, 347 F. Supp. 597 (D. Colo. 1972).

Transcript must be certified by the judge. Hudson v. Am. Founders Life Ins. Co., 151 Colo. 54, 377 P.2d 391 (1962).

Authentication is judicial act. In the authentication of the full transcript, the trial judge acts as a judge under the solemnity of his official oath, and is presumed to have faithfully and honestly performed his duty. Hudson v. Am. Founders Life Ins. Co., 151 Colo. 54, 377 P.2d 391 (1962).

It is presumed that a court acts under the solemnity of its oath in determining the authenticity of the transcript. Churning v. Staples, 628 P.2d 180 (Colo. App. 1981).

When certified transcript considered true. A transcript of the record as originally prepared by the reporter which is authenticated by a certificate signed by the trial judge, and transmitted to the supreme court under the seal of the clerk of the trial court, is to be considered true as if the parties had agreed to it. Hudson v. Am. Founders Life Ins. Co., 151 Colo. 54, 377 P.2d 391 (1962).

Imperfection in a reporter's transcript cannot be cured by guesswork or by indulging in inferences or presumptions. Hinshaw v. Dyer, 166 Colo. 394, 443 P.2d 992 (1968).

Uncertified transcript of evidence filed with reviewing court is not properly before it. Stuckman v. Kasal, 158 Colo. 232, 405 P.2d 948 (1965).

Uncertified transcript stricken. Rechnitz v. Rechnitz, 135 Colo. 165, 309 P.2d 200 (1957).

Lacking transcript, support of findings presumed. There being no reporter's transcript properly before the supreme court for consideration due to untimely filing, the regularity of the judgment and support of the findings of fact by the evidence must be presumed. Bonham v. City of Aurora, 133 Colo. 276, 294 P.2d 267 (1956).

Where a transcript of the evidence not filed pursuant to this rule cannot be considered because of the trial judge's justifiable refusal to certify it, the regularity of the judgment and support of it in evidence must be presumed. Stuckman v. Kasal, 158 Colo. 232, 405 P.2d 948 (1965).

In the absence of a transcript, the supreme court is bound to presume that the findings and conclusions of the trial court are correct and that the evidence presented supports the judgment. Cox v. Adams, 171 Colo. 37, 464 P.2d 513 (1970); Furer v. Allied Steel Co., 174 Colo. 171, 483 P.2d 212 (1971).

Unless there is before the supreme court a certified transcript of the proceedings, the supreme court is unable to state that the trial court abused its discretion or that it was arbitrary and capricious. Rechnitz v. Rechnitz, 135 Colo. 165, 309 P.2d 200 (1957).

Where there is no transcript before the court on appeal, the regularity of the trial court's judgment and the competency of the evidence upon which that judgment is based must be presumed. Oman v. Morris, 28 Colo. App. 124, 471 P.2d 430 (1970).

Where no transcript is provided on appeal the court must look to the record alone to determine whether the trial court acted properly. Statements made in the briefs of litigants cannot supply that which must appear in a certified record. Loomis v. Seely, 677 P.2d 400 (Colo. App. 1983).

Reconstruction of the record in the trial court is not appropriate when the precise language of the testimony is critical. People v. Killpack, 793 P.2d 642 (Colo. App. 1990).

Where defendant's argument on appeal is ascertainable from the existing record and the record is sufficient for appellate review, a complete transcript is unnecessary for purposes of reconstructing the record for one of the days during trial. People v. Jackson, 98 P.3d 940 (Colo. App. 2004).

The statements of counsel may not substitute for that which must appear of record. Subsequent Injury Fund v. Gallegos, 746 P.2d 71 (Colo. App. 1987).

Litigant must make his own arrangements with the reporter if he desires a transcript. Almarez v. Carpenter, 173 Colo. 284, 477 P.2d 792 (1970).

Transcript fees may not be waived by court. The preparation of a transcript by a reporter of his notes is a service which is not covered by his salary. Hence, the fees for such service are not payable to the court and the court cannot waive them. Almarez v. Carpenter, 173 Colo. 284, 477 P.2d 792 (1970).

Free transcript need not be provided when the furnishing of a transcript would be a vain and useless gesture. Snavely v. Shannon, 182 Colo. 223, 511 P.2d 905 (1973).

Since the provisions of sections (c) and (d) provide for a constitutionally permissible alternative method of proceeding on appeal where no reporter's transcript is available, there is no deprivation of due process or equal protection because indigents cannot obtain a cost-free reporter's transcript. Almarez v. Carpenter, 347 F. Supp. 597 (D. Colo. 1972).

And denial does not preclude appellate remedy. The denial of a request for a free transcript does not deny an indigent litigant any appellate remedy. Almarez v. Carpenter, 173 Colo. 284, 477 P.2d 792 (1970).

Or deny constitutional right. By virtue of the waiver of costs provided by § 13-16-103, and the alternative methods of furnishing a trial court record provided by this rule, courts of justice, both trial and appellate, are ''open'' and available to the indigent litigant, and there is no denial of any constitutional right embraced within the language or interpretation of § 6 of art. II, Colo. Const. Almarez v. Carpenter, 173 Colo. 284, 477 P.2d 792 (1970).

D. Alternatives to Transcript; Agreed Statement.

Reporter's transcript is not only means provided by sections (a) through (e) of this rule for preserving and presenting to the appellate courts alleged error involving evidentiary or factual issues. Almarez v. Carpenter, 347 F. Supp. 597 (D. Colo. 1972).

Requirements in circumstances in which stenographic transcipt unavailable. Appellant must prepare a statement from recollection that is first submitted to trial court for approval. If it is necessary to add to record parts of evidence or proceedings that were not recorded by the reporter, the provisions of section (c) must be followed. Where there was no compliance with this rule, the appellate court has an inadequate basis to evaluate the parties' claims and the trial court's ruling. Halliburton v. Pub. Serv. Co., 804 P.2d 213 (Colo. App. 1990); In re McSoud, 131 P.3d 1208 (Colo. App. 2006); Knoll v. Allstate Fire & Cas. Ins., 216 P.3d 619 (Colo. App. 2009).

Nothing in section (c) prohibits a trial court from using its own notes or recollection in record reconstruction. People v. Jackson, 98 P.3d 940 (Colo. App. 2004).

The trial court in doing so in an impartial manner eliminates any need for the trial judge to testify before a different judge regarding the reconstruction to maintain impartiality. People v. Jackson, 98 P.3d 940 (Colo. App. 2004).

Duty to follow procedures of this rule if no transcript available. An appellant is required to take the necessary steps to provide an adequate record for review. In those circumstances in which a stenographic transcript is not available, section (c) provides that the appellant should prepare a statement of the evidence or proceedings from the best available means, serve the statement upon opposing counsel for comments and changes, and then submit the final statement to the trial court for settlement, approval, and inclusion in the record on appeal. In the event the parties are unable to reach agreement concerning the contents of this statement, section (d) provides a mechanism for resolution of these differences. People v. Conley, 804 P.2d 240 (Colo. App. 1990).

Sections (c), (d), and (e) were promulgated specifically to reduce the cost of appellate review to the litigants and to conserve review time by the court itself. Almarez v. Carpenter, 173 Colo. 284, 477 P.2d 792 (1970); Almarez v. Carpenter, 347 F. Supp. 597 (D. Colo. 1972).

Section (e) of this rule insures adequate consideration of any issue involving evidentiary or factual material. Almarez v. Carpenter, 173 Colo. 284, 477 P.2d 792 (1970).

Statements made in briefs insufficient to establish record. Statements made in briefs of litigants cannot supply what must appear from a certified record or an agreed statement. Laessig v. May D & F, 157 Colo. 260, 402 P.2d 183 (1965); Hinshaw v. Dyer, 166 Colo. 394, 443 P.2d 992 (1968); McCall v. Meyers, 94 P.3d 1271 (Colo. App. 2004).

Although this rule does not on its face apply to appellate review of an administrative agency decision, the underlying principle is applicable to such review. Earl v. District Court, 719 P.2d 321 (Colo. 1986); Schaffer v. District Court, 719 P.2d 1088 (Colo. 1986).

III. CORRECTION OR MODIFICATION OF RECORD.

Certification to the transcript of the proceedings is final. Hudson v. Am. Founders Life Ins. Co., 151 Colo. 54, 377 P.2d 391 (1962).

This is true where the objectors produced no evidence or sworn testimony contradicting the transcript as finally certified and approved by the trial judge during the lengthy hearing on their objections. Hudson v. Am. Founders Life Ins. Co., 151 Colo. 54, 377 P.2d 391 (1962).

Inaccuracies in certified transcript were not prejudicial. Although each of 98 inaccuracies in the certified transcript does alter the particular sentence somewhat, reviewing all of the changes elicited at the evidentiary hearing before the trial court, the supreme court concluded that reasonable men, considering the transcript in its entirety, would be compelled to find that the content of the transcript is not materially altered. Since this evidence showed no errors of any substance and since appellee did not show that the corrected record was in any manner false or untrue, he was not prejudiced by the changes and the transcript is a fair and accurate record of the civil service commission's proceedings which may be reviewed. Civil Serv. Comm'n v. Doyle, 174 Colo. 149, 483 P.2d 380 (1971).

Although the juvenile court was not the proper forum to resolve a motion to narrow the record on appeal which had been designated pursuant to this rule, any error arising from the limitation imposed by the trial court was, under the circumstances, harmless error. People in Interest of J.L.P., 870 P.2d 1252 (Colo. App. 1994).

Nothing in the plain language of this rule precludes an appellate court from considering a motion to correct a misstatement in the record after an opinion has been announced. It was reasonable for the trial court to correct the record and an injustice would occur here if an appeal were decided on the basis of an incorrect record. People v. Wolfe, 9 P.3d 1137 (Colo. App. 1999).

Court rejected defendant's argument that People's attempt to correct the record was barred by doctrine of laches and waiver. Trial court properly concluded that the interest in finality of the opinion was outweighed by the importance of ensuring an accurate result on appeal. People v. Wolfe, 9 P.3d 1137 (Colo. App. 1999).

Rule 10.1. Court of Appeals Accelerated Docket Procedure — Civil Appeals

Repealed September 23, 1983, effective January 1, 1984.

Rule 11. Transmission of Record

Repealed October 26, 2017, effective January 1, 2018.

Source: (b) and (d) amended and adopted April 27, 1998, effective July 1, 1998; (b) amended and effective September 7, 2006; (a), (a) comment, and (d) comment amended and adopted December 14, 2011, effective January 1, 2012, for all cases pending on or filed on or after January 1, 2012, pursuant to C.R.C.P. 1(b); repealed October 26, 2017, effective January 1, 2018.

Cross references: For provisions similar to the repealed rule 11, see Colorado Appellate Rule 10.

Rule 12. Docketing the Appeal and Fees; Proceedings in Forma Pauperis; Filing of the Record

(a) Docketing the Appeal; Fees of Clerk. At the time of the filing of the notice of appeal or the time of filing any documents with an appellate court before the filing of the notice of appeal, the appellant shall pay to the clerk of the appellate court the docket fee as required by section 13-4-112(1) and the clerk shall enter the appeal upon the docket. If an appellant is authorized to prosecute the appeal without prepayment of fees, the clerk shall enter the appeal on the docket at the written request of that party. The party appealing shall docket the case as nearly as possible under the title given to the action in the trial court, with the appellant identified as such, but if such title does not contain the name of the appellant, the appellant's name, identified as appellant, shall be added to the title. Unless necessary to show the relationship of the parties, such caption shall not include the names of parties not involved in the appeal. The docket fee for an appellee as required by section 13-4-112(1) shall be paid upon the entry of appearance of the appellee. After an initial appellant or appellee has paid the docket fee, any additional appellants, appellees or cross-appellants entering an appearance by an attorney who is not already of record in the case, shall also pay the docket fee as required by section 13-4-112(1). A cross-appellant shall pay the docket fee amount at the time the cross-appeal is filed. Extension of time shall not be granted for paying docket fees.

Comment: This revision calls for the payment of appellant's docket fee when the notice of appeal is filed, or, at the time of filing of the initial documents with the appellate court. It also eliminates designation of parties form.

(b) Leave to Proceed on Appeal in Forma Pauperis from Trial Court to Appellate Court. A party to an action in a trial court who desires to proceed on appeal in forma pauperis shall file in the trial court a motion for leave so to proceed, together with an affidavit showing an inability to pay fees and costs or to give security, a belief that the party is entitled to redress, and a statement of the issues which the party intends to present on appeal. If the motion is granted, the party may proceed without further application to the appellate court and without prepayment of fees or costs in either court or the giving of security. If the motion is denied, the trial court shall state in writing the reasons for the denial.

Notwithstanding the provisions of the preceding paragraph, a party who has been permitted to proceed in an action in the trial court in forma pauperis, or who has been permitted to proceed there as one who is financially unable to obtain an adequate defense in a criminal case, may proceed on appeal in forma pauperis without further authorization unless, before or after the notice of appeal is filed, the trial court shall certify that the appeal is not taken in good faith or shall find that the party is otherwise not entitled so to proceed, in which event the trial court shall state in writing the reasons for such certification or finding. A party proceeding under this subparagraph (b) shall attach a copy of the trial court's order granting or denying leave to proceed in forma pauperis in the trial court with the appendix to the notice of appeal.

(c) Leave to Proceed on Appeal or Review in Forma Pauperis in Administrative Agency Proceedings. A party to a proceeding before an administrative agency, board, commission, or officer who desires to proceed on appeal or review in the appellate court in forma pauperis shall file in the said court a motion for leave so to proceed, together with the affidavit prescribed by the first paragraph of section (a) of this Rule.

(d) Form of Briefs and Other Papers. Parties allowed to proceed in forma pauperis may file briefs and other papers in typewritten form, and may request that the appeal be heard on the original record without the necessity of reproducing parts thereof in any form.

(e) Filing of the Record. Upon receipt of the record, the clerk shall file the record. The clerk shall immediately give notice to all parties of the date on which the record was filed.

Comment: This change is necessary because ''docketing'' has been eliminated.

(f) Deleted September 23, 1983, effective January 1, 1984.

Source: (a) amended August 30, 1985, effective January 1, 1986; (b) amended May 15, 1986, effective November 1, 1986; (a) and (e) amended and effective February 7, 2008; (e) amended and adopted October 26, 2017, effective January 1, 2018.

Failure to comply with rule will cause dismissal. Where appellants fail to comply with this rule in that they do not file designation of parties or pay docket fee within time fixed for transmission of record, failing to do so for approximately 90 days thereafter, where appellants fail to show good cause for noncompliance, where appellee moves for dismissal based thereon, and where 60-day extension of time for transmission of record has been granted, appeal will be dismissed. Gonzales v. Petriken, 31 Colo. App. 415, 502 P.2d 1110 (1972).

Failure to comply with rule may be waived by failure to file objection, but where sufficient and timely objection is made and there is no adequate excuse for failure to comply, it is an appellate court's duty to enforce this rule. Gonzales v. Petriken, 31 Colo. App. 415, 502 P.2d 1110 (1972).

Leave to proceed in forma pauperis granted. In re Petition of Griffin, 152 Colo. 347, 382 P.2d 202 (1963); In re Petition of Pigg, 152 Colo. 500, 384 P.2d 267 (1963).

Supreme court will not consider unintelligible petitions and motions which have no legal significance and which do not meet the requirements of established procedures in appellate practice, in view of the right of an indigent defendant to have counsel appointed to prosecute an appeal. In re Petition of Griffin, 152 Colo. 347, 382 P.2d 202 (1963).

Issue cannot be reviewed on appeal when the record does not contain a transcript of the testimony taken in the trial court. Buder v. Reynolds, 175 Colo. 28, 486 P.2d 432 (1971).

When a reporter fails within 60 days to file a reporter's transcript or seek an extension of time, the trial court will order that the transcript be stricken from the record on error. Buder v. Reynolds, 175 Colo. 28, 486 P.2d 432 (1971).

Determination of indigency lies within the discretion of the trial court. A party who proceeded as an indigent in the trial court may proceed as an indigent on appeal without further authorization unless the court finds, in writing, that the party is no longer entitled to so proceed. The trial court may order the production of any documents or evidence it deems necessary to determine continuing indigency. People in Interest of M.N., 950 P.2d 674 (Colo. App. 1997).

Because trial court had previously permitted defendant to proceed in forma pauperis on direct appeal, it was unnecessary for defendant to reapply to the trial court to proceed in forma pauperis on his motion for postconviction relief; thus trial court's failure to address defendant's motion to proceed in forma pauperis on appeal contemporaneously with his motion for postconviction relief was not error. People v. Boyd, 23 P.3d 1242 (Colo. App. 2001).

Applied in Denbow v. District Court, 652 P.2d 1065 (Colo. 1982).

Rules 13 to 20. No Colorado Rules

ORIGINAL JURISDICTION

Rule 21. Procedure in Original Proceedings

(a) Original Jurisdiction Under the Constitution.

(1) This rule applies only to the original jurisdiction of the supreme court to issue writs as provided in Section 3 of Article VI of the Colorado Constitution and to the exercise of the supreme court's general superintending authority over all courts as provided in Section 2 of Article VI of the Colorado Constitution. Relief under this rule is extraordinary in nature and is a matter wholly within the discretion of the supreme court. Such relief will be granted only when no other adequate remedy, including relief available by appeal or under C.R.C.P. 106, is available.

(2) Petitions to the supreme court in the nature of mandamus, certiorari, habeas corpus, quo warranto, injunction, prohibition and other forms of writs cognizable under the common law are subject to this rule. The petitioner need not designate a specific form of writ when seeking relief under this rule.

(b) How Sought; Proposed Respondents. Petitioner must file a petition for a rule to show cause specifying the relief sought and must request the court to issue to one or more proposed respondents a rule to show cause why the relief requested should not be granted. The proposed respondent(s) should be the real party (or parties) in interest.

(c) Docketing of Petition and Fees; Form of Pleadings. Upon the filing of a petition for a rule to show cause, petitioner must pay to the clerk of the supreme court the docket fee of $225.00. All documents filed under this rule must comply with C.A.R. 32.

(d) Content of Petition and Service.

(1) The petition must be titled, ''In Re [Caption of Underlying Proceeding].'' If there is no underlying proceeding, the petition must be titled, ''In Re [Petitioner v. Proposed Respondent].''

(2) The petitioner has the burden of showing that the court should issue a rule to show cause. To enable the court to determine whether a rule to show case should be issued, the petition must disclose in sufficient detail the following:

(A) the identity of the petitioner and of the proposed respondent(s), together with, if applicable, their party status in the underlying proceeding (e.g., plaintiff, defendant, etc.);

(B) the identity of the court or other underlying tribunal, the case name and case number or other identification of the underlying proceeding, if any, and identification of any other related proceeding;

(C) the identity of the persons or entities against whom relief is sought;

(D) the ruling, action, or failure to act complained of and the relief being sought;

(E) the reasons why no other adequate remedy is available;

(F) the issues presented;
(G) the facts necessary to understand the issues presented;
(H) argument and points of authority explaining why the court should issue a rule to show cause and grant the relief requested; and
(I) a list of supporting documents, or an explanation of why supporting documents are not available.

(3) The petition must include the names, addresses, telephone numbers, e-mail addresses (if any), and fax numbers (if any) of all parties to the underlying proceeding; or, if a party is represented by counsel, the attorney's name, address, telephone number, e-mail address (if any), and fax number (if any).

(4) The petition must be served upon each party and proposed respondent and, if applicable, upon the lower court or tribunal.

(e) Supporting Documents. A petition must be accompanied by a separate, indexed set of available supporting documents adequate to permit review. In cases involving an underlying proceeding, the following documents must be included:

(1) the order or judgment from which relief is sought if applicable;
(2) documents and exhibits submitted in the underlying proceeding that are necessary for a complete understanding of the issues presented;
(3) a transcript of the proceeding leading to the underlying order or judgment if available.

(f) Stay; Jurisdiction.

(1) The filing of a petition under this rule does not stay any underlying proceeding or the running of any applicable time limit. If the petitioner seeks a temporary stay in connection with the petition pending the court's determination whether to issue a rule to show cause, a stay ordinarily must be sought in the first instance from the lower court or tribunal. If a request for stay below is impracticable, not promptly ruled upon, or is denied, the petitioner may file a separate motion for a temporary stay in the supreme court supported by accompanying materials justifying the requested stay.

(2) Issuance of a rule to show cause by the supreme court automatically stays all underlying proceedings until final determination of the original proceeding in the supreme court unless the court, acting on its own, or upon motion, lifts the stay in whole or in part.

(g) No Initial Responsive Pleading to Petition Allowed. Unless requested by the supreme court, no responsive pleading to the petition may be filed prior to the court's determination of whether to issue a rule to show cause.

(h) Denial; Rule to Show Cause.

(1) The court in its discretion may issue a rule to show cause or deny the petition without explanation and without an answer by any respondent.

(2) The clerk, by first class mail, will serve the rule to show cause on all persons ordered or invited by the court to respond and, if applicable, on the judge or other officer in the underlying proceeding.

(i) Response to Rule to Show Cause.

(1) The court in its discretion may invite or order any person in the underlying proceeding to respond to the rule to show cause within a fixed time and may invite amicus curiae participation. Any person in the underlying proceeding may request permission to respond to the rule to show cause but may not respond unless invited or ordered to do so by the court. Those ordered by the court to respond are the respondent.

(2) The response to any order of the court must conform with C.A.R. 28(g) and 32. Any responses submitted by amicus curiae must comply with C.A.R. 29.

(3) Two or more respondents may respond jointly.

(j) Reply to Response to Rule to Show Cause. The petitioner may submit a reply brief within the time fixed by the court. Any reply must conform with C.A.R. 28(g) and 32.

(k) No Oral Argument. There will be no oral argument unless ordered by the court.

(l) Opinion Discretionary. The court, upon review, in its discretion may discharge the rule or make it absolute, in whole or in part, with or without opinion.

(m) Petition for Rehearing. In all proceedings under this rule, where the supreme court has issued an opinion discharging a rule or making a rule absolute, a petition for rehearing may be filed in accordance with the provisions of C.A.R. 40(c)(2).

Purpose of original proceedings. Original proceedings are authorized to test whether the trial court is proceeding without or in excess of its jurisdiction and to review a serious abuse of discretion where an appellate remedy would not be adequate. Margolis v. District Court, 638 P.2d 297 (Colo. 1981); People v. District Court, Arapahoe County, 868 P.2d 400 (Colo. 1994); Vail/Arrowhead, Inc. v. District Court, 954 P.2d 608 (Colo. 1998); Kourlis v. District Court, 930 P.2d 1329 (Colo. 1997); Hawkinson v. Biddle, 880 P.2d 748 (Colo. 1994); Semental v. Denver County Court, 978 P.2d 668 (Colo. 1999).

The general function of a writ of prohibition is to enjoin an excessive or improper assumption of jurisdiction. Vaughn v. District Court, 192 Colo. 348, 559 P.2d 222 (1977).

An original proceeding is an appropriate way to challenge a district court ruling allegedly in excess of the court's jurisdiction. Chavez v. District Court, 648 P.2d 658 (Colo. 1982).

An original proceeding pursuant to this rule is not a substitute for an appeal and is limited to an inquiry into whether the trial court exceeded its jurisdiction or abused its discretion. Hayes v. District Court, 854 P.2d 1240 (Colo. 1993); Lambdin v. District Ct. of Arapahoe Cty., 903 P.2d 1126 (Colo. 1995); Pearson v. District Court, 18th Jud. Dist., 924 P.2d 512 (Colo. 1996).

An original proceeding is appropriate to prevent an excess of jurisdiction by a lower court when no other remedy would be adequate. Paul v. People, 105 P.3d 628 (Colo. 2005).

The supreme court may exercise original jurisdiction and review a discovery order if it appears that a trial court has abused its discretion in circumstances in which a remedy on appeal would be inadequate. Gateway Logistics, Inc. v. Smay, 2013 CO 25, 302 P.3d 235.

Original and remedial writs are the common-law writs. Lucas v. District Court, 140 Colo. 510, 345 P.2d 1064 (1959); Leonhart v. District Court, 138 Colo. 1, 329 P.2d 781 (1958).

But present authority to entertain original and remedial writs is conferred by the constitution. Lucas v. District Court, 140 Colo. 510, 345 P.2d 1064 (1959).

Colorado supreme court's original jurisdiction has its source in § 3 of art. VI, Colo. Const.; its exercise is discretionary and governed by the circumstances of the case. Sanchez v. District Court, 624 P.2d 1314 (Colo. 1981).

C.R.C.P. 106 and this rule are to be construed together. Solliday v. District Court, 135 Colo. 489, 313 P.2d 1000 (1957).

Prohibition is not available where party has adequate remedies at law, or where it will supersede the functions of an appeal. Fitzgerald v. District Court, 177 Colo. 29, 493 P.2d 27 (1972).

Where a municipal court has jurisdiction over the defendants and the subject matter of the action, and an adequate remedy at law is available, original proceedings in prohibition will not be entertained. Douglas v. Mun. Court, 151 Colo. 358, 377 P.2d 738 (1963).

Court will not consider issues not presented below. The orderly administration of justice requires that parties first present all evidence and arguments to the trial court. Simply stated, the supreme court will not consider issues and evidence presented for the first time in original proceedings. Panos Inv. Co. v. District Court, 662 P.2d 180 (Colo. 1983).

Petitioner responsible for providing substantiating record. A petitioner seeking prohibition has the responsibility of providing the supreme court with a record that will substantiate the request for extraordinary relief. Mitchell v. District Court ex rel. Eighth Judicial Dist., 672 P.2d 997 (Colo. 1983).

In the absence of a compelling need, this rule may not serve as a substitute for an adequate appellate remedy that a party simply fails to exercise. C.A.R. 3.4 provides adequate process for appellants to the court of appeals in dependancy and neglect cases. People ex rel. A.H., 216 P.3d 581 (Colo. 2009).

Original writ disfavored where appeal available. There is a general policy which disfavors the use of an original writ where an appeal would be an appropriate remedy. Weaver Constr. Co. v. District Court, 190 Colo. 227, 545 P.2d 1042 (1976).

Absent a showing that appellate review would not afford adequate relief, relief by original proceedings is disfavored. Coquina Oil Corp. v. District Court, 623 P.2d 40 (Colo. 1981).

In contempt proceedings to enforce an order, the validity of the questioned order can be challenged and defendants will be afforded full opportunity to justify their failure or refusal to comply therewith. If, by any judgment entered by the trial court in those proceedings, the parties feel aggrieved, their remedy by appeal is speedy and altogether adequate for the protection of their rights, and there is no occasion for invoking the original jurisdiction of the supreme court. Valas v. District Court, 130 Colo. 21, 273 P.2d 1017 (1954); Meaker v. District Court, 134 Colo. 151, 300 P.2d 805 (1956).

But to be used where appeal inadequate. Where an appeal is not a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy, one may be entitled to an original writ of prohibition. Weaver Constr. Co. v. District Court, 190 Colo. 227, 545 P.2d 1042 (1976).

A proceeding under this rule is appropriate to review a serious abuse of discretion where an appellate remedy would not be adequate. Halliburton v. County Court ex rel. City & County of Denver, 672 P.2d 1006 (Colo. 1983); Direct Sales Tire Co. v. District Court, 686 P.2d 1316 (Colo. 1984).

Where the damage that may result from the court's abuse of discretion cannot be cured on appeal, mandamus will lie to ensure observance of the rules of civil procedure. Tyler v. District Court, 193 Colo. 31, 561 P.2d 1260 (1977).

Although the questions involved upon which the relief in original jurisdiction is asked may be reviewed on appeal, that is not conclusive against the right as to relief if in the judgment of the court, such remedies are not plain, speedy, and adequate. People ex rel. Lackey v. District Court, 30 Colo. 123, 69 P. 597 (1902); People ex rel. L'Abbe v. District Court, 26 Colo. 386, 58 P. 604, 46 L.R.A. 850 (1899).

A writ in the nature of prohibition is an extraordinary remedy and should be granted only in cases where the party seeking relief does not have an adequate remedy on appeal. Valas v. District Court, 130 Colo. 21, 273 P.2d 1017 (1954); Meaker v. District Court, 134 Colo. 151, 300 P.2d 805 (1956).

Original proceedings are only applicable to those matters in which an adequate remedy is not available on appeal. DeLong v. District Court, 151 Colo. 364, 377 P.2d 737 (1963).

Original jurisdiction under this rule will be invoked where appellate remedies are inadequate. People v. District Court, 664 P.2d 247 (Colo. 1983); Hawkinson v. Biddle, 880 P.2d 748 (Colo. 1994); Kourlis v. District Court, El Paso County, 930 P.2d 1329 (Colo. 1997).

The exercise of original jurisdiction is appropriate where a pre-trial ruling will place a party at a significant disadvantage in litigating the merits of the controversy and conventional appellate remedies are inadequate. Mitchell v. Wilmore, 981 P.2d 172 (Colo. 1999).

Original jurisdiction under this rule appropriate where trial court's erroneous order allowing defendant access to alleged victim's home would irreparably damage her privacy rights. People v. Chavez, 2016 CO 20, 368 P.3d 943.

A trial court's decision to vacate a jury-imposed death verdict is a matter of public importance invoking original jurisdiction. People v. Harlan, 109 P.3d 616 (Colo. 2005).

Original jurisdiction may be exercised to entertain an interlocutory appeal that was improperly brought pursuant to another rule. People v. Braunthal, 31 P.3d 167 (Colo. 2001).

Prohibition is an appropriate remedy when the trial court has abused its discretion and where an appellate remedy would not be adequate and in this case the supreme court exercised original jurisdiction to address issues of significance not yet examined. City & County of Denver v. District Court, 939 P.2d 1353 (Colo. 1997).

Original jurisdiction is proper under this rule, prior to dismissal of the underlying action or appeal, on issue of sanctions. While the court of appeals is not without jurisdiction to determine the issue of propriety of sanctions issued by a settlement conference judge, the appellate remedy under such circumstances would not assist petitioner who is under order to comply or risk contempt. Halaby, McCrea & Cross v. Hoffman, 831 P.2d 902 (Colo. 1992).

Original jurisdiction under this rule is proper when appellate review of trial court's evidentiary ruling would not afford adequate relief since jeopardy will have attached and the defendant cannot be retried. People v. District Court of El Paso County, 869 P.2d 1281 (Colo. 1994).

Appeal held adequate remedy. The mere fact that a new trial may be necessary to correct an improper denial of a third-party complaint does not in itself render an appeal inadequate as a remedy for the third-party plaintiff. Pub. Serv. Co. v. District Court, 638 P.2d 772 (Colo. 1981).

Original writs cannot supersede the ordinary functions of an appeal. People ex rel. City & County of Denver v. District Court, 81 Colo. 163, 255 P. 447 (1927); White v. District Court, 695 P.2d 1133 (Colo. 1984).

Original proceedings may not be employed as a substitute for an appeal. Douglas v. Mun. Court, 151 Colo. 358, 377 P.2d 738 (1963); DeLong v. District Court, 151 Colo. 364, 377 P.2d 737 (1963); Coquina Oil Corp. v. District Court, 623 P.2d 40 (Colo. 1981).

Prohibition may not be used in lieu of an appeal. Prinster v. District Court, 137 Colo. 393, 325 P.2d 938 (1958); Leonhart v. District Court, 138 Colo. 1, 329 P.2d 781 (1958); Town of Vail v. District Court, 163 Colo. 305, 430 P.2d 477 (1967); First Nat'l Bank v. District Court, 164 Colo. 9, 432 P.2d 1 (1967); Vaughn v. District Court, 192 Colo. 348, 559 P.2d 222 (1977); Lincoln First Bank v. District Court, 628 P.2d 615 (Colo. 1981).

Prohibition cannot be converted into, or made to serve the purpose of, an appeal, or writ of review to undo what already has been done. Prinster v. District Court, 137 Colo. 393, 325 P.2d 938 (1958).

Original jurisdiction may not be utilized to avoid the requirements of finality of judgments and orders set forth in C.A.R. 1. Groendyke Transp., Inc. v. District Court, 140 Colo. 190, 343 P.2d 535 (1959).

Prohibition is preventive, rather than corrective, remedy, and usually issues only to prevent the commission of a future act, rather than to undo an act already performed. People ex rel. Long v. District Court, 28 Colo. 161, 63 P. 321 (1900); Stiger v. District Court, 188 Colo. 407, 535 P.2d 508 (1975).

A writ of prohibition is designed to restrain rather than remedy an abuse of jurisdiction. Vaughn v. District Court, 192 Colo. 348, 559 P.2d 222 (1977).

The remedy of prohibition is primarily preventive or restraining, not corrective, and only incidentally remedial in the sense of giving relief to the parties. Prinster v. District Court, 137 Colo. 393, 325 P.2d 938 (1958); Leonhart v. District Court, 138 Colo. 1, 329 P.2d 781 (1958).

The office of the writ of prohibition is preventive in that it restrains excessive or improper assumption of jurisdiction by a tribunal possessing judicial or quasi-judicial powers. City of Aurora v. Congregation Beth Medrosh Hagodol, 140 Colo. 462, 345 P.2d 385 (1959).

Relief in the nature of prohibition is discretionary with the supreme court. People ex rel. L'Abbe v. District Court, 26 Colo. 386, 58 P. 604, 46 L.R.A. 850 (1899); People ex rel. Bonfils v. District Court, 29 Colo. 83, 66 P. 1068 (1901); People ex rel. Barnum v. District Court, 74 Colo. 48, 218 P. 912 (1923); People ex rel. Zalinger v. County Court, 77 Colo. 172, 235 P. 370 (1925); Meaker v. District Court, 134 Colo. 151, 300 P.2d 805 (1956); Stull v. District Court, 135 Colo. 86, 308 P.2d 1006 (1957); Leonhart v. District Court, 138 Colo. 1, 329 P.2d 781 (1958); City of Aurora v. Congregation Beth Medrosh Hagodol, 140 Colo. 462, 345 P.2d 385 (1959); Vaughn v. District Court, 192 Colo. 348, 559 P.2d 222 (1977); Coquina Oil Corp. v. District Court, 623 P.2d 40 (Colo. 1981); White v. District Court, 695 P.2d 1133 (Colo. 1984); Halaby, McCrea & Cross v. Hoffman, 831 P.2d 902 (Colo. 1992); People v. District Court, Arapahoe County, 868 P.2d 400 (Colo. 1994); Pearson v. District Court, 18th Jud. Dist., 924 P.2d 512 (Colo. 1996).

It is a supervisory power. Prohibition is a power conferred by the constitution by means of which, when necessary, supervisory control may be exercised over inferior tribunals, acting without or in excess of their jurisdiction. People ex rel. Lackey v. District Court, 30 Colo. 123, 69 P. 597 (1902).

And prohibition not granted unless the inferior court has no jurisdiction to act. People ex rel. Barnum v. District Court, 74 Colo. 48, 218 P. 912 (1923); People ex rel. Zalinger v. County Court, 77 Colo. 172, 235 P. 370 (1925); People ex rel. City & County of Denver v. District Court, 81 Colo. 163, 255 P. 447 (1927); Stull v. District Court, 135 Colo. 86, 308 P.2d 1006 (1957); Hampton v. District Court, 199 Colo. 104, 605 P.2d 54 (1980).

When prohibition proper remedy. Relief in the nature of prohibition is a proper remedy only in those cases where the district court is proceeding without or in excess of its jurisdiction or has abused its discretion in exercising its functions. City of Colo. Springs v. District Court, 184 Colo. 177, 519 P.2d 325 (1974); People v. Gallagher, 194 Colo. 121, 570 P.2d 236 (1977); Prudential Prop. & Cas. Ins. Co. of Am. v. District Court, 617 P.2d 556 (Colo. 1980); Lincoln First Bank v. District Court, 628 P.2d 615 (Colo. 1981); Marks v. District Court, 643 P.2d 741 (Colo.), cert. denied, 458 U.S.

Relief in the nature of prohibition is appropriate where the district court is proceeding without or in excess of its jurisdiction, or has abused its discretion. Tyler v. District Court, 193 Colo. 31, 561 P.2d 1260 (1977); Marquez v. District Court, 200 Colo. 55, 613 P.2d 1302 (1980).

An aggrieved party may petition the supreme court for relief in the nature of prohibition when an inferior tribunal has allegedly exceeded its jurisdiction. Solliday v. District Court, 135 Colo. 489, 313 P.2d 1000 (1957).

An order in the nature of prohibition should be entertained where it is apparent that no judgment in favor of the plaintiff in the court below could be affirmed for want of jurisdiction over the person of the defendant. Carlson v. District Court, 116 Colo. 330, 180 P.2d 525 (1947); Kellner v. District Court, 127 Colo. 320, 256 P.2d 887 (1953).

Relief in the nature of prohibition in an original proceeding is proper where a trial court is proceeding, or threatens to proceed, without jurisdiction. Andrews v. Lull, 139 Colo. 536, 341 P.2d 475 (1959).

Although a district court may have jurisdiction of a case, prohibition still may lie upon a clear showing that the court has grossly abused its discretion and that an appeal would not provide an adequate remedy. W. Food Plan, Inc. v. District Court, 198 Colo. 251, 598 P.2d 1038 (1979).

Mandamus proper remedy where court has abused its discretion. Relief in the nature of mandamus under this rule is a proper remedy in a case in which a district court has abused its discretion in exercising its functions. Gonzales v. District Court, 198 Colo. 505, 602 P.2d 857 (1979).

A writ in the nature of mandamus will issue only upon a showing that the trial court has abused its discretion and that the damage sustained as a result of the abuse of discretion cannot be remedied on appeal. Pub. Serv. Co. v. District Court, 638 P.2d 772 (Colo. 1981).

The issuance of a writ to mandate the vacation of the reference order to a master is necessary to protect the rights of the petitioner where the court is proceeding in excess of its power, for to await the final judgment based on the master's report would be too late, any appeal at that point a futile act, the expenditure of both time and money would already have occurred, and there would then be no way to undo what had already been erroneously done. Gelfond v. District Court, 180 Colo. 95, 504 P.2d 673 (1972).

Prohibition will not issue when the petitioner has failed to act with reasonable promptness. James v. James, 95 Colo. 1, 32 P.2d 821 (1934).

Nor where attention of lower court must be directed to jurisdiction question. Prohibition will not issue where the attention of the inferior tribunal has not been called to its alleged lack of jurisdiction, since one summoned can appear specially in the court or quasi-judicial agency to move that process be quashed as to him. City of Thornton v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 154 Colo. 431, 391 P.2d 374 (1964).

The attention of the trial court must be called to any lack of jurisdiction before a writ of prohibition will issue from the supreme court. Town of Vail v. District Court, 163 Colo. 305, 430 P.2d 477 (1967); LeGrange v. District Court, 657 P.2d 454 (Colo. 1983).

Nor to prevent court from proceeding to final conclusion. Prohibition will not issue to restrain a trial court having jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject matter from proceeding to a final conclusion. Prinster v. District Court, 137 Colo. 393, 325 P.2d 938 (1958); Leonhart v. District Court, 138 Colo. 1, 329 P.2d 781 (1958); Town of Vail v. District Court, 163 Colo. 305, 430 P.2d 477 (1967); First Nat'l Bank v. District Court, 164 Colo. 9, 432 P.2d 1 (1967).

Nor to restrain court from error in case properly before it. Prohibition may never be used to restrain a trial court from committing error in deciding a question properly before it. Prinster v. District Court, 137 Colo. 393, 325 P.2d 938 (1958); Leonhart v. District Court, 138 Colo. 1, 329 P.2d 781 (1958); Town of Vail v. District Court, 163 Colo. 305, 430 P.2d 477 (1967); First Nat'l Bank v. District Court, 164 Colo. 9, 432 P.2d 1 (1967).

If an inferior court has jurisdiction of the subject, a mistaken exercise of that jurisdiction or of its acknowledged powers will not justify a resort to the extraordinary remedy of prohibition; there must be excess of jurisdiction, and not mere error in the exercise of a conceded jurisdiction. Leonhart v. District Court, 138 Colo. 1, 329 P.2d 781 (1958).

Mere error, irregularity, or mistake in the proceedings of a court having jurisdiction does not justify a resort to the extraordinary remedy by prohibition. Prinster v. District Court, 137 Colo. 393, 325 P.2d 938 (1958).

A writ of prohibition does not correct mere error. Vaughn v. District Court, 192 Colo. 348, 559 P.2d 222 (1977); Alspaugh v. District Court, 190 Colo. 282, 545 P.2d 1362 (1976).

The writ of prohibition cannot be sued for appealing cases on the installment plan and it will not be issued on account of irregularities where the trial court had both jurisdiction of the subject matter and of the person of a defendant.

Bustamante v. District Court, 138 Colo. 97, 329 P.2d 1013 (1958).

Questions on the merits of the case may be reviewed only by appeal; the supreme court will not use its constitutional supervisory power to prevent error in a trial court. Toll v. City & County of Denver, 139 Colo. 462, 340 P.2d 862 (1959).

And will not issue when lower court may properly and fully determine question. The supreme court will not exercise original jurisdiction when the question may be properly submitted and determined and the rights of the petitioner fully protected and enforced in the lower court. Rogers v. Best, 115 Colo. 245, 171 P.2d 769 (1946); Kemper v. District Court, 131 Colo. 325, 281 P.2d 512 (1955); Medberry v. Patterson, 174 F. Supp. 720 (D. Colo.), cert. denied, 358 U.S. 932, 79 S. Ct. 320, 3 L. Ed. 2d 304 (1959).

Review limited to questions of jurisdiction and abuse of discretion. Under this rule, the authority of the supreme court extends no further than to determine whether a trial court exceeds its jurisdiction or abuses its discretion. Toll v. City & County of Denver, 139 Colo. 462, 340 P.2d 862 (1959); People v. Martinez, 24 P.3d 629 (Colo. 2001).

When a writ of prohibition is presented to the supreme court, its only inquiry is whether the inferior judicial tribunal is exercising a jurisdiction it does not possess, or, having jurisdiction over the subject matter and the parties, has exceeded its legitimate powers. City of Aurora v. Congregation Beth Medrosh Hagodol, 140 Colo. 462, 345 P.2d 385 (1959); City of Colo. Springs v. District Court, 184 Colo. 177, 519 P.2d 325 (1974).

And court may not adjudicate rights of non-parties. Where parties who enjoyed favorable ruling in a trial court are not parties in prohibition proceedings in the supreme court, the court is in no position to adjudicate their rights. Prinster v. District Court, 137 Colo. 393, 325 P.2d 938 (1958).

But court may prevent future proceedings or enter proper order. Where an unauthorized act of an inferior tribunal has been performed, and something remains to be done to give full effect to the judgment in a matter beyond the lower court's jurisdiction, prohibition may be granted to prevent such further action and also to undo what has already been done by directing the lower court to set aside its order and enter a proper order. People ex rel. Long v. District Court, 28 Colo. 161, 63 P. 321 (1900).

When more than preventive relief available. Ordinarily, relief only lies to prevent the lower court from proceeding further with the cause, but where this would not give the relator the relief to which he is entitled, it may direct that all proceedings had in excess of jurisdiction be quashed and the order entered which should have been. People ex rel. Lackey v. District Court, 30 Colo. 123, 69 P. 597 (1902).

Application must show prima facie circumstances justifying jurisdiction. A party seeking to invoke the original jurisdiction of the supreme court under this rule, must be able to show, prima facie at least, circumstances justifying the exercise of such jurisdiction. Groendyke Transp., Inc. v. District Court, 140 Colo. 190, 343 P.2d 535 (1959).

And failure to do so is fatal defect. The application to invoke original jurisdiction is fatally defective in that there is no allegation that sets forth the circumstances which rendered it necessary or proper that the supreme court exercise its original jurisdiction. Rogers v. Best, 115 Colo. 245, 171 P.2d 769 (1946); Medberry v. Patterson, 174 F. Supp. 720 (D. Colo.), cert. denied, 358 U.S. 932, 79 S. Ct. 320, 3 L. Ed. 2d 304 (1959).

Burden is on petitioner. In an original proceeding pursuant to this rule, the burden is on the petitioner to clearly establish that the respondent trial court is proceeding without or in excess of its jurisdiction, or has seriously abused its discretion. Brewer v. District Court, 655 P.2d 819 (Colo. 1982); Miller v. District Court, 737 P.2d 834 (Colo. 1987).

Lower court and judge are indispensable parties. In an application to the appellate tribunal for relief against an inferior court, the court and judge thereof are indispensable parties. James v. James, 95 Colo. 1, 32 P.2d 821 (1934).

In a proceeding seeking a writ of mandamus, the district court and the district court judge, acting in his capacity as judge, should be named as the appropriate respondents. Wesson v. Bowling, 199 Colo. 30, 604 P.2d 23 (1979).

No time limit on filing specified. This rule does not specify any time limit on filing. Application of the doctrine of laches may bar consideration of original proceedings by the supreme court; nevertheless, a three-month delay may not be unreasonable. Nolan v. District Court, 195 Colo. 6, 575 P.2d 9 (1978).

This rule tolls statutory speedy trial period. People v. Jamerson, 198 Colo. 92, 596 P.2d 764 (1979); People v. Beyette, 711 P.2d 1263 (Colo. 1986).

Although proceeding not technically interlocutory appeal. Section 18-1-405 and Crim. P. 48 exclude, from the computation of the time in which a defendant shall be brought to trial the period of delay caused by an interlocutory appeal, but an original proceeding under this rule is, technically speaking, not an interlocutory appeal. People v. Medina, 40 Colo. App. 490, 583 P.2d 293 (1978).

No authority for issuing writs of prohibition against attorney general. Although this rule provides for prohibition against district courts in appropriate circumstances, it expresses no authority for issuing such writs against the attorney general. W. Food Plan, Inc. v. District Court, 198 Colo. 251, 598 P.2d 1038 (1979).

No authority to enforce civil subpoenas against out-of-state nonparties. Such enforcement, if any, is left to the states in which the discovery is to take place. Colo. Mills, LLC v. SunOpta Grains & Foods Inc., 2012 CO 4, 269 P.3d 731.

Applied in Berger v. People, 123 Colo. 403, 231 P.2d 799, cert. denied, 342 U.S. 837, 77 S. Ct. 62, 96 L. Ed. 633 (1951); Colo. State Bd. of Exam'rs of Architects v. District Court, 126 Colo. 340, 249 P.2d 146 (1952); Caldwell v. District Court, 128 Colo. 498, 266 P.2d 771 (1953); Farrell v. District Court, 135 Colo. 329, 311 P.2d 410 (1957); Garrimore v. Justice Court, 143 Colo. 403, 355 P.2d 116 (1960); Scheer v. District Court, 147 Colo. 265, 363 P.2d 1059 (1961); Colo. State Council of Carpenters v. District Court, 155 Colo. 54, 392 P.2d 601 (1964); Schwader v. District Court, 172 Colo. 474, 474 P.2d 607 (1970); People ex rel. Heckers v. District Court, 170 Colo. 533, 463 P.2d 310 (1970); People ex rel. Dunbar v. District Court, 180 Colo. 107, 502 P.2d 420 (1972); City & County of Denver v. Juvenile Court, 182 Colo. 157, 511 P.2d 898 (1973); People v. Spencer, 185 Colo. 377, 524 P.2d 1084 (1974); Jacobucci v. District Court, 189 Colo. 380, 541 P.2d 667 (1975); City of Louisville v. District Court, 190 Colo. 33, 543 P.2d 67 (1975); Clinic Masters, Inc. v. District Court, 192 Colo. 120, 556 P.2d 473 (1976); Shon v. District Court, 199 Colo. 90, 605 P.2d 472 (1980); Barnes v. Utils., 2012 CO 28, 275 P.3d 646; Coffman v. The Castle Law Grp., 2016 CO 54, 375 P.3d 128.

II. ILLUSTRATIVE CASES.

Trial court found proceeding without jurisdiction. Carlson v. District Court, 116 Colo. 330, 180 P.2d 525 (1947); Kellner v. District Court, 127 Colo. 320, 256 P.2d 887 (1953); Warwick v. District Court, 129 Colo. 300, 269 P.2d 704 (1954); Stull v. District Court, 135 Colo. 86, 308 P.2d 1006 (1957).

Question of constitutionality is matter to be raised by appeal, and not by a petition for prohibition. Colo. State Bd. of Med. Exam'rs v. District Court, 138 Colo. 227, 331 P.2d 502 (1958).

Supreme court's discharge of a rule to show cause improvidently granted has no substantive significance and does not indicate approval or disapproval of trial court ruling, and, thus, trial court erred in using such discharge as a basis for dismissing criminal charges against a defendant. People v. McGraine, 679 P.2d 1084 (Colo. 1984).

But prohibition proper to prevent prosecution barred by statute of limitations. An original proceeding in prohibition is proper to prevent a trial judge from proceeding with a prosecution on an indictment which showed on its face that the indictment had not been returned within the time fixed by statute, as a court may not proceed contrary to the inhibitions contained in the statute of limitations. Markiewicz v. Black, 138 Colo. 128, 330 P.2d 539, 75 A.L.R.2d 678 (1958).

Where a trial court is without jurisdiction to try defendant under an indictment showing on its face that prosecution is barred by the statute of limitations, prohibition is the proper remedy for relief. Bustamante v. District Court, 138 Colo. 97, 329 P.2d 1013 (1958).

Or to prevent double jeopardy. Where it appears that defendants were in jeopardy and that a court is about to place them in jeopardy a second time for the same offense, prohibition is the proper proceeding to protect defendants in their constitutional right against being twice put in jeopardy for the same offense. Markiewicz v. Black, 138 Colo. 128, 330 P.2d 539, 75 A.L.R.2d 678 (1958).

This rule is an appropriate method for a defendant to challenge an erroneous ruling on probable cause. Habeas corpus relief is generally not available unless other relief is unavailable. Blevins v. Tihonovich, 728 P.2d 732 (Colo. 1986).

This rule provides an appropriate procedural mechanism, absent any other adequate remedy, to mandate compliance by the department of corrections with trial court sentencing orders. People v. Dixon, 133 P.3d 1176 (Colo. 2006).

Original proceeding could have been filed to test preliminary hearing finding probable cause. White v. MacFarlane, 713 P.2d 366 (Colo. 1986).

Exercise of original jurisdiction proper to prevent confusion among prosecutors and uncertainty of defendants where pre-trial ruling declared death penalty statute to be unconstitutional. People v. Young, 814 P.2d 834 (Colo. 1991).

Exercise of original jurisdiction proper to resolve question of juvenile court's authority to order department of institutions not to send youths to out-of-state facility. McDonnell v. Juvenile Court, 864 P.2d 565 (Colo. 1993).

Supreme court had original jurisdiction to determine whether trial court exceeded its jurisdiction or seriously abused its discretion in not allowing petitioner to proceed in forma pauperis. Magistrate's denial of motion did not constitute reversible error or prejudice to petitioner where magistrate determined petitioner's subsequent claims, and denied relief. Hawkinson v. Biddle, 880 P.2d 748 (Colo. 1994).

Exercise of jurisdiction under this rule proper to review trial court's ruling denying plaintiffs' request to proceed without filing cost bond since ruling had an obvious impact on the ability to litigate claims. Walcott v. District Ct., 2nd Jud. Dist., 924 P.2d 163 (Colo. 1996).

Exercise of jurisdiction proper under this rule, where the trial court abused its discretion in discharging defendant from the department of corrections and where appeal would be inadequate to remedy defendant's immediate and improper release from the department. People v. Miller, 25 P.3d 1230 (Colo. 2000).

Exercise of original jurisdiction proper to address the district courts staying of an employee's Wage Claim Act claim against an employer pending conclusion of arbitration proceedings when appellate review of the arbiter's final decision would not have been an adequate remedy because the underlying issue of the right to pursue compensation through the Colorado court system would not be resolved. Lambdin v. District Ct. of Arapahoe Cty., 903 P.2d 1126 (Colo. 1995).

Or where court lacks subject matter jurisdiction. Prohibition is applicable to restrain a trial court from proceeding with a criminal trial when it has no jurisdiction over the subject matter. Bustamante v. District Court, 138 Colo. 97, 329 P.2d 1013 (1958).

Or personal jurisdiction. Prohibition is the proper remedy to invoke in a civil action where a district court is proceeding without jurisdiction of the person of a defendant. Bustamante v. District Court, 138 Colo. 97, 329 P.2d 1013 (1958).

Where a court lacked jurisdiction to determine a party's right to custody in a habeas corpus proceeding, prohibition is a proper remedy to challenge a custody order from that court. Lopez v. Smith, 146 Colo. 180, 360 P.2d 967 (1961); Brouwer v. District Court, 169 Colo. 303, 455 P.2d 207 (1969).

Where an application is made to a licensing authority for a retail liquor license and the license is duly issued, the district court does not have jurisdiction to reverse the findings of the licensing authority and revoke the license in review proceedings if the licensee is not made a party. The petitioner-licensee, not being a party to the review proceedings, has no remedy by appeal and properly sought relief by invoking the original jurisdiction of the supreme court. Short v. District Court, 147 Colo. 52, 362 P.2d 406 (1961).

Writ of mandamus will issue to insure full observance with the rules of civil procedure. In a proper case, a writ of mandamus will issue to insure the full observance of the rules of civil procedure, and, in such a case, it must be shown that the damage to petitioner cannot be cured by appeal and that judicial discretion has been abused. Curtis, Inc. v. District Court, 186 Colo. 226, 526 P.2d 1335 (1974).

Pretrial discovery may be proper subject for original writ. Matters relating to pretrial discovery are ordinarily within the trial court's discretion and are reviewable only by appeal rather than in an original proceeding; however, if it is shown that judicial discretion has been grossly abused and that damage to the petitioners could not be cured by appeal, an original writ in the nature of prohibition may issue. Chicago Cutlery Co. v. District Court, 194 Colo. 10, 568 P.2d 464 (1977).

When a procedural ruling will have a significant effect on a party's ability to litigate the merits of the controversy and the damage to a party could not be cured on appeal, an original proceeding is an appropriate remedy to challenge a trial court's order relating to matters of pretrial discovery. Kerwin v. District Court, 649 P.2d 1086 (Colo. 1982).

Although matters of pretrial discovery are ordinarily within the discretion of the trial court, they are not exempted from extraordinary relief under appropriate circumstances. Sanchez v. District Court, 624 P.2d 1314 (Colo. 1981).

Although orders relating to pretrial discovery are interlocutory in nature and normally not reviewable in an original proceeding, the supreme court has not hesitated to exercise its original jurisdiction when a discovery order places a party at an unwarranted disadvantage in litigating the merits of his claim. Caldwell v. District Court, 644 P.2d 26 (Colo. 1982).

Where the trial court's order both prevented the plaintiff from accessing the sole source of factual information for which she demonstrated substantial need and departed significantly from the court's precedent in mandating that plaintiff waive medical record privileges, the court properly exercised its jurisdiction. Cardenas v. Jerath, 180 P.3d 415 (Colo. 2008).

As may be denial of amendment of complaint. Denial of petitioner's motion to amend his complaint was a ruling justifying the supreme court's exercise of original jurisdiction. Varner v. District Court, 618 P.2d 1388 (Colo. 1980).

And pretrial rulings on issues involving admissibility of evidence and imposition of sanctions against prosecution in criminal cases are claims which are properly before the supreme court for a decision on the merits in an original proceeding. People v. District Court, 664 P.2d 247 (Colo. 1983); People v. Casias, 59 P.3d 853 (Colo. 2002).

Relief was appropriate under this rule where the trial court's ruling barring introduction of DNA evidence would impair the prosecution's ability to present its case and double jeopardy would bar a retrial if the defendant were acquitted. The supreme court held that the trial court erred in refusing to admit the DNA evidence and that exclusion of the evidence was an abuse of discretion. People v. Shreck, 22 P.3d 68 (Colo. 2001).

And reviewing an erroneous discovery order that could place an unnecessary burden on the prosecution that is not mandated by the rules. People v. Vlassis, 247 P.3d 196 (Colo. 2011).

And psychiatric examination ordered in violation of C.R.C.P. 35(a). Petitioner's allegations that respondent court exceeded its jurisdiction and abused its discretion by ordering a psychiatric examination in violation of C.R.C.P. 35(a) presented a proper case for exercise of the supreme court's original jurisdiction. Post-judgment appeal obviously cannot reverse the possible adverse consequences of a pretrial psychiatric examination of petitioner. Tyler v. District Court, 193 Colo. 31, 561 P.2d 1260 (1977).

And denial of intervention of right. In cases in which an order denies the right to intervene, situations may arise (e.g., where intervention is a matter of right) where the determination in the action may bind the intervenors and where the denial can be considered as a final order affecting the rights of the persons seeking to intervene. In such instances an order denying intervention may justify invoking the original jurisdiction of the supreme court to prevent a denial or miscarriage of justice. Groendyke Transp., Inc. v. District Court, 140 Colo. 190, 343 P.2d 535 (1959).

And improper consolidation of actions. Contention that district court had no power under § 38-22-111 (1) to consolidate one action which was pending with another action which had been dismissed without prejudice, and thus was proceeding without in personam jurisdiction, was a proper matter to be resolved in a proceeding for a writ of mandamus. Columbia Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. District Court, 186 Colo. 212, 526 P.2d 661 (1974).

And question of improper venue. The supreme court may consider the question of improper venue on an original writ in view of the importance of determining the question raised and of preventing the delay and expense of a retrial. Jameson v. District Court, 115 Colo. 298, 172 P.2d 449 (1946); Bd. of County Comm'rs v. District Court, 632 P.2d 1017 (Colo. 1981).

In an action on contract, it appearing that defendant was entitled to have the case tried in the county of his residence, relief is allowed against the trial in another county. People ex rel. Barnum v. District Court, 74 Colo. 121, 218 P. 1047 (1923).

And denial of dismissal for failure to grant speedy trial. Where a trial court has denied his motion for dismissal for failure to grant a speedy trial, a criminal defendant may seek a writ of prohibition. Hampton v. District Court, 199 Colo. 104, 605 P.2d 54 (1980).

Relief in the nature of prohibition under this rule is an appropriate remedy when a district court is proceeding without jurisdiction to try a defendant in violation of his right to a speedy trial. Marquez v. District Court, 200 Colo. 55, 613 P.2d 1302 (1980).

And protection of judgment lienor. An appeal following a trial on the merits may not be an adequate remedy for a judgment lienor whose priority might be destroyed by the sale of the encumbered property by a judgment creditor whose rights attached subsequent to the default judgment; thus, an original proceeding is proper. Weaver Constr. Co. v. District Court, 190 Colo. 227, 545 P.2d 1042 (1976).

And review of order for temporary possession in condemnation proceeding. Because an order for temporary possession in a condemnation proceeding is interlocutory, and review must be by an original proceeding. Larson v. Chase Pipe Line Co., 183 Colo. 76, 514 P.2d 1316 (1973).

And failure to provide transcript of preliminary hearing to indigent. Failure to provide a transcript of a preliminary hearing at the request of an indigent defendant in a criminal case, when the transcript is necessary for an effective defense, is an abuse of discretion by the district court and is subject to review by the supreme court on an original writ. Gonzales v. District Court, 198 Colo. 505, 602 P.2d 857 (1979).

And question of reasonableness of bail. The proper remedy to the question of the reasonableness of the amount set as bail is by way of original proceedings in the supreme court. Balltrip v. People, 157 Colo. 108, 401 P.2d 259 (1965).

Supreme court has jurisdiction to review trial court's order on attorney fees for a court-appointed attorney as an independent original proceeding, but, if there is an appeal on some aspect of the underlying action, the attorney fees issue may be raised in such appeal without the necessity of bringing the independent original proceeding. Bye v. District Court, 701 P.2d 56 (Colo. 1985).

Supreme court has jurisdiction to review controversy over sanctions, because it implicates entirely different legal theory than underlying action, is collateral to the merits of that action, and involves parties which are different than the parties to the underlying action. Halaby, McCrea & Cross v. Hoffman, 831 P.2d 902 (Colo. 1992).

But order granting intervention not reviewable on original writ. An order of a trial court granting intervention under C.R.C.P. 24 is not reviewable by the supreme court in an action invoking the court's original jurisdiction under this rule. Groendyke Transp., Inc. v. District Court, 140 Colo. 190, 343 P.2d 535 (1959).

Nor application to set aside default judgment. The only proper procedure to secure review of a trial court's order granting or denying an application to set aside a default judgment is by appeal after final judgment. Weaver Constr. Co. v. District Court, 190 Colo. 227, 545 P.2d 1042 (1976).

The only proper procedure to secure review of a trial court's order granting an application to set aside a default judgment is by writ of error after final judgment, not prohibition. Stiger v. District Court, 188 Colo. 407, 535 P.2d 508 (1975).

And prohibition not usable to limit hearing by regulatory commission. Where the jurisdiction of the public utilities commission was invoked by the utility when it filed its application, the commission scheduled a hearing, and notice was directed to be given to those whom the commission envisioned might be interested, the supreme court certainly cannot enjoin the hearing or direct the scope thereof in order to prevent error, nor can it limit the parties to whom notice should be given; thus, a petition for prohibition is premature. City of Thornton v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 154 Colo. 431, 391 P.2d 374 (1964).

Revocation of conditional plea agreement in criminal proceeding by district court, which retains jurisdiction over agreement at least until the express condition has been satisfied, goes beyond the scope of supreme court review cognizable under this rule. White v. District Court, 695 P.2d 1133 (Colo. 1984).

Supreme court has no original jurisdiction to issue a writ of prohibition against an independent regulatory commission like the public utilities commission. Intermountain R.E.A. v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 723 P.2d 142 (Colo. 1986).

Supreme court has jurisdiction to review a defendant's sentence if the trial court's sentence is illegal. People v. District Court, 673 P.2d 991 (Colo. 1983).

Supreme court has jurisdiction to review the court of appeals' stay of the Colorado state board of medical examiners' suspension of a doctor's license to practice medicine. Bd. of Med. Exam'rs v. Court of Appeals, 920 P.2d 807 (Colo. 1996).

Interlocutory review granted to address the propriety of the trial court's orders for mediation, where trial court ordered mediation despite petitioner's claims of physical and psychological abuse by husband and appellate review would not prevent the harm petitioner sought to avoid. Pearson v. District Court, 18th Jud. Dist., 924 P.2d 512 (Colo. 1996).

Prohibition generally improper where new trial ordered. Relief in the nature of prohibition is not a proper remedy in cases where the trial court orders a new trial, unless the trial court's decision to grant or deny the new trial reflects a clear showing of an abuse of discretion. People in Interest of P.N., 663 P.2d 253 (Colo. 1983).

Issuance of injunctive orders without complying with rules of civil procedure. Stull v. District Court, 135 Colo. 86, 308 P.2d 1006 (1957).

The court may set aside a lower court order allowing a person or entity to operate without a license when the lower tribunal has abused its discretion or acted outside of its jurisdiction to defeat exercise of the agency's authority delegated to it by the legislature. Due regard for the agency's role in carrying out the legislative design is at the heart of the court's inquiry in this regard. Kourlis v. District Court, El Paso County, 930 P.2d 1329 (Colo. 1997).

Rule to show cause issued why Boulder county district court should not grant the petitioners' motion for a change of venue and held that the district court erroneously denied the petitioners' motion for change of venue under C.R.C.P. 98 (b)(2). Executive Dir. v. District Ct. for Boulder County, 923 P.2d 885 (Colo. 1996).

Rule to show cause made absolute where district court issued case management order that required the trial to be set within 30 days; the date of issuance of the order extended the deadline for setting of trial by 30 days. Becker v. District Ct. for Arapahoe County, 969 P.2d 700 (Colo. 1998).

Rule to show cause made absolute where trial court refused plaintiffs' uncontested motions to postpone the deadline for disclosure of expert testimony and to continue the trial. Parties were in agreement to wait for the NTSB's plane crash investigative report instead of hiring expert investigators on short notice. Burchett v. S. Denver Windustrial, 42 P.3d 19 (Colo. 2002).

Given the liberal interpretation afforded to procedural rules, district court abused its discretion by dismissing petitioner's motion for transfer as untimely filed under C.R.C.P. 520(b) and appellate remedy would be inadequate. Accordingly, court makes the rule to show cause absolute and directs direct court to grant petitioner's motion for transfer to county court. Semental v. Denver County Court, 978 P.2d 668 (Colo. 1999).

Rule 21.1. Certification of Questions of Law

(a) Power to Answer. The supreme court may answer questions of law certified to it by the Supreme Court of the United States, a Court of Appeals of the United States, a United States District Court, or other federal court, when requested by the certifying court, if there is involved in any proceeding before it questions of law of this state which may be determinative of the cause then pending in the certifying court and as to which it appears to the certifying court that there is no controlling precedent in the decisions of the supreme court.

(b) Method of Invoking. This rule may be invoked by an order of any of the courts referred to in section (a) upon said court's own motion or upon the motion of any party in which the certified question arose.

(c) Contents of Certification Order. A certification order must set forth:

(1) The questions of law to be answered; and

(2) A statement of all facts relevant to the questions certified and showing fully the nature of the controversy in which the questions arose.

(d) Preparation of Certification Order. The certifying court must prepare the certification order, which must be signed by the judge presiding at the hearing, and the clerk of the certifying court must forward the certification order under its official seal to the supreme court. The supreme court may require the original or copies of all or of any portion of the record before the certifying court to be filed under the certification order, if, in the opinion of the supreme court, the record or a portion thereof may be necessary in answering the certified questions.

(e) Fees and Costs of Certification. Fees and costs of certification are the same as in civil appeals docketed before the supreme court and will be equally divided between the parties unless otherwise ordered by the certifying court in its order of certification.

(f) Briefs and Argument. If the supreme court agrees to answer the questions certified to it, the court will notify all parties. The parties may not file any briefs unless ordered to do so by the court. If ordered to file briefs, the plaintiff in the trial court, or the appealing party in the appellate court must file its opening brief within 42 days from the date of receipt of the notice, and the opposing party or parties must file an answer brief within 35 days from service of the opening brief. A reply brief may be filed within 21 days of the service of the answer brief. Briefs must comply with the form and service requirements of C.A.R. 28, 31, and 32. Oral arguments may be allowed as provided in C.A.R. 34.

(g) Opinion. The written opinion of the supreme court stating the law governing the questions certified will be sent by the clerk under the seal of the supreme court to the certifying court and to the parties.

GENERAL PROVISIONS

Rule 25. Filing and Service

(a) Filing. Documents required or permitted to be filed in the appellate court must be filed with the clerk. Filing may be accomplished by e-filing pursuant to C.A.R. 30, by mail addressed to the clerk, or by hand delivery to the clerk's office. The date of filing of documents is the date they are received by the clerk regardless of method of filing.

(b) Inmate Filings. Documents filed by an inmate confined to an institution will be deemed filed when filed in accordance with C.A.R. 25(b). Documents filed by an inmate confined in an institution are timely filed with the court if deposited in the institution's internal mailing system on or before the last day for filing. If an institution has a system designed for legal mail, the inmate must use that system to receive the benefit of this rule.

(c) Service of all Documents Required. Copies of all documents filed by any party and not required by these rules to be served by the clerk must, at or before the time of filing, be served by a party or person acting for that party on all other parties to the appeal or review. Service on a party represented by counsel must be made on counsel.

(d) Manner of Service. Service may be personal or by mail or E-Service. Personal service includes delivery of the copy to a clerk or other responsible person at the office of counsel. E-Service is complete upon the time and date of transmission by the E-Service provider.

(e) Proof of Service. Documents presented for filing must contain an acknowledgment of service by the person served or proof of service in the form of a statement of the date and manner of service and of the names of the person served, certified by the person who made service. Proof of service may appear on or be affixed to the documents filed. The clerk may permit documents to be filed without acknowledgment or proof of service but shall require such to be filed promptly thereafter.

ANNOTATION

With respect to the service of process requirement of § 8-53-119 (3), service upon the attorney general constitutes service upon industrial commission (now industrial claim appeals office). Butkovich v. Indus. Comm'n, 723 P.2d 1306 (Colo. 1985).

Applied in In re Lowery v. Indus. Comm'n, 666 P.2d 562 (Colo. 1983).

Rule 26. Computation and Extension of Time

(a) Computation of Time. In computing any period of time prescribed or allowed by these rules the day of the act, event, or default from which the designated period of time begins to run shall not be included. Thereafter, every day shall be counted including holidays, Saturdays and Sundays. The last day of the period so computed shall be included, unless it is a Saturday, a Sunday, or a legal holiday, in which event the period runs until the end of the next day which is not a Saturday, a Sunday, or a legal holiday. As used in these Rules, ''legal holiday'' includes the first day of January, observed as New Year's Day; the third Monday in January, observed as Martin Luther King Day; the third Monday in February, observed as Washington-Lincoln Day; the last Monday in May, observed as Memorial Day; the fourth day of July, observed as Independence Day; the first Monday in September, observed as Labor Day; the second Monday in October, observed as Columbus Day; the 11th day of November, observed as Veteran's Day; the fourth Thursday in November, observed as Thanksgiving Day; the twenty-fifth day of December, observed as Christmas Day, and any other day except Saturday or Sunday when the court is closed.

(b) Enlargement of Time. The appellate court for good cause shown may upon motion enlarge the time prescribed by these rules or by its order for doing any act, or may permit an act to be done after the expiration of such time; but the court may not enlarge the time for filing a notice of appeal beyond that prescribed in C.A.R. 4(a). Nor may the court enlarge the time prescribed by law for filing a petition to enjoin, set aside, suspend, modify, enforce, or otherwise review, or a notice of appeal from, an order of an administrative agency, board, commission, or officer of the State of Colorado, except as specifically authorized by law.

(c) Additional Time After Service by Mail. Repealed.

COMMITTEE COMMENT

The rule as amended conforms to C.R.C.P. 6(a).

COMMENT

After the particular effective date, time computation in most situations is intended to incorporate the Rule of Seven. Under the Rule of Seven, a day is a day, and because calendars are divided into 7-day week intervals, groupings of days are in 7-day or multiples of 7-day intervals. Groupings of less than 7 days have been left as they were because such small numbers do not interfere with the underlying concept. Details of the Rule of Seven reform are set forth in an article by Richard P. Holme, 41 Colo. Lawyer, Vol. 1, P.33 (January 2012).

Time computation is sometimes ''forward,'' meaning starting the count at a particular stated event [such as date of filing] and counting forward to the deadline date. Counting ''backward'' means counting backward from the event to reach the deadline date [such as a stated number of days being allowed before the commencement of trial]. In determining the effective date of the Rule of Seven time computation/time interval amendments having a statutory basis, said amendments take effect on July 1, 2012 and regardless of whether time intervals are counted forward or backward, both the time computation start date and deadline date must be after June 30, 2012. Further, the time computation/time interval amendments do not apply to modify the settings of any dates or time intervals set by an order of a court entered before July 1, 2012.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, ''The Problem of Delay in the Colorado Court of Appeals'', see 58 Den. L.J. 1 (1980). For article, '''Rule of Seven' for Trial Lawyers: Calculating Litigation Deadlines'', see 41 Colo. Law. 33 (Jan. 2012).

Appellate court cannot enlarge the time for filing notice of appeal in civil cases beyond that prescribed in C.A.R. 4(a). Chapman v. Miller, 29 Colo. App. 8, 476 P.2d 763 (1970).

The provisions of section (b) of this rule prohibit an appellate court from enlarging the time for filing a notice of appeal under C.A.R. 4(a). People v. Allen, 182 Colo. 395, 513 P.2d 1060 (1973).

Although no enlargement may be made for filing a notice of appeal under C.A.R. 4(a), there is no like exception under this rule for C.A.R. 4.2(d). Hence, the appellate court may extend the time for filing under C.A.R. 4.2(d). Farm Deals, LLLP v. State, 2012 COA 6, 300 P.3d 921.

Filing appeal within time set by statute vests court of appeals with jurisdiction and the court itself cannot enlarge time set by statute. Denver v. Bd. of Assessment Appeals, 748 P.2d 1306 (Colo. App. 1987).

New requirement that notice of appeal be filed with the appellate court is jurisdictional and strict compliance with the rule is required. Therefore, a notice of appeal erroneously filed in the trial court was of no effect under the new rules, and trial court was without authority to grant an extension of time to correctly file a notice of appeal. Collins v. Boulder Urban Renewal Auth., 684 P.2d 952 (Colo. App. 1984).

But can enlarge time in criminal cases. An appellate court may, for good cause shown, enlarge the time for filing under C.A.R. (4)(a). People v. Allen, 182 Colo. 395, 513 P.2d 1060 (1973).

Although counsel's neglect in timely filing a notice of appeal is inexcusable, the court should consider whether other factors, such as the potential prejudice the appellee may suffer from a late filing, the interests of judicial economy, and the propriety of requiring the defendant to pursue other remedies to redress his counsel's neglect, weigh heavily in favor of permitting the late filing. Estep v. People, 753 P.2d 1241 (Colo. 1988).

Estep v. People factors equally important in a juvenile case when appellate review of a judgment of delinquency entered by a magistrate is foreclosed by counsel's failure to file a timely petition for district court review pursuant to § 19-1-108 (5). People ex rel. M.A.M., 167 P.3d 169 (Colo. App. 2007) (decided prior to 2007 repeal of § 19-1-108 (5)).

A knowing and intentional failure to file an appeal does not constitute good cause for extending the filing time pursuant to section (b). People v. Gilmore, 97 P.3d 123 (Colo. App. 2003).

Assertions inadequate to show excusable neglect. This rule is clear as to when and where the petition to appeal must be filed. Hence, statements by counsel that he was unfamiliar with the electronic filing and service system and that his secretary initially filed petition with trial court instead of appellate court constitute mere carelessness, not excusable neglect. Farm Deals, LLLP v. v.State, 2012 COA 6, 300 P.3d 921.

Judicial economy may constitute excusable neglect under section (b) only when accepting the appeal prevents the case from going back to the trial court on a new motion. People v. Gilmore, 97 P.3d 123 (Colo. App. 2003).

Section (c) is inapplicable as extension of time limit for petition for rehearing set forth in C.A.R. (40)(a). Garrett v. Garrett, 30 Colo. App. 167, 505 P.2d 39 (1971).

Application for time extension must generally be made before time prescribed expires. The application for extension, except on the happening of an unforeseen contingency, must be made before the time to take the step for which further time is asked has expired. La Junta & Lamar Canal Co. v. Fort Lyon Canal Co., 25 Colo. 515, 55 P. 728 motion to set aside order dismissing appeal granted, 25 Colo. 513, 55 P. 729 (1898).

Otherwise, right to perform act lost. Under C.R.C.P. 6 and C.A.R. 31, a right to file an answer brief is lost where no request for extension of time is made within the time limit the brief was due, except upon a showing that failure to act was the result of excusable neglect. Fraka v. Malernee, 129 Colo. 87, 267 P.2d 651 (1954).

Time extension granted where good cause shown. When the required steps in each case cannot be taken within the time limited, on good cause shown such time may be extended. La Junta & Lamar Canal Co. v. Fort Lyon Canal Co., 25 Colo. 515, 55 P. 728, motion to set aside order dismissing appeal granted, 25 Colo. 513, 55 P. 729 (1898).

When an appellant pleads for an enlargement of time under this rule solely on the basis that his counsel neglected to file the notice of appeal, such neglect constitutes ''good cause'' only if it satisfies the excusable neglect standard set forth in Farmers Ins. Group (507 P.2d 865). Estep v. People, 753 P.2d 1241 (Colo. 1988).

The determination of whether good cause exists for enlargement of time pursuant to this rule for the late filing of a notice of appeal is within the broad discretion of the court of appeals, but such discretion cannot be exercised in a manner that is manifestly arbitrary, unreasonable, or unfair. Estep v. People, 753 P.2d 1241 (Colo. 1988).

Stipulations fixing or extending time disregarded unless expressly approved. Parties cannot by stipulation or agreement fix or extend the time for filing briefs in the supreme court contrary to the rules, and, unless such agreements are approved by the court, they will be disregarded. Wilson v. People, 25 Colo. 375, 55 P. 721 (1898); La Junta & Lamar Canal Co. v. Fort Lyon Canal Co., 25 Colo. 515, 55 P. 728, motion to set aside order dismissing appeal granted, 25 Colo. 513, 55 P. 729 (1898); Estep v. People, 753 P.2d 1241 (Colo. 1988).

The time for filing an appeal to a decision of the title board is five days after the board denies the motion for rehearing and not five days from the date the secretary of state certifies the documents requested for appeal. Matter of Title, Ballot Title for 1997-98 No. 62, 961 P.2d 1077 (Colo. 1998).

The requirement that an appeal be filed within five days from the board's denial of a motion for rehearing is to be construed in conjunction with this rule, thus limiting the computation of five days to exclude Saturday and Sunday. Matter of Title, Ballot Title for 1997-98 No. 62, 961 P.2d 1077 (Colo. 1998).

General rule on time computation does not affect specific time limits imposed by statute. A party to a proceeding who received notice of the industrial claim appeals office's order by mail, and who did not file an appeal within 20 days after the date of the certificate of mailing of the order as required by the applicable statute, was not entitled to the additional three days allowed by this rule for service by mail. Indus. Claim Appeals Office v. Zarlingo, 57 P.3d 736 (Colo. 2002).

Applied in Widener v. District Court, 200 Colo. 398, 615 P.2d 33 (1980); People v. Boivin, 632 P.2d 1038 (Colo. App. 1981); Cline v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 792 P.2d 305 (Colo. App. 1990); Garcia v. Medved Chevrolet, Inc., 240 P.3d 371 (Colo. App. 2009), aff'd, 263 P.3d 92 (Colo. 2011); Petition of Heostis v. Dept. of Educ., 2016 COA 6, 375 P.3d 1232.

Rule 27. Motions

(a) In General.

(1) Application for Relief. An application for an order or other relief must be made by filing a motion, unless these rules prescribe another form.

(2) Content and Service of Motion.

(A) Grounds and Relief Sought. A motion must state with particularity the grounds for the motion, the relief sought, and the legal argument necessary to support it.

(B) Accompanying Documents. Any affidavit or other documents necessary to support a motion must be filed with the motion, including documents required by a specific provision of these rules governing such a motion.

(C) Documents Barred. The following documents are barred:

(i) a separate brief;

(ii) a separate notice of motion; and

(iii) a proposed order.

(D) Service. The motion must be served on all other parties pursuant to Rule 25. A motion to consolidate an appeal with another appeal must be served on all parties in both appeals.

(3) Response to Motion.

(A) Time to File. Any party may file a response in opposition to a motion, other than a motion for a procedural order pursuant to section (b) of this rule. The response must be filed within 7 days after service of the motion unless the court shortens or extends the time. In its discretion, the court may act on a motion authorized by Rule 8, 8.1, 9, or 41 before the 7 day period runs.

(B) Cross-Motion for Affirmative Relief. A response may include a cross-motion for affirmative relief. The time to respond to the new motion for affirmative relief is governed by Rule 27(a)(3)(A). The title of the response must alert the court to the request for relief.

(b) Determination of Stipulated Motions and Motions for Procedural Orders. The court may act on a stipulated motion signed by all parties or a motion for a procedural order, including a motion under Rule 26(b), at any time without awaiting a response. Any party adversely affected by the court's action may file a motion to reconsider, vacate, or modify that action. Timely opposition filed after the motion is granted in whole or in part does not constitute a request to reconsider, vacate, or modify the disposition; a motion specifically requesting that relief must be filed.

(c) Power of a Single Justice or Judge to Decide a Motion. In addition to the authority expressly conferred by these rules or by law, a single justice or judge may act alone on non-dispositive motions and on voluntary or uncontested dispositive motions. The appellate court may provide by rule or by order that only the court or a division of the court may act on any motion or class of motions. The court or a division of the court may review the action of a single justice or judge.

(d) Form of Motions. All documents and pleadings relating to motions must comply with Rule 32.

(e) No Oral Argument. A motion will be decided without oral argument unless the court orders otherwise.

Source: (d) amended August 30, 1985, effective January 1, 1986; (a) amended and adopted April 4, 1996, effective July 1, 1996; entire rule amended and adopted February 24, 2005, effective July 1, 2005; (a) amended and adopted December 14, 2011, effective January 1, 2012, for all cases pending on or filed on or after January 1, 2012, pursuant to C.R.C.P. 1(b); entire rule amended and effective January 7, 2015.

Rule 28. Briefs

(a) Appellant's Brief. The appellant's brief must be entitled ''opening brief'' and must contain the following under appropriate headings and in the order indicated:

(1) a certificate of compliance as required by C.A.R. 32(h);

(2) a table of contents, with page references;

(3) a table of authorities — cases (alphabetically arranged), statutes, and other authorities — with references to the pages of the brief where they are cited;

(4) a statement of the issues presented for review;

(5) a concise statement identifying the nature of the case, the relevant facts and procedural history, and the ruling, judgment, or order presented for review, with appropriate references to the record (see C.A.R. 28 (e));

(6) a summary of the arguments, which must:

(A) contain a succinct, clear, and accurate statement of the arguments made in the body of the brief;

(B) articulate the major points of reasoning employed as to each issue presented for review; and

(C) not merely repeat the argument headings or issues presented for review;

(7) the arguments which must contain:

(A) under a separate heading placed before the discussion of each issue, statements of the applicable standard of review with citation to authority, whether the issue was preserved, and if preserved, the precise location in the record where the issue was raised and where the court ruled; and

(B) appellant's contentions and reasoning, with citations to the authorities and parts of the record on which the appellant relies;

(8) a short conclusion stating the precise relief sought; and

(9) any request for attorney fees.

(b) Appellee's Brief. The appellee's answer brief must be entitled ''answer brief'' and must conform to the requirements of C.A.R. 28 (a) except that a statement of the issues or of the case need not be made unless the appellee is dissatisfied with the appellant's statement. For each issue, the answer brief must, under a separate heading placed before the discussion of the issue, state whether the appellee agrees with the appellant's statements concerning the standard of review with citation to authority and preservation for appeal, and if not, why not. The answer brief must also contain any request for attorney fees or state any opposition to attorney fees requested in the opening brief.

(c) Reply Brief. The appellant may file a brief, which must be entitled ''reply brief'' in reply to the answer brief. A reply brief must comply with C.A.R. 28(a)(1)-(3), and must state any opposition to attorney fees requested in the answer brief. No further briefs may be filed except with leave of court.

(d) References in Briefs to Parties. Parties should minimize use of the terms ''appellant'' and ''appellee.'' Parties should use the designations used in the lower court or agency proceeding, the parties' actual names or initials, or descriptive terms such as ''the employee,'' ''the injured person,'' or ''the taxpayer.''

(e) References to the Record. Reference to the record and to material appearing in an addendum to the brief should generally follow the format detailed in the ''Court of Appeals Policy on Citation to the Record.'' Record references, including abbreviations, must be clear and readily identifiable.

(f) Reproduction of Statutes, Rules, Regulations, etc. If the court's determination of the issues presented requires the study of regulations, ordinances, or any statutes or rules not currently in effect or not generally available in an electronic format, the relevant parts may be reproduced in an addendum at the end of the brief.

(g) Length of Briefs.

(1) An opening brief and an answer brief must contain no more than 9,500 words. A reply brief must contain no more than 5,700 words. Headings, footnotes, and quotations count toward the word limitations. The caption, table of contents, table of authorities, certificate of compliance, certificate of service, and signature block do not count toward the word limit.

(2) A self-represented party who does not have access to a word-processing system must file a typewritten or legibly handwritten opening or answer brief of not more than 30 double-spaced and single-sided pages, or a reply brief of no more than 18 double-spaced and single-sided pages. Such a brief must otherwise comply with C.A.R. 32.

(3) A party may file a motion to exceed the word limitation explaining the reasons why additional words are necessary. The motion must be filed with the brief.

(h) Briefs in Cases Involving Multiple Appellants or Appellees. In cases involving more than one appellant or appellee, including consolidated cases, any number of appellants or appellees may join in a single brief, and any party may adopt by reference any part of another's brief, but a party may not both file a separate brief and incorporate by reference the brief of another party. Parties may also join in reply briefs. In cases involving a single appellant or appellee with multiple opposing parties, the single party must file a single brief in response to multiple opposing parties' briefs. Except by permission of the court, such a brief is restricted to the page and word limits set forth in C.A.R. 28(g), regardless of the cumulative page and word counts of the opposing parties' briefs. Multiple parties represented by the same counsel must file a joint brief.

(i) Citation of Supplemental Authorities. If pertinent and significant new authority comes to a party's attention after the party's brief has been filed, a party may promptly advise the court by giving notice, with a copy to all parties. The notice must set forth the citation and state, without argument, the reason for the supplemental citation, referring either to the page of the brief or to a point argued orally. The body of the notice must not exceed 350 words. Any response must be made promptly and must be similarly limited.

Compliance with subsection (k) does not warrant lengthy discussion but requires only the declaration of the applicable standard of review and the record reference to where the issue was preserved. The following are examples:

(1) An appellate court reviews the wording of an instruction for abuse of discretion. [cite case]. Because this is a criminal case and no objection was made or alternative instruction tendered in the trial court, the issue should be reviewed for plain error [cite case].

(2) The admissibility of expert testimony is reviewed for abuse of discretion. [cite case] This issue was preserved by appellant's offer of proof. R. _____, p. _____.

Prior subsection (h) entitled, ''Briefs in Cases Involving Cross-Appeals,'' has been deleted from C.A.R. 28. The substance of prior subsection (h) now appears in C.A.R. 28.1, which sets forth briefing requirements for cases involving cross-appeals.

Prior subsection 28(k) entitled, ''Standard of Review; Preservation,'' has been deleted, but parties must continue to comply with its substantive requirements, which are now set forth in subsections 28(a)(7)(A) and (b). Compliance with subsections 28(a)(7)(A) and (b) does not warrant lengthy discussion but requires only the declaration of the applicable standard of review with citation to authority and the record reference to where the issue was preserved. The following are examples:

(1) An appellate court reviews the wording of an instruction for abuse of discretion. [cite case]. Because this is a criminal case and no objection was made or alternative instruction tendered in the trial court, the issue should be reviewed for plain error [cite case].

(2) The admissibility of expert testimony is reviewed for abuse of discretion. [cite case] This issue was preserved by appellant's offer of proof. R. CF, p.

The deletion of prior subsections (h) and (k) required the re-lettering of the substance of previous subsections (i), ''Briefs in Cases Involving Multiple Appellants or Appellees,'' and (j) ''Citation of Supplemental Authorities,'' to new subsections (h) and (i), respectively.

Applied in Barlow v. Staples, 28 Colo. App. 93, 470 P.2d 909 (1970).

Rule 28.1. Briefs in Cases Involving Cross-Appeals

(a) Applicability. This rule applies to a case in which a cross-appeal is filed.

(b) Designation of Appellant. The party who files a notice of appeal first is the appellant for the purposes of this rule and C.A.R. 34. These designations may be modified by the parties' agreement or by court order.

(c) Appellant's Opening Brief. The appellant must file an opening brief in the appeal. This brief must be entitled ''opening brief'' and must comply with C.A.R. 28(a) and (d)-(h).

(d) Appellee's Opening-Answer Brief. The appellee must file an opening brief in the cross-appeal and must, in the same brief, respond to the opening brief in the appeal. This brief must be entitled ''opening-answer brief'' and must comply with C.A.R. 28(a), (b), and (d)-(h), except that the brief need not include a statement of the case unless the appellee is dissatisfied with the appellant's statement of the case.

(e) Appellant's Answer-Reply Brief. The appellant must file a brief that responds to the portion of the opening-answer brief that constitutes an opening brief in the cross-appeal, and may, in the same brief, reply to the portion of the opening-answer brief that constitutes an answer brief in the appeal. This brief must be entitled ''answer-reply brief'' and must comply with C.A.R. 28(b)-(h).

(f) Appellee's Reply Brief. The appellee may reply to the portion of the answer-reply brief that constitutes an answer brief. This brief must be entitled ''reply brief'' and must comply with C.A.R. 28(c)-(h) and must be limited to the issues raised in the cross-appeal. No further briefs may be filed except with leave of court.

(g) Length of Briefs.

(1) An opening, opening-answer, and answer-reply brief must contain no more than 9,500 words. An appellee's reply brief must contain no more than 5,700 words. Headings, footnotes, and quotations count toward the word limitations. The caption, table of contents, table of authorities, certificate of compliance, certificate of service, and signature block do not count toward the word limit.

(2) A self-represented party who does not have access to a word-processing system must file a typewritten or legibly handwritten opening, opening-answer, or answer-reply brief of not more than 30 double-spaced and single-sided pages, or a reply brief of no more than 18 double-spaced and single-sided pages. Such a brief must otherwise comply with C.A.R. 32.

(3) A party may file a motion to exceed the word limitation explaining the reasons why additional words are necessary. The motion must be filed with the brief.

(h) Citation of Supplemental Authorities. If pertinent and significant new authority comes to a party's attention after the party's brief has been filed, a party may promptly advise the court by giving notice, with a copy to all parties. The notice must set forth the citation and state, without argument, the reason for the supplemental citation, referring either to the page of the brief or to a point argued orally. The body of the notice must not exceed 350 words. Any response must be made promptly and must be similarly limited.

2015

The new rule is similar to Fed. R. App. P. 28.1 and applies to briefs involving cross-appeals. The portions of the previous version of C.A.R. 28(h) and (g) referencing cross-appeals have been removed. The substance of those subsections has been imported into C.A.R. 28.1.

Rule 29. Brief of an Amicus Curiae

(a) When Permitted. An amicus curiae may file a brief only by leave of court or at the court's request.

(b) Motion for Leave to File. The motion to file an amicus brief must identify the movant's interest and state the reasons why an amicus brief would be helpful to the court. The brief must be conditionally filed with the motion, unless the court grants leave to file the motion without the brief.

(c) Content and Form. An amicus brief must comply with Rule 32. The caption page on the brief must indicate whether the brief is submitted in support of a party, and if so must identify the party or parties supported. The brief must also comply with Rule 28(a)(2) and (3) and must include the following:

(1) a certificate of compliance as required by Rule 32(h);

(2) a concise statement of the identity of the amicus curiae and its interest in the case; and

(3) an argument, which may be preceded by a summary but need not include a statement of the applicable standard of review or whether the issue was preserved.

(d) Length. Except by the court's permission, an amicus brief may be no more than one-half the maximum length authorized by these rules for a party's principal brief. If the court grants a party permission to file a longer brief, that extension does not affect the length of the amicus brief.

(e) Time for Filing. An amicus curiae must file its brief within the deadline for filing the principal brief of the party being supported. An amicus curiae that does not support either party must file its brief no later than 7 days after the appellant's opening brief is filed. A court may grant leave for later filing, specifying the time within which an opposing party may answer.

(f) Reply Brief. Unless the court orders otherwise, an amicus curiae may not file a reply brief.

(g) Oral Argument. An amicus curiae may participate in oral argument only with the court's permission, which will be granted only for extraordinary reasons. A motion to participate in oral argument must state that the supported party does not object and will share its allotted time with amicus. The length of oral argument will not be extended to accommodate amicus participation.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, ''What Amici Curiae Can and Cannot Do with Amicus Briefs'', see 46 Colo. Law. 23 (Apr. 2017).

Amicus curiae limited to questions raised by appealing parties. An appellate court will consider only those questions properly raised by the appealing parties. Amicus curiae must accept the issues made and propositions urged by the appealing parties, and any additional questions presented in a brief filed by an amicus curiae will not be considered. Denver United States Nat'l Bank v. People ex rel. Dunbar, 29 Colo. App. 93, 480 P.2d 849 (1970).

Applied in First Lutheran Mission v. Dept. of Rev., 44 Colo. App. 417, 613 P.2d 351 (1980).

Rule 30. E-Filing

(a) Definitions.

(1) Document. A pleading, motion, brief, writing or other paper filed or served under Colorado Appellate Rules.

(2) E-Filing/Service System. The E-Filing/Service System ("E-System") approved by the Colorado Supreme Court for filing and service of documents via the Internet through the Court-authorized E-System provider.

(3) Electronic Filing. Electronic filing ("E-Filing") is the transmission of documents to the clerk of the court, and from the court, via the E-System.

(4) Electronic Service. Electronic service ("E-Service") is the transmission of documents to any party in a case via the E-System. Parties who have subscribed to the E-System have agreed to receive service via the E-System.

(5) E-System Provider. The E-Service/E-Filing System Provider authorized by the Colorado Supreme Court.

(6) S/Name. A symbol representing the signature of the person whose name follows the ''S/'' on the electronically or otherwise signed form of the E-Filed or E-Served document.

(b) Types of Cases Applicable. E-Filing and E-Service are permissible in all cases.

(c) To Whom Applicable.

(1) Attorneys licensed to practice law in Colorado may register to use the E-System.

(2) Where the system and necessary equipment are in place to permit it, pro se parties and government entities and agencies may register to use the E-System.

(d) E-Filing — Date and Time of Filing. A document transmitted to the E-System Provider by 11:59 p.m. Colorado time shall be deemed to have been filed with the clerk of the court on that date.

(e) E-Service — When Required — Date and Time of Service. Documents submitted to the court through E-Filing shall be served under C.A.R. 25 by E-Service. A document transmitted to the E-System Provider for service by 11:59 p.m. Colorado time shall be deemed to have been served on that date.

(f) Filing Party to Maintain the Signed Copy — Paper Document Not to Be Filed — Duration of Maintaining of Document. A printed or printable copy of an E-Filed or E-Served document with original or scanned signatures shall be maintained by the filing party and made available for inspection by other parties or the court upon request, but shall not be filed with the court. When these rules require a party to maintain a document, the filer is required to maintain the document for a period of two years after the final resolution of the action, including the final resolution of all appeals.

(g) Documents Requiring E-Filed Signatures. For all E-Filed and E-Served documents, signatures of attorneys and parties may be in S/Name typed form to satisfy signature requirements, once the necessary signatures have been obtained on a paper form of the document. Attorneys and parties may also use an electronic ink signature.

(h) Documents Under Seal. A motion for leave to file documents under seal may be E-Filed. Documents to be filed under seal pursuant to an order of the court may be E-Filed at the direction of the court; however, the filing party may object to this procedure.

(i) Transmitting of Orders, Notices, Opinions and Other Court Entries. Appellate courts shall distribute orders, notices, opinions, and other court entries using the E-System in cases where E-Filings were received from any party.

(j) Form of E-Filed Documents. E-Filed documents shall comply with all requirements as to form contained within these rules.

(k) E-Filing May be Mandated. The Chief Justice may mandate, or, with the permission of the Chief Justice, the Chief Judge of the court of appeals may mandate E-Filing for specific case classes or types of cases. An appellate justice or judge may mandate E-Filing and E-Service for a specific case for submitting documents to the court and serving documents on case parties. Where E-Filing is mandatory, the court may thereafter accept a document in paper form and the court shall scan the document and upload it to the E-Service Provider. After notice to an attorney that all future documents are to be E-Filed, the court may charge a fee of $50 per document for the service of scanning and uploading a document filed in paper form. Where E-Filing and E-Service are mandatory an appellate justice or judge may exclude pro se parties from mandatory E-Filing requirements.

(l) Relief in the Event of Technical Difficulties.

(1) Upon satisfactory proof that E-Filing or E-Service of a document was not completed because of: (a) an error in the transmission of the document to the E-System Provider which was unknown to the sending party; (b) a failure of the E-System Provider to process the E-Filing when received, or (c) other technical problems experienced by the filer or E-System Provider, the court may enter an order permitting the document to be filed nunc pro tunc to the date it was first attempted to be sent electronically.

(2) Upon satisfactory proof that an E-Served document was not received by or unavailable to a party served, the court may enter an order extending the time for responding to that document.

(m) Form of Electronic Documents.

(1) Electronic Document Format, Size and Density. Electronic document format, size, and density shall be as specified by Chief Justice Directive # 11-01, as amended.

(2) Multiple Documents. Multiple documents may be filed in a single electronic filing transaction. Each document in that filing must bear a separate document title.

(3) The Court authorized service provider for the program is Colorado Courts E-Filing (www.courts.state.co.us).

Source: Entire rule added and effective February 7, 2008; (e) amended and adopted December 14, 2011, effective January 1, 2012, for all cases pending on or filed on or after January 1, 2012, pursuant to C.R.C.P. 1(b); entire rule amended and effective June 23, 2014; (m)(3) adopted and effective October 26, 2017.

Rule 31. Serving and Filing Briefs

(a) Time to Serve and File Briefs. The appellant must serve and file the opening brief within 42 days after the record is filed. The appellee must serve and file the answer brief within 35 days after service of the opening brief. The appellant may serve and file a reply brief within 21 days after service of the answer brief. In cases involving cross-appeals the appellant must serve and file the opening brief within 42 days after the record is filed, the cross-appellant's opening-answer brief and the appellant's answer-reply brief shall be served and filed within 35 days after service of the opposing party's brief. The cross-appellant may serve and file a reply brief within 21 days after service of the appellant's answer-reply brief.

(b) Consequence of Failure to File. If an appellant or cross-appellant fails to file a brief within the time provided by this rule, or within an extended time as permitted by the court, the court may dismiss the appeal on its own motion or a motion to dismiss filed by the appellee or cross-appellee.

Purpose and observance of rule. This rule is for the proper dispatch of business, and its observance is required in the interests of litigants generally. Wilson v. People, 25 Colo. 375, 55 P. 721 (1898); People v. J. H. Cooper Enterprises, 111 Colo. 338, 141 P.2d 414 (1943).

Briefs may not be filed whenever or wherever counsel may find it convenient. Smith v. Woodall, 129 Colo. 435, 270 P.2d 746 (1954); Freeman v. Cross, 134 Colo. 437, 305 P.2d 759 (1957).

Burden is clearly on appellants to make a timely filing of their opening brief pursuant to this rule and § 24-4-106(4), C.R.S. Warren Village, Inc. v. Bd. of Assmt. Appeals, 619 P.2d 60 (Colo. 1980); Wilkinson v. Motor Vehicle Div., 634 P.2d 1016 (Colo. App. 1981).

Right to file answer brief is lost where no request for extension of time is made within the time limit the brief was due, except upon a showing that failure to act was the result of excusable neglect. Fraka v. Malernee, 129 Colo. 87, 267 P.2d 651 (1954).

Court's discretion to dismiss. Dismissal for failure to comply with statutory time limitations for filing briefs is within the discretion of the trial court. Wilkinson v. Motor Vehicle Div., 634 P.2d 1016 (Colo. App. 1981).

Time for filing when motion to dismiss appeal denied. Time for filing an answer brief on the merits, where a motion to dismiss an appeal is denied, shall commence to run on the date of the announcement of the opinion; otherwise, this rule will control in the matter of filing briefs. Johnson v. George, 119 Colo. 153, 200 P.2d 931 (1948).

Judicial review of agency action pursuant to § 24-4-106(4), C.R.S., is subject to the time limitations specified in section (a) of this rule. Dismissal for failure to comply with statutory time limitations for filing briefs is left within the trial court's discretion. DuPuis v. Charnes, 668 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1983).

Agreement between parties extending time not binding on court. A court is not bound by an agreement between parties which extends the time for filing briefs. Wilkinson v. Motor Vehicle Div., 634 P.2d 1016 (Colo. App. 1981).

Applied in Smith v. County of El Paso, 42 Colo. App. 316, 593 P.2d 979 (1979); People v. Boivin, 632 P.2d 1038 (Colo. App. 1981).

Rule 32. Form of Briefs and Appellate Documents

(a) Form of Briefs and Other Appellate Documents. Except as otherwise provided in this rule or by leave of court, all briefs and other appellate documents must comply with the following standards:

(1) Type Size. The typeface must be 14-point or larger, including footnotes, except that the caption may be in 12-point if necessary to fit on one page.

(2) Typeface. The type must be a plain, Roman style with serifs. Italics or boldface may be used for emphasis. Cited case names must be italicized or underlined.

(3) Paper Size, Line Spacing, and Margins. All documents must be on 8 1/2 by 11 inch paper. The text must be double-spaced, but quotations more than two lines long may be indented and single-spaced. Headings and footnotes may be single-spaced. Margins must be at least 1 1/2 inches on the top and 1 inch on the left, right, and bottom. Page numbers are required and may be placed in the bottom margin, but no text may appear there.

(4) Length. If a brief or other appellate document is subject to a word limit, it must include a certificate by the attorney, or by a self-represented party, that the document complies with the applicable word limit. The person preparing the certificate may rely on the word count of the word-processing system used to prepare the document. The certificate must state the number of words in the document.

(b) Documents Submitted by Self-Represented Parties. A self-represented party who does not have access to a word-processing system must file typewritten or legibly handwritten briefs and other appellate documents. Such documents must otherwise comply with the form requirements of this rule and the requirements of C.A.R. 28 and, if applicable, C.A.R. 28.1.

(c) Binding and Reproduction. Briefs and other appellate documents may be produced by any process that yields a clear black image on white paper. The paper must be opaque and unglazed. Only one side of the paper may be used. Text must be reproduced with a clarity that equals or exceeds the output of a laser printer. Photographs, illustrations, and tables may be reproduced by any method that results in a good copy of the original; a glossy finish is acceptable if the original is glossy. Consecutive sheets must be stapled together at the top left margin.

(d) Caption. The first page of each brief or other appellate document must contain a caption that includes the following basic document information:

(1) the name and address of the court in which the proceeding is filed;

(2) the nature of proceeding (e.g., Appeal, Petition for Writ of Certiorari, Petition for Rule to Show Cause); name of the court(s), agency, or board below; and the lower court judge(s), and case number(s);

(3) the names of parties with appellate court party designations as follows:

(A) In the Supreme Court: Appellant(s) or Appellee(s) in cases in which the Supreme Court has original appellate jurisdiction; Petitioner(s) or Respondent(s) in original proceedings filed pursuant to C.A.R. 21 and certiorari proceedings.

(B) In the Court of Appeals: Petitioner(s) or Respondent(s) in appeals filed pursuant to C.A.R. 3.1 and 3.4 (see Appendix to Chapter 32); Appellant(s) or Appellee(s) in all other appeals.

(4) the name, address, telephone number, e-mail address (if any), and fax number (if any) of counsel or self-represented party filing the document;

(5) if the document is filed by counsel, his or her attorney registration number;

(6) the title of the document (e.g., Opening Brief, Petition for Writ of Certiorari), identifying the party or parties for whom the document is filed; and

(7) on the top-right side (opposite filing court information), a blank area that is at least 2 1/2 inches wide and 1 3/4 inches long, with the words ''Case Number.''

Form 7 illustrates the required caption for all documents created using a word-processing system. Form 7A illustrates the required caption for all documents filed by a self-represented party who does not have access to a word-processing system and is unable to obtain and complete Form 7.

(e) Signature. Every brief, motion, or other document filed with an appellate court must be signed by the party filing the document or, if the party is represented, by one of the party's attorneys.

(f) References to Sexual Assault Victims and Minors. Except as otherwise provided by this rule or by leave of court, the following individuals must not be named in briefs or other appellate documents and must be identified by initials or appropriate general descriptive terms such as ''victim'' or ''child'':

(1) sexual assault victims; and

(2) minors in criminal cases and cases brought under Title 19.

Any relative whose name could be used to determine the name of a person protected under this subsection must also be identified by initials or appropriate general descriptive terms. When the defendant in a criminal case is a family member of the person protected under this subsection, the defendant may be named.

(g) Non-Compliant Documents. If the clerk determines that a brief or other document does not comply with the Colorado Appellate Rules or is not sufficiently legible, the clerk will accept the document for filing but may require that a conforming document be filed.

(h) Certificate of Compliance. Each brief must include, on a separate page immediately behind the caption page, a certificate that the brief complies with all requirements of C.A.R. 28 and C.A.R. 32, and, if applicable, C.A.R. 28.1 or 29. Forms 6 and 6A are the preferred forms for a certificate of compliance and will be regarded as meeting the requirements of C.A.R. 32(a)(4).

This rule conforms the appellate practice to the forms of case captions provided in C.R.C.P. 10 for all documents that are filed in Colorado courts, including both criminal and civil cases. The purpose of the form captions is to provide a uniform and consistent format that enables practitioners, clerks, administrators, and judges to locate identifying information more efficiently.

The preferred case caption format for documents initiated by a party is found in subsection (c)(1)(I). The preferred caption for documents issued by the court or clerk of court is found in subsection (c)(1)(II). Because some parties may have difficulty formatting their documents to include vertical lines and boxes, alternate case caption formats are found in subsections (c)(2)(I) and (c)(2)(II). However, the box format is the preferred and recommended format.

The boxes may be vertically elongated to accommodate additional party and attorney information if necessary. The ''court use'' and ''case number'' boxes, however, shall always be located in the upper right side of the caption.

Forms approved by the State Court Administrator's Office (designated ''JDF'' or ''SCAO'' on pre-printed or computer-generated forms), forms set forth in the Colorado Court Rules, volume 12, C.R.S. (including those pre-printed or computer-generated forms designated ''CRCP'' or ''CPC'' and those contained in the appendices of volume 12, C.R.S.), and forms generated by the state's judicial electronic system, ''ICON,'' shall conform to criteria established by the State Court Administrator's Office with the approval of the Colorado Supreme Court. This includes pre-printed and computer-generated forms. JDF and SCAO forms and a flexible form of caption which allows the entry of additional party and attorney information are available and can be downloaded from the Colorado courts web page at http://www.courts.state.co.us/scao/Forms.htm.

This rule conforms the appellate practice to the forms of case captions provided in C.R.C.P. 10 for all documents filed in Colorado appellate courts. The purpose of the form caption is to provide a uniform and consistent format that enables practitioners, clerks, administrators, and judges to locate identifying information more efficiently. The preferred case caption format for documents initiated by a party is found in subsection (d)(1). Parties who cannot format documents to include vertical lines and boxes may use the alternate case caption format in subsections (d)(2). However, the box format is the preferred and recommended format.

The purpose of the form caption is to provide a uniform and consistent format that enables practitioners, clerks, administrators, and judges to locate identifying information more efficiently. The changes to this rule make the appellate practice caption forms consistent with the forms of case captions provided in C.R.C.P. 10 for all documents filed in Colorado appellate courts.

The required case caption format for documents created using a word-processing system is found in Form 7. Self-represented parties who do not have access to a word-processing system and cannot format documents to include vertical lines and boxes may use the alternate case caption format in Form 7A. However, Form 7 caption format is preferred and recommended.

Subsection (f) is a new subsection. It is based on the legislative requirements set forth in Colo. Rev. Stat. §§19-1-102(1.7), 19-1-109(1), and 24-72-304(4)(a), and is consistent with longstanding court practice.

Prior subsection (e), formerly titled ''Improper Form and Briefs of Other Papers,'' now titled ''Non-Compliant Documents'' and (f) titled ''Certificate of Compliance'' have been re-lettered to subsections (g) and (h), respectively. The substance of the prior subsections has not changed.

Noncompliance will result in dismissal. Where an appellant fails to comply with this provision, the appeal will be dismissed. Dubois v. People, 26 Colo. 165, 57 P. 187 (1899).

Example of noncompliance. A reply brief which is in indistinct and blurred typewriting flagrantly violates this provision. Mitchell v. Pearson, 34 Colo. 281, 82 P. 447 (1905).

Rule 34. Oral Argument

(a) In General. Oral argument may be allowed at the discretion of the court. A request for oral argument must be made in a separate document entitled ''request for oral argument.'' The request must be filed no later than 7 days after briefs are closed. The court may order oral argument regardless of whether any party requested oral argument.

(b) Notice of Argument; Postponement. The clerk must advise all parties of the date, time, and place of oral argument. A motion to postpone the argument must be filed reasonably in advance of the argument date.

(c) Time Allowed for Argument.

(1) In the Supreme Court. Unless the court orders otherwise, each side will be allowed 30 minutes for argument. Any motion for additional time must be filed within 7 days after the briefs are closed and will be granted only if good cause is shown. The court may vacate or terminate the argument if, in its judgment, further argument is unnecessary.

(2) In the Court of Appeals. Unless the court orders otherwise, each side will be allowed 15 minutes for argument. Any motion for additional time must be filed within 7 days after the briefs are closed and will be granted only if good cause is shown. The court may vacate or terminate the argument if, in its judgment, further argument is unnecessary.

(d) Order and Content of Argument. The appellant opens the argument and may reserve a portion of its allotted time for rebuttal. Parties should not read at length from briefs, records, or authorities. Unless the court orders otherwise, oral arguments will be limited to the issues raised in the briefs.

(e) Cross-Appeals and Separate Appeals. If there is a cross-appeal, C.A.R. 28.1(b) determines which party is the appellant and which is the appellee for purposes of oral argument. Unless the court directs otherwise a cross-appeal will be argued with the initial appeal as a single argument. The court may set separate appeals that involve the same or similar issues together for argument. In such cases, separate parties should avoid duplicative argument.

(f) Nonappearance of Parties. If the appellee fails to appear for argument, the court may hear argument by the appellant, if present. If the appellant fails to appear, the court may hear argument by the appellee. If neither party appears, the case will be decided on the briefs unless the court orders otherwise.

(g) Use of Physical Exhibits at Argument; Removal. Parties intending to use physical exhibits other than documents at the argument must arrange with the clerk of court to place them in the courtroom on the day of the argument before the court convenes. After the argument, the party must remove the exhibits from the courtroom unless the court directs otherwise. The clerk may destroy or dispose of the exhibits if a party does not reclaim them within a reasonable time after the clerk has given notice to remove them.

(h) Supreme Court Sessions En Banc and in Departments. The chief justice may convene the court en banc at any time, and must do so on the written request of three justices. Subject to this provision, or as limited by the constitution, sessions of the court in departments for the purpose of hearing oral arguments, and designation of the justices to hear such arguments, will be under the direction and control of the chief justice.

(i) References to Minors and Sexual Assault Victims. Reference at oral arguments to sexual assault victims and minors must comply with the requirements of C.A.R. 32(f).

2015

Subsection (i) is a new subsection. It is consistent with new C.A.R. 32(f), and is based on the legislative requirements set forth in Colo. Rev. Stat. §§19-1-102(1.7), 19-1-109(1), and 24-72-304(4)(a), and is consistent with longstanding court practice.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, ''Supreme Court Proceedings: Rules 111-119'', see 23 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 618 (1951).

Decision on briefs satisfies obligation of counsel on criminal appeal. Where counsel for the parties filed with the court a statement requesting a decision upon the briefs of the respective parties without oral argument pursuant to section (f), it was held that the statement was in accord with the standards of criminal justice, as they relate to the obligations of counsel for the defendant on appeal. Garcia v. People, 174 Colo. 372, 483 P.2d 1347 (1971).

Requests for further oral arguments. Where no request for further oral argument was made, nor was any request for an argument en banc made until after the announcement of the court's decision, the right, if it existed, was waived. Scott v. Shook, 80 Colo. 40, 249 P. 259, 47 A.L.R. 1108 (1926) (decided under former Supreme Court Rule 43).

Rule 35. Determination of Appeal

(a) Disposition of Appeal. The appellate court may, in whole or in part, dismiss an appeal; affirm, vacate, modify, reverse, or set aside a lower court judgment; and remand any portion of the case to the lower court for further proceedings. When reviewing a ruling or judgment dismissing criminal charges, the appellate court may approve or disapprove of the judgment if retrial of the defendant is prohibited. The appellate court may dismiss an appeal or affirm a lower court judgment without opinion, but it must issue a written opinion when vacating, modifying, reversing, setting aside, or remanding any portion of the lower court judgment.

(b) Equally Divided Supreme Court. When the supreme court acting en banc is equally divided in an opinion, the judgment being appealed will stand affirmed.

(c) Harmless Error. The appellate court may disregard any error or defect not affecting the substantial rights of the parties.

(d) Advancement on Docket. Any pending action may be advanced on the docket and may be disposed of in such order as the court deems appropriate. The court may make such orders relating to the time and necessity for the filing of briefs and for oral argument as it deems the circumstances demand.

(e) Published Opinions of Court of Appeals. A majority of all of the judges of the court of appeals shall determine which opinions of that court will be designated for official publication. The opinions shall be published in the official publication designated by the supreme court. Opinions designated for official publication must be followed as precedent by all lower court judges in the state of Colorado. No court of appeals opinion shall be designated for official publication unless it satisfies one or more of the following standards:

(1) the opinion establishes a new rule of law, or alters or modifies an existing rule, or applies an established rule to a novel fact situation;

(2) the opinion involves a legal issue of continuing public interest;

(3) the majority opinion, dissent, or special concurrence directs attention to the shortcomings of existing common law or inadequacies in statutes; or

(4) the opinion resolves an apparent conflict of authority.

(f) Unpublished Opinions of Court of Appeals. A court of appeals opinion not designated for official publication must contain the following notation on the title page: ''NOT PUBLISHED PURSUANT TO C.A.R. 35(e).'' If the supreme court grants certiorari to a court of appeals opinion not designated for official publication, and if the supreme court announces an opinion in the case, the court of appeals' opinion will not be published unless otherwise ordered by the supreme court.

(g) Effect of Denial of Writ of Certiorari. The supreme court's denial of a writ of certiorari does not constitute approval of the lower court judgment.

(h) References to Minors and Sexual Assault Victims. Opinions and orders issued by the appellate courts will refer to sexual assault victims and minors in a manner consistent with C.A.R. 32(f).

Source: (f) amended and adopted June 27, 2002, effective July 1, 2002; (f) amended and effective February 7, 2008; (e) amended and effective April 5, 2010; entire rule amended and comment added, effective April 7, 2016.

[1] Prior subsections (c), entitled, ''Affirmation;'' (d), entitled, ''Reversal;'' and (e), entitled, ''Disposition of Cause;'' were deleted to reflect current appellate practice, for readability, and because portions of these prior subsections addressed functions of the trial court rather than functions of an appellate court. The relevant substance of those prior subsections, however, has been relocated to new subsections (a), entitled ''Disposition of Appeal;'' (b) entitled ''Equally Divided Supreme Court;'' and (c), entitled ''Harmless Error.''

[2] Because prior subsections (c), (d), and (e) were deleted, prior subsection (f), entitled, ''Published Opinions of the Court of Appeals,'' has been re-lettered to subsection (e). For readability and organization, the contents of prior subsection (f) have been divided into new subsections (e); (f), entitled, ''Unpublished Opinions of the Court of Appeals;'' and (g) entitled, ''Effect of Denial of Writ of Certiorari.''

[3] New subsection (h) is consistent with C.A.R. 32(f) and 34, and is based on the legislative requirements set forth in Colo. Rev. Stat. §§ 19-1-102(1.7), 19-1-109(1), and 24-72-304(4)(a), and is consistent with longstanding court practice.

Annotator's note. The following annotations include cases decided under prior versions of this rule.

Where question presented on appeal is moot, dismissal of the appeal is in order. People in Interest of P.L.V., 176 Colo. 342, 490 P.2d 685 (1971).

An appeal from order of foreclosure on real property was mooted where record reveals a conscious and voluntary choice by the defendants to allow the property to be sold to satisfy the judgment. Stenback v. Front Range Financial Corp., 764 P.2d 380 (Colo. App. 1988).

Appeal becomes moot if events subsequent to the filing of the appeal render the issues present moot. In re Hartley, 886 P.2d 665 (Colo. 1994).

A case is moot when a judgment, if rendered, would have no practical legal effect upon the existing controversy. In re Hartley, 886 P.2d 665 (Colo. 1994).

Decision on review reinvests jurisdiction in lower court. When a case is determined in the supreme court on review, the lower court is thereupon immediately reinvested with jurisdiction without the issuance of, or receipt by the clerk of the trial court, of a remittitur. Haggott v. Plains Iron Works Co., 74 Colo. 37, 218 P. 909 (1923).

Remittitur is not essential. The former rule directing the clerk to issue remittitur contained no suggestion that it is essential to further proceeding in the trial court. The practice from earliest times has been for the clerk to issue the mandate only upon request. Haggot v. Plains Iron Works Co., 74 Colo. 37, 218 P. 909 (1923).

Supreme court has jurisdiction to compel obedience to its remittitur to district court to require that court to show cause as to whether and in what manner remittitur had been complied with. Green v. Green, 170 Colo. 197, 460 P.2d 224 (1969).

Applied in Brinker v. City of Sterling, 121 Colo. 430, 217 P.2d 613 (1950); Lewis v. Oliver, 129 Colo. 479, 271 P.2d 1055 (1954); Pettingell v. Moede, 129 Colo. 484, 271 P.2d 1038 (1954); Bohn v. Harsco Corp., 653 P.2d 407 (Colo. App. 1982); Palmer v. A.H. Robins Co., Inc., 684 P.2d 187 (Colo. 1984); Martinez v. Dixon, 710 P.2d 498 (Colo. App. 1985); Banek v. Thomas, 733 P.2d 1171 (Colo. 1986); Coors v. Sec. Life of Denver Ins. Co., 112 P.3d 59 (Colo. 2005).

II. AFFIRMATION.

Findings of the trial court will not be disturbed on review unless they are clearly erroneous. C.K.A. v. M.S., 695 P.2d 785 (Colo. App. 1984), cert. denied, 705 P.2d 1391 (Colo. 1985).

Affirmance of the trial court's action disposes of all issues properly presented for review. Mills v. Saunders, 30 Colo. App. 462, 494 P.2d 1309 (1972).

Judgment affirmed where a retrial would result in the same judgment. Boyd v. Munson, 59 Colo. 166, 147 P. 662 (1915); Swanson v. First Nat'l Bank, 74 Colo. 135, 219 P. 784 (1923).

Or when supported by substantial evidence. A determination by a quasi-judicial body is not arbitrary or capricious, and thus not an abuse of discretion, where it is supported by substantial competent evidence, and it will be affirmed on review. Kizer v. Beck, 30 Colo. App. 569, 496 P.2d 1062 (1972).

Where the sufficiency of the evidence to support a guilty verdict is challenged, an appellate court must review the testimony in the light most favorable to the prosecution. If there is sufficient competent evidence to establish the essential elements of a crime, a guilty verdict will not be overturned by an appellate court even though there are conflicts and inconsistencies in the evidence. People v. Diefenderfer, 784 P.2d 741 (Colo. 1989).

The court of appeals should not substitute its opinion of what damages are appropriate for that of the jury. Mere disagreement with the amount of damages awarded is not a sufficient ground to overturn an award of damages which is supported by competent evidence in the record as it is the sole province of the jury to fix fair and just damages, and only upon a showing of arbitrary or capricious jury action, or that the jury was swayed by passion or prejudice, should an appellate court overturn a jury verdict. Morrison v. Bradley, 655 P.2d 385 (Colo. 1982); Lee's Mobile Wash v. Campbell, 853 P.2d 1140 (Colo. 1993).

Where the evidence is conflicting, a reviewing court should not disregard the jury's verdict, which has support in the evidence, in favor of its own view of the evidence, but must reconcile the verdict with the evidence if at all possible, and if there is any basis for the verdict, it will not be reversed for inconsistency. Lee's Mobile Wash v. Campbell, 853 P.2d 1140 (Colo. 1993).

There was evidence in the record to support the jury award of zero noneconomic damages, and the fact that the jury instruction mandated that the jury ''shall determine'' the amount of noneconomic damages did not necessarily require an affirmative award of damages since an award of such damages was required only if the damages were caused by the petitioners' negligence. Lee's Mobile Wash v. Campbell, 853 P.2d 1140 (Colo. 1993).

Deference is given to the trial court's findings of fact which will not be overturned as long as there is support for them. This is true even though a contrary position may find support in the record and even though the court might have reached a different result had it been acting as the finder of fact. People v. Thomas, 853 P.2d 1147 (Colo. 1993).

Correct judgment entered for the wrong reason will be affirmed. Klipfel v. Neill, 30 Colo. App. 428, 494 P.2d 115 (1972).

III. REVERSAL.

Retrial may be ordered on liability only. On reversal of a judgment in an action for damages, the reviewing court may order retrial only upon the question of liability, holding the amount of damages to have been established on the first trial. Boyle v. Bay, 81 Colo. 125, 254 P. 156 (1927).

Or on amount of damages. Where the amount of the judgment due plaintiff was determined on conflicting evidence, a reversal of the judgment will require that the amount be set aside in its entirety pending a trial court determination of the sum properly due plaintiff. Farmers Elevator Co. v. First Nat'l Bank, 30 Colo. App. 529, 497 P.2d 352 (1972) aff'd, 181 Colo. 231, 508 P.2d 1261 (1973).

Mixed questions of law and fact presented for determination must be decided by the trial court, and where left undecided, the cause will be remanded for additional findings. Cook v. Cook, 74 Colo. 339, 221 P. 883 (1923).

When court may direct that proper judgment be entered. Where on review the record clearly discloses the entry of a judgment by the trial court finding all issues for the plaintiff but for an erroneous sum, the cause may be remanded with directions to enter the proper judgment. Mystic Tailoring Co. v. Jacobstein, 94 Colo. 306, 30 P.2d 263 (1934).

In appeal involving challenge to sales and use tax provisions of municipal code, appropriate remedy on appeal is not remand to district court for de novo review under § 29-2-106.1 since taxpayer pursued review under municipal code. Arapahoe Roofing & Sheet Metal v. Denver, 831 P.2d 451 (Colo. 1992).

Judgment reversed where appeal and questions presented are moot. An ordinance passed while an action is pending on error renders the question before the supreme court moot, and a new zoning resolution adopted by the board of county commissioners even before the action is commenced renders the original action moot. Holding that the action before the lower court and the proceedings on appeal before the supreme court are on questions that are now moot, the judgment of the trial court is reversed and the cause is remanded with directions to dismiss the complaint. Bd. of Adjustment v. Iwerks, 135 Colo. 578, 316 P.2d 573 (1957).

Abstract claim, as an afterthought on appeal, will not support reversal. Anderson v. People, 176 Colo. 224, 490 P.2d 47 (1971), cert. denied, 405 U.S. 1042, 92 S. Ct. 1376, 31 L. Ed. 2d 583 (1972).

IV. DISPOSITION OF CAUSE.

A. In General.

Duties of trial court. Upon regaining jurisdiction, a trial court, through the use of its own enforcement procedures, is then responsible for execution on its own judgment in accordance with any directions issued by an appellate court. Hylton v. City of Colo. Springs, 32 Colo. App. 9, 505 P.2d 26 (1973).

Petition for certiorari is addressed to sound judicial discretion, and denial does not constitute a determination of the issues on the merits. Menefee v. City & County of Denver, 190 Colo. 163, 544 P.2d 382 (1976).

Denial of a petition for certiorari in a criminal case means nothing more than that the supreme court has declared that the case is not properly postured for further appellate review. Menefee v. City & County of Denver, 190 Colo. 163, 544 P.2d 382 (1976).

B. Equally Divided Court.

Affirmed by operation of law. Where one justice did not sit and the remaining six divided equally, the judgment is affirmed by operation of law. Speer v. People ex rel. Rush, 52 Colo. 325, 122 P. 768 (1912); City & County of Denver v. Gunter, 63 Colo. 69, 163 P. 1118 (1917); Menzel v. McKee Live Stock Comm'n Co., 71 Colo. 326, 206 P. 383 (1922); People v. Stapleton, 79 Colo. 629, 247 P. 1062 (1926); Craddock v. Craddock, 90 Colo. 284, 8 P.2d 1112 (1932); La Argo v. Cronbaugh, 90 Colo. 286, 8 P.2d 1112 (1932); Midland Oil Ref. Co. v. Allen, 93 Colo. 102, 23 P.2d 1119 (1933); People ex rel. Link v. Tucker, 96 Colo. 273, 42 P.2d 472 (1935); Pring v. Brown, 96 Colo. 284, 42 P.2d 607 (1935); Larson v. Kalcevic, 99 Colo. 279, 62 P.2d 572 (1936); Courtright v. Legislative Statutory Comm'n, 100 Colo. 82, 65 P.2d 710, cert. denied, 302 U.S. 695, 58 S. Ct. 13, 82 L. Ed. 537 (1937); Creel v. Pueblo Masonic Bldgs. Ass'n, 100 Colo. 281, 68 P.2d 23 (1937); Taylor v. Bd. of Control of State Indus. Sch., 105 Colo. 219, 94 P.2d 184 (1939); Snyder v. Bd. for Appointment of Civil Serv. C. Error Not Affecting Substantial Rights of the Parties.

Error which clearly does not prejudice substantial rights of the complaining party is not ground for reversal. Swanson v. First Nat'l Bank, 74 Colo. 135, 219 P. 784 (1923); Thuro v. Meredith, 75 Colo. 471, 226 P. 867 (1924); Myers v. Hayden, 82 Colo. 98, 257 P. 351 (1927); Parker v. Ullom, 84 Colo. 433, 271 P. 187 (1928).

"Substantial right" defined. In construing this rule, as well as C.R.C.P. 61, a substantial right is one which relates to the subject matter and not to a matter of procedure and form. Sowder v. Inhelder, 119 Colo. 196, 201 P.2d 533 (1948).

Variance between pleading and proof does not affect substantial rights. Hiner v. Cassidy, 92 Colo. 78, 18 P.2d 309 (1932).

The variance was not such as affected the substantial right of the parties and was, therefore, such error or defect as the supreme court may disregard. Southwestern Sur. Ins. Co. v. Miller, 63 Colo. 15, 164 P. 507 (1917); Otis & Co. v. Teal, 74 Colo. 336, 221 P. 884 (1923).

Harmless instruction does not affect substantial rights. Howard v. Mitchell, 27 Colo. App. 45, 146 P. 486 (1915).

Improper admission of evidence to a fact which is established by other sufficient evidence does not affect substantial rights. Patterson v. People ex rel. Parr, 23 Colo. App. 479, 130 P. 618 (1913).

Appellate review of trial court's determination pursuant to § 13-25-129 regarding admissibility of child's hearsay statement should be based upon record made at in limine hearing and may go beyond such record only if issue of harmless error or plain error is raised. People v. Bowers, 801 P.2d 511 (Colo. 1990).

Defect in summons. Error cannot be predicated on any defect in a summons unless the defect results in prejudice. Hocks v. Farmers Union Coop. Gas & Oil Co., 116 Colo. 282, 180 P.2d 860 (1947).

Receipt of verdict in absence of trial judge is technical error. Although the trial judge was not present when the verdict was received, it did not appear that any substantial rights of the defendant were violated by the trial court's procedure, and, as directed by this rule, mere technicalities would not constitute ground for reversal. Sowder v. Inhelder, 119 Colo. 196, 201 P.2d 533 (1948).

V. PUBLISHED OPINIONS OF COURT OF APPEALS.

An unpublished court of appeals decision has no value as precedent. In re Ballot Title 2005-06 No. 55, 138 P.3d 273 (Colo. 2006).

Courts may, but are not obligated to, consider unpublished opinions for their persuasive value. Patterson v. James, 2018 COA 173, __ P.3d __.

Should a party wish the court to consider an unpublished opinion, or should a court on its own discover such an opinion it finds persuasive, all parties should be provided with notice and an opportunity to argue its persuasive value to the court. Patterson v. James, 2018 COA 173, __ P.3d __.

Rule 36. Entry and Service of Judgment

An appellate judgment is entered when the court issues or announces its dispositive order or opinion. The clerk must serve the order or opinion on all parties on the day it is entered.

2015

This rule was changed for brevity and to reflect the current practice of the appellate courts.

Rule 37. Interest on Judgments

(a) When the Court Affirms. Unless the law provides otherwise, if a money judgment in a civil case is affirmed, whatever interest is allowed by law is payable from the date on which the judgment was entered in the lower court.

(b) When the Court Does Not Affirm. If all or part of a judgment is dismissed, vacated, modified, reversed, or set aside with a direction that a money judgment be entered in the lower court, the mandate must contain instructions with respect to allowance of interest.

ANNOTATION

Annotator's note. The following annotations include cases decided under prior versions of this rule.

This rule is identical to Federal Appellate Rule 37. Pet Inc. v. Goldberg, 37 Colo. App. 257, 547 P.2d 943 (1975).

Appellate court's authority to determine interest is exclusive. While the appellate court may, of course, remand to the trial court for a determination of the proper statutory interest, the trial court, without such an instruction, lacks jurisdiction to enter any amount of interest not stated in the mandate. Pet Inc. v. Goldberg, 37 Colo. App. 257, 547 P.2d 943 (1975); In re Gutfreund, 148 P.3d 136 (Colo. 2006); Thompson v. United Sec. Alliance, 2016 COA 128, 433 P.3d 50, rev'd on other grounds, 2018 CO 95, 431 P.3d 224.

Proper method of attacking an appellate court's instructions as to interest is to petition for amendment or recall of the mandate. Such a procedure is available in Colorado. Pet Inc. v. Goldberg, 37 Colo. App. 257, 547 P.2d 943 (1975).

Applied in Loesekan v. Benefit Trust Life Ins. Co., 37 Colo. App. 493, 552 P.2d 36 (1976); Westec Constr. Mgmt. Co. v. Postle Enter. I, Inc., 68 P.3d 529 (Colo. App. 2002).

Rule 38. Sanctions

(a) General Powers of the Court; Sanctions for Non-Compliance. The appellate court may dismiss an appeal or other appellate proceeding or impose other sanctions it deems appropriate, including attorney fees, for the failure to comply with any of its orders or these appellate rules, including for failure to prosecute the appeal, cause timely transmission of the record, or file an opening brief.

(b) Sanctions for Frivolous Appeal. If the appellate court determines that an appeal or cross-appeal is frivolous, it may award damages it deems appropriate, including attorney fees, and single or double costs to the appellee or cross-appellee.

[1] This rule now gathers all the sanctions specified in the appellate rules into one rule and broadens the powers of the court by the addition of (e).

2015

[2] Prior subsections (b), entitled, ''Consequence of Failure to File Brief,'' (c), entitled, ''Failure to Prosecute Appeal,'' and (e), entited ''General Powers of the Court,'' have been deleted. The relevant substance of these prior subsections has been combined and condensed and now appears in revised subsection (a).

[3] The statement contained in prior subsection (b) that the court may dispense with oral argument if an appellant or cross-appellee fails to file a brief has been deleted from the Rule because, pursuant to C.A.R. 34, whether to allow oral argument is always at the discretion of the appellate court.

[4] Because prior subsections (b), (c), and (e) were deleted, prior subsection (d), entited ''Sanctions for Frivolous Appeal,'' has been relettered to subsection (b).

Annotator's note. The following annotations include cases decided under prior versions of this rule.

Due process considerations. When an appellate court imposes sanctions upon an appellant, due process requires that the appellant be afforded certain protections before being deprived of his property. He is entitled to notice and an opportunity to respond. Mission Denver Co. v. Pierson, 674 P.2d 363 (Colo. 1984).

Award against state for damages may only be ordered if authorized by statute. People in Interest of A.L.B., 683 P.2d 813 (Colo. App. 1984).

No basis for damages where genuine issue in dispute. There is no basis for an award of damages pursuant to this rule where there is a genuine disputed issue in the matter on appeal. Rocky Mt. Sales & Serv., Inc. v. Havana RV, Inc., 635 P.2d 935 (Colo. App. 1981).

Even where trial court's entry of summary judgment in favor of defendant is upheld on appeal and no genuine issue of material fact is found to have existed, plaintiff's appeal is not automatically frivolous and defendant's request for fees may be denied. Price v. Conoco, Inc., 748 P.2d 349 (Colo. App. 1987).

Appeal held not frivolous because of absence of Colorado authority on the question forming basis of appeal. Jorgenson Realty, Inc. v. Box, 701 P.2d 1256 (Colo. App. 1985).

Abuse of discretion. In light of the significance of the issues on appeal (i.e., the state's obligation to maintain state prisoners in state correctional facilities and to reimburse counties for confining state prisoners) and the fact that both petitioner and respondent sought appellate review, court of appeals abused its discretion in dismissing case for failure to timely transmit the record. Dept. of Corr. v. Pena, 788 P.2d 143 (Colo. 1990).

Substantiality of issues. When determining whether dismissal is an appropriate sanction for failure to timely transmit the record, an appellate court should consider the substantiality of the issues on appeal and the full range of possible sanctions and should select the sanction most appropriate under the circumstances. Dept. of Corr. v. Pena, 788 P.2d 143 (Colo. 1990).

Because the theory propounded on appeal was not a "relitigation" of a settled issue, wholly lacking in precedential support, devoid of a plausible rationale, or brought vexatiously, it cannot be said to be "frivolous". Wood Brothers Homes, Inc. v. Howard, 862 P.2d 925 (Colo. 1993) (decided under former § 13-80-127); Adams v. Land Servs., Inc., 194 P.3d 429 (Colo. App. 2008).

Damages not awarded where amount not specified. Where a number of the issues raised by the appellant are frivolous, but where the appellee has not specified an amount requested for damages, the appellate court will decline to award damages. In re Mann, 655 P.2d 814 (Colo. 1982).

Appeal should be considered frivolous if the proponent can present no rational argument based on the evidence or law in support of a proponent's claim or defense, or the appeal is prosecuted for the sole purpose of harassment or delay. Mission Denver Co. v. Pierson, 674 P.2d 363 (Colo. 1984).

Appeal held to be frivolous, and attorney's fees assessed. Rogers v. Charnes, 656 P.2d 1322 (Colo. App. 1982); Artes-Roy v. City of Aspen, 856 P.2d 823 (Colo. 1993); In re Purcell, 879 P.2d 468 (Colo. App. 1994); Martin v. Essrig, 277 P.3d 857 (Colo. App. 2011).

An appeal "lacks substantial justification" and is "substantially frivolous" when the appellant's brief fails to set forth, in a manner consistent with C.A.R. 28, a coherent assertion of error supported by legal authority. As a result, it is appropriate to assess attorney fees against the attorney prosecuting the appeal in this case. Castillo v. Koppes-Conway, 148 P.3d 289 (Colo. App. 2006).

Because appeal is not frivolous, court denies defendants' request for their appellate attorney fees pursuant to paragraph (d) of this rule. Lobato v. Taylor, 13 P.3d 821 (Colo. App. 2000), rev'd on other grounds, 71 P.3d 938 (Colo. 2002).

Board of education is entitled to reasonable attorney fees incurred in defending claim of breach of duty to teach morality in public schools where plaintiff relied primarily on overruled case law, constitutional and statutory provisions that imposed no duty, and where plaintiff presented no rational argument based on existing law. Skipworth v. Bd. of Educ., 874 P.2d 487 (Colo. App. 1994).

A claim is frivolous if the proponent can present no rational argument based on the evidence or the law in support thereof. Such test encompasses appeals that are manifestly insufficient or futile. Lego v. Schmidt, 805 P.2d 1119 (Colo. App. 1990).

No sanctions awarded for frivolous appeal even though the court rejected appellants' public policy argument. In re Estate of Schlagel, 89 P.3d 419 (Colo. App. 2003).

Rule 39. Costs

(a) Against Whom Assessed. The following rules apply unless the law provides or the court orders otherwise:

(1) if an appeal is dismissed, costs are taxed against the appellant unless the parties agree otherwise;

(2) if a judgment is affirmed, costs are taxed against the appellant;

(3) if a judgment is reversed, costs are taxed against the appellee;

(4) if a judgment is affirmed in part, reversed in part, modified, or vacated, costs are taxed only as ordered by the trial court.

(b) Costs for and Against the State of Colorado. Costs for or against the State of Colorado or any of its agencies or officers will be assessed under subsection (a) only if authorized by law.

(c) Costs on Appeal Taxable in the Trial Court.

(1) Costs Allowed. The following costs on appeal are taxable in the trial court for the benefit of the party entitled to costs under this rule:

(A) the preparation and transmission of the record;

(B) the reporter's transcript, if needed to determine the appeal;

(C) premiums paid for a supersedeas or other bond to preserve rights pending appeal;

(D) docket fees charged pursuant to C.A.R. 12(a); and

(E) fees charged for E-Filing and E-Service as defined in C.A.R. 30(a).

(2) Bill of Costs. A party who wants costs to be taxed in the appellate court must file an itemized and verified bill of costs with the clerk of the trial court. The cost of printing or otherwise producing necessary copies of the record is taxable at rates not higher than those generally charged for such work in Denver. The bill of costs and proof of service must be filed within 14 days after entry of the appellate mandate. Any objection must be filed within 14 days after service of the bill of costs. Upon request of the trial court clerk, the clerk of the appellate court will provide a receipt reflecting docket fees paid pursuant to Rule 12 and fees paid for E-Filing and E-Service.

[1] This rule has been amended, in part, to be consistent with F.R.A.P. 39, which governs costs, and for clarity and readability. The rule was also revised to shift responsibility for taxing costs from the appellate courts to the trial courts, which reflects and is consistent with the current practice of the courts.

[2] Prior subsection (a), which was previously titled, ''To Whom Allowed,'' is now, more accurately titled, ''Against Whom Assessed.'' The substance of prior subsection (a) had not changed, but its contents are now organized in list form.

[3] Prior subsection (c), entitled ''Costs on Appeal Taxable in the Trial Courts,'' has been deleted, but its substance has been relocated to revised subsection (c)(2), entitled, ''Bill of Costs.''

[4] Prior subsection (d), entitled ''Clerk to Include Costs in Mandate,'' has been deleted.

[5] Prior subsection (e), entitled ''Costs of Appeal Taxable in the Trial Court,'' has been re-lettered to revised subsection (c) as a result of the deletion of prior subsections (c) and (d), and its title had been slightly revised to ''Costs on Appeal Taxable in the Trial Courts.''

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, ''Appellate Procedure and the New Supreme Court Rules'', see 30 Dicta 1 (1953).

Costs, strictly so called, are a matter of statute or rule of court. Antero & Lost Park Reservoir Co. v. Lowe, 70 Colo. 467, 203 P. 265 (1921).

Costs are recoverable only by virtue of the statute allowing them. Phillips v. Corbin, 25 Colo. 567, 56 P. 180 (1899); Giampapa v. Am. Family Mut. Ins. Co., 12 P.3d 839 (Colo. App. 2000), rev'd on other grounds, 64 P.3d 230 (Colo. 2003).

Costs are limited to docket fees and the expense of producing necessary copies of briefs filed with the appellate court. Giampapa v. Am. Family Mut. Ins. Co., 12 P.3d 839 (Colo. App. 2000), rev'd on other grounds, 64 P.3d 230 (Colo. 2003).

The appellate court is the appropriate court for determination of an award of costs under this rule. Where the trial court awarded costs of the appeal on remand, following a denial by the appellate court of an untimely request for costs under this rule, the trial court erred. Giampapa v. Am. Family Mut. Ins. Co., 12 P.3d 839 (Colo. App. 2000), rev'd on other grounds, 64 P.3d 230 (Colo. 2003).

Court discretion. The use of the word ''shall'' in section (a) does not mean that a trial court is required to award costs sought under section (e) to a prevailing party on appeal or that the court only has discretion with respect to the amount. In re Goodbinder, 119 P.3d 584 (Colo. App. 2005).

Costs and attorney fees distinguished. Where there is statutory authorization for an award of attorney fees incurred by the prevailing party in defending a judgment on appeal, the question of what court should determine the amount awarded is not governed by this or any other rule. Giampapa v. Am. Family Mut. Ins. Co., 12 P.3d 839 (Colo. App. 2000), rev'd on other grounds, 64 P.3d 230 (Colo. 2003).

In the absence of any statute, rule, or precedent limiting the trial court's jurisdiction to award prevailing party appellate attorney fees, an application to the trial court was appropriate. Giampapa v. Am. Family Mut. Ins. Co., 12 P.3d 839 (Colo. App. 2000), rev'd on other grounds, 64 P.3d 230 (Colo. 2003).

Costs are only to reimburse the successful party. Antero & Lost Park Reservoir Co. v. Lowe, 70 Colo. 467, 203 P. 265 (1921).

For all trials of same cause. Where there is more than one trial of the same cause, the successful party is entitled to recover costs for all the trials. Wallace Plumbing Co. v. Dillon, 73 Colo. 10, 213 P. 130 (1922).

And including annexation proceedings. Under this rule the successful party may recover costs incurred in the supreme court upon appeal in annexation proceedings. Phillips v. Corbin, 25 Colo. 567, 56 P. 180 (1898).

Where suit is instituted and prosecuted vexatiously, defendant's attorney fees may be taxed as costs. London v. Allison, 87 Colo. 27, 284 P. 776 (1930).

In action in mandamus to compel a city council to grant a permit, where judgment is for the plaintiff, he is entitled to recover from the defending officials who voted against granting the permit his costs taxed in the trial court, but not from those who voted in favor of granting the permit. City of Colo. Springs v. Street, 81 Colo. 181, 254 P. 440 (1927).

This rule does not include a case dismissed for want of jurisdiction. Bartels v. Hoey, 3 Colo. 279 (1877).

Objection barred after payment of costs. When there is no fraud or wrongful purpose or mistake of fact, one may not object further to a taxation of costs against him after he has paid them, or received payment thereof. Webber v. Phister, 71 Colo. 332, 206 P. 385 (1922).

Rationale for section (b) limitation. The limitation in section (b) stems from the basic concept that costs should not be charged against a sovereign state, unless the proper authority so directs. People in Interest of W.M., 643 P.2d 794 (Colo. App. 1982).

Applied in In re Trask, 40 Colo. App. 556, 580 P.2d 825 (1978); Caldwell v. Armstrong, 642 P.2d 47 (Colo. App. 1981); Holcomb v. Steven D. Smith, Inc., 170 P.3d 815 (Colo. App. 2007); URS Group, Inc. v. Tetra Tech FW, Inc., 181 P.3d 380 (Colo. App. 2008); Lucht's Concrete Pumping, Inc. v. Horner, 224 P.3d 355 (Colo. App. 2009), rev'd on other grounds, 255 P.3d 1058 (Colo. 2011); Camp. Int. Watchdog v. Colo. Better Future, 2016 COA 56M, 378 P.3d 852.

Rule 39.1. Attorney Fees on Appeal

If attorney fees are recoverable for the appeal, the principal brief of the party claiming attorney fees must include a specific request, and explain the legal and factual basis, for an award of attorney fees. Any opposition to a request for attorney fees, and the legal and factual basis for the opposition, must be set forth in either the answer or reply brief, as appropriate. In its discretion, the appellate court may determine entitlement to and the amount of an award of attorney fees for the appeal, or may remand those determinations to the lower court or tribunal.

ANNOTATION

Annotator's note. The following annotations include cases decided under former Rule 39.5.

Merely identifying the statute under which fees are requested, without stating the specific grounds that justify an award of fees, does not adequately comply with this rule. In re Newell, 192 P.3d 529 (Colo. App. 2008).

Neither party is entitled to recover its appellate attorney fees from the estate where decedent's siblings and nieces are contesting who is entitled to the estate proceeds, and their respective attorneys are not employed by the personal representative. In re Estate of Evarts, 166 P.3d 161 (Colo. App. 2007).

No award of attorney fees to condominium association on appeal under this rule and § 38-33.3-123. Section 38-33-123 (1)(c) provides for recovery of attorney fees only in actions to ''enforce or defend the provision of this article or of the declaration, bylaws, articles, or rules and regulations''. Condominium association defended against purchasers' breach of contract action and sought declaratory action that contract was void. Neither purchasers' claims nor associations' counterclaims were to enforce or defend the article; thus, the statute does not apply. Platt v. Aspenwood Condo. Ass'n, 214 P.3d 1060 (Colo. App. 2009).

Contract provision concerning attorney fees should be considered on remand where it was not part of the record on appeal. Adams v. Land Servs., Inc., 194 P.3d 429 (Colo. App. 2008).

Appellate attorney fees are only awardable where requesting party states a legal basis for recovery. In re Wells, 252 P.3d 1212 (Colo. App. 2011).

Request for attorney fees on appeal under this rule properly denied. Respondent acted in good faith in attempting to find a means of enforcing her undisputed fee award. Accordingly, her appeal was not wholly frivolous and groundless. McGihon v. Cave, 2016 COA 78, 410 P.3d 647.

Rule 40. Petition for Rehearing

(a) Time to File; Contents; Answer; Oral Argument; Action by Court if Granted.

(1) Time. Unless the time is shortened or extended by order, a petition for rehearing may be filed within 14 days after entry of judgment.

(2) Contents. The petition must state with particularity each point of law or fact the petitioner believes the court has overlooked or misapprehended and must include an argument in support of the petition.

(3) Answer. Unless the court requests a response, no answer to a petition for rehearing is permitted.

(4) Oral Argument. Oral argument is not permitted on a petition for rehearing.

(5) Action by the Court. If a petition for rehearing is granted, the court may:

(A) make a final disposition of the case without reargument;
(B) restore the case to the calendar for reargument or resubmission; or
(C) issue any other order it deems appropriate.

(b) Form of Petition; Length. The petition must comply in form with C.A.R. 32. The petition must include the following in the caption:

(1) If filed in the supreme court: the name of the author justice; the name of any justice who wrote or participated in a separate opinion; the name of any justice who did not participate in the case; whether the decision was en banc; and, if a departmental decision, the names of the participating justices.

(2) If filed in the court of appeals: the names of the author judge and participating judges, and the name of any judge who wrote or participated in a separate opinion.

Except by permission of court, a petition for rehearing must not exceed 1,900 words, excluding material not counted under C.A.R. 28(g)(1).

(c) Petition for Rehearing in Supreme Court Proceedings. A petition for rehearing filed in proceedings before the supreme court must comply with the requirements of subsections (a) and (b) of this rule.

(1) In Direct Appeals. A petition for rehearing may be filed in a direct appeal to the supreme court only after issuance of an opinion. No petition for rehearing may be filed after issuance of an order affirming a lower court order.

(2) In Proceedings Under C.A.R. 21. A petition for rehearing may be filed after issuance of an opinion discharging a rule to show cause or making a rule absolute. No petition for rehearing may be filed after denial of a petition without explanation.

(3) In Certiorari Proceedings. A petition for rehearing may be filed after issuance of an opinion on the merits of a granted petition for writ of certiorari, or when, after granting a writ of certiorari, the court later denies the writ as having been improvidently granted. No petition for rehearing may be filed after issuance of an order denying a petition for writ of certiorari.

(4) In Interlocutory Appeals in Criminal Cases under C.A.R. 4.1. No petition for rehearing shall be permitted in interlocutory appeals filed pursuant to C.A.R. 4.1.

Source: (b) amended and adopted April 4, 1996, effective July 1, 1996; entire rule amended and adopted February 24, 2005, effective July 1, 2005; (a) amended and adopted December 14, 2011, effective January 1, 2012, for all cases pending on or filed on or after January 1, 2012, pursuant to C.R.C.P. 1(b); entire rule amended and comment added, effective April 7, 2016.

2016

Subsection (c), entitled ''Petition for Rehearing in Supreme Court Proceedings'' is new. It explains when a petition for rehearing may be filed, see also C.A.R. 21(n) and 54(b); reiterates that a petition for rehearing shall not be permitted in interlocutory appeals in criminal cases, see C.A.R. 4.1(g); and clarifies that a petition for rehearing may not be filed after issuance of an order without explanation.

Law reviews. For article, ''A Summary of Colorado Supreme Court Internal Operating Procedures'', see 11 Colo. Law. 356 (1982). For article, ''Amendments to Appellate Rules Concerning Type Size and Word Count'', see 34 Colo. Law. 27 (June 2005).

Object of a petition for rehearing is to give the parties an opportunity to point out mistakes of law or fact, or both, which it may be claimed the court has made in reaching its conclusion. Norris v. Kelsey, 60 Colo. 297, 152 P. 1167 (1915).

Direct attack upon the judgment after the mandate has issued is not contemplated by the appellate rules. Garrett v. Garrett, 30 Colo. App. 167, 490 P.2d 313 (1971).

Rule inapplicable to decision neither raised nor argued. The prohibitions of this rule do not apply where a cause is decided upon a question not raised by the record nor argued by counsel. Model Land & Irrigation Co. v. Baca Irrigating Ditch Co., 83 Colo. 131, 262 P. 517 (1927).

A certiorari denial is not a "judgment" that would authorize a party to petition for rehearing under section (a). Al-Yousif v. Trani, 11 F. Supp. 3d 1032 (D. Colo. 2014), rev'd on other grounds, 779 F.3d 1173 (10th Cir. 2015).

Rule does not prohibit the citation of authorities, or a reference to those cited in the briefs. Book v. Book, 71 Colo. 502, 208 P. 474 (1922).

Appellate court has no duty to accept untimely petition. Nothing in the language of this rule would imply nor was it the intention of this court in drafting this language that there be a duty on the part of the appellate court to accept an untimely petition for rehearing. The only duty which this rule creates is that the court use its sound discretion in considering a request for any extension of time. Wiggins v. People, 199 Colo. 341, 608 P.2d 348 (1980).

Refusal to enlarge time was an abuse of discretion where the failure to timely file was due to the failure of the clerk of the court of appeals to mail copies of the court of appeals opinion to the third party defendants as required by C.A.R. 36. Brewster v. Nandrea, 705 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1985).

Appellate court's jurisdiction not relinquished pending petition for rehearing. The appellate court holds jurisdiction of the cause for a fixed period for the purpose of permitting an application for a rehearing, and in no case except upon special order, is this jurisdiction relinquished during such period. Norris v. Kelsey, 60 Colo. 297, 152 P. 1167 (1915).

If a petition for rehearing is filed, jurisdiction is retained until such application is finally disposed of, and which may result in a modification or even a reversal of the original judgment of the appellate court. Norris v. Kelsey, 60 Colo. 297, 152 P. 1167 (1915).

Jurisdiction of district court is not restored until cause is finally disposed of by appellate court. Norris v. Kelsey, 60 Colo. 297, 152 P. 1167 (1915).

Evenly divided vote denies petition. A three to three division of the supreme court on the question of granting or denying the first petition for a rehearing operates to deny that petition. For that reason, under this rule, the appellant was without legal right to file the second petition for rehearing, and should not have been permitted to do so. Such petition, if filed, should be stricken, or if not stricken, then denied. People ex rel. Link v. Tucker, 96 Colo. 273, 42 P.2d 472 (1935).

C.A.R. 26(c) inapplicable as time extension. C.A.R. 26(c), relating to additional time after service by mail, has no application as an extension of time limit set forth in section (a) of this rule. Garrett v. Garrett, 30 Colo. App. 167, 490 P.2d 313 (1971).

Petition held to sufficiently state issue. A petition stating a point the court might have overlooked, and showing the relation of that point to the court's decision, and nothing irrelevant thereto, does not violate this rule. Colburn v. Ernst, 75 Colo. 120, 223 P. 759 (1924).

Petition which contains insulting criticism of the courts or flagrantly disregards court rules will be stricken. Goodrich v. Union Oil Co., 85 Colo. 218, 274 P. 935 (1929).

Applied in Honey v. Ranchers & Farmers Livestock Auction Co., 191 Colo. 503, 553 P.2d 799 (1976); People v. Parsons, 645 P.2d 850 (Colo. 1982).

Rule 41. Mandate

(a) Contents. The clerk of the court will issue the mandate with a copy of the appellate court judgment.

(b) When Issued. Unless the court grants or removes a stay, or otherwise changes the time by order, the mandate will issue as follows:

(1) In the Court of Appeals. Except as provided in subsections (A) and (B), the court of appeals mandate will issue no earlier than 42 days after entry of the judgment.

(A) If the court extends the time to file a petition for rehearing but no petition is filed within the extended period, the mandate will issue following the last day of the extended period for filing the petition for rehearing or after the day specified by this rule, whichever occurs later. The mandate will issue no earlier than 28 days after the court denies the petition for rehearing.

(B) In workers' compensation and unemployment insurance cases, the mandate will issue no earlier than 28 days after entry of the judgment, or 14 days after the court denies a timely petition for rehearing, whichever occurs later.

(2) In the Supreme Court. The supreme court mandate will issue no earlier than 14 days after entry of the judgment. If a petition for rehearing is denied, or if the court extends the time to file a petition for rehearing but no petition is filed within the extended period, the mandate will issue no earlier than 2 days after entry of the order denying the petition or the extended deadline for filing a petition. The supreme court must issue the mandate immediately when a copy of a United States Supreme Court order denying a petition for writ of certiorari is filed.

(c) Staying the Mandate.

(1) On Petition for Rehearing or Motion. The timely filing of a petition for rehearing or motion for stay of mandate stays the mandate until disposition of the petition or motion, unless the court orders otherwise.

(2) Pending Petition for Writ of Certiorari in the Colorado Supreme Court. The timely filing of a petition for writ of certiorari pursuant to C.A.R. 52 stays the court of appeals mandate until disposition of the petition.

(3) Pending Petition for Writ of Certiorari in the United States Supreme Court.

(A) A party may move to stay the appellate mandate pending the filing of a petition for a writ of certiorari in the United States Supreme Court. The motion must be served on all parties and must show that the certiorari petition would present a substantial question and that there is good cause for a stay.

(B) The court, or a judge or justice thereof, may stay issuance of the mandate until the petition for writ of certiorari is filed, or if review is timely sought, until the petition is ruled on, or, if review is granted, until final disposition of the case by the United States Supreme Court. A stay pending the filing of a petition for writ of certiorari must not exceed 90 days, unless the period is extended for good cause or unless the party who obtained the stay files a petition for the writ and so notifies the clerk of the appellate court, in writing, within the period of the stay, in which case the stay continues until disposition of the petition.

(C) The court may require a bond or other security as a condition of granting or continuing a stay of the mandate.

(d) Effective Date. The mandate is effective when issued.

(e) Recall of Mandate. The court of appeals may recall its mandate, and the supreme court may recall any appellate mandate as it deems appropriate. Upon recall of a mandate, re-issuance of the mandate may be stayed pursuant to subsection (c) of this rule.

[1] The purpose of this amendment is to clarify that the Court of Appeals can extend the stay of the issuance of the mandate when an extension of time to file a petition for rehearing is timely filed. The rule change addresses the specific problem that arises when, after an extension has been granted, no petition for rehearing is filed. Practitioners had been concerned that, without having filed a petition for rehearing, any petition for certiorari filed beyond the time specified in the rule for stay of the issuance of the mandate would be untimely.

2016

[2] The amendments to this Rule are mainly structural, not substantive, and were made to provide better organization. They were modeled, in part, on F.R.A.P. 41. The title of the Rule changed to ''Mandate,'' because the revisions created a more comprehensive rule. The Rule now contains separate subsections explaining when a mandate issues (subsection (b)); when a mandate may be stayed (subsection (c)); when a mandate becomes effective (subsection (d)); and when an appellate court may recall a mandate (subsection (e)).

[3] Rule 41.1 has been deleted, and its substance has been relocated to new subsections (c) and (e) of Rule 41.

ANNOTATION

Annotator's note. The following annotations include cases decided under prior versions of this rule.

Intent is to establish finality of judgment. The mandate provided for in this rule intended to establish the finality of the judgment upon which the parties can rely. Garrett v. Garrett, 30 Colo. App. 167, 490 P.2d 313 (1971); Hrabczuk v. John Lucas Landscaping, 888 P.2d 367 (Colo. App. 1994).

Direct attack upon the judgment after the mandate has issued is not contemplated by the appellate rules. Garrett v. Garrett, 30 Colo. App. 167, 490 P.2d 313 (1971). See Hrabczuk v. John Lucas Landscaping, 888 P.2d 367 (Colo. App. 1994).

Lower court without jurisdiction until date mandate may issue. The date when the mandate may issue under this rule must be held to be the earliest date upon which the district court can acquire jurisidction. Until this occurs the lower court is without jurisdiction for any purpose. Norris v. Kelsey, 60 Colo. 297, 152 P. 1167 (1915); People v. Jones, 631 P.2d 1132 (Colo. 1981).

Directions in remand "for consideration of the request for attorney fees" set out in order are controlling over language contained in mandate form regarding attorney fees issued by the clerk's office of the court. Hrabczuk v. John Lucas Landscaping, 888 P.2d 367 (Colo. App. 1994).

Applied in People v. Martinez, 186 Colo. 388, 527 P.2d 534 (1974).

Rule 41.1. Stay or Recall of Mandate

Deleted and relocated to Rule 41, effective April 7, 2016.

ANNOTATION

Division exceeded its authority when it initially stayed and later withdrew the mandate because the court's authority to stay or withdraw a mandate expired when the supreme court denied the defendant's writ of certiorari. People v. Bonilla-Garcia, 51 P.3d 1035 (Colo. App. 2001).

An intermediate appellate court has the inherent power to stay its mandate following the denial of certiorari by the supreme court upon a showing of "exceptional circumstances". A supervening change in governing law that calls into question the correctness of the court's decision satisfies the "exceptional circumstances" criteria. People v. McAfee, 160 P.3d 277 (Colo. App. 2007).

Applied in Wiggins v. People, 199 Colo. 341, 608 P.2d 348 (1980).

Rule 42. Voluntary Dismissal

The appellate court must dismiss an appeal or other appellate proceeding if the parties file a signed dismissal agreement specifying how costs will be paid and pay any fees that are due. The appellate court may dismiss an appeal or other appellate proceeding on the appellant's or petitioner's motion on terms agreed upon by the parties or fixed by the court. No mandate or other process may issue without a court order.

Rule 43. Substitution of Parties

(a) Death of a Party.

(1) After Notice of Appeal is Filed. If a party dies after a notice of appeal is filed or while a proceeding is otherwise pending in the appellate court, the personal representative of the deceased party may be substituted as a party on motion filed by the representative or any party. A death certificate or other official proof of death must be filed with the motion. A party's motion must be served on the representative in accordance with C.R.C.P. 25. If the decedent has no representative, any party may suggest the death on the record, and the court may then direct appropriate proceedings.

(2) Before Notice of Appeal is Filed — Potential Appellant. If a party entitled to appeal dies before filing a notice of appeal, the decedent's personal representative—or, if the decedent has no personal representative, the decedent's attorney of record—may file a notice of appeal within the time prescribed by these rules. After the notice of appeal is filed, substitution must be in accordance with section (a)(1) of this rule.

(3) Before Notice of Appeal is Filed — Potential Appellee. If a party against whom an appeal may be taken dies after entry of a judgment or order in the underlying proceeding, but before a notice of appeal is filed, an appellant may proceed as if the death had not occurred. After the notice of appeal is filed, substitution must be in accordance with section (a)(1) of this rule.

(b) Substitution for Reasons Other Than Death. If substitution of a party is required for any reason other than death, the party seeking substitution must file a motion stating the grounds for substitution.

(c) Public Officers; Identification; Substitution.

(1) Identification of Party. A public officer who is a party to an appeal or other proceeding in an official capacity may be described as a party by the public officer's official title rather than by name; but the court may require the public officer's name to be added.

(2) Automatic Substitution of Officeholder. When a public officer who is a party to an appeal or other proceedings in an official capacity dies, resigns, or otherwise ceases to hold office, the action does not abate. The public officer's successor is automatically substituted as a party. Proceedings following the substitution must be in the name of the substituted party, but any misnomer that does not affect the substantial rights of the parties may be disregarded. The court may enter an order of substitution at any time, but failure to enter an order does not affect the substitution.

Rule 44. Cases Involving a Constitutional Question When the State of Colorado is Not a Party

If a party questions the constitutionality of any Colorado statute in an appellate proceeding in which the state, its agency, officer, or employee is not a party in an official capacity, the questioning party must notify the clerk of the supreme court in writing immediately upon the filing of the proceeding or as soon as the question is raised in the appellate court. The clerk must then certify that fact to the Attorney General.

COMMENT

2016

The substance of prior subsections (b) and (c) has been relocated to C.A.R. 44.1.

Rule 44.1. Cases Involving Public Utilities Laws or the Public Utilities Commission When the Commission is Not a Party

(a) Challenge to Public Utilities Law or Act of Public Utilities Commission. If a party questions the validity, interpretation, or application of any section of the Public Utilities Law of the State of Colorado or of any rule, regulation, order, certificate, or permit issued by the Public Utilities Commission in a proceeding in which the Commission is not a party, the questioning party must notify the clerk of the appellate court in writing immediately upon the filing of the proceeding or as soon as the question is raised in the appellate court. The clerk must then certify that fact to the Secretary of the Public Utilities Commission.

(b) Other Proceedings Impacting the Public Utilities Commission. In an appellate proceeding involving a municipally owned utility in which the court's decision may impact the powers and duties of the Public Utilities Commission or the interpretation of the Public Utilities Law of the State of Colorado, the clerk of the appellate court must notify the Secretary of the Public Utilities Commission of the pendency of the proceeding and invite the Commission to intervene or to enter an appearance as amicus curiae.

COMMENT

2016

This new rule contains the substance of prior C.A.R. 44(b) and (c), pertaining to cases involving Public Utilities Law or proceedings impacting the Public Utilities Commission when the Commission is not a party.

Rule 45. Duties of Clerk of Appellate Court

(a) General Provisions.

(1) Qualifications. The clerk of the appellate court must take any oath required by law. Neither the clerk nor any deputy clerk may practice as an attorney or counselor in any court while in office.

(2) When Court is Open. The appellate courts are always open for filing any document, issuing and returning process, making a motion, and entering an order. The clerk's office with the clerk or a deputy in attendance must be open during business hours on all days except Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays, as defined in C.A.R. 26(a), but the chief justice may order that the clerk's office be open or closed during specified hours on other days.

(b) Records.

(1) The Docket. The clerk must maintain a docket and an index of all docketed cases in the manner prescribed by the appellate court. The clerk must record all documents filed with the clerk and all process, orders, and judgments.

(2) Calendar. Under the court's direction, the clerk must prepare a calendar of cases awaiting argument. In placing cases on the calendar for argument, the clerk must give preference to appeals and other proceedings entitled to preference by law.

(3) Other Records. The clerk must keep other records as required by the court.

(c) Service of Orders and Judgments. The clerk must serve all orders and judgments on each party and note the date of service on the docket. Service on a party represented by counsel must be made on counsel.

(d) Custody of Records and Documents. The clerk has custody of the court's records and documents. Unless the court orders otherwise, the clerk must not permit an original record or document to be taken from the clerk's custody. Upon disposition of the case, the clerk must return original documents containing the record on appeal or review to the court or agency from which they were received. The clerk must preserve a copy of any brief, appendix, or other document that has been filed.

JURISDICTION ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI

Rule 49. Considerations Governing Review on Certiorari

Review in the supreme court on a writ of certiorari as provided in section 13-4-108, C.R.S., and section 13-6-310, C.R.S., is a matter of sound judicial discretion and will be granted only when there are special and important reasons. The following, while neither controlling nor fully measuring the supreme court's discretion, indicate the character of reasons that will be considered:

(a) the district court on appeal from the county court has decided a question of substance not yet determined by the supreme court;

(b) the court of appeals, or district court on appeal from the county court, has decided a question of substance in a way probably not in accord with applicable decisions of the supreme court;

(c) a division of the court of appeals has rendered a decision in conflict with the decision of another division of said court; the same ground applies to judgments and decrees of district courts on appeal from the county court when a decision is in conflict with another district court on the same matters;

(d) the court of appeals has so far departed from the accepted and usual course of judicial proceedings or so far sanctioned such procedure by a lower court as to call for the exercise of the supreme court's power of supervision.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, ''A Summary of Colorado Supreme Court Internal Operating Procedures'', see 11 Colo. Law. 356 (1982).

The common-law writ of certiorari serves to correct substantial errors of law not otherwise reviewable which are committed by an inferior tribunal. Sutterfield v. District Court, 165 Colo. 225, 438 P.2d 236 (1968).

Statutes creating appellate remedies take precedence over judicial rules of procedure. Bill Dreiling Motor Co. v. Court of Appeals, 171 Colo. 448, 468 P.2d 37 (1970).

Scope of constitutional rule-making power. The manner in which subject matter jurisdiction is exercised is properly within the scope of the supreme court's rule-making powers vested by § 2(1) of art. VI, Colo. Const. This procedure has been established and is set forth in C.A.R. 50 to 57. Bill Dreiling Motor Co. v. Court of Appeals, 171 Colo. 448, 468 P.2d 37 (1970).

Supreme court may not expand jurisdiction by rule. Supreme court jurisdiction, as initially spelled out in the Colorado constitution, may be expanded by statute. But there is no authority for the supreme court to expand its jurisdiction by rule of court. Bill Dreiling Motor Co. v. Court of Appeals, 171 Colo. 448, 468 P.2d 37 (1970).

Certiorari is proper remedy to protect substantial right. An original proceeding in the nature of certiorari under this rule, when directed to an endangered, fundamentally substantive and substantial right, is maintainable and recognized as a proper remedy. Potashnik v.

Pub. Serv. Co., 126 Colo. 98, 247 P.2d 137 (1952); Lucas v. District Court, 140 Colo. 510, 345 P.2d 1064 (1959).

Where usual review does not afford adequate protection. The power of certiorari is exercisable where usual review on appeal would not afford adequate protection to substantive rights of the petitioners. Sutterfield v. District Court, 165 Colo. 225, 438 P.2d 236 (1968).

Certiorari may be granted to determine a policy. Where no well-defined policy has emerged on a subject, the court will grant certiorari in order to make such a determination. Mile High Fence Co. v. Radovich, 175 Colo. 537, 489 P.2d 308 (1971).

Petition for certiorari is addressed to sound judicial discretion, and denial does not constitute a determination of the issues on the merits. Menefee v. City & County of Denver, 190 Colo. 163, 544 P.2d 382 (1976).

The issuance of a writ of certiorari is always discretionary. Sutterfield v. District Court, 165 Colo. 225, 438 P.2d 236 (1968).

Review of interlocutory orders. The supreme court has the power under § 3 of art. VI, Colo. Const., to issue certiorari to review interlocutory orders of lower courts. Sutterfield v. District Court, 165 Colo. 225, 438 P.2d 236 (1968).

The proper proceeding for relief from an interlocutory order is by certiorari. Lucas v. District Court, 140 Colo. 510, 345 P.2d 1064 (1959).

Review of eminent domain interlocutory order. Within the period of stay of execution granted by a trial court, the owners of property being condemned, not having the right of review of an interlocutory order on appeal, may file original action by way of certiorari in the supreme court, alleging that otherwise they are without remedy whatsoever to protect their property from seizure under an order of a district court, which they contend is without lawful authority. Lucas v. District Court, 140 Colo. 510, 345 P.2d 1064 (1959).

Pretrial proceedings reviewable. The denial of an asserted right in pretrial proceedings, not otherwise reviewable, may be determined by means of an original proceeding in certiorari in the supreme court. Lucas v. District Court, 140 Colo. 510, 345 P.2d 1064 (1959).

Certiorari granted where judgment would render question moot. Application for an original writ of mandamus or certiorari in the supreme court is the only procedure by which to test the validity of a trial court's ruling where the question involved, if permitted to await final judgment, would become moot. Lucas v. District Court, 140 Colo. 510, 345 P.2d 1064 (1959).

Certiorari to review joinder of claims was issued where all parties would be put to unnecessary delay and expense were it required that one or both of these tort claims be fully tried before determining whether the claims should have remained joined in the first instance. Should plaintiffs obtain a favorable judgment in both lawsuits, none of the parties will be in a position to raise the procedural question of separate trials posed by this original proceeding. Sutterfield v. District Court, 165 Colo. 225, 438 P.2d 236 (1968).

Amended answers ordered to be struck. In an original proceeding for relief as in certiorari, it was held that the district court should strike amended and amending answers which it allowed to be filed subsequent to the supreme court's remanding order which mentioned the specific pleadings out of which the trial court should ascertain the issues and on which it should conduct the trial. People ex rel. Henderson v. Greeley Nat'l Bank, 112 Colo. 274, 148 P.2d 580 (1944).

Review of superior court's reversal of county court. The supreme court may review by certiorari a superior court's reversal of a county court judgment. People v. Dee, 638 P.2d 749 (Colo. 1981).

The appellate review of county court judgments by the superior court is subject to ultimate review by the supreme court, since any party has the right to petition for a writ of certiorari. People v. Superior Court, 175 Colo. 391, 488 P.2d 66 (1971).

Certiorari dismissed where denial of charge of venue may be considered on appeal. Under applicable rules of civil procedure, where a motion for change of venue has been filed by defendants and said motion has been denied, the defendants can thereafter file an answer and proceed to trial without waiving the question of error based upon the denial of said motion. An original proceeding in the nature of a writ of certiorari to review the denial of a motion for change of venue by a district court will be dismissed. Colo. State Bd. of Exam'rs of Architects v. District Court, 126 Colo. 340, 249 P.2d 146 (1952).

Where conviction necessarily involves only a factual issue, certiorari to review such conviction will be dismissed as improvidently granted. Erickson v. City & County of Denver, 179 Colo. 412, 500 P.2d 1183 (1972).

Denial of a petition for certiorari in a criminal case means nothing more than that the supreme court has declared that the case is not properly postured for further appellate review. Menefee v. City & County of Denver, 190 Colo. 163, 544 P.2d 382 (1976).

Where a decision of a reviewing court could not result in further proceedings against the petitioner, he has no standing to prosecute appellate proceedings beyond the court where his acquittal occurred. Garcia v.

City of Pueblo, 176 Colo. 96, 489 P.2d 200 (1971).

Moot question not reviewed. Where the question involved does not have that degree of public importance to justify review of a moot question, it is properly dismissed. People in Interest of P. L. V., 176 Colo. 342, 490 P.2d 685 (1971).

Appellate courts are bound by the jury's findings where there is sufficient competent evidence in the record to support the finding, where the jury makes the finding on conflicting evidence, and where the jury has been correctly instructed by the trial court. Vigil v. Pine, 176 Colo. 384, 490 P.2d 934 (1971).

Applied in McGregor v. People, 176 Colo. 309, 490 P.2d 287 (1971); Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Fifty-first Gen. Ass'y, 198 Colo. 302, 599 P.2d 887 (1979).

Rule 50. Certiorari to the Court of Appeals Before Judgment

(a) Considerations Governing. A petition for writ of certiorari from the supreme court to review a case newly filed or pending in the court of appeals, before judgment is given in said court, may be granted upon a showing that:

(1) the case involves a matter of substance not yet determined by the supreme court of Colorado, or that the case if decided according to the relief sought on appeal involves the overruling of a previous decision of the supreme court; or

(2) the court of appeals is being asked to decide an important state question which has not been, but should be, determined by the supreme court; or

(3) the case is of such imperative public importance as to justify the deviation from normal appellate processes and to require immediate determination in the supreme court.

(b) By Whom Sought. The petition for a writ of certiorari may be filed by either party or by stipulation of the parties. The court of appeals on its own motion may request transfer to the supreme court, or the supreme court may on its own motion require transfer of the case to it.

(c) Applicability. This rule does not permit certiorari review in cases pending in the district court on appeal from the county court before judgment is entered in the district court.

Procedure provides for appellate review. The procedure established in § 13-4-108 (2), C.R.S., and in C.A.R. 50 through C.A.R. 57, C.A.R., clearly provides for appellate review in the supreme court. Bill Dreiling Motor Co. v. Court of Appeals, 171 Colo. 448, 468 P.2d 37 (1970).

And is constitutional. The changes brought about by pertinent statutes with respect to the jurisdiction of the supreme court and the court of appeals are within the authority of the general assembly. Bill Dreiling Motor Co. v. Court of Appeals, 171 Colo. 448, 468 P.2d 37 (1970).

Review similar to common-law certiorari. The form of certiorari review the supreme court will maintain over the court of appeals is quite similar to the common-law review by certiorari, and distinguishable from the limited ancillary type of certiorari in existence in past years under Rule 106(a)(4), C.R.C.P. Bill Dreiling Motor Co. v. Court of Appeals, 171 Colo. 448, 468 P.2d 37 (1970).

The supreme court may retain and review an appeal of a declaratory order of the state personnel board that should have been filed with the court of appeals. The court's authority rests in its power under section (b) to review cases pending in the court of appeals prior to judgment and under C.A.R. 2 to suspend the rules of appellate procedure. Colo. Ass'n of Pub. Emp. v. Dept. of Hwys., 809 P.2d 988 (Colo. 1991).

Study of petition and record constitutes review. The study by the supreme court of the petition provided in the Colorado appellate rules and of the record on appeal to determine whether to grant or deny the petition constitutes a review. Bill Dreiling Motor Co. v. Court of Appeals, 171 Colo. 448, 468 P.2d 37 (1970).

Rule 51. Review on Certiorari — How Sought

(a) Filing and Record on Appeal. A party seeking review on certiorari must file, within the time limit provided in C.A.R. 52, a petition that complies with C.A.R. 25 and 32 with the clerk of the supreme court.

(1) Record from a District Court Judgment. For appeals from district courts reviewing final judgments and decrees of the county court or municipal court, the clerk of the district court must certify the complete record in the case and transmit the record to the clerk of the supreme court within fourteen days of the filing of the petition.

(2) Record from a Court of Appeals Judgment. For appeals from the court of appeals, no action is required by the clerk of the court of appeals to transmit the record.

(b) Petitioner's Docket Fee. Upon the filing of the petition or a motion for extension of time in which to file the petition pursuant to C.A.R. 26(b), petitioner must pay the docket fee of $225.00, of which $1.00 will be transferred to the state general fund as a tax levy pursuant to section 2-5-119, C.R.S. The case will then be placed on the certiorari docket.

(c) Respondent's Docket Fee. Upon respondent's initial filing, if any, respondent must pay the docket fee of $115.00.

Rule 51.1. Exhaustion of State Remedies Requirement in Criminal Cases

(a) Exhaustion of Remedies. In all appeals from criminal convictions or postconviction relief matters from or after July 1, 1974, a litigant is not required to petition for rehearing and certiorari following an adverse decision of the intermediate appellate court in order to be deemed to have exhausted all available state remedies respecting a claim of error. Rather, the litigant will have exhausted all available state remedies when a claim has been presented to the intermediate appellate court and the supreme court, and relief has been denied or when relief has been denied in the intermediate appellate court and the time for petitioning for certiorari review has expired.

(b) Savings Clause. If a litigant's petition for federal habeas corpus is dismissed or denied for failure to exhaust state remedies based on a decision that this rule is ineffective, the litigant may file a motion to recall the mandate together with a writ of certiorari presenting any claim of error not previously presented in reliance on this rule. Any motion to recall the mandate must be filed within 49 days after entry of the federal court's dismissal or denial order.

Source: Entire rule added and effective May 18, 2006; (b) amended and adopted December 14, 2011, effective January 1, 2012, for all cases pending on or filed on or after January 1, 2012, pursuant to C.R.C.P. 1(b); entire rule amended and effective June 7, 2018, effective July 1, 2018.

ANNOTATION

Section (a) does not require a litigant to raise a claim in the supreme court if he or she has already raised it in the court of appeals and been denied relief. Once a litigant raises a claim before the court of appeals, and relief is denied, ''all available state remedies'' are deemed unavailable. Al-Yousif v. Trani, 11 F. Supp. 3d 1032 (D. Colo. 2014), rev'd on other grounds, 779 F.3d 1173 (10th Cir. 2015).

Section (a) permits state prisoners to exhaust all available state remedies without seeking discretionary relief from the state supreme court, rendering state supreme court review ''unavailable'' for purposes of federal Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996 exhaustion. Ellis v. Raemisch, 872 F.3d 1064 (10th Cir. 2017).

Rule 52. Review on Certiorari — Time for Petitioning

(a) Petition for Rehearing Optional. Filing a petition for rehearing in the intermediate appellate court before seeking certiorari review in the supreme court is optional.

(b) Time to File.

(1) In General. Except as provided in subsections (2) and (3) of this rule, a petition for writ of certiorari must be filed within 42 days after entry of the judgment on appeal if no petition for rehearing is filed. If a petition for rehearing is filed, the petition for writ of certiorari must be filed within 28 days after the intermediate appellate court's denial of the petition for rehearing. No petition for issuance of a writ of certiorari may be submitted to the Supreme Court until the time for filing a petition for rehearing in the intermediate appellate court has expired.

(2) In Workers' Compensation and Unemployment Insurance Cases. A petition for writ of certiorari to review a judgment of the court of appeals in workers' compensation and unemployment insurance cases must be filed in the supreme court within 28 days after the issuance of the court of appeals opinion if no petition for rehearing is filed, or within 14 days after the denial of a petition for rehearing by the court of appeals.

(3) In Dependency or Neglect Cases. A petition for writ of certiorari to review a judgment of the court of appeals in dependency or neglect cases must be filed within 28 days after issuance of the court of appeals opinion if no petition for rehearing is filed, or within 14 days after the denial of a petition for rehearing by the court of appeals.

COMMENTS

C.A.R. 52 has been revised to recognize that petitions for rehearing of a district court's review of a county court judgment are permissible, and if a petition for rehearing is filed, the petition for writ of certiorari must be filed within 28 days after the district court's denial of the petition for rehearing.

C.A.R. 52(b)(3) is a new subsection and is consistent with the petition for writ of certiorari requirements set forth in C.A.R. 3.4(l).

When a petition for rehearing of a municipal court judgment is timely filed in the district court, the district court judgment will not become final for purposes of this rule until the district court denies the petition. City of Aurora v. Rhodes, 689 P.2d 603 (Colo. 1984).

When a petition for rehearing of a county court judgment is timely filed in the district court, the district court judgment does not become final for purposes of the 42-day period to file a petition for writ of certiorari under this rule until the district court denies the petition for rehearing. People v. Penn, 2016 CO 32, 379 P.3d 298.

If a party files a conditional cross-petition for certiorari of issues not reached unless the underlying judgment is disturbed, there is no requirement that the party first file a petition for rehearing in the court of appeals. Farmers Group, Inc. v. Williams, 805 P.2d 419 (Colo. 1991).

Health maintenance organization (HMO) could not seek certiorari where HMO was dismissed from suit on its motion for summary judgment, was not a party in the court of appeals, was not substantially aggrieved by the disposition of the case by the court of appeals, and did not file the prerequisite petition for rehearing. Colo. Permanente Medical Group v. Evans, 926 P.2d 1218 (Colo. 1996).

Applied in Honey v. Ranchers & Farmers Livestock Auction Co., 191 Colo. 503, 553 P.2d 799 (1976); Wiggins v. People, 199 Colo. 341, 608 P.2d 348 (1980); People v. Dee, 638 P.2d 749 (Colo. 1981); Byrd v. People, 58 P.3d 50 (Colo. 2002).

Rule 53. Petition for Writ of Certiorari and Cross-Petition for Writ of Certiorari

(a) The Petition. The petition for writ of certiorari must comply with C.A.R. 32 and must contain the following under appropriate headings and in the order here indicated:

(1) a table of contents, with page references;

(2) a table of authorities - cases (alphabetically arranged), statutes, and other authorities - with references to the pages of the petition or cross-petition where they are cited;

(3) an advisory listing of the issues presented for review expressed in the terms and circumstances of the case but without unnecessary detail. The statement of an issue presented will be deemed to include every subsidiary issue clearly comprised therein. Only the issues set forth or fairly comprised therein will be considered.

(4) a reference to the official or unofficial reports of the opinion, judgment, or decree from which review is sought;

(5) a concise statement of the grounds on which jurisdiction of the supreme court is invoked, showing:

(A) the date of the opinion, judgment, or decree sought to be reviewed and the time of its entry;

(B) the date of any order respecting a rehearing and the date and terms of any supreme court order granting an extension of time within which to petition for writ of certiorari;

(6) a reference to any pending cases in which the supreme court has granted certiorari review on the same legal issue on which review is sought;

(7) a concise statement of the case containing the matters material to consideration of the issues presented;

(8) A direct and concise argument explaining the reasons relied on for the issuance of the writ, whether the issues raised in the petition were preserved in the lower court, and the applicable standard of review; and

(9) an appendix containing:

(A) a copy of any opinion, judgment, or decree from which review is sought; and

(B) the text of any pertinent statute, rule, ordinance, or regulation not currently in effect or not generally available in electronic format.

(b) Cross-Petition. Any cross-petition must be filed and served within 14 days after service of the petition for writ of certiorari. A cross-petition must comply with C.A.R. 32 and must have the same contents, in the same order, as the petition.

(c) Opposition Brief.

(1) In General. An opposition brief is not required unless otherwise ordered by the court. Any opposition brief must comply with C.A.R. 53(a)(1)-(3).

(2) By the Respondent. The respondent must file and serve any opposition brief within 14 days after service of the petition. If a respondent files a cross-petition, any opposition brief and cross-petition may be combined.

(3) By the Petitioner. The petitioner must file any opposition brief within 14 days after service of the cross-petition.

(d) Reply Brief. A reply brief is not required unless otherwise ordered by the court. A petitioner or cross-petitioner must file and serve any reply brief within 7 days after service of an opposition brief. The reply brief must comply with C.A.R. 32.

(e) No Separate Brief. No separate brief may be appended to the petition, any cross-petition, the opposition brief, or the reply brief.

(f) Length of Petition, Cross-Petition, Opposition, and Reply Briefs.

(1) A petition, cross-petition, opposition brief, and combined cross-petition and opposition brief must contain no more than 3,800 words. A reply brief must contain no more than 3,150 words. Headings, footnotes, and quotations count toward the word limitation. The caption, table of contents, table of authorities, certificate of compliance, certificate of service, and signature block do not count toward the word limit.

(2) A self-represented party who does not have access to a word-processing system must file a typewritten or legibly handwritten petition, cross-petition, opposition brief, or combined cross-petition and opposition brief containing no more than 12 double-spaced and single-sided pages, or a reply brief of no more than 10 double-spaced and single sided pages.

(3) A party may file a motion to exceed the word limitation explaining the reasons why additional words are necessary. The motion must be filed with the document for which the party seeks to expand the word limit. Motions to exceed the word limitation will be granted rarely and only upon a showing of exceptional need to exceed the word limitation.

(g) Amicus Briefs. An amicus curiae may file a brief in support of or in opposition to a petition, opposition, or cross-petition only by leave of court or at the court's request. Leave to file an amicus brief must be sought in accordance with C.A.R. 29(b) and may not be filed until after a petition for writ of certiorari has been filed. Amicus briefs must comply with the content and form requirements of C.A.R. 29(c). Except by the court's permission, an amicus brief must contain no more than 3,150 words. An amicus brief must be filed within 7 days after the filing of the petition, opposition, or cross-petition that the amicus brief supports. An amicus curiae that does not support either party must file its brief within 7 days after the filing of the petition or cross-petition in which the issue to which the amicus brief is directed was first raised.

(h) Filing and Service. Filing and service must be in the same manner as provided in C.A.R. 25.

Issue held not to be fairly comprised within issues raised by petition for certiorari, as required by subsection (a)(3). Vigoda v. Denver Urban Renewal Auth., 646 P.2d 900 (Colo. 1982).

Applied in County of Clearwater v. Petrash, 198 Colo. 231, 598 P.2d 138 (1979).

Rule 54. Order Granting or Denying Certiorari

(a) Grant of Writ. Whenever a petition for writ of certiorari to review a decision of any court is granted, the clerk will issue an order to that effect, and will notify the lower court and counsel of record. The order will direct that the certified transcript of record on file be treated as though sent up in response to a formal writ. A formal writ will not issue unless specially directed.

(b) Denial of Writ. No mandate will issue upon the denial of a petition for writ of certiorari. Whenever the court denies a petition for writ of certiorari, the clerk will issue an order to that effect, and will notify the lower court and counsel of record. If, after granting the writ, the court later denies the same as having been improvidently granted or renders decision by opinion of the court on the merits of the writ, a petition for rehearing may be filed in accordance with the provisions of C.A.R. 40. No petition for rehearing may be filed after the issuance of an order denying a petition for writ of certiorari.

Review by certiorari constitutes appellate review under the Colorado constitution. Menefee v. City & County of Denver, 190 Colo. 163, 544 P.2d 382 (1976).

The denial of a petition for certiorari is ''appellate review'' as that term is used in the Colorado constitution. Bill Dreiling Motor Co. v. Court of Appeals, 171 Colo. 448, 468 P.2d 37 (1970).

Petition for certiorari is addressed to sound judicial discretion, and denial does not constitute a determination of the issues on the merits. Menefee v. City & County of Denver, 190 Colo. 163, 544 P.2d 382 (1976).

Denial of a petition for certiorari in a criminal case means nothing more than that the supreme court has declared that the case is not properly postured for further appellate review. Menefee v. City & County of Denver, 190 Colo. 163, 544 P.2d 382 (1976).

Rule 55. Stay Pending Review on Certiorari

Application to the supreme court for stay of execution of a decision of the court of appeals or the judgment of a district court on appeal from a county court will normally not be entertained until application for a stay has first been made to the court rendering the decision sought to be reviewed and that court has denied or failed to rule on a motion to stay the judgment on appeal. A motion for stay filed pursuant to this rule must comply with C.A.R. 8(a)(2).

Rule 56. Extension of Time

After appearance is made and a docket fee paid, the supreme court for good cause shown may upon motion extend the time prescribed by these rules for filing a petition for writ of certiorari or may permit the petition to be filed after the expiration of such time. Any initial motion for extension of time must include the date on which the court of appeals issued its opinion or the date on which the district court on appeal from the county court issued its order.

Rule 57. Briefs — In General

Briefs of the petitioner and the respondent on the merits must comply with the content and length requirements of C.A.R. 28 and the form and service requirements of C.A.R. 25 and 32. Briefs must be filed within the time prescribed in C.A.R. 31; except that in workers' compensation cases the petitioner must serve and file the petitioner's opening brief within 14 days and the respondent must file the respondent's brief within 7 days after service of the petitioner's brief, and no other brief will be permitted. Incorporation by reference of briefs previously filed in the lower court is prohibited.

COLORADO RULES OF EVIDENCE

The Rules of Evidence are the product of six years of work by a select committee of the Colorado Bar Association, chaired by Professor Francis W. Jamison. The Rules parallel the Federal Rules of Evidence and the Uniform Rules of Evidence promulgated by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws. The drafting committee submitted the Proposed Rules to the Colorado Supreme Court and assisted in the presentation and complete review of the Rules at three public hearings.

ARTICLE I
GENERAL PROVISIONS

Law reviews: For a discussion of recent Tenth Circuit decisions dealing with evidence, see 66 Den. U. L. Rev. 767 (1989); for articles, ''Criminal Procedure'' and ''Evidence'', which discuss recent Tenth Circuit decisions dealing with questions of evidence, see 67 Den. U. L. Rev. 701 and 739 (1990); for article, ''Demonstrative Evidence: Coming of Age'', see 22 Colo. Law. 1191 (1993); for article, ''The Other Rules of Evidence'', see 24 Colo. Law. 2169 (1995).

Rule 101. Scope

These rules govern proceedings in all courts in the State of Colorado, to the extent and with the exceptions stated in Rule 1101.

Rule 102. Purpose and Construction

These rules shall be construed to secure fairness in administration, elimination of unjustifiable expense and delay, and promotion of growth and development of the law of evidence to the end that the truth may be ascertained and proceedings justly determined.
(Federal Rule Identical.)

ANNOTATION

Applied in People v. Lowe, 660 P.2d 1261 (Colo. 1983); People v. P.R.G., 729 P.2d 380 (Colo. App. 1986).

Rule 103. Rulings on Evidence

(a) Effect of erroneous ruling. Error may not be predicated upon a ruling which admits or excludes evidence unless a substantial right of the party is affected, and

(1) Objection. In case the ruling is one admitting evidence, a timely objection or motion to strike appears of record, stating the specific ground of objection, if the specific ground was not apparent from the context; or

(2) Offer of proof. In case the ruling is one excluding evidence, the substance of the evidence was made known to the court by offer or was apparent from the context within which questions were asked.

Once the court makes a definitive ruling on the record admitting or excluding evidence, either at or before trial, a party need not renew an objection or offer of proof to preserve a claim of error for appeal.

(b) Record of offer and ruling. The court may add any other or further statement which shows the character of evidence, the form in which it was offered, the objection made, and the ruling thereon. It may direct the making of an offer in question and answer form.

(c) Hearing of jury. In jury cases, proceedings shall be conducted, to the extent practicable, so as to prevent inadmissible evidence from being suggested to the jury by any means, such as making statements or offers of proof or asking questions in the hearing of the jury.

(d) Plain error. Nothing in this rule precludes taking notice of plain errors affecting substantial rights although they were not brought to the attention of the court.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, ''Preserving Issues for Appeal'' discussing the requirement of an offer of proof, see 20 Colo. Law. 879 (1991). For article, ''Preservation of Error Through the Use of Motions In Limine'', see 24 Colo. Law. 781 (1995). For article, ''Offers of Proof'', see 31 Colo. Law. 85 (Jan. 2002). Law. 29 (June 2013).

Failure to object in the trial court on the grounds asserted on appeal is deemed to be a waiver of the objection. People v. Watson, 668 P.2d 965 (Colo. App. 1983); People v. Girtman, 695 P.2d 759 (Colo. App. 1984); People v. Browning, 809 P.2d 1086 (Colo. App. 1990); People v. Renfro, 117 P.3d 43 (Colo. App. 2004).

But a timely specific objection at trial preserves an evidentiary issue on appeal. Hancock v. State, 758 P.2d 1372 (Colo. 1988); Tran v. Hilburn, 948 P.2d 52 (Colo. App. 1997).

Ruling admitting evidence overturned only where prejudicial effect outweighs probative value. Only where the prejudicial effect of an evidentiary item outweighs its probative value will the trial court's evidentiary ruling admitting evidence be overturned as an abuse of discretion. People v. Abbott, 638 P.2d 781 (Colo. 1981).

A ruling that erroneously admits evidence requires reversal only when it affects a substantial right of the party against whom the ruling is made. People v. Gilmore, 97 P.3d 123 (Colo. App. 2003).

In order to preserve for review an objection to the exclusion of evidence, a proper offer of proof must be made and must demonstrate that evidence is admissible as well as relevant to the issues in the case. Melton by and through Melton v. Larrabee, 832 P.2d 1069 (Colo. App. 1992); Vu v. Fouts, 924 P.2d 1129 (Colo. App. 1996).

Motion in limine may constitute "timely objection" for purposes of this rule if it contains specific objections to the admission of specific items of anticipated evidence. Uptain v. Huntington Lab, Inc., 723 P.2d 1322 (Colo. 1986).

An offer of proof to preserve for review an objection to the exclusion of evidence must demonstrate that evidence is admissible as well as relevant to the issues in the case. Melton v. Larrabee, 832 P.2d 1069 (Colo. App. 1992).

Defendant could not predicate error on trial court's denial of admission of hearsay evidence; since defendant made no offer of proof, it was not apparent from the context what the substance of the testimony would have been, and defense counsel made no objection to the denial. People v. Hoover, 165 P.3d 784 (Colo. App. 2006).

Subsection (a)(2) is applied in Kedar v. Pub. Serv. Co., 709 P.2d 15 (Colo. App. 1985); Silva v. Wilcox, 223 P.3d 127 (Colo. App. 2009).

Evidentiary issues not brought to the attention of the trial court can only be considered under plain error standard. People v. Koon, 724 P.2d 1367 (Colo. App. 1986).

Generally, an offer of proof should not be refused, since the purpose of such offer is to inform the trial court of what counsel expects to prove by the excluded evidence and to ensure that an appellate court will be able to evaluate the scope and effect of the ruling to determine whether the exclusion constituted reversible error. People v. Gillis, 883 P.2d 554 (Colo. App. 1994).

Reversible error where trial court admitted summaries of hospital records into evidence where original records were not made available to defendant prior to trial. Summary evidence constituted majority of prosecution's case and its admission without proper foundation was prejudicial error. It deprived defendant of an accurate opportunity to challenge the accuracy of the summaries and to cross-examine the witness who presented the evidence. People v. McDonald, 15 P.3d 788 (Colo. App. 2000).

Doctors' diagnoses, recited and summarized in administrative law judge decision, concerned the nature and extent of plaintiff's injuries, which were central issues in the case. Therefore their admission could not be considered harmless error. Leiting v. Mutha, 58 P.3d 1049 (Colo. App. 2002).

No reversible error where trial court refused to allow defendant to present an offer of proof as to matters that were clearly not relevant, the nature of the evidence to be elicited was clearly shown by the record, and there was overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt. People v. Gillis, 883 P.2d 554 (Colo. App. 1994).

No reversible error, where two letters were admitted into evidence over objection, but all substantive statements contained in letters had already been established at trial by properly admitted evidence. Bunnett v. Smallwood, 768 P.2d 736 (Colo. App. 1988), rev'd on other grounds, 793 P.2d 157 (Colo. 1990).

No reversible error where trial court refused to admit evidence on alleged negligent construction where no causal link between that construction and the creation of a fire hazard was established. Melton by and through Melton v. Larrabee, 832 P.2d 1069 (Colo. App. 1992).

No reversible error where administrative hearing officer did not allow certain opinion testimony at teacher's disciplinary hearing where record reflects that, despite ruling, petitioner was permitted to present a substantial amount of character evidence and hearing officer concluded that petitioner was a person of good character. Knowles v. Bd. of Educ., 857 P.2d 553 (Colo. App. 1993).

Appellate review of trial court's determination pursuant to § 13-25-129 regarding admissibility of child's hearsay statement should be based upon record made at in-limine hearing and may go beyond such record only if issue of harmless error or plain error is raised. People v. Bowers, 801 P.2d 511 (Colo. 1990).

Reversal of a verdict on the grounds that the prevailing party violated an in limine evidentiary order is warranted only where the alleged violation of such order is clear. Where counsel stated in opening arguments that certain evidence would be excluded but did not reveal the details of the excluded evidence, there was no clear violation of the in limine order excluding such evidence. Van Schaack v. Van Schaack Holdings, Ltd., 856 P.2d 15 (Colo. App. 1992).

Both the question whether claims should be bifurcated for trial and the issue whether otherwise competent evidence is relevant to the claim or defense presented are matters that rest within a trial court's sound discretion. A trial court's refusal to admit evidence will constitute grounds for reversal only if such refusal affects one of the party's substantial rights. Arnold v. Colo. State Hosp., 910 P.2d 104 (Colo. App. 1995).

Applied in Conrad v. City & County of Denver, 656 P.2d 662 (Colo. 1982); People v. Shannon, 683 P.2d 792 (Colo. 1984); People v. Viduya, 703 P.2d 1281 (Colo. 1985); People v. Wafai, 713 P.2d 1354 (Colo. App. 1985), aff'd, 750 P.2d 37 (Colo. 1988); People v. Lucero, 724 P.2d 1374 (Colo. App. 1986); Banek v. Thomas, 733 P.2d 1171 (Colo. 1986); People v. Roybal, 775 P.2d 67 (Colo. App. 1989); Pyles-Knutzen v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 781 P.2d 164 (Colo. App. 1989), cert. denied, 785 P.2d 917 (Colo. 1989); People v. Bowers, 801 P.2d 511 (Colo. 1990); Cherry Creek Sch. Dist. v. Voelker, 859 P.2d 805 (Colo. 1993); People v. Seacrist, 874 P.2d 438 (Colo. App. 1993); Itin v. Bertrand T. Ungar, P.C., 17 P.3d 129 (Colo. 2000).

Rule 104. Preliminary Questions

(a) Questions of admissibility generally. Preliminary questions concerning the qualification of a person to be a witness, the existence of a privilege, or the admissibility of evidence shall be determined by the court, subject to the provisions of subdivisions (b). In making its determination it is not bound by the rules of evidence except those with respect to privileges.

(b) Relevancy conditioned on fact. When the relevancy of evidence depends upon the fulfillment of a condition of fact, the court shall admit it upon, or subject to, the introduction of evidence sufficient to support a finding of the fulfillment of the condition.

(c) Hearing of jury. Hearings on the admissibility of confessions shall in all cases be conducted out of the hearing of the jury. Hearings on other preliminary matters shall be so conducted when the interests of justice require or, when an accused is a witness, if he so requests.

(d) Testimony by accused. The accused does not, by testifying upon a preliminary matter, subject himself to cross-examination as to other issues in the case.

(e) Weight and credibility. This rule does not limit the right of a party to introduce before the jury evidence relevant to weight or credibility.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, ''Hearsay in Criminal Cases Under the Colorado Rules of Evidence: An Overview'', see 50 U. Colo. L. Rev. 277 (1979). For comment, ''Reverse 404(b) Evidence: Exploring Standards When Defendants Want to Introduce Other Bad Acts of Third Parties'', see 79 U. Colo. L. Rev. 587 (2008).

The prosecution should be required to establish the foundational requirements for the admission of a co-conspirator's statement prior to any offer of the statement into evidence before the jury. People v. Montoya, 753 P.2d 729 (Colo. 1988).

A court's ruling on the admissibility of a co-conspirator's statement should normally be made during the presentation of the prosecution's case in chief, before the challenged statement is actually heard by the jury. People v. Montoya, 753 P.2d 729 (Colo. 1988).

There is no per se rule against conducting a child competency hearing in front of the jury, but the better practice is to excuse the jury. The defendant was not prejudiced by holding the hearing in front of the jury. People v. Wittrein, 221 P.3d 1076 (Colo. 2009).

Judge, not jury, determines admissibility of evidence. The trial judge, rather than a jury, is the proper judicial functionary to determine the admissibility of evidence. People v. Sanchez, 180 Colo. 119, 503 P.2d 619 (1972).

The preponderance of evidence standard is the traditional standard applicable to the resolution of most preliminary questions of admissibility. People v. Montoya, 753 P.2d 729 (Colo. 1988); People v. Garner, 806 P.2d 366 (Colo. 1991); People v. Groves, 854 P.2d 1310 (Colo. App. 1992).

Whether inculpatory statements contained in a police officer's written statement were made and were made voluntarily is a preliminary matter to be decided by the judge under section (a). When evidence indicates that defendant signed a blank statement that was later filled in by the police officer, the court must first determine whether the defendant made the statements. People v. Gay, 24 P.3d 624 (Colo. App. 2000).

Even if the evidence is ruled inadmissible, the court has no authority to dismiss criminal charges solely upon the basis of its evidentiary ruling. People v. Montoya, 753 P.2d 729 (Colo. 1988).

The trial court determines the qualification of witnesses and has discretion to admit expert testimony. Eggert v. Mosler Safe Co., 730 P.2d 895 (Colo. App. 1986); People v. Williams, 790 P.2d 796 (Colo. 1990).

Credibility of witnesses is for jury to determine, which may accept or reject all or part of a witness's testimony. People v. Lewis, 180 Colo. 423, 506 P.2d 125 (1973); People v. Garner, 187 Colo. 294, 530 P.2d 496 (1975).

It is the function of a jury to assess the credibility of witnesses. People v. Saavedra, 184 Colo. 90, 518 P.2d 283 (1974).

The credibility of the witnesses is a matter for the jury's determination. People v. Hodge, 186 Colo. 189, 526 P.2d 309 (1974); Eggert v. Mosler Safe Co., 730 P.2d 895 (Colo. App. 1986).

It is axiomatic that the jury is the sole judge of the credibility of the witnesses. People v. Barker, 189 Colo. 148, 538 P.2d 109 (1975).

Weight to be given witnesses' testimony a matter for the jury's determination. Where a prima facie case is properly made, the jury is the trier of fact and the judge of the credibility of the witnesses and of the weight to be given their testimony. People v. Prante, 177 Colo. 243, 493 P.2d 1083 (1972); Duncan v. People, 178 Colo. 314, 497 P.2d 1029 (1972).

Where there is no error in the court's initial ruling on the qualifications of a witness, his credibility and the weight to be given to his testimony is a jury question. McCune v. People, 179 Colo. 262, 499 P.2d 1184 (1972).

The credibility of the witnesses and the weight to be given to their testimony is a matter for the jury's determination. Salas v. People, 181 Colo. 321, 509 P.2d 586 (1973); People v. O'Donnell, 184 Colo. 434, 521 P.2d 771 (1974); People v. Dunham, 2016 COA 73, 381 P.3d 415.

It was within the province of the trial court to weigh the testimony of witnesses, including expert witnesses, in determining the factual question of whether the defendant was or was not hypnotized. People v. Romero, 745 P.2d 1003 (Colo. 1987), cert. denied, 485 U.S. 990, 108 S. Ct. 1296, 99 L. Ed. 2d 506 (1988).

Where evidence is conflicting, it is function of the jury to determine truth. Taylor v. People, 176 Colo. 316, 490 P.2d 292 (1971).

It is the function of a jury to resolve conflicts in the evidence. People v. Saavedra, 184 Colo. 90, 518 P.2d 283 (1974).

It is the jury's function to weigh disputed evidence and to resolve the conflicts. People v. Jiminez, 187 Colo. 97, 528 P.2d 913 (1974).

Jury determines whether irreconcilable testimony requires corroboration. Where two versions are clearly irreconcilable, it is for the jury, not the judge, to determine whether the testimony of a witness requires corroboration. Davis v. People, 176 Colo. 378, 490 P.2d 948 (1971).

Error for court to strike blatantly inconsistent testimony. Where testimony is so blatantly inconsistent as to be unworthy of belief, it would be error for the trial court to strike the testimony on the ground that there are inconsistencies in the testimony, because the weight to be given the testimony, even though inconsistent, is for the jury. People v. Moreno, 181 Colo. 106, 507 P.2d 857 (1973).

Policy behind section (b) is to allow some flexibility in the order of proof, in order to avoid undue delay and confusion. People v. Lyle, 200 Colo. 236, 613 P.2d 896 (1980).

In determining admissibility of other-crime evidence, trial court is required to consider all evidence in the case pursuant to subsection (a) of this rule. People v. Garner, 806 P.2d 366 (Colo. 1991); People v. Groves, 845 P.2d 1310 (Colo. App. 1992).

Trial court erred in not admitting, as conditionally relevant evidence pursuant to section (b) of this rule, testimony of a wife as to admissions made by the wife's spouse about the fraudulent nature of his personal injury claim against his employer even though there was an issue about whether the admission was actually made by the spouse or based on the wife's dream. The proper analysis by the court in determining the admissibility of the wife's testimony should have been whether the jury could reasonably find by a preponderance of the evidence that the conditional fact, i.e. that the spouse made such statement, has been established. Burlington N. R. Co. v. Hood, 802 P.2d 458 (Colo. 1990).

C.R.E. 602, requiring personal knowledge of a witness, is a specialized application of section (b) of this rule regarding conditionally relevant evidence. In a personal injury case by a husband against his employer, the question of whether the husband's spouse had personal knowledge as to the husband's admissions regarding the fraudulent nature of his claim was for the jury to determine in accordance with section (b) this rule. Burlington N. R. Co. v. Hood, 802 P.2d 458 (Colo. 1990).

Although the court precludes the admission of character evidence for the purpose of proving an act in conformance with such character, similar crime evidence is admissible for purposes of proving motive, opportunity, absence of mistake, or accident. People v. Groves, 854 P.2d 1310 (Colo. App. 1992).

Prior to admission of the evidence permitted by section (b) of this rule, the court must be satisfied by a preponderance of the evidence that: (1) The evidence relates to a material fact; (2) the evidence is logically relevant and tends to make the existence of the material fact more or less probable than it would be without the evidence; (3) its logical relevance is independent of the prohibited inference that the defendant was a bad character; and (4) its probative value outweighs the danger of unfair prejudice. People v. Spoto, 795 P.2d 1314 (Colo. 1990); People v. Garner, 806 P.2d 366 (Colo. 1991); People v. Groves, 854 P.2d 1310 (Colo. App. 1992); People v. Duncan, 33 P.3d 1180 (Colo. App. 2001).

Court's refusal to permit defendant to call prosecutor as witness not abuse of discretion where expected testimony related only to alleged discovery violations and not defendant's guilt or innocence. People v. Perryman, 859 P.2d 263 (Colo. App. 1993).

In absence of defendant's testimony the trial court must determine if there was a Miranda violation by weighing the credibility of witnesses. It is not a constitutional requirement that inconsistencies be resolved in the defendant's favor. People v. Turtura, 921 P.2d 40 (Colo. 1996).

Defendant's incriminating statements were obtained in violation of his Miranda rights, and trial court's order to suppress the statements was appropriate. A reasonable person in defendant's circumstances would have felt deprived of his or her freedom of action in a manner similar to a formal arrest. Therefore, defendant was in custody and subject to interrogation without being advised of his Miranda rights. People v. Holt, 233 P.3d 1194 (Colo. 2010).

Testing performed by Colorado bureau of investigation on listening device found in bar restroom did not alter the "character" of device and render it inadmissible in criminal eavesdropping prosecution but was simply a circumstance for jury to consider in weighing the evidence. People v. Lesslie, 939 P.2d 443 (Colo. App. 1996).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding testimony of defendant's sister because there were not sufficient guarantees of trustworthiness. People v. Preciado-Flores, 66 P.3d 155 (Colo. App. 2002).

Applied in Hendershott v. People, 653 P.2d 385 (Colo. 1982); People v. Taylor, 804 P.2d 196 (Colo. App. 1990).

Rule 105. Limited Admissibility

When evidence which is admissible as to one party or for one purpose but not admissible as to another party or for another purpose is admitted, the court, upon request, shall restrict the evidence to its proper scope and instruct the jury accordingly.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

ANNOTATION

Evidence properly admissible for one purpose does not become inadmissible because it would be inadmissible if offered only for another purpose. Spencer v. People, 163 Colo. 182, 429 P.2d 266 (1967); Florey v. District Court, 713 P.2d 840 (Colo. 1985).

Completeness rule. Where the admissible portion of a statement would be unfair or misleading without including the entire statement, the adverse party may introduce the other part of the statement. People v. Melillo, 976 P.2d 353 (Colo. App. 1998).

But both the rule of completeness and the concept of ''opening the door'' are subject to the considerations of relevance and prejudice required under C.R.E. 401 and C.R.E. 403. People v. Melillo, 25 P.3d 769 (Colo. 2001).

Judge should repeat limited-purpose instruction in written instructions in order to safeguard against potential misuse of other-crime evidence by the jury. People v. Garner, 806 P.2d 366 (Colo. 1991).

Trial court's failure to provide guidance to the jury as to the purpose of the evidence at the time it came in or at the close of the trial was abuse of discretion. People v. Welsh, 80 P.3d 296 (Colo. 2003).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding that the probative value of the prosecution's psychiatrist's opinion, based in part on defendant's criminal history, was not substantially outweighed by the dangers of unfair prejudice. Defendant's criminal record was central to psychiatrist's antisocial personality disorder diagnosis. Furthermore, the parties had agreed that the court would instruct the jury to consider this evidence only as it related to defendant's insanity defense. Finally there were no particular facts to diminish the probative value of the evidence. People v. Gonzales-Quevedo, 203 P.3d 609 (Colo. App. 2008).

Applied in O'Neal v. Reliance Mortg. Corp., 721 P.2d 1230 (Colo. App. 1986).

Rule 106. Remainder of or Related Writings or Recorded Statements

When a writing or recorded statement or part thereof is introduced by a party, an adverse party may require him at that time to introduce any other part or any other writing or recorded statement which ought in fairness to be considered contemporaneously with it.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For note, ''Curative Admissibility: Fighting Fire With Fire'', see 23 Colo. Law. 2321 (1994).

The purpose of this rule is to avoid creating a misleading impression by taking evidence out of context or otherwise creating a distorted picture by the selective introduction of evidence. People v. Medina, 72 P.3d 405 (Colo. App. 2003); People v. Knight, 167 P.3d 141 (Colo. App. 2006).

Completeness rule. Where the admissible portion of a statement would be unfair or misleading without including the entire statement, the adverse party may introduce the other part of the statement. People v. Melillo, 976 P.2d 353 (Colo. App. 1998); People v. Medina, 72 P.3d 405 (Colo. App. 2003).

But both the rule of completeness and the concept of ''opening the door'' are subject to the considerations of relevance and prejudice required under C.R.E. 401 and C.R.E. 403. People v. Melillo, 25 P.3d 769 (Colo. 2001).

Rule of completeness is substantially applicable to oral testimony as well as writings and recorded statements. People v. Short, 2018 COA 47, 425 P.3d 1208.

Evidence offered under the rule of completeness is subject to the requirements of CRE 401 and 403. The court did not err in refusing to admit the evidence under the rule of completeness when the remainder of the recording contained evidence improper for the jury to consider. People v. Wilson, 2012 COA 163M, 411 P.3d 11, rev'd on other grounds, 2015 CO 54M, 351 P.3d 1126.

Phone calls recorded when defendant was alone in an interview room during a police interview are not part of the interview, and admitting them as hearsay evidence is not necessary to provide a complete and accurate picture of the admitted police interview. People v. Manyik, 2016 COA 42, 383 P.3d 77.

Defendant's otherwise inadmissible self-serving hearsay is admissible under the rule of completeness to qualify, explain, or place into context the evidence proffered by the prosecution. People v. Short, 2018 COA 47, 425 P.3d 1208 (holding contrary to People v. Davis, 218 P.3d 718 (Colo. App. 2008)).

Defendant's exculpatory statement to the police, admissible under the rule of completeness, is not subject to impeachment. If the prosecution wants to admit part of a statement, it ought to, in fairness, ''pay the costs'' of admitting it in its relevant entirety. People v. Short, 2018 COA 47, 425 P.3d 1208.

Applied in People v. Wilson, 841 P.2d 337 (Colo. App. 1992); People in Interest of A.W., 982 P.2d 842 (Colo. 1999); People v. Knight, 167 P.3d 141 (Colo. App. 2006); People v. Murray, 2018 COA 102, __ P.3d __.

ARTICLE II
JUDICIAL NOTICE

Rule 201. Judicial Notice of Adjudicative Facts

(a) Scope of rule. This rule governs only judicial notice of adjudicative facts.

(b) Kinds of facts. A judicially noticed fact must be one not subject to reasonable dispute in that it is either (1) generally known within the territorial jurisdiction of the trial court or (2) capable of accurate and ready determination by resort to sources whose accuracy cannot reasonably be questioned.

(c) When discretionary. A court may take judicial notice, whether requested or not.

(d) When mandatory. A court shall take judicial notice if requested by a party and supplied with the necessary information.

(e) Opportunity to be heard. A party is entitled upon timely request to an opportunity to be heard as to the propriety of taking judicial notice and the tenor of the matter noticed. In the absence of prior notification, the request may be made after judicial notice has been taken.

(f) Time of taking notice. Judicial notice may be taken at any stage of the proceeding.

(g) Instructing jury. In a civil action or proceeding, the court shall instruct the jury to accept as conclusive any fact judicially noticed. In a criminal case, the court shall instruct the jury that it may, but is not required to, accept as conclusive any fact judicially noticed.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

COMMITTEE COMMENT

This rule is identical to Rule 201 F.R.E. and generally codifies prior Colorado case law. See Nicholls v. Barrick, 27 Colo. 432, 62 P. 202 (1900) [courts take judicial notice of those matters which may be designated as ''common knowledge'']; Finnerty v. Cook, 118 Colo. 310, 195 P.2d 973 (1948) [judicial notice of facts which are ''universally known'']; Israel v. Wood, 93 Colo. 500, 27 P.2d 1024 (1933) [courts take judicial notice of matters of common knowledge in the community where they sit]; Bieser v. Stoddard, 73 Colo. 554, 216 P. 707 (1923) [well recognized natural and physical laws are judicially known and may not be put in issue by denial of their inevitable effect]; Winterberg v. Thomas, 126 Colo. 60, 246 P.2d 1058 (1952) [appellate courts will not hesitate to take judicial notice of the unquestioned laws of mathematics]. However, the mandatory nature of subsection (d) is a departure from existing practice.

In this rule judicial notice is limited to adjunctive facts which are those facts that can be readily determined by resort to accurate sources, such as a calendar date, Sierra Mining Company v. Lucero, 118 Colo. 180, 194 P.2d 302 (1948); term of public office, People, ex rel. Flanders v. Neary, 113 Colo. 12, 154 P.2d 48 (1944); or statistical charts, Good v. A.B. Chance Co., 39 Colo. App. 70, 565 P.2d 217 (1977).

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For note, ''Rule 201: The Use of Hearsay In Establishing Facts Sufficient for Judicial Notice'', see 22 Colo. Law. 2535 (1993). For article, ''The Google Knows Many Things: Judicial Notice in the Internet Era'', see 39 Colo. Law. 19 (Nov. 2010).

This rule is a codification of existing case law. Prestige Homes, Inc. v. Legouffe, 658 P.2d 850 (Colo. 1983).

This rule does not broaden the scope of judicial notice. Larsen v. Archdiocese of Denver, 631 P.2d 1163 (Colo. App. 1981).

This rule has traditionally been used cautiously in keeping with its purpose to bypass the usual fact-finding process only when the facts are of such common knowledge that they cannot reasonably be disputed. Prestige Homes, Inc. v. Legouffe, 658 P.2d 850 (Colo. 1983).

The court may take judicial notice of facts not subject to reasonable dispute because they are capable of accurate and ready determination by resort to resources whose accuracy cannot reasonably be questioned. A court may take judicial notice of the contents of court records in a related proceeding. People v. Sa'ra, 117 P.3d 51 (Colo. App. 2004).

The occurrence of legal proceedings or other court actions are proper facts for judicial notice. People v. Sena, 2016 COA 161, 395 P.3d 1148.

Court may take notice without hearing. Under sections (c) and (f), the court may take judicial notice while the case is under advisement without first giving the parties an opportunity to be heard. People ex rel. Danielson v. Amity Mut. Irrigation Co., 668 P.2d 1368 (Colo. 1983).

Scientific propositions accepted as valid in the appropriate scientific community may be judicially noticed by an appellate court, acting on its own initiative. Legouffe v. Prestige Homes, Inc., 634 P.2d 1010 (Colo. App. 1981), rev'd on other grounds, 658 P.2d 850 (Colo. 1983).

Classification of defendant's past offense is a question of law, and the court is justified in taking judicial notice when the facts upon which the legal conclusion is based are unchallenged. Massey v. People, 649 P.2d 1070 (Colo. 1982).

Conditions presenting risk not an adjudicative fact. Whether certain conditions in a negligence action present more than an ordinary risk of harm depends upon the circumstances of each case, and is not an adjudicative fact. Larsen v. Archdiocese of Denver, 631 P.2d 1163 (Colo. App. 1981).

Meaning of terms within context of constitution not subject to notice. In making its final legal conclusion about the meaning of terms within the context of the constitution, the court should be free to accept or reject several relevant "legislative facts", such as the dictionary definitions of these terms, the use of these words in other cases, and the probable intent of the drafters of the constitution as indicated by any historical facts. These items, therefore, are not subject to the judicial notice rule. Conrad v. City & County of Denver, 656 P.2d 662 (Colo. 1982).

For a court to be required to take judicial notice under this rule, it must, of necessity, be supplied with specific information that is the subject of the request. Otherwise, it is discretionary whether a court takes judicial notice. Durbin v. Bonanza Corp., 716 P.2d 1124 (Colo. App. 1986); Martinez v. Reg'l Transp. Dist., 832 P.2d 1060 (Colo. App. 1992).

Administrative law judge was not required to take judicial notice of the fact that doctor almost always testified for the defendant, based on a summary of court decisions in which same doctor had been a witness, even if court records were subject to judicial notice, unless the tribunal has been supplied with the specific facts, records, or documents that are the subject of the request. Martinez v. Reg'l Transp. Dist., 832 P.2d 1060 (Colo. App. 1992).

Rules published in the code of Colorado regulations are a fit subject for judicial notice. Westfall v. Town of Hugo, 851 P.2d 299 (Colo. App. 1993).

Pleadings, minutes, testimony, and verdict of a case in which defendant's friend was tried and acquitted is not a matter subject to judicial notice pursuant to this rule as it would require the trial court to second guess the fact finder in the other case as to its reasons for finding the person not guilty. People v. Phillips, 732 P.2d 1226 (Colo. App. 1986).

Judicial notice of municipal court order was proper. The fact that the court issuing the order was a municipal court was a matter of general knowledge within the district court's jurisdiction and it was capable of accurate confirmation through sources known to the district court. People v. Merklin, 80 P.3d 921 (Colo. App. 2003).

Rule regarding fact judicially noticed applies only to adjudicative facts and therefore the classification of a criminal defendant's offense which is a question of law, did not require instruction pursuant to this rule. People v. Hampton, 857 P.2d 441 (Colo. App. 1992), aff'd, 876 P.2d 1236 (Colo. 1994).

The resolution of a factual matter at issue in a prior judicial proceeding does not become an indisputable fact within the meaning of this rule merely as a result of being reflected in a court record, unlike the occurrence of the legal proceeding or other court action itself. The trial court erred in taking judicial notice that defendant failed to appear in court as required by a condition of his bond. Doyle v. People, 2015 CO 10, 343 P.3d 961.

Because the jury was instructed that the judicially noticed fact was not subject to reasonable dispute and had already been accepted as true by the court, the error was not harmless, notwithstanding the proper admission into evidence of a court record reflecting the court's earlier finding to that effect. Doyle v. People, 2015 CO 10, 343 P.3d 961.

Trial court erred in taking judicial notice of presentence report prepared by the probation department in determining whether defendant was previously convicted of a felony. People v. Cooper, 104 P.3d 307 (Colo. App. 2004).

The court did not err by taking judicial notice of defendant's probation status after determining the status from the state computer system. Since § 13-1-119 and Crim. P. 55 expressly approve of records kept and maintained in a state computer system, the court may take judicial notice of the court records contained in the system. People v. Linares-Guzman, 195 P.3d 1130 (Colo. App. 2008).

Magistrate in kinship adoption proceeding erred in taking judicial notice of guardian ad litem's report in mother's dissolution proceeding because mother did not have the opportunity to cross-examine guardian ad litem in the kinship proceeding. A court may not take judicial notice of facts on the issue the parties are litigating. However, a court may take judicial notice of its own records and adopt factual findings from a previous case involving the same parties and the same issues. In re C.A.B.L., 221 P.3d 433 (Colo. App. 2009).

Court did not err in not taking judicial notice of the dismissal of a previous sexual assault case when the defendant failed to comply with paragraph (d) of this rule and there was uncontroverted testimony that the case was dismissed. People v. Marsh, 396 P.3d 1 (Colo. App. 2011), aff'd, 2017 CO 10M, 389 P.3d 100.

A court can take judicial notice of a court's register of actions for procedural effect. People in Interest of I.S., 2017 COA 155, 415 P.3d 869.

Applied in Lovato v. Johnson, 617 P.2d 1203 (Colo. 1980); In re House Bill 91S-1005, 814 P.2d 875 (Colo. 1991).

ARTICLE III
PRESUMPTIONS IN CIVIL ACTIONS AND PROCEEDINGS

Rule 301. Presumptions in General in Civil Actions and Proceedings

In all civil actions and proceedings not otherwise provided for by statute or by these rules, a presumption imposes upon the party against whom it is directed the burden of going forward with evidence to rebut or meet the presumption, but does not shift to such party the burden of proof in the sense of the risk of non-persuasion, which remains throughout the trial upon the party on whom it was originally cast.

COMMITTEE COMMENT

This rule is essentially identical to the Federal rule, thus achieving a desirable degree of uniformity and simplicity. The rule gives all of the proper traditional benefits of a presumption, but places no new burdens upon the opposing party. See House Report, p.7; Senate Report, p. 9; Joint Explanatory Statement of the Committee of Conference; also 1 Jones, Evidence § 3.6 (6th ed.); McCormick, Evidence, § 354 (2nd ed. 1972). Contra, see Weiss v. Axler, 137 Colo. 544, 328 P.2d 88 (1958).

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For note, "Res Ipsa Loquitur — The Effect of Comparative Negligence", see 53 U. Colo. L. Rev. 777 (1982). For article, "Rule 301: Overcoming Presumptions", see 27 Colo. Law. 55 (Jan. 1998).

Doctrine of res ipsa loquitur no longer creates a presumption of negligence which shifts the burden of disproving the presumed fact of negligence to the opponent of the presumption. The doctrine only shifts the burden of going forward with evidence to rebut the presumed fact of negligence. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Pub. Serv. Co., 676 P.2d 25 (Colo. App. 1983).

If a plaintiff makes a prima facie showing of negligence under the res ipsa loquitur doctrine, only the burden of production, and not the burden of proof, shifts to the defendant. If the defendant then satisfies the burden of production, there is no longer a presumption of negligence; however, the jury may consider an inference of negligence alongside the other evidence. Chapman v. Harner, 2014 CO 78, 339 P.3d 519 (overruling Weiss v. Axler, 328 P.2d 88 (1958), and its progeny)).

There is a presumption that adherence to the applicable standard of care adopted by a profession constitutes due care for those practicing that profession. The presumption, however, is a rebuttable one, and the burden in on the one challenging the standard of care to rebut the presumption by competent evidence. United Blood Servs. v. Quintana, 827 P.2d 509 (Colo. 1992).

Plaintiff was not required to bear the burden of going forward with evidence to rebut the presumed fact that compliance with industry standards establishes "accepted good engineering practices" for purposes of tort liability since the fact that a defendant utility company complied with such practices is not dispositive of whether the utility was negligent in the activities which resulted in decedent's electrocution and since it is almost impossible for a plaintiff to present evidence to establish that compliance with industry standards was not, under the facts of a particular case, ''accepted good engineering practice,'' that would rebut that presumption. Yampa Valley Elec. v. Telecky, 862 P.2d 252 (Colo. 1993).

Trial court committed reversible error in giving jury instruction, because there was no statutory or common law justification to support the rebuttable presumption contained in the instruction. Yampa Valley Elec. v. Telecky, 862 P.2d 252 (Colo. 1993).

Applied in Montgomery Elevator Co. v. Gordon, 619 P.2d 66 (Colo. 1980); 1st Charter Lease Co. v. McAL, Inc., 679 P.2d 114 (Colo. App. 1984); People v. Gallegos, 692 P.2d 1074 (Colo. 1984).

RELEVANCY AND ITS LIMITS

Law reviews: For article, ''Stretching Relevancy'', see 22 Colo. Law. 1177 (1993).

Rule 401. Definition of "Relevant Evidence"

''Relevant evidence'' means evidence having any tendency to make the existence of any fact that is of consequence to the determination of the action more probable or less probable than it would be without the evidence.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

There is no qualitative difference between direct and circumstantial evidence. People in Interest of M.S.H., 656 P.2d 1294 (Colo. 1983).

Test for determining relevancy of real evidence is that such evidence must only be connected in some manner with either the perpetrator, the victim, or the crime. People in Interest of R.G., 630 P.2d 89 (Colo. App. 1981); People v. Carlson, 677 P.2d 390 (Colo. App. 1983).

As a general rule, facts which logically tend to prove or disprove the fact in issue or which afford a reasonable inference or shed light upon the matter contested are relevant. However, facts collateral to or bearing so remotely upon the issue that they afford only conjectural inference should not be admitted in evidence. People v. Botham, 629 P.2d 589 (Colo. 1981); People v. More, 668 P.2d 968 (Colo. App. 1983).

If evidence is relevant and material, its admission is not error merely because the evidence is cumulative. People v. Salas, 902 P.2d 398 (Colo. App. 1994).

An objection to the relevance of evidence does not include an objection that the evidence, if admissible, is unduly prejudicial under C.R.E. 403 because of the substantial difference in analysis trial courts perform under C.R.E. 403 and this rule. Am. Family Mut. Ins. Co. v. DeWitt, 216 P.3d 60 (Colo. App. 2008), aff'd, 218 P.3d 318 (Colo. 2009).

Nexus required for relevancy. Without a nexus between the deceased's prior violent acts and the actions of the defendant, the occurrence of these prior violent acts would be of no consequence in the determination of the guilt or innocence of the defendant. People v. Lyle, 200 Colo. 236, 613 P.2d 896 (Colo. 1980).

Establishment of fact through use of negative allowed. Evidence is not irrelevant simply because it tends to establish a fact through the use of a negative. People v. Bueno, 626 P.2d 1167 (Colo. App. 1981).

When chain of custody necessary. Only where no single witness can establish the connection of evidence with the perpetrator, victim, or crime is an unbroken chain of custody of a specific item of evidence necessary in order to demonstrate relevancy. People in Interest of R.G., 630 P.2d 89 (Colo. App. 1981).

Issues concerning alleged deficiencies in the chain of custody go to the weight rather than the admissibility of evidence. People v. Gomez, 632 P.2d 586 (Colo. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 943, 102 S. Ct. 1439, 71 L. Ed. 2d 655 (1982); People v. Moltrer, 893 P.2d 1331 (Colo. App. 1994).

Relevance of silence upon arrest. Evidence of a defendant's failure to make a statement to the arresting officers may be so ambiguous and lacking in probative value as to be inadmissible as substantive evidence. People v. Quintana, 665 P.2d 605 (Colo. 1983).

Silence generally is thought to lack probative value on the question of whether a person has expressed tacit agreement or disagreement with contemporaneous statements of others. People v. Quintana, 665 P.2d 605 (Colo. 1983).

Silence has probative value and may be admissible. People v. Quintana, 665 P.2d 605 (Colo. 1983).

Defendant's non-responsiveness at crime scene and at hospital not properly admitted since defendant's defense of dissociative state did not rely on defendant's state of mind at hospital or crime scene and was therefore irrelevant to whether defendant was sane at the moment she shot the victim, and danger of unfair prejudice and likelihood of misleading the jury far outweighed any possible probative value that testimony regarding the defendant's silence might have had. People v. Welsh, 80 P.3d 296 (Colo. 2003).

Polygraph evidence inadmissible. Evidence of polygraph test results and testimony of polygraph examiners is per se inadmissible in a criminal trial. People v. Anderson, 637 P.2d 354 (Colo. 1981).

While voice-print analysis testimony may be relevant, it is not sufficiently reliable to be admissible. People v. Drake, 748 P.2d 1237 (Colo. 1988).

Hypnotically refreshed testimony is inadmissible. People v. Quintanar, 659 P.2d 710 (Colo. App. 1982); People v. Rex, 689 P.2d 669 (Colo. App. 1984).

A jury's ability to observe a witness' demeanor and analyze a witness' ability to perceive, remember, and articulate is so hampered by the hypnotic process that the probative value of such evidence cannot overcome its flaws. People v. Quintanar, 659 P.2d 710 (Colo. App. 1982).

From time of hypnosis forward. Testimony of a witness who has been questioned under hypnosis is per se inadmissible as to his recollections from the time of the hypnotic session forward. People v. Quintanar, 659 P.2d 710 (Colo. App. 1982).

Recorded pre-hypnosis recollections admissible. However, the witness is not incompetent to testify to pre-hypnosis recollections that have previously been unequivocally disclosed and recorded by tape recording, video tape, or by written statement. People v. Quintanar, 659 P.2d 710 (Colo. App. 1982).

Evidence gained from a hypnotic trance should be excluded. People v. Diaz, 644 P.2d 71 (Colo. App. 1981).

Evidence gained in hypnotic state held properly excluded. People in Interest of M.S.H., 656 P.2d 1294 (Colo. 1983).

Evidence relating to legal conclusions, and not to facts, properly excluded. Where the proffered evidence is relevant to the legal conclusion that the plaintiffs would like the courts to adopt, but not to the facts in issue, the evidence is properly excluded on relevancy grounds. Conrad v. City & County of Denver, 656 P.2d 662 (Colo. 1982).

In a wrongful death action, evidence of the surviving spouse's remarriage is irrelevant in that the damages in this type of action are calculated at the time of the death, and remarriage is highly speculative as proof in mitigation of damages. Barnhill v. Pub. Serv. Co., 649 P.2d 716 (Colo. App. 1982), aff'd, 690 P.2d 1248 (Colo. 1984); Ford v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 667 P.2d 358 (Colo. App. 1983), cert. dismissed, 679 P.2d 579 (Colo. 1984).

Document excluded as irrelevant. People v. Mascarenas, 666 P.2d 101 (Colo. 1983).

Decedent's ability to accumulate wealth and loss of earning capacity in a certain business are relevant in a wrongful death action when a material part of the heir's net pecuniary loss is based on the loss of increase in her anticipated inheritance and the estimates and opinions presented were sufficiently grounded in fact to be admissible and probative on the issue of the decedent's earning capacity. Ford v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 677 P.2d 358 (Colo. App. 1983), cert. dismissed, 679 P.2d 579 (Colo. 1984).

Death threat evidence inadmissible because it failed to show defendant's consciousness of guilt. People v. Fernandez, 687 P.2d 502 (Colo. App. 1984).

Evidence of a defendant's gang affiliation, which tended to prove the existence of a motive for killing the victim, was relevant where proof of intent to kill was a necessary part of the prosecution's case. People v. Mendoza, 860 P.2d 1370 (Colo. App. 1993).

Gang affiliation of defendant was evidence of proof of intent to kill and was relevant. The danger of prejudice did not outweigh its probative value. People v. Mendoza, 876 P.2d 98 (Colo. App. 1994).

Evidence of gang affiliation admissible. There was evidence presented that defendant's gang affiliation motivated him to participate in the shooting. Thus, defendant's gang affiliation could have shown a motive to commit murder. People v. Clark, 2015 COA 44, 370 P.3d 197.

Descriptions of defendant's clothing, which might be interpreted to imply a gang connection, held relevant and not unduly prejudicial where neither prosecutor nor witnesses used the word ''gang''. People v. Fernandez, 883 P.2d 491 (Colo. App. 1994).

Testimony that victim of sexual assault underwent counseling at the suggestion of the department of social services held relevant to the occurrence of the sexual assault. People v. Myers, 714 P.2d 513 (Colo. App. 1985).

Evidence of victim's rape fantasy and victim's statements regarding fantasy admissible under rape shield statute. The evidence and supporting statements should be admitted since the evidence and statements were material and relevant to the issue of consent. People v. Garcia, 179 P.3d 250 (Colo. App. 2007).

Evidence of defendant's prior sexual relationship with victim subject to "prior sexual contact with actor" exception to rape shield statute. The evidence should be admitted since it is material and relevant to the issue of consent and supported defendant's theory of the case. People v. Garcia, 179 P.3d 250 (Colo. App. 2007).

Evidence regarding poor health of theft victim's husband held relevant in light of the central issue of defendant's intention to permanently deprive victim of her money despite defendant's knowledge of the victim's circumstances. People v. Merchant, 983 P.2d 108 (Colo. App. 1999).

Evidence of prior bank foreclosure was probative of the interactions between borrower and the bank — it made it more probable that borrower had the requisite intent to commit theft. The foreclosure was therefore relevant under this rule. Further, the risk of unfair prejudice did not substantially outweigh the probative value of the evidence, especially where the prior foreclosure was referenced only in passing and the details of that foreclosure were not revealed. Thus, the evidence was not barred by C.R.E. 403. People v. Trujillo, 2018 COA 12, 433 P.3d 78.

Evidence relating to conditions of release recommended by disposition committee of state hospital was relevant to issue of future dangerousness of defendant, an essential component of statutory test for eligibility for release, and, therefore, directly related to fact of consequence to determination of the action. Vialpando v. People, 727 P.2d 1090 (Colo. 1986).

Defense counsel characterized defendant who was alleged to have committed a sexual homicide as a "shy, quiet introvert, [an] immature child", therefore, pornographic pictures found in defendant's home were not admitted in error given that defendant was charged with crime involving mutilation of victim's genitalia and evidence of such photographs made it more likely that defendant had the knowledge requisite to perpetrate the mutilation. People v. Masters, 33 P.3d 1191 (Colo. App. 2001), aff'd on other grounds, 59 P.3d 979 (Colo. 2002).

Exclusion of testimony concerning commission of a crime by someone other than the defendant was proper, where it concerned a crime similar in character but remote in time from the crime charged. People v. Thompson, 950 P.2d 608 (Colo. App. 1997).

Evidence directly connecting an alternate suspect to the crime with which defendant is charged is not required to render admissible evidence that an alternate suspect committed a similar offense where there is an issue as to the identity of the perpetrator and the defendant desires to present alternate suspect evidence that bears on the issue, rather than merely showing motive or opportunity. People v. Muniz, 190 P.3d 774 (Colo. App. 2008).

If a reasonable fact finder could find that the facts pertaining to the purported alternate suspect create a reasonable doubt as to the identity of the perpetrator, the evidence should be admitted. Accordingly, the district court abused its discretion in granting prosecution's motion in limine precluding defendant from presenting alternate suspect evidence. Because there was a reasonable probability that the exclusion of evidence prejudiced defendant, defendant's conviction must be reversed. People v. Muniz, 190 P.3d 774 (Colo. App. 2008).

The admissibility of alternate suspect evidence ultimately depends on the strength of the connection between the alternate suspect and the charged crime. To be admissible, alternate suspect evidence must be relevant under this rule, and its probative value must not be sufficiently outweighed by the danger of confusion of the issues or misleading the jury, or by considerations of undue delay. People v. Elmarr, 2015 CO 53, 351 P.3d 431; People v. Folsom, 2017 COA 146M, 431 P.3d 652.

Evidence of an alternative suspect's prior sexual conduct with someone other than the victim has questionable relevance to an alternate suspect defense. People v. Salazar, 2012 CO 20, 272 P.3d 1067.

In a sexual assault trial, because evidence of a victim's virginity spans such a lengthy period of time, it includes remote, non-probative evidence of lack of sexual activity and thus is too broad and over-inclusive to be admissible in light of its prejudicial effect. Fletcher v. People, 179 P.3d 969 (Colo. 2007).

Exclusion of irrelevant testimony offered in connection with a motion for a continuance. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by denying a car dealer's motion for continuance in a car buyer's action against the dealer so as to secure the attendance of a witness whose testimony could not have affected the outcome of the trial and was irrelevant. Jackson v. Rocky Mountain Datsun, Inc., 693 P.2d 391 (Colo. App. 1984).

Testimony by the personnel director concerning her personal knowledge of defendant's outbursts of temper, including one directed toward the corporate victim's president which resulted in defendant's firing, were admissible as tending to establish a motive for defendant to retaliate against the corporation with bomb threats which were the basis of the charge against defendant. People v. Reaud, 821 P.2d 870 (Colo. App. 1991).

Similar transaction evidence of whether the defendants engaged in a pattern or practice and a plan, scheme, or design in regard to the alleged fraud and violation of the Colorado Securities Act related to a material fact and the trial court erred in not allowing the plaintiffs to present such evidence where the probative value thereof was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. Munson v. Boettcher & Co., Inc., 832 P.2d 967 (Colo. App. 1991).

Admission of three weapons and holster not error since evidence was given connecting one of the weapons and holster to the robbery charged and since all weapons were similar to weapon used in robbery. People v. Ridenour, 878 P. 2d 23 (Colo. App. 1994).

Defendant's statements regarding killing of other persons that defendant made during murder were linked in time and circumstance to that criminal episode, formed a part of that criminal episode, and were admissible as res gestae evidence of the crime. People v. Quintana, 882 P.2d 1366 (Colo. 1994).

Evidence of defendant's prior drug dealing was properly admitted as res gestae. Detective's testimony explained to jury why police had set up drug buy with defendant. People v. Gomez, 211 P.3d 53 (Colo. App. 2008).

Certain additional irrelevant information on a proferred document was prejudicial and could have been excised from the document, so its admission constituted error, albeit harmless error in the instance. Martin v. People, 738 P.2d 789 (Colo. 1987).

In a driver's license revocation hearing, the reason for erratic driving is irrelevant to the issue of whether an officer has reasonable grounds to stop the vehicle. Kollodge v. Charnes, 741 P.2d 1260 (Colo. App. 1987).

Evidence that defendant promised to pay plaintiff's medical bills after plaintiff slipped and fell on a puddle of water on the defendant's premises, and then reneged on the promise, is not admissible. A reasonable juror could not believe that the fact that the defendant made the promise and later reneged makes it more probable that the plaintiff had mental anguish caused by the defendant's negligence, or increases the degree of that anguish flowing from such negligence. Pennington v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 878 P.2d 152 (Colo. App. 1994).

A proponent of evidence protected by the rape shield statute (§ 18-3-407) must still make an offer of proof as to the relevance of the evidence. People v. Melillo, 25 P.3d 769 (Colo. 2001).

Where probable cause to arrest or search is not at issue, it is improper to present to the jury evidence about obtaining an arrest or search warrant. Here, whether police had probable cause to arrest defendant was not at issue during the trial. The fact that the police believed they had enough evidence and that a judge found there was probable cause to arrest defendant had no rational tendency to prove that defendant committed the assault or that defendant was not justified in resisting the victim's use of force against him. Thus, admission of testimony concerning the arrest warrant was plain error. People v. Mullins, 104 P.3d 299 (Colo. App. 2004).

The trial court's admission of the circumstances of the arrest to show consciousness of guilt was in error because the evidence did not show that the defendant was in flight or concealing himself to avoid arrest. The error, however, was harmless since there was overwhelming proof of the defendant's guilt. People v. Summitt, 132 P.3d 320 (Colo. 2006).

Applied in Land v. Hill, 644 P.2d 43 (Colo. App. 1981); People v. Gallegos, 644 P.2d 920 (Colo. 1982); People v. District Court, 652 P.2d 582 (Colo. 1982); People v. Rule 402. Relevant Evidence Generally Admissible; Irrelevant Evidence Inadmissible

All relevant evidence is admissible, except as otherwise provided by the Constitution of the United States, by the Constitution of the State of Colorado, by these rules, or by other rules prescribed by the Supreme Court, or by the statutes of the State of Colorado. Evidence which is not relevant is not admissible.

Admissibility of relevant evidence. If evidence is relevant, it is admissible, unless its prejudicial effect outweighs its probative value. People v. Ortega, 672 P.2d 215 (Colo. App. 1983).

Determination of relevance within trial court's discretion. The determination of whether proffered evidence is relevant is within the sound discretion of the trial court; and, if the evidence has probative value in determining the central issue in dispute, the trial court's decision will not be reversed unless it is shown that there was an abuse of discretion. People v. Lowe, 660 P.2d 1261 (Colo. 1983); People v. Schwartz, 678 P.2d 1000 (Colo. 1984); People v. McKeehan, 732 P.2d 1238 (Colo. App. 1986), cert. denied, 753 P.2d 243 (Colo. 1988); Cherry Creek Sch. Dist. v. Voelker, 859 P.2d 805 (Colo. 1993).

Defendant made no showing that his theory had attained the degree of reliability which would warrant its admission at trial and the determination here of whether the tendered testimony was relevant and not speculative were matters within the discretion of the trial court. People v. Wilson, 678 P.2d 1024 (Colo. App. 1983), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 843, 105 S. Ct. 148, 83 L. Ed. 2d 87 (1984).

It is within the special province and competence of the trial court to determine the relevance of evidence at trial. People v. Quintanar, 659 P.2d 710 (Colo. App. 1982).

A trial court abuses its discretion in excluding relevant evidence only if it makes a decision that is manifestly arbitrary, unreasonable, or unfair. People v. McCoy, 944 P.2d 577 (Colo. App. 1996); People v. Harris, 43 P.3d 221 (Colo. 2002).

Trial court's discretion to determine relevancy is broad. People v. Gutierrez, 1 P.3d 241 (Colo. App. 1999).

Issues concerning alleged deficiencies in the chain of custody go to the weight rather than the admissibility of evidence. People v. Gomez, 632 P.2d 586 (Colo. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 943, 102 S. Ct. 1439, 71 L. Ed. 2d 655 (1982); People v. Moltrer, 893 P.2d 1331 (Colo. App. 1994).

Evidence properly excluded where it has no direct connection with charged crime. While evidence may be relevant to some degree concerning the defendant's theory that other persons committed the crime, it is properly excluded where it has no direct connection with the crime of which the defendant is charged. People v. White, 632 P.2d 609 (Colo. App. 1981).

Admission or exclusion of evidence of an experiment rests largely in the discretion of the trial court. People v. McCombs, 629 P.2d 1088 (Colo. App. 1981).

Conditions under which an experiment is conducted are required to be substantially similar to those existing at the time of the occurrence; however, this requirement does not render an experiment inadmissible because it is based on a disputed reconstruction of that crime. People v. McCombs, 629 P.2d 1088 (Colo. App. 1981).

Admission of allegedly prejudicial photograph not error if probative. Where an allegedly prejudicial photograph is probative with respect to a trial's pivotal issue, its admission into evidence is not error. People v. Harris, 633 P.2d 1095 (Colo. App. 1981).

Polygraph evidence inadmissible. Evidence of polygraph test results and testimony of polygraph examiners is per se inadmissible in a criminal trial. People v. Anderson, 637 P.2d 354 (Colo. 1981).

Hypnotically refreshed testimony is inadmissible. People v. Quintanar, 659 P.2d 710 (Colo. App. 1982); People v. Rex, 689 P.2d 669 (Colo. App. 1984).

A jury's ability to observe a witness' demeanor and analyze a witness' ability to perceive, remember, and articulate is so hampered by the hypnotic process that the probative value of such evidence cannot overcome its flaws. People v. Quintanar, 659 P.2d 710 (Colo. App. 1982).

From time of hypnosis forward. Testimony of a witness who has been questioned under hypnosis is per se inadmissible as to his recollections from the time of the hypnotic session forward. People v. Quintanar, 659 P.2d 710 (Colo. App. 1982).

Recorded pre-hypnosis recollections admissible. However, the witness is not incompetent to testify to pre-hypnosis recollections that have previously been unequivocally disclosed and recorded by tape recording, video tape, or by written statement. People v. Quintanar, 659 P.2d 710 (Colo. App. 1982).

Evidence gained from a hypnotic trance should be excluded. People v. Diaz, 644 P.2d 71 (Colo. App. 1981).

Evidence gained in hypnotic state held properly excluded. People in Interest of M.S.H., 656 P.2d 1294 (Colo. 1983).

Admissibility of identification testimony. People v. Gonzales, 631 P.2d 1170 (Colo. App. 1981).

Use of alias to prove prior convictions and for sentencing as an habitual criminal is relevant to the crime charged. People v. Talley, 677 P.2d 394 (Colo. App. 1983).

Evidence of use of aliases is admissible if proof of an alias is relevant to an issue before the court. People v. DeHerrera, 680 P.2d 848 (Colo. 1984).

The court did not abuse its discretion in denying the defendant's motion for a mistrial on the basis that the court allowed cumulative evidence of the defendant's flight to be admitted into evidence. Even though the prosecution elicited testimony during cross-examination that the defendant was living under an assumed name, without establishing the relevance of the evidence as instructed by the court, the court issued a curative instruction to counter any unfair prejudice to the defendant. People v. Baca, 852 P.2d 1302 (Colo. App. 1992).

Court did not err in failing to declare a mistrial sua sponte after expert witness gave opinion testimony as to the truth of child victim's allegation. A curative instruction is generally sufficient to overcome an evidentiary error and is insufficient only when the evidence is so prejudicial that, but for its exposure, the jury might not have found defendant guilty. People v. Anderson, 183 P.3d 649 (Colo. App. 2007).

To resolve an issue of relevancy, a court must determine whether proffered evidence relates to a fact that is of consequence to determination of action, whether evidence makes existence of a consequential fact more probable or less probable than it would be without such evidence, and whether probative value of evidence is substantially outweighed by danger of unfair prejudice. People v. Carlson, 712 P.2d 1018 (Colo. 1986).

Alleged murder victim's statements made shortly after alleged perpetrator had beaten or threatened to kill the victim are admissible in a prosecution of the alleged perpetrator for murdering the victim. People v. Hulsing, 825 P.2d 1027 (Colo. App. 1991).

Admission of statements by witnesses commenting on other witnesses' veracity not error where comments were elicited to explain police officers' investigative techniques and to rebut defense arguments. People v. Davis, 312 P.3d 193 (Colo. App. 2010), aff'd, 2013 CO 57, 310 P.3d 58 (Colo. 2013).

A law enforcement officer may testify about the officer's assessments of interviewee credibility when that testimony is offered to provide context for the officer's interrogation tactics. People v. Conyac, 2014 COA 8M, 361 P.3d 1005.

Officer's testimony not improper commentary on defendant's credibility, but instead an explanation of officer's interview tactics that were brought into question by defendant's allegation that confession was coerced and a product of what defendant believed police wanted to hear. People v. Conyac, 2014 COA 8M, 361 P.3d 1005.

Thermostat manufactured two years after the thermostat at issue that carried the same model number and functioned and operated the same way but that had a component part that was not crimped as was the one at issue was properly admitted into evidence against the manufacturer since it was admitted after the manufacturer's expert conceded in voir dire that the only significant difference was the absence of crimping, which, he testified, would not affect the high end of the temperature range. Simon v. Coppola, 876 P.2d 10 (Colo. App. 1993).

Log of the results of final inspections of thermostats of the same model as the one at issue that were manufactured from one year before the model at issue to three years after and that showed that, one year after, a lot of 200 thermostats had been rejected because the crimp was too big in the component part at issue was properly admitted into evidence against the manufacturer where the trial court concluded the log ''cut both ways'' because it showed not only that the manufacturer's quality control program had discovered the problem but also the potential for error in the manufacturing process. The court also concluded that the log would help the jury better understand the manufacturing process. Simon v. Coppola, 876 P.2d 10 (Colo. App. 1993).

Admission of three weapons and holster not error since evidence was given connecting one of the weapons and holster to the robbery charged and since all weapons were similar to weapon used in robbery. People v. Ridenour, 878 P. 2d 23 (Colo. App. 1994).

Photographs of child sexual assault victims at the ages when the alleged crimes or abuse started were relevant to illustrate the children's age at the time. There was no abuse of discretion in admitting the photographs even if there was no dispute regarding the ages of the alleged victims. People v. Herrera, 2012 COA 13, 272 P.3d 1158.

In sexual assault case, evidence of defendant's statements that "Mexicans were bred for sex" and Spanish-English dictionaries containing underlined words of a sexual and reproductive nature were relevant to issue of whether defendant knowingly caused submission of Mexican national victims. People v. Braley, 879 P.2d 410 (Colo. App. 1993).

Evidence that defendant refused to consent to search of apartment was relevant and not unfairly prejudicial to impeach his testimony that he had not lived in the apartment for the last six days and did not know there were drugs in the apartment. Evidence of refusal to consent to search could give rise to the reasonable inference that the defendant had dominion and control over the apartment. People v. Chavez, 190 P.3d 760 (Colo. App. 2007).

Evidence irrelevant where no logical relation to contested issues at trial. In arson case, underlying reasons for insurance company's refusal of coverage had no logical relation to any motive defendant may have had prior to fire nor probative of any elements of the crime charged and was irrelevant. People v. Carlson, 677 P.2d 390 (Colo. App. 1983), aff'd, 712 P.2d 1018 (Colo. 1986).

Testimony that defendant had been discharged from his job after the incident was inadmissible, since such act had no relevance to any contested issue. People v. Jones, 743 P.2d 44 (Colo. App. 1987).

Evidence of theft defendant's civil suit against victims was properly excluded as irrelevant where no prosecution witnesses were named parties in civil suit, and suit referred to dispute with victims at time defendant was discharged from victim's employment, and thus could not contradict or negate defendant's state of mind at time of commission of thefts. People v. Stowers, 728 P.2d 356 (Colo. App. 1986).

Evidence that a mother refused voluntary drug testing for herself and her child and to stop breastfeeding pending a drug test at a caseworker's request prior to the filing of the dependency and neglect petition irrelevant. The evidence lacked probative value because her refusal in both instances could reasonably be attributed to a variety of innocent circumstances. People in Interest of M.H-K., 2018 COA 178, 433 P.3d 627.

When admission of irrelevant evidence constitutes abuse of discretion and reversible error. Admission of irrelevant evidence is not necessarily reversible error. But where such evidence contributes to conviction of defendant, it is reversible error and abuse of trial court's wide discretion in determining relevancy of evidence. People v. Carlson, 677 P.2d 390 (Colo. App. 1983), aff'd, 712 P.2d 1018 (Colo. 1986).

Evidence excluded as irrelevant. People v. Loscutoff, 661 P.2d 274 (Colo. 1983).

Although evidence of a defendant's compliance with applicable industry standards in a tort case is both relevant and admissible for purposes of determining whether the defendant either breached or satisfied the duty of care it owed to an injured plaintiff, such evidence is not conclusive on the issue of due care. Yampa Valley Elec. v. Telecky, 862 P.2d 252 (Colo. 1993).

Electrical utility was not entitled to a jury instruction creating a rebuttable presumption that adherence to industry standards presumes compliance with ''accepted good engineering practice in the electric industry'', since whether the utility complied with accepted good engineering practices, or whether it exercised due care is best determined by the jury after it has examined the relevant evidence and been properly instructed concerning the effect of the utility's compliance with the industry's minimum standards. Yampa Valley Elec. v. Telecky, 862 P.2d 252 (Colo. 1993).

Because property assessors are now constitutionally required to determine the actual or market value of property with an appraisal using the market approach, property tax assessments are relevant evidence of the value of real property. Antolovich v. Brown Group Retail, Inc., 183 P.3d 582 (Colo. App. 2007).

Applied in People v. District Court, 652 P.2d 582 (Colo. 1982); People v. McGhee, 677 P.2d 419 (Colo. App. 1983); People v. Dunlap, 975 P.2d 723 (Colo. 1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 893, 120 S. Ct. 221, 145 L. Ed. 2d 186 (1999).

Rule 403. Exclusion of Relevant Evidence on Grounds of Prejudice, Confusion, or Waste of Time

Although relevant, evidence may be excluded if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, confusion of the issues, or misleading the jury, or by considerations of undue delay, waste of time, or needless presentation of cumulative evidence.

To show an abuse of discretion for excluding relevant evidence, appellant must establish that the trial court's decision was manifestly arbitrary, unreasonable, or unfair. People v. Gibbens, 905 P.2d 604 (Colo. 1995); Bonser v. Shainholtz, 3 P.3d 422 (Colo. 2000); People v. Perry, 68 P.3d 472 (Colo. App. 2002); People v. Ortiz, 155 P.3d 532 (Colo. App. 2006).

When reviewing a determination under this rule for abuse of discretion, the appellate court must afford the evidence the maximum probative value attributable by a reasonable fact-finder and the minimum unfair prejudice to be reasonably expected. Bonser v. Shainholtz, 3 P.3d 422 (Colo. 2000); People v. Ortiz, 155 P.3d 532 (Colo. App. 2006).

If evidence is relevant, it is admissible unless its probative value is outweighed by the countervailing factors of this rule. Scognamillo v. Olsen, 795 P.2d 1357 (Colo. App. 1990); People v. Hulsing, 825 P.2d 1027 (Colo. App. 1991).

Probative value of the evidence was substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, because: (1) it explained how defendant became a suspect, an important point because, absent this explanation, the jury would be left to speculate as to how defendant became a suspect and because defendant's defense was mistaken identity; and (2) it showed the thoroughness of the police investigation and analysis, which was important since defendant's counsel had challenged the reliability of DNA analysis, partly by suggesting that the investigator was biased. Additionally, witness only mentioned the DNA databases briefly, and did not testify as to how the defendant's DNA profile came to be in the second database. Finally, no evidence was presented as to how any individual's DNA profile might come to be in either DNA database, and no evidence was presented that defendant had previously engaged in any criminal activity. Under the circumstances, any inference of prejudice was speculative. People v. Harland, 251 P.3d 515 (Colo. App. 2010).

In performing the C.R.E. 403 balance on review, the proffered evidence should be given its maximal probative weight and its minimal prejudicial effect. People v. District Court of El Paso County, 869 P.2d 1281 (Colo. 1994); People v. Cousins, 181 P.3d 365 (Colo. App. 2007).

Colorado rules of evidence strongly favor the admission of evidence. The trial court has broad discretion in determining the admissibility of evidence, and the trial court's decision will only be reviewed for abuse of discretion. People v. Medina, 51 P.3d 1006 (Colo. App. 2001), aff'd on other grounds, 71 P.3d 973 (Colo. 2003).

''Unfair prejudice'' should be construed to mean the prejudice from the proponent's evidence. Unfairly prejudicial evidence which may never be presented unless the defendant pursues it on cross-examination is not a sufficient basis to exclude otherwise admissible testimony. People v. District Court of El Paso County, 869 P.2d 1281 (Colo. 1994).

Rule was designed to permit trial courts the discretion of excluding relevant evidence if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. McKown-Katy v. Rego Co., 776 P.2d 1130 (Colo. App. 1989), rev'd in part on other grounds, 801 P.2d 536 (Colo. 1990).

An objection to the relevance of evidence does not include an objection that the evidence, if admissible, is unduly prejudicial under this rule because of the substantial difference in analysis trial courts perform under C.R.E. 401 and this rule. Am. Family Mut. Ins. Co. v. DeWitt, 216 P.3d 60 (Colo. App. 2008), aff'd, 218 P.3d 318 (Colo. 2009).

Trial courts are accorded considerable discretion in determining whether the probative value of evidence is substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice or needless presentation of cumulative evidence. People v. Clary, 950 P.2d 654 (Colo. App. 1997); Bonser v. Shainholtz, 3 P.3d 422 (Colo. 2000).

When the rules of evidence and Colo. RPC 3.4(b) overlap, the proper approach is for trial courts to balance the probative value of the evidence against the danger of unfair prejudice. Murray v. Just In Case Bus. Lighthouse, 2016 CO 47M, 374 P.3d 443.

In so doing, trial courts should not exclude testimony from improperly compensated witnesses unless they determine that the testimony's danger of unfair prejudice substantially outweighs its probative value. Murray v. Just In Case Bus. Lighthouse, 2016 CO 47M, 374 P.3d 443.

The trial court is best situated to decide on a case-by-case basis whether the testimony of a witness compensated under a contingent fee agreement so prejudices the fairness of the litigation that it requires exclusion of the improperly compensated witness's testimony.

Murray v. Just In Case Bus. Lighthouse, 2016 CO 47M, 374 P.3d 443.

Defendant entitled to present evidence creating doubt as to guilt. A defendant is entitled to all reasonable opportunities to present evidence which might tend to create a doubt as to his guilt. People v. Bueno, 626 P.2d 1167 (Colo. App. 1981).

Evidence of similar transactions. Subject to this rule and the general rules of admissibility, evidence of similar transactions, when offered by the defendant, is admissible as long as it is relevant to the guilt or innocence of the accused. People v. Bueno, 626 P.2d 1167 (Colo. App. 1981); People v. Flowers, 644 P.2d 916 (Colo. 1982), appeal dismissed, 459 U.S. 803, 103 S. Ct. 25, 74 L. Ed. 2d 41 (1982).

In eminent domain valuation hearing concerning street condemned by department of highways, trial court properly admitted evidence of sales occurring after date of valuation as comparable sales where sales were sufficiently comparable in character, close in time, and in location to be probative of the value of the street and where the risk that the commissioners would be prejudiced, confused, or misled was slight. State Dept. of Hwys. v. Town of Silverthorne, 707 P.2d 1017 (Colo. App. 1985), cert. dismissed, 736 P.2d 411 (Colo. 1987).

When applying the liberal standard under C.R.E. 702 for determining the admissibility of scientific evidence, the court must also apply its discretionary authority under this rule to ensure that the probative value of the evidence is not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, confusion of the issues, undue delay, waste of time, or needless presentation of cumulative evidence. People v. Shreck, 22 P.3d 68 (Colo. 2001).

While C.R.E. 401 and this rule reflect liberal admission of evidence, this rule, in conjunction with C.R.E. 702, tempers broad admissibility by giving courts discretion to exclude expert testimony unless it passes more stringent standards of reliability and relevance. People v. Martinez, 74 P.3d 316 (Colo. 2003).

Issues concerning alleged deficiencies in the chain of custody go to the weight rather than the admissibility of evidence. People v. Gomez, 632 P.2d 586 (Colo. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 943, 102 S. Ct. 1439, 71 L. Ed. 2d 655 (1982); People v. Moltrer, 893 P.2d 1331 (Colo. App. 1994).

Even though trial court did not consider whether evidence was unfairly prejudicial in ruling evidence was inadmissible, appellate court may consider whether it was unfairly prejudicial in determining whether trial court correctly determined the evidence was inadmissible. People v. Garcia, 179 P.3d 250 (Colo. App. 2007).

When evidentiary ruling overturned as abuse. Only where the prejudicial effect of an evidentiary item outweighs its probative value will the trial court's evidentiary ruling be overturned as an abuse of discretion. People v. Abbott, 638 P.2d 781 (Colo. 1981); People v. Durre, 713 P.2d 1344 (Colo. App. 1985); People v. Wells, 754 P.2d 420 (Colo. App. 1987), rev'd on other grounds, 776 P.2d 386 (Colo. 1989).

Admissibility of photographs into evidence in a homicide prosecution is a matter within the discretion of the trial judge, who must weigh their probative value against their potential inflammatory effect on the jury; the trial judge's determination will not be disturbed on review absent an abuse of discretion. People v. White, 199 Colo. 82, 606 P.2d 847 (1980); People in Interest of R.G., 630 P.2d 89 (Colo. App. 1981); People v. Dillon, 633 P.2d 504 (Colo. App. 1981); People v. Unrein, 677 P.2d 951 (Colo. App. 1983); People v. Guffie, 749 P.2d 976 (Colo. App. 1987).

The admission of a photograph of the dead victim for purposes of identification is not error solely because the defendant has stipulated to identity or because identity has been established through other witnesses. People v. Viduya, 703 P.2d 1281 (Colo. 1985).

The trial court has broad discretion in determining the admissibility of photographs. People v. Crespin, 631 P.2d 1144 (Colo. App. 1981).

Specific finding that probative value outweighs prejudicial effect not required. In admitting photographs into evidence in a criminal trial, a trial court need not specifically find that their probative value outweighs their prejudicial effect, as the alleged prejudice of photographic evidence is equally susceptible to evaluation by an appellate court. People v. Harris, 633 P.2d 1095 (Colo. App. 1981).

Photographs are admissible to depict graphically anything a witness may have described in words, provided that the prejudicial effect of the photographs does not far outweigh their probative value. Photographs depicting the circumstances surrounding the victim's death, such as the appearance of the victim and the location and nature of the wounds, have probative value in a homicide case. People v. Kurts, 721 P.2d 1201 (Colo. App. 1986).

Photographs taken of nude child victim at morgue were properly admitted in vehicular homicide trial to show the nature and extent of victim's injuries, an issue plainly relevant to the jury's assessment of the recklessness of defendant's conduct. People v. Scarlett, 985 P.2d 36 (Colo. App. 1998).

Color photograph of murder victim at morgue, instead of black and white photograph, properly admitted to show trajectory of bullet through victim's head and because it was not particularly shocking or inflammatory in the context of a murder case. People v. Villalobos, 159 P.3d 624 (Colo. App. 2006).

Photographs of severed elk heads were admissible to identify elk shot by defendant. People v. Dobson, 847 P.2d 176 (Colo. App. 1992).

Photographs are not inadmissible solely because defendant has stipulated to matters sought to be proven thereby, or because such matters have been established through witnesses' testimony. People v. Dobson, 847 P.2d 176 (Colo. App. 1992).

Photographs of exhumed murder victim's body admissible as evidence explaining why it was difficult to determine the cause of death and why the coroner was unable to make conclusive findings. People v. Medina, 51 P.3d 1006 (Colo. App. 2001), aff'd on other grounds, 71 P.3d 973 (Colo. 2003).

Photographs of alleged child sexual assault victims showing the victims in apparent prayer at their first communion admissible to show victims at the age when the alleged abuse began. Although the photographs may have evoked sympathy in the jury, their admission was not so unfairly prejudicial to be an abuse of discretion. People v. Herrera, 2012 COA 13, 272 P.3d 1158.

"In life" photographs were relevant to establish victim was alive prior to shooting. People v. McClelland, 2015 COA 1, 350 P.3d 976.

But admission of "in life" photographs of victim unfairly prejudiced defendant because the visual depiction of the victim was a different image than that presented by eyewitness testimony. People v. McClelland, 2015 COA 1, 350 P.3d 976.

Videotape admissible where probative value outweighs unfair prejudice. People v. Avery, 736 P.2d 1233 (Colo. App. 1986); McKown-Katy v. Rego Co., 776 P.2d 1130 (Colo. App. 1989), rev'd in part on other grounds, 801 P.2d 536 (Colo. 1990).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a surveillance video that depicted a shooting. The recording, from an overhead camera, was not an ad hoc depiction of the consequences of a crime, nor was it a recreation; rather, the recording showed the crime as it was happening. People v. Valdez, 2017 COA 41, 405 P.3d 413.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by declining to restrict the number of times jurors could watch surveillance videos that depicted a shooting. The videos, which were nontestimonial evidence, were played for jurors only after their request, and were played for the jury by a court employee. People v. Valdez, 2017 COA 41, 405 P.3d 413.

Probative value of videotape showing defendant smoking drugs outweighed the unfair prejudice. The videotape's probative value that contradicted defendant's claim that he was not living in the house at the time of the evidence seizure was more probative than the prejudice of defendant smoking drugs particularly since there was other evidence introduced at trial regarding defendant's drug use to which defendant did not object. People v. Warner, 251 P.3d 567 (Colo. App. 2010).

Because the defendant's state of mind at the time of the shooting was a disputed issue at trial, the admission of slow-motion recordings created a danger of unfair prejudice to the defendant that substantially outweighed their probative value. The real-time recording allowed the jury to judge the defendant's state of mind by viewing the shooting as it actually occurred, whereas slowing down the recording may have portrayed the defendant's actions as more premeditated than they actually were. People v. Tardif, 2017 COA 136, 433 P.3d 60.

Admission of victims' videotaped interview did not rise to the level of plain error where the victims and the official who had conducted the interview testified at trial and they were subject to cross-examination. People v. Burgess, 946 P.2d 565 (Colo. App. 1997).

Mannequin used by prosecution to demonstrate how the victim was tied was not admitted as substantive evidence but was used only demonstratively. Testimony regarding the accuracy of such evidence must be given by a person having personal knowledge of the scene depicted, may not be based on hearsay statements, and is subject to cross-examination. People v. Richardson, 58 P.3d 1039 (Colo. App. 2002).

Admission of a demonstrative aid involves a four-part test. The demonstrative aid must (1) be authentic, meaning the proponent must demonstrate that the evidence is what it is claimed to be; (2) be relevant, meaning that it will assist the trier of fact in understanding other testimonial and documentary evidence; (3) be a fair and accurate representation of the evidence to which it relates; and (4) not be unduly prejudicial, meaning its probative value must not be substantially outweighed by its danger for unfair prejudice. People v. Palacios, 2018 COA 6M, 419 P.3d 1014.

Test applied in People v. Sandoval, 2018 COA 156, __ P.3d __.

Court did not err in admitting res gestae testimony regarding defendant's conduct regarding the concealment of his sexual assault victim's stillborn baby. Defendant's actions reflected efforts to conceal the birth and thus the crime. There was no abuse of discretion in admitting the evidence. People v. Curtis, 2014 COA 100, 350 P.3d 949.

Police officers did not "vouch for" truthfulness of child rape victim by relating her statements following the crime. Therefore, no prejudice to defendant resulted from court's admission of their testimony. People v. Williams, 899 P.2d 306 (Colo. App. 1995).

Trial court neither abused its discretion nor violated defendant's right to confrontation where defendant was prohibited from revealing to jury through cross-examination that witness was in custody in another state on unrelated charges where such testimony would have been cumulative and of little or no probative value and where defendant was otherwise provided with ample opportunity to impeach the witness' credibility by showing ulterior motive. People v. Griffin, 867 P.2d 27 (Colo. App. 1993).

Court did not abuse its discretion by excluding evidence of previous miscarriage as unduly prejudicial. The court had well founded concerns that evidence of a miscarriage could make the victim appear promiscuous and divert the jury's attention. As well, the exclusion did not prevent or hamper the defendant from presenting a theory of the case. People v. Underwood, 53 P.3d 765 (Colo. App. 2002).

Trial court's ruling not disturbed unless discretion abused. Unless an abuse of discretion is shown, the trial court's ruling on the admissibility of photographs into evidence will not be disturbed on review. People in Interest of R.G., 630 P.2d 89 (Colo. App. 1981); People v. Young, 710 P.2d 1140 (Colo. App. 1985); Williamsen v. People, 735 P.2d 176 (Colo. 1987); People v. Vazquez, 768 P.2d 721 (Colo. App. 1988), cert. denied, 787 P.2d 174 (Colo. 1990); People v. Taylor, 804 P.2d 196 (Colo. App. 1990); People v. Fasy, 813 P.2d 797 (Colo. App. 1991); Campbell v. People, 814 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1991); Cherry Creek Sch. Dist. v. Voelker, 859 P.2d 805 (Colo. 1993).

Only if a trial court abuses its discretion in excluding evidence, and such exclusion affects a party's substantial rights, will such exclusion provide the basis for a reversal of the court's judgment. Exclusion of evidence affects a substantial right of a party only it can be said with fair assurance that the error influenced the outcome of the case or impaired the basic fairness of the trial itself. Williams v. Cont'l Airlines, Inc., 943 P.2d 10 (Colo. App. 1996).

In exercising such discretion, a trial court must consider the probative value of the proposed evidence, the nature of the offered evidence, and the other evidence admitted during trial. Williams v. Cont'l Airlines, Inc., 943 P.2d 10 (Colo. App. 1996).

Photographs are not rendered inadmissible merely because they reveal shocking details of a crime. People in Interest of R.G., 630 P.2d 89 (Colo. App. 1981).

For evidence of experiment to be admissible it must aid rather than confuse the jury in its resolution of the issues, and it must tend directly to establish or disprove a material issue in the case. People v. McCombs, 629 P.2d 1088 (Colo. App. 1981).

Trial court properly excluded evidence when it determined that the excluded testimony could confuse the issues, mislead the jury, and open the door to cross-examination concerning collateral issues. People v. Watkins, 83 P.3d 1182 (Colo. App. 2003).

The admission or exclusion of evidence of an experiment rests largely in the discretion of the trial court. An experiment is not rendered inadmissible solely because it is based on a disputed reconstruction of the crime. People v. Agado, 964 P.2d 565 (Colo. App. 1998).

Witness may be required to demonstrate trigger pull on gun before jury if the probative value of such evidence outweighs any prejudicial effect. Any prejudice flowing from defendant's demonstration of trigger pull was ameliorated by his explanation at trial and the cast on his hand that was visible to the jury. People v. Agado, 964 P.2d 565 (Colo. App. 1998).

Evidence of routine practice. The trial court has the discretion to exclude evidence of a routine practice if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. Bloskas v. Murray, 646 P.2d 907 (Colo. 1982).

The trial court is vested with broad discretion in determining relevancy. Melton by and through Melton v. Larrabee, 832 P.2d 1069 (Colo. App. 1992).

The testimony of a severely injured plaintiff and his guardian in a declaratory judgment action to determine the issue of coverage under an insurance policy would be prejudicial to the defendant and would constitute an effort to evoke sympathy. Accordingly, the trial court was well within its discretion in finding such testimony of minimal probative value with respect to the issues involved in the case. Williams v. Chrysler Ins. Co., 928 P.2d 1375 (Colo. App. 1996).

Trial court erred in excluding expert testimony as to heat of fire where it was directly related to determining plaintiff's pain and suffering damages as a result of the accident. McKown-Katy v. Rego Co., 776 P.2d 1130 (Colo. App. 1989), rev'd in part on other grounds, 801 P.2d 536 (Colo. 1990).

Evidence that defendant left restaurant upon seeing witness was not irrelevant or prejudicial. People v. Trujillo, 686 P.2d 1364 (Colo. App. 1984).

Evidence of a defendant's flight may be relevant to show consciousness of guilt but only if it can be shown the defendant was aware he or she was being sought. People v. Perry, 68 P.3d 472 (Colo. App. 2002).

Prejudice of prior criminality outweighed by probative value. Defendant's activities at a halfway house were probative of his guilt or innocence despite the prejudicial aspects of his residence at the halfway house. People v. Clark, 705 P.2d 1017 (Colo. App. 1985).

The probative value of Pennsylvania sexual assault was not outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. It had legitimate probative force since the Pennsylvania sexual assault was similar in important respects to the charged offense. People v. Everett, 250 P.3d 649 (Colo. App. 2010).

The probative value of no conclusion DNA evidence results is substantially outweighed by the risk of unfair prejudice and misleading the jury when there is no evidence of the results' statistical significance. People v. Marks, 2015 COA 173, 374 P.3d 518.

Trial court erred in admitting photos of large quantities of marijuana in defendant's apartment because the potential for unfair prejudice substantially outweighed the probative value of the evidence. People v. Wakefield, 2018 COA 37, 428 P.3d 639.

Evidence of plaintiff's status as an undocumented immigrant was clearly relevant to the issue of damages for lost future earnings, but the admissibility of such evidence would depend on whether plaintiff had violated the immigration laws or an employment-related rule and was unlikely to remain in the United States during the period of lost future wages. Silva v. Wilcox, 223 P.3d 127 (Colo. App. 2009).

Since stipulation by defendant would carry same probative weight as that of proffered evidence, its only remaining effect was to present irrelevant and prejudicial evidence. In this instance, its admission was harmless error. Martin v. People, 738 P.2d 789 (Colo. 1987).

Trial court may require the acceptance of a stipulation of fact made by the defendant if the people's case is not weakened by such stipulation and if the probative value of the offered evidence is substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. People v. McGregor, 757 P.2d 1082 (Colo. App. 1987).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting community corrections tracking records even though defendant's proffered stipulation carried equal probative force. The court acted to remove any unfair prejudice by requiring the prosecution to avoid any inference that defendant was in custody. People v. St. James, 75 P.3d 1122 (Colo. App. 2002).

Probative value of conditions of release recommended by disposition committee of state hospital was not substantially outweighed by unfair prejudice, confusion of issues, or misleading jury, or any of the other factors in this rule. Vialpando v. People, 727 P.2d 1090 (Colo. 1986).

Because defendant was willing to stipulate to the mental state element of the offense which the prosecution was required to prove, there was no material fact in dispute and the probative value of introducing evidence of defendant's prior misdemeanor conviction resulting from an altercation would be minimal weighed against the danger of unfair prejudice. People v. Silva, 987 P.2d 909 (Colo. App. 1999).

Death threat evidence inadmissible because it failed to show defendant's consciousness of guilt. People v. Fernandez, 687 P.2d 502 (Colo. App. 1984).

Evidence of a safety code or regulation in effect at the time of alleged negligence may be admissible in some circumstances, however, codes and regulations enacted after alleged negligence may result from research conducted, information obtained, impracticalities eliminated or mitigated, or even a consensus formed, after the alleged negligence; therefore, such codes and regulations do not ordinarily give a similar indication of the duty of care years before their enactment. Bennett v. Greeley Gas Co., 969 P.2d 754 (Colo. App. 1998).

Where evidence presented at trial did not support plaintiff's offer of proof that compliance with a regulation enacted after the alleged negligence occurred would have led to the discovery of a leak before an explosion, evidence concerning the regulation was not admissible to establish the standard of care prior to the enactment of the regulation. Bennett v. Greeley Gas Co., 969 P.2d 754 (Colo. App. 1998).

Cumulative evidence. The admission or rejection of cumulative evidence is within the trial court's discretion and its ruling will not be overturned unless an abuse of discretion clearly appears. People v. Unrein, 677 P.2d 951 (Colo. App. 1983).

Cumulative evidence may be excluded by the trial court. Danburg v. Realties, Inc., 677 P.2d 439 (Colo. App. 1984); People v. Greenwell, 830 P.2d 1116 (Colo. App. 1992); People v. Salas, 902 P.2d 398 (Colo. App. 1994).

There was no threat of a needless presentation of cumulative evidence where testimony was the only evidence presented as to heat of the fire which was directly related to determining plaintiff's pain and suffering damages as a result of the accident. McKown-Katy v. Rego Co., 776 P.2d 1130 (Colo. App. 1989), rev'd in part on other grounds, 801 P.2d 536 (Colo. 1990).

Where evidence to which defendant objected consisted of previous testimony that had already been admitted at trial and no one else had the information that the witness possessed, except defendant, the evidence itself was not cumulative. People v. Balkey, 53 P.3d 788 (Colo. App. 2002).

Since the testimony had already been once received, its repetition to the jury during its deliberations was not ''needless'' within the meaning of the rule. People v. Balkey, 53 P.3d 788 (Colo. App. 2002).

It was not an abuse of discretion for the trial court to exclude written reports of the property's fair market value where two experts were examined at trial concerning their opinion of the property's fair market value, the factors they considered, and the methods they employed and the reports merely reiterated their testimony. Nat'l Canada Corp. v. Dikeou, 868 P.2d 1131 (Colo. App. 1993).

It was not an abuse of discretion for the trial court to exclude victim's inconsistent statements concerning use of marijuana prior to assault where such evidence would have been cumulative of other testimony impeaching the victim and such evidence was potentially prejudicial to both parties. People v. Delgado, 890 P.2d 141 (Colo. App. 1994).

Testimony of several prosecution witnesses providing similar testimony did not undermine the fairness of the trial or cast serious doubt on the reliability of the verdict where the trial court instructed jurors that they were to determine the weight and credit to be given to the victims' out-of-court statements and that the number of witnesses testifying on a particular issue was irrelevant in weighing the strength of the evidence. People v. Burgess, 946 P.2d 565 (Colo. App. 1997).

The test to apply in determining whether an accused may offer evidence that another committed the crime for which the defendant is being tried is that the defendant must first offer proof directly connecting the third person with the crime before evidence of that person's opportunity or motive to commit the crime becomes admissible. People v. Mulligan, 193 Colo. 509, 568 P.2d 449 (1977); People v. Schwartz, 678 P.2d 1000 (Colo. 1984).

In the context of child abuse prosecution, the fact that the victim was in custody of the third person during the time when the injury could have been inflicted is sufficient direct and circumstantial evidence to satisfy the test. People v. Schwartz, 678 P.2d 1000 (Colo. 1984).

If a prior act indicates no aspect of intent that cannot be discerned from the act in the crime charged, there is no valid purpose for admission of the prior act evidence to prove intent, and its probative value is outweighed by its prejudicial effect. People v. Hansen, 708 P.2d 468 (Colo. App. 1985).

Evidence of refusal to take a blood or breath test is admissible in evidence at a revocation of license proceeding or at a trial for driving under the influence or while ability impaired, and the effect of § 42-4-1202 (3)(e) is to allow admission of such evidence in every case without a determination of relevance on a case-by-case basis. Cox v. People, 735 P.2d 153 (Colo. 1987).

Probative value of battered woman opinion evidence was not outweighed by unfair prejudicial effect. The opinion evidence admitted was relevant to the issue of the victim's credibility, and the expert did not testify regarding the specific relationship between the defendant and the victim. People v. Johnson, 74 P.3d 349 (Colo. App. 2002).

Evidence of incest victim psychology held admissible and probative value not outweighed by prejudicial effect. People v. Koon, 724 P.2d 1367 (Colo. App. 1986).

Evidence protected by the rape shield statute (§ 18-3-407) falls under a presumption that a victim's or witness' sexual conduct is irrelevant unless the proponent of the evidence shows that it is relevant to a material issue in the case. People v. Melillo, 25 P.3d 769 (Colo. 2001).

In a sexual assault trial, because evidence of a victim's virginity spans such a lengthy period of time, it includes remote, non-probative evidence of lack of sexual activity and thus is too broad and over-inclusive to be admissible in light of its prejudicial effect. Fletcher v. People, 179 P.3d 969 (Colo. 2007).

A trial court may consider the policy concerns underlying the rape shield statute when weighing the relevance of evidence of a victim's or witness' sexual conduct against its potentially prejudicial effect. People v. Melillo, 25 P.3d 769 (Colo. 2001).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting into evidence tape recorded conversation involving father accused of incest against his son, the boy, and the boy's mother where the question of whether either the mother's or father's influence over the child may have accounted for the child's vacillations and recantations in making the allegations was a central issue. People v. Gibbens, 905 P.2d 604 (Colo. 1995).

Court did not abuse its discretion in admitting evidence of defendant's other sex assaults. The evidence was relevant to show defendant's intent and motive. People v. Orozco, 210 P.3d 472 (Colo. App. 2009).

Evidence of an alternative suspect's prior sexual conduct with someone other than the victim has questionable relevance to an alternate suspect defense. Even if the evidence is relevant, the probative value of the evidence is substantially outweighed by the danger of confusing the issues and misleading the jury. People v. Salazar, 2012 CO 20, 272 P.3d 1067.

The admissibility of alternate suspect evidence ultimately depends on the strength of the connection between the alternate suspect and the charged crime. To be admissible, alternate suspect evidence must be relevant under C.R.E. 401, and its probative value must not be sufficiently outweighed by the danger of confusion of the issues or misleading the jury, or by considerations of undue delay. People v. Elmarr, 2015 CO 53, 351 P.3d 431; People v. Folsom, 2017 COA 146M, 431 P.3d 652.

Prohibition of alternate suspect evidence deprived defendant of a fair trial. Evidence proffered by defendant established a non-speculative connection between the alternate suspect and the charged crime. Because the evidence identifying the defendant as the criminal was far from overwhelming, the trial court's error was not harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. People v. Folsom, 2017 COA 146M, 431 P.3d 652.

Evidence of consensual sexual contact with one other than the victim, which took place in the same place and at about the same time as alleged sexual assault on child, held relevant and not unduly prejudicial. People v. Tauer, 847 P.2d 259 (Colo. App. 1993).

Probative value of evidence in sexual assault case did not substantially outweigh danger of unfair prejudice where evidence consisted of defendant's statements that ''Mexicans were bred for sex'' and Spanish-English dictionaries containing underlined words of a sexual and reproductive nature. People v. Braley, 879 P.2d 410 (Colo. 1993).

Admitting evidence of victim's rape fantasy and evidence of defendant and victim's prior sexual relationship not unfairly prejudicial. The probative value of the evidence outweighs the prejudice the victim may suffer as a result. People v. Garcia, 179 P.3d 250 (Colo. App. 2007).

Prejudice of threat outweighed by probative value. A letter from defendant to a fellow prisoner, containing an admission of a fact relevant to proof of his guilt of the crime charged and containing a threat against the fellow prisoner, is admissible to show a consciousness of guilt despite the prejudicial aspects of the included threat. People v. Lowe, 660 P.2d 1261 (Colo. 1983).

Defendant's statement to polygraph examiner was admissible because it was relevant to ultimate issue in case and prejudicial impact was minimal. People v. Robinson, 713 P.2d 1333 (Colo. App. 1985).

The admission of cumulative hearsay statements of child victim of sexual assault proper where truthfulness of child victim was at issue and statements were, therefore, relevant to material issues in the case. People v. Morrison, 985 P.2d 1 (Colo. App. 1999), aff'd on other grounds, 19 P.3d 675 (Colo. 2000).

Trial court erred in precluding defendant from inquiring into, and if necessary, presenting evidence of, a romantic relationship between alleged victim and a friend. Evidence of alleged victim's romantic and sexual relationship with friend was relevant to a material issue in the case, namely, victim's motive to lie. Trial court's exclusion of the motive evidence infringed upon defendant's constitutional right to confront witnesses. People v. Owens, 183 P.3d 568 (Colo. App. 2007).

The probative value of a prior conversation between the victim and the defendant in the same setting as the alleged assault is not substantially outweighed by any danger of unfair prejudice that may result from the admission of the conversation, which is, arguably, not even evidence of defendant's bad character. People v. Gardner, 919 P.2d 850 (Colo. App. 1995).

Damage to defendant's case not grounds for exclusion. The trial court should not exclude proffered evidence as unfairly prejudicial simply because it damages the defendant's case. All effective evidence is prejudicial in the sense of being damaging or detrimental to the party against whom it is offered. People v. District Court, 785 P.2d 141 (Colo. 1990); People v. Howard-Walker, 2017 COA 81M, __ P.3d __.

Where the evidence is admissible under § 13-25-129, defendant must show some basis for refusing the evidence beyond conclusory statements that the evidence was prejudicial and cumulative. People v. Fasy, 813 P.2d 797 (Colo. App. 1991).

Only prejudice which suggests a decision made on an improper basis, such as the jury's bias, sympathy, anger, or shock, requires the exclusion of evidence under this rule. Evidence should not be excluded simply because it damages the defendant's case. People v. Salas, 902 P.2d 398 (Colo. App. 1994).

The danger of prejudice presented by the evidence of the defendant's gang membership did not outweigh its probative value where the evidence was not offered to prove that the defendant was more likely to kill because he was a gang member; rather it was offered to show that, because of his membership in a particular gang, defendant was more likely to murder this particular victim after deliberation. People v. Mendoza, 860 P.2d 1370 (Colo. App. 1993).

The prejudice to the defendant, if any, because of the prosecutor's statements during closing arguments that the "Bloods and Crips do not get along peaceably" was not so substantial as to warrant a mistrial where the nature of the relationship between the two gangs was germane to the prosecutor's theory of the case and sufficient evidence illustrating the relationship had been introduced at trial to support the prosecutor's statements. People v. Mendoza, 860 P.2d 1370 (Colo. App. 1993).

No evidence of prosecutorial misconduct where prosecutor properly advised witness not to mention defendant's criminal history and prosecutor did not elicit the inadmissible evidence from the witness. People v. Reed, 2013 COA 113, 338 P.3d 364.

Prejudicial proffered evidence outweighed by probative value. Proffered evidence which calls for exclusion as unfairly prejudicial is given a more specialized meaning of an undue tendency to suggest a decision on an improper basis, commonly but not necessarily an emotional one, such as sympathy, hatred, contempt, retribution or horror. People v. District Court, 785 P.2d 141 (Colo. 1990); Holley v. Huang, 284 P.3d 81 (Colo. App. 2011).

The fact that a witness is a member of a gang which is loyal to the defendant's gang is probative of bias and is admissible so long as it does not unduly prejudice the defendant. People v. Trujillo, 749 P.2d 441 (Colo. App. 1987).

The fact that the defendant's expert witness had a "substantial connection" with the defendant's insurer is probative of bias, and admission of evidence of such connection was within the trial court's discretion. Bonser v. Shainholtz, 3 P.3d 422 (Colo. 2000).

Polygraph evidence inadmissible. Evidence of polygraph test results and testimony of polygraph examiners is per se inadmissible in a criminal trial. People v. Anderson, 637 P.2d 354 (Colo. 1981).

Descriptions of defendant's clothing, which might be interpreted to imply a gang connection, held relevant and not unduly prejudicial where neither prosecutor nor witnesses used the word ''gang''. People v. Fernandez, 883 P.2d 491 (Colo. App. 1994).

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting into evidence portions of a videotaped statement defendant made to the police in which he denied an accusation that he told others that he intended to kill the victim and acknowledged that he had had three prior lovers who had died and that the victim was aware of that, where there was substantial evidence that the defendant had manifested an intent to kill the victim, the defendant made no admission of guilt regarding the deaths of his former lovers, the comments were not mentioned or highlighted by either the court or the prosecution, and no reference was made to them during the examination of witnesses or during the prosecution's opening or closing statements. People v. Seigler, 832 P.2d 980 (Colo. App. 1991), cert. denied, 846 P.2d 189 (Colo. 1993).

Trial court did not abuse discretion in not admitting "other acts" evidence when admission of evidence would have consumed a great deal of trial time and would have had slight probative value. Hock v. N. Y. Life Ins. Co., 876 P.2d 1242 (Colo. 1994).

Where a witness was temporarily unable to testify in court and the probative value of her relevant testimony was reduced by the delay in time between the witness's observations and the criminal act, the discrepancies between the witness's and victim's descriptions of the vehicle involved, and the witness's admission that she could not see clearly because she was not wearing her glasses, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in ruling that the minimal probative value of the witness's testimony was outweighed by the delay of a continuance or relocation of the trial to the witness's home. People v. Webster, 987 P.2d 836 (Colo. App. 1998).

No abuse of discretion in admitting evidence of defendant's deferred judgment for burglary. People v. Nuanez, 973 P.2d 1260 (Colo. 1999).

Evidence of defendant's prior domestic violence conviction was properly admitted. The conviction was relevant for impeachment purposes and was not prejudicial since it was a single, isolated, brief statement that was not a significant part of the prosecution's cross-examination or closing argument. People v. Sommers, 200 P.3d 1089 (Colo. App. 2008).

Testimony about defendant's probation status not sufficiently prejudicial to warrant a new trial where any prejudice could have been remedied by a curative instruction or by striking the improper statement but defense counsel refused the remedies. Also the court had instructed the jury to base its verdict only on the evidence submitted at trial and not consider answers given by witnesses before a sustained objection. People v. Reed, 2013 COA 113, 338 P.3d 364.

No abuse of discretion in admitting police officers' testimony about prior contact with defendant and defendant's area restriction. Testimony was part of the res gestae of the offense because it gave the jury an understanding of why defendant was stopped and thus formed a natural and integral part of an account of the crime. Likewise, testimony about an outstanding misdemeanor arrest warrant was relevant because it described the chain of events preceding defendant's arrest and explained why he was taken into custody. The officers did not testify about the nature of the prior contact or the nature of the area restriction; thus, this testimony was neither unduly inflammatory nor likely to prevent the jury from making a rational decision. Although this testimony may have been damaging to defendant, it did not amount to unfair prejudice. People v. Asberry, 172 P.3d 927 (Colo. App. 2007).

Evidence of defendant's prior drug dealing was properly admitted as res gestae. Detective's testimony explained to jury why police had set up drug buy with defendant. People v. Gomez, 211 P.3d 53 (Colo. App. 2008).

Evidence of defendant's prior unlawful sexual act was improperly admitted because the conduct of the prior act, in that particular case, was significantly more serious than the offense with which he was currently charged. People v. Brown, 2014 COA 130M, 342 P.3d 564.

Admission of witness's testimony about defendant's threats related to his drug use weeks before defendant murdered witness's friend was harmless. The court admitted the evidence as res gestae evidence, not character evidence. The evidence was harmless because it did not substantially influence the verdict or affect the fairness of the trial. Also the court properly admitted other extensive undisputed evidence about defendant's drug use and addiction that was more prejudicial to defendant than witness's testimony. People v. Reed, 2013 COA 113, 338 P.3d 364.

No abuse of discretion for admitting false identification evidence when court found false ID card was relevant to issues of defendant's flight, consciousness of guilt, fluency in English, and expertise with law enforcement. People v. Al-Yousif, 206 P.3d 824 (Colo. App. 2006).

Evidence impugning moral character excluded. Evidence excluded as violating standard principles of evidence by needlessly impugning moral character. People v. Loscutoff, 661 P.2d 274 (Colo. 1983).

The trial court has broad discretion to preclude inquiries that have no probative force or are irrelevant or have little bearing on the witness's credibility but would substantially impugn his character. People v. Bustos, 725 P.2d 1174 (Colo. App. 1986).

Evidence regarding defendant's gang affiliation properly admitted. Defendant's gang affiliation could have shown a motive to commit the crime. People v. Moya, 899 P.2d 212 (Colo. App. 1994).

Evidence of gang affiliation admissible. There was evidence presented that defendant's gang affiliation motivated him to participate in the shooting. Thus, defendant's gang affiliation could have shown a motive to commit murder. People v. Clark, 2015 COA 44, 370 P.3d 197.

Evidence of a defendant's gang involvement was limited to testimony of his statement to police that he had been involved in gang activities and that statement was offered in support of the prosecution's theory that the shooting was motivated by gang rivalry, therefore the trial court did not abuse its discretion in ruling that the testimony was not unfairly prejudicial. People v. Webster, 987 P.2d 836 (Colo. App. 1998).

Evidence of defendant's jealousy and accusatory behavior was admissible as res gestae evidence because challenged testimony was part and parcel of the criminal episode for which defendant was charged. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by denying defendant's motion for a mistrial. People v. Jaramillo, 183 P.3d 665 (Colo. App. 2008).

Evidence of threats against a witness properly admitted. The evidence could show consciousness of guilt and, by inference, that the defendant committed the crime charged. People v. Eggert, 923 P.2d 230 (Colo. App. 1995).

Evidence of a witness's fear of retaliation is admissible to explain the witness's change in statement or reluctance to testify. People v. Villalobos, 159 P.3d 624 (Colo. App. 2006).

Evidence regarding poor health of theft victim's husband held relevant in light of the central issue of defendant's intention to permanently deprive victim of her money despite defendant's knowledge of the victim's circumstances. People v. Merchant, 983 P.2d 108 (Colo. App. 1999).

Evidence of prior bank foreclosure was probative of the interactions between borrower and the bank — it made it more probable that borrower had the requisite intent to commit theft. It was therefore relevant under C.R.E. 401. Further, the risk of unfair prejudice did not substantially outweigh the probative value of the evidence, especially where the prior foreclosure was referenced only in passing and the details of that foreclosure were not revealed. Thus, the evidence was not barred by this rule. People v. Trujillo, 2018 COA 12, 433 P.3d 78.

Statement of defendant that her multiple personality disorder had been cured by the time of the murder properly admitted. Statement had probative value, given the prosecution's theory that defendant had covered up her involvement in the crime, and defendant's description of her mental state at the time of the offense made it more probable that she had intentionally caused the death of the victim. People v. Hall, 60 P.3d 728 (Colo. App. 2002).

Evidence that defendant refused to consent to search of apartment was relevant and not unfairly prejudicial to impeach his testimony that he had not lived in the apartment for the last six days and did not know there were drugs in the apartment. Evidence of refusal to consent to search could give rise to the reasonable inference that defendant had dominion and control over the apartment. People v. Chavez, 190 P.3d 760 (Colo. App. 2007).

A person's refusal to consent to a search may not be used by the prosecution — either through the introduction of evidence or by explicit comment — to imply the person's guilt of a crime. People v. Pollard, 2013 COA 31M, 307 P.3d 1124.

Defendant's nonresponsiveness at crime scene and at hospital not properly admitted since defendant's defense of dissociative state did not rely on defendant's state of mind at hospital or crime scene and was therefore irrelevant to whether defendant was sane at the moment she shot the victim, and danger of unfair prejudice and likelihood of misleading the jury far outweighed any possible probative value that testimony regarding the defendant's silence might have had. People v. Welsh, 80 P.3d 296 (Colo. 2003).

Video animation was properly admitted in shaken baby syndrome prosecution because it related to expert's opinion regarding the manner in which shaken baby syndrome injuries occur and it was included because trial court specifically rejected defendant's claim that the video was extremely violent and therefore unfairly prejudicial. People v. Cauley, 32 P.3d 602 (Colo. App. 2001).

Evidence concerning possible penalties faced by witness for his part in burglary excluded. Court did not err in excluding evidence concerning possible penalties faced by informer which defendant argued was relevant to show informer had motive to shift blame for crime to defendant. People v. Pinkey, 761 P.2d 228 (Colo. App. 1988).

Documents excluded as irrelevant. People v. Walker, 666 P.2d 113 (Colo. 1983).

Expert testimony permitted. People v. Gordon, 738 P.2d 404 (Colo. App. 1987).

Propounding questions with no reasonable basis in fact for the interrogation. Defense counsel may not properly propound to a witness questions which can cause a doubt in the jury's mind as to the witness' credibility when there is no reasonable basis in fact for that interrogation. Under this rule and § 18-3-407, the defendant held not to have established entitlement to elicit the name of the male whom the child sexual assault victim allegedly had intercourse with days before the date of the sexual assault. People v. Vialpando, 804 P.2d 219 (Colo. App. 1990).

Polygraph evidence inadmissable. If the defendant's statements made to the polygraph technician are edited to remove all reference to the polygraph examination, they will not be characterized by the unfair prejudice required to make evidence excludable. People v. District Court, 785 P.2d 141 (Colo. 1990).

Evidence of a defendant's offer or willingness to take a polygraph examination is per se inadmissible as evidence of consciousness of innocence. People v. Muniz, 190 P.3d 774 (Colo. App. 2008).

In determining the admissibility of expert testimony on the reliability of eyewitness testimony, the court should issue written findings of fact applying both the helpfulness standard of C.R.E. 702 and the discretion granted under this rule. Campbell v. People, 814 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1991).

Trial court erred in excluding expert testimony on reliability of eyewitness identification where eyewitness identification of defendant was the only substantial element of the prosecution's case, eyewitnesses expressed high confidence in their identification of defendant, and proffered expert testimony would have shown a poor relationship between the confidence of eyewitnesses, in general, and the reliability of such witnesses' testimony. People v. Campbell, 847 P.2d 228 (Colo. App. 1992).

Trial court properly excluded expert testimony. The study was not conducted in conformance with any standard or procedure that would ensure its reliability. As well, there was no evidence the participants were a representative sampling that would yield reliable statistical analysis. People v. Hogan, 114 P.3d 42 (Colo. App. 2004).

Although admission of DNA evidence was the subject of conflicting testimony, where there was expert testimony to support the court's ruling, it was within the trial court's discretion to allow admission of the evidence. People v. Lindsey, 868 P.2d 1085 (Colo. App. 1993).

Admission of DNA evidence derived from multiplex DNA testing systems that met the standard for admission of scientific evidence under C.R.E. 702 was proper under this rule. People v. Shreck, 22 P.3d 68 (Colo. 2001).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting photographs taken at the autopsy. People v. Moya, 899 P.2d 212 (Colo. App. 1994).

If a contract is deemed ambiguous, court may admit extrinsic or parol evidence to assist in ascertaining intent of parties. Cheyenne Mtn. Sch. D. v. Thompson, 861 P.2d 711 (Colo. 1993).

Three-part test under equivalent federal rule applied in People v. Campbell, 847 P.2d 228 (Colo. App. 1992).

Statements that were not unduly inflammatory nor likely to prevent jury from making a rational decision will not be found unduly prejudicial. People v. Quintana, 882 P.2d 1366 (Colo. 1994).

Testimony that detective recognized the defendant on a surveillance videotape was not so unfairly prejudicial as to mandate its exclusion. People v. Robinson, 908 P.2d 1152 (Colo. App. 1995), aff'd on other grounds, 927 P.2d 381 (Colo. 1996).

Introduction of dog-tracking evidence proper where testimony of dog handler establishes sufficient foundation and there is corroborating evidence of defendant's guilt. People v. Brooks, 950 P.2d 649 (Colo. App. 1997), aff'd, 975 P.2d 1105 (Colo. 1999).

Elements of a proper foundation for dog tracking evidence listed in Brooks v. People, 975 P.2d 1105 (Colo. 1999).

Prosecutor's use of expert testimony regarding drug courier profiles as substantive evidence of defendant's guilt was improper, and, although a reasonable jury could have convicted on other evidence, the admissible evidence did not overwhelmingly establish defendant's guilt, and there is a significant probability that the erroneously admitted testimony substantially influenced the jury's verdict, and thus was not harmless. Salcedo v. People, 999 P.2d 833 (Colo. 2000).

Court did not err in admitting drug courier profile testimony from police officer because it was testimony regarding how illegal drugs were transported, not specific personal characteristics of drug couriers themselves. The testimony aided the jury's understanding of an activity with which they were not likely to be familiar. People v. Montalvo-Lopez, 215 P.3d 1139 (Colo. App. 2008).

In eminent domain proceeding, commission did not abuse its discretion in admitting evidence regarding city's opposition to landowner's planned unit development (PUD) application for limited purposes. Commission did not abuse its discretion in admitting evidence of city's involvement as background on the issuance of the application, the steps necessary to obtain it, and the timeliness of the process. Moreover, the commission minimized any prejudicial effects of such evidence by excluding testimony regarding city's motives in opposing PUD application. City of Englewood v. Denver Waste Transfer, L.L.C., 55 P.3d 191 (Colo. App. 2002).

Because expert testifying in shaken-impact syndrome case never purported to know what minimum force would be required to cause a subdural hematoma and because testimony was properly qualified by other statements of the same expert, a single improper inference by prosecution referring to ''the force it takes to make a baby's brain bleed'' in opening statement of prosecution was not sufficient to render the trial fundamentally unfair and, therefore, did not rise to the level of plain error. People v. Dunaway, 88 P.3d 619 (Colo. 2004).

Trial court did not abuse discretion by allowing expert testimony to show the basis of the physician's opinion when it was undisputed that massive, violent force causes subdural hematoma and when physician's testimony related to situations that involve massive, violent force to help the jury understand the facts of the shaken-impact syndrome case before it. People v. Martinez, 74 P.3d 316 (Colo. 2003).

Trial court did not abuse discretion by declining to conduct an in camera review of records of the investigation of detective's alleged moonlighting during on-duty hours to determine whether defendant could use such records to impeach the detective's credibility or allow the defense to admit other evidence of the moonlighting investigation. People v. Knight, 167 P.3d 141 (Colo. App. 2006).

When a witness describes an item of real evidence, testimony as to its description and out-of-court identification may be admitted. People v. Hogan, 114 P.3d 42 (Colo. App. 2004).

Court may properly allow testimony concerning defendant's pre-advisement silence without causing prejudice if defendant testified and the evidence of defendant's pre-advisement silence was elicited in the cross-examination of defendant for credibility purposes. People v. Taylor, 159 P.3d 730 (Colo. App. 2006).

Identification of inanimate object is not a crucial element of proof, therefore, the same constitutional protections for identifying suspects do not apply to procedures used in identifying inanimate objects. As a result, any inadequacy in the procedure followed and the failure to use other procedures reasonably available are arguments that can be made to the jury. People v. Hogan, 114 P.3d 42 (Colo. App. 2004).

"Were they lying?" type questions are categorically improper. Witnesses are prohibited from commenting on the veracity of another witness, because such opinions are prejudicial, argumentative, and ultimately invade the province of the fact-finder. Such concerns outweigh any potential or supposed probative value elicited by the question. Liggett v. People, 135 P.3d 725 (Colo. 2006); People v. Koper, 2018 COA 137, __ P.3d __.

Evidence of an alias is admissible when it is relevant to an issue of identification or an attempt to avoid detection. In this case, the alias evidence was relevant to the issue of identification, ownership of the car, and, inferentially, the possession of the marihuana. Since its legitimate probative value outweighed the danger of unfair prejudice, the alias evidence was properly admitted. People v. Valencia, 169 P.3d 212 (Colo. App. 2007).

Defense counsel may open the door to the admission of evidence through questions concerning the method of interrogation by detectives and the motives of witnesses to change their testimony by raising those issues in an opening statement. People v. Davis, 312 P.3d 193 (Colo. App. 2010), aff'd on other grounds, 2013 CO 57, 310 P.3d 58 (Colo. 2013).

Evidence of patient's past cocaine use admissible in medical malpractice case. The probative value of the evidence relating to the cause of the patient's cardiac arrest and the failure of resuscitation efforts outweighed the risk of unfair prejudice. Kelly v. Haralampopoulos by Haralampopoulos, 2014 CO 46, 327 P.3d 255.

Evidence of other medical providers' fault in medical negligence case properly excluded because of possible jury confusion. Danko v. Conyers, 2018 COA 14, 432 P.3d 958.

Admissibility of a nonparty's invocation of fifth amendment privilege and concomitant drawings of adverse inferences should be considered by courts on a case-by-case basis to assure that any inference is reliable, relevant, and fairly advanced. McGillis Inv. Co., LLP v. First Inter. Fin. Utah, 2015 COA 116, 370 P.3d 295.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in sustaining witness's invocation of his fifth amendment right because stopping the trial to have a different judge hold an ex parte hearing would cause undue delay. Based on the question by defense counsel that led to the invocation of the fifth amendment, it was possible that the witness's response could have incriminated him in two possible crimes. The probative value of the response was low considering the evidence already elicited from the witness. An ex parte hearing on the witness's fifth amendment right had already been held, and defense counsel did not raise the line of inquiry posed at trial during that hearing. So, there was no abuse of discretion in ruling the evidence inadmissible. People v. Clark, 2015 COA 44, 370 P.3d 197.

Court's admission of sex toys and pornography that were not identified by the victims or found in a location described by the victims was in error. But the error does not require reversal since there was no reasonable probability that the evidence contributed to the conviction. People v. Relaford, 2016 COA 99, 409 P.3d 490.

Rule 404. Character Evidence Not Admissible to Prove Conduct; Exceptions; Other Crimes

(a) Character evidence generally. Evidence of a person's character or a trait of his character is not admissible for the purpose of proving that he acted in conformity therewith on a particular occasion, except:

(1) Character of accused. In a criminal case, evidence of a pertinent trait of his character offered by an accused, or by the prosecution to rebut the same or if evidence of the alleged victim's character for aggressiveness or violence is offered by an accused and admitted under Rule 404(a)(2), evidence of the same trait of character of the accused offered by the prosecution;

(2) Character of alleged victim. In a criminal case, evidence of a pertinent trait of character of the alleged victim of the crime offered by an accused, or by the prosecution to rebut the same, or evidence of a character trait of peacefulness of the alleged victim offered by the prosecution in a homicide case to rebut evidence that the alleged victim was the first aggressor;

(3) Character of witness. Evidence of the character of a witness as provided in Rules 607, 608, and 13-90-101.

(b) Other crimes, wrongs, or acts. Evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts is not admissible to prove the character of a person in order to show that he acted in conformity therewith. It may, however, be admissible for other purposes, such as proof of motive, opportunity, intent, preparation, plan, knowledge, identity, or absence of mistake or accident, provided that upon request by the accused, the prosecution in a criminal case shall provide reasonable notice in advance of trial, or during trial if the court excuses pretrial notice on good cause shown, of the general nature of any such evidence it intends to introduce at trial.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

Rule applies in administrative proceedings as well as in criminal and civil cases. Knowles v. Bd. of Educ., 857 P.2d 553 (Colo. App. 1993).

Rule gives an accused the right to introduce character evidence without prior character attack; accordingly, administrative hearing officer erred in not permitting defendant to present character evidence on grounds of irrelevancy. Knowles v. Bd. of Educ., 857 P.2d 553 (Colo. App. 1993).

Documents excluded as irrelevant. People v. Walker, 666 P.2d 113 (Colo. 1983).

Applied in People v. Alward, 654 P.2d 327 (Colo. App. 1982), cert. dismissed, 677 P.2d 948 (Colo. 1984); People v. Jones, 675 P.2d 9 (Colo. 1984); People v. Lucero, 677 P.2d 370 (Colo. II. CHARACTER EVIDENCE.

Prior acts of violence are not generally admissible to establish self-defense, unless the defendant had knowledge of the prior acts of violence at the time of the incident. People v. Jones, 635 P.2d 904 (Colo. App. 1981); People v. Lucero, 714 P.2d 498 (Colo. App. 1985).

In the absence of a claim of self-defense, district court's exclusion of evidence of alleged violent and abusive acts by the murder victim was proper. People v. Smith, 848 P.2d 365 (Colo. 1993).

Evidence may show character trait of aggression of victim. When the purpose of the evidence is to show a pertinent character trait of the victim from which it may be inferred that he was the initial aggressor, that trait may be shown by specific instances of past conduct. People v. Jones, 635 P.2d 904 (Colo. App. 1981).

Weight to be accorded evidence of good character in criminal proceeding. People v. White, 632 P.2d 609 (Colo. App. 1981).

Evidence of a person's character or a trait of his character is not admissible for the purpose of proving that he acted in conformity therewith. People v. Hansen, 708 P.2d 468 (Colo. App. 1985).

Specific instances of conduct introduced to counter evidence of good reputation or character must be relevant instances of conduct, that is, conduct related to the character trait put in issue. People v. Pratt, 759 P.2d 676 (Colo. 1988); People v. Kreiter, 782 P.2d 803 (Colo. 1989).

When prosecution seeks to admit any evidence that suggests defendant is a person of bad character, it must explain why the logical relevance of that evidence does not depend on the inference that defendant acted in conformity with his or her bad character. Court properly admitted defendant's journal entries since they were relevant to establish defendant's mental state and rebut defendant's claims that he or she acted accidently or in self-defense. Although the evidence had the potential of unfair prejudice, there was no abuse of discretion by the court. People v. Griffin, 224 P.3d 292 (Colo. App. 2009).

No plain error for failing to provide a limiting instruction when instruction was not required to be given either by statute or by timely request. People v. Griffin, 224 P.3d 292 (Colo. App. 2009).

Erroneous rulings regarding introduction of character evidence sufficient to reverse conviction where defendant refrained from presenting defense based on such rulings. People v. Kreiter, 782 P.2d 803 (Colo. 1989).

When impeachment is based upon rumor, the impeaching party has the burden of showing that acts forming the basis of rumor actually occurred. People v. Pratt, 759 P.2d 676 (Colo. 1988).

Evidence in the form of reputation or opinion concerning a witness' character for truthfulness may be introduced to support the credibility of the person when the witness' character for truthfulness has been attacked; however, such testimony must be based on opinion held generally in a broad community. People v. Ayala, 919 P.2d 830 (Colo. App. 1995).

"Were they lying?" type questions are categorically improper. Witnesses are prohibited from commenting on the veracity of another witness, because such opinions are prejudicial, argumentative, and ultimately invade the province of the fact-finder. Such concerns outweigh any potential or supposed probative value elicited by the question. Liggett v. People, 135 P.3d 725 (Colo. 2006).

Reputation is distinguished from rumor in that it must be established over a period of time. People v. Ayala, 919 P.2d 830 (Colo. App. 1995).

Reputation and rumor distinguished. People v. Erickson, 883 P.2d 511 (Colo. App. 1994).

Court's failure to require a showing of the basis and relevance of specific instances of misconduct was error where the risk of prejudice of jury was great. Where prosecutor cross-examined character witness concerning alleged tying of nursing home patients to chairs, there was risk of prejudice sufficient to require advance determination by the court that such incidents likely had occurred and were in fact improper. People v. Pratt, 759 P.2d 676 (Colo. 1988).

Admission of evidence that victim was an excellent worker and top employee, when defendant did not present any evidence going to the victim's trait of character, was reversible error. People v. Jones, 743 P.2d 44 (Colo. App. 1987).

Testimony that a person is a "cautious driver" is character evidence under this rule and not habit evidence under C.R.E. 406. People v. T.R., 860 P.2d 559 (Colo. App. 1993).

Trial court erred in ruling that evidence was inadmissible pursuant to C.R.E. 608 when it was admissible pursuant to section (a)(1) of this rule. People v. Miller, 862 P.2d 1010 (Colo. App. 1993).

Testimony regarding victim's character may be relevant where self-defense is raised as a defense. People v. Erickson, 883 P.2d 511 (Colo. App. 1994).

But where theory of defense was that homicide was committed in self-defense against a homosexual assault and the victim's alleged homosexuality itself would not prove an element of self-defense, evidence of the victim's homosexuality could only be introduced via reputation or opinion evidence, not via a specific instance of conduct. People v. Miller, 981 P.2d 654 (Colo. App. 1998).

Opinion or reputation testimony was clearly relevant to establish a person's reputation in the community for peacefulness, and the trial court correctly permitted a witness to testify about such reputation. People v. Ibarra, 849 P.2d 33 (Colo. 1993).

The trial court did not commit plain error in allowing the prosecution to elicit testimony during its case-in-chief showing the victim's character for peacefulness. Defense counsel raised self-defense as an affirmative defense during opening statements, and elicited testimony to support the affirmative defense during cross examination of a prosecution witness. People v. Baca, 852 P.2d 1302 (Colo. App. 1992).

Trial court appropriately admitted prosecution testimony of episode of anger on part of defendant to rebut character trait of peacefulness set forth by defendant. People v. Garcia, 964 P.2d 619 (Colo. App. 1998), rev'd on other grounds, 997 P.2d 1 (Colo. 2000).

Statement of defendant that her multiple personality disorder had been cured by the time of the murder was properly admitted even if defendant had not raised issue of diminished mental capacity. Statement was relevant to prosecution's theory that defendant had given a number of false and inconsistent statements to law enforcement officials after the murder and her purpose in mentioning the personality disorder was to explain why her statements had been inconsistent. People v. Hall, 60 P.3d 728 (Colo. App. 2002).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding character witness testimony because defendant admitted to using a false social security number he knew was not his own, and any evidence pertaining to his character for truthfulness was irrelevant in that respect. People v. Montes-Rodriguez, 219 P.3d 340 (Colo. App. 2009), rev'd on other grounds, 241 P.3d 924 (Colo. 2010).

Similarly, trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding evidence regarding whether or not defendant knew whose social security number he used. Because defendant admitted to using a social security number that was not his own, the evidence was irrelevant. People v. Montes-Rodriguez, 219 P.3d 340 (Colo. App. 2009), rev'd on other grounds, 241 P.3d 924 (Colo. 2010).

A criminal defendant who testifies in his own defense at trial does not automatically have the right to present evidence of his character for truthfulness under this rule. The rule is intended to permit admissibility of pertinent traits and truthfulness is a pertinent trait only if it is involved in the offense charged. People v. Miller, 890 P.2d 84 (Colo. 1995).

Administrative hearing officer's error in not allowing certain opinion testimony at teacher's disciplinary hearing did not affect any substantial right of petitioner where record reflects that, despite ruling, petitioner was permitted to present a substantial amount of character evidence and hearing officer concluded that petitioner was a person of good character. Knowles v. Bd. of Educ., 857 P.2d 553 (Colo. App. 1993).

Although the defendant "opened the door" to questioning about why he or she was in Kansas, the prosecution could have elicited testimony that defendant gave a reason other than "family" as he or she testified to in court. The defendant's statement that he or she came to Kansas about drugs was not relevant to the case and injected defendant's bad character into the case and should have been inadmissable. People v. Rincon, 140 P.3d 976 (Colo. App. 2005).

Evidence of defendant's cocaine use was not offered to show defendant's bad character or any propensity to act in accordance with any bad character but was properly admitted to show that his voluntary intoxication was the most likely explanation for his mental state on the date of the crime and not the medication alleged in his involuntary intoxication defense. People v. Herdman, 2012 COA 89, 310 P.3d 170.

Applied in Settle v. Basinger, 2013 COA 18, 411 P.3d 717.

III. OTHER CRIMES, WRONGS, OR ACTS.

Law reviews. For article, "Rule 404(b): Evidence of Other Crimes, Wrongs or Acts", see 23 Colo. Law. 355 (1994). For article, "Admissibility of 'Other Acts' Evidence Under C.R.E. 404(b)", see 32 Colo. Law. 87 (July 2003).

Rule accords trial courts great discretion in admitting evidence of other acts, and that discretion is abused only if a ruling is manifestly arbitrary, unreasonable, or unfair. People v. Cousins, 181 P.3d 365 (Colo. App. 2007).

Evidence of prior criminality casts damning innuendo likely to beget prejudice in the minds of juries. People v. Peterson, 633 P.2d 1088 (Colo. App. 1981).

Therefore, prior criminal record generally inadmissible. As a general rule, subject to some exceptions, a prior criminal record of a defendant is inadmissible, and the introduction of such a record is reversible error. Serratore v. People, 178 Colo. 341, 497 P.2d 1018 (1972).

Evidence of other crimes tending to prove res gestae of offense charged admissible. Where evidence of other crimes tends to prove the res gestae, these "other crimes" are not wholly independent of the offense charged, and it is not error to admit such evidence without giving a jury instruction in reference to the limited purpose for which the evidence of other crimes can be used. White v. People, 177 Colo. 386, 494 P.2d 585 (1972); People v. Czemerynski, 786 P.2d 1100 (Colo. 1990); People v. Fears, 962 P.2d 272 (Colo. App. 1997); People v. Lucas, 992 P.2d 619 (Colo. App. 1999); Litwinsky v. Zavaras, 132 F. Supp. 2d 1316 (D. Colo. 2001); People v. Merklin, 80 P.3d 921 (Colo. App. 2003).

Although prior robbery and the murder with which defendant was charged were somewhat remote in time, they were inextricably intertwined because the victim of the murder had been a witness to the robbery, and evidence of the robbery gave context to the murder. People v. Fears, 962 P.2d 272 (Colo. App. 1997).

Evidence of illegal drug paraphernalia was relevant to the question of defendant's knowledge of the nature of the drugs recovered from his apartment and their illegality without a prescription. Such evidence also gave the jury a more complete picture of the circumstances under which the drugs were found. People v. Valdez, 56 P.3d 1148 (Colo. App. 2002).

Evidence of federal drug violation could properly be considered "part and parcel of the criminal episode" that became the basis for defendant's state prosecution. The prior drug transaction was closely interwoven with the facts of defendant's arrest and served to provide a context in which the jury could both understand the circumstances of the arrest and the validity of the charges. People v. Skufca, 141 P.3d 876 (Colo. App. 2005), rev'd on other grounds, 176 P.3d 83 (Colo. 2008).

Evidence of defendant's other dealings with marijuana and weapons helped explain the events surrounding the crimes and the context in which the charged crimes occurred. People v. Cisneros, 2014 COA 49, 356 P.3d 877.

Evidence of flight is admissible as res gestae evidence and is not subject to the requirements of section (b). People v. Gee, 2015 COA 151, 371 P.3d 714.

Evidence of other crimes is admissible to prove res gestae when such evidence is inextricably intertwined with the crime charged. People v. Workman, 885 P.2d 298 (Colo. App. 1994); People v. Thomeczek, 284 P.3d 110 (Colo. App. 2011).

Such as where other activity part and parcel of entire criminal transaction. Where evidence that the defendant smoked marijuana cigarettes was elicited to show knowledge on the part of the defendant with regard to the possession of marijuana and was not adduced to show ''another crime'', nor to show that the defendant was evil and capable of committing crimes, and the activity was part and parcel of the entire criminal transaction entered into by the defendant, a limiting instruction was not necessary and the testimony was properly admitted. Dickerson v. People, 179 Colo. 146, 499 P.2d 1196 (1972).

Evidence of argument between defendant and his girlfriend on night before fatal shooting was part and parcel of entire event and, therefore, properly admitted as res gestae of offense charged. People v. Agado, 964 P.2d 565 (Colo. App. 1998).

Evidence presented at trial established that conduct was so closely connected to the main criminal transaction that evidence of it was necessary to complete the story of the crime. Without that evidence, the murder might not be properly understood as the jury would have no basis upon which it could determine the reasons behind defendant's conduct. People v. Gladney, 250 P.3d 762 (Colo. App. 2010).

Res gestae evidence need not meet the procedural requirements of evidence introduced pursuant to section (b). Before admitting res gestae evidence, however, the trial court must find that its probative value is not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. People v. Agado, 964 P.2d 565 (Colo. App. 1998); People v. Thomeczek, 284 P.3d 110 (Colo. App. 2011).

Evidence of wholly independent offense to prove accused guilty of offense charged inadmissible. Evidence is not admissible which shows, or tends to show, that an accused has committed a crime wholly independent of the offense for which he is on trial, for no person shall be convicted of an offense by proving that he is guilty of another. Kostal v. People, 144 Colo. 505, 357 P.2d 70 (1960), cert. denied, 365 U.S. 804, 81 S. Ct. 471, 5 L. Ed. 462 (1961); Edmisten v. People, 176 Colo. 262, 490 P.2d 58 (1971); White v. People, 177 Colo. 386, 494 P.2d 585 (1972); People v. Ihme, 187 Colo. 48, 528 P.2d 380 (1974); People v. Geller, 189 Colo. 338, 540 P.2d 334 (1975).

In a criminal trial to a jury, evidence of a defendant's criminal activity, which is unrelated to the offense charged, is inadmissible, and when reference is made in the presence of the jury to such criminal activity, a mistrial is normally required. People v. Goldsberry, 181 Colo. 406, 509 P.2d 801 (1973).

The general rule is that evidence is not admissible which shows or tends to show that the accused has committed a crime wholly independent of the offense for which he is on trial. People v. Peterson, 633 P.2d 1088 (Colo. App. 1981).

As a general rule, evidence of other criminal acts is inadmissible because of its prejudicial effect. People v. Mason, 643 P.2d 745 (Colo. 1982).

Evidence that is not contemporaneous with the crime charged and does not illustrate its character is not part of the res gestae, and evidence that the defendant urged his wife not to testify with respect to the murder that defendant had allegedly committed two years earlier that implicated him in the separate crime of witness tampering was therefore not admissible as res gestae. However, such evidence was admissible to show the defendant's consciousness of guilt. People v. Medina, 51 P.3d 1006 (Colo. App. 2001), aff'd on other grounds, 71 P.3d 973 (Colo. 2003).

Because guilt of one crime cannot be presumed by commission of another crime. It is not proper to raise a presumption of guilt on the ground that having committed one crime the depravity it exhibits makes it likely the defendant would commit another. Kurtz v. People, 177 Colo. 306, 494 P.2d 97 (1972); White v. People, 177 Colo. 386, 494 P.2d 585 (1972).

To be admissible, similar transaction evidence must meet three tests: (1) Is there a valid purpose for which the evidence is offered? (2) Is the evidence relevant to a material issue in the case? (3) Does the probative value of the evidence of the prior act, considering the other evidence which is relevant to the issue, outweigh the prejudice to the defendant which would result from its admission? People v. Casper, 631 P.2d 1134 (Colo. App. 1981); People v. Crespin, 631 P.2d 1144 (Colo. App. 1981); People v. Quintana, 682 P.2d 1226 (Colo. App. 1984); People v. Rivers, 727 P.2d 394 (Colo. App. 1986).

Test for admissibility is applied in Coll. v. Scanlan, 695 P.2d 314 (Colo. App. 1985); People v. Hansen, 708 P.2d 468 (Colo. App. 1985); Jacobs v. Com. Highland Theatres, Inc., 738 P.2d 6 (Colo. App. 1986); People v. Adrian, 744 P.2d 768 (Colo. App. 1987), aff'd, 770 P.2d 1243 (Colo. 1989); People v. Duncan, 754 P.2d 796 (Colo. App. 1988); People v. Czemerynski, 786 P.2d 1100 (Colo. 1990).

To be admissible, the prior act evidence must relate to a material fact, be logically relevant, and be independent of the intermediate inference of bad character and its probative value must outweigh the danger of unfair prejudice. People v. Wallen, 996 P.2d 182 (Colo. App. 1999); People v. Masters, 33 P.3d 1191

(Colo. App. 2001), aff'd, 59 P.3d 979 (Colo. 2002); People v. Casias, 2012 COA 117, 312 P.3d 208.

Prerequisites and factors to be considered by the trial court in determining whether to admit evidence of similar transactions under statute relating to sexual assault on a child are listed in State v. Janes, 942 P.2d 1331 (Colo. App. 1997).

Evidence of prior similar transactions is admissible when used to prove identity and motive and to rebut a defense of fabrication by a victim. Evidence introduced under the requirements of section (b) of this rule and § 16-10-301 that fails to satisfy these requirements may be disregarded as harmless error if the error is not one of constitutional dimension and the defendant fails to show a reasonable probability that the inadmissible detail contributed to his or her conviction. People v. Whitlock, 2014 COA 162, 412 P.3d 667.

Trial court committed reversible error in admitting evidence of a prior criminal incident where the incident was too remote in time to constitute res gestae evidence, knowledge of the prior incident was not necessary to enable the jury to understand testimony concerning the incident at issue, and the probative value of the references to the prior incident was significantly outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. People v. Frost, 5 P.3d 317 (Colo. App. 1999).

Trial court erred in admitting evidence of a prior act because it failed to meet the second and third prong of the People v. Spoto analysis. The prior act evidence did not show a tendency that can be separated from the prohibited inference that defendant acted a certain way in the past and therefore acted that way in this case and offered little probative value that was substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. Yusem v. People, 210 P.3d 458 (Colo. 2009).

Evidence of other crimes is admissible to show guilt of crime charged. If evidence which is competent, material, and relevant to the issue of defendant's guilt of the crime for which he is on trial is not admitted for the purpose of showing the defendant's guilt of other crimes, but rather because it is relevant to show the defendant's guilt of the crime for which he is being tried, then it is not error to admit such evidence. Tanksley v. People, 171 Colo. 77, 464 P.2d 862 (1970).

Evidence of defendant's gang affiliation admissible as res gestae. In murder trial, it would not be possible to tell the story of the events without referring to the relationship among the actors who were all gang members. People v. Martinez, 24 P.3d 629 (Colo. App. 2000).

Trial court erred in admitting portions of gang expert's testimony and portions of a witness's testimony concerning the operations of a gang in which defendant was allegedly a member. The evidence was inadmissible as res gestae evidence and as prior act evidence. People v. Trujillo, 2014 COA 72, 338 P.3d 1039.

Evidence that defendant's body showed signs of drug use, that defendant possessed police scanners commonly associated with drug distribution, and that defendant possessed a notebook that was the same type used by drug dealers to document sales admissible as res gestae. People v. Griffiths, 251 P.3d 462 (Colo. App. 2010).

Evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts is inadmissible if the logical relevance of the proffered evidence depends upon an inference that a person who has engaged in such misconduct has a bad character and the further inference that the defendant therefore engaged in the wrongful conduct at issue. People v. Spoto, 795 P.2d 1314 (Colo. 1990).

Admission of transcripts of defendant's internet chats with minor girls and photographs of minor girls engaged in sex acts found on defendant's computer was proper as proof of intent and motive. The evidence was highly probative of defendant's intent and motive by showing his sexual interest in preteen and young teenage girls and was relevant to refute defendant's defense that he was interested in a sexual relationship with the mother and not the daughter. People v. Douglas, 2012 COA 57, 296 P.3d 234.

Drawings and writings that were nothing more than evidence of defendant's violent nature simply authorized the inference that defendant had a bad character and killed the victim because of his bad character and thus were erroneously admitted as opposed to defendant's admissible drawings that paired sex with violence, represented rehearsal fantasy, evinced a hatred of women, or reflected specific aspects of the crime and thus revealed defendant's motive, preparation, plan, opportunity, or guilty knowledge; however, based on the totality of the circumstances, the jury was not substantially influenced by the inadmissible drawings and writings. Masters v. People, 59 P.3d 979 (Colo. 2002).

Existence of bench warrant was not relevant and admissible as "history of arrest evidence", because the purpose of history of arrest evidence is to show the existence or absence of consciousness of guilt, and, without evidence that defendant knew that the prior warrant existed, mere evidence that a prior warrant existed would not have been relevant to that issue. People v. Perry, 68 P.3d 472 (Colo. App. 2002).

Evidence of similar offenses admissible to show intent, motive, plan, scheme, or design. Evidence of similar offenses is admissible for certain purposes only, such as for the purpose of showing plan, scheme, design, intent, guilty knowledge, motive, or identity. Kostal v. People, 144 Colo. 505, 357 P.2d 70 (1960), cert. denied, 365 U.S. 804, 81 S. Ct. 471, 5 L. Ed. 462 (1961); Edmisten v. People, 176 Colo. 262, 490 P.2d 58 (1971); Howe v. People, 178 Colo. 248, 496 P.2d 1040 (1972); People v. Dago, 179 Colo. 1, 497 P.2d 1261 (1972); People v. Lamirato, 180 Colo. 250, 504 P.2d 661 (1972); People v. Ihme, 187 Colo. 48, 528 P.2d 380 (1974); People v. Czemerynski, 786 P.2d 1100 (Colo. 1990); People v. Bolton, 859 P.2d 311 (Colo. App. 1993); People v. Copeland, 976 P.2d 334 (Colo. App. 1998), aff'd on other grounds, 2 P.3d 1283 (Colo. 2000); People v. Fry, 74 P.3d 360 (Colo. App. 2002), aff'd on other grounds, 92 P.3d 970 (Colo. 2004).

The exceptions to the rule that the evidence of a defendant's criminal activity, unrelated to the offense charged, is inadmissible are limited to well defined and special situations where proof of other similar offenses will show the defendant's intent, motive, plan, scheme, or design with respect to the crime charged. People v. Goldsberry, 181 Colo. 406, 509 P.2d 801 (1973). But see People v. Salas, 2017 COA 63, 405 P.3d 416.

The exception to the rule, that evidence tending to prove the defendant guilty of a crime other than of the offense charged is not admissible, is applicable when the evidence is of a similar transaction and goes to the proof of intent, motive, plan, scheme, or design, and especially is this true where the other transactions are so connected in point of time with the offense under trial and so similar in character that a plan or scheme can be imputed as to all of them. People v. Moen, 186 Colo. 196, 526 P.2d 654 (1974).

Evidence of defendant's prior use of crack cocaine was properly admitted to prove motive and identity. People v. Dean, 2012 COA 106, 292 P.3d 1066, aff'd, 2016 CO 14, 366 P.3d 593.

Evidence of other crimes properly admitted to show absence of mistake and common plan or scheme. People v. Cook, 2014 COA 33, 342 P.3d 539.

Common plan evidence should only be admitted when the uncharged misconduct and the present crime have a nexus that shows that a defendant had a continuing plan to engage in certain criminal activity. The prosecution did not present any evidence that when the defendant engaged in the first drug deal (uncharged misconduct) he had a plan to engage in the second drug deal (charged misconduct) three months later. The court abused its discretion in admitting the evidence and the error was not harmless. People v. Williams, 2016 COA 48, __ P.3d __.

Court was justified in admitting evidence of a single prior incident since it was logically relevant under the doctrine of chances. Based on the relative similarity of the Pennsylvania sexual assault and the relative infrequency of two women separated by great geographical distance describing similar incidents was sufficient to admit the evidence. People v. Everett, 250 P.3d 649 (Colo. App. 2010).

Admission of prior act evidence when defendant had been acquitted of the prior act does not violate due process or double jeopardy. Kinney v. People, 187 P.3d 548 (Colo. 2008).

Informing jury of defendant's acquittal of a prior act is up to the discretion of the trial court on a case-by-case basis as long as the information's probative value substantially outweighs its prejudicial effect. Kinney v. People, 187 P.3d 548 (Colo. 2008).

An acquittal instruction is appropriate when the testimony or evidence presented at trial about the prior act indicates that the jury has likely learned or concluded that the defendant was tried for the prior act and may be speculating as to the defendant's guilt or innocence in that prior trial. Kinney v. People, 187 P.3d 548 (Colo. 2008).

Appellate court will review trial court's decision for an abuse of discretion. Kinney v. People, 187 P.3d 548 (Colo. 2008).

Trial court did not err by admitting evidence of other transactions when such evidence was determined to be relevant to prove intent, identity, motive, preparation or plan, and modus operandi and jury was instructed that evidence was to be used solely for those purposes. People v. Cook, 22 P.3d 947 (Colo. App. 2000).

Trial court did not abuse discretion in admitting evidence of prior incident of sexual assault on a child where incident had occurred eight years earlier, the evidence was introduced only to prove identity, and the jury was instructed that identity was the only purpose for which the evidence could be considered. People v. Apodaca, 58 P.3d 1126 (Colo. App. 2002).

Generally, evidence of prior acts is not admissible to prove the character of a person in order to show that the person acted in conformity therewith. People v. Gardner, 919 P.2d 850 (Colo. App. 1995).

However, such evidence may be admissible for proof of, among other things, motive and intent. People v. Gardner, 919 P.2d 850 (Colo. App. 1995).

Evidence is subject to exclusion under section (b) only if it is offered to prove the defendant acted in conformity with a character trait. Prosecution clearly did not offer the evidence for that purpose. People v. Harland, 251 P.3d 515 (Colo. App. 2010).

Evidence with reference to another transaction than that charged is admissible only as bearing upon the question of whether or not the defendant had a plan or design to produce a result of which the act charged was a part, and the jury can consider such evidence for no other purpose, for the defendant cannot be tried for or convicted of any offense not charged. Mays v. People, 177 Colo. 92, 493 P.2d 4 (1972).

Criteria used to determine admissibility of evidence of prior conduct to prove intent are (1) whether the defendant's intent is a material issue in dispute; (2) whether the prior conduct involved the same intent as in the charged offense; and (3) whether the probative value of the evidence outweighs its prejudicial effect. People v. Spoto, 772 P.2d 631 (Colo. App. 1988); Munson v. Boettcher & Co., 832 P.2d 967 (Colo. App. 1991); People v. Close, 867 P.2d 82 (Colo. App. 1993); People v. Underwood, 53 P.3d 765 (Colo. App. 2002).

Court properly admitted evidence of similar transactions in murder prosecution involving defendant's previous conduct of firing a handgun where such evidence was offered for the limited purpose of proving intent. People v. Willner, 879 P.2d 19 (Colo. 1994).

Proof of motive which is relevant and material not excluded. While evidence of offenses other than the one for which the defendant is on trial is not admissible, proof of motive will not be excluded merely because it may be prejudicial to the defendant, as long as it is relevant and material. Candelaria v. People, 177 Colo. 136, 493 P.2d 355 (1972).

Defendant's drawings and narratives of acts of violence that were similar to the manner in which the victim was killed were sufficiently similar so as to be logically relevant to defendant's motive, intent, and plan to commit the crime, and it was not error to introduce such evidence because intent was a material element required to be proven by the prosecution. People v. Masters, 33 P.3d 1191 (Colo. App. 2001), aff'd, 59 P.3d 979 (Colo. 2002).

Evidence of prior threats and acts of violence toward women admissible to establish motive for alleged attack on a woman. Evidence showed defendant's anger toward and hatred of women and could provide a basis for a jury finding that defendant used violence and threats of violence against women when they frustrated his desires in order to force them to comply with his wishes. People v. Cousins, 181 P.3d 365 (Colo. App. 2007).

Evidence admissible to show ill will. Ill will between the victim and the defendant is one purpose for which evidence of other crimes may be admissible. People v. Botham, 629 P.2d 589 (Colo. 1981); People v. Hulsing, 825 P.2d 1027 (Colo. App. 1991).

A prior attack by the defendant on the victim is admissible as evidence of intent, in that it is probative of malice and ill will toward the victim. People v. Curtis, 657 P.2d 990 (Colo. App. 1982).

Testimony related to activity allegedly occurring shortly before the time of the alleged crime, which was probative of ill will between the victim and defendant and relevant to the status of their relationship, is admissible. People v. St. John, 668 P.2d 988 (Colo. App. 1983).

Evidence of argument with passenger in defendant's own vehicle just prior to altercation with the victim, a driver of another vehicle, admissible. The evidence was used to show that defendant's angry state of mind persisted up to and included the time of the shooting and was permissible for jury to hear. People v. Rudnick, 878 P.2d 16 (Colo. App. 1993).

Evidence about defendant's emotional state after his friend left him at a convenience store three days prior to the charged offenses provided context for the jury and a more complete understanding of events leading up to the offenses at the friend's apartment. People v. Abu-Nantambu-El, 2017 COA 154, __ P.3d __.

Evidence that the night before the defendant shot the victim, he struck her and pulled her hair, was relevant to disproving defendant's claim that the shooting was an accident by showing the defendant's indifference to the victim's welfare and trial court's limiting instruction was sufficient to restrict the jury's consideration of evidence to that purpose. People v. Covington, 988 P.2d 657 (Colo. App. 1999), rev'd on other grounds, 19 P.3d 15 (Colo. 2001).

To resolve an issue of admissibility of prior acts, a court must determine whether the proffered evidence relates to a fact that is of consequence to determination of the action, whether evidence makes existence of a consequential fact more probable or less probable than it would be without such evidence, whether the logical relevance is independent of the prohibited intermediate inference that the defendant has bad character and probably acted in conformity with such bad character, and whether probative value of evidence is substantially outweighed by danger of unfair prejudice. People v. Spoto, 795 P.2d 1314 (Colo. 1990); People v. Garner, 806 P.2d 366 (Colo. 1991); People v. Ellsworth, 15 P.3d 1111 (Colo. App. 2000); People v. Martinez, 32 P.3d 520 (Colo. App. 2001); People v. Masters, 33 P.3d 1191 (Colo. App. 2001), aff'd, 59 P.3d 979 (Colo. 2002); People v. Cousins, 181 P.3d 365 (Colo. App. 2007).

Test applied in Hock v. New York Life Ins. Co., 876 P.2d 1242 (Colo. 1994); People v. Harris, 892 P.2d 378 (Colo. App. 1994); Winkler v. Rocky Mtn Conference, 923 P.2d 152 (Colo. App. 1995); People v. Marquantte, 923 P.2d 180 (Colo. App. 1995); People v. Shepard, 989 P.2d 183 (Colo. App. 1999); People v. Martinez, 32 P.3d 520 (Colo. App. 2001); People v. Masters, 33 P.3d 1191 (Colo.

App. 2001), aff'd, 59 P.3d 979 (Colo. 2002); People v. Rath, 44 P.3d 1033 (Colo. 2002); People v. Harrison, 53 P.3d 1103 (Colo. App. 2002); People v. Taylor, 131 P.3d 1158 (Colo. App. 2005); People v. Baker, 178 P.3d 1225 (Colo. App. 2007); Yusem v. People, 210 P.3d 458 (Colo. 2009); People v. Glasser, 293 P.3d 68 (Colo. App. 2011); People v. Conyac, 2014 COA 8M, 361 P.3d 1005; People v. Trujillo, 2014 COA 72, 338 P.3d 1039; People v. Harris, 2015 COA 53, 370 P.3d 231; People v. Bondsteel, 2015 COA 165, __ P.3d __; People v. Williams, 2016 COA 48, __ P.3d __; People v. Fortson, 2018 COA 46M, 421 P.3d 1236.

This test must be applied to issues of admissibility of prior acts, notwithstanding the language of § 16-10-301. The statute is permissive and contains no language that erodes the test. Thus, even when evidence of prior similar transactions is introduced in prosecutions specifically mentioned in the statute, an analysis under section (b) of this rule is still necessary. People v. Martinez, 36 P.3d 154 (Colo. App. 2001).

Spoto does not demand absence of an inference that a defendant has bad character and acts in conformity with such behavior; it only requires proof that evidence of bad character is logically relevant independent of such inference. People v. Masters, 33 P.3d 1191 (Colo. App. 2001), aff'd on other grounds, 59 P.3d 979 (Colo. 2002).

Evidence of defendant's possession and ownership of several knives was probative independent of an intermediate inference regarding the defendant's character. In trial where defendant allegedly stabbed victim, defendant's possession and ownership of the knives made it more probable that defendant had a knife when victim was stabbed and that defendant inflicted the wounds. Therefore, an inference about the defendant's character was not the only possible relevance of the knives, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting them as evidence. People v. Cordova, 293 P.3d 114 (Colo. App. 2011).

Reversible error to admit defendant's statement about prior accusations of misconduct absent compliance with the requirements of Spoto and Garner. Defendant's statement alone is not sufficient to justify admission of the evidence. People v. Novitskiy, 81 P.3d 1070 (Colo. App. 2003).

A defendant is on notice of the permissible purposes for which evidence of the defendant's prior bad acts is being offered under section (b) when the prosecutor states, at the hearing on the prosecution's motion to introduce similar transaction evidence, that the evidence was being offered to establish identity, guilty knowledge, intent, design, and motive. The defendant may not later claim that the prosecutor failed to articulate a ''precise evidential hypothesis by which a material fact can be permissibly inferred from the prior misconduct independent of the inference prohibited by [this rule]''. People v. Harding, 983 P.2d 29 (Colo. App. 1998), 17 P.3d 183 (Colo. App. 2000).

Testimony about prior incidents of other, similar alleged misconduct by church counselor with other counselees was not manifestly erroneous and thus was not improperly admitted in a civil action. DeBose v. Bear Valley Church of Christ, 890 P.2d 214 (Colo. App. 1994).

The rule is not limited in application only to evidence of other crimes but permits evidence of other wrongs or acts, provided the evidence is offered for the proof of a material issue and substantive and procedural prerequisites are met. People v. Campbell, 706 P.2d 431 (Colo. App. 1985); People v. Jackson, 748 P.2d 1326 (Colo. App. 1987); Douglas v. People, 969 P.2d 1201 (Colo. 1998).

The rule is not limited in application only to prior uncharged acts of the accused; the use of the word ''person'' in section (b) of this rule includes individuals other than the accused. People v. Harris, 892 P.2d 378 (Colo. App. 1994).

Evidence does not become inadmissible under this rule or under the ''rape shield'' statute, § 18-3-407, simply because it might indirectly cause the finder of fact to make an inference concerning the victim's prior sexual conduct. Where evidence of a person's prior acts is probative for reasons other than its tendency to show the person's propensity to perform similar acts at another time, the evidence is generally admissible. People v. Cobb, 962 P.2d 944 (Colo. 1998).

Evidence of prior similar transactions is admissible in cases of sexual assault on a child if such evidence is offered to show a common plan, scheme, design, identity, modus operendi, motive, guilty knowledge, or intent. People v. Adrian, 744 P.2d 768 (Colo. App. 1987), aff'd, 770 P.2d 1243 (Colo. 1989); People v. Bolton, 859 P.2d 311 (Colo. App. 1993); People v. Leonard, 872 P.2d 1325 (Colo. App. 1993); People v. Snyder, 874 P.2d 1076 (Colo. 1994); People v. Williams, 899 P.2d 306 (Colo. App. 1995); People v. Underwood, 53 P.3d 765 (Colo. App. 2002).

Evidence of a prior similar transaction was admissible in a case of sexual assault where the evidence related to the defendant made it more probable that the defendant was implementing a common plan to force an older woman with disabilities to submit to intercourse by force or violence. People v. Shores, 2016 COA 129, 412 P.3d 894.

Evidence that defendant had sexually assaulted other female members of his family at his house was properly admitted as prior act evidence. People v. Heredia-Cobos, 2017 COA 130, 415 P.3d 860.

Prosecutor improperly referenced and elicited evidence of other uncharged acts of sexual assault and sexual misconduct for propensity purposes, and did so without first seeking to admit the evidence, presenting an offer of proof, or obtaining a ruling. The misconduct undermined the fundamental fairness of the trial and cast serious doubt on the reliability of the judgment of conviction, warranting reversal. People v. Fortson, 2018 COA 46M, 421 P.3d 1236.

A prior act does not need to be similar in every respect to be admissible. People v. Masters, 33 P.3d 1191 (Colo. App. 2001), aff'd on other grounds, 59 P.3d 979 (Colo. 2002).

To refute the defense of recent fabrication, evidence of prior similar transactions is admissible in cases of sexual assault on a child. People v. Duncan, 33 P.3d 1180 (Colo. App. 2001).

Evidence of similar transactions in an incest case are admissible where there is sufficient and substantial similarity between the transactions and offense charged even though there were differences in the type of sexual activity. The evidence is also admissible on the issue of motive, and the trial court was not required to define motive for the jury. People v. Leonard, 872 P.2d 1325 (Colo. App. 1993).

When such prior similar transaction evidence is admitted, the court must require the prosecution to elect a specific act on which the jury is asked to convict or, in the alternative, provide the jury with a unanimity instruction. Woertman v. People, 804 P.2d 188 (Colo. 1991).

Evidence of prior criminal transactions is inadmissible where defendant was acquitted of similar act. The doctrine of collateral estoppel prevents the introduction of evidence of similar transactions for which a defendant has been acquitted. People v. Arrington, 682 P.2d 490 (Colo. App. 1983).

Evidence of other offenses is admissible where offenses are part of single transaction and an integral part of the total picture surrounding the offense with which the defendant is charged. People v. Manier, 184 Colo. 44, 518 P.2d 811 (1974); People v. Wells, 691 P.2d 361 (Colo. App. 1984); Litwinsky v. Zavaras, 132 F. Supp. 2d 1316 (D. Colo. 2001).

Or to establish chain of circumstances. Where evidence is not introduced to show a transaction as independent criminal activity, but is used as one circumstance in a chain of circumstances to establish the defendants' complicity, it is admissible. Kurtz v. People, 177 Colo. 306, 494 P.2d 97 (1972).

Evidence of prior acts may be admissible to rebut self-defense and defense of property defenses. Douglas v. People, 969 P.2d 1201 (Colo. 1998).

Evidence of separate motor vehicle theft was relevant when thefts were similar, and when following a crash of the separate motor vehicle, defendant possessed identification stolen at the time of first theft and falsely identified himself to police as the person whose identification he had stolen. People v. Shepard, 989 P.2d 183 (Colo. App. 1999).

Defendant's prior act was admissible to prove absence of accident. Where the prior act at issue was a violent one committed against the same child one week before the incident of physical abuse for which the defendant was on trial and where the basis for the evidence was to disprove defendant's defense of accident, the trial court did not err in admitting prior acts of the defendant as similar transaction evidence. People v. Fulton, 754 P.2d 398 (Colo. App. 1987).

In an action based on allegations of trespass and deceptive trade practices, trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the following evidence of prior similar acts to demonstrate absence of mistake or accident: (1) Testimony regarding a dispute over access to a subdivision owned by defendants; (2) a letter to defendants concerning another access dispute; and (3) testimony regarding prior real estate litigation in which defendants were accused of selling property without proper title. Walter v. Hall, 940 P.2d 991 (Colo. App. 1996), aff'd on other grounds, 969 P.2d 224 (Colo. 1998).

Exception recognized to show continuing scheme. A limited and well-defined exception is recognized where a similar act tends to establish the defendant's criminal culpability for the crime charged by showing that it was part of a continuing scheme and, hence, not the result of a mistake. People v. Mason, 643 P.2d 745 (Colo. 1982).

Evidence of defendant's prior acts properly admitted to show there was no mistake of fact. People v. Rowe, 2012 COA 90, 318 P.3d 57.

Failure to instruct jury on limited purpose for which evidence of similar transactions was admitted was not plain error. People v. Tidwell, 706 P.2d 438 (Colo. App. 1985); People v. Lucero, 724 P.2d 1374 (Colo. App. 1986).

While it is the better practice to issue a limiting instruction to the jury contemporaneously with the introduction of similar transactions evidence, when such an instruction is not requested, the failure to give one is not reversible error so long as the trial court properly applied the balancing test required to resolve the issue of admissibility. People v. Pineda, 40 P.3d 60 (Colo. App. 2001).

Judge should repeat limited-purpose instruction in written instructions in order to safeguard against potential misuse of other-crime evidence by the jury. People v. Garner, 806 P.2d 366 (Colo. 1991).

Evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts applies in civil cases if evidence relevant. While section (b) is more frequently applied in criminal prosecutions, it also applies in civil cases if the evidence is relevant to the issues. Coll. v. Scanlan, 695 P.2d 314 (Colo. App. 1985).

Evidence of a failure by a company to comply with a safety code or regulation at one point in time to support an allegation that the company failed to comply with safety regulations at another time does not satisfy any of the exceptions enumerated for admission of evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts. Bennett v. Greeley Gas Co., 969 P.2d 754 (Colo. App. 1998).

Evidence implicating defendant in another criminal case is admissible for purposes of identification. Hollis v. People, 630 P.2d 68 (Colo. 1981); People v. White, 680 P.2d 1318 (Colo. App. 1984).

Modus operandi. Where a witness testifies as to a second crime by the defendant, a crime for which the defendant is not being tried, the testimony is not prejudicial where it aids in the identification of the defendant, shows the same modus operandi, and where the judge gives a proper limiting instruction as to its use. People v. Dago, 179 Colo. 1, 497 P.2d 1261 (1972).

There is no error in the admission of evidence of another incident which, in addition to being closely proximate in time, involves features markedly similar to the offense charged. This evidence establishes a modus operandi that is highly probative of the issue of identity. People v. Madonna, 651 P.2d 378 (Colo. 1982).

To establish modus operandi as exception for the admission of another transaction, there must be a dissimilarity from the methods generally used in such offenses, and there must be a distinctive factor in the methods used. People v. Crespin, 631 P.2d 1144 (Colo. App. 1981).

Evidence of other crimes committed by the defendant is admissible where it is of similar crimes committed within the same geographical area within a few days, where similar methods were used, where the defendant himself introduced testimony pertaining to the transactions, and where the court followed proper procedures for the admission of such evidence. Stanmore v. People, 146 Colo. 445, 362 P.2d 1042 (1961), cert. denied, 368 U.S. 993, 82 S. Ct. 611, 7 L. Ed. 2d 529 (1962).

Modus operandi evidence of uncharged misconduct should be admitted only to prove the identity of the perpetrator. Defendant admitted that he was the one in the apartment with the informant, so there was no identity issue. The court erred in admitting the modus operandi evidence and the error was not harmless. People v. Williams, 2016 COA 48, __ P.3d __.

It is error to admit evidence of numerous crimes that are wholly dissimilar in character and committed hundreds of miles away from the scene of the crime charged and where it is admitted over the defendant's objections. Kostal v. People, 144 Colo. 505, 357 P.2d 70 (1960), cert. denied, 365 U.S. 804, 81 S. Ct. 471, 5 L. Ed. 462 (1961).

Evidence inadmissible even if elicited from defendant. Prejudicial evidence concerning other unrelated crimes elicited from the defendant on cross-examination does not make it admissible. Edmisten v. People, 176 Colo. 262, 490 P.2d 58 (1971).

Evidence of prior crime must be clear and convincing. The commission of the prior crime and the defendant's identity as the perpetrator of the crime must be shown by clear and convincing evidence. People v. Botham, 629 P.2d 589 (Colo. 1981).

Criteria used to determine admissibility of evidence of similar transactions in claims alleging fraud and violations of the Colorado Securities Act are: (1) Whether the proffered evidence relates to a material fact; (2) whether the evidence is logically relevant; (3) whether the logical relevance is independent of the intermediate inference that the defendants have bad character; and (4) whether the probative value is substantially outweighed by danger of unfair prejudice. Munson v. Boettcher & Co., Inc., 832 P.2d 967 (Colo. App. 1991); Abdelsamed v. New York Life Ins. Co., 857 P.2d 421 (Colo. App. 1992); People v. Rivera, 56 P.3d 1155 (Colo. App. 2002).

However, the trial court may properly admit similar transaction evidence under another evidentiary theory without complying with the procedural safeguards required by section (b). Thus, in a securities fraud case, evidence of a prior fraud conviction was admissible to show defendant's knowledge of prior misconduct that should have been disclosed to the victim. People v. Campbell, 58 P.3d 1148 (Colo. App. 2002).

Trial judge allowed substantial discretion when deciding admissibility of prior criminal activity. Because the trial judge must weigh the degree to which the charged criminal activity and an alleged prior criminal activity are similar, the bearing of the other transaction on the issues presented at the trial of the offense charged, and the degree to which the jury would be prejudiced by the other transaction, the trial judge is allowed substantial discretion when he decides regarding the admissibility of such evidence. People v. Ihme, 187 Colo. 48, 528 P.2d 380 (1974); People v. Hogan, 703 P.2d 634 (Colo. App. 1985).

Substantial discretion is accorded trial court to determine whether evidence of a similar transaction is relevant to a material issue and whether its relevance outweighs its prejudice.

People v. Crespin, 631 P.2d 1144 (Colo. App. 1981); Douglas v. People, 969 P.2d 1201 (Colo. 1998); People v. Rath, 44 P.3d 1033 (Colo. 2002).

Trial court's admission of evidence of other acts will be disturbed only when it is demonstrated that the trial court abused its discretion. Douglas v. People, 969 P.2d 1201 (Colo. 1998); People v. Harrison, 58 P.3d 1103 (Colo. App. 2002).

Trial court properly may base its preponderance of evidence determination solely on the parties' offers of proof. People v. Moore, 117 P.3d 1 (Colo. App. 2004).

Court need not conduct hearing where sufficient foundation established. A court's refusal to conduct an in camera hearing is proper where a sufficient foundation is established prior to the admission of evidence of other crimes. Mays v. People, 177 Colo. 92, 493 P.2d 4 (1972).

Although conditions should first be met. Where the trial court allows admission of evidence of other conduct of the defendant, there are four rather stringent conditions which should be met: (1) The prosecutor should advise the trial court of the purpose for which he offers the evidence; (2) if the court admits such evidence, it should then instruct the jury as to the limited purpose for which the evidence is being received and for which the jury may consider it; (3) the general charge should contain a renewal of the instruction on the limited purpose of such evidence; (4) the offer of the prosecutor and the instructions of the court should be in carefully couched terms — they should refer to ''other transactions'', ''other acts'', or ''other conduct'', and should eschew such designations as ''similar offenses'', ''other offenses'', ''similar crimes'', and so forth. Stull v. People, 140 Colo. 278, 344 P.2d 455 (1960); Kurtz v. People, 177 Colo. 306, 494 P.2d 97 (1972).

Including requiring prosecution to announce intention to offer evidence, and limiting instruction. Recognizing that evidence of past crimes has inhering in it damning innuendo likely to beget prejudice in the minds of the jurors, the best method requires that the prosecution announce its intention to offer evidence of other crimes for a limited purpose before it is introduced, and moreover, the trial court should issue a limiting instruction to the jury contemporaneously with the offering of such evidence, even though the defendant may not formally request such an instruction. People v. Scheidt, 182 Colo. 374, 513 P.2d 446 (1973).

Section (b) does not require pretrial notice as a prerequisite for admitting other bad act evidence. Even so, there may be circumstances in which such notice, even though not required by section (b), might be necessary to avoid prejudicial surprise to a defendant. People v. Warren, 55 P.3d 809 (Colo. App. 2002).

Trial court must give cautionary instructions limiting the purpose of evidence of similar offenses. People v. Goldsberry, 181 Colo. 406, 509 P.2d 801 (1973).

Where evidence of other criminal activity tends to show scheme, plan, intent, or design, the evidence will be admitted for that limited purpose, and in such cases, the trial judge is required to instruct the jury on the limited purpose for which the evidence of other criminal acts is admitted. People v. Geller, 189 Colo. 338, 540 P.2d 334 (1975).

Where evidence of other crimes is admitted under one of the exceptions listed in section (b) of this rule, the trial court is required to give cautionary instructions limiting the purpose of the evidence. People v. Beasley, 43 Colo. App. 488, 608 P.2d 835 (1979); People v. Rivers, 727 P.2d 394 (Colo. App. 1986); People v. Leonard, 872 P.2d 1325 (Colo. App. 1993).

The court must instruct the jury as to the limited purpose for which evidence of prior similar transactions is admitted and for which the jury may consider it. People v. Adrian, 744 P.2d 768 (Colo. App. 1987), aff'd, 770 P.2d 1243 (Colo. 1989).

Court's failure to give limiting instruction when admitting evidence of defendant's other bad acts was not error, where defense did not request the instruction during defendant's cross-examination. People v. Marion, 941 P.2d 287 (Colo. App. 1996).

Court's omission from the initial limiting instruction of the explicit purpose for which the bad act evidence was admitted was not error. Court rectified any potential prejudice to defendant by later informing the jury of the purpose. In addition, the court's written instruction reminded the jury that certain evidence had been admitted for a limited purpose. People v. Warren, 55 P.3d 809 (Colo. App. 2002).

Evidence of similar wrongs or acts are admissible to prove intent and motive. Evidence of insurance company's ongoing pattern of purposeful delays in paying benefits and economic motives in causing delay in the case at hand was properly admitted. Southerland v. Argonaut Ins. Co., 794 P.2d 1102 (Colo. App. 1990).

Testimony by the personnel director of her personal knowledge of defendant's outbursts of temper, including one directed toward the corporate victim's president which resulted in defendant's firing, were admissible as tending to establish a motive for defendant to retaliate against the corporation with bomb threats which were the basis of the charge against defendant. People v. Reaud, 821 P.2d 870 (Colo. App. 1991).

Testimony of undercover officer relating to alleged similar meetings between the officer and defendant accused of distribution and sale and possession of a controlled substance, without any indication of criminal activity, does not create an inference of other criminal acts and, therefore, was admissible to show the officer's ability to identify the defendant. People v. Tyler, 854 P.2d 1366 (Colo. App. 1993).

Reference to a "court appointed counselor" and a "court appointed therapist" by prosecution witnesses in sexual assault trial is not ''other crime'' evidence subject to the requirements of section (b). Trial court allowed the prosecution and other witnesses to refer to defendant's probation officer as a ''court appointed counselor'' and his offense-specific treatment provider as a ''court appointed therapist''. Because evidence of defendant's divorce was presented at trial, the court properly concluded that the jury could infer that defendant was in court-ordered counseling and therapy as part of the divorce proceedings and not as a condition of probation for a prior sexual assault conviction. People v. Mintz, 165 P.3d 829 (Colo. App. 2007).

Similar transaction evidence of whether the defendants engaged in a pattern or practice and a plan, scheme, or design in regard to the alleged fraud and violation of the Colorado Securities Act related to a material fact and the trial court erred in not allowing the plaintiffs to present such evidence where the probative value thereof was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. Munson v. Boettcher & Co., Inc., 832 P.2d 967 (Colo. App. 1991).

Application of the doctrine of chances is inappropriate where a previous incident was not similar enough to the current case to make the objective statistical inference, since similarity is crucial when the theory of logical relevance is the doctrine of chances, and where there was only one prior incident. People v. Spoto, 795 P.2d 1314 (Colo. 1990).

Evidence of other acts need not satisfy the doctrine of chances to also satisfy the second and third prongs of the four-part admissibility test articulated in People v. Spoto test. While the doctrine of chances provides one avenue by which other acts evidence can fulfill two components of that analysis, trial courts have no obligation to apply the doctrine of chances when applying People v. Spoto. People v. Jones, 2013 CO 59, 311 P.3d 274.

Evidence of similar incidents of forging and impersonating victim relevant to establish context in which the fraudulent forgeries and impersonations occurred. People v. Tyer, 796 P.2d 15 (Colo. App. 1990).

Evidence of prior escape attempts and willingness to use force against law enforcement officers was admissible in trial for murder of deputy during escape attempt. People v. Vialpando, 954 P.2d 617 (Colo. App. 1997).

However, trial court's failure to give limiting instruction held not plain error. Although the better practice is for trial court to issue a contemporaneous limiting instruction sua sponte, the failure to do so held not to be plain error. People v. Taylor, 804 P.2d 196 (Colo. App. 1990).

Reversal not required because trial court fails to sua sponte instruct a jury on the limited purposes for which a jury could consider evidence admitted under section (b). People v. Bondsteel, 2015 COA 165, __ P.3d __.

No reversible error where cautionary instructions given. When evidence relating to other prior incidents of a similar nature between the defendant and the prosecuting witness is admitted and the court gives an oral cautionary instruction to the jury on the limited relevance of similar act testimony at the conclusion of the prosecuting witness's testimony and a similar written instruction when the case is submitted to the jury, there is no reversible error. People v. Elliston, 181 Colo. 118, 508 P.2d 379 (1973).

Witness's inadvertent reference to earlier trial on same charges, promptly followed by corrective instructions from the court, held not prejudicial. People v. Fears, 962 P.2d 272 (Colo. App. 1997).

Failure to give instruction on petty offense harmless error. Where evidence of a petty offense by a defendant is introduced during a trial for a felony, the trial judge should instruct the jury as to its limited purpose, but his failure to do so is harmless error, considering the nature of the petty offense as compared with the gravity of the felony charge against the defendant. Kurtz v. People, 177 Colo. 306, 494 P.2d 97 (1972).

No plain error for admission of prior criminal history. The testimony in this case referred to a criminal matter remote in time and to a criminal case without confirmation that the case resulted in a conviction, therefore, there was no plain error. People v. McKinney, 80 P.3d 823 (Colo. App. 2003), rev'd on other grounds, 99 P.3d 1038 (Colo. 2004).

Minor variations from standards for admission of evidence of other crimes not prejudicial. Stanmore v. People, 146 Colo. 445, 362 P.2d 1042 (1961), cert. denied, 368 U.S. 993, 82 S. Ct. 611, 7 L. Ed. 2d 529 (1962).

Evidence of plaintiff's prior acts of negligence was admissible to support defendant's theory that negligence of plaintiff and others was the sole cause of the accident. Armentrout v. FMC Corp., 819 P.2d 522 (Colo. App. 1991).

Trial court did not err when it allowed the prosecution to introduce evidence of defendant's prior felony convictions as character evidence where the record supports the trial court's finding that the defendant opened the door for the prosecution to pose questions of the defendant's character by eliciting testimony that the defendant's aggression was directed only at a car until the victim provoked him, that aggressive behavior against the car was unusual, that defendant's girl friend had never witnessed that type of aggressive behavior, and that defendant was an "easy-going person" and had never harmed the witness. People v. Pennese, 830 P.2d 1085 (Colo. App. 1991).

Because defense initially adduced evidence concerning prior misconduct, trial court was not required to comply with the procedural requirements under section (b). People v. Deroulet, 22 P.3d 939 (Colo. App. 2000), rev'd on other grounds, 48 P.3d 520 (Colo. 2002).

Evidence of defendant's prior domestic violence conviction was properly admitted. The conviction was relevant for impeachment purposes and was not prejudicial since it was a single, isolated, brief statement that was not a significant part of the prosecution's cross-examination or closing argument. People v. Sommers, 200 P.3d 1089 (Colo. App. 2008).

While section (b) is more frequently applied in criminal prosecutions, it also applies in civil cases if the proffered evidence is relevant to the issues. Munson v. Boettcher & Co., Inc., 832 P.2d 967 (Colo. App. 1991).

Evidence of previous drug transactions between defendant and witness admissible to refute witness's testimony that their relationship was casual and pertained only to radio-controlled car racing, where trial court weighed probative value and potential prejudicial effect of evidence before ruling on admissibility. People v. Miller, 890 P.2d 84 (Colo. 1995).

Evidence that defendant had supplied witness with methamphetamine was relevant and admissible to refute defendant's claim that she did not knowingly possess controlled substance. People v. Warren, 55 P.3d 809 (Colo. App. 2002).

Court properly admitted evidence of defendant's drug dealing. The evidence related to material facts of identity, intent, and motive. The evidence in relation to other evidence at trial tended to show that defendant was the killer. People v. Sandoval-Candelaria, 328 P.3d 193 (Colo. App. 2011), rev'd on other grounds, 2014 CO 21, 321 P.3d 487.

Court did not err in allowing factual evidence of defendant's previous failure to register as a sex offender conviction in subsequent failure to register trial. The evidence showed defendant's knowledge of the requirement and negated any argument of mistake. People v. Foster, 2013 COA 85, 364 P.3d 1149.

Evidence of victim's letter to the court, over defendant's objection, was not admitted as proof of other acts but was properly admitted solely for impeachment purposes. People v. Covington, 988 P.2d 657 (Colo. App. 1999), rev'd on other grounds, 19 P.3d 15 (Colo. 2001).

Where defense is based on defendant's claim that he acted under duress, the jurors' perceptions regarding his credibility and weight to be given to his testimony substantially affect the outcome of the trial. Under these circumstances, refusal to admit evidence of the defendant's character for truthfulness is grounds for reversal. People v. Meinerz, 890 P.2d 130 (Colo. App. 1994).

Court erred in admission of other act evidence. The court wrongfully admitted evidence regarding: (1) Defendant's ownership of other weapons and knives that were unlike the murder knife; (2) defendant's training in martial arts and self-defense; (3) defendant's possession of reading material on martial arts and the use of knives; (4) defendant's drawing from several days after the murder; and (5) defendant's previous two dissimilar bar fights. Kaufman v. People, 202 P.3d 542 (Colo. 2009).

Trial court's error in admitting prior bad act evidence and limiting it to one count was not harmless error relating to the two remaining counts. It was error to admit the evidence for one count since the evidence's danger of unfair prejudice substantially outweighed any probative value. All three counts included a similar element regarding sexual conduct, and the prosecutor's opening and closing statements repeatedly urged the jury to consider the evidence beyond its limited scope, implying it was relevant to all counts. Therefore, it could not be presumed that the jury would follow the court's instruction limiting the evidence to only one of the three counts. All three convictions were reversed. Perez v. People, 2015 CO 45, 351 P.3d 397.

Court properly admitted other act evidence regarding defendant's knife and bayonet training and his religious beliefs. Kaufman v. People, 202 P.3d 542 (Colo. 2009).

Any error in admitting evidence was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt where such evidence consisted of exhibits denoting a charge originally filed against defendant prior to his entry into a plea agreement on the conviction that formed the basis for his adjudication as a habitual criminal and records from Ohio showing the charges for which defendant was convicted. People v. Moore, 841 P.2d 320 (Colo. App. 1992).

Any error in admitting testimony that someone matching defendant's description was seen driving defendant's car erratically and at a high rate of speed four hours prior to the accident did not substantially influence the verdict or affect the fairness of the trial. People v. Medrano-Bustamante, 2013 COA 139, 412 P.3d 581, aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds sub nom. Reyna-Abarca v. People, 2017 CO 15, 390 P.3d 816.

Similar transaction evidence held admissible. People v. Herrera, 633 P.2d 1091 (1981); People v. Mason, 643 P.2d 745 (Colo. 1982); People v. Adams, 678 P.2d 572 (Colo. App. 1984); People v. Montoya, 703 P.2d 606 (Colo.

App. 1985); People v. Mathes, 703 P.2d 608 (Colo. App. 1985); People v. Hogan, 703 P.2d 634 (Colo. App. 1985); O'Neal v. Reliance Mortg. Corp., 721 P.2d 1230 (Colo. App. 1986); People v. Conley, 804 P.2d 240 (Colo. App. 1990); People v. Leonard, 872 P.2d 1325 (Colo. App. 1993).

Evidence of prior criminal, wrongful, or bad acts perpetrated against others was inadmissible where the defendant failed to testify that he had knowledge of these acts and acted on the basis of that knowledge, and the trial court's rejection of such evidence was not an abuse of discretion. People v. Ibarra, 849 P.2d 33 (Colo. 1993).

No abuse of discretion found in admitting testimony regarding previous explosions not involving defendant when such testimony was briefly elicited during cross-examination of a witness to impeach witness's testimony about the safeness of natural gas and so limited in scope and use. Bennett v. Greeley Gas Co., 969 P.2d 754 (Colo. App. 1998).

It was not impermissible profiling where a psychological theory and analysis, founded on research and study, was used to provide a framework for the crime at hand and to examine and to give context to defendant's previous acts that were independently admissible; evidence was properly admitted since it was neither logically irrelevant nor unduly prejudicial, confusing, misleading, time-consuming, or cumulative. People v. Masters, 33 P.3d 1191 (Colo. App. 2001), aff'd on other grounds, 59 P.3d 979 (Colo. 2002).

Evidence showing that defendant had never been convicted of a crime was not evidence of a "pertinent trait". Further, nonoccurrence evidence is improper under C.R.E. 405 because it is not in the form of an opinion and it does not describe a specific instance of conduct. People v. Goldfuss, 98 P.3d 935 (Colo. App. 2004).

No abuse of discretion when trial court joined two sexual assault cases against defendant involving two victims, his daughters. The evidence from each case would have been admissible in the other case, the evidence was material to defendant's intent and common plan, and the evidence made it more likely defendant committed the crimes. Defendant's claim that he would have testified in one case, but not the other, making joinder improper did not rise to the level of prejudice. Defendant was still able to show the jury a police interview in which he claimed the same intoxication defense he claimed he would have testified to had the charges involving the other victim been tried separately. People v. Curtis, 2014 COA 100, 350 P.3d 949.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in limiting cross-examination of witness's involvement in a second robbery for which the witness was not convicted. The witness had already admitted past deceptions, and additional inquiry into the elaborate robbery scheme would have, at most, provided one more instance of that conduct. The trial court's decision that the information would have been cumulative and could confuse the jury was reasonable. People v. Clark, 2015 COA 44, 370 P.3d 197.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in limiting cross-examination of witness's involvement in a theft for which the witness was not convicted. The trial court reasonably determined that the defense attorney's follow-up question regarding the theft was not merely aimed at impeaching his credibility, but at maligning his character and conduct generally. People v. Clark, 2015 COA 44, 370 P.3d 197.

Evidence of defendant's other bad acts related to the family pets and step-siblings was relevant using the theory of the doctrine of chances to show that defendant's daughter's death was not accidental, but rather from an act of the defendant. In each instance, the defendant lost his temper and became physically abusive when a child or pet urinated in the house, the same circumstances that led to his daughter's death. People v. Weeks, 2015 COA 77, 369 P.3d 699.

Court properly admitted previous incident evidence based on imprecise offer of proof by the prosecution because the court explicitly acknowledged the inaccuracy in the second statement of the offer and still found the offer sufficient. People v. Raehal, 2017 COA 18, 401 P.3d 117.

Court's admission of sex toys and pornography that were not identified by the victims or found in a location described by the victims was in error. But the error does not require reversal since there was no reasonable probability that the evidence contributed to the conviction. People v. Relaford, 2016 COA 99, 409 P.3d 490.

Court erred in admitting prior act evidence that defendant hid from the police in a previous incident when those circumstances were not logically relevant to the question in this case of whether defendant knew police were chasing him or not. People v. Stewart, 2017 COA 99, 417 P.3d 882.

Applied in People v. Roybal, 775 P.2d 67 (Colo. App. 1989), cert. denied, 785 P.2d 917 (Colo. 1989); People v. Blehm, 791 P.2d 1177 (Colo. App. 1989), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, 817 P.2d 988 (Colo. 1991); People v. Adams, 867 P.2d 54 (Colo. App. 1993); People v. Collie, 995 P.2d 765 (Colo. App. 1999); People v. Cooper, 104 P.3d 307 (Colo. App. 2004).

Rule 405. Methods of Proving Character

(a) Reputation or opinion. In all cases in which evidence of character or a trait of character of a person is admissible, proof may be made by testimony as to reputation or by testimony in the form of an opinion. On cross-examination, inquiry is allowable into relevant specific instances of conduct.

(b) Specific instances of conduct. Except as limited by §§ 16-10-301 and 18-3-407, in cases in which character or a trait of character of a person is an essential element of a charge, claim or defense, proof may also be made of specific instances of that person's conduct.

(Federal Rule Identical Except for Statutory Limitation.)

Law reviews. For article, ''Hearsay in Criminal Cases Under the Colorado Rules of Evidence: An Overview'', see 50 U. Colo. L. Rev. 277 (1979). For article, ''The Use of Character to Prove Conduct: Rationality and Catharsis in the Law of Evidence'', see 58 U. Colo. L. Rev. 1 (1986-87).

Evidence may show character trait of aggression of victim. When the purpose of the evidence is to show a pertinent character trait of the victim from which it may be inferred that he was the initial aggressor, that trait may be shown by specific instances of past conduct. People v. Jones, 635 P.2d 904 (Colo. App. 1981).

But where theory of defense was that homicide was committed in self-defense against a homosexual assault and the victim's alleged homosexuality itself would not prove an element of self-defense, evidence of the victim's homosexuality could only be introduced via reputation or opinion evidence, not via a specific instance of conduct. People v. Miller, 981 P.2d 654 (Colo. App. 1998).

Reputation and rumor distinguished. People v. Erickson, 883 P.2d 511 (Colo. App. 1994).

Evidence in the form of reputation or opinion concerning a witness' character for truthfulness may be introduced to support the credibility of the person when the witness' character for truthfulness has been attacked; however, such testimony must be based on opinion held generally in a broad community. People v. Ayala, 919 P.2d 830 (Colo. App. 1995).

Reputation is distinguished from rumor in that is must be established over a period of time. People v. Ayala, 919 P.2d 830 (Colo. App. 1995).

Trial court has the responsibility to ensure that an adequate foundation has been laid for the introduction of reputation evidence. People v. Erickson, 883 P.2d 511 (Colo. App. 1994).

Defendant's offer of proof, consisting of opinions of two unnamed declarants, regarding victim's sexual orientation was mere rumor and not admissible as evidence of reputation in the community. People v. Erickson, 883 P.2d 511 (Colo. App. 1994).

Improper use of character evidence by permitting the prosecution to present evidence regarding the violent character of defendant's witnesses, purportedly in order to challenge their testimony regarding defendant's nonviolent character, was not objected to at trial court level on grounds of improper character evidence, and under standard of plain error, the admission of the improper character evidence did not so undermine the fundamental fairness of the trial itself as to cast serious doubt on the reliability of the judgment of conviction. People v. Deroulet, 22 P.3d 939 (Colo. App. 2000), rev'd on other grounds, 48 P.3d 520 (Colo. 2002).

Applied in People v. Jones, 675 P.2d 9 (Colo. 1984); People v. Thomas, 694 P.2d 1280 (Colo. App. 1984).

Rule 406. Habit; Routine Practice

Evidence of the habit of a person or of the routine practice of an organization, whether corroborated or not and regardless of the presence of eyewitnesses, is relevant to prove that the conduct of the person or organization on a particular occasion was in conformity with the habit or routine practice.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, ''Rule 406: Admissibility of Evidence Of Habit or Routine Practice'', see 23 Colo. Law. 2747 (1994).

Rationale behind rule. In case of doubt as to what a person has done, it may be considered more probable that he has done what he has been in the habit of doing, than that he acted otherwise. Bloskas v. Murray, 646 P.2d 907 (Colo. 1982).

Testimony that a person is a "cautious driver" is character evidence under CRE 404 and not habit evidence under this rule. People v. T.R., 860 P.2d 559 (Colo. App. 1993).

Applied in Bloskas v. Murray, 44 Colo. App. 480, 618 P.2d 719 (1980); Columbia Sav. and Loan Ass'n v. Zelinger, 794 P.2d 231 (Colo. 1990).

Rule 407. Subsequent Remedial Measures

When, after an event, measures are taken which, if taken previously, would have made the event less likely to occur, evidence of the subsequent measures is not admissible to prove negligence or culpable conduct in connection with the event. This rule does not require the exclusion of evidence of subsequent measures when offered for another purpose, such as proving ownership, control, or feasibility of precautionary measures, if controverted, or impeachment.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

COMMITTEE COMMENT

The phrase ''culpable conduct'' is not deemed to include proof of liability in a ''strict liability'' case based on defect, where the subsequent measures are properly admitted as evidence of the original defect. But see § 13-21-404, C.R.S. (1978 Supp.).

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, ''Rule 407: Subsequent Remedial Measures?'', see 20 Colo. Law. 895 (1991). For article, ''Applicability of C.R.E. 407 In Federal Court'', see 34 Colo. Law. 77 (Jan. 2005).

This rule is applicable in product liability cases involving allegation of inadequate warnings. Uptain v. Huntington Lab, Inc., 723 P.2d 1322 (Colo. 1986).

The "feasibility of precautionary measures" exception to this rule is applicable when the defendant contests the feasibility of precautionary measures at the time of the incident. Evidence of ''subsequent remedial measures'' may be used to impeach testimony that precautionary measures were not feasible at the time of the incident. Duggan v. Weld County Bd. of Comm'rs, 747 P.2d 6 (Colo. App. 1987).

Testimony as to subsequent remedial measures proper for impeachment. In a slip and fall case, where landlord testified to changes in a ditch owned by the landlord only prior to the time of the fall, questioning concerning whether landlord had previously testified that changes occurred after the fall was for impeachment purposes and was proper under this rule. Vallejo v. Eldridge, 764 P.2d 417 (Colo. App. 1988).

Evidence of subsequent remedial measures is admissible as evidence concerning the issue of visibility of the obstacle and to impeach expert on that issue. Martinez v. W.R. Grace Co., 782 P.2d 827 (Colo. App. 1989).

Evidence that one of the defendants had recommended installation of air inlet shutoff devices on gas hauling trucks fell within one of the exceptions of the rule. In light of defense offered by defendants that the devices create a hazard rather than a safety feature when used on truck engines, the evidence directly impeached the contention of the defendants. White v. Caterpillar, Inc., 867 P.2d 100 (Colo. App. 1993).

Evidence that, after plaintiff's accident, defendant changed its manual to move a warning from the end of a section to the beginning of the same section is excluded. To the extent that this evidence was offered to prove negligence or culpable conduct, it was not admissible. White v. Caterpillar, Inc., 867 P.2d 100 (Colo. App. 1993).

Only measures which take place after the "event" are excluded under this rule. Combined Com. Corp. v. Pub. Serv. Co., 865 P.2d 893 (Colo. App. 1993).

Evidence of subsequent remedial measures may be admitted to prove feasibility of precautionary measures, if that issue is controverted. Biosera, Inc. v. Forma Scientific, Inc., 941 P.2d 284 (Colo. App. 1996), aff'd, on other grounds, 960 P.2d 108 (Colo. 1998).

The provisions of this rule do not apply in strict liability claims that are premised on a design defect theory. The explicit language of the rule does not permit the exclusion of evidence of remedial actions in strict liability claims premised on design defect because the manufacturer's conduct, whether culpable or negligent, is not germane. Forma Scientific, Inc. v. Biosera, Inc., 960 P.2d 108 (Colo. 1998).

Applied in Larsen v. Archdiocese of Denver, 631 P.2d 1163 (Colo. App. 1981).

Rule 408. Compromise and Offers to Compromise

(a) Prohibited uses. Evidence of the following is not admissible on behalf of any party, when offered to prove liability for, invalidity of, or amount of a claim that was disputed as to validity or amount, or to impeach through a prior inconsistent statement or contradiction:

(1) furnishing or offering or promising to furnish accepting or offering or promising to accept a valuable consideration in compromising or attempting to compromise the claim; and

(2) conduct or statements made in compromise negotiations regarding the claim, except when offered in a criminal case and the negotiations related to a claim by a public office or agency in the exercise of regulatory, investigative, or enforcement authority.

(b) Permitted uses. This rule does not require exclusion if the evidence is offered for purposes not prohibited by subdivision (a). Examples of permissible purposes include proving a witness's bias or prejudice; negating a contention of undue delay; and proving an effort to obstruct a criminal investigation or prosecution.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article ''ADR: Explanations, Examples and Effective Use'', see 18 Colo. Law. 843 (1989). For article, ''Admissibility of a Party's Own Settlement Offer'', see 21 Colo. Law. 1893 (1992).

This rule applies to every offer of settlement and makes such offers inadmissible to prove liability. Therefore, the rule does not impose a condition on an offer of settlement. Further, an offer may be admissible under this rule for purposes other than to prove liability. Dillen v. HealthOne, L.L.C., 108 P.3d 297 (Colo. App. 2004).

Whether the statements contained in a letter plaintiff's counsel had written were actually made in the course of a "settlement negotiation" or "compromise" is a question of fact, and since there was evidentiary support for the trial court's finding that the letter was part of an effort to compromise the plaintiff's claims, that finding is binding on appeal. H&H Distributors v. BBC Intern., 812 P.2d 659 (Colo. App. 1990).

Even if the letter plaintiff's counsel had written constituted an "admission of fact", plaintiff's ''admission'' would be excludable under CRE 408 because it was made in a letter offering to settle the dispute. H&H Distributors v. BBC Intern., 812 P.2d 659 (Colo. App. 1990).

A document entitled "Settlement Detail" was admissible because it was a status report for defendant's use in the ordinary course of business, not for the purpose of discussing settlement with plaintiff. Scott Co. of California v. MK-Ferguson, 832 P.2d 1000 (Colo. App. 1991).

Situations in which someone acknowledges that a certain claim is valid or is valid to a certain extent, or statements to the effect: "I think your claim is worth 'X' number of dollars," are not offers within the meaning of CRE 408. Scott Co. of California v. MK-Ferguson, 832 P.2d 1000 (Colo. App. 1991).

The threshold question, which is a question of fact for the trial court, is whether the conduct or statements were made in settlement negotiations, for if they were not, the rule is inapplicable. Scott Co. of California v. MK-Ferguson, 832 P.2d 1000 (Colo. App. 1991).

This rule applies to statements made in regard to a settlement for a civil claim, not a criminal charge; therefore, statements made by a defendant to police concerning criminal charges are admissible at trial. People v. Butson, 2017 COA 50, 410 P.3d 744.

Evidence supported trial court's finding and was binding on appeal that the document was admissible because it was a status report prepared for defendants' use in the ordinary course of business, not for the purpose of discussing settlement with plaintiff. Scott Co. of California v. MK-Ferguson, 832 P.2d 1000 (Colo. App. 1991).

No error in admitting statements by plaintiff that a representative of defendants stated that he felt plaintiff's claims had merit in certain amount where court stated that situations in which someone acknowledges that a certain claim is valid or is valid to a certain extent, or statements to the effect: ''I think your claim is worth 'X' number of dollars,'' are not offers within the meaning of this rule. Scott Co. of California v. MK-Ferguson, 832 P.2d 1000 (Colo. App. 1991).

Rule 409. Payment of Medical and Similar Expenses

Evidence of furnishing or offering or promising to pay medical, hospital, or similar expenses occasioned by an injury is not admissible to prove liability for the injury.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

ANNOTATION

Evidence of defendant's offer to pay a plaintiff's medical expenses not admissible to establish liability. Bonser v. Shainholtz, 983 P.2d 162 (Colo. App. 1999), rev'd on other grounds, 3 P.3d 422 (Colo. 2000).

Rule 410. Offer to Plead Guilty; Nolo Contendere; Withdrawn Pleas of Guilty

Except as otherwise provided by statutes of the State of Colorado, evidence of a plea of guilty, later withdrawn, or a plea of nolo contendere, or of an offer to plead guilty or nolo contendere to the crime charged or any other crime, or of statements made in any connection with any of the foregoing pleas or offers, is not admissible in any civil or criminal action, case, or proceeding against the person who made the plea or offer. This rule shall not apply to the introduction of voluntary and reliable statements made in court on the record in connection with any of the foregoing pleas or offers where offered for impeachment purposes or in a subsequent prosecution of the declarant for perjury or false statement.

This rule shall be superseded by any amendment to the Colorado Rules of Criminal Procedure which is inconsistent with this rule, and which takes effect after the effective date of these Colorado Rules of Evidence.

COMMITTEE COMMENT

The Committee wishes to advise the Court of a proposed Federal Amendment to Rule 410 as follows:

Rule 410. Inadmissibility of Pleas, Plea Discussions, and Related Statements

Except as otherwise provided in this rule, evidence of the following is not admissible against the person who made the plea or was a party to the discussions, in any civil or criminal proceeding:

(1) a plea of guilty which was later withdrawn;

(2) a plea of nolo contendere;

(3) plea discussions with the attorney for the government, concerning the crime charged or any other crime, which do not result in a plea of guilty or which result in a plea of guilty later withdrawn; or

(4) statements made in the course of or as a consequence of such pleas or plea discussions.

However, such a statement is admissible in any proceeding wherein statements made in the course of or as a consequence of the same plea or plea discussions have been introduced, or in a criminal proceeding for perjury or false statement if the statement was made by the defendant under oath, on the record and in the presence of counsel.

FRE ADVISORY COMMITTEE NOTE: Present Rule 410 conforms to Rule 11(e)(6) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. A proposed amendment to Rule 11(e)(6) would clarify the circumstances in which pleas, plea discussions and related statements are inadmissible in evidence; see Advisory Committee Note thereto. The amendment proposed above would make comparable changes in Rule 410.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, ''Hearsay in Criminal Cases Under the Colorado Rules of Evidence: An Overview'', see 50 U. Colo. L. Rev. 277 (1979).

Application of this rule, when read in light of Crim. P. 11 (e)(6) and § 16-7-303, requires the exclusion of evidence of statements made by defendant during plea bargaining process only in regard to plea discussions with the attorney for the government. People v. Rollins, 759 P.2d 816 (Colo. App. 1988).

While the prosecuting attorney need not be physically present, his or her knowledge and consent to be bound by the plea discussions is an essential prerequisite to application of the rule. People v. Martinez, 36 P.3d 154 (Colo. App. 2001).

Defendant's unilateral choice to provide statements to law enforcement officers unauthorized to conduct plea negotiations failed to transform the statements into disclosures made ''in any connection with'' any offers to plead guilty. Such statements, therefore, did not fall within the ambit of this rule. People v. Martinez, 36 P.3d 154 (Colo. App. 2001).

Since this rule is substantially the same as Fed. R. Evid. 410, absent case authority in Colorado, federal cases on issue of whether a statement by defendant constitutes an inadmissable statement during plea negotiations are instructive in interpretations of this rule. People v. Rollins, 759 P.2d 816 (Colo. App. 1988).

"Conviction" as used in the habitual offender statute, includes a judgment of conviction entered upon a plea of nolo contendere. People v. Windsor, 876 P.2d 55 (Colo. App. 1993).

In the context of the bail bond statute, a plea of guilty, when accepted by the court which grants a deferred judgment and sentence, constitutes a ''conviction''. Evidence of the guilty plea is no longer admissible, however, after successful completion of the period of the deferred sentence. Hafelfinger v. District Court, 674 P.2d 375 (Colo. 1984).

A letter from the defendant to the county court judge constitutes an offer to plead nolo contendere to the crime charged and, therefore, should not have been admitted where the letter stated that the defendant did not want to contest the charges against him, that he did not wish to remain free, and that he hoped the court would exercise mercy and send him to a minimum security facility. People v. Flores, 902 P.2d 417 (Colo. App. 1994).

Where defendant was the first to refer to his initial insanity plea, he could not claim error when the court allowed the prosecution to explore his insanity plea. People v. Kruse, 819 P.2d 548 (Colo. App. 1991).

This rule does not bar the introduction, for impeachment purposes, of voluntary statements made to prosecutors after the acceptance of a plea agreement and the plea is subsequently withdrawn. People v. Butler, 929 P.2d 36 (Colo. App. 1996).

Sua sponte hearing on voluntariness not required, if there is no basis in the record for concluding the voluntariness of statements might be challenged. People v. Copenhaver, 21 P.3d 413 (Colo. App. 2000).

Statements in the court file, including defendant's written statement in support of a rejected plea agreement, are "on the record" and may be used for impeachment purposes. People v. Copenhaver, 21 P.3d 413 (Colo. App. 2000).

Defendant's statements made during polygraph not admissible under this rule when polygraph conducted as part of plea negotiation. Here, prosecution asked defendant to take a polygraph to see ''what type of plea may or may not be made'', thus constituting part of a plea negotiation; therefore, defendant is entitled to the implied promise of this rule. People v. Garcia, 169 P.3d 223 (Colo. App. 2007).

Statements defendant made in a federal case in accepting guilty plea and not in allocution for purposes of sentencing are admissible against the defendant in a state court case. People v. Rabes, 258 P.3d 937 (Colo. App. 2010).

Rule 411. Liability Insurance

Evidence that a person was or was not insured against liability is not admissible upon the issue whether he acted negligently or otherwise wrongfully. This rule does not require the exclusion of evidence of insurance against liability when offered for another purpose, such as proof of agency, ownership, or control, or bias or prejudice of a witness.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, ''Rule 411: Permitting Evidence of Insurance to Show Witness Bias'', see 30 Colo. Law. 41 (Jan. 2001). For article, ''Rule 411: Excluding Evidence of Insurance Offered to Show Witness Bias'', see 38 Colo. Law. 17 (Jan. 2009).

Allusion to insurance coverage improper. Evidence of a party's liability insurance is irrelevant to the question of whether he acted negligently or otherwise, and as such, any allusion to insurance coverage is improper. Prudential Prop. & Cas. Ins. Co. of Am. v. District Court, 617 P.2d 556 (Colo. 1980); Jacob v. Com. Highland Theatres, Inc., 738 P.2d 6 (Colo. App. 1986).

However, mere inadvertent or incidental mention of insurance before the jury does not automatically call for a mistrial. Unless prejudice is shown, there is no reversible error in denying a mistrial. Jacob v. Com. Highland Theatres, Inc., 738 P.2d 6 (Colo. App. 1986).

Court properly denied mistrial motion where party, rather than counsel, made incidental reference to insurance, counsel did not exploit the reference, party was promptly admonished by counsel, the court outside the presence of the jury ordered counsel to avoid any future reference to the existence of insurance, and movant failed to request jury instruction to disregard testimony. Miller v. Rowtech, LLC, 3 P.3d 492 (Colo. App. 2000).

And the fact that the defendant's expert witness had a "substantial connection" with the defendant's insurer is probative of bias, and admission of evidence of such connection was within the trial court's discretion. Bonser v. Shainholtz, 3 P.3d 422 (Colo. 2000).

PRIVILEGES

Rule 501. Privileges Recognized Only as Provided

Except as otherwise required by the Constitution of the United States, the Constitution of the State of Colorado, statutes of the State of Colorado, rules prescribed by the Supreme Court of the State of Colorado pursuant to constitutional authority, or by the principles of the common law as they may be interpreted by the courts of the State of Colorado in light of reason and experience, no person has a privilege to:

(1) Refuse to be a witness; or

(2) Refuse to disclose any matter; or

(3) Refuse to produce any object or writing; or

(4) Prevent another from being a witness or disclosing any matter or producing any object or writing.

Rule applies to all stages of an action and is applicable to pretrial discovery. Sherman v. District Court, 637 P.2d 378 (Colo. 1981).

Third persons may testify to overheard confidential conversations. If parties sustaining confidential relations to each other hold their conversation in the presence and hearing of third persons, whether they be necessarily present as police officers or indifferent bystanders, such third persons are not prohibited from testifying to what they heard. People in Interest of R.G., 630 P.2d 89 (Colo. App. 1981).

News reporter has no privilege to refuse to respond to subpoena. Where a news reporter, who is a first-hand observer of criminal conduct, is subpoenaed to testify and to produce relevant documents in the course of a valid grand jury investigation or criminal trial, there is no privilege under the Colorado constitution to refuse to respond to a subpoena. Pankratz v. District Court, 199 Colo. 411, 609 P.2d 1101 (Colo. 1980).

Hospital inspection committees' privilege not expanded. Absent legislative action and in light of the general policy favoring liberal discovery, the public interest in the confidentiality of hospital inspection committees is insufficient to warrant judicial expansion of the privilege contained in § 12-43.5-102(3)(e). Sherman v. District Court, 637 P.2d 378 (Colo. 1981).

Rule 502. Attorney-Client Privilege and Work Product; Limitations on Waiver

The following provisions apply, in the circumstances set out, to disclosure of a communication or information covered by the attorney-client privilege or work-product protection.

(a) Disclosure Made in a Colorado Proceeding or to a Colorado Office or Agency; Scope of a Waiver. When the disclosure is made in a Colorado proceeding or to an office or agency of a Colorado state, county, or local government and waives the attorney-client privilege or work-product protection, the waiver extends to an undisclosed communication or information in a Colorado proceeding only if:

(1) the waiver is intentional;

(2) the disclosed and undisclosed communications or information concern the same subject matter; and

(3) they ought in fairness to be considered together.

(b) Inadvertent Disclosure. When made in a Colorado proceeding or to an office or agency of a Colorado state, county, or local government, the disclosure does not operate as a waiver in a Colorado proceeding if:

(1) the disclosure is inadvertent;

(2) the holder of the privilege or protection took reasonable steps to prevent disclosure; and

(3) the holder promptly took reasonable steps to rectify the error, including (if applicable) following C.R.C.P. 26(b)(5)(B).

(c) Disclosure Made in a Federal or other State Proceeding. When the disclosure is made in a proceeding in federal court or the court of another state and is not the subject of a court order concerning waiver, the disclosure does not operate as a waiver in a Colorado proceeding if the disclosure:

(1) would not be a waiver under this rule if it had been made in a Colorado proceeding; or

(2) is not a waiver under the law governing the state or federal proceeding where the disclosure occurred.

(d) Controlling Effect of a Court Order. A Colorado court may order that the privilege or protection is not waived by disclosure connected with the litigation pending before the court - in which event the disclosure is also not a waiver in any other proceeding.

(e) Controlling Effect of a Party Agreement. An agreement on the effect of disclosure in a Colorado proceeding is binding only on the parties to the agreement, unless it is incorporated into a court order.

(f) Definitions. In this rule:

(1) ''attorney-client privilege'' means the protection that applicable law provides for confidential attorney-client communications; and

(2) ''work-product protection'' means the protection that applicable law provides for tangible material (or its intangible equivalent) prepared in anticipation of litigation or for trial.

ARTICLE VI
WITNESSES

Rule 601. General Rule of Competency

Every person is competent to be a witness except as otherwise provided in these rules, or in any statute of the State of Colorado.

COMMITTEE COMMENT

The present rule preserves the general Colorado rule under § 13-90-101, et seq., C.R.S.; and the exceptions listed in §§ 13-90-102 through 13-90-108.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article ''The Child Witness'', see 22 Colo. Law. 1201 (1993).

Determination within trial court's discretion. Determination of the competency of a witness is a matter within the trial court's discretion. People v. District Court, 647 P.2d 1206 (Colo. 1982).

Testimonial incapacity due to age is not a bar to admission of a hearsay statement which would otherwise be admissible in evidence as res gestae. People v. Roark, 643 P.2d 756 (Colo. 1982).

Witness presumed competent when never adjudicated insane. People v. Galloway, 677 P.2d 1380 (Colo. App. 1983).

A witness's intoxication, alone, is not sufficient to determine that the witness is incompetent to testify. There is nothing in the record that indicated the witness lacked the capacity to observe, recollect, communicate, and understand the oath to tell the truth. The witness was thoroughly cross-examined by defense counsel and the court informed the jury of the witness's intoxication status. There was no error in allowing the witness's testimony. People v. Alley, 232 P.3d 272 (Colo. App. 2010).

Further, a witness's intoxication, alone, does not require the court to conduct a competency hearing. The court has wide latitude to determine whether to admit an intoxicated witness's testimony and it is the jury's role to determine the witness's credibility. People v. Alley, 232 P.3d 272 (Colo. App. 2010).

Procedures for cases involving posthypnotic testimony are as follows: (1) Party intending to elicit such testimony at trial should timely advise opposing party of that fact and make available for inspection any records dealing with the hypnosis sessions. (2) The proponent of the testimony bears the burden of establishing the reliability of such testimony whenever a challenge is made to its admissibility. (3) The preponderance of evidence is the suitable standard for resolving this issue. People v. Romero, 745 P.2d 1003 (Colo. 1987), cert. denied, 485 U.S. 990, 108 S. Ct. 1296, 99 L. Ed. 2d 506 (1988).

Hypnotized witness competent to testify to statements made prior to hypnosis if there is an accurate record of prehypnotic recollection which helps insure reliability. People v. Angelini, 706 P.2d 2 (Colo. App. 1985).

Posthypnotic testimony. Trial courts must make an individualized inquiry in each case to determine whether the trial testimony of a witness who has been hypnotized will be sufficiently reliable to qualify for admission. This rule is incompatible with either a per se rule of admissibility or a per se rule of inadmissibility. To the extent that People v. Quintanar, 659 P.2d 710 (Colo. App. 1982), adopts such a per se rule of inadmissibility, it is expressly overruled. People v. Romero, 745 P.2d 1003 (Colo. 1987), cert. denied, 485 U.S. 990, 108 S. Ct. 1296, 99 L. Ed. 2d 506 (1988).

The central inquiry at a challenge to admissibility is whether, notwithstanding the events occurring during the hypnosis session, the witness' trial testimony will be sufficiently reliable to be admissible. The trial court should consider the totality of circumstances bearing on the issue of reliability and should make adequate findings so as to permit meaningful appellate review. People v. Romero, 745 P.2d 1003 (Colo. 1987), cert. denied, 485 U.S. 990, 108 S. Ct. 1296, 99 L. Ed. 2d 506 (1988).

Witness who has been hypnotically relaxed without questioning or suggestion has not thereby been rendered incompetent to testify, although evidence of relaxation technique may be used to impeach witness' credibility. People v. McKeehan, 732 P.2d 1238 (Colo. App. 1986), cert. denied, 753 P.2d 243 (Colo. 1988).

Applied in Wise v. Hillman, 625 P.2d 364 (Colo. 1981).

Rule 602. Lack of Personal Knowledge

A witness may not testify to a matter unless evidence is introduced sufficient to support a finding that he has personal knowledge of the matter. Evidence to prove personal knowledge may, but need not, consist of the testimony of the witness himself. This rule is subject to the provisions of Rule 703, relating to opinion testimony by expert witnesses.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, ''Admissibility of Governmental Studies to Prove Causation'', see 11 Colo. Law. 1822 (1982). For article, ''Tips for Working With Evidence in Domestic Relations Cases'', see 31 Colo. Law. 87 (June 2002).

This rule is a specialized application of CRE 104(b) regarding conditionally relevant evidence. In a personal injury case by a husband against his employer, the question of whether the husband's spouse had personal knowledge as to the husband's admissions regarding the fraudulent nature of his claim was for the jury to determine in accordance with CRE 104(b). The trial court erred in not admitting, as conditionally relevant evidence, testimony of a wife as to admissions made by the wife's spouse about the fraudulent nature of his personal injury claim against his employer even though there was an issue about whether the admission was actually made by the spouse or based on the wife's dream. The proper analysis by the court in determining the admissibility of the wife's testimony should have been whether the jury could reasonably find by a preponderance of the evidence that the conditional fact, i.e. that the wife had personal knowledge of admissions made by her spouse regarding the fraudulent nature of his claim. Burlington Northern R. Co. v. Hood, 802 P.2d 458 (Colo. 1990).

The threshold for establishing the personal knowledge requirement is not very high and may be inferable from sources other than the witness and from the total circumstances surrounding the matter that is the subject of the witness's testimony. As long as there is evidence before the trial court such that the jury could reasonably find that the witness has personal knowledge of the event, the witness should be permitted to testify and the question of credibility and weight should be left for the jury to resolve. Burlington Northern R. Co. v. Hood, 802 P.2d 458 (Colo. 1990); People v. Garcia, 826 P.2d 1259 (Colo. 1992).

Trial courts may allow summary witness testimony if, in their discretion, they determine that the evidence is sufficiently complex and voluminous that a summary witness would assist the trier of fact. Murray v. Just In Case Bus. Lighthouse, 2016 CO 47M, 374 P.3d 443.

In those circumstances, summary witnesses may satisfy this rule's personal-knowledge requirement by examining the underlying documentary evidence on which they based their summary testimony. Murray v. Just In Case Bus. Lighthouse, 2016 CO 47M, 374 P.3d 443.

A better practice is to issue a limiting instruction in conjunction with the testimony. Murray v. Just In Case Bus. Lighthouse, 2016 CO 47M, 374 P.3d 443.

Where the witness was not qualified as an expert and the witness had no personal experience with the maintenance expenses on the property, evidence presented as to the amount of future maintenance expenses was legally insufficient. Pomeranz v. McDonald's Corp., 843 P.2d 1378 (Colo. 1993).

Testimony of summary witness who did not have personal knowledge admissible under this rule. Witness who reviewed and summarized documents could provide the jury with a summary analysis of the documents and the information contained in the documents that had been admitted into evidence. Just in Case Bus. Lighthouse, LLC v. Murray, 2013 COA 112M, 383 P.3d 1, aff'd, 2016 CO 47M, 374 P.3d 443.

Applied in Wise v. Hillman, 625 P.2d 364 (Colo. 1981); Nat'l Sur. Corp. v. Citizens State Bank, 651 P.2d 460 (Colo. App. 1982); Graham v. Lombardi, 784 P.2d 813 (Colo. App. 1989).

Rule 603. Oath or Affirmation

Before testifying, every witness shall be required to declare that he will testify truthfully, by oath or affirmation administered in a form calculated to awaken his conscience and impress his mind with his duty to do so.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

Rule 604. Interpreters

An interpreter is subject to the provisions of these rules relating to qualification as an expert and the administration of an oath or affirmation that he will make a true translation.
(Federal Rule Identical.)

ANNOTATION

A translating witness may testify without first being certified as an interpreter if he or she has personal knowledge of the relevant conversation or evidence, is capable of testifying to a translation of its contents without misleading the jury, and is subject to cross-examination. People v. Munoz-Casteneda, 2012 COA 109, 300 P.3d 944.

Rule 605. Competency of Judge as Witness

The judge presiding at the trial may not testify in that trial as a witness. No objection need be made in order to preserve the point.
(Federal Rule Identical.)

Rule 606. Competency of Juror as Witness

(a) At the trial. A member of the jury may not testify as a witness before that jury in the trial of the case in which the juror is sitting. No objection need be made in order to preserve the point.

(b) Inquiry into validity of verdict or indictment. Upon an inquiry into the validity of a verdict or indictment, a juror may not testify as to any matter or statement occurring during the course of the jury's deliberations or to the effect of anything upon his or any other juror's mind or emotions as influencing him to assent to or dissent from the verdict or indictment or concerning his mental processes in connection therewith. But a juror may testify about (1) whether extraneous prejudicial information was improperly brought to the jurors' attention, (2) whether any outside influence was improperly brought to bear upon any juror, or (3) whether there was a mistake in entering the verdict onto the verdict form. A juror's affidavit or evidence of any statement by the juror may not be received on a matter about which the juror would be precluded from testifying.

COMMITTEE COMMENT

Rule 606(b) has been amended to bring it into conformity with the 2006 amendments to the federal rule, providing that juror testimony may be used to prove that the verdict reported was the result of a mistake in entering the verdict on the verdict form. The federal amendment responded to a divergence between the text of the Rule and the case law that had established an exception for proof of clerical errors. See Fed. R. Evid. 606(b) advisory committee notes (2006 Amendments); see also Stewart v. Rice, 47 P.3d 316 (Colo. 2002).

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, ''Rule 606(b): Competency of Jurors as Witnesses'', see 25 Colo. Law. 47 (Mar. 1996). For article, ''Admissibility of Juror Affidavits Under C.R.E. 606(b)'', see 32 Colo. Law. 61 (Mar. 2003). For article, ''People v. Harlan: The Colorado Supreme Court Takes a Step Toward Eliminating Religious Influence on Juries'', see 83 Den. U.L. Rev. 613 (2005).

Where a juror makes a clear statement that indicates he or she relied on racial stereotypes or animus to convict a criminal defendant, the sixth amendment requires that the no-impeachment rule give way in order to permit the trial court to consider the evidence of the juror's statement and any resulting denial of the jury trial guarantee. Pena-Rodriguez v. Colorado, __ U.S. __, 137 S. Ct. 855, 197 L.

Ed. 2d 107 (2017).

Not every offhand comment indicating racial bias or hostility will justify setting aside the no-impeachment bar to allow further judicial inquiry. For the inquiry to proceed, there must be a showing that one or more jurors made statements exhibiting overt racial bias that cast serious doubt on the fairness and impartiality of the jury's deliberations and resulting verdict. To qualify, the statement must tend to show that racial animus was a significant motivating factor in the juror's vote to convict. Whether that threshold showing has been satisfied is a matter committed to the substantial discretion of the trial court in light of all the circumstances, including the content and timing of the alleged statements and the reliability of the proffered evidence. Pena-Rodriguez v. Colorado, __ U.S. __, 137 S. Ct. 855, 197 L. Ed. 2d 107 (2017).

Purpose of this rule is to reinforce the finality of jury verdicts, to protect the sanctity of jury deliberations, and to safeguard the privacy of jurors; however, in cases where result of jury deliberations are substantially undermined due to fundamental flaws in deliberation process, courts must weigh these policies against overriding concern that parties to judicial process be assured of fair result. Ravin v. Gambrell by and through Eddy, 788 P.2d 817 (Colo. 1990).

Section (b) has three fundamental purposes: To promote finality of verdicts, shield verdicts from impeachment, and protect jurors from harassment and coercion. Stewart v. Rice, 47 P.3d 316 (Colo. 2002).

Section (b) allows juror testimony on the question of whether extraneous prejudicial information was improperly brought to the jurors' attention. People v. Harlan, 109 P.3d 616 (Colo. 2005).

The common law in Colorado supports a plain meaning application of section (b) and its two stated exceptions. Stewart v. Rice, 47 P.3d 316 (Colo. 2002).

Section (b) precludes the use of jurors' post-verdict statements to the court to impeach the unanimous verdict. Granting of new trial based upon jurors statements improper even if statements made prior to the jury being disbursed. Hall v. Levine, 104 P.3d 222 (Colo. 2005).

This rule contains no exception for clerical error. Stewart v. Rice, 47 P.3d 316 (Colo. 2002).

The Colorado supreme court amended section (b) in 2007 to add an exception for a mistake in entering a verdict on the verdict form. Malpica-Cue v. Fangmeier, 2017 COA 46, 395 P.3d 1234.

The mistake exception in section (b) is narrow and limited to cases in which the verdict rendered is not the verdict to which the jury agreed. Malpica-Cue v. Fangmeier, 2017 COA 46, 395 P.3d 1234.

An exception to the rule that a trial court cannot reconvene a discharged jury applies when the jury has not yet dispersed, there is no evidence that the jury has been subjected to outside influences from the time of the initial discharge to the time of re-empanelment, and the jury remains under the de facto control of the court. It was appropriate to modify a judgment that relied on an ambiguous verdict form based on the proceedings following the discharge of the jury because the foregoing requirements were met. Hanna v. State Farm Ins. Co., 169 P.3d 267 (Colo. App. 2007).

Trial court erred in refusing to reconvene a discharged jury the day the trial ended. The jurors, who were still in the courthouse, made a mistake on the verdict form and wanted to fix it. Malpica-Cue v. Fangmeier, 2017 COA 46, 395 P.3d 1234.

Jury foreman's statements concerning a possible clerical mistake in filling out dollar amounts of verdict forms held not precluded by this rule. Kading v. Kading, 683 P.2d 373 (Colo. App. 1984).

Jury foreman's affidavit that a clerical error was made on the verdict form justifies an evidentiary hearing on the issue to ascertain the jurors' true verdict. Malpica-Cue v. Fangmeier, 2017 COA 46, 395 P.3d 1234.

The affidavit does not, by itself, require changing the verdict. The court must attempt to ascertain whether the foreman's position actually reflects the views of all of the jurors. Malpica-Cue v. Fangmeier, 2017 COA 46, 395 P.3d 1234.

Manner in which district court polled jury regarding perceived inconsistent verdicts exceeded the bounds of section (b). Court violated rule by engaging in a detailed and lengthy conversation with the jury regarding its deliberative confusion. Where none of the rule's exceptions applied, the manner of the court's questioning of the jury was obviously erroneous as it resulted in impermissible jury testimony that revealed the mental processes of the jurors. People v. Juarez, 271 P.3d 537 (Colo. App. 2011).

A two-part inquiry determines whether extraneous prejudicial information was improperly brought to the jurors' attention. First, the court decides whether extraneous information was improperly before the jury, and then, second, based on the objective "typical juror" standard, the court determines whether use of the extraneous information posed a reasonable probability of prejudice to the defendant. This inquiry is a mixed question of law and fact. The appellate court defers to the trial court's findings of historical facts if supported by competent evidence and reviews the conclusions of law de novo. People v. Harlan, 109 P.3d 616 (Colo. 2005).

Extraneous information encompasses any information that is not properly received into evidence or included in the court's instructions. Extraneous information is improper whether or not the court specifically warned against its use. People v. Harlan, 109 P.3d 616 (Colo. 2005).

Competent evidence supports the trial court's finding that the jury considered extraneous information in the jury room in the form of Bible passages related to the death penalty. People v. Harlan, 109 P.3d 616 (Colo. 2005).

Text messages stored on cell phone not extraneous information. Text messages at issue were stored in cell phone that was admitted into evidence without qualification or limitation, and the jury used the cell phone as a cell phone is intended to be used by turning it on and discovered information within the scope and purview of the admitted evidence. People v. Garrison, 2012 COA 132M, 303 P.3d 117.

Jurors may rely on their professional and educational expertise to inform their deliberations so long as they do not bring in legal content or specific factual information learned from outside the record. Kendrick v. Pippin, 252 P.3d 1052 (Colo. 2011).

Juror's pre-existing personal expertise or knowledge of a general nature does not constitute extraneous information. Juror may use his or her particular pre-existing knowledge of mathematics to analyze admitted evidence of relevant locations and distances and the speed of defendant's vehicle. Kendrick v. Pippin, 222 P.3d 391 (Colo. App. 2009), rev'd on other grounds, 252 P.3d 1052 (Colo. 2011).

Juror's statement during deliberations regarding the severity of a charged offense does not constitute extraneous information because the statement was based on the juror's general knowledge or personal experience. Therefore, the statement cannot be used to impeach the verdict. People v. Holt, 266 P.3d 442 (Colo. App. 2011).

In order to determine whether improper introduction of extraneous information into the jury room created a reasonable possibility that the jury's verdict was influenced to the detriment of the defendant, the following factors may be considered: (1) How the extraneous information relates to critical issues in the case; (2) how authoritative the source consulted is; (3) whether a juror initiated the search for extraneous information; (4) whether the information obtained by one juror was brought to the attention of another juror; (5) whether the information was presented before the jury reached a unanimous decision; and (6) whether the information would be likely to influence a typical juror to the detriment of the defendant. People v. Harlan, 109 P.3d 616 (Colo. 2005).

A reasonable possibility exists that Bible material introduced into the jury room could have influenced a typical juror to vote for the death penalty instead of a life sentence; therefore, the defendant was prejudiced, and the death penalty sentence must be vacated. People v. Harlan, 109 P.3d 616 (Colo. 2005).

Use of dictionary by a juror to obtain a definition of the crime with which the defendant was charged was improper and constituted misconduct. Wiser v. People, 732 P.2d 1139 (Colo. 1987).

However, defendant bears the burden of proving that use of a dictionary definition posed a reasonable possibility of prejudice to him. People v. Holt, 266 P.3d 442 (Colo. App. 2011).

Juror's use of the internet to obtain information about a drug prescribed to the defendant was improper and constituted misconduct. People v. Wadle, 77 P.3d 764 (Colo. App. 2003), aff'd on other grounds, 97 P.3d 932 (Colo. 2004).

Inquiry by juror about source of jury instructions to friend who was a legal secretary was misconduct which had potential for distorting the deliberations of the jury. Wiser v. People, 732 P.2d 1139 (Colo. 1987).

Section (b) bars a court from considering juror affidavits if they do not address matters within the two stated exceptions: Extraneous prejudicial information improperly brought to the juror's attention or improper outside influence exerted upon a juror. Stewart v. Rice, 47 P.3d 316 (Colo. 2002); People v. Richardson, 184 P.3d 755 (Colo. 2008).

A jury verdict may not be impeached by affidavit except in very limited circumstances involving external influence improperly bearing upon the jury. People v. Graham, 678 P.2d 1043 (Colo. App. 1983), cert. denied, 467 U.S. 1216, 104 S. Ct. 2660, 81 L. Ed. 2d 366 (1984).

A jury verdict in a criminal case may not generally be impeached by affidavits of jurors unless there has been external influence on the jury or there has been jury misconduct. People v. Collins, 730 P.2d 293 (Colo. 1986); People v. Garcia, 752 P.2d 570 (Colo. 1988); People v. Burke, 2018 COA 166, __ P.3d __.

Defendant convicted of theft by receiving may not use affidavit of jury foreman to show that jury's finding regarding value of items involved in theft was based on speculation. People v. McCoy, 764 P.2d 1171 (Colo. 1988).

Affidavits concerning jurors' mental processes held inadmissible. Rome v. Gaffrey, 654 P.2d 333 (Colo. App. 1982); People v. Collins, 730 P.2d 293 (Colo. 1986); Ravin v. Gambrell by and through Eddy, 788 P.2d 817 (Colo. 1990); Davis v. Lira, 817 P.2d 539 (Colo. App. 1991), rev'd on other grounds, 832 P.2d 240 (Colo. 1992).

Juror's affidavit about her physical condition and her position as holding out alone against other jurors cannot be received under this rule.

Gambrell by and through Eddy v. Ravin, 764 P.2d 362 (Colo. App. 1988), aff'd, 788 P.2d 817 (Colo. 1990).

Juror's affidavit and testimony about her physical condition and its effect on her ability to hold out against the other jurors' yelling constituted an improper inquiry into her thought processes and emotions and was, therefore, inadmissible. People v. Ferrero, 874 P.2d 468 (Colo. App. 1993).

Juror's affidavits concerning mental processes in determining the amount of the verdict, including specific statements that the damages awarded were to pay for the plaintiff's attorney fees were not admissible and could not be used to impeach the jury award. Munoz v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 968 P.2d 126 (Colo. App. 1998).

Trial court properly considered affidavit alleging coercion against a juror and hearing testimony from juror who asserted the misconduct. People v. Collins, 730 P.2d 293 (Colo. 1986).

Testimony concerning jurors' mental processes held inadmissible and such testimony cannot serve as basis for denial of defendant's postconviction motion. People v. Crespin, 682 P.2d 58 (Colo. App. 1984), rev'd on other grounds, 721 P.2d 688 (Colo. 1986).

Witness's testimony as to the juror's fear was an improper inquiry into the juror's thought processes and emotions and was, therefore, inadmissible. People v. Harrison, 746 P.2d 66 (Colo. App. 1987).

Testimony at hearing as to the jurors' emotional reactions to extraneous information was excludable as improper inquiry into the jurors' thought processes and emotions during deliberations. People v. Ferrero, 874 P.2d 468 (Colo. App. 1993).

Court may only consider evidence of objective circumstances and overt coercive acts by other members of jury and may not consider the effect this conduct had on the minds of the jurors. People v. Rudnick 878 P.2d 16 (Colo. App. 1993).

A juror may not testify as to the wrong exercise of his judgment or his confusion on the law or the facts or his misunderstandings. People v. Collins, 730 P.2d 293 (Colo. 1986).

Courts are precluded by section (b) from engaging in direct post-verdict investigations into the deliberative processes of jurors. Wilson v. O'Reilly, 867 P.2d 92 (Colo. App. 1993).

But where court simply asked the juror if this in fact was her verdict and where only the juror's answers to the court's questions discussed the jury's deliberations, court's actions were consistent with section (b). People v. Barnard, 12 P.3d 290 (Colo. App. 2000).

When juror was questioned about whether the verdict in favor of defendant as reported by a written special verdict was her verdict and juror responded "no", judge should have declared a mistrial or directed the jurors to deliberate further; by engaging in extended questioning as to why the juror had said the verdict was not hers, the court and counsel improperly delved into the deliberations and mental processes of the jurors and risked unduly influencing the juror to conform to the signed verdict. Simpson v. Stjernholm, 985 P.2d 31 (Colo. App. 1998).

Trial court erred by failing to strike affidavit of juror in which he stated he dissented from the jury's award because he thought the award inadequate. Neil v. Espinoza, 747 P.2d 1257 (Colo. 1987).

Rule applicable to the impeachment of a certificate of ascertainment and assessment in eminent domain proceedings. Aldrich v. District Court, 714 P.2d 1321 (Colo. 1986).

To prevail on motion for new trial on basis of juror testimony alleging misconduct, movant must establish he was prejudiced by the misconduct. People v. Hernandez, 695 P.2d 308 (Colo. App. 1984); Wiser v. People, 732 P.2d 1139 (Colo. 1987); People v. Garcia, 752 P.2d 570 (Colo. 1988); Ravin v. Gambrell by and through Eddy, 788 P.2d 817 (Colo. 1990); People v. Wadle, 77 P.3d 764 (Colo. App. 2003), aff'd on other grounds, 97 P.3d 932 (Colo. 2004).

Test for setting aside jury verdicts in both civil and criminal actions is not whether the impropriety actually influenced a juror, but whether it had the capacity of doing so. Ravin v. Gambrell by and through Eddy, 778 P.2d 817 (Colo. 1990).

One seeking to set aside a verdict based on allegations of improper extraneous influence on the jury must establish the fact of such influence and also that there was a reasonable possibility of prejudice. Wilson v. O'Reilly, 867 P.2d 92 (Colo. App. 1993).

Evidentiary hearing on jury misconduct. In order to constitute grounds for setting aside a verdict because of any unauthorized or improper communication with the jury, it is incumbent upon defendant to show that he was prejudiced thereby. The determination of whether prejudice has occurred is a matter within the sound discretion of the trial court. People v. Heller, 698 P.2d 1357 (Colo. App. 1984), rev'd on other grounds, 712 P.2d 1023 (Colo. 1986); People v. Garcia, 752 P.2d 570 (Colo. 1988).

Review of whether a new trial is required because of juror misconduct is a mixed question of law and fact. The court must apply a normal deferential standard to the trial court's factual findings, but review de novo the trial court's conclusions of law. People v. Wadle, 77 P.3d 764 (Colo. App. 2003), aff'd, 97 P.3d 932 (Colo. 2004).

Defendant not entitled to a new trial as a result of influence upon two jurors by other jurors absent evidence of threats, abuse, or any coercion beyond mere argumentation. People v. Black, 725 P.2d 8 (Colo. App. 1986).

To prevail on a motion for a new trial based on exposure of jurors to extraneous information or influences, defendant must establish that he was prejudiced by the exposure. People v. Harrison, 746 P.2d 66 (Colo. App. 1987).

Prejudice is shown if the jurors' exposure to extraneous information or influences establishes a reasonable possibility that the extraneous information affected the verdict. People v. Harrison, 746 P.2d 66 (Colo. App. 1987).

However, defendant cannot claim prejudice resulting from his own conduct as a ground for setting aside the verdict. People v. Harrison, 746 P.2d 66 (Colo. App. 1987).

In determining whether a new trial is required due to juror misconduct, the court must determine whether there is a reasonable possibility that the extraneous contact or influence affected the verdict, so as to require a new trial only where there is a reasonable possibility that verdict was tainted by introduction of outside information or influences into jury deliberations. Wiser v. People, 732 P.2d 1139 (Colo. 1987); People v. Wadle, 77 P.3d 764 (Colo. App. 2003), aff'd, 97 P.3d 932 (Colo. 2004).

New trial required where there was reasonable possibility that jury verdict was affected by bailiff's remark that if a verdict could not be reached the judge might make jury deliberate for up to two weeks. Gambrell by and through Eddy v. Ravin, 764 P.2d 362 (Colo. App. 1988), aff'd, 788 P.2d 817 (Colo. 1990).

Trial court erred by failing to consider part of a juror's affidavit discussing another juror's potential misrepresentation or concealment of prejudicial beliefs during voir dire. Black v. Waterman, 83 P.3d 1130 (Colo. App. 2003).

Trial court properly considered affidavits of three jurors in determining whether an envelope containing defendant's suppressed statement which had been accidentally taken to the jury room affected the jury's determination. People v. Smith, 856 P.2d 26 (Colo. App. 1992).

Trial court abused its discretion in denying a motion for new trial which was filed because the jury foreman obtained extraneous information that was pertinent to the issue of the credibility of the accused versus the victim. People v. Fox, 862 P.2d 1000 (Colo. App. 1993).

No abuse of discretion to deny new trial when jury foreman obtained extraneous information that was not pertinent to the issue at trial and did not share that information with the other jurors. People v. Bohl, 2018 COA 152, __ P.3d __.

Trial court erred in granting a new trial based on the jury's supposed mental processes. Despite any initial appearance of confusion, once a jury has rendered a consistent final verdict it is inappropriate to set aside the verdict because of the court's speculation that the confusion may have continued. People v. Angell, 917 P.2d 312 (Colo. App. 1995).

Rule applicable to deliberations prior to a verdict. The integrity of jury deliberations and assurance that jurors will be protected from coercion are no less important in the process of attempting to reach a verdict than they are in the process of polling a jury once the verdict is reached. To hold otherwise would disserve the purpose of section (b) and expose individual jurors to potential harassment or pressure that the rule was designed to avoid. People v. Rivers, 70 P.3d 531 (Colo. App. 2002).

Court did not err in giving a special interrogatory to the jury before the jury announced its decision. The special interrogatory was necessary to ensure the validity of the verdict on the felony murder charge and was not a post-verdict statement under section (b). People v. Doubleday, 2012 COA 141M, 369 P.3d 595, rev'd on other grounds, 2016 CO 3, 364 P.3d 193.

Applied in T.S. v. G.G., 679 P.2d 118 (Colo. App. 1984); People v. Cornett, 685 P.2d 224 (Colo. App. 1984); People v. Mollaun, 194 P.3d 411 (Colo. App. 2008).

Rule 607. Who May Impeach

The credibility of a witness may be attacked by any party, including the party calling him. Leading questions may be used for the purpose of attacking such credibility.

COMMITTEE COMMENT

This rule abandons the traditional position against impeaching one's own witness. The additional sentence in the Colorado version of the rule should assist in resolving conflicts now existing between Rule 43(b) of the Colorado Rules of Civil Procedure and § 13-90-116, C.R.S. A minority opinion concerning Rule 607 feels that this rule should be restricted to civil cases since it may be prosecutorial misconduct for a prosecutor to attack the credibility of his own witness without a showing of hostility or surprise. The likelihood of a defendant's being found guilty because of a ''coparticipant'' hesitation to testify against the defendant may prejudice the jury to such an extent that a fair trial cannot be obtained.

Rule 608. Evidence of Character and Conduct of Witness

(a) Opinion and reputation evidence of character. The credibility of a witness may be attacked or supported by evidence in the form of opinion or reputation, but subject to these limitations: (1) the evidence may refer only to character for truthfulness or untruthfulness, and (2) evidence of truthful character is admissible only after the character of the witness for truthfulness has been attacked by opinion or reputation evidence or otherwise.

(b) Specific instances of conduct. Specific instances of the conduct of a witness, for the purpose of attacking or supporting the witness' character for truthfulness other than conviction of crime as provided in §13-90-101, may not be proved by extrinsic evidence. They may, however, in the discretion of the court, if probative of truthfulness or untruthfulness, be inquired into on cross-examination of the witness (1) concerning the witness' character for truthfulness or untruthfulness, or (2) concerning the character for truthfulness or untruthfulness of another witness as to which character the witness being cross-examined has testified.

The giving of testimony, whether by an accused or by any other witness, does not operate as a waiver of the accused's or the witness' privilege against self-incrimination when examined with respect to matters that relate only to character for truthfulness.

Common-law rule. Prior to the adoption of the Colorado rules of evidence, Colorado adhered to the general rule that evidence of misdeeds was inadmissible for the purpose of attacking a witness's character in regard to his truthfulness. People v. Saldana, 670 P.2d 14 (Colo. App. 1983).

While this rule allows for extrinsic evidence under certain circumstances, the adoption of this rule has not materially altered the previously established general rule. People v. Saldana, 670 P.2d 14 (Colo. App. 1983).

Right to confront and cross-examine witnesses not absolute. An accused's constitutional right to confront and to cross-examine witnesses is not absolute and may be limited to accommodate other legitimate interests in the criminal trial process. People v. Cole, 654 P.2d 830 (Colo. 1982).

Trial court properly limited cross-examination where answers sought by defendant involved cumulative or collateral testimony concerning co-defendant's credibility and were only marginally related to commission of charged crime. People v. Ray, 109 P.3d 996 (Colo. App. 2004).

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in limiting the cross-examination related to a witness's felony conviction. The record shows the jury had ample information about the felony conviction and background to assess the witness's credibility. People v. Lane, 2014 COA 48, 343 P.3d 1019.

Bias on the part of a witness is a state of mind and only those demands which can influence the mind at the moment of testifying are relevant to a demonstration of bias. People v. Simmons, 182 Colo. 350, 513 P.2d 193 (1973).

Impeachment inquiry directed to witness's credibility, not character. In impeaching a witness, the inquiry ought to be directed to the witness's credibility rather than to his moral character. People v. Couch, 179 Colo. 324, 500 P.2d 967 (1972).

Rule applies only to the admissibility of character evidence. Proffered evidence of whether a witness was testifying truthfully in the case did not constitute a general character attack on witness. People v. Hall, 107 P.3d 1073 (Colo. App. 2004).

Cross-examination held to be proper attack upon witness's credibility, not his character. McCune v. People, 179 Colo. 262, 499 P.2d 1184 (1972).

The exclusion of proper opinion testimony is harmless where the defense can fully cross-examine the witness whose credibility was to be impeached, and where that witness's credibility was otherwise impeached through the testifying witness. People v. Davis, 312 P.3d 193 (Colo. App. 2010), aff'd on other grounds, 2013 CO 57, 310 P.3d 58 (Colo. 2013).

Defendant who takes witness stand is subject to same tests of credibility as any other witness. People v. Neal, 181 Colo. 341, 509 P.2d 598 (1973).

Trial court did not err by admitting extrinsic evidence of defendant's audiotaped statement to rebut his testimony. It is well established that evidence may be introduced that specifically contradicts a defendant's direct testimony. By making statements on redirect examination that contradicted his testimony during cross-examination, defendant opened the door to the extrinsic evidence to contradict his statements on cross-examination. People v. Thomas, 2014 COA 64, 345 P.3d 959.

Defendant may be examined on previous felony convictions. A defendant who elects to be a witness in his own behalf in a criminal case subjects his credibility to question, like any other witness, and he may therefore be examined on the matter of previous felony convictions. People v. Thompson, 182 Colo. 198, 511 P.2d 909 (1973).

Nature of particular crime for which defendant was convicted. Although evidence of prior felony convictions is admissible to impeach a defendant who voluntarily takes the stand and testifies in his own behalf, such an inquiry is not confined to the mere fact of the conviction of some crime, but the nature or name of the particular crime of which the witness was convicted may be brought out. Mays v. People, 177 Colo. 92, 493 P.2d 4 (1972).

Where defendant testifies, motion to suppress prior conviction denied. The denial of the defendant's motion to suppress his prior felony conviction is proper where the defendant takes the witness stand to testify. People v. Neal, 181 Colo. 341, 509 P.2d 598 (1973).

Where, before the defendant testifies in his defense, he moves that the court prohibit the prosecution from showing on cross-examination that he has been previously convicted of a felony, the court correctly denies the motion to suppress as it is without discretion to prohibit such evidence. People v. Bueno, 183 Colo. 304, 516 P.2d 434 (1973).

Defendant's past crimes may be used to discredit defendant's witness. Where a defendant places a psychiatrist on the stand to testify that the defendant is a person unlikely to commit the crime in question, it is not error to permit the district attorney, in an effort to discredit this testimony, to refer to the defendant's past criminal behavior in an effort to discredit the psychiatrist's testimony during cross-examination of the psychiatrist. People v. Pacheco, 180 Colo. 39, 502 P.2d 70 (1972).

Prosecutor must ask impeachment questions in good faith. The prosecutor may in cross-examination ask the witness if he has been convicted of a felony, but he must ask the question in good faith. People v. Lewis, 180 Colo. 423, 506 P.2d 125 (1973); People v. Thompson, 182 Colo. 198, 511 P.2d 909 (1973).

Judge to determine good faith. When prosecutors are about to impeach witnesses by reason of former felonies, they should advise the judge on what background they will propound questions, and the judge must determine, within his discretion, whether good faith is present. People v. Lewis, 180 Colo. 423, 506 P.2d 125 (1973); People v. Thompson, 182 Colo. 198, 511 P.2d 909 (1973).

Where defendant denies prior felony convictions, counsel to make offer of proof. The only way that counsel can establish good faith in asking questions about prior felonies if the defendant denies any prior felony convictions is to make an offer of proof to the court. People v. Thompson, 182 Colo. 198, 511 P.2d 909 (1973).

Proof not necessary where defendant admits prior convictions. When a defendant exercises his statutory privilege of testifying, all prior felony convictions and their nature may be shown to impeach his testimony, and where a defendant admits any prior convictions, proof thereof is not necessary. Candelaria v. People, 177 Colo. 136, 493 P.2d 355 (1972).

Felony inquiry reversible error where prosecution knows there are no prior convictions. Asking the defendant, who has taken the stand in his own defense, whether he has ever been arrested for a felony when the district attorney knows that there is no prior felony conviction is reversible error. People v. Robles, 183 Colo. 4, 514 P.2d 630 (1973).

Use of void prior convictions need not require reversal. The error implicit in the use of void prior convictions for impeachment purposes need not necessarily require reversal, particularly where the error is found to be harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. People v. Neal, 187 Colo. 12, 528 P.2d 220 (1974).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in limiting cross-examination of specific details related to witness's prior conviction. The defense had already established defendant's previous criminal conduct and the number of times defendant had been dishonest with the police. The factual details underlying defendant's previous conviction were collateral matters with little probative force, and the jury had sufficient information to determine the witness's credibility. People v. Clark, 2015 COA 44, 370 P.3d 197.

Limiting instruction required. When prior felony convictions are elicited during defendant's testimony, a limiting instruction is required. People v. Goldsberry, 181 Colo. 406, 509 P.2d 801 (1973).

Drug abuse by witness excluded. Where testimony concerning alleged drug abuse by the witness was irrelevant, the trial court does not abuse its discretion in refusing to allow the questioning. People v. St. John, 668 P.2d 988 (Colo. App. 1983).

Generally, witness cannot be impeached by acts of "bad character". Generally, impeachment of a witness's character is confined to showing former convictions of a felony, but not acts or occurrences which show "bad character". People v. Barker, 189 Colo. 148, 538 P.2d 109 (1975).

It is improper to impeach a witness with convictions short of felonies, but absent a contemporaneous objection, this error is not reversible. People v. Ciari, 189 Colo. 325, 540 P.2d 1094 (1975).

Impeachment of witnesses with questions concerning arrests is generally prohibited. People v. Ciari, 189 Colo. 325, 540 P.2d 1094 (1975); People v. Lesslie, 939 P.2d 443 (Colo. App. 1996).

Evidence of witness's plea agreements in prior, unrelated cases was properly excluded. People v. Fears, 962 P.2d 272 (Colo. App. 1997).

Questions on arrests allowed on recross where arrest record put in evidence. Where on redirect examination, an attempt is made to restore a witness's credibility, and the defense counsel asks the witness if he has been in any further trouble since a misdemeanor conviction, and the witness responds that he has been in jail a few times, but that he had been mistakenly arrested for aggravated assault, the prosecutor on recross-examination is properly permitted to explore the arrest record of the witness. People v. Ciari, 189 Colo. 325, 540 P.2d 1094 (1975).

Where hostility of witness not shown, restricted examination allowed. The court does not err in restricting examination of a police detective whom the defendant calls as his own witness, on the basis that the officer is a hostile witness, where no foundation is shown that the officer is in fact a hostile witness. People v. York, 189 Colo. 16, 537 P.2d 294 (1975).

Witness giving a character opinion is not required to have long-term acquaintance with witness to be impeached. Honey v. People, 713 P.2d 1300 (Colo. 1986).

Testimony which referred to a specific occasion of truthfulness and which did not express an opinion as to character may not be admitted under this rule. People v. Koon, 713 P.2d 410 (Colo. App. 1985); People v. Ross, 745 P.2d 277 (Colo. App. 1987).

Such testimony constitutes reversible error and requires a new trial. People v. Oliver, 745 P.2d 222 (Colo. 1987).

Evidence of prior misdemeanor convictions involving false statements to police held admissible for impeachment purposes where focus was on the specific instances of lying, not on the convictions themselves, and jury was instructed to consider the evidence only for the limited purpose of evaluating defendant's credibility. People v. Gillis, 883 P.2d 554 (Colo. App. 1994).

Evidence of misdemeanor shoplifting is not admissible under section (b). Although shoplifting involves a form of dishonesty, a disregard of property rights of others is not probative of a propensity to be truthful or untruthful. People v. Jones, 971 P.2d 243 (Colo. App. 1998), overruled in People v. Segovia, 196 P.3d 1126 (Colo. 2008).

Shoplifting is a specific instance of conduct that is probative of truthfulness pursuant to section (b). People v. Segovia, 196 P.3d 1126 (Colo. 2008) (overruling People v. Jones, 971 P.2d 243 (Colo. App. 1998)).

Because theft generally is not probative of character for truthfulness, exclusion of evidence of theft by prosecution witness did not constitute abuse of discretion by trial court. People v. Knight, 167 P.3d 141 (Colo. App. 2006).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by ruling that evidence of check fraud was admissible, because check fraud involved taking property in a fraudulent manner and was probative of character for truthfulness. McGill v. DIA Airport Parking, LLC, 2016 COA 165, 395 P.3d 1153.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding statements related to a 10-year-old felony shoplifting incident. Because of the remoteness of the incident and its dissimilarity with the case at hand, admission of the evidence would have caused undue delay, waste of time, and confusion and was properly excluded under C.R.E. 403. People v. Williams, 89 P.3d 492 (Colo. App. 2003).

A trial court has discretion to exclude evidence under section (b) of this rule on C.R.E. 403 grounds. Because the subject of the witness's prior narcotics arrest raised a collateral issue, the trial court acted within the range of permissible choices in precluding defendant from asking the witness whether she had been truthful in her prior statements on that subject. People v. Wilson, 2014 COA 114, 356 P.3d 956.

Rape trauma syndrome evidence generally inadmissible to determine whether an adult woman was in fact raped. However, in cases involving child incest victims, upon proper foundation, evidence of incest victim psychology may be admitted. People v. Koon, 724 P.2d 1367 (Colo. App. 1986); People v. Lucero, 724 P.2d 1374 (Colo. App. 1986).

Expert's evaluation of victim inadmissible. Where the credibility of a child victim for truth and veracity has not been attacked, the admission of the testimony of a clinical psychologist, who has been appointed by the court for a competency evaluation of the victim, is error. People v. Ortega, 672 P.2d 215 (Colo. App. 1983).

Where the credibility of a child victim for truth and veracity has not been attacked, the admission of the testimony of a social worker as to the truth and veracity of child victims in general is prejudicial error. People v. Snook, 729 P.2d 1026 (Colo. App. 1986), aff'd, 745 P.2d 647 (Colo. 1987).

Interviewer's and mother's statements regarding child victims' testimony improperly bolstered the children's credibility and led to the impermissible inference that the children were telling the truth about the incident. Venalonzo v. People, 2017 CO 9, 388 P.3d 868.

Pediatrician's statement concerning believability of child-victim statements violated this rule but was harmless error. People v. Gaffney, 769 P.2d 1081 (Colo. 1989).

Social worker's lay statement concerning sincerity of child-victim's statements violated this rule because the statement constituted impermissible character testimony. However, admission of statement was not plain error. People v. Eppens, 979 P.2d 14 (Colo. 1999).

Admission of the social worker's statement was not error where the child-victim herself testified and was vigorously cross-examined, the social worker testified as a lay witness, and the statement was corroborated by the testimony of the child-victim's examining physician. People v. Eppens, 979 P.2d 14 (Colo. 1999).

Testimony by police officer that witnesses seemed sincere was improper. People v. Hall, 107 P.3d 1073 (Colo. App. 2004).

Admission of investigating officer's testimony that victims were credible so undermined the fundamental fairness of the trial that serious doubt existed as to the reliability of the judgment of conviction, especially where there was an insufficient quantum and quality of other evidence and independent corroborating evidence of guilt. People v. Cook, 197 P.3d 269 (Colo. App. 2008).

Evidence referencing victim's credibility is admissible when describing a technique used to interrogate a suspect and to explain the context in which a suspect's statements are made. People v. Lopez, 129 P.3d 1061 (Colo. App. 2005).

Admission of statements by witnesses commenting on other witnesses' veracity not error where comments were elicited to explain police officers' investigative techniques and to rebut defense arguments. People v. Davis, 312 P.3d 193 (Colo. App. 2010), aff'd, 2013 CO 57, 310 P.3d 58 (Colo. 2013).

A law enforcement officer may testify about the officer's assessments of interviewee credibility when that testimony is offered to provide context for the officer's interrogation tactics. People v. Conyac, 2014 COA 8M, 361 P.3d 1005.

Officer's testimony not improper commentary on defendant's credibility, but instead an explanation of officer's interview tactics that were brought into question by defendant's allegation that confession was coerced and a product of what defendant believed police wanted to hear. People v. Conyac, 2014 COA 8M, 361 P.3d 1005.

Where defendant attacks victim's credibility, testimony regarding victim's truthfulness is admissible. People v. Exline, 775 P.2d 48 (Colo. App. 1988), 985 F.2d 487 (10th Cir. 1993).

Questioning of a defendant's credibility while on the witness stand does not necessarily constitute an attack on that defendant's character for truthfulness for purposes of introducing character evidence under the rule. Whether a witness's character is attacked will always depend on the circumstances of a particular case. People v. Miller, 890 P.2d 84 (Colo. 1995).

The mere contradiction of the testimony of the defendant by another witness does not constitute an attack on the character of the defendant such that the defendant may introduce opinion evidence as to his truthful character. People v. Wheatley, 805 P.2d 1148 (Colo. App. 1990).

Because defense counsel's cross-examination of the victim did not amount to an attack on her character for truthfulness, testimony that she was a truthful person was inadmissible. Questions during cross-examination that imply a witness's testimony is not credible, such as emphasizing that the witness is under oath or has potential motives to lie or sources of bias, or questioning his or her failure to disclose information to the police are not necessarily attacks on a witness's character for truthfulness. The questions must do more than attack the truthfulness of testimony, but attack a witness's general propensity to tell the truth. People v. Serra, 2015 COA 130, 361 P.3d 1122.

Questions of witnesses whether they took seriously their oath to testify truthfully and if they were telling the truth, where such witnesses were not asked if other witnesses or parties were telling the truth, although of limited probative value, does not constitute improper bolstering and do not constitute plain error. People v. Lee, 989 P.2d 777 (Colo. App. 1999).

Trial court erred in admitting into evidence the opinion of a social services intake worker that a child was being truthful in reporting the alleged sexual assault by the defendant on the occasion in question. People v. Eppens, 948 P.2d 20 (Colo. App. 1997), rev'd on other grounds, 979 P.2d 14 (Colo. 1999).

Evidence inadmissible where prosecutor did not seek to elicit opinion or reputation evidence from witness about child victim's general character for truthfulness; rather, prosecutor elicited, on direct examination of the witness, evidence of victim's specific veracity habit and its application to a specific occasion. People v. Cernazanu, 2015 COA 122, 410 P.3d 603.

No abuse of discretion or violation of defendant's confrontation right in trial court's decision to limit cross-examination. People v. Sweeney, 78 P.3d 1133 (Colo. App. 2003).

Judge who presided over earlier proceedings may testify in rebuttal as to defendant's truthfulness. Where defendant testified to events leading to his arrest for taking children in violation of court order, the judge who presided over divorce could testify as rebuttal witness as to character of defendant for truthfulness. People v. Tippett, 733 P.2d 1183 (Colo. 1987).

Unproven accusations, by themselves, do not raise an inference of improper actions. People v. Pratt, 759 P.2d 676 (Colo. 1988).

Opinion and reputation evidence of character is admissible as long as the evidence refers only to character for truthfulness or untruthfulness and that element of witness's character has been attacked. People v. Woertman, 786 P.2d 443 (Colo. App. 1989); People v. Lesslie, 939 P.2d 443 (Colo. App. 1996).

A stipulation concerning allegations of unprofessional conduct of a physician does not constitute a finding of misconduct by the medical board. Therefore, court did not abuse its discretion in limiting cross-examination of doctor who conducted competency evaluation of criminal defendant. People v. Thomas, 962 P.2d 263 (Colo. App. 1997).

Evidence of witness's general character was properly disallowed where the evidence was not limited to the witness's truthfulness and veracity. Wilkerson v. State, 830 P.2d 1121 (Colo. App. 1992).

The advisement by the trial court of the defendant's right to testify was inadequate when the court failed to inform defendant that the decision to testify was personal to the defendant and failed to advise defendant as to the limited evidentiary use of any admission by the defendant. People v. Chavez, 832 P.2d 1026 (Colo. App. 1991), aff'd, 853 P.2d 1149 (Colo. 1993).

Opinion testimony regarding a witness's truthfulness on a specific occasion rather than to the witness's general character for truthfulness is inadmissible. People v. Ayala, 919 P.2d 830 (Colo. App. 1995).

Reversible error for forensic interviewer to state in response to jury questions that he concluded that the victim had not been coached or that the victim or witness did not come across as coached. An interviewer may not usurp the jury's role of assessing the credibility of a witness's statement by offering an ultimate conclusion about the statement's truthfulness. The error was not harmless because the credibility of the witnesses, particularly in the forensic interviews, was the central issue in the case. People v. Bridges, 2014 COA 65, 410 P.3d 512.

"Were they lying?" type questions are categorically improper. Witnesses are prohibited from commenting on the veracity of another witness, because such opinions are prejudicial, argumentative, and ultimately invade the province of the fact-finder. Such concerns outweigh any potential or supposed probative value elicited by the question. Liggett v. People, 135 P.3d 725 (Colo. 2006).

Therapist's testimony about children fabricating sexual assault allegations did not serve any purpose other than to attempt to influence the jury's credibility determinations and was admitted in error. The error was not plain since it was not obvious and there was substantial evidence of defendant's guilt. People v. Relaford, 2016 COA 99, 409 P.3d 490.

Trial court properly precluded cross-examination on crime of bigamy to impeach a witness' credibility in a criminal eavesdropping prosecution. The court determined that even if bigamy were an offense relating to truthfulness, the witness had been neither convicted, arrested, nor charged with such offense, and there was no evidence of an agreement by the prosecution not to file such charges against the witness in exchange for his testimony. People v. Lesslie, 939 P.2d 443 (Colo. App. 1996).

Evidence of defendant's intentional failure to file tax returns for multiple years is admissible and probative of defendant's character for truthfulness, provided that the probative value of the evidence is not outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice under C.R.E. 403. Leaf v. Beihoffer, 2014 COA 117, 338 P.3d 1136.

Even if it were in the trial court's discretion to permit questioning of the witness as to the act of bigamy, it was also within the court's discretion to exclude the questioning as being more prejudicial than probative. People v. Lesslie, 939 P.2d 443 (Colo. App. 1996).

Applied in People v. Sasson, 628 P.2d 120 (Colo. App. 1980); People v. Walker, 666 P.2d 113 (Colo. 1983); People v. Manners, 713 P.2d 1348 (Colo. App. 1985); Tevlin v. People, 715 P.2d 338 (Colo. 1986); People v. Jensen, 747 P.2d 1247 (Colo. 1987); People v. Penn, 2016 CO 32, 379 P.3d 298.

Rule 609. (No Colorado Rule Codified)

COMMITTEE COMMENT

See § 13-90-101, C.R.S.

Rule 610. Religious Beliefs or Opinions

Evidence of the beliefs or opinions of a witness on matters of religion is not admissible for the purposes of showing that by reason of their nature his credibility is impaired or enhanced.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, ''Impeachment'', see 22 Colo. Law. 1207 (1993). For article, ''Witness Competence and Credibility: The Relevance of Religious Beliefs'', see 26 Colo. Law. 121 (June 1997).

When evidence of beliefs admissible. Where evidence of witnesses' religious beliefs is relevant to the determination of questions other than impeaching or enhancing credibility, including the plaintiffs' standing to sue, the personal knowledge of certain witnesses as to religious practices about which they testified, and the basis for witnesses' opinions that the effect of a nativity scene was to prefer the Christian religion, questioning the witnesses about their religious beliefs is not objectionable under this rule. Conrad v. City & County of Denver, 656 P.2d 662 (Colo. 1982).

This section was not violated in felony child abuse case where defendant raised religious healing as an affirmative defense and was cross-examined as to his religious beliefs. The examination was probative of something other than the veracity of such witness and the court properly instructed the jury to consider the defendant's testimony only for such limited purpose. People v. Lybarger, 790 P.2d 855 (Colo. App. 1989), rev'd on other grounds, 807 P.2d 570 (Colo. 1991).

This rule and § 13-90-110 do not apply to statements made by a prosecutor in closing argument. A prosecutor is not a witness, and his or her statements made in closing argument are not evidence. People v. Krutsinger, 121 P.3d 318 (Colo. App. 2005).

Applied in People v. Mandez, 997 P.2d 1254 (Colo. App. 1999).

Rule 611. Mode and Order of Interrogation and Presentation

(a) Control by court. The court shall exercise reasonable control over the mode and order of interrogating witnesses and presenting evidence so as to (1) make the interrogation and presentation effective for the ascertainment of the truth, (2) avoid needless consumption of time, and (3) protect witnesses from harassment or undue embarrassment.

(b) Scope of cross-examination. Cross-examination should be limited to the subject matter of the direct examination and matters affecting the credibility of the witness. The court may, in the exercise of discretion, permit inquiry into additional matters as if on direct examination.

(c) Leading questions. Leading questions should not be used on the direct examination of a witness except as may be necessary to develop his testimony. Leading questions should be permitted on cross-examination. When a party calls a hostile witness, an adverse party, or a witness identified with an adverse party, interrogation may be by leading questions.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in requiring testimony in court. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying the prosecution's request to have its witness testify remotely through video-conferencing. People v. Gutierrez, 2018 CO 75, 432 P.3d 579.

Trail court did not abuse its discretion in requiring defendant to present his expert testimony in court rather than through video-conferencing. People v. Casias, 2012 COA 117, 312 P.3d 208.

Court may limit right to cross-examination. The constitutional right to confront and cross-examine witnesses is tempered by the trial court's authority to prohibit cross-examination on matters wholly irrelevant and immaterial to issues at trial. People v. Loscutoff, 661 P.2d 274 (Colo. 1983); People v. Hernandez, 695 P.2d 308 (Colo. App. 1984); People v. McKeehan, 732 P.2d 1238 (Colo. App. 1986), cert. denied, 753 P.2d 243 (Colo. 1988).

Trial judge has discretion to determine the scope and the limit of cross-examination. People v. Homan, 185 Colo. 56, 521 P.2d 1262 (1974); People v. Fresquez, 186 Colo. 146, 526 P.2d 146 (1974).

Limits of cross-examination of a witness concerning general credibility is within the sound discretion of the trial court. People v. Evans, 630 P.2d 94 (Colo. App. 1981).

Absent abuse, judge's rulings not disturbed on review. The scope and limits of cross-examination are determined by the trial judge, and absent an abuse of discretion his rulings will not be disturbed on review. McCune v. People, 179 Colo. 262, 499 P.2d 1184 (1972); People v. Lucero, 677 P.2d 370 (Colo. App. 1983), cert. dismissed, 706 P.2d 1283 (Colo. 1985).

In the absence of an abuse of discretion in ruling on the scope of cross-examination, a trial judge's ruling will not be disturbed on review. People v. Homan, 185 Colo. 56, 521 P.2d 1262 (1974); People v. Fresquez, 186 Colo. 146, 526 P.2d 146 (1974).

The scope and limits of cross-examination are within the sound discretion of the trial court and absent an abuse of that discretion, the rulings of the court will not be disturbed on review. People v. Raffaelli, 647 P.2d 230 (Colo. 1982); Jackson v. Harsco Corp., 653 P.2d 407 (Colo. App. 1982).

Although the scope of the cross-examination is within the trial court's discretion, its decision will be reversed on appeal if that discretion is abused. People v. Diaz, 644 P.2d 71 (Colo. App. 1981).

Cross-examination into witnesses' motives. Cross-examination should be liberally extended to permit a thorough inquiry into the motives of witnesses. People v. Peterson, 633 P.2d 1088 (Colo. App. 1981).

Any evidence tending to show bias or prejudice, or to throw light upon the inclinations of witnesses, should be permitted on cross-examination. People v. Peterson, 633 P.2d 1088 (Colo. App. 1981).

Whether leading questions are permissible is a question within the trial court's discretion. Bruce Hughes, Inc. v. Ingels & Assocs., 653 P.2d 88 (Colo. App. 1982); People v. Gillis, 883 P.2d 554 (Colo. App. 1994).

Section (c) enlarges class of adverse witnesses. The purpose of section (c) is to enlarge that class of witnesses recognized as adverse, or identified with a party adverse, to one of the parties. This intent is demonstrated by the elimination of specific classes of adverse parties, including officers, directors, or managing agents of a public or private corporation, from section (c). Bruce Hughes, Inc. v. Ingels & Assocs., 653 P.2d 88 (Colo. App. 1982).

If a witness may be characterized as adverse under the more stringent C.R.C.P. 43(b), it follows that section (c) of this rule would most certainly include him as either an adverse party or a witness identified with an adverse party. Bruce Hughes, Inc. v. Ingels & Assocs., 653 P.2d 88 (Colo. App. 1982).

Trial court has discretion to limit cross-examination without probative force. While adhering to the general rule that a defendant should be allowed wide latitude to cross-examine a prosecution witness for the purpose of showing bias or undue interest, the trial court has some discretion in limiting such cross-examination where it is without probative force. People v. Simmons, 182 Colo. 350, 513 P.2d 193 (1973).

Court did not deny defendant due process by requiring defendant to testify on the first day of trial. The order of proof at trial is a matter within the court's discretion. Court required defendant to testify in order to make use of jury's time. Defendant had previously expressed his intent to testify, and court permitted defendant to testify again, following the testimony of his expert witness. People v. Walden, 224 P.3d 369 (Colo. App. 2009).

The court may terminate cross-examination altogether, if it is clear further testimony would not advance the truth-seeking function of the trial. When defense counsel continued baseless cross-examination, termination of cross-examination was warranted where the court believed defense counsel had no further line of inquiry. People v. James, 40 P.3d 36 (Colo. App. 2001).

Recross-examination may embrace those matters testified to on redirect examination. People v. Ciari, 189 Colo. 325, 540 P.2d 1094 (1975).

Whether to allow late indorsement of witness is within discretion of trial court, and absent an abuse of such discretion, the ruling will not be disturbed on review. People v. MacFarland, 189 Colo. 363, 540 P.2d 1073 (1975).

No reversible error where trial court permitted prosecutor to ask leading questions on redirect to develop and clarify witness's testimony. People v. Gillis, 883 P.2d 554 (Colo. App. 1994).

Section (b) does not limit cross-examination to the same acts and facts to which a witness has testified on direct examination. The rule must be liberally construed to permit cross-examination on any matter germane to the direct examination, qualifying or destroying it, or tending to elucidate, modify, explain, contradict, or rebut testimony given by the witness. People v. Sallis, 857 P.2d 572 (Colo. App. 1993); People v. Scarlett, 985 P.2d 36 (Colo. App. 1998).

Section (b) should be liberally construed to permit cross-examination on any matter germane to the direct examination. People v. Marion, 941 P.2d 287 (Colo. App. 1996).

If a defendant makes a general denial of the offense charged or as to a matter of ultimate fact, the prosecutor is not limited to a mere categorical review of the evidence testified to on direct examination. The prosecutor must be permitted to examine the defendant in detail as to matters directly referred to during direct examination. People v. Sallis, 857 P.2d 572 (Colo. App. 1993).

Trial court erred in denying cross-examination of a wife as to the fraudulent nature of her spouse's personal injury claim against his employer where the wife testified during direct examination only as to the effect of the spouse's injuries on his family. The scope of cross-examination includes the subject matter of direct examination and matters affecting witness credibility. Admissions by the wife's spouse was related directly to the wife's direct testimony concerning the spouse's injuries. Burlington Northern R. Co. v. Hood, 802 P.2d 458 (Colo. 1990).

No reversible error where administrative hearing officer permitted testimony on cross examination as to whether petitioner believed that complaining witness was telling the truth where petitioner did not object and record did not reflect that such testimony affected the result of hearing. Knowles v. Bd. of Educ., 857 P.2d 553 (Colo. App. 1993).

Trial court may not place excessive limitations on defendant's cross-examination of witness especially regarding bias, prejudice, or motive for testifying. People v. Griffin, 867 P.2d 27 (Colo. App. 1993).

Trial court neither abused its discretion nor violated defendant's right to confrontation where defendant was prohibited from revealing to jury through cross-examination that witness was in custody in another state on unrelated charges where such testimony would have been cumulative and of little or no probative value and where defendant was otherwise provided with ample opportunity to impeach the witness's credibility by showing ulterior motive. People v. Griffin, 867 P.2d 27 (Colo. App. 1993).

Prosecutor asking a witness "And if you told the officer at the time that you heard 'stop police' would that be accurate?" was an impermissible leading question. People v. Stewart, 2017 COA 99, __ P.3d __.

Applied in Danburg v. Realties, Inc., 677 P.2d 439 (Colo. App. 1984); People v. Mandez, 997 P.2d 1254 (Colo. App. 1999).

Rule 612. Writing Used to Refresh Memory

If a witness uses a writing to refresh his memory for the purpose of testifying, either —
(1) while testifying, or
(2) before testifying, if the court in its discretion determines it is necessary in the interests of justice, an adverse party is entitled to have the writing produced at the hearing, to inspect it, to cross-examine the witness thereon, and to introduce in evidence those portions which relate to the testimony of the witness. If it is claimed that the writing contains matters not related to the subject matter of the testimony the court shall examine the writing in camera, excise any portions not so related, and order delivery of the remainder to the party entitled thereto. Any portion withheld over objections shall be preserved and made available to the appellate court in the event of an appeal. If a writing is not produced or delivered pursuant to order under this rule, the court shall make any order justice requires, except that in criminal cases when the prosecution elects not to comply, the order shall be one striking the testimony or, if the court in its discretion determines that the interests of justice so require, declaring a mistrial.

Law reviews. For article, ''A Deposition Primer, Part II: At the Deposition'', see 11 Colo. Law. 1215 (1982). For article, ''Rule 612 Revisited'', see 11 Colo. Law. 1553 (1982). For article, ''Waiver of Privilege Under Rule 612'', see 24 Colo. Law. 2563 (1995). For article, ''Rule 612: Discovery of Documents Shown to a Witness Before Deposition'', see 37 Colo. Law. 41 (June 2008).

Error to admit report not used or referred to by witness. Where no part of a report is used or referred to by a witness in his direct testimony, the admission of the report in the course of cross-examination on the theory that the witness has used the report to refresh his memory before testifying is error. People v. Bugarin, 181 Colo. 62, 507 P.2d 875 (1973).

Allowing prosecutor's leading question to cure a witness's lack of recollection was in error since there was no writing and the court did not follow this rule. People v. Stewart, 2017 COA 99, 417 P.3d 882.

Rule 613. Prior Statements of Witnesses

(a) Examining witness concerning prior inconsistent statements for impeachment purposes. Before a witness may be examined for impeachment by prior inconsistent statement the examiner must call the attention of the witness to the particular time and occasion when, the place where, and the person to whom he made the statement. As a part of that foundation, the examiner may refer to the witness statement to bring to the attention of the witness any purported prior inconsistent statement. The exact language of the prior statement may be given.

Where the witness denies or does not remember making the prior statement, extrinsic evidence, such as a deposition, proving the utterance of the prior evidence is admissible. However, if a witness admits making the prior statement, additional extrinsic evidence that the prior statement was made is inadmissible.

Denial or failure to remember the prior statement is a prerequisite for the introduction of extrinsic evidence to prove that the prior inconsistent statement was made.

COMMITTEE COMMENT

Concerning prior statements of witnesses, the Colorado Rule of Evidence as it now exists is set forth in Transamerica Insurance Co. v. Pueblo Gas & Fuel Co., 33 Colo. App. 92, 95, 519 P.2d 1201, 1203 (1973).

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, ''Hearsay in Criminal Cases Under the Colorado Rules of Evidence: An Overview'', see 50 U. Colo. L. Rev. 277 (1979). For article, ''Prior Inconsistent Statements'', see 17 Colo. Law. 1977 (1988). For article, ''Rules 801 and 613: Evidentiary Uses of Pleadings Filed in Other Cases'', see 21 Colo. Law. 2389 (1992).

Comparing this rule to § 16-10-201, it is clear that this rule is directed to situations in which a prior inconsistent statement is used for impeachment purposes only, but § 16-10-201 eliminates the hearsay impediment to using prior inconsistent statements for proving the truth of matters asserted so long as statutory foundation requirements for admissibility of the evidence have been satisfied. People v. Madril, 746 P.2d 1329 (Colo. 1987).

Section (a) simply sets forth the procedure for proper impeachment of a witness with that witness's prior inconsistent statements; it does not permit, much less address, the permissible uses of other act evidence. People v. Fortson, 2018 COA 46M, 421 P.3d 1236.

No need to prove admitted contradictory statements. Where an attempt is made to impeach a witness through a prior statement and the witness admits having made the contradictory statement in question, there is no necessity for proving it, and the statement itself is inadmissible. Walker v. People, 175 Colo. 173, 489 P.2d 584 (1971).

When prosecution asks impeachment questions that imply witness has changed his story, but does not offer extrinsic evidence to prove the making of those statements, admission of that questioning is not plain error. This rule allows the prosecution to offer extrinsic evidence to prove the disputed point but does not require it. People v. Sandoval-Candelaria, 328 P.3d 193 (Colo. App. 2011), rev'd on other grounds, 2014 CO 21, 321 P.3d 487.

Witness may be impeached without prior interrogation where witness contradicted by inconsistent actions. The rule that a witness cannot be impeached by showing he has made statements at another time inconsistent with his testimony without a foundation being laid by interrogating the witness does not apply where the attempt to contradict the witness merely consists of showing acts and circumstances inconsistent with his testimony. People v. Hutto, 181 Colo. 279, 509 P.2d 298 (1973).

Prosecution may use another portion of same testimony used by defense to impeach. Where the defense counsel tries to impeach on only a portion of prior testimony in an attempt to show an inconsistency or contradiction, he waives any objection to the prosecution's using another portion of the same testimony in order to show that in its totality the testimony was not actually inconsistent. People v. Thompson, 187 Colo. 252, 529 P.2d 1314 (1975).

Deposition used for impeachment purposes is always admissible under rules of evidence to discredit witness, even if opposing party was not represented at deposition, if it is relevant, material, and not collateral. Appel v. Sentry Life Ins. Co., 739 P.2d 1380 (Colo. 1987).

Although this rule was an inappropriate vehicle for admission of prior inconsistent statement, evidence held properly admissible under § 16-10-201, and defendant's conviction would not be overturned. People v. Jenkins, 768 P.2d 727 (Colo. App. 1988).

The court need not determine that the prior inconsistent statement was voluntary before permitting counsel to cross-examine a witness concerning the prior statement. People v. Ball, 821 P.2d 905 (Colo. App. 1991).

A specific exception to the foundational requirements of CRE 613 is created by CRE 806. Thus, where a transcript of a witness' testimony at the first trial was admitted into evidence at the second trial, testimony of a police detective as to inconsistent statements made by the witness were admissible without the witness first having opportunity to explain the prior inconsistent statements. People v. Ball, 821 P.2d 905 (Colo. App. 1991).

Applied in City of Gunnison v. McCabe Hereford Ranch, 702 P.2d 768 (Colo. App. 1985).

Rule 614. Calling and Interrogation of Witnesses by Court

(a) Calling by court. The court may, on its own motion or at the suggestion of a party, call witnesses and all parties are entitled to cross-examine witnesses thus called.

(b) Interrogation by court. The court may interrogate witnesses, whether called by itself or by a party.

(c) Objections. Objections to the calling of witnesses by the court or to interrogation by it may be made at the time or at the next available opportunity when the jury is not present.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

ANNOTATION

Court's prerogative and duty to question witnesses. A trial court has the prerogative and, sometimes, the duty to question witnesses called by a party. People v. Ray, 640 P.2d 262 (Colo. App. 1981).

The trial court may interrogate witnesses, regardless of which party has produced them. It is sometimes the court's duty to question witnesses to develop the truth more fully and to clarify testimony. Eggert v. Mosler Safe Co., 730 P.2d 895 (Colo. App. 1986).

Questions by court are not improper where purpose is to more fully develop truth and to clarify testimony already given. People v. Ray, 640 P.2d 262 (Colo. App. 1981).

Test to be applied when court interrogates witnesses is whether the trial court's conduct so departed from the required impartiality as to deny the defendant a fair trial. People v. Ray, 640 P.2d 262 (Colo. App. 1981); Eggert v. Mosler Safe Co., 730 P.2d 895 (Colo. App. 1986); Sanchez v. Lauffenburger, 784 P.2d 855 (Colo. App. 1989).

Applied in People in Interest of Archuleta, 653 P.2d 93 (Colo. App. 1982).

Rule 615. Exclusion of Witnesses

At the request of a party the court shall order witnesses excluded so that they cannot hear the testimony of other witnesses, and it may make the order of its own motion. This rule does not authorize exclusion of (1) a party who is a natural person, or (2) an officer or employee of a party which is not a natural person designated as its representative by its attorney, or (3) a person whose presence is shown by a party to be essential to the presentation of his cause.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, ''A Deposition Primer, Part I: Setting Up the Deposition'', see 11 Colo. Law. 938 (1982). For article, ''Rule 615: Exclusion of Witnesses'', see 24 Colo. Law. 1299 (1995). For article, ''The Ethical Preparation of Witnesses'', see 42 Colo. Law. 51 (May 2013).

Policy reasons for sequestration rule are to prevent a witness from conforming his testimony to that of another and to discourage fabrication and collusion. Martin v. Porak, 638 P.2d 853 (Colo. App. 1981).

Purpose of rule is accomplished under rule's terms by ordering witnesses to withdraw from courtroom until called; however, to make rule effective, court may also direct witnesses not to discuss case with each other. People v. Brinson, 739 P.2d 897 (Colo. App. 1987).

This rule applies only to witnesses, not attorneys. Thus, an attorney's discussion of one witness's testimony with a prospective witness does not violate the rule. People v. Villalobos, 159 P.3d 624 (Colo. App. 2006).

A court has discretion, in appropriate circumstances, to grant an exception allowing a witness to impeach the testimony of a criminal defendant after hearing the defendant's testimony. Trial court properly granted exception to sequestration order by allowing prosecution's toxicologist to hear defendant's testimony and testify in response thereto. People v. Scarlett, 985 P.2d 36 (Colo. App. 1998).

For the purposes of determining who may be excluded from a pretrial deposition, CRCP 26 (c)(5) and not this rule controls. Hamon Contractors, Inc. v. District Court, 877 P.2d 884 (Colo. 1994).

When denial of sequestration mandates new trial. A trial court's error in denying a sequestration request does not mandate a new trial unless the requesting litigant demonstrates that the error constitutes sufficient prejudice to amount to an abuse of discretion. Martin v. Porak, 638 P.2d 853 (Colo. App. 1981); Williamson v. Sch. District No. 2, 695 P.2d 1173 (Colo. App. 1984).

Corporation's officers allowed to remain in courtroom. Although witnesses who are officers of a party-corporation are not formally designated as representatives, the trial court may still allow the witnesses to remain in the courtroom. Jefferson-Western Corp. v. Chefas, 670 P.2d 431 (Colo. App. 1983).

Rule prohibits the sequestration of an officer or employee of a nonnatural party who has been duly designated as its representative. People v. Cheeks, 682 P.2d 484 (Colo. 1984).

Determination of whether there has been a violation of a sequestration order and the penalty or sanction to be imposed are all matters resting within the discretion of the court. People v. P.R.G., 729 P.2d 380 (Colo. App. 1986).

Where trial court simply ordered district attorney to tell his witnesses not to talk to each other about their testimony, the sequestration order had not been violated when prosecutor talked to his witnesses in a group prior to presentation of any evidence. People v. Brinson, 739 P.2d 897 (Colo. App. 1987).

It is in the trial court's discretion to determine the appropriate penalty for a violation of a sequestration order. People v. Johnson, 757 P.2d 1098 (Colo. App. 1988).

In determining whether to impose sanctions for violation of sequestration order, court must consider three things: (1) The involvement, or lack thereof, of a party or his counsel in the violation of the order; (2) the witness' actions and state of mind in his violation of the order and whether the violation was inadvertent or deliberate; and (3) the subject matter of the violation in conjunction with the substance of the disobedient witness' testimony. People v. P.R.G., 729 P.2d 380 (Colo. App. 1986).

Test applied in People v. Melendez, 80 P.3d 883 (Colo. App. 2003), aff'd on other grounds, 102 P.3d 315 (Colo. 2004).

The supreme court modified the first factor set forth above to require evidence of the party's or counsel's consent, connivance, procurement, or knowledge regarding the violation before a sanction can be imposed against that party. People v. Melendez, 102 P.3d 315 (Colo. 2004).

In determining whether to impose sanctions for violation of a sequestration order, the trial court must consider, in addition to other things, the subject matter of the violation in conjunction with the substance of the testimony of the disobedient witness. Also, in order to prevail, the defendant must show that the witness' testimony would have been different but for the conversation which violated the court's order. People v. Johnson, 757 P.2d 1098 (Colo. App. 1988).

Sanctions for violation of a sequestration order, in addition to a mistrial, fall into three categories: (1) Citing the witness for contempt; (2) permitting comment on the witness' noncompliance in order to reflect on his credibility; or (3) refusing to let the witness testify or striking his testimony. People v. P.R.G., 729 P.2d 380 (Colo. App. 1986).

It was an abuse of discretion to impose the extreme sanction of witness exclusion without an inquiry into the factors governing the imposition of such a sanction, and, in particular, without evidence that the defense was at fault for the violation. People v. Melendez, 80 P.3d 883 (Colo. App. 2003), aff'd, 102 P.3d 315 (Colo. 2004).

Prejudice resulting from violation of a sequestration order must be shown in order to require granting of a mistrial. People v. P.R.G., 729 P.2d 380 (Colo. App. 1986).

A victim's right to be present at all critical stages of the criminal justice process under Const. Art. II § 16a and § 24-4.1-302.5 (1)(d) takes precedence over a party's right to sequester witnesses under this rule. The father of a murder victim who testified in the defendant's trial was wrongly excluded from subsequent portions of the trial. People v. Coney, 98 P.3d 930 (Colo. App. 2004).

Applied in People v. Beltran, 634 P.2d 1003 (Colo. App. 1981).

ARTICLE VII
OPINIONS AND EXPERT TESTIMONY

Rule 701. Opinion Testimony by Lay Witnesses

If the witness is not testifying as an expert, the witness' testimony in the form of opinions or inferences is limited to those opinions or inferences which are (a) rationally based on the perception of the witness, (b) helpful to a clear understanding of the witness' testimony or the determination of a fact in issue, and (c) not based on scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge within the scope of Rule 702.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

Source: Entire rule amended and adopted June 20, 2002, effective July 1, 2002.

COMMITTEE COMMENT

This rule does not foreclose an owner from giving an opinion as to the value of his real property. Universal Insurance Company v. Arrigo, 96 Colo. 531, 44 P.2d 1020 (1935).

People Clarify the Law?'', see 46 Colo. Law. 46 (Aug.-Sept. 2017).

Lay testimony must be: (1) Rationally based on the perception of the witness; and (2) helpful to a clear understanding of the witness's testimony or the determination of a fact in issue. People v. Baird, 66 P.3d 183 (Colo. App. 2002).

Lay witness may testify only to opinions or inferences that are (1) rationally based on the perception of the witness, (2) helpful to a clear understanding of the witness's testimony or the determination of a fact in issue, and (3) not based on scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge within the scope of C.R.E. 702. People v. Russell, 2014 COA 21M, 338 P.3d 472, aff'd, 2017 CO 3, 387 P.3d 750; People v. Acosta, 2014 COA 82, 338 P.3d 472.

In determining whether testimony is lay testimony or expert testimony, the trial court must look to the basis for the opinion. If the witness provides testimony that could be expected to be based on an ordinary person's experiences or knowledge, then the witness is offering lay testimony. If, on the other hand, the witness provides testimony that could not be offered without specialized experiences, knowledge, or training, then the witness is offering expert testimony. Venalonzo v. People, 2017 CO 9, 388 P.3d 868; People v. Howard-Walker, 2017 COA 81M, __ P.3d __.

Establishment of qualifications to express opinion is question for trial court. The sufficiency of evidence to establish the qualifications and knowledge of a witness to express an opinion based on physical facts he has observed is a question for the trial court, not subject to reversal unless clearly erroneous. People v. Gallegos, 644 P.2d 920 (Colo. 1982).

Attorney's opinion about client's mental condition admissible. The trial court errs in refusing to permit an attorney to express his opinion, as a lay witness, on the question of whether his client suffered from an impaired mental condition at the time of his alleged commission of an offense. People v. Rubanowitz, 673 P.2d 45 (Colo. App. 1983).

In a first-degree sexual assault trial, testimony of counselor consisting of general comments based on her observations of victim's demeanor following alleged sexual assault was not inadmissible as amounting to a scientific diagnosis of rape trauma syndrome, as long as counselor did not use scientific terminology, discuss theory, or state an opinion as to whether she believed victim. People v. Farley, 712 P.2d 1116 (Colo. App. 1985), aff'd, 746 P.2d 956 (Colo. 1987).

Lay opinion from police officer admitted where police officer testified he had been involved in law enforcement for fourteen years, had experience investigating burglaries of parking lot money depositories, and was familiar with the tools similar to those allegedly used in burglary of money depository. People v. Garcia, 784 P.2d 823 (Colo. App. 1989).

Lay opinion from police officer admitted where police officer testified he had been involved in law enforcement for sixteen years and had never had a suspect test positive for gun residue and had never experienced a recovery of a latent fingerprint from a firearm. The testimony was relevant to show that the absence of gun-shot residue and fingerprint evidence was not necessarily exculpatory. People v. Theus-Roberts, 2015 COA 32, 378 P.3d 750.

No plain error in allowing police officer to testify without qualifying him as an expert when the testimony was brief and cumulative of the testimony of experts who had already testified, in detail and without objection, about why gun-shot residue or latent fingerprint tests might be negative. People v. Theus-Roberts, 2015 COA 32, 378 P.3d 750.

Police officer may offer lay testimony if based on his or her perceptions and experiences but does not require specialized training or education. People v. Tallwhiteman, 124 P.3d 827 (Colo. App. 2005).

Lay opinion from detective stating he recognized defendant on a surveillance videotape was admissible, regardless of the fact that defendant's appearance had not changed and the jury was allowed to view the videotape. The court held the detective's testimony was rationally based on his knowledge of the defendant's appearance and that, since the defendant's identity was at issue in the trial, the detective's testimony was helpful to a clear understanding of a fact at issue. People v. Robinson, 908 P.2d 1152 (Colo. App. 1995), aff'd, 927 P.2d 381 (Colo. 1996).

Lay opinion of crime scene technician admitted where the technician testified to the location of bullet holes and the paths of the bullets. The holes and paths of the bullets were evident from photographs. Technician did not perform any experiments or reconstruct the incident, therefore his testimony did not require any specialized or scientific knowledge to understand. People v. Caldwell, 43 P.3d 663 (Colo. App. 2001).

Detective's computer-related testimony was lay testimony because it was not based upon specialized knowledge of computers or technology. Detective's testimony was derived from plugging a flash drive into her computer and right-clicking on the image file to view the file's properties and then reporting on what she observed without interpreting those observations. While this requires basic computer competency, it is within the realm of knowledge of ordinary people who use computers in everyday life. People v. Froehler, 2015 COA 102, 373 P.3d 672.

Allowing police officer's testimony regarding use of glass pipe and torch lighter to smoke methamphetamine not plain error. People v. Malloy, 178 P.3d 1283 (Colo. App. 2008).

Detective's testimony about Facebook was lay testimony where the detective's understanding of Facebook and its features was based on information from his investigation and experience or knowledge common among ordinary people using, or considering the use of, Facebook. People v. Glover, 2015 COA 16, 363 P.3d 736.

Police officer's interpretation of her conversation with defendant was not expert testimony. The testimony was not based on specialized skills but rather the ability to interpret a conversation in which officer took part, a process of reasoning familiar in everyday life. People v. Douglas, 2012 COA 57, 296 P.3d 234.

Officers' testimony about tracing the physical address of an email sender from an internet protocol address was improperly admitted as lay testimony. People v. Garrison, 2017 COA 107, 411 P.3d 270.

Officer's testimony about which part of the marijuana plant is used to make edibles and whether drug dealers commonly maintain separate production and distribution centers was improperly admitted as lay testimony. The testimony was based on the officer's specific experience as a police officer and is not the type of information that an average citizen would be expected to know. Admitting the evidence did not constitute plain error since the prosecution also presented expert testimony on the same points. People v. Douglas, 2015 COA 155, 412 P.3d 785.

Officer's testimony identifying plants in defendants' home as marijuana improperly admitted as lay testimony. The officer's ability to identify marijuana plants was based exclusively on his specialized knowledge as a police officer, and therefore he should have been qualified as an expert before rendering his opinion. The error was harmless since the defendant presented a medical marijuana affirmative defense, admitting to possessing the marijuana plants. People v. Douglas, 2015 COA 155, 412 P.3d 785.

Officer's testimony that marijuana edibles are typically candies, sodas, brownies, and butter was properly admitted as lay testimony. An ordinary citizen could reasonably have come to such an opinion based on a process of reasoning familiar in everyday life. People v. Douglas, 2015 COA 155, 412 P.3d 785.

A lay witness may testify concerning the identity of a person depicted in a surveillance photograph if there is some basis for concluding that the witness is more likely to identify the defendant from the photograph than the jury is. Robinson v. People, 927 P.2d 381 (Colo. 1996); People v. Howard-Walker, 2017 COA 81M, __ P.3d __.

Lay opinion testimony of analyst from division of insurance that petitioner's income was not misrepresented admitted when she reviewed documents already before the jury and she based her testimony on her common tax knowledge and her experience as an insurance analyst. Hock v. New York Life Ins. Co., 876 P.2d 1242 (Colo. 1994).

Lay opinion of analyst from division of insurance regarding petitioner's mental health admissible where testimony was based upon documentation analyst received as well as a personal meeting with the petitioner, and was supported by other evidence. Even if the testimony was inadmissible lay opinion, admission of testimony was cumulative, corrected by a limiting instruction, and harmless. Hock v. New York Life Ins. Co., 876 P.2d 1242 (Colo. 1994).

Lay opinion testimony is admissible to prove drug-induced intoxication. There is no basis to distinguish lay testimony regarding alcohol-induced intoxication from lay testimony regarding drug-induced intoxication, as long as the proper foundation has been laid. People v. Souva, 141 P.3d 845 (Colo. App. 2005).

Lay opinion testimony of witnesses, including minors, admissible to identify the substance provided to them by defendant was marijuana. The witnesses described prior experiences with marijuana and based their identification on its appearance, taste, and distinctive smell. These matters did not require any technical or specialized knowledge that would fall within the scope of C.R.E. 702. Accordingly, the minors established a proper foundation for their identification testimony. People v. Graybeal, 155 P.3d 614 (Colo. App. 2007).

A person may testify as a lay witness only if his or her opinions or inferences do not require any specialized knowledge and could be reached by any ordinary person. To determine whether an opinion is one "which could be reached by any ordinary person", courts consider whether ordinary citizens can be expected to know or to have certain experiences. In this case, although the officer had experience with photo arrays that an ordinary person would not, the officer's opinion could have been reached by an ordinary person. People v. Rincon, 140 P.3d 976 (Colo. App. 2005).

There is no requirement that chemical tests be administered or that expert testimony be offered to bolster such lay identification testimony. People v. Graybeal, 155 P.3d 614 (Colo. App. 2007).

Trial court inappropriately admitted lay testimony of investigating police officer as to experimentation with respect to and reconstruction of an incident without qualifying the officer as an expert witness. The officer's testimony involved more than common experience and required practical knowledge of a scientific, technical, or specialized nature. Admission of the testimony constitutes harmless error, however, and does not require reversal. People v. Stewart, 55 P.3d 107 (Colo. 2002).

Trial court erred in admitting police officer's testimony that did not result from a process of reasoning familiar in everyday life. The testimony was not proper lay opinion but rather was expert testimony presented in the guise of lay opinion. The error in admitting the testimony did not so undermine the fundamental fairness of the trial as to cast serious doubt on the reliablity of the conviction. People v. McMinn, 2013 COA 94, 412 P.3d 551.

Trial court improperly admitted as lay testimony police officer's testimony about the meaning of the term "sherm". The testimony relied on the officer's specialized training and experience as a police officer. People v. Bryant, 2018 COA 53, 428 P.3d 669.

But the testimony did not have a substantial influence on the verdict or impair the fairness of the trial. People v. Bryant, 2018 COA 53, 428 P.3d 669.

Trial court improperly admitted expert testimony of police officers concerning methamphetamine amounts, production chemicals, and manufacture under the guise of lay testimony. The testimony required specialized knowledge and training and, thus, was subject to the expert witness requirements of C.R.E. 702. People v. Veren, 140 P.3d 131 (Colo. App. 2005).

Trial court abused its discretion by allowing detective to testify as a lay witness regarding blood spatter and blood transfer. Detective's testimony had the hallmarks of expert testimony, but detective had not been qualified as an expert. Detective testified about his extensive experience investigating cases involving blood; detective used and defined technical terms; detective testified not based on his personal knowledge or investigation of the case; and the prosecutor advised the court that detective was testifying as to his training and experience. People v. Ramos, 2012 COA 191, 396 P.3d 21, aff'd, 2017 CO 6, 388 P.3d 888.

Trial court abused its discretion when it allowed a witness to testify about grooming as it relates to a sexual predator's methods of acquiring victims without qualifying that witness as an expert. An ordinary citizen could not be expected to possess the experience, skills, or knowledge required to understand the concept of grooming as it relates to sexual predation. People v. Romero, 2017 CO 37, 393 P.3d 973.

Court abused its discretion in admitting some lay opinions from mental health providers who had not been properly noticed as experts by the prosecution. Some of the opinions were expert opinions improperly admitted under the guise of lay opinion testimony. The improper testimony related to symptoms of specific mental illness and opinions about whether defendant suffered from mental illness. The evidence relied upon the witness' specialized knowledge and training and, therefore, went beyond the bounds of lay opinion. The error in this case was harmless since there was ample evidence in addition to the improperly admitted opinions. Dunlap v. People, 173 P.3d 1054 (Colo. 2007), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 1105, 128 S. Ct. 882, 169 L. Ed. 2d 740 (2008).

Lay opinion from alleged murder victim's coworker who heard abusive statements made by defendant to victim found admissible and the coworker could make characterization of such statements as a part of the testimony. People v. Hulsing, 825 P.2d 1027 (Colo. App. 1991).

Admission of the opinion testimony of lay witnesses on the issue of causation does not constitute reversible error. Herrera v. Gene's Towing, 827 P.2d 619 (Colo. App. 1992).

Forensic interviewer's testimony properly admitted. Testimony was not expert opinion evidence but rather an opinion based on observation. People v. Tillery, 231 P.3d 36 (Colo. App. 2009), aff'd on other grounds sub nom. People v. Simon, 266 P.3d 1099 (Colo. 2011); People v. Marsh, 396 P.3d 1 (Colo. App. 2011), aff'd, 2017 CO 10M, 389 P.3d 100.

Lay witness testimony that defendant was very "guilty-looking" immediately after the incident was not improper testimony. The witness's statement was not that defendant was guilty or even that the witness believed that a crime had been committed, but statements describing the witness's rational perception of the defendant's actions and demeanor after the alleged event. Although the witness used the term ''guilty'', she was clearly not opining on whether the defendant was legally guilty, and the prosecutor's questions as to what the witness meant were phrased to elicit a factual rather than ''legal'' response. People v. Acosta, 2014 COA 82, 338 P.3d 472.

A lay witness may state an opinion about another person's motivation or intent only if the witness had sufficient opportunity to observe the person and to draw a rational conclusion about the person's state of mind; an opinion that is speculative or not based on personal knowledge is not admissible. People v. Jones, 907 P.2d 667 (Colo. App. 1995); People v. Howard-Walker, 2017 COA 81M, __ P.3d __.

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing a counselor from the detoxification facility at which the defendant allegedly committed a sexual assault to state an opinion as to whether the sexual encounter was consensual, since the testimony was based on the counselor's own observations. The trial court appropriately allowed the counselor to testify as to whether the victim was in an unconscious state at the time of the assault and to testify as to whether the defendant's actions constituted a sexual assault. People v. Hoskay, 87 P.3d 194 (Colo. App. 2003).

A lay witness may testify as to the substantial similarity between shoeprints found in connection with a crime and the defendant's shoes if the witness's conclusions are based on measurements or peculiarities in the prints that are readily recognizable and within the capabilities of a lay witness to observe. People v. Vigil, 2015 COA 88M, __ P.3d __.

Where the witness was not qualified as an expert and the witness had no personal experience with the maintenance expenses on the property, evidence presented as to the amount of future maintenance expenses was legally insufficient. Pomeranz v. McDonald's Corp., 843 P.2d 1378 (Colo. 1993).

Applied in People v. Nhan Dao Van, 681 P.2d 932 (Colo. 1984); Cheney v. Hailey, 686 P.2d 808 (Colo. App. 1984); Witcher v. Canon City, 716 P.2d 445 (Colo. 1986); People v. Collins, 730 P.2d 293 (Colo. 1986); People v. Brown, 731 P.2d 763 (Colo. App. 1986); Sandoval v. Birx, 767 P.2d 759 (Colo. App. 1988); Pyles-Knutzen v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 781 P.2d 164 (Colo. App. 1989); Graham v. Lombardi, 784 P.2d 813 (Colo. App. 1989); People v. Caldwell, 43 P.3d 663 (Colo. App. 2001).

Rule 702. Testimony by Experts

If scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge will assist the trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue, a witness qualified as an expert by knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education, may testify thereto in the form of an opinion or otherwise.

This rule governs a trial court's determination regarding the admissibility of expert testimony. When proposed expert testimony involves experience-based specialized knowledge, the court must consider whether the testimony will be helpful to the jury and whether the witness is qualified to render an expert opinion on the subject in question. Meier v. McCoy, 119 P.3d 519 (Colo. App. 2004).

In determining whether testimony is lay testimony or expert testimony, the trial court must look to the basis for the opinion. If the witness provides testimony that could be expected to be based on an ordinary person's experiences or knowledge, then the witness is offering lay testimony. If, on the other hand, the witness provides testimony that could not be offered without specialized experiences, knowledge, or training, then the witness is offering expert testimony. Venalonzo v. People, 2017 CO 9, 388 P.3d 868 ; People v. Howard-Walker, 2017 COA 81M, __ P.3d __.

Determination of expert within court's discretion. The trial court has wide discretion in determining whether the requirements to qualify a witness as an expert are met. Connell v. Sun Exploration & Prod. Co., 655 P.2d 426 (Colo. App. 1982).

Matter of the qualification of expert witness is discretionary with the trial court. White v. People, 175 Colo. 119, 486 P.2d 4 (1971); People v. Tidwell, 706 P.2d 438 (Colo. App. 1985); People v. Koon, 724 P.2d 1367 (Colo. App. 1986); People v. Williams, 790 P.2d 796 (Colo. 1990).

The court should consider the expert's experience of the time of trial, not on the date of the alleged malpractice. Durkee v. Oliver, 714 P.2d 1330 (Colo. App. 1986); People v. Braley, 879 P.2d 410 (Colo. App. 1993).

The trial court determines the qualification of witnesses and has discretion to admit expert witness testimony. Eggert v. Mosler Safe Co., 730 P.2d 895 (Colo. App. 1986).

The qualification of an expert is a matter within the sound discretion of the trial judge. People v. Chavez, 182 Colo. 216, 511 P.2d 883 (1973); People v. Lomanaco, 802 P.2d 1143 (Colo. App. 1990).

The qualification of expert witness to competently testify on a matter of opinion is one of judicial discretion. People v. DeLuna, 183 Colo. 163, 515 P.2d 459 (1973).

The qualification of an expert witness to testify is within the trial court's discretion and will not be disturbed absent an abuse of that discretion. Meier v. McCoy, 119 P.3d 519 (Colo. App. 2004).

The competency of an expert is for the trial court to determine. People v. Anderson, 184 Colo. 32, 518 P.2d 828 (1974).

Whether opinion testimony is within a witness's expertise generally is a matter addressed to the sound discretion of the court. People v. Gomez, 632 P.2d 586 (Colo. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 943, 102 S. Ct. 1439, 71 L. Ed. 2d 655 (1982).

Trial court has broad discretion to determine the admissibility of expert testimony pursuant to this section. People v. Fasy, 820 P.2d 1314 (Colo. 1992).

Trial court has discretion in determining the qualifications of an expert and the admissibility of expert evidence, and the court's ruling will not be disturbed absent an abuse of discretion. Baird v. Power Rental Equip., Inc., 191 Colo. 319, 552 P.2d 494 (1976); Klein v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 948 P.2d 43 (Colo. App. 1997).

Trial judge did not assume the role of advocate by asking questions of a potential expert witness. The court's questions served to aid the court in determining whether the expert testimony was admissible. The nature of the questions reflect that the court was not advocating a position but rather was seeking to satisfy itself—in its gatekeeper role—that the proffered scientific evidence was reliable. After the court questioned the proposed expert, the court invited the prosecutor and defense counsel to ask additional questions. Both sides accepted the invitation and further questioned the witness. Based on the record, the court's questions were not of such a nature as to transform the court from neutral gatekeeper to advocate for the prosecution. People v. Medrano-Bustamante, 2013 COA 139, 412 P.3d 581, aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds sub nom. Reyna-Abarca v. People, 2017 CO 15, 390 P.3d 816.

Court did not abuse its discretion in determining that expert witness's opinions were based on reasonably reliable scientific principles and that the witness was qualified to render them. People v. Medrano-Bustamante, 2013 COA 139, 412 P.3d 581, aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds sub nom. Reyna-Abarca v. People, 2017 CO 15, 390 P.3d 816.

Court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion for a pretrial hearing on the admissibility of GPS data. GPS technology is prevalent in modern society and widely regarded as reliable. People v. Campbell, 2018 COA 5, 425 P.3d 1163.

Court's decision not disturbed absent abuse. A court's decision to allow a witness to testify as an expert will not be disturbed without a clear showing of an abuse of discretion. White v. People, 175 Colo. 119, 486 P.2d 4 (1971); People v. Hankin, 179 Colo. 70, 498 P.2d 1116 (1972); McCune v. People, 179 Colo. 262, 499 P.2d 1184 (1972); People v. Drumright, 181 Colo. 137, 507 P.2d 1097 (1973); People v. Anderson, 184 Colo. 32, 518 P.2d 828 (1974); Bd. of Comm'rs v. Fixed Base Operators, 939 P.2d 464 (Colo. App. 1997); People v. Bornman, 953 P.2d 952 (Colo. App. 1997).

The sufficiency of foundation evidence to establish qualifications and knowledge of a witness to entitle him to express an opinion is a question for the trial court's determination, and in the absence of a showing of abuse of discretion this determination will not be overturned. People v. Jiminez, 187 Colo. 97, 528 P.2d 913 (1974).

The discretion of the trial judge over the scope of expert testimony will not be disturbed on review absent a clear showing of abuse. People v. Davis, 187 Colo. 16, 528 P.2d 251 (1974); People v. Jensen, 747 P.2d 1247 (Colo. 1987).

The determination of whether a witness is qualified to render an expert opinion is committed to the discretion of the trial court, and will not be disturbed on review unless that discretion is abused. People v. District Court, 647 P.2d 1206 (Colo. 1982).

The trial court has discretion to rule upon the qualifications of expert witnesses and unless that discretion is abused its decision will not be disturbed on appeal. Stone v. Caroselli, 653 P.2d 754 (Colo. App. 1982).

Trial court not required to make specific finding that witness is qualified as an expert. People v. Lomanaco, 802 P.2d 1143 (Colo. App. 1990).

Disqualification of experts based on a conflict of interest is governed by a two-part test. First, whether it was objectively reasonable for the party to conclude that a confidential relationship existed with an expert consultant. Second, whether any confidential or privileged information was disclosed by that party to the expert consultant. In re Page, 70 P.3d 579 (Colo. App. 2003).

A confidential relationship may arise if: (1) One party has taken steps to induce another to believe that it can safely rely on the first party's judgment or advice; (2) one party has gained the confidence of the other and purports to act or advise with the other's interest in mind; or (3) the parties' relationship is such that one is induced to relax the care and vigilance that ordinarily would be exercised in dealing with a stranger. In re Page, 70 P.3d 579 (Colo. App. 2003).

Rule does not require previous qualification as an expert or that the proposed expert belong to any particular organization. White v. People, 175 Colo. 119, 486 P.2d 4 (1971); People v. Bornman, 953 P.2d 952 (Colo. App. 1997).

Trial court inappropriately admitted lay testimony of investigating police officer as to experimentation with respect to and reconstruction of an incident without qualifying the officer as an expert witness. The officer's testimony involved more than common experience and required practical knowledge of a scientific, technical, or specialized nature. Admission of the testimony constitutes harmless error, however, and does not require reversal. People v. Stewart, 55 P.3d 107 (Colo. 2002).

Trial court erred when it allowed police officer to testify as a lay witness that he could detect the smell of metabolized alcohol and draw other conclusions based on metabolized alcohol. The portion of the officer's testimony about metabolized alcohol was expert testimony because the opinion, as acknowledged by the officer, was based on years of experience and extensive training as a police officer. The error was not harmless because the improperly admitted expert testimony was the only evidence that specifically refuted defendant's testimony. People v. Kubuugu, 2019 CO 9, 433 P.3d 1214.

Trial court abused its discretion by allowing detective to testify as a lay witness regarding blood spatter and blood transfer. Detective's testimony had the hallmarks of expert testimony, but detective had not been qualified as an expert. Detective testified about his extensive experience investigating cases involving blood; detective used and defined technical terms; detective testified not based on his personal knowledge or investigation of the case; and the prosecutor advised the court that detective was testifying as to his training and experience. People v. Ramos, 2012 COA 191, 396 P.3d 21, aff'd, 2017 CO 6, 388 P.3d 888.

Court erred in admitting as lay testimony detective's computer-related testimony that was based on specialized knowledge. While the detective did not claim to have specialized training in the software or expertise in forensic computer analysis, the testimony went beyond that of the average layperson, including at least some technical knowledge of the software program developed for law enforcement. People v. Froehler, 2015 COA 102, 373 P.3d 672.

Court erred by allowing evidence that traced the physical address of an email sender from an internet protocol address as lay testimony. People v. Garrison, 2017 COA 107, 411 P.3d 270.

Trial court improperly admitted expert testimony of police officers concerning methamphetamine amounts, production chemicals, and manufacture under the guise of lay testimony. The testimony required specialized knowledge and training and, thus, was subject to the expert witness requirements of this rule. People v. Veren, 140 P.3d 131 (Colo. App. 2005).

Trial courts possess broad discretion to allow or prohibit testimony by expert witnesses in criminal cases and an exercise of that discretion will not be overturned absent a showing of manifest error. People v. Lanari, 926 P.2d 116 (Colo. App. 1996).

Trial court properly concluded that a witness was not qualified to give expert testimony on the use of force by law enforcement officers effecting an arrest when the witness had never (1) been employed in a law enforcement field, (2) participated professionally in a determination of what force a police officer may use in making an arrest, (3) arrested anyone, (4) completed a police officer training course, or (5) been retained by a police department to teach use of force. Meier v. McCoy, 119 P.3d 519 (Colo. App. 2004).

This rule requires a two-tiered analysis for determining the reliability and validity of the underlying substance of an expert's opinion and a trial court must balance the reliability of the scientific principles upon which the testimony rests and the likelihood that the introduction of the evidence may overwhelm or mislead the jury. Colwell v. Mentzer Inv., Inc., 973 P.2d 631 (Colo. App. 1998); Schultz v. Wells, 13 P.3d 846 (Colo. App. 2000).

In exercising its discretion under this rule, the court should consider numerous factors, including the nature and extent of evidence in the case, the expertise of the proposed witness, the sufficiency and extent of the foundational evidence upon which the expert witness' ultimate opinion is to be based, and the scope and content of the opinion itself. People v. Lanari, 926 P.2d 116 (Colo. App. 1996); People v. Lesslie, 939 P.2d 443 (Colo. App. 1996); People v. Masters, 33 P.3d 1191 (Colo. App. 2001), aff'd, 59 P.3d 979 (Colo. 2002).

Lanari factors applied and admission of proffered expert testimony properly denied in People v. Miller, 981 P.2d 654 (Colo. App. 1998).

This rule provides a more lenient standard for the admission of opinion evidence than does the test originally developed in Frye v. United States. The rule allows the admission of scientific evidence if such evidence will assist the jury in understanding the evidence or determining a fact at issue. DNA identification testimony in sexual assault case admissible under the rule and under Frye. People v. Fishback, 829 P.2d 489 (Colo. App. 1991), aff'd, 851 P.2d 884 (Colo. 1993).

This rule represents the appropriate standard for determining the admissibility of scientific evidence, rather than the test developed in Frye v. United States. Under the standard established in this rule, the trial should focus on the reliability and relevance of the scientific evidence and determine the reliability of the scientific principles, the qualifications of the witness, and the usefulness of the testimony to the jury. In determining the reliability and relevance of the evidence, the court should apply a broad inquiry and consider the totality of the circumstances in each specific case, considering a wide range of factors. Because the applicable standard is so liberal, the court should also apply its discretionary authority under C.R.E. 403 to ensure the probative value of the evidence is not substantially outweighed by unfair prejudice. People v. Shreck, 22 P.3d 68 (Colo. 2001); Masters v. People, 59 P.3d 979 (Colo. 2002); People v. Rector, 248 P.3d 1196 (Colo. 2011).

Process of elimination and use of patient's medical history to rule out alternative explanations for injuries are reliable scientific methods. Eliminating the presence of any illness or disease and finding an absence of any accidental trauma to explain a patient's injuries satisfy the reliability requirement of Shreck. People v. Friend, 2014 COA 123M, 431 P.3d 614, aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds, 2018 CO 90, 429 P.3d 1191.

Trial court has discretion to decide whether to conduct an evidentiary hearing when a party requests a Shreck analysis. A court is not required to conduct an evidentiary hearing under Shreck provided it has before it sufficient information to make specific findings under C.R.E. 403 and this rule about the reliability of the scientific principles involved, the expert's qualification to testify to such matters, the helpfulness to the jury, and potential prejudice. People v. Rector, 248 P.3d 1196 (Colo. 2011).

A party raising a challenge under Shreck to the admissibility of expert testimony must sufficiently identify the testimony or witness being challenged. People v. Rector, 248 P.3d 1196 (Colo. 2011).

"Reasonable medical probability" standard should no longer be used. This rule allows the admission of scientific expert testimony when: (1) The scientific principles at issue are reasonably reliable; (2) the witness is qualified to opine on such principles; (3) the testimony is useful to the jury; and (4) the probative value of the evidence outweighs any potential prejudice. An inquiry into whether the expert expresses his or her opinion to the required degree of medical probability is not appropriate. Estate of Ford v. Eicher, 250 P.3d 262 (Colo. 2011).

The reliability analysis hinges on whether the scientific principles the expert employed are grounded in the methods and procedures of science. Estate of Ford v. Eicher, 250 P.3d 262 (Colo. 2011).

Gatekeeping function to rule out "junk science" only allows court to determine whether an alternative theory is reasonably reliable. The court abuses its discretion when it determines which of two competing medical theories of causation is the more plausible and prevents the expert from offering the other. Estate of Ford v. Eicher, 220 P.3d 939 (Colo. App. 2008), aff'd, 250 P.3d 262 (Colo. 2011).

The fact that there is no ethical way to test an alternative medical theory does not preclude the admissibility of testimony but goes to the weight that the jury may assign to it. Estate of Ford v. Eicher, 220 P.3d 939 (Colo. App. 2008), aff'd, 250 P.3d 262 (Colo. 2011).

In determining that expert's testimony is unreliable and, therefore, should not be admitted under this rule, it is not enough for a court to conclude that the testimony is "speculative". Instead, the court must consider whether the scientific principles underlying the testimony are reasonably reliable and whether the expert is qualified to opine on such matters. People v. Ramirez, 155 P.3d 371 (Colo. 2007).

Because the trial court made no specific finding that the theory of "overkill" testified to by the witness was reliable, nor was the reliability of that theory either supported by the evidence in the record or accepted in Colorado, its admission was an abuse of discretion. However, because there was overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt apart from the expert testimony, the error was harmless. Ruibal v. People, 2018 CO 93, 432 P.3d 590.

Statement of opinion in terms indicating a lack of certainty, such as "a possible mechanism" or "a reasonable supposition", do not by themselves render the opinion speculative. Estate of Ford v. Eicher, 220 P.3d 939 (Colo. App. 2008), aff'd, 250 P.3d 262 (Colo. 2011).

Trial court did not commit manifest error when it determined that forensic psychologists' testimony related to motivation and behavior of individuals committing sexual homicides, a recognized subspecialty of forensic psychology, was reasonably reliable, that it was helpful to the jury, and that under C.R.E. 403 the probative value of the testimony was substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, confusion of the issues, or misleading the jury, or by considerations of undue delay, waste of time, or needless presentation of the evidence. Masters v. People, 59 P.3d 979 (Colo. 2002).

A trial court has the discretion to determine the admissibility of expert evidence and the trial court committed harmless error by refusing to permit an expert witness to testify on behalf of the plaintiff. Simon v. Truck Ins. Exch., 757 P.2d 1123 (Colo. App. 1988).

Admissibility of expert evidence must be evaluated in light of its offered purpose on review for potential abuse of discretion, and prosecution's proffered reason for admitting testimony to show the basis of the expert's opinion that a subdural hematoma is only caused by massive, violent force was an undisputed fact that helped the jury understand the facts of the case, and therefore was not an abuse of discretion. People v. Martinez, 74 P.3d 316 (Colo. 2003).

But trial court's admission of evidence of accident scenarios without a showing of a link between shaken-impact syndrome and the accident scenarios was error, as C.R.E. 702's helpfulness standard requires a valid scientific connection, enunciated to the jury. People v. Martinez, 74 P.3d 316 (Colo. 2003).

It was reversible error for the court to fail to apply the helpfulness standard of this rule in determining the admissibility of testimony on the reliability of eyewitness identification. Campbell v. People, 814 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1991).

When expert testimony unnecessary. Where the trial court is sitting as a finder of fact and is capable of drawing its own inferences from the facts in the record, it need not admit expert testimony on a matter that it is capable of resolving without such testimony. Tri-State Generation & Transmission Co. v. City of Thornton, 647 P.2d 670 (Colo. 1982).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting expert testimony where defendant did not present any evidence rebutting the reliability or general acceptance of the evidence. Stoczynski v. Livermore, 782 P.2d 834 (Colo. App. 1989).

The basis for admissibility under this rule is not that the witness possesses skill in a particular field but that the witness can offer assistance on a matter not within the knowledge or common experience of people of ordinary intelligence. Scognamillo v. Olsen, 795 P.2d 1357 (Colo. App. 1990); Hines v. D. & R.G.W. R. Co., 829 P.2d 419 (Colo. App. 1991).

The fact that a witness gained specialized knowledge while working under the supervision of others does not render the witness unqualified. Town of Red Cliff v. Reider, 851 P.2d 282 (Colo. App. 1993).

Expert testimony by an architect not licensed in the state may be properly admitted if the trial court determines whether the individual's education, training, experience, and knowledge in the field of architecture establishes that he has special knowledge concerning the architectural standards, including statewide standards applicable to Colorado practitioners, and whether the testimony would aid the court. Corcoran v. Sanner, 854 P.2d 1376 (Colo. App. 1993).

Competence to testify as to medical standards. Generally, practitioners of one school of medicine are not competent to testify as experts relative to standards of care required of practitioners of another school. Greene v. Thomas, 662 P.2d 491 (Colo. App. 1982).

However, a physician from one specialty may testify concerning the standard of care required of a physician with a different specialty, provided that the expert witness has acquired, through experience or study, more than just a casual familiarity with the standards of care of the defendant's specialty. Greene v. Thomas, 662 P.2d 491 (Colo. App. 1982); Connelly v. Kortz, 689 P.2d 728 (Colo. App. 1984).

Where the witness and the defendant are both doctors of podiatric medicine, the testimony is admissible regardless of the difference of the practices. Durkee v. Oliver, 714 P.2d 1330 (Colo. App. 1986).

A physician may be qualified as an "expert in medicine" rather than a specialty so long as his or her knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education supports the qualification and he or she is capable of providing specialized knowledge that will assist the decision-maker in determining the issues. People ex rel. Strodtman, 293 P.3d 123 (Colo. App. 2011); Gonzales v. Windlan, 2014 COA 176, 411 P.3d 878.

The test developed in Frye v. United States is applicable to novel scientific devices or processes involving the evaluation of physical evidence. The test contained in this rule is applicable if the evidence is of a general nature and the expert's testimony does not concern this particular victim. Fishback v. People, 851 P.2d 884 (Colo. 1993) (disapproved in People v. Shreck, 22 P.3d 68 (Colo. 2001)).

The test developed in Frye v. United States is applicable to the admission of novel scientific evidence. Tran v. Hilburn, 948 P.2d 52 (Colo. App. 1997), overruled by implication in People v. Shreck, 22 P.3d 68 (Colo. 2001).

Frye test has not been abandoned in Colorado as an exclusive test of admissibility of certain expert testimony, but its application remains very narrow. Schultz v. Wells, 13 P.3d 846 (Colo. App. 2000).

Frye test may be used only if proffered scientific evidence is based on novel scientific devices and processes involving the evaluation of physical evidence. People v. Perryman, 859 P.2d 263 (Colo. App. 1993); Schultz v. Wells, 13 P.3d 846 (Colo. App. 2000).

The test established in Frye v. United States requires a showing of (1) general acceptance in the relevant scientific community of the underlying theory or principle, and (2) general acceptance in the relevant scientific community of the techniques used to apply that theory or principle. Fishback v. People, 851 P.2d 884 (Colo. 1993); Tran v. Hilburn, 948 P.2d 52 (Colo. App. 1997); Schultz v. Wells, 13 P.3d 846 (Colo. App. 2000).

In evaluating novel scientific evidence under the Frye test, a court must identify the scientific theory, techniques used, and relevant scientific community at issue and then consider the evidence presented at trial, scientific literature on the state of the science in question, and rulings from other jurisdictions employing the same admissibility questions. Tran v. Hilburn, 948 P.2d 52 (Colo. App. 1997).

Test for admissibility of expert testimony that does not deal with scientific devices or processes is whether the testimony will assist the trier of fact to understand the evidence or fact in issue. Colwell v. Mentzer Invs., Inc., 973 P.2d 631 (Colo. App. 1998).

To determine the admissibility of this type of testimony, the court must hold an in limine proceeding to balance the reliability of the scientific principles upon which the testimony rests with the likelihood that the testimony may overwhelm or mislead the jury. Colwell v. Mentzer Invs., Inc., 973 P.2d 631 (Colo. App. 1998).

Applying this test, the court did not abuse its discretion in admitting testimony concerning the effect of stress on causing multiple sclerosis to become symptomatic. Colwell v. Mentzer Invs., Inc., 973 P.2d 631 (Colo. App. 1998).

Neither of the tests established in Frye v. United States or Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals is applicable to dog-tracking evidence because it does not depend upon any scientific device, method, or process. People v. Brooks, 950 P.2d 649 (Colo. App. 1997), aff'd, 975 P.2d 1105 (Colo. 1999).

Instead, such evidence concerns a subject of common knowledge: Some dogs can track. While specialized knowledge is involved, the reliability of a particular track is typically demonstrated by evidence that is easily understood by a jury such as the handler's experience, knowledge, and training. People v. Brooks, 950 P.2d 649 (Colo. App. 1997), aff'd, 975 P.2d 1105 (Colo. 1999).

Elements of a proper foundation for dog tracking evidence listed in Brooks v. People, 975 P.2d 1105 (Colo. 1999).

Harmless error to admit dog tracking evidence, despite improper foundation, where dog handler later testified she and the dog had worked together for five years and performed numerous narcotics sniffs, and that the dog had never alerted officers about money determined to be clean. People v. Martinez, 51 P.3d 1029 (Colo. App. 2001), aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds, 69 P.3d 1029 (Colo. 2003).

Frye test does not apply to shoe print identification. The expert's comparative process involves no ''manipulation'' of evidence, and an understanding of the techniques used is readily accessible to the jury. People v. Perryman, 859 P.2d 263 (Colo. App. 1993); People v. Fears, 962 P.2d 272 (Colo. App. 1997).

Frye test should not have been used to exclude evidence related to the results of automobile collision experiments with human volunteers as the tests did not involve a novel scientific process or device applied to the manipulation of physical evidence, but exclusion was nonetheless proper as the trial court did not rely exclusively on the Frye test but also applied C.R.E. 402 and this rule. Schultz v. Wells, 13 P.3d 846 (Colo. App. 2000).

Concerns which may arise in the implementation of otherwise generally accepted techniques go to the weight to be accorded to scientific or technical evidence and not to the admissibility of such evidence. Fishback v. People, 851 P.2d 884 (Colo. 1993).

Evidence derived from multiplex DNA testing systems was admissible under this rule based on the supreme court findings that multiplex systems are generally reliable, questions as to the reliability of a specific type of multiplex system go to the weight of the evidence, and the specific multiplex systems used in this case had been deemed reliable by other courts. Further, the court found that the probative value of the evidence was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, confusion, delay, waste of time, or needless presentation of cumulative evidence under C.R.E. 403. People v. Shreck, 22 P.3d 68 (Colo. 2001); People v. Lehmkuhl, 117 P.3d 98 (Colo. App. 2004).

Inconclusive and no conclusion DNA evidence is not relevant direct evidence. People v. Marks, 2015 COA 173, 374 P.3d 518.

Court acted within its discretion by determining that the scientific principles underlying the use of the Y Chromosome Short Tandem Repeat (Y-STR) analysis and the YFiler database of individuals' Y-STR profiles with the counting method analysis to generate exclusion statistics were reliable. There was testimony that the statistical methods used were generally accepted by other laboratories and used in several other fields and that other jurisdictions had admitted similar evidence as reliable. People v. Tunis, 2013 COA 161, 318 P.3d 524.

Quantitative electroencephalogram (QEEG), which is a computer enhanced electroencephalogram that compares a patient's brain activity with the activity of normally functioning brains, is not generally accepted in the community of clinicians who treat brain injured patients and QEEG evidence is thus not admissible. Tran v. Hilburn, 948 P.2d 52 (Colo. App. 1997).

But videofluoroscopy (VF), which is a videotaped x-ray motion picture of a patient's bones and soft tissue structures in motion, is generally accepted by the relevant community of chiropractic professionals and VF evidence is thus admissible. Tran v. Hilburn, 948 P.2d 52 (Colo. App. 1997).

The water court properly excluded results derived from surface and ground water models because of a lack of reliability caused by a variety of technical failures by the expert witnesses. In re Water Rights of Park County Sportsmen's Ranch, 105 P.3d 595 (Colo. 2005).

Exclusion of testimony held abuse of discretion where oral surgeon had testified as to standard of care for general dentist after the trial court had accepted the witness as an expert in both fields, neither the defendant nor the court had objected to the surgeon's qualification as an expert witness at the time of his testimony, and surgeon had testified that the standard of care for extraction of tooth would be the same for both practitioners. Surgeon's statement, in response to questioning of court, that he could not testify to the overall standard of care for general dentists goes to the weight to be accorded to testimony rather than to its admissibility. Sanchez v. Lauffenburger, 784 P.2d 855 (Colo. App. 1989).

Attorneys may testify as experts with respect to insurance industry standards. Klein v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 948 P.2d 43 (Colo. App. 1997).

Certified public accountant (CPA) qualified as expert in accounting. A trial court has discretion in determining the qualifications of an expert and the admissibility of expert evidence. That discretion is properly exercised where a certified public accountant is properly qualified as an expert in accounting and he testifies only regarding his professional opinions as a CPA which have to be made by him in the performance of his duties. Andrikopoulos v. Broadmoor Mgt. Co., 670 P.2d 435 (Colo. App. 1983).

Police officers employed in crime lab may testify as experts. A trial court does not abuse its discretion in allowing police officers employed in the crime laboratory to testify as experts when the technicians have qualifications as experts based on technical training and pretrial experience, and the jury is adequately instructed on the weight to be given expert testimony and opinion evidence. People v. Hankin, 179 Colo. 70, 498 P.2d 1116 (1972).

There is no requirement that a forensic chemistry expert follow a "written analytical method" before his or her expert testimony may be admitted. Based on the totality of the circumstances, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the expert testimony without a ''written analytical method''. People v. Laurent, 194 P.3d 1053 (Colo. App. 2008).

Testimony concerning Mexican culture did not constitute specialized knowledge that would assist the trier of fact, and exclusion of proffered expert testimony did not deprive defendant of his constitutional right to present a defense. People v. Salcedo, 985 P.2d 7 (Colo. App. 1998), rev'd on other grounds, 999 P.2d 833 (Colo. 2000).

Fact that witness not college graduate does not preclude his testifying as expert. The fact that a police officer is not a college graduate does not preclude his testifying as an expert on the basis of other technical training and pretrial experience. White v. People, 175 Colo. 119, 486 P.2d 4 (1971).

Error not found in allowing handwriting expert to testify. People v. Drumright, 181 Colo. 137, 507 P.2d 1097 (1973).

Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to qualify defendant's witness as an expert. The witness claimed that his expert knowledge was self-taught, but he did not explain how he learned about medical marijuana grows. Although expertise can be based solely on experience, the court had no basis to determine whether the testimony was reliable without additional information about the genesis of his knowledge and skills. People v. Douglas, 2015 COA 155, 412 P.3d 785.

Jury is not bound by the testimony of expert witnesses, which must be considered and weighed as that of other witnesses. People v. King, 181 Colo. 439, 510 P.2d 333 (1973).

A medical opinion is admissible if founded on reasonable medical probability. Thirsk v. Ethicon, Inc., 687 P.2d 1315 (Colo. App. 1983).

These rules, not the standard of "reasonable medical probability", govern the admissibility of expert testimony. To the extent earlier cases approve of this standard, they are overruled. People v. Ramirez, 155 P.3d 371 (Colo. 2007).

Internist not allowed to testify regarding the practice of surgeons. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to allow internist to testify to the standards of practice of surgeons in the Denver metropolitan area when proponent failed to demonstrate that the standards of care in the two fields are in fact similar, and there was testimony that the standards of practice concerning the need for surgery followed by surgeons differ from the standards of practice followed by internists. Connelly v. Kortz, 689 P.2d 728 (Colo. App. 1984).

Dispositive consideration in ruling on admissibility of medical witness' expert testimony regarding whether the defendant, who practices in another school of medicine, has adhered to or deviated from the requisite standard of care should be (1) whether the expert is, by reason of knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education, so substantially familiar with the standard or care applicable to the defendant's specialty as to render the witness' opinion testimony as well-informed as would be the opinion of an expert witness practicing the same specialty as the defendant, or (2) whether the standard of care for the condition in question is substantially identical for both specialties. Melville v. Southward, 791 P.2d 383 (Colo. 1990).

Expert's testimony of personal practices may be admissible if an expert testified concerning the applicable standard of care because (1) expert's personal practices may help jurors understand why that standard of care is followed; (2) testimony regarding personal practices may either bolster or impeach the credibility of the expert; and, (3) each expert addressed the applicable standard of care. Wallbank v. Rothenberg, 74 P.3d 413 (Colo. App. 2003).

Expert testimony by a physician who had never conducted an examination for a medical marijuana applicant may properly be admitted where the defendant provides no authority to show that the medical assessment and diagnosis required for a medical marijuana recommendation differ from that performed by physicians for other purposes. People v. Montante, 2015 COA 40, 351 P.3d 530.

Testimony of orthopedic surgeon should not have been admitted on the issue of podiatrist's alleged negligence. The plaintiff failed to establish that the orthopedic surgeon was so substantially familiar with the standard of care for podiatric surgery as to render his opinion testimony as well-informed as that of a podiatrist and failed to establish that the standard of care for the surgery was substantially identical for both the practice of orthopedic surgery and podiatry. Melville v. Southward, 791 P.2d 383 (Colo. 1990).

Neuropsychologists are not per se unqualified to speak on the causation of organic brain injury, but a court must satisfy the two-part approach to questions arising under this rule. Huntoon v. TCI Cablevision of Colo., 969 P.2d 681 (Colo. 1998).

Trial court did not err when it permitted a physician accepted as an expert in plastic and reconstructive surgery and the care of burn patients to testify that he had discontinued a steroid treatment after burn victim reported gynecological symptoms where physician was not offering an expert opinion on gynecological and obstetrical medicine but rather was giving the reasons for his course of treatment, which were based on the burn victim's physical response to the treatment. Simon v. Coppola, 872 P.2d 10 (Colo. App. 1993).

In a trial for sexual assault on a child, the trial court did not err in admitting testimony by the child's therapist, a social worker, about the characteristics present in sexually abused children, the presence of similar characteristics in the child, and the purpose of therapy since such testimony does not rise to the level of an improper assertion that the child was telling the truth and the testimony would assist the jury in determining a fact in issue. People v. Cordova, 854 P.2d 1337 (Colo. App. 1992).

In a first-degree sexual assault trial, testimony of counselor consisting of general comments based on her observations of victim's demeanor following alleged sexual assault was not inadmissible as amounting to a scientific diagnosis of rape trauma syndrome, as long as counselor did not use scientific terminology, discuss theory, or state an opinion as to whether she believed victim. People v. Farley, 712 P.2d 1116 (Colo. App. 1985), aff'd, 746 P.2d 956 (Colo. 1987).

The trial court did not err by allowing expert testimony in sexual assault case because the lay notion of what behavior follows being raped may not be consistent with the behavior that social scientists have found. This satisfies the test that expert testimony be helpful to the jury. Further, rape trauma syndrome evidence has repeatedly been held to be reliable. People v. Baenziger, 97 P.3d 271 (Colo. App. 2004).

Denial of effective counsel. Admission of testimony of defense-retained handwriting expert called by prosecution constitutes denial of effective assistance of counsel. Perez v. People, 745 P.2d 650 (Colo. 1987).

Expert witness evidence not admissible. Where expert witness' opinion evidence would not assist the trier of fact in understanding the evidence and where evidence is not of a technical or complex nature, expert testimony is not admissible under this rule. People v. Snook, 729 P.2d 1026 (Colo. App. 1986), aff'd, 745 P.2d 647 (Colo. 1987).

This rule was not intended to allow expert testimony on the issue of whether a witness is telling the truth. People v. Snook, 729 P.2d 1026 (Colo. App. 1986), aff'd, 745 P.2d 647 (Colo. 1987).

Court properly excluded defendant's expert heat of passion testimony because the heat of passion mitigator does not apply when a person seeks out the highly provoking act in question, as defendant did here. Therefore, trial court properly excluded the testimony since it would not have been helpful to the jury. People v. Valdez, 183 P.3d 720 (Colo. App. 2008).

Expert's testimony that victim's statements are consistent with the medical diagnosis do not constitute a subjective opinion concerning the veracity of victim's statements, therefore the testimony may be properly admitted. People v. Wittrein, 198 P.3d 1237 (Colo. App. 2008), rev'd on other grounds, 221 P.3d 1076 (Colo. 2009).

Doctor's testimony that she could not imagine that victim's story was fabricated was improper since it was an opinion that victim was telling the truth. People v. Wittrein, 198 P.3d 1237 (Colo. App. 2008), aff'd, 221 P.3d 1076 (Colo. 2009).

However, the error was invited by defense counsel's questioning, so reversal is not required. People v. Wittrein, 221 P.3d 1076 (Colo. 2009).

While expert opinion on whether children generally have the sophistication to lie about having experienced a sexual assault is admissible, neither a lay nor expert witness may give opinion testimony with respect to whether a witness is telling the truth on a specific occasion. Such testimony invades the province of the jury with respect to its determination of credibility. People v. Higa, 735 P.2d 203 (Colo. App. 1987).

Expert testimony on "rape trauma syndrome" admissible on issue of victim's delay in reporting sexual assault where testimony concerned only existence of syndrome and did not involve specific diagnosis of victim. People v. Hampton, 746 P.2d 947 (Colo. 1987).

Defense may present expert testimony as to defendant's state of mind in order to bolster a claim of self-defense in a homicide case. People v. Young, 825 P.2d 1004 (Colo. App. 1991).

Expert testimony on posttraumatic syndrome admissible on issue of child victim's delay in reporting sexual assault, where testimony of expert did not address opinion as to truthfulness of child's statements. People v. Fasy, 829 P.2d 1314 (Colo. 1992).

Expert's testimony was properly received to aid the jury in understanding the typicality of reactions by children who have been subjected to sexual abuse. Because the expert testified in general terms, did not focus on the truthfulness of the child's statements, and did not make any explicit reference to the child's truthfulness, it was proper expert testimony. People v. Morrison, 985 P.2d 1 (Colo. App. 1999), aff'd on other grounds, 19 P.3d 668 (Colo. 2000); People v. Mintz, 165 P.3d 829 (Colo. App. 2007); People v. Short, 2018 COA 47, 425 P.3d 1208.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by finding that an expert's explanation of possible child behaviors and reactions would be helpful to the trier of fact and was admissible. People v. Whitman, 205 P.3d 371 (Colo. App. 2007).

Admissibility of expert testimony based on results of absorption inhibition testing in rape case. Since the absorption inhibition method has been recognized as based upon accepted scientific principles, trial court admission of such evidence based upon an offer of proof was a proper exercise of discretion. People v. Banks, 804 P.2d 203 (Colo. App. 1990).

Testimony by voice-print expert is not sufficiently reliable to be admissible. People v. Drake, 748 P.2d 1237 (Colo. 1988).

Investigating police officer determined to be expert. An investigating police officer may give expert opinion if the subject is complex, is susceptible to opinion evidence, and the witness is qualified to give an opinion. Eggert v. Mosler Safe Co., 730 P.2d 895 (Colo. App. 1986).

Trial court did not err in refusing to permit expert testimony on the factors affecting the reliability of eyewitness identification. People v. Beaver, 725 P.2d 96 (Colo. App. 1986).

Expert testimony on the reliability of eyewitness identification is not per se admissible. Rather, admissibility of such evidence is left to the trial court's discretion. The trial judge must consider both this rule and C.R.E. 403 in determining the admissibility of such evidence and such determination may not be reversed unless it is manifestly erroneous. Campbell v. People, 814 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1991).

Trial court did not err in admitting results of a defendant's breath-alcohol test and allowing expert witness to testify about alcohol's effect on a person's inhibitions. People v. Covington, 988 P.2d 657 (Colo. App. 1999), rev'd on other grounds, 19 P.3d 15 (Colo. 2001).

The trial court has broad discretion to evaluate on a case by case basis whether expert testimony on the issue would assist the trier of fact to understand evidence or to determine facts in issue. The appellate court will not reverse the trial court's ruling to admit or exclude such expert testimony unless the ruling is manifestly erroneous. People v. Kemp, 885 P.2d 260 (Colo. App. 1994).

Admissibility of experience-based specialized knowledge that is not dependent on a scientific explanation depends on whether the evidence is reasonably reliable information that will assist the trier of fact, which question requires the court to find that the testimony on the subject would be useful to the jury and that the witness is qualified to render an opinion on the subject. Brooks v. People, 975 P.2d 1105 (Colo. 1999); Salcedo v. People, 999 P.2d 833 (Colo. 2000).

Trial court erred in excluding expert testimony on reliability of eyewitness identification where eyewitness identification of defendant was the only substantial element of the prosecution's case, eyewitnesses expressed high confidence in their identification of defendant, and proffered expert testimony would have shown a poor relationship between the confidence of eyewitnesses, in general, and the reliability of such witnesses' testimony. People v. Campbell, 847 P.2d 228 (Colo. App. 1992).

Trial court erred in excluding expert testimony on the whether all of the damages were foreseeable. It was sufficient that the expert's testimony permitted the jury to infer that not all of the damages were foreseeable even if the expert did not qualify how much was not foreseeable. Core-Mark Midcontinent v. Sonitrol Corp., 2012 COA 120, 300 P.3d 963.

Three-part test under equivalent federal rule applied in People v. Campbell, 847 P.2d 228 (Colo. App. 1992).

Where challenged testimony addressed a collection of behaviors which are typical of children who have been sexually abused, the fact that some of these behaviors were observed as occurring in the victim serves the proper purposes of corroborating the testimony of the victim and does not make such testimony inadmissible. The testimony of the dynamics of child sexual assault could be used by the jury to understand the evidence and determine facts in issue and was properly admitted. People v. Woertman, 786 P.2d 443 (Colo. App. 1989).

Expert testimony concerning drug courier profile was not properly admitted because it was not helpful to the jury since it was inherently subjective, of dubious reliability, and logically irrelevant, and because its probative value was substantially outweighed by a risk of misleading the jury. Salcedo v. People, 999 P.2d 833 (Colo. 2000).

Evidence of child sexual abuse and sex offender characteristics was not improper "profile" evidence, but was designed to aid the jury regarding the modus operandi of sex offenders and was useful because jurors cannot be presumed to have knowledge of such characteristics. People v. Conyac, 2014 COA 8M, 361 P.3d 1005.

Present or former employees of the insurance industry are not the only persons qualified to render expert opinions about its operation. Attorneys with extensive experience in workers' compensation who have dealt extensively with defendant and other insurance companies may testify as experts regarding the standard of good faith conduct of an insurer. Southerland v. Argonaut Ins. Co., 794 P.2d 1102 (Colo. App. 1990).

Trial court did not abuse discretion by not accepting a convict to testify as an expert witness in parole procedures. Cardiel v. Brittian, 833 P.2d 748 (Colo. 1992).

District court did not abuse discretion in denying habeas corpus petitioner proffered expert witness. Although witness, a fellow inmate of the petitioner, had some training and experience with habeas corpus petitions and other parole issues, trial court cannot be found to have abused its discretion in refusing to accept the witness as an expert in administrative procedures concerning parole. Cardiel v. Brittian, 833 P.2d 748 (Colo. 1992).

This rule contained the appropriate test to determine the admissibility of expert testimony when the process used by the expert involved no manipulation of physical evidence and the understanding of the expert's techniques was readily accessible to the jury. The expert's testimony compared the characteristics of defendant's shoes with prints found near the victim's body. People v. Perryman, 859 P.2d 263 (Colo. App. 1993).

A court may rely on the testimony of a single witness in admitting scientific evidence under Frye if the witness is qualified to render an opinion as to the general acceptance of the techniques and the opposing party has the opportunity to cross-examine the expert. People v. Perryman, 859 P.2d 263 (Colo. App. 1993).

Where expert witness had 16 years' experience, was familiar with literature in the field, and had testified as an expert in numerous prior cases the court could rely on such expert's testimony without additional, independent expert testimony. People v. Perryman, 859 P.2d 263 (Colo. App. 1993).

Court did not abuse its discretion in deeming witness qualified to testify as an expert given witness's extensive experience, knowledge, and training. People v. Rojas, 181 P.3d 1216 (Colo. App. 2008).

Where expert's opinion is based upon reliable data, including unrebutted published studies and the treatment of at least 50 patients with exposure to the same toxic substance as that to which plaintiff was exposed, there was no error in admitting testimony regarding causation, as it is both helpful and competent. Salazar v. Am. Sterlizer Co., 5 P.3d 357 (Colo. App. 2000).

Court did not abuse its discretion in concluding that a witness who was not a real estate appraiser could offer testimony concerning property values. The court was satisfied that the extent of the witness's training and experience qualified him to express an expert opinion regarding the effect of environmental contamination on property values even though he was not a real estate appraiser. Antolovich v. Brown Group Retail, Inc., 183 P.3d 582 (Colo. App. 2007).

Where substantial expert testimony concerning DNA testing supported admissibility of DNA evidence, it was within the trial court's discretion to allow consideration of the evidence. People v. Lindsey, 868 P.2d 1085 (Colo. App. 1993).

Trial court did not err in admitting DNA evidence where DNA expert could not definitely identify victim as a contributor of the DNA. Testimony was relevant in that it showed it was more probable than not that victim contributed to the DNA. People v. Rojas, 181 P.3d 1216 (Colo. App. 2008).

Expert testimony that there are no physical findings in 90 to 95 percent of child sex assault cases was relevant to rebut defense counsel's argument concerning the lack of physical evidence and to explain to the jury why the lack of physical findings in victim's case did not refute the allegations. People v. Conyac, 2014 COA 8M, 361 P.3d 1005.

Although an expert witness should not dictate the law that a jury should apply, an expert witness is permitted, in the trial court's discretion, to refer to the facts of a case in legal terms. Thus, expert's testimony was admissible insofar as it concerned party's contention that insurer's conduct constituted bad faith based on purported violations of the Unfair Claims Settlement Practices Act. Such testimony was helpful as it served to explain complex issues of insurance company claims management practices. Peiffer v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins., 940 P.2d 967 (Colo. App. 1996), aff'd on other grounds, 955 P.2d 1008 (Colo. 1998).

Any legal conclusions tendered by witness were elicited during her cross-examination by defendant's counsel, and thus, any error regarding witness's testimony was injected at defendant's behest. Such error cannot serve as grounds for reversal on appeal by defendant. Bd. of Comm'rs v. Fixed Base Operators, 939 P.2d 464 (Colo. App. 1997).

No abuse of discretion for trial court to permit expert testimony regarding the steps a reasonably prudent applicant in a Torrens action would take to ascertain the names of persons who claimed an interest in the property and to rely on that testimony in reaching its conclusions on due process issues. Lobato v. Taylor, 13 P.3d 821 (Colo. App. 2000), rev'd on other grounds, 71 P.3d 938 (Colo. 2002).

Expert testimony concerning reasons for victims' recantations is admissible in cases involving domestic violence. People v. Johnson, 74 P.3d 349 (Colo. App. 2002); People v. Wallin, 167 P.3d 183 (Colo. App. 2007).

Trial court properly excluded expert witness's testimony as unnecessary and as improperly usurping the court's function because: (1) The testimony was not needed to describe or interpret the crime setting; (2) the testimony was not a question for the jury; (3) the testimony would not have assisted the trier of fact; and (4) an expert testifying as to issues of law may not simply tell the jury what result to reach. People v. Lesslie, 939 P.2d 443 (Colo. App. 1996).

Prosecutor's use of expert testimony regarding drug courier profiles as substantive evidence of defendant's guilt was improper, and, although a reasonable jury could have convicted on other evidence, the admissible evidence did not overwhelmingly establish defendant's guilt, and there is a significant probability that the erroneously admitted testimony substantially influenced the jury's verdict, and thus was not harmless. Salcedo v. People, 999 P.2d 833 (Colo. 2000).

Court abused its discretion in admitting some lay opinions from mental health providers who had not been properly noticed as experts by the prosecution. Some of the opinions were expert opinions improperly admitted under the guise of lay opinion testimony. The improper testimony related to symptoms of specific mental illness and opinions about whether defendant suffered from mental illness. The evidence relied upon the witness' specialized knowledge and training and, therefore, went beyond the bounds of lay opinion. The error in this case was harmless since there was ample evidence in addition to the improperly admitted opinions. Dunlap v. People, 173 P.3d 1054 (Colo. 2007), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 1105, 128 S. Ct. 882, 169 L. Ed. 2d 740 (2008).

Mathematical probability statements or numerical conclusions by an expert witness on ergonomics properly excluded if (1) the conclusion was without statistical support in the record and (2) such a statement or conclusion implied a non-purposeful or non-intentional state of mind by the defendant and the expert was not qualified to testify regarding the defendant's psychological condition. People v. Wilkerson, 114 P.3d 874 (Colo. 2005).

Allowing police officer's testimony regarding the use of glass pipe and torch lighter to smoke methamphetamine not plain error. People v. Malloy, 178 P.3d 1283 (Colo. App. 2008).

Trial court improperly limited testimony of defendant's expert witness after prosecution had opened the door to this testimony and error was not harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. Golob v. People, 180 P.3d 1006 (Colo. 2008).

Child forensic interviewer's testimony that the alleged victim did not seem to be coached, although normally not admissible, was admissible because the defense opened the door to the questioning. People v. Heredia-Cobos, 2017 COA 130, 415 P.3d 860.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in requiring defendant to present his expert testimony in court rather than through video-conferencing. People v. Casias, 2012 COA 117, 312 P.3d 208.

Videos introduced at trial were animations not simulations, so they are not subject to the scientific evidence standard of this rule. The videos were animations because: an officer supplied the calculations and opinions used to create the videos; the officer formed the opinions based on a review of the physical evidence and the victim's statements; the videos were demonstrative exhibits that illustrated the officer's opinion; and the jury knew the videos were not a re-creation of the actual event. People v. Douglas, 2016 COA 59, 411 P.3d 1026.

Applied in People in Interest of K.A.J., 635 P.2d 921 (Colo. App. 1981); People v. Ortega, 672 P.2d 215 (Colo. App. 1983); People v. Jones, 743 P.2d 44 (Colo. App. 1987); People v. Williams, 761 P.2d 258 (Colo. App. 1988); People v. Groves, 854 P.2d 1310 (Colo. App. 1992); People v. Masters, 33 P.3d 1191 (Colo. App. 2001), aff'd, 59 P.3d 979 (Colo. 2002); People v. Martinez, 51 P.3d 1029 (Colo. App. 2001), aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds, 69 P.3d 1029 (Colo. 2003); Luster v. Brinkman, 205 P.3d 410 (Colo. App. 2008).

Rule 703. Bases of Opinion Testimony by Experts

The facts or data in the particular case upon which an expert bases an opinion or inference may be those perceived by or made known to the expert at or before the hearing. If of a type reasonably relied upon by experts in the particular field in forming opinions or inferences upon the subject, the facts or data need not be admissible in evidence in order for the opinion or inference to be admitted. Facts or data that are otherwise inadmissible shall not be disclosed to the jury by the proponent of the opinion or inference unless the court determines that their probative value in assisting the jury to evaluate the expert's opinion substantially outweighs their prejudicial effect.

COMMITTEE COMMENT

The Committee believes this rule is a substantial deviation from former Colorado law, but there are former cases lending partial support to the rule. See: Hensel Phelps Construction Co. v. U.S., 413 F.2d 701 10th Cir. (1969); Houser v. Eckhardt, 168 Colo. 226, 450 P.2d 664 (1969); McNelley v. Smith, 149 Colo. 177, 368 P.2d 555 (1962); Ison v. Stewart, 105 Colo. 55, 94 P.2d 701 (1939); Enyart v. Orr, 78 Colo. 6, 238 P. 29 (1925); Rio Grande W. Ry. Co. v. Rubenstein, 5 Colo. App. 121, 38 P. 76 (1894). See also, Good v. A.B. Chance Co., 39 Colo. App. 70, 565 P.2d 217 (1977). Although not directly in point, we believe the case supports the last sentence of Rule 703. (Amended March 5, 1981, effective July 1, 1981.)

Fact that expert witness has not examined accused does not necessarily disqualify him from expressing his opinion based upon a hypothetical question, but such an opinion must be based on facts in evidence. People v. Manier, 184 Colo. 44, 518 P.2d 811 (1974).

Neither collegiate degrees nor formal training in an established curriculum is necessarily required before one may be considered an expert in a particular field. People v. Genrich, 928 P.2d 799 (Colo. App. 1996).

Expert's opinion may not be predicated on others' opinions. An expert's opinion must not be predicated, in whole or in part, on opinions of others, expert or lay. People v. Beasley, 43 Colo. App. 488, 608 P.2d 835 (1979); People v. District Court, 647 P.2d 1206 (Colo. 1982).

Nor on facts varying from actual facts. An expert opinion buttressed by assumed facts at variance with the actual facts has no evidential efficacy. High v. Indus. Comm'n, 638 P.2d 818 (Colo. App. 1981).

Opinion based on information gained through hypnosis inadmissible. A psychiatrist will not be permitted to testify as to the mental state of the defendant if his opinion is based on information gained through hypnosis. People v. Diaz, 644 P.2d 71 (Colo. App. 1981).

Expert witness may be cross-examined. It is fundamental that an expert witness may be cross-examined concerning the basis of his opinion. People v. Alward, 654 P.2d 327 (Colo. App. 1982).

By learned treatises. Expert may be cross-examined using learned treatises even though he did not rely upon them in reaching his conclusions. People v. Beasley, 43 Colo. App. 488, 608 P.2d 835 (1979).

Competence to testify as to medical standards. Generally, practitioners of one school of medicine are not competent to testify as experts relative to standards of care required of practitioners of another school. Greene v. Thomas, 662 P.2d 491 (Colo. App. 1982).

However, a physician from one specialty may testify concerning the standard of care required of a physician with a different specialty, provided that the expert witness has acquired, through experience or study, more than just a casual familiarity with the standards of care of the defendant's specialty. Greene v. Thomas, 662 P.2d 491 (Colo. App. 1982).

Opinion may be based on facts or data not admissible in evidence. Graefe & Graefe v. Beaver Mesa Exploration, 695 P.2d 767 (Colo. App. 1984).

But this rule does not permit otherwise inadmissible facts or data contained in a report or statement to be admitted merely because the expert relied on them. Leiting v. Mutha, 58 P.3d 1049 (Colo. App. 2002).

It is not proper to equate "weren't admitted" with "otherwise inadmissible". The balancing test provided in this rule is not applicable to facts or data that are admissible for any other purpose but have not yet been offered for such a purpose at the time the expert testifies. Dorsey & Whitney LLP v. RegScan, Inc., 2018 COA 21, __ P.3d __.

Expert's testimony itself is inadmissible when underlying basis for the expert opinions and recommendations is not accepted as reliable by the courts. Because of the lack of a scientific basis and reliability, it is inappropriate for an expert witness to rely on polygraph results to form or render an opinion. Trial court should not have listened to, or considered, the opinions of any experts based, in whole or in part, on polygraph examinations. People ex rel. M.M., 215 P.3d 1237 (Colo. App. 2009).

Interpretation of blood test results by expert whose qualifications are established in field of blood type testing was admissible evidence. K.H.R. by and through D.S.J. v. R.L.S., 807 P.2d 1201 (Colo. App. 1990).

It is permissible for an expert to rely on data which itself may be inadmissible. People v. Diefenderfer, 784 P.2d 741 (Colo. 1989).

Expert's opinion may be based upon other reliable expert opinions due to the adoption of this rule. Gold Rush Inv. v. G.E. Johnson Const., 807 P.2d 1169 (Colo. App. 1990).

Court did not err in admitting expert testimony of licensed physician whose opinion was based in part upon information received from psychiatrist in residency together with the physician's own examination of hospital records, charts, hospital admission data, and his own observations of respondent. People in Interest of Martinez, 841 P.2d 383 (Colo. App. 1992).

Admission of expert testimony was not abuse of trial court's discretion, where expert based his opinion on data contained in microscope slides and reports prepared by two other doctors since that opinion was based upon an opinion of a type reasonably relied upon by experts in the particular field in forming opinions or inferences upon the subject. Fenton v. Fibreboard Corp., 827 P.2d 564 (Colo. App. 1991).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing pediatrician to testify that rib fractures were a basis for the pediatrician's conclusion that child died as a result of shaken baby syndrome. People v. Cauley, 32 P.3d 602 (Colo. App. 2001).

An expert may express an opinion based upon assumptions that have a reasonable basis in the evidence so long as the information is of the type reasonably relied upon by experts in the field of expertise. Vento v. Colo. Nat'l Bank-Pueblo, 907 P.2d 642 (Colo. App. 1995).

Reliance upon facts not personally observed but which have been reasonably relied upon by experts in the same field is an acceptable basis of expert opinion and the trial court has broad discretion in determining whether the requirements governing expert opinions have been satisfied and whether the expert's testimony is admissible. Gold Rush Investments, Inc. v. Johnson, 807 P.2d 1169 (Colo. App. 1990); Fenton v. Fibreboard Corp., 827 P.2d 564 (Colo. App. 1991).

An expert is not required on direct examination to disclose the underlying facts that form the basis for his or her opinion, however, nothing prevents an expert from doing so, and it was proper for expert in case at hand to give his opinion on how defendant's drawings and narratives related to a sexual homicide. People v. Masters, 33 P.3d 1191 (Colo. App. 2001), aff'd on other grounds, 59 P.3d 979 (Colo. 2002).

The weight to be accorded to the property valuation techniques of an expert in a marriage dissolution is for the trial court's determination, depending upon the court's assessment of the reliability of the data in a particular case. In re Bookout, 833 P.2d 800 (Colo. App. 1991), cert. denied, 846 P.2d 189 (Colo. 1993).

The weight to be accorded to the valuation techniques of an expert is for the trial court to determine depending upon the court's assessment of the reliability of the data in a particular case. In re Bookout, 833 P.2d 800 (Colo. App. 1991), cert. denied, 846 P.2d 189 (Colo. 1993).

Certainty goes to weight, not admissibility. Once a witness is qualified as an expert, the fact that the examination reveals that he or she cannot support the opinion with certainty goes only to the weight to be given the opinion and not its admissibility. Vento v. Colo. Nat'l Bank-Pueblo, 907 P.2d 642 (Colo. App. 1995).

A doctor may testify to the fact that he or she believed a child suffered injuries consistent with medical child abuse; the doctor may not opine as to whether the injuries constituted the legal definition of child abuse. Testimony that the injuries suffered were the result of nonaccidental trauma are admissible opinions of medical child abuse. People v. Weeks, 2015 COA 77, 369 P.3d 699.

Expert testimony comparing the force that caused the victim's injuries to that of various common accidents is logically related to the issue of whether the injuries suffered were the result of a low-impact injury or high-impact trauma. People v. Weeks, 2015 COA 77, 369 P.3d 699.

Applied in Stone v. Caroselli, 653 P.2d 754 (Colo. App. 1982); People v. Williams, 654 P.2d 319 (Colo. App. 1982); Jimerson v. Prendergast, 697 P.2d 804 (Colo. App. 1985).

Rule 704. Opinion on Ultimate Issue

Testimony in the form of an opinion or inference otherwise admissible is not objectionable because it embraces an ultimate issue to be decided by the trier of fact.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

COMMITTEE COMMENT

The present Federal and Colorado rules may conflict with preceding Colorado case law. (Compare Bridges v. Lintz, 140 Colo. 582, 346 P.2d 571 (1959) and McNelley v. Smith, 149 Colo. 177, 368 P.2d 555 (1962).) It is felt that the rule expresses the better alternative. The conflict arises in the area of lay witnesses testifying as to an ultimate issue of fact. In Colorado, case law says that he may testify concerning things which would ''help'' the jury to understand the facts, but he may not render an opinion on the ultimate fact in issue. Mogote-Northeastern Consolidated Ditch Co. v. Gallegos, 70 Colo. 550, 203 P. 668 (1922). There are exceptions to the rule, and the law in Colorado can best be stated by quoting the following language: ''It is reversible error to allow an opinion as to ultimate facts unless the witness testifies as an expert or his testimony invokes a description or estimate of condition, value, etc. or when it is difficult or impossible to state with sufficient exactness the facts and their surroundings.'' Town of Meeker v. Fairfield, 25 Colo. App. 187, 136 P. 471 (1913).

A lay witness is not prohibited from testifying to an issue of ultimate fact, but the question which elicits the opinion must be phrased to ask for factual, rather than legal, opinion. People v. Collins, 730 P.2d 293 (Colo. 1986).

Admissibility under this rule cannot be determined in a vacuum. Rather, considerations of relevance, helpfulness, and potential for prejudice, confusion, or waste of time must be taken into account. Hines v. D. & R.G.W. R. Co., 829 P.2d 419 (Colo. App. 1991).

Where operation of train was outside the knowledge of the ordinary person and a crucial issue in the case was the adequacy of the warning given to a pedestrian by sounding the train's whistle, expert opinions were relevant, helpful, probative, and undergirded by sufficient facts to enable the jury to make its own evaluation. Hines v. D. & R.G.W. R. Co., 829 P.2d 419 (Colo. App. 1991).

An expert may not usurp the function of the court by expressing an opinion of the applicable law or legal standards. Quintana v. City of Westminster, 8 P.3d 527 (Colo. App. 2000).

But in bench trial, where judge is presumed to ignore incompetent and inadmissible evidence, admission of lawyer's testimony to help sort out complex business relationships and transactions was held not to be an abuse of discretion. Silverberg v. Colantuno, 991 P.2d 280 (Colo. App. 1998).

Expert witness invaded the province of the court as the giver of law when he explained the statute of limitations and described when a tort action begins to accrue. Grogan v. Taylor, 877 P.2d 1374 (Colo. App. 1993), rev'd on other grounds, 900 P.2d 60 (Colo. 1995).

Admission of laboratory supervisor's opinion that, based on defendant's blood alcohol concentration test results, defendant was under the influence of alcohol, substantially impaired by that drug, and unable to operate a motor vehicle safely did not suggest to the jury how to decide the case. The testimony was not so obviously erroneous that the trial court should have sua sponte precluded it absent an objection. Nor did the limited testimony undermine the fundamental fairness of the trial. People v. Medrano-Bustamante, 2013 COA 139, 412 P.3d 581, aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds sub nom. Reyna-Abarca v. People, 2017 CO 15, 390 P.3d 816.

No plain error or usurpation of the jury's role in police officer's testimony. The fact that police officer's testimony tracked the language of one of the elements of the crime at issue did not alone render his opinion such an obvious usurpation of the jury's role as to rise to the level of plain error. To the contrary, the jury was properly instructed on the meaning of the term at issue, that it was to follow the rules of law as explained by the court, and that it could believe all, part, or none of any witness's testimony. People v. McMinn, 2013 COA 94, 412 P.3d 551.

A doctor may testify to the fact that he or she believed a child suffered injuries consistent with medical child abuse; the doctor may not opine as to whether the injuries constituted the legal definition of child abuse. Testimony that the injuries suffered were the result of nonaccidental trauma are admissible opinions of medical child abuse. People v. Weeks, 2015 COA 77, 369 P.3d 699.

Expert testimony comparing the force that caused the victim's injuries to that of various common accidents is logically related to the issue of whether the injuries suffered were the result of a low-impact injury or high-impact trauma. People v. Weeks, 2015 COA 77, 369 P.3d 699.

No usurpation of the court's or jury's prerogatives occurred when experts offered strong opinions, including phrases such as ''complete disregard of ... responsibility'' and ''as bad as I've seen anywhere'', that were limited to engineering practices and did not venture into legal concepts outside the witnesses' expertise or opine as to whether a legal standard, such as willful and wanton conduct, was met. Taylor Morrison of Colo., Inc. v. Terracon Consultants, Inc., 2017 COA 64, 410 P.3d 767.

App. 2001), aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds, 69 P.3d 1029 (Colo. 2003).

Rule 705. Disclosure of Facts or Data Underlying Expert Opinion

The expert may testify in terms of opinion or inference and give reasons therefor without first testifying to the underlying facts or data, unless the court requires otherwise. The expert may in any event be required to disclose the underlying facts or data on cross-examination.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

COMMITTEE COMMENT

Although the present rule is contrary to Colorado case law, the Committee believes it to be the better view. The reasons for the retention of the proposed Federal rule as it is presently written are as follows. First, the rule does not disturb the requirement for a proper foundation for expert opinions. City and County of Denver v. Lyttle, 106 Colo. 157, 103 P.2d 1 (1940). Secondly, the elimination of the requirement for preliminary disclosure of underlying facts or data has the effect of reducing the need for hypothetical questions, a goal which has been sought by a number of states. Thirdly: ''If the objection is made that leaving it to the cross-examiner to bring out the supporting data is essentially unfair, the answer is that he is under no compulsion to bring out any facts or data except those unfavorable to the opinion. The answer assumes that the cross-examiner has the advance knowledge which is essential for effective cross-examination. This advance knowledge has been afforded, though imperfectly, by the traditional foundations requirement.'' Advisory Committee's Notes, Proposed Federal Rules. See also, Archina v. People, 135 Colo. 8, 307 P.2d 1083 (1957). Finally, it is clear that there is built-in safeguard in the discretionary power of the court to require prior disclosure.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, ''Opinion Testimony'', see 22 Colo. Law. 1185 (1993). For article, ''Cross-Examining and Impeaching Expert Psychiatric Witnesses'', see 26 Colo. Law. 75 (Nov. 1997).

Cross-examination concerning basis of opinion permitted. It is fundamental that an expert witness may be cross-examined concerning the basis of his opinion. People v. Alward, 654 P.2d 327 (Colo. App. 1982), cert. dismissed, 677 P.2d 948 (Colo. 1984); People v. Diefenderfer, 784 P.2d 741 (Colo. 1989).

Although this rule provides that the expert "may in any event be required to disclose the underlying facts or data on cross-examination", this principle is not absolute. When the expert has testified in summary fashion, the counsel of this rule is that the court should allow wide latitude for cross-examination. However, the trial judge may certainly impose reasonable limits upon the cross-examination, and he should cut off the attack where its purpose is to support the cross-examiner's case by bringing out inadmissible hearsay rather than simply to undermine the expert's opinion. People v. Diefenderfer, 784 P.2d 741 (Colo. 1989).

Medical experts are allowed to state the bases of their opinions. Where there exist various possible causes of an injury and the burden of proving causation rests on the plaintiffs, defendant's experts should be allowed to state their opinions and articulate the bases of their opinions in detail, as did plaintiffs' experts. Thirsk v. Ethicon, Inc., 687 P.2d 1315 (Colo. App. 1983).

Applied in Stone v. Caroselli, 653 P.2d 754 (Colo. App. 1982).

Rule 706. Court Appointed Experts

(a) Appointment. The court may on its own motion or on the motion of any party enter an order to show cause why expert witnesses should not be appointed, and may request the parties to submit nominations. The court may appoint any expert witnesses agreed upon by the parties, and may appoint expert witnesses of its own selection. An expert witness shall not be appointed by the court unless he consents to act. A witness so appointed shall be informed of his duties by the court in writing, a copy of which shall be filed with the clerk, or at a conference in which the parties shall have opportunity to participate. A witness so appointed shall advise the parties of his findings, if any; his deposition may be taken by any party; and he may be called to testify by the court or any party. He shall be subject to cross-examination by each party, including a party calling him as a witness.

(b) Compensation. Expert witnesses so appointed are entitled to reasonable compensation in whatever sum the court may allow. The compensation thus fixed is payable from funds which may be provided by law in criminal cases and civil actions and proceedings involving just compensation under the fifth amendment. In other civil actions and proceedings the compensation shall be paid by the parties in such proportion and at such time as the court directs, and thereafter charged in like manner as other costs.

(c) Disclosure of appointment. In the exercise of its discretion, the court may authorize disclosure to the jury of the fact that the court appointed the expert witness.

(d) Parties' experts of own selection. Nothing in this rule limits the parties in calling expert witnesses of their own selection.

ARTICLE VIII
HEARSAY

Rule 801. Definitions

The following definitions apply under this article:

(a) Statement. A "statement" is (1) an oral or written assertion or (2) nonverbal conduct of a person, if it is intended by him to be communicative.

COMMITTEE COMMENT

The change reflected in the Colorado rule was necessary, in the minds of the Committee members, because the Committee believed that the word "assertion" was extremely unclear; the change is felt to be more precise.

(b) Declarant. A "declarant" is a person who makes a statement.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

(c) Hearsay. "Hearsay" is a statement other than one made by the declarant while testifying at the trial or hearing, offered in evidence to prove the truth of the matter asserted.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

(d) Statements which are not hearsay. A statement is not hearsay if —

(1) Prior statement by witness. The declarant testifies at the trial or hearing and is subject to cross-examination concerning the statement, and the statement is (A) inconsistent with his testimony, or (B) consistent with his testimony and is offered to rebut an express or implied charge against him of recent fabrication or improper influence or motive, or (C) one of identification of a person made after perceiving him, or

(2) Admission by party-opponent. The statement is offered against a party and is (A) the party's own statement in either an individual or a representative capacity, or (B) a statement of which the party has manifested an adoption or belief in its truth, or (C) a statement by a person authorized by the party to make a statement concerning the subject, or (D) a statement by the party's agent or servant concerning a matter within the scope of the agency or employment, made during the existence of the relationship, or (E) a statement by a co-conspirator of a party during the course and in furtherance of the conspiracy. The contents of the statement shall be considered but are not alone sufficient to establish the declarant's authority under subdivision (C), the agency or employment relationship and scope thereof under subdivision (D), or the existence of the conspiracy and the participation therein of the declarant and the party against whom the statement is offered under subdivision (E).

(Federal Rule Substantially Identical, Except as to Rule 801(d)(1)(A).)

COMMITTEE COMMENT

The last sentence of this Rule was added to track a corresponding change in F.R.E. 801(d)(2).

Purpose of hearsay rule. The constitutional right of confrontation and the hearsay rule stem from the same roots, and are designed to protect similar interests based on the premise that testimony is much more reliable when given under oath at trial, where the declarant is subject to cross-examination and the jury may observe his demeanor. People v. Dement, 661 P.2d 675 (Colo. 1983); People v. Nunez, 698 P.2d 1376 (Colo. App. 1984), aff'd, 737 P.2d 422 (Colo. 1987).

Electronically stored information on cellular telephone is not hearsay, and trial court properly admitted telephone into evidence. Stored information on cellular telephone is not considered hearsay because it is neither a ''declarant'' nor a ''statement'', as specified within the meaning of this rule. People v. Buckner, 228 P.3d 245 (Colo. App. 2009).

A person's demeanor, being upset and crying, is generally not hearsay. The court erred in excluding rebuttal testimony of a police officer that the defendant had been upset and crying. People v. Lujan, 2018 COA 95, __ P.3d __.

Testimonial hearsay is admissible only upon a showing of the unavailability of the declarant and a prior opportunity for cross-examination of the declarant by the defendant. Compan v. People, 121 P.3d 876 (Colo. 2005).

Nontestimonial statements do not implicate a defendant's state constitutional right to confrontation. In light of the U.S. supreme court's holding in Davis v. Washington, 547 U.S. 813 (2006), Colorado's confrontation clause applies only to testimonial statements. Nicholls v. People, 2017 CO 71, 396 P.3d 675.

Where statements by victim were not testimonial, Crawford v. Washington, 541 U.S. 36 (2004), does not require defendant to have an opportunity to cross-examine victim. People v. Gash, 165 P.3d 779 (Colo. App. 2006).

Translation as hearsay. An interpreter serves as a language conduit for the declarant. Hence, admission of translated testimony is appropriate when the circumstances assure its reliability. Relevant factors include: (1) Whether actions after the translated conversation were consistent with the translated statements; (2) whether the interpreter had qualifications to interpret and language skill; (3) whether the interpreter had any motive to mislead or distort; and (4) which party supplied the interpreter. People v. Hinojos-Mendoza, 140 P.3d 30 (Colo. App. 2005), aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds, 169 P.3d 662 (Colo. 2007).

Hearsay statements are presumptively unreliable since the declarant is not present to explain the statement in context nor subjected to cross examination. Blecha v. People, 962 P.2d 931 (Colo. 1998).

Statement not excluded where relevance goes to fact that statement made, not its truth. Where it is the fact that the statement was made, and not its truth or falsity, that is relevant, it is error to exclude the statement. Conrad v. City & County of Denver, 656 P.2d 662 (Colo. 1982); Hansen v. Lederman, 759 P.2d 810 (Colo. App. 1988).

Statements not hearsay when offered for their falsity not their truth. People v. Godinez, 2018 COA 170M, __ P.3d __.

Prior statements admissible to create fact dispute. Where the record indicates that a party would be available as a witness at the trial of the matter and would be subject to cross-examination, her prior statements would be admissible to create a fact dispute to be resolved by the trier of fact. People in Interest of K.A.J., 635 P.2d 921 (Colo. App. 1981).

Entire statement not admitted to rehabilitate testimony where only portion relevant. The trial court does not err in refusing to admit an entire tape recording of a statement made by the defendant after his arrest for the purpose of rehabilitating his testimony, when only a portion of the recording was relevant to rebut the prior inconsistent statement used by the prosecution for impeachment purposes. People v. DelGuidice, 199 Colo. 41, 606 P.2d 840 (1979).

However, when victim is impeached with respect to credibility, all prior consistent statements are admissible, not just those that are directly related to specific facts in question. People v. Tyler, 745 P.2d 257 (Colo. App. 1987); People v. Halstead, 881 P.2d 401 (Colo. App. 1994); People v. Elie, 148 P.3d 359 (Colo. App. 2006).

Colorado permits an extrajudicial identification of a defendant as substantive evidence and as an exception to the hearsay rule. Kurtz v. People, 177 Colo. 306, 494 P.2d 97 (1972).

Furthermore, this exception is extended to extrajudicial identifications heard or observed by third person. Kurtz v. People, 177 Colo. 306, 494 P.2d 97 (1972).

Reasonable to expect person hearing accusatory statement to deny same. Underlying the adoptive admission exemption from normal hearsay concepts is the general assumption that it would be reasonable to expect any person who hears a statement accusing him or her of misconduct to deny such statement. People v. Green, 629 P.2d 1098 (Colo. App. 1981); People v. Pappadiakis, 705 P.2d 983 (Colo. App. 1985), aff'd sub nom. Peltz v. People, 728 P.2d 1271 (Colo. 1986); People v. Thomas, 2014 COA 64, 345 P.3d 949.

Prerequisites to admission of adoptive admission statement. Before admitting any adoptive admission statement into evidence, a trial court must determine preliminarily, normally by means of an in camera hearing, that the party offering the statement can produce evidence to support the factual conclusions that the defendant heard and understood the statement, had knowledge of the contents thereof, and was free from any emotional or physical impediment which would inhibit an immediate response. People v. Green, 629 P.2d 1098 (Colo. App. 1981).

Adoption of accusatory statement through silence closely scrutinized. The assumption that a defendant adopts an accusatory statement through his silence is a weak one, and evidence of such statements must be scrutinized with special concern in criminal cases, where there are constitutional limits to the permissible inferences from a defendant's silence. People v. Green, 629 P.2d 1098 (Colo. App. 1981).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting evidence of defendant's silence as an adoptive admission. Under the circumstances, defendant would be expected to disagree with, or object to, the statement accusing him of being the driver at the time the accident occurred. People v. Thomas, 2014 COA 64, 345 P.3d 959.

Remarks by any accomplices in presence of defendant are admissible, an analogous situation being a coconspirator's exception to the hearsay rule. Fernandez v. People, 176 Colo. 346, 490 P.2d 690 (1971).

A statement by a party's coconspirator made during the course and furtherance of the conspiracy is admissible hearsay, if it is shown the declarant and the party were members of the conspiracy and the statement was made in the course and in furtherance of the conspiracy. People v. James, 40 P.3d 36 (Colo. App. 2001).

Under section (c), if an out-of-court statement is offered solely to show its effect on the listener, it is not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted and is not hearsay. People v. Phillips, 2012 COA 176, 315 P.3d 136.

Child's statement to coconspirator was admissible for the nonhearsay purpose of showing its effect on coconspirator as a listener, in that she called defendant to notify him of the message soon after the statement was made to her and sought advice from defendant. People v. Robinson, 226 P.3d 1145 (Colo. App. 2009); People v. Phillips, 2012 COA 176, 315 P.3d 136.

The prosecution, as the proponent of a coconspirator's statement, bears the burden of establishing by a preponderance of the evidence that there was a conspiracy, that the defendant and declarant were members of the conspiracy, and the declarant made the statement during the course and in furtherance of the conspiracy. The assistant manager's statements were in furtherance of the assistant manager's role in the conspiracy to conceal defendant's identity and, thus, admissible. People v. Dunlap, 124 P.3d 780 (Colo. App. 2004).

Codefendant's declaration made during joint adventure. A trial court may consider the statement of an alleged coconspirator in determining whether the prosecution has established the evidentiary conditions for admissibility so long as the statement itself is not the sole basis for establishing those foundational requirements. People v. Montoya, 753 P.2d 729 (Colo. 1988); People v. Esch, 786 P.2d 462 (Colo. App. 1989); People v. Taylor, 804 P.2d 196 (Colo. App. 1990); People v. Rivera, 56 P.3d 1155 (Colo. App. 2002).

Child's hearsay statements to public school employees, police officer, and caseworker were nontestimonial because the primary purpose of the questioning was not to ''establish or prove past events potentially relevant to later criminal prosecution'', but instead to (1) assess child's injury and determine whether human services should be notified and (2) ascertain the conditions of the home and of the children. Since statements were nontestimonial, the federal confrontation clause was not implicated. People v. Phillips, 2012 COA 176, 315 P.3d 136.

Child's statement ''I fell in the bathroom because it was slippery'' to police officer during welfare check was admissible for the relevant, nonhearsay purpose of showing that child had been coached to change his account. People v. Phillips, 2012 COA 176, 315 P.3d 136.

A statement made by a party is admissible hearsay when offered against the party making it. People v. James, 40 P.3d 36 (Colo. App. 2001).

Admission by a party opponent held not to be hearsay. South Carolina Ins. Co. v. Fisher, 698 P.2d 1369 (Colo. App. 1984).

Since certain of the defendant's statements regarding the rental of VCR items, the failure to return them, and the method of payment were admissions by a party-opponent and therefore not hearsay, the non-hearsay evidence in the trial court record was of sufficient quantity and strength to satisfy the prosecutor's responsibility to establish probable cause. People v. Horn, 772 P.2d 108 (Colo. 1989).

Attorney's response to a request for investigation in a disciplinary proceeding was an admission by a party-opponent and was not hearsay. The fact that part of the attorney's response was inconsistent with the attorney's testimony at trial is not a consideration under section (d)(2). People v. Meier, 954 P.2d 1068 (Colo. 1998).

Statements made by attorney concerning a matter within the course of attorney's employment may be admissible against the party who retained the attorney. In re Amich, 192 P.3d 422 (Colo. App. 2007).

Passenger's statement that juvenile had exclaimed that he intended to "outrun the cop" was not hearsay and was admissible as an admission of a party opponent. People v. T.R., 860 P.2d 559 (Colo. App. 1993).

Guidelines in insurance contract not admissible under section (d)(2). Although defendant signed an insurance contract for malpractice insurance containing risk management guidelines as a condition of obtaining coverage, such guidelines are not admissible as an adoption by defendant as the applicable legal standard of professional care owed to his patients where plaintiff sought to show that defendant did not adhere to such standards. Quigley v. Jobe, 851 P.2d 236 (Colo. App. 1992).

The documents could not have been admitted under section (d)(2). People v. Gilmore, 97 P.3d 123 (Colo. App. 2003).

Statement made by defendant to expert witness offered to establish the basis for the expert's opinion is not hearsay and it is error to exclude it. People v. Drake, 748 P.2d 1237 (Colo. 1988).

Statements offered to demonstrate the defendant's state of mind rather than the truth of the matter asserted would have substantiated defendant's affirmative defense that he had taken his daughter from the custody of his ex-wife because he believed his daughter was being abused. People v. Mossmann, 17 P.3d 165 (Colo. App. 2000).

Defendant's own statement held admissible. People v. Berger-Levy, 677 P.2d 351 (Colo. App. 1983).

Statements made on Facebook are admissible under section (d)(2)(A). People v. Glover, 2015 COA 16, 363 P.3d 736.

Former testimony admissible at subsequent trial. Defendant's testimony from prior trial at which he was acquitted does not constitute hearsay and is admissible under this rule as defendant's statement in his individual capacity. People v. Arrington, 682 P.2d 490 (Colo. App. 1983).

Under section (d)(1)(B), a statement is not hearsay if: (1) The declarant testifies at trial and is subject to cross-examination; (2) the statement is consistent with the declarant's testimony; and (3) it is offered to rebut an express or implied charge against the declarant of recent fabrication or improper influence or motive. People v. Segura, 923 P.2d 266 (Colo. App. 1995).

Section (d)(1)(B) encompasses only those statements made by the victims prior to when the opportunity to fabricate similar stories allegedly arose. People v. Segura, 923 P.2d 266 (Colo. App. 1995).

While the victims' prior consistent statements rebutted a charge of fabrication and were made before the alleged fabrication, the statements were properly admitted under section (d)(1)(B). People v. Segura, 923 P.2d 266 (Colo. App. 1995).

Section (d)(1)(B) allows admission of sexual assault victim's prior consistent statements in police report when defense is consent, thus calling into question victim's credibility. People v. Tyler, 745 P.2d 257 (Colo. App. 1987).

Section (d)(1)(B) allows admission of recalled witness's prior consistent statements to investigating officer when defendant's attorney, on cross-examination, has called into question witness's credibility. People v. Salazar, 920 P.2d 893 (Colo. App. 1996).

Section (d)(1)(B) allows admission of two statements by the defendant, where the defendant first introduced the statements and thereby waived any objection to the introduction of the rest of the statements by the prosecution as explanatory material. People v. Espinoza, 989 P.2d 178 (Colo. App. 1999).

Prior consistent statements of child-victim of sexual assault may be used for rehabilitation when a witness's credibility has been attacked, as such statements are admissible outside of this rule. Prior consistent statements were found to be admissible where they were relevant to the jury's determination of whether the impeaching statements really were inconsistent with the child-victim's trial testimony, where the defense attempted to discredit the child-victim's testimony in its entirety, where there was no evidence that the prosecution relied upon the child-victim's prior consistent statement as substantive support for its case thereby implicating section (d)(1)(B), and where the content of the witness's testimony regarding the child-victim's statement was merely repetitive of her own testimony. People v. Eppens, 979 P.2d 14 (Colo. 1999).

When trial court gave the defense extensive leeway to attack the credibility of a witness, allowing the prosecution to admit the witness's videotaped statement with police as a prior consistent statement for rehabilitation purposes was proper. People v. Clark, 2015 COA 44, 370 P.3d 197.

One requirement for admitting hearsay statement of a coconspirator is that the prosecution must first establish, by independent evidence, that a conspiracy exists and that the defendant is a participant. People v. Gable, 647 P.2d 246 (Colo. App. 1982); People v. Nunez, 698 P.2d 1376 (Colo. App. 1984), aff'd, 737 P.2d 422 (Colo. 1987); People v. Lewis, 710 P.2d 1110 (Colo. App. 1985); People v. Reyher, 728 P.2d 333 (Colo. App. 1986).

Joint participant is considered coconspirator even where no conspiracy has been charged. People v. Small, 631 P.2d 148 (Colo. 1981).

Testimony properly admissible. People v. Graham, 678 P.2d 1043 (Colo. App. 1983), cert. denied, 467 U.S. 1216, 104 S. Ct. 2660, 81 L. Ed. 2d 366 (1984).

Statements by joint participants in a conspiracy are admissible against all its members if made in furtherance of and during the course of the illicit relationship. People v. Small, 631 P.2d 148 (Colo. 1981); People v. Best, 665 P.2d 644 (Colo. App. 1983).

But proponent of the evidence must establish to the trial court's satisfaction that the statement was made in furtherance of the conspiracy as well as in the course of the conspiracy. Willams v. People, 724 P.2d 1279 (Colo. 1986); People v. Esch, 786 P.2d 462 (Colo. App. 1989); People v. Taylor, 804 P.2d 196 (Colo. App. 1990).

Coconspirator exception does not apply to statements made after conspiracy has ended. People v. Armstrong, 704 P.2d 877 (Colo. App. 1985).

Court erred in prohibiting defendant, on hearsay grounds, from eliciting evidence of what he and an alleged coconspirator said to one another. Nonhearsay verbal act evidence is admissible on the issue of whether a conspiratorial agreement existed because the statement is admitted merely to show that it was actually made, not to prove the truth of what was asserted in it. People v. Scearce, 87 P.3d 228 (Colo. App. 2003).

Adoption of section (d)(2) relating to the admissibility of defendant's confession does not supercede the corpus delicti doctrine, which is a substantive rule of law. The doctrine holds that a conviction cannot be based upon the uncorroborated confession of a defendant. People v. Robson, 80 P.3d 912 (Colo. App. 2003).

No further need under C.R.E. 901 to authenticate documentary evidence that satisfied requirements of section (d)(2)(B). Based upon witness testimony, administrative law judge (ALJ) committed no abuse of discretion in admitting record of request for purchase of political time and an agreement form for noncandidate issue advertisements as having been sufficiently authenticated under C.R.E. 901(b)(1). As to admissibility of affidavit of performance used to indicate dates, airtimes, and the district in which the advertisements were broadcast, ALJ correctly held that political committee's agent would not have authorized payment of invoices if he doubted advertisements aired during relevant time period and in relevant legislative district. There was no need to further authenticate affidavit of performance because agent's conduct manifested ''belief in its truth'' under section (d)(2)(B). Collectively, these documents support ALJ's findings that during relevant time period political committee arranged to broadcast television advertisements opposing legislative candidate to voters in candidate's district. Colo. Citizens for Ethics in Gov't v. Comm. for the Am. Dream, 187 P.3d 1207 (Colo. App. 2008).

Statement admissible under section (d)(2)(D). A statement by an employee made during the term of his employment concerning a subject matter within the scope of employment is admissible. Halliburton v. Pub. Serv. Co., 804 P.2d 213 (Colo. App. 1990).

Independent insurance adjuster's statement tending to show that equipment had been vandalized, hence damage would be covered under policy, admissible notwithstanding that adjuster was not formally empowered to make coverage determinations. South Park Aggregates, Inc. v. NW. Nat. Ins. Co., 847 P.2d 218 (Colo. App. 1992).

Interrogatory response and report of subcontractor's employee on city's ventilation system was admissible under section (d)(2)(D) in city's action against contractor and subcontractor for defects in design and construction of city hall building. Response and report qualified as statement offered against a party made by that party's agent or servant concerning a matter within the scope of his agency or employment during the existence of the relationship. City of Westminster v. MOA, Inc., 867 P.2d 137 (Colo. App. 1993).

Testimony of two nurses was sufficient to show that a statement made by agent of hospital was within the scope of section (d)(2)(D). Stevens v. Humana of Del., Inc., 832 P.2d 1076 (Colo. App. 1992).

Statements admissible under section (d)(2)(E) as statements of coconspirator do not satisfy confrontation rights. A showing of reliability is also required. Nunez v. People, 737 P.2d 422 (Colo. 1987); People v. Taylor, 804 P.2d 196 (Colo. App. 1990).

Evidence held properly admitted as a statement of a coconspirator. People v. Watson, 668 P.2d 965 (Colo. App. 1983).

Statements concerning the furtherance of the planned deception of the insurance companies was in furtherance of the conspiracy to commit third degree arson. People v. Peltz, 701 P.2d 98 (Colo. App. 1984), aff'd, 728 P.2d 1271 (Colo. 1986).

Statements made after the purpose of the conspiracy has been accomplished are inadmissible under section (d)(2)(E) unless they are so connected with the purpose of the conspiracy as to be a part of the res gestae. For such statements, there must be specific evidence of a plan of concealment to demonstrate that the conspiracy is pending when the statements are made. People v. Blecha, 940 P.2d 1070 (Colo. App. 1996), aff'd, 962 P.2d 931 (Colo. 1998).

Coconspirator statements made after the conspirators attain the object of the conspiracy are not admissible under this hearsay exception unless the proponent demonstrated an express original agreement among the coconspirators to continue to act in concert in order to cover up, for their own self protection, traces of the crime after its commission. Blecha v. People, 962 P.2d 931 (Colo. 1998).

Secrecy plus overt acts of concealment do not establish an express agreement to act in concert in order to conceal the crime. Blecha v. People, 962 P.2d 931 (Colo. 1998).

Evidence held hearsay. People v. Mann, 646 P.2d 352 (Colo. 1982); People in Interest of O.E.P., 654 P.2d 312 (Colo. 1982).

Defendant's inconsistent statement on relevant matter held admissible. People v. Christian, 632 P.2d 1031 (Colo. 1981).

Witness's statement to detective was not properly admitted under section (d)(1)(A) since the witness refused to answer the prosecutor's questions at trial and therefore gave no testimony with which any prior statement could be inconsistent. People v. Newton, 940 P.2d 1065 (Colo. App. 1996), aff'd, 966 P.2d 563 (Colo. 1998).

Generally, a witness's out-of-court statements cannot be used to bolster his trial testimony. However, a prior consistent state may be admitted for the purpose of rehabilitation after a witness has been impeached by a prior inconsistent statement. People v. Andrews, 729 P.2d 997 (Colo. App. 1986).

If credibility of a witness is at issue, the jury should have access to all relevant facts, including consistent and inconsistent statements and the reasons for possible fabrications. People v. Andrews, 729 P.2d 997 (Colo. App. 1986).

Trial court properly concluded that videotaped statements were admissible under section (d)(1)(B) as non-hearsay prior consistent statements and to the extent that the evidence was cumulative, there was no abuse of the trial court's discretion under the circumstances. People v. Rodriguez, 888 P.2d 278 (Colo. App. 1994).

Admission of prior consistent statement not limited to those made prior to the inconsistent statement. People v. Andrews, 729 P.2d 997 (Colo. App. 1986).

Statements held not hearsay. Statements are admissable where such statements were not admitted for the purpose of establishing their veracity, but rather, to provide background necessary to understand conversation between witness and defendant. People v. Huckleberry, 768 P.2d 1235 (Colo. 1989).

Accident reports are admissible where they are offered to prove the manufacturer's notice of prior incidents and not for their veracity. Armentrout v. FMC Corp., 819 P.2d 522 (Colo. App. 1991).

There is no right of confrontation and no hearsay preclusion when the utterances are not offered for their truth, but are offered to provide the context in which the defendant's statements were made. People v. Arnold, 826 P.2d 365 (Colo. App. 1991); People v. Smalley, 2015 COA 140, 369 P.3d 737.

Statements in report of independent medical examiner were admissible for the purpose of establishing that an automobile insurance company had a reasonable basis for refusing to reimburse plaintiff's claimed medical expenses. Klein v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 948 P.2d 43 (Colo. App. 1997).

Victim's statements to first responders and treating surgeon were not testimonial because the primary purpose of the first responders' questions was to calm the injured passenger, determine treatment, and determine whether there were other victims, and the primary purpose of the treating surgeon's questions was to assess and treat passenger's injuries, therefore defendant's federal constitutional right of confrontation was not implicated. People v. Medrano-Bustamante, 2013 COA 139, 412 P.3d 581, aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds sub nom. Reyna-Abarca v. People, 2017 CO 15, 390 P.3d 816.

Taped statement of ALJ during parole hearing was not hearsay where it was offered to prove notice to defendant and not the truth of the matter asserted. People v. Taylor, 74 P.3d 396 (Colo. App. 2002).

Statement includes non-verbal conduct intended to be communicative. People v. Bowers, 773 P.2d 1093 (Colo. App. 1988), aff'd, 801 P.2d 511 (Colo. 1990).

Refusal to allow defendant to call her cellmate to testify as to statements defendant made to her during course of trial was proper where defendant was not available to prosecutor for cross-examination concerning possibility of recent fabrication or improper influence or motive. People v. Avery, 736 P.2d 1233 (Colo. App. 1986).

Child's use of anatomically correct dolls and gestures were part and parcel of hearsay statements and are inadmissible without independent corroborative evidence. People v. Bowers, 773 P.2d 1093 (Colo. App. 1988), aff'd, 801 P.2d 511 (Colo. 1990).

Use of mannequin by prosecution to demonstrate how the victim was tied was not a "statement" but was an illustration of trial testimony. People v. Richardson, 58 P.3d 1039 (Colo. App. 2002).

Statement by a husband to his wife about the fraudulent nature of his personal injury claim against his employer was an admission not subject to the hearsay exclusion. Burlington N. R. Co. v. Hood, 802 P.2d 458 (Colo. 1990).

Trial court erred in denying, as hearsay, cross-examination of a wife as to her prior inconsistent statements regarding admissions by the wife's spouse as to the fraudulent nature of his personal injury claim against his employer. Burlington N. R. Co. v. Hood, 802 P.2d 458 (Colo. 1990).

Court erred in barring prior consistent statement. Wife's prior consistent statement to attorney should have been admitted to rebut prosecution's implication that defendant's wife's testimony was the result of a recent fabrication or improper influence or motive. People v. Ambrose, 907 P.2d 613 (Colo. App. 1994).

News article offered for truth of its assertions is inadmissible hearsay. People v. Morise, 859 P.2d 247 (Colo. App. 1993).

Court erred in admitting inadmissible hearsay evidence from prosecution's expert witness who bolstered her testimony by stating her work had been subject to peer review. People v. Griffin, 985 P.2d 15 (Colo. App. 1998).

Prosecution satisfies minimum requirements for use of hearsay at preliminary hearing if it: (1) Presents some competent nonhearsay evidence that addresses an essential element of the offense; and (2) presents the hearsay evidence through a witness who is connected to the offense or its investigation rather than someone merely reading from a report. In this case, the prosecution satisfied the status elements of the offense through nonhearsay testimony and produced the victim's testimony (hearsay) through the investigating officer who was familiar with the case. People v. Huggins, 220 P.3d 977 (Colo. App. 2009).

Court's failure to apply correct standard for use of hearsay at preliminary hearing was abuse of discretion. Applying the correct standard, the evidence presented at the preliminary hearing established probable cause to believe the defendant committed the charged offenses. People v. Huggins, 220 P.3d 977 (Colo. App. 2009).

Applied in Sims v. Indus. Comm'n, 627 P.2d 1107 (Colo. 1981); Nat'l Sur. Corp. v. Citizens State Bank, 651 P.2d 460 (Colo. App. 1982); People v. Handy, 657 P.2d 963 (Colo. App. 1982); People in Interest of R.L., 660 P.2d 26 (Colo. App. 1983); Banek v. Thomas, 697 P.2d 743 (Colo. App. 1984), aff'd, 733 P.2d 1171 (Colo. 1986); People v. Johnson, 701 P.2d 620 (Colo. App. 1985); People v. Fueston, 717 P.2d 978 (Colo. App. 1985), aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds, 749 P.2d 952 (Colo. 1988); People v. Koon, 724 P.2d 1367 (Colo. App. 1986); Jacob v. Com. Highland Theatres, Inc., 738 P.2d 6 (Colo. App. 1986); People v. Bowman, 738 P.2d 387 (Colo. App. 1987); People v. Pinkey, 761 P.2d 228 (Colo. App. 1988); Bayless v. Milstein, 765 P.2d 1069 (Colo. App. 1988); People v. Halstead, 881 P.2d 401 (Colo. App. 1994); People v. Mandez, 997 P.2d 1254 (Colo. App. 1999); People v. Candelaria, 107 P.3d 1080 (Colo. App. 2004), aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds, 148 P.3d 178 (Colo. 2006); People v. Banks, 2012 COA 157, __ P.3d __, aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds sub nom. People v. Tate, 2015 CO 42, 352 P.3d 959.

Rule 802. Hearsay Rule

Hearsay is not admissible except as provided by these rules or by the civil and criminal procedural rules applicable to the courts of Colorado or by any statutes of the State of Colorado.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, ''Hearsay in Criminal Cases Under the Colorado Rules of Evidence: An Overview'', see 50 U. Colo. L. Rev. 277 (1979).

Rationale behind rule. Hearsay rule generally forbids evidence of out-of-court utterances to prove facts asserted in them because of the lack of opportunity to test, by cross-examination, the accuracy and truth of the statements offered. Fernandez v. People, 176 Colo. 346, 490 P.2d 690 (1971).

No case law or common law exceptions. The language of this rule does not permit any exception based upon ''case law'' or ''common law'' decisions to its prohibition against the admission of hearsay evidence. People v. Rosenthal, 670 P.2d 1254 (Colo. App. 1983).

Inadmissible hearsay evidence not transformed into competent evidence by testimony of observations. Inadmissible hearsay evidence is not transformed into competent evidence by permitting a witness to testify as to his own observations when the effect is the same as admitting inadmissible hearsay on statements or conduct which are not in evidence. People v. Botham, 629 P.2d 589 (Colo. 1981).

Burden of proof that statement falls within hearsay exception. The prosecution has the burden of showing that a statement falls within an exception to the hearsay rule. People in Interest of R.L., 660 P.2d 26 (Colo. App. 1983).

Even if it is established that defendant has forfeited his or her right to confront a witness, the reliability of the evidence must still be ensured according to the standards of the rules of evidence. Vasquez v. People, 173 P.3d 1099 (Colo. 2007).

Where defendant's counsel made a deliberate, tactical choice to introduce bystander's hearsay statement into case, defendant invited any error that may have resulted from its introduction. Therefore, hearsay admission did not violate defendant's right to confront the witnesses against him. People v. Gibson, 203 P.3d 571 (Colo. App. 2008).

Erroneous admission of hearsay evidence, without a showing by prosecution that evidence was admissible under exception to hearsay rule or that declarant was unavailable, was harmless error where there was abundant evidence upon which jury could find the defendant guilty without the hearsay testimony. Erroneous admission of hearsay evidence does not violate the defendant's right to confront witnesses against him where the utility of confrontation was extremely remote. People v. Shipman, 747 P.2d 1 (Colo. App. 1987).

Any error in admitting letters that contained inadmissable hearsay was harmless. Without examining the contents of the letters, the court presumed the jury followed the trial court's instruction not to consider the letters for the truth of their contents. When considered in light of the substantial other evidence, any error in admitting the content of the letters was harmless. People v. Manier, 197 P.3d 254 (Colo. App. 2008).

Section 13-25-129 permits hearsay testimony related to acts of mental and emotional abuse in a child abuse case. The term "health" in § 18-6-401 (1) includes both physical and mental well-being. People v. Sherrod, 204 P.3d 472 (Colo. App. 2007), rev'd on other grounds, 204 P.3d 466 (Colo. 2009).

Officer's testimony regarding informant was not hearsay. Informant's statements regarding drug deal's arrangements, the suppliers and their street names, and identifying them when they arrived at the scene were introduced to show why the officers went to that particular location to arrest defendant, not for the truthfulness of those statements. People v. Robinson, 226 P.3d 1145 (Colo. App. 2009).

Defendant may not rely upon an affidavit at a suppression hearing without attempting to call the affiant. The affidavit is hearsay evidence and thus may not properly be admitted at a suppression hearing. The affidavit is sufficient to determine whether a hearing is necessary, but not to actually determine the matter itself. People v. Warner, 251 P.3d 567 (Colo. App. 2010).

Applied in Lancaster v. People, 200 Colo. 448, 615 P.2d 720 (1980); People v. Mann, 646 P.2d 352 (Colo. 1982); Nat'l Sur. Corp. v. Citizens State Bank, 651 P.2d 460 (Colo. App. 1982); People in Interest of O.E.P., 654 P.2d 312 (Colo. 1982); Goodboe v. Gabriella, 663 P.2d 1051 (Colo. App. 1983).

Rule 803. Hearsay Exceptions: Availability of Declarant Immaterial

The following are not excluded by the hearsay rule, even though the declarant is available as a witness:

(1) Spontaneous present sense impression. A spontaneous statement describing or explaining an event or condition made while the declarant was perceiving the event or condition.

COMMITTEE COMMENT

The change reflected above was based on the fact that neither immediacy nor spontaneity would be guaranteed by the Federal rule. Colorado case law requires that a present sense impression be instinctive and spontaneous in order to be admissible. See Denver City Tramway Co. v. Brumley, 51 Colo. 251, 116 P. 1051 (1911). It was felt that the requirements set forth in that opinion constitute a greater guarantee of trustworthiness than the Federal rule, i.e., spontaneity is the most important factor governing trustworthiness. This is especially true when there is no provision that the declarant be unavailable as a witness.

(2) Excited utterance. A statement relating to a startling event or condition made while the declarant was under the stress of excitement caused by the event or condition.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

(3) Then existing mental, emotional, or physical condition. A statement of the declarant's then existing state of mind, emotion, sensation, or physical condition (such as intent, plan, motive, design, mental feeling, pain, and bodily health), but not including a statement of memory or belief to prove the fact remembered or believed unless it relates to the execution, revocation, identification, or terms of declarant's will.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

(4) Statements for purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment. Statements made for purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment and describing medical history, or past or present symptoms, pain, or sensations, or the inception or general character of the cause or external source thereof insofar as reasonably pertinent to diagnosis or treatment.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

COMMITTEE COMMENT

See: Houser v. Eckhardt, 168 Colo. 226, 450 P.2d 664 (1969); Ingles v. People, 90 Colo. 51, 6 P.2d 455 (1931); and § 8-53-103(2)(a) & (b), C.R.S. (Workmen's Compensation Act of Colorado).

(5) Recorded recollection. A past recollection recorded when it appears that the witness once had knowledge concerning the matter and; (A) can identify the memorandum or record, (B) adequately recalls the making of it at or near the time of the event, either as recorded by the witness or by another, and (C) can testify to its accuracy. The memorandum or record may be read into evidence but may not itself be received unless offered by an adverse party.

COMMITTEE COMMENT

The change reflected above was made because the Federal rule is more restrictive than the Colorado rule, which does not require absence of a present recollection to be expressly shown as a preliminary to use of recorded recollection. Jordan v. People, 151 Colo. 133, 376 P.2d 699 (1962).

(6) Records of regularly conducted activity. A memorandum, report, record, or data compilation, in any form, of acts, events, conditions, opinions, or diagnosis, made at or near the time by, or from information transmitted by, a person with knowledge, if kept in the course of a regularly conducted business activity, and if it was the regular practice of that business activity to make the memorandum, report, record, or data compilation, all as shown by the testimony of the custodian or other qualified witness, or by certification that complies with Rule 902(11), Rule 902(12), or a statute permitting certification, unless the source of information or the method or circumstances of preparation indicate lack of trustworthiness. The term ''business'' as used in this paragraph includes business, institution, association, profession, occupation, and calling of every kind, whether or not conducted for profit.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

COMMITTEE COMMENT

The rule makes no reference to any objective standard of trustworthiness, e.g., regularity with which records are kept. See Colorado cases: Patterson v. Pitoniak, 173 Colo. 454, 480 P.2d 579 (1971); Moseley v. Smith, 170 Colo. 177, 460 P.2d 222 (1969); Seib v. Standley, 164 Colo. 394, 435 P.2d 395 (1967); Rocky Mountain Beverage v. Walter Brewing Company, 107 Colo. 63, 108 P.2d 885 (1941); Hobbs v. Breen, 74 Colo. 277, 220 P. 997 (1923); Powell v. Brady, 30 Colo. App. 406, 496 P.2d 328 (1972).

(7) Absence of entry in records kept in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (6). Evidence that a matter is not included in the memoranda reports, records, or data compilations in any form, kept in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (6), to prove the nonoccurrence or nonexistence of the matter, if the matter was of a kind of which a memorandum, report, record, or data compilation was regularly made and preserved, unless the sources of information or other circumstances indicate lack of trustworthiness.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

(8) Public records and reports. Unless the sources of information or other circumstances indicate lack of trustworthiness, records, reports, statements, or data compilations, in any form, of public offices or agencies, setting forth (A) the activities of the office or agency, or (B) matters observed pursuant to duty imposed by law as to which matters there was a duty to report, excluding, however, in criminal cases matters observed by police officers and other law enforcement personnel, or (C) in civil actions and proceedings and against the Government in criminal cases, factual findings resulting from an investigation made pursuant to authority granted by law.

(9) Records of vital statistics. Records or data compilations, in any form, of births, fetal deaths, deaths, or marriages, if the report thereof was made to a public office pursuant to requirements of law.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

COMMITTEE COMMENT

This rule is somewhat broader than the provisions of § 25-2-117, C.R.S., and respecting marriage records is desirable because the evidentiary use of the book of marriages provided in § 90-1-20, C.R.S. 1963, was repealed in 1973.

(10) Absence of a Public Record. Testimony - or a certification under Rule 902 - that a diligent search failed to disclose a public record or statement if:

(A) the testimony or certification is admitted to prove that

(i) the record or statement does not exist; or

(ii) a matter did not occur or exist, if a public office regularly kept a record or statement for a matter of that kind; and

(B) in a criminal case, a prosecutor who intends to offer a certification provides written notice of that intent at least 14 days before trial, and the defendant does not object in writing within 7 days of receiving the notice - unless the court sets a different time for the notice or the objection.

COMMITTEE COMMENT

The Committee recommended adoption of this amended version of C.R.E. 803(10) to follow the identical amendment to F.R.E. 803(10) which took effect on December 1, 2013.

(11) Records of religious organizations. Statements of births, marriages, divorces, deaths, legitimacy, ancestry, relationship by blood or marriage, or other similar facts of personal or family history, contained in a regularly kept record of a religious organization.
(Federal Rule Identical.)

(12) Marriage, baptismal, and similar certificates. Statements of fact contained in a certificate that the maker performed a marriage or other ceremony or administered a sacrament, made by a clergyman, public official, or other person authorized by the rules or practices of a religious organization or by law to perform the act certified, and purporting to have been issued at the time of the act or within a reasonable time thereafter.
(Federal Rule Identical.)

(13) Family records. Statements of fact concerning personal or family history contained in family Bibles, genealogies, charts, engravings on rings, inscriptions on family portraits, engravings on urns, crypts, or tombstones, or the like.
(Federal Rule Identical.)

COMMITTEE COMMENT

The age of the record or regularity of keeping are immaterial to admissibility. The content of fact is not limited to pedigree or genealogy.

(14) Records of documents affecting an interest in property. The record of a document purporting to establish or affect an interest in property, as proof of the content of the original recorded or filed document and its execution and delivery by each person by whom it purports to have been executed, if the record is a record of a public office and an applicable statute authorizes the recording of documents of that kind in that office.

COMMITTEE COMMENT

The generic term ''property'' used in the Federal rule indicates an intent that the rule apply to documents relating to interests in both real property and personal property. The term ''filed'' has been added to render the rule applicable to personal property under Colorado law:

the Uniform Commercial Code, the Colorado Rules of Civil Procedure, and § 30-10-103, C.R.S., all refer to "filing" documents affecting an interest in personal property.

(15) Statements in documents affecting an interest in property. A statement contained in a document purporting to establish or affect an interest in property if the matter stated was relevant to the purpose of the document, unless dealings with the property since the document was made have been inconsistent with the truth of the statement or the purport of the document.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

COMMITTEE COMMENT

The rule extends admissibility beyond case law and statutes. E.g., McClure v. Board of Commissioners of La Plata County, 19 Colo. 122, 34 P. 763 (1893); Wright v. People in the Interest of Rowe, 131 Colo. 92, 279 P.2d 676 (1955); Michael v. John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co., 138 Colo. 450, 334 P.2d 1090 (1959). Statutes more restrictive than the rule are §§ 38-35-102, 38-35-104, 38-35-105, 38-35-107, and 38-35-108, C.R.S.

(16) Statements in ancient documents. Statements in a document in existence twenty years or more the authenticity of which is established.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

COMMITTEE COMMENT

The rule liberalizes the hearsay exception for ancient documents by eliminating proof of execution (see general statement for this principle in 32A C.J.S., Evidence, Sec. 744, page 32) and, further, reduces the required age of such document to twenty years from thirty years. For Colorado authorities on the subject, see McGary v. Blakeley, 127 Colo. 495, 258 P.2d 770 (1953) and § 38-35-107, C.R.S.

(17) Market reports, commercial publications. Market quotations, tabulations, lists, directories, or other published compilations, generally used and relied upon by the public or by persons in particular occupations.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

COMMITTEE COMMENT

Colorado authorities affecting this rule are: 4-2-724, C.R.S.; Continental Divide Mining Investment Company v. Bliley, 23 Colo. 160, 166, 46 P. 633, 635 (1896); Willard v. Mellor, 19 Colo. 534, 36 P. 148 (1894); Kansas Pacific R.R. Company v. Lundin, 3 Colo. 94 (1876); Rio Grande Southern R.R. Company v. Nichols, 52 Colo. 300, 123 P. 318 (1912); Johnson v. Cousins, 110 Colo. 540, 135 P.2d 1021 (1943).

(18) Learned treatises. To the extent called to the attention of an expert witness upon cross-examination or relied upon by him in direct examination, statements contained in published treatises, periodicals, or pamphlets on a subject of history, medicine or other science or art, established as a reliable authority by the testimony or admission of the witness or by other expert testimony or by judicial notice. If admitted, the statements may be read into evidence and may be received as exhibits, as the court permits.

COMMITTEE COMMENT

Unlike the Federal Rule, the Colorado Rule allows the learned treatises to be admitted as exhibits in the discretion of the court. The former Colorado Rule seemed to be that only if such treatise had been relied upon by the witness in forming his opinion might it be admitted. Denver City Tramway v. Gawley, 23 Colo. App. 332, 129 P. 258 (1912); Wall v. Weaver, 145 Colo. 337, 358 P.2d 1009 (1961); Ross v. Colo. Nat'l Bank, 170 Colo. 436, 463 P.2d 882 (1970).

(19) Reputation concerning personal or family history. Reputation among members of his family by blood, adoption, or marriage, or among his associates, or in the community, concerning a person's birth, adoption, marriage, divorce, death, legitimacy, relationship by blood, adoption, or marriage, ancestry, or other similar fact of his personal or family history.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

COMMITTEE COMMENT

The former Colorado rule limited such evidence to reputation among persons related by blood or marriage to the family in question. Epple v. First Nat'l Bank of Greeley, 143 Colo. 319, 352 P.2d 796 (1960).

(20) Reputation concerning boundaries or general history. Reputation in a community, arising before the controversy, as to boundaries of or customs affecting lands in the community, and reputation as to events of general history important to the community or state or nation in which located.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

COMMITTEE COMMENT

This rule is thought consistent with the former Colorado rule. See § 38-44-101, C.R.S., re establishing disputed boundaries.

(21) Reputation as to character. Reputation of a person's character among his associates or in the community.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

(22) Judgment of previous conviction. Evidence of a final judgment, entered after a trial or upon a plea of guilty or nolo contendere, adjudging a person guilty of a crime punishable by death or imprisonment in excess of one year, to prove any fact essential to sustain the judgment, but not including, when offered by the Government in a criminal prosecution for purposes other than impeachment, judgments against persons other than the accused. The pendency of an appeal may be shown but does not affect admissibility.

(Federal Rule Identical, Except that a Plea of Nolo Contendere was Excluded in the Federal rule.)

COMMITTEE COMMENT

The rule represents Colorado law by its inclusion of a nolo contendere plea. § 13-90-101, C.R.S., construed to include a nolo contendere plea in Lacey v. People, 166 Colo. 152, 442 P.2d 402 (1968).

(23) Judgment as to personal, family, or general history or boundaries. Judgments as proof of matters of personal, family, or general history, or boundaries, essential to the judgment, if the same would be provable by evidence of reputation.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

COMMITTEE COMMENT

A judgment, under the circumstances stated, creates the reputations, and is admissible subject to the limitations applicable to evidence of reputation.

(24) [Transferred to Rule 807]

COMMITTEE COMMENT

The contents of Rule 803(24) and Rule 804(b)(5) have been combined and transferred to Rule 807. This was done to facilitate additions to Rules 803 and 804. No change in meaning is intended.

Source: (24) added November 15, 1984, effective April 1, 1985; (24) transferred to Rule 807 and (24) committee comment added, effective January 1, 1999; (6) amended and adopted June 20, 2002, effective July 1, 2002; (10) amended and adopted and (10) committee comment added and adopted, effective February 18, 2014.

Purpose of hearsay rule. The constitutional right to confrontation and the hearsay rule stem from the same roots, and are designed to protect similar interests based on the premise that testimony is much more reliable when given under oath at trial, where the declarant is subject to cross-examination and the jury may observe his demeanor. People v. Dement, 661 P.2d 675 (Colo. 1983).

Testimony found to be hearsay. Sante Fe Energy Co. v. Baca, 673 P.2d 374 (Colo. App. 1983).

Applied in Morrison v. Bradley, 622 P.2d 81 (Colo. App. 1980); Sims v. Indus. Comm'n, 627 P.2d 1107 (Colo. 1981); People in Interest of K.A.J., 635 P.2d 921 (Colo. App. 1981); Great W. Food Packers, Inc. v. Longmont Foods Co., 636 P.2d 1331 (Colo. App. 1981); Scruggs v. Otteman, 640 P.2d 259 (Colo. App. 1981); Fasso v. Straten, 640 P.2d 272 (Colo. App. 1982); People v. District Court, 664 P.2d 247 (Colo. 1983); People ex rel. Faulk v. District Court, 667 P.2d 1384 (Colo. 1983).

II. EXCEPTIONS.

A. In General.

Burden of proof that statement falls within exception. The prosecution has the burden of showing that a statement falls within an exception to the hearsay rule. People in Interest of R.L., 660 P.2d 26 (Colo. App. 1983); Oldsen v. People, 732 P.2d 1132 (Colo. 1986).

The proponent of evidence carries the the burden of establishing the preliminary facts essential to satisfy a particular hearsay exception. Lancaster v. People, 200 Colo. 448, 615 P.2d 720 (1980); People v. Garcia, 826 P.2d 1259 (Colo. 1992).

Both § 13-25-129 and this rule are residuary rules and apply only if hearsay is not otherwise admissible under the other hearsay exceptions. Section 13-25-129 applies only to hearsay statements not otherwise admissible by statute or court rule. Because § 13-25-129 and this rule have different requirements for the admission of hearsay statements, confusion and inconsistent results may occur if either residuary provision may be applied to the same hearsay statement of a child sexual assault victim which is otherwise not admissible into evidence. Since the more specific provision should prevail, § 13-25-129 is the sole basis upon which hearsay evidence, which otherwise comes within the terms of that statute, may be admitted. People v. Diefenderfer, 784 P.2d 741 (Colo. 1989); People v. Bowers, 801 P.2d 511 (Colo. 1990).

Declarant must not lack testimonial qualifications. To fall within any exception to the hearsay rule, the declarant himself must not lack the testimonial qualifications that would be required for him to take the stand. People in Interest of R.L., 660 P.2d 26 (Colo. App. 1983).

Declarant's testimonial incapacity renders statement inadmissible. Where the testimonial incapacity of the declarant stems from a psychiatric disorder, and is such that the guarantees of trusworthiness implicit in the exceptions to the hearsay rule would not vitiate the incompetency, any testimony derived from that statement is not admissible. People in Interest of R.L., 660 P.2d 26 (Colo. App. 1983).

A.5. Spontaneous Present Sense Impression.

Witness's testimony that her daughter had identified an obscene phone caller as the defendant immediately after perceiving the caller's voice was properly permitted as spontaneous present sense impression exception to the hearsay exclusion. People v. Czemerynski, 786 P.2d 1100 (Colo. 1990).

Applied in People v. Franklin, 782 P.2d 1202 (Colo. App. 1989).

B. Excited Utterance.

Three requirements must be met for a statement to be admissible as an excited utterance. The event must be sufficiently startling to render normal reflective thought processes of the observer inoperative, the statement must be a spontaneous reaction to the occurrence, and direct or circumstantial evidence must exist to allow the jury to infer that the declarant had the opportunity to observe the startling event. People v. Stephenson, 56 P.3d 1112 (Colo. App. 2001); People v. Martinez, 83 P.3d 1174 (Colo. App. 2003); People v. Garrison, 109 P.3d 1009 (Colo. App. 2004).

Excited utterance exception. What is of critical significance to res gestae, section (2), is the spontaneous character of the statement and its natural effusion from a state of excitement. Lancaster v. People, 200 Colo. 448, 615 P.2d 720 (1980) (case decided prior to effective date of C.R.E.); Cheney v. Hailey, 686 P.2d 808 (Colo. App. 1984).

Hearsay statements are admissible under the excited utterance exception if there is some occurrence or event sufficiently startling to render normal reflective thought processes of an observer inoperative and if the statement of the declarant was a spontaneous reaction to the occurrence or event and not the result of reflective thought. W.C.L. v. People, 685 P.2d 176 (Colo. 1984); People v. Clements, 732 P.2d 1245 (Colo. App. 1986).

In determining whether a statement is admissible as an excited utterance, trial court is afforded wide discretion and that determination will not be disturbed on appeal if it is supported by the evidence. Here, trial court properly admitted into evidence an audiotape of a statement made by the victim during a 911 telephone call. The call was placed only 15 minutes after the victim was stabbed. Being stabbed is a startling event and, thus, it was within trial court's discretion to determine that the victim was still under the excitement or stress of the stabbing at the time the statement was made. People v. Mullins, 104 P.3d 299 (Colo. App. 2004).

Exception not restricted to statements arising directly from startling event. Although in most instances the ''startling event'' will be the act or transaction upon which the legal controversy is predicated, such as an assault or accident, the excited utterance exception is not restricted only to statements arising directly out of such events. People in Interest of O.E.P., 654 P.2d 312 (Colo. 1982).

When the significance of a past event is revealed as a result of the startling event and is relevant, such testimony is admissible as an excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule exclusion. People v. Ojeda, 745 P.2d 274 (Colo. App. 1987).

Declarant may be witness to event. Under the hearsay exception for an ''excited utterance'', the declarant may be a bystander or witness to the event rather than an actual participant. People v. Dement, 661 P.2d 675 (Colo. 1983); People v. Green, 884 P.2d 339 (Colo. App. 1994).

Declarant must have observed startling occurrence. An implicit requirement to be met to qualify a statement as an excited utterance, admissible under the hearsay exception, is that enough direct or circumstantial evidence exists to allow the jury to infer that the declarant had the opportunity to observe the startling occurrence. People v. Dement, 661 P.2d 675 (Colo. 1983); People v. Garcia, 826 P.2d 1259 (Colo. 1992); People v. Green, 884 P.2d 339 (Colo. App. 1994).

The threshold for satisfying the requirement that a declarant observed an event is minimal, and as long as there is evidence that leads the fact finder to reasonably infer that the declarant had the opportunity to observe the event that evidence should be permitted; the credibility of the witness and the weight to be given that evidence should be left to the fact finder. People v. Green, 884 P.2d 339 (Colo. App. 1994).

The rationale behind the excited utterance exception is founded on the general reliability attaching to statements made under the stress of excitement. People in Interest of O.E.P., 654 P.2d 312 (Colo. 1982).

Unlike some other hearsay exceptions, excited utterance evidence is not limited to unavailable declarants. The reason is that the extrajudicial assertion is likely to be better than a statement from the witness at trial after time has permitted reflection or memory has faded. People v. Dement, 661 P.2d 675 (Colo. 1983).

Spontaneity and excitement sufficient guarantee of trustworthiness. The requirement of spontaneity and excitement subsumed by the res gestae exception furnishes a sufficient guarantee of trustworthiness implicit in the rationale of hearsay exceptions. People v. Roark, 643 P.2d 756 (Colo. 1982).

Source of trustworthiness in child's statement. The element of trustworthiness underscoring the excited utterance exception, particularly in the case of young children, finds its source primarily in the lack of capacity to fabricate rather than the lack of time to fabricate. People in Interest of O.E.P., 654 P. 2d 312 (Colo. 1982); People v. Hulsing, 825 P.2d 1027 (Colo. App. 1991).

Courts look to the effect of a particular event upon a declarant and, in the case of young children, the element of trustworthiness underscoring the excited utterance exception is primarily in the lack of capacity to fabricate rather than the lack of time to fabricate. People v. Ortega, 672 P.2d 215 (Colo. App. 1983).

Automobile collision qualifies as a "startling event". Lovato v. Herrman, 685 P.2d 240 (Colo. App. 1984).

A sexual assault may constitute a sufficiently startling event to admit hearsay statements of a child-victim. People v. Bolton, 859 P.2d 311 (Colo. App. 1993).

Sexual assault and stabbing of victim constituted a startling event. Although the trial court acknowledged there was no way to know how much time had elapsed between the assault and the 911 phone call, there was substantial evidence in the record that the victim was hysterical at different times throughout the two-hour period that the victim made statements to the police officer. There was also testimony that during the two hours, the victim continually lapsed into French while speaking and repeatedly asked whether she was going to die. Furthermore, the officer testified that the victim was bleeding badly and was continually being examined and treated for injuries during the time the officer was with the victim. People v. King, 121 P.3d 234 (Colo. App. 2005).

The fact that the victim's statements were made in response to questions does not preclude them from being excited utterances. People v. Martinez, 18 P.3d 831 (Colo. App. 2000); People v. Garrison, 109 P.3d 1009 (Colo. App. 2004); People v. King, 121 P.3d 234 (Colo. App. 2005).

The totality of the circumstances, including the severity of the victim's injuries, her agitated emotional state, and the brief time between the injury and the statements, supports the trial court's determination that the statements were admissible under this rule. People v. Martinez, 18 P.3d 831 (Colo. App. 2000).

Statements by victim who was upset, crying, and in emotional and physical distress that were made in temporal proximity to defendant's yelling and assault of victim properly held to be excited utterances. Compan v. People, 121 P.3d 876 (Colo. 2005).

Contemporaneity not required. Contemporaneity of the act and the assertion is not required for the res gestae exception to the hearsay rule to be applicable. Lancaster v. People, 200 Colo. 448, 615 P.2d 720 (1980) (case decided prior to effective date of C.R.E.); People v. Handy, 657 P.2d 963 (Colo. App. 1982); Cheney v. Hailey, 686 P.2d 808 (Colo. App. 1984).

Time interval of a half-hour between the alleged assault and the hearsay declaration admitted under the res gestae exception did not constitute an impediment to the admissibility of the statement. Lancaster v. People, 200 Colo. 448, 615 P.2d 720 (1980) (case decided prior to effective date of C.R.E.).

But statement made after time interval of three hours in which declarant had several independent interludes of reflective thought was not admissible as an excited utterance. People v. Stephenson, 56 P.3d 1112 (Colo. App. 2001).

Temporal interval between event and statement not conclusive on admissibility. Although the temporal interval between the ''startling event'' and the child's statement is not without significance, it is not conclusive on the question of admissibility. People in Interest of O.E.P., 654 P.2d 312 (Colo. 1982); People v. Sandoval, 709 P.2d 90 (Colo. App. 1985); People v. Clements, 732 P.2d 1245 (Colo. App. 1986).

Exculpatory statement of defendant made hours after arrest not part of res gestae. Where hours after the defendant is placed under arrest, he gives an exculpatory statement to the police and the district attorney objects to the admission of the statement into evidence at trial on the ground that the statement is hearsay, his objection is valid, because the defendant's explanatory statement is not so contemporaneous that it can be considered part of the res gestae. People v. Gilkey, 181 Colo. 103, 507 P.2d 855 (1973).

Trial court to determine whether statement admissible. The trial court is in a preferred position to determine whether a particular event causes sufficient excitement in the declarant to render a statement admissible as an excited utterance. People in Interest of O.E.P., 654 P.2d 312 (Colo. 1982); People v. Bashara, 677 P.2d 1376 (Colo. App. 1983); People v. Sandoval, 709 P.2d 90 (Colo. App. 1985).

Criminal cases. Section (2), the ''excited utterance'' exception to the hearsay rule, is not unconstitutional as applied in every criminal case. People v. Dement, 661 P.2d 675 (Colo. 1983).

When declarant is unavailable, evidence admitted under this exception does not violate defendant's right to confront prosecution witnesses. People v. Mitchell, 829 P.2d 409 (Colo. App. 1991).

A declarant is unavailable in the constitutional sense when the prosecution makes a reasonable, good faith effort to produce a witness without success; however, in cases where the attempt to produce a witness would be futile, a reasonable effort by the prosecution may be no effort. People v. Green, 884 P.2d 339 (Colo. App. 1994).

Excited utterance is nontestimonial if not made under circumstances that would lead an objective witness to reasonably believe the statement would be available for use at a later trial. Compan v. People, 121 P.3d 876 (Colo. 2005).

Testimony held admissible under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule. People v. Jones, 665 P.2d 127 (Colo. App. 1982); Kielsmier v. Foster, 669 P.2d 630 (Colo. App. 1983); People v. Bashara, 677 P.2d 1376 (Colo. App. 1983); People v. Franklin, 683 P.2d 775 (Colo. 1984); People v. Sandoval, 709 P.2d 90 (Colo. App. 1985); People v. Clements, 732 P.2d 1245 (Colo. App. 1986); People v. Bolton, 859 P.2d 311 (Colo. App. 1993); Canape v. Peterson, 878 P.2d 83 (Colo. App. 1994); People v. Martinez, 83 P.3d 1174 (Colo. App. 2003).

Testimony held inadmissible. Although bystanders to an event may be sufficiently affected by its excitment to have their utterances rendered reliable, and thus excepted from the rule against hearsay statements, in this case there was no evidence of the emotion or spontaneity required to qualify the statement of the unknown declarant as an excited utterance. People v. Mares, 705 P.2d 1013 (Colo. App. 1985); People v. Green, 884 P.2d 339 (Colo. App. 1994).

Trial court abused its discretion in admitting testimony as an excited utterance even though the interview took place shortly after the startling event of defendant's arrest. The statements did not relate to the startling event and instead related to events that had occurred weeks previously. People v. Suazo, 87 P.3d 124 (Colo. App. 2003).

Trial court erred in admitting statements made by victim to police officer twelve hours after incident as excited utterances. Despite officer's description of the victim as distraught, traumatized, and terrified, the evidence indicated that victim had several independent interludes of reflective thought that rendered the statements less than spontaneous. People v. Pernell, 2014 COA 157, 414 P.3d 1, aff'd on other grounds, 2018 CO 13, 411 P.3d 669.

Statements held inadmissible. W.C.L. v. People, 685 P.2d 176 (Colo. 1984); People v. Koon, 724 P.2d 1367 (Colo. App. 1986); People v. Franklin, 782 P.2d 1202 (Colo. App. 1989).

C. Then Existing Mental, Emotional, or Physical Condition.

Law reviews. For article, ''Lights, Camera, Action—Video Will Executions'', see 42 Colo. Law. 45 (January 2013).

Rationale for exception. The state of mind exception to the hearsay rule is based upon the truthworthiness of such statements which is presumed due to their spontaneity. Morrison v. Bradley, 655 P.2d 385 (Colo. 1982).

Statement must be made under circumstances indicating sincerity. The rule requires that such declarations relate to a then existing state of mind and that they must have been made under circumstances indicating sincerity. Morrison v. Bradley, 655 P.2d 385 (Colo. 1982).

Section (3) tracks the common-law definition of the state of mind exception. Morrison v. Bradley, 655 P.2d 385 (Colo. 1982).

Common-law rule. Under the common-law evidentiary rule, the tests applied to admit evidence of design or plan are ''a present existing state of mind, something said in the usual course of things under the circumstances, and under circumstances excluding an ulterior purpose''. Morrison v. Bradley, 655 P.2d 385 (Colo. 1982).

Statements by an unavailable witness admitted pursuant to the state of mind hearsay exception do not violate a defendant's state or federal confrontation rights. The state of mind hearsay exception is firmly rooted. The reliability of such hearsay statements, therefore, is implied under the test set forth in Ohio v. Roberts, 448 U.S. 56 (1980), and statements bear sufficient indicia of reliability to satisfy the second part of the Dement two-part test. Accordingly, trial court's failure to make a reliability determination regarding statements by an unavailable witness did not constitute plain error. People v. Gash, 165 P.3d 779 (Colo. App. 2006).

The state of mind exception to the hearsay rule is based upon the trustworthiness of spontaneous statements. The availability of the declarant is immaterial if the statement is made under circumstances indicating sincerity. Statements of present intent to engage in future conduct may be used as proof of the subsequent act. People v. Nunez, 698 P.2d 1376 (Colo. App. 1984), aff'd, 737 P.2d 422 (Colo. 1987).

Mental condition of sexual assault victim. Mother of sexual assault victim may testify that victim was fearful and distraught for several months after assault since such testimony is admissible under state of mind exception to the hearsay rule. People v. Haymaker, 716 P.2d 110 (Colo. 1986).

Prohibition inapplicable when hearsay offered to prove state of mind. When hearsay is offered to provide the basis for the defendant's state of mind, the truth of the statement is not the criterion for admission, and the general hearsay prohibition does not apply. People v., Burress, 183 Colo. 146, 515 P.2d 460 (1973); People v. Spring, 713 P.2d 865 (Colo. 1985), rev'd on other grounds, 479 U.S. 564, 107 S. Ct. 851, 93 L. Ed. 2d 809 (1987).

When state of mind exception applicable. The state of mind exception to the hearsay rule, section (3), is not applicable to statements purportedly made by the victim in a case where the state of mind of the victim is not a material issue. People v. Borrelli, 624 P.2d 900 (Colo. App. 1980).

The more recent and better-reasoned cases allow hearsay expressions of a victim's fear of a defendant only where the state of mind of the victim is clearly relevant to a material issue in the case. People v. Borrelli, 624 P.2d 900 (Colo. App. 1980).

Out of court statements regarding the victim's fear of the defendant are admissible to explain the victim's state of mind. People v. Cardenas, 25 P.3d 1258 (Colo. App. 2000).

Assertion must depict declarant's, not another's, state of mind. Since the state of mind exception admits the assertion for the truth of the matter asserted, it is basic to admissibility that the assertion essentially depict the declarant's then existing state of mind, as distinguished from a description of the acts or state of mind of another. People v. Madson, 638 P.2d 18 (Colo. 1981); People v. Franklin, 782 P.2d 1202 (Colo. App. 1989).

Statements of memory or belief are excluded from the state of mind exception. People v. Madson, 638 P.2d 18 (Colo. 1981).

Rule permits the introduction of statements of memory or belief to prove the fact remembered or believed as to the execution, revocation, identification, or terms of a declarant's will. Murphy v. Glenn, 964 P.2d 581 (Colo. App. 1998).

Statements of present intent of future conduct included. The state of mind exception encompasses statements of the declarant's present intent to engage in future conduct as proof of the subsequent act. People v. Madson, 638 P.2d 18 (Colo. 1981).

Victim's statement to police officer describing physical injuries within the scope of admissible evidence under the "then existing mental, emotional, or physical condition" exception. Pena v. People, 173 P.3d 1107 (Colo. 2007).

Child's wordless pointing to head when police officer asked child if he had any ''owies'' was admissible becuase child was addresssing his then existing physical condition. People v. Phillips, 2012 COA 176, 315 P.3d 136.

Statements inadmissible because they related to a past state of mind, not a then existing state of mind. People v. Manyik, 2016 COA 42, 383 P.3d 77.

Applied in Stephen Equipment Co. v. Baca, 703 P.2d 1332 (Colo. App. 1985); People v. Avery, 736 P.2d 1233 (Colo. App. 1986); People v. McGrath, 793 P.2d 664 (Colo. App. 1989).

D. Statements for Purposes of Medical Diagnosis or Treatment.

Statements made for the purpose of medical diagnosis or treatment are exempted under section (4). For this type of evidence to be admissible, it must (1) be made for purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment; (2) describe medical history, symptoms, or the inception or cause of symptoms; and (3) be reasonably pertinent to diagnosis or treatment. Sovde v. Scott, 2017 COA 90, 410 P.3d 778.

Statements ascribing fault are generally not admissible under section (4) unless the statements of fault are necessary for diagnosis and treatment. Statements expressing dissatisfaction with the care received do not fall under exception in section (4). Statements ascribing fault are not necessary to assist in diagnosis and treatment. Sovde v. Scott, 2017 COA 90, 410 P.3d 778.

Admission of nontreating physician's recital of a defendant's statements. Nontreating physician's recital of a defendant's statements is admissible for the truth of the matters they contain. The test for admission reflects a trustworthiness rationale and is: First, is the declarant's motive consistent with the purpose of the rule; and second, is it reasonable for the physician to rely on the information in diagnosis or treatment. People v. Stiles, 692 P.2d 1124 (Colo. App. 1984).

Statements made by defendant to a non-treating physician should be admitted once it is established that the statements were made for the purpose of diagnosis or treatment, and were reasonably pertinent to diagnosis or treatment, and were relied upon by the physician in arriving at an expert opinion, without regard to any independent demonstration of trustworthiness. King v. People, 785 P.2d 596 (Colo. 1990).

However, even admission of testimony that is not pertinent to medical treatment or diagnosis may not be harmful error if it is merely cumulative of other evidence. People v. Galloway, 726 P.2d 249 (Colo. App. 1986).

Victim's statements to a paramedic admissible where statements were made in response to standard questions designed to elicit facts necessary for medical diagnosis and treatment and where all circumstances show that the victim's motive in making the statements was to obtain treatment. People v. Martinez, 18 P.3d 831 (Colo. App. 2000); People v. Joyce, 68 P.3d 521 (Colo. App. 2002).

Testimony of social worker, psychologist, and physician as to child's statements concerning sexual contact with her father were not admissible under the ''medical exception'' to the hearsay rule absent any evidence that the child was capable of recognizing, at the time of such statements, the need to provide accurate information for purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment. Oldsen v. People, 732 P.2d 1132 (Colo. 1986).

Evidence of patient's past cocaine use admissible in medical malpractice case because it was used for the purpose of diagnosis. The rule does not require that the evidence be used prospectively for treatment purposes. Kelly v. Haralampopoulos by Haralampopoulos, 2014 CO 46, 327 P.3d 255.

Doctors' diagnoses, recited and summarized in administrative law judge decision, did not come within the exception provided in section (4) because they did not constitute the patient's recitation of information necessary for diagnosis or treatment. Leiting v. Mutha, 58 P.3d 1049 (Colo. App. 2002).

Self-serving statements of defendant concerning drug use upon being booked for murder did not qualify under this rule. Such statements were not made for the purpose of obtaining diagnosis from a health care professional, but as part of jail's routine procedures. People v. Thomas, 962 P.2d 263 (Colo. App. 1997).

Victim's statements to nurse practitioner were inadmissible hearsay where the type of dispute or identity of the assailant was not necessary for or pertinent to the nurse practitioner's diagnosis or treatment. The record showed the challenged statements were cumulative of testimony by the victim and an investigating officer, therefore, any error in the admission of the challenged statements was harmless. People v. Jaramillo, 183 P.3d 665 (Colo. App. 2008).

Trial court did not commit reversible error in admitting hearsay statements made by victim to physician who examined her. The statements included the victim's description of the defendant's actions that had caused her pain and bleeding, to assist with his medical diagnosis. Moreover, the physician's testimony was cumulative of testimony provided by the victim, the woman with whom the victim was residing, and the caseworker. People v. Perez, 972 P.2d 1072 (Colo. App. 1998).

Testimony of sexual assault nurse practitioner (SANE) regarding statement elicited from victim during a SANE exam is admissible if: (1) The statement is reasonably pertinent to treatment or diagnosis, and (2) the content of the statement is such as is reasonably relied upon by a physician in treatment or diagnosis. However, statement is not admissible if statement is not trustworthy because the facts and circumstances surrounding the statement create the inference that the forensic examination or interview was purely investigative and had no medical or diagnostic characteristic. People v. Tyme, 2013 COA 59, 315 P.3d 1270.

E. Recorded Recollection.

This exception is inapplicable where a notation on a document refreshed a witness of his actions taken six weeks before trial and not so that he independently recalled the date of his conversation with the defendant that had taken place just before the accident for which defendant was on trial. People v. Clary, 950 P.2d 654 (Colo. App. 1997).

F. Records of Regularly Conducted Activity.

Law reviews. For article, ''C.R.E. 803(6): Applying the Business Records Exception to Third-Party Information'', see 29 Colo. Law. 55 (May 2000). For article, ''C.R.E. 803(6): Admissibility of Customer-Supplied Information Under Business Records Hearsay Exception'', see 32 Colo. Law. 89 (Sept. 2003).

Business record exception justified by trustworthiness. Where sufficient guarantees of trustworthiness and accuracy are present, application of the business record exception to hearsay evidence is justified. People v. Holder, 632 P.2d 607 (Colo. App. 1981); Ford v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 677 P.2d 358 (Colo. App. 1983), cert. dismissed, 679 P.2d 579 (Colo. 1984).

Contractor's invoices are business records. Contractor's invoices, based on employee time sheets, are admissible as records kept in the regular course of business. Herman v. Steamboat Springs Super 8 Motel, Inc., 634 P.2d 1005 (Colo. App. 1981).

Activities of government agencies may be considered business records for the purposes of Crim. P. 26.2, if the other requirements of the rule are met and the proper foundation is laid. People v. Stribel, 199 Colo. 377, 609 P.2d 113 (1980) (case decided prior to effective date of C.R.E.).

Assessments made by condominium association on a quarterly basis admissible. Chateau Chaumont Condo. v. Aspen Title Co., 676 P.2d 1246 (Colo. App. 1983).

Records prepared by another source, if adopted and integrated in the regular course of established business procedures into the records sought to be introduced are admissible even if the identity of the person whose first hand knowledge was the basis of a particular entry is not established. Teac Corp. of Am. v. Bauer, 678 P.2d 3 (Colo. App. 1984); In re Estate of Fritzler, 2017 COA 4, 413 P.3d 163.

Fraud investigator's records for credit processing association are records of regularly conducted activity justifying admissibility of calculations based thereon. People v. Burger-Levy, 677 P.2d 351 (Colo. App. 1983).

Complaints filed by third parties with the Colorado attorney general's consumer fraud office do not qualify as business records because they are not part of the work product generated by that office. Tincombe v. Colo. Const. & Supply Corp. 681 P.2d 533 (Colo. App. 1984).

Doctors' diagnoses, recited and summarized in administrative law judge decision, did not qualify as medical records because they constituted a summary and interpretation of the records, not the records themselves, and in any event were not authenticated by the custodian or other qualified witness. Leiting v. Mutha, 58 P.3d 1049 (Colo. App. 2002).

Police reports may qualify as business records because the drafters of the federal rule of evidence 803(6), identical to this rule, contemplated including police reports in the business records exception when the other requirements of the rule are met. Lannon v. Taco Bell, Inc., 708 P.2d 1370 (Colo. App. 1985), aff'd on other grounds, 744 P.2d 43 (Colo. 1987).

But statements of defendant concerning his own drug use, upon being booked for murder, did not qualify under this rule. The business records exception requires that the source of the proffered information does not indicate lack of trustworthiness, and in the context of the case, the defendant's statements might properly be characterized as self-serving. People v. Thomas, 962 P.2d 263 (Colo. App. 1997).

Specific requirement in § 16-3-309 (5) that laboratory testing technician be made available at trial upon timely request overrides general hearsay exception of section (6) of this rule. When timely request had been made, trial court erred in admitting laboratory report without technician's testimony as a business record. People v. Williams, 183 P.3d 577 (Colo. App. 2007).

Relevant and material business records, including computer records, qualify for the business records exception when supported by an adequate foundation showing that: (1) The records were made in the regular course of business; (2) those participating in the record making were acting in the routine of business; (3) the input procedures were accurate; (4) the entries were made within a reasonable time after the occurrence in question; and (5) the information was transmitted by a reliable person with knowledge of the event reported. Benham v. Pryke, 703 P.2d 644 (Colo. App. 1985), rev'd on other grounds, 744 P.2d 67 (Colo. 1987); Downing v. Overhead Door Corp., 707 P.2d 1027 (Colo. App. 1985); Schmutz v. Bolles, 800 P.2d 1307 (Colo. 1990); Stevens v. Humana of Del., Inc., 832 P.2d 1076 (Colo. App. 1992); Hauser v. Rose Health Care Sys., 857 P.2d 524 (Colo. App. 1993); People v. Huehn, 53 P.3d 733 (Colo. App. 2002); People v. Marciano, 2014 COA 92M, 411 P.3d 831.

The information contained in business records may be transmitted through a number of individuals as long as the chain of transmission begins with the individual who has actual knowledge of each person in the chain is acting in ordinary course of business. Schmutz v. Bolles, 800 P.2d 1307 (Colo. 1990).

The trial court erred in refusing to admit an investigative report of insurance adjuster because the report was prepared as part of the normal routine business practice necessary for each insurance file, the adjuster prepared the report using information he received from one in knowledge, and the report was prepared within a brief time after the adjuster received the information. Downing v. Overhead Door Corp., 707 P.2d 1027 (Colo. App. 1985).

Bank statements provided by defendant directly to law enforcement officials that defendant averred were her statements admissible under section (6). The nature of bank records and their trustworthiness, due to the fastidious nature of record keeping in financial institutions, which is often required by governmental regulation, along with the records as a whole, can establish a sufficient foundation for the bank records' admission. Because of the particular nature of bank statements and the fact that defendant obtained them and personally delivered them to a detective, the trial court could have taken judicial notice of the statements as business records. People v. Marciano, 2014 COA 92M, 411 P.3d 831.

Trial court abused its discretion when it admitted records without the testimony of a foundational witness. People v. Marciano, 2014 COA 92M, 411 P.3d 831.

Trial court did not abuse discretion in admitting computer records as business records even though the records were not authenticated pursuant to C.R.E. 901. Although C.R.E. 901(b)(9) may be used to authenticate computer records, there is no requirement that computer records be authenticated only in this way.

People v. Huehn, 53 P.3d 733 (Colo. App. 2002).

Computer business records have a greater level of trustworthiness than an individually generated computer document. People v. Huehn, 53 P.3d 733 (Colo. App. 2002).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting as a business record a spreadsheet prepared by the director of loss prevention, which contained data generated by the company's point-of-sale system that was copied and pasted into the document. People v. Flores-Lozano, 2016 COA 149, 410 P.3d 684.

Business records containing statements by an outsider are admissible when the information is provided as part of a business relationship between a business and the outsider and there is evidence that the business substantially relied upon the information contained in the records. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting such records. People in Interest of R.D.H., 944 P.2d 660 (Colo. App. 1997).

It was unnecessary to establish that document admitted under this rule was prepared by defendant's employee where defendant's chief financial officer testified that the document was received in the ordinary course of defendant's business, that the document was the type of document defendant routinely received from supplier, and that supplier did not inform defendant that document was inaccurate. Hauser v. Rose Health Care Sys., 857 P.2d 524 (Colo. App. 1993).

Trial court did not err in admitting certain documents offered in support of plaintiff's damage claim on grounds that documents constituted inadmissible heresay where jury was instructed that documents were not being admitted for truth of matter asserted and counsel for defendant confirmed that no additional jury instruction was required. Hauser v. Rose Health Care Sys., 857 P.2d 524 (Colo. App. 1993).

Security company's incident report inadmissible where there was no evidence as to: who recorded the report; whether the report was kept in the ordinary course of business; whether the security guard had knowledge of the truthfulness of the recorded information; whether a third party's statement in the report was sworn; or whether the statement was accurately translated by an interpreter in the regular course of business. Henderson v. Master Klean Janitorial, Inc., 70 P.3d 612 (Colo. App. 2003).

Industrial commission files are business records. Industrial commission file used in good cause determination of untimely requests for review of referee's decision, pursuant to commission regulations enacted under an express grant of legislative authority, is admissible as a business records exception to the hearsay rule. Kriegel v. Indus. Comm'n, 702 P.2d 290 (Colo. App. 1985).

Accident reports may be admissible as business records. Armentrout v. FMC Corp., 819 P.2d 522 (Colo. App. 1991).

Evidence provided an adequate basis for admission under section (6) of a medical record entry made by nurse. Stevens v. Humana of Del., Inc., 832 P.2d 1076 (Colo. App. 1992).

Admission of transport note entered by nurse in transport team was not error. Stevens v. Humana of Del., Inc., 832 P.2d 1076 (Colo. App. 1992).

Applied in Ed Hackstaff Concrete, Inc. v. Powder Ridge Condo, 679 P.2d 1112 (Colo. App. 1984); Thirsk v. Ethicon, Inc., 687 P.2d 1315 (Colo. App. 1983); People v. Lagunas, 710 P.2d 1145 (Colo. App. 1985); Adams County Dept. of Soc. Servs. ex rel. Tyler v. Tyler, 714 P.2d 1333 (Colo. App. 1986); Kelln v. Colo. Dept. of Rev., 719 P.2d 358 (Colo. App. 1986); Jacob v. Com. Highland Theatres, Inc., 738 P.2d 6 (Colo. App. 1986); Columbia Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Zelinger, 794 P.2d 231 (Colo. 1990); Lorenz v. Martin Marietta Corp., Inc., 802 P.2d 1146 (Colo. App. 1990), aff'd, 823 P.2d 100 (Colo. 1992); State v. Robert J. Hopp & Assocs., 2018 COA 69M, __ P.3d __.

G. Records of Vital Statistics.

Coroner's reports and death certificates. Coroner's reports qualify as public records, and death certificates are records of vital statistics. Bernstein v. Rosenthal, 671 P.2d 979 (Colo. App. 1983).

Admitting death certificate containing hearsay not error where jury instructed to ignore hearsay. The admission of a death certificate containing the statement that the victim was ''helping neighbor investigate burglary of neighbor's store and shot by one of the burglars during this investigation'', was not reversible error, particularly when the court later instructed the jury to ignore that portion of the certificate, although it would be much better to practice to delete such as included hearsay. Kurtz v. People, 177 Colo. 306, 494 P.2d 97 (1972).

H. Learned Treatises.

Law reviews. For article, ''C.R.E. 803(18): The Learned Treatise Exception to the Hearsay Rule'', see 38 Colo. Law. 39 (Mar. 2009).

Expert may be cross-examined using learned treatises even though he did not rely upon them in reaching his conclusions. People v. Beasley, 43 Colo. App. 488, 608 P.2d 835 (1979).

Hearsay evidence held properly admitted. Trial court held not to have erred in a sanity trial in admitting alleged hearsay testimony under the exception in section (18). People v. Clark, 662 P.2d 1100 (Colo. App. 1982).

Colorado driver handbook not a learned treatise under section (18). Garcia v. Mekonnen, 156 P.3d 1171 (Colo. App. 2007).

I. Public Records and Reports.

Complaints filed by third parties with the state attorney general's consumer fraud office do not qualify as public records because they comprise unsubstantiated allegations, rather than ''factual findings''. Tincombe v. Colo. Const. & Supply Corp. 681 P.2d 533 (Colo. App. 1984).

Administrative law judge decision reciting doctors' testimony did not qualify as a public record because the recitations were not factual findings or conclusions of the agency, but merely summaries of the doctors' own statements. Leiting v. Mutha, 58 P.3d 1049 (Colo. App. 2002).

Police booking reports fall outside of the exclusion contained in section (8)(B) for documents in criminal cases relating to matters observed by police or law enforcement and are thus admissible as public records. Unlike police investigative reports, booking reports do not raise concerns of trustworthiness or potential bias. Rather, they are documents routinely prepared in a non-adversarial setting by officials whose only motivation is to accurately and efficiently record uncontroversial information relating to the fact that an arrest was made, and not the facts leading to the arrest. People v. Warrick, 284 P.3d 139 (Colo. App. 2011).

Applied in People v. Fueston, 717 P.2d 978 (Colo. App. 1985), aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds, 749 P.2d 952 (Colo. 1988).

J. Other Exceptions.

Rule permits hearsay statement which has circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness equivalent to other hearsay exceptions to be admitted if the court determines that it is offered as evidence of a material fact and if it is more probative on the point for which it is offered than any other evidence which its proponent could reasonably produce. Abdelsamed v. N.Y. Life Ins. Co., 875 P.2d 421 (Colo. App. 1992), rev'd sub nom. Hock v. N.Y. Life Ins. Co., 876 P.2d 1242 (Colo. 1994).

Factors to be used to determine trustworthiness are: (1) The nature and character of the statement; (2) the relationship of the parties; (3) the motivation of the declarant; (4) the circumstances under which the statement was made; (5) the knowledge and qualifications of the declarant; (6) the existence or lack of corroboration; and (7) the availability of the declarant at trial for cross-examination. Abdelsamed v. N.Y. Life Ins. Co., 857 P.2d 421 (Colo. App. 1992), rev'd sub nom. Hock v. N.Y. Life Ins. Co., 876 P.2d 1242 (Colo. 1994).

Test applied in Abdelsamed v. N.Y. Life Ins. Co., 857 P.2d 421 (Colo. App. 1992), rev'd sub nom. Hock v. N.Y. Life Ins. Co., 876 P.2d 1242 (Colo. 1994).

Statement admissible under residual hearsay exception if: (1) The statement has equivalent circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness; (2) the statement is offered as evidence of a material fact; (3) the statement is more probative than any other evidence that can be procured through reasonable efforts; (4) the general purposes of the rules and the interests of justice will best be served by admission of the statement into evidence, and (5) the proponent of the statement must give the adverse party notice of the intent to offer the statement, including the name and address of the declarant. Hock v. N.Y. Life Ins. Co., 876 P.2d 1242 (Colo. 1994).

Statements of three deceased witnesses properly read into record under residual hearsay exception when all parties agreed to what would be read. People v. Melanson, 937 P.2d 826 (Colo. App. 1996).

Residual hearsay exception not adopted. The supreme court declined to adopt the residual exception without an opportunity for public comment and an effective date which would allow for uniform application. W.C.L. v. People, 685 P.2d 176 (Colo. 1984) (decided prior to adoption of section (24)).

Reputation among family members concerning a person's date of birth is admissible hearsay. People v. Buhrle, 744 P.2d 747 (Colo. 1987).

Hearsay statements of child concerning sexual contact with her father which were testified to by a social worker, psychologist, and physician were sufficiently trustworthy to qualify as an exception to the hearsay rule and were admissible. Oldsen v. People, 732 P.2d 1132 (Colo. 1986).

Exception for judgment of previous conviction applied in Banek v. Thomas, 733 P.2d 1171 (Colo. 1986).

Evidence in a packet pertaining to one conviction admitted under § 16-13-102 that also is evidence of another separate and distinct conviction is admissible to prove the other separate and distinct conviction for habitual offender purposes. People v. Tafoya, 985 P.2d 26 (Colo. App. 1999).

Medical records have long been considered the prototype of business records for which admission as an exception to the hearsay rule is appropriate. Stevens v. Humana of Del., Inc., 832 P.2d 1076 (Colo. App. 1992).

Admission of transport note entered by nurse in transport team was not error. The trial court correctly determined that the entry met the requirements of section (24). Stevens v.

Humana of Del., Inc., 832 P.2d 1076 (Colo. App. 1992).

Kelley Blue Book may be admitted under the market reports exception to the hearsay rule since the blue book is a market report generally used and relied upon by the public. People v. Thornton, 251 P.3d 1147 (Colo. App. 2010).

Information from a drug website does not meet the requisite criteria of necessity and reliability for admissibility under the hearsay exception for market reports. People v. Hard, 2014 COA 132, 342 P.3d 572.

Applied in People v. Guilbeaux, 761 P.2d 255 (Colo. App. 1988).

Rule 804. Hearsay Exceptions: Declarant Unavailable

(a) Definition of unavailability. ''Unavailability as a witness'' includes situations in which the declarant—

(1) is exempted by ruling of the court on the ground of privilege from testifying concerning the subject matter of his statement; or

(2) persists in refusing to testify concerning the subject matter of his statement despite an order of the court to do so; or

(3) testifies to a lack of memory of the subject matter of his statement; or

(4) is unable to be present or to testify at the hearing because of death or then existing physical or mental illness or infirmity; or

(5) is absent from the hearing and the proponent of his statement has been unable to procure his attendance (or in the case of a hearsay exception under subdivision (b)(3) or (4) his attendance or testimony) by process or other reasonable means.

A declarant is not unavailable as a witness if his exemption, refusal, claim of lack of memory, inability, or absence is due to the procurement or wrongdoing of the proponent of his statement for the purpose of preventing the witness from attending or testifying.

(b) Hearsay exceptions. The following are not excluded by the hearsay rule if the declarant is unavailable as a witness:

(1) Former testimony. Testimony given as a witness at another hearing of the same or a different proceeding, or in a deposition taken in compliance with law in the course of the same or another proceeding, if the party against whom the testimony is now offered, or, in a civil action or proceeding, a predecessor in interest, had an opportunity and similar motive to develop the testimony by direct, cross, or redirect examination.

COMMITTEE COMMENT

The Federal Rule is substantially the same as the Colorado Rule; except there is no reference to subsection (b) (2) in the Colorado Rule, as there is no Colorado subsection (b) (2). As to testimony given at a preliminary hearing, see People v. Smith, 198 Colo. 120, 597 P.2d 204 (1979). This rule expands upon the former rule of evidence in Colorado. For authorities on the use of such evidence in Colorado, see: Rule 32 of Colorado Rules of Civil Procedure; Emerson v. Burnett, 11 Colo. App. 86, 52 P. 752 (1898); Daniels v. Stock, 23 Colo. App. 529, 130 P. 1031 (1913); Woodworth v. Gorsline, 30 Colo. 186, 69 P. 705 (1902); Henwood v. People, 57 Colo. 544, 143 P. 373 (1914); Gibson v. Gagnon, 82 Colo. 108, 257 P. 348 (1927); Duran v. People, 156 Colo. 385, 399 P.2d 412 (1965); Insul-Wool Insulation Corp. v. Home Insulation, Inc., 176 F.2d 502 (10th Cir. 1949).

(2) (No Colorado Rule Codified)

COMMITTEE COMMENT

The Federal rule relates to a statement under belief of impending death. The admissibility of the dying declarations of a deceased person is governed by § 13-25-119, C.R.S.

(3) Statement against interest. A statement that:

(A) a reasonable person in the declarant's position would have made only if the person believed it to be true because, when made, it was so contrary to the declarant's proprietary or pecuniary interest or had so great a tendency to invalidate the declarant's claim against someone else or to expose the declarant to civil or criminal liability; and

(B) is supported by corroborating circumstances that clearly indicate its trustworthiness, if it is offered in a criminal case as one that tends to expose the declarant to criminal liability.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

COMMITTEE COMMENT

The rule was revised, consistent with recent amendments to FRE 804(b)(3), only to clarify that corroborating circumstances are required regardless of whether a statement is offered to inculpate or exculpate an accused. See People v. Newton, 966 P.2d 563 (Colo. 1998) (prosecutors seeking to admit statements against the accused must satisfy the corroboration requirement solely by reference to the circumstances surrounding its making).

(4) Statement of personal or family history. (A) A statement concerning the declarant's own birth, adoption, marriage, divorce, legitimacy, relationship by blood, adoption, or marriage, ancestry, or other similar fact of personal or family history, even though declarant had no means of acquiring personal knowledge of the matter stated; or (B) a statement concerning the foregoing matters, and death also, of another person, if the declarant was related to the other by blood, adoption, or marriage or was so intimately associated with the other's family as to be likely to have accurate information concerning the matter declared.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

COMMITTEE COMMENT

This rule expanded the former Colorado rule to admit statements of unrelated associates. Some independent proof of relationship under (B) will continue to be required.

(5) [Transferred to Rule 807]

COMMITTEE COMMENT

The contents of Rule 803(24) and Rule 804(b)(5) have been combined and transferred to Rule 807. This was done to facilitate additions to Rules 803 and 804. No change in meaning is intended.

Source: (b)(5) added November 15, 1984, effective April 1, 1985; (b)(5) transferred to Rule 807 and (b)(5) committee comment added, effective January 1, 1999; (b)(3) and (b)(3) committee comment amended and effective January 13, 2011.

Admitted hearsay statements against interest were sufficiently corroborated, satisfying the state confrontation clause requirement. People v. Beller, 2016 COA 184, 411 P.3d 1145.

Unavailability under section (a)(1). In order for a declarant to be considered ''unavailable'' under section (a)(1), the declarant must actually invoke the privilege before the trial court, and the trial court must rule that the privilege is available. People v. Rosenthal, 670 P.2d 1254 (Colo. App. 1983).

Previous assertion of the privilege against self-incrimination by a witness for the defendant in an earlier proceeding was insufficient as a matter of law to satisfy the requirement of unavailability under section (a)(1). People v. Barnum, 23 P.3d 1237 (Colo. App. 2001), aff'd by an equally divided court, 53 P.3d 646 (Colo. 2002).

Declarant-codefendant in a criminal proceeding must be presumed unavailable for purposes of section (a) even if present in court. Otherwise, declarant who is a codefendant could create error by becoming "available" by deciding to testify only after hearsay statements against interest were admitted into evidence pursuant to this rule. People v. Reed, 216 P.3d 55 (Colo. App. 2008).

To satisfy the requirements of constitutional confrontation, a party offering a witness's former testimony must establish the present unavailability of the witness. Also, there must have been a sufficient opportunity for the accused to cross-examine the witness at the former hearing so as to afford the trier of fact a satisfactory basis for evaluating the truth of the prior statement. People v. Madonna, 651 P.2d 378 (Colo. 1982).

C.R.C.P. 32 is an independent and alternative vehicle to section (b)(1) of this rule for admitting deposition testimony into evidence in civil cases. Margenau v. Bowlin, 12 P.3d 1214 (Colo. App. 2000).

The determinative inquiry of the availability of the declarant is not his or her availability at the time of the pretrial hearing but his or her availability at the time of trial. Blecha v. People, 962 P.2d 931 (Colo. 1998); People v. Barnum, 23 P.3d 1237 (Colo. App. 2001), aff'd by an equally divided court, 53 P.3d 646 (Colo. 2002).

Inability to remember prior testimony tantamount to denial. For the purpose of introducing the prior testimony of a witness, the witness' inability to remember a statement is tantamount to a denial that he made the statement. People v. Baca, 633 P.2d 528 (Colo. App. 1981).

Extrinsic evidence admissible to prove prior statement. Where a witness does not remember making a prior statement, extrinsic evidence is admissible to prove that the witness made the prior statement. People v. Baca, 633 P.2d 528 (Colo. App. 1981).

Where age is issue, party or witness may testify as to his age, and such testimony is competent evidence, being a generally recognized exception to the hearsay rule. Maddox v. People, 178 Colo. 366, 497 P.2d 1263 (1972).

Prior trial testimony admissible when party against whom it is offered had opportunity to cross-examine the witness fully at the prior proceeding. The scope and limits of cross-examination lie within sound discretion of trial court and absent showing of abuse of discretion does not constitute reversible error. People v. Bowman, 738 P.2d 387 (Colo. App. 1987).

Whether declarant's statement was a statement against interest is applied in People v. Shields, 701 P.2d 133 (Colo. App. 1985).

Statement was not against the declarant's penal interest where the version of the declarant's statement proffered at hearing did not expose the declarant to criminal liability. People v. Thompson, 950 P.2d 608 (Colo. App. 1997).

Statements of criminal liability made by defendant offered for purposes of mitigation inadmissible under section (b)(4) because they were in favor of rather than against defendant's penal interest. People v. Atkins, 844 P.2d 1196 (Colo. App. 1992); People v. Orona, 907 P.2d 659 (Colo. App. 1995).

Reliability of custodial statements. Whether a declarant who makes a statement against penal interest was in police custody when the statement was given is but one factor to be considered in determining whether the attendant circumstances confirm the statement's trustworthiness. People v. Moore, 693 P.2d 388 (Colo. App. 1984).

Section (b)(3) is identical to the federal rule and federal interpretation is persuasive authority of its meaning. People v. Lupton, 652 P.2d 1080 (Colo. App. 1982); People v. Nyberg, 711 P.2d 719 (Colo. App. 1985).

Section (b)(3) did not apply since the declarant was acquitted before the defendant's trial began and was therefore available to testify at that trial. People v. Blecha, 940 P.2d 1070 (Colo. App. 1996), aff'd, 962 P.2d 931 (Colo. 1998).

Examination of corroborative circumstances within trial court's discretion. The examination of corroborative circumstances, in section (b)(3), is a matter of discretion for the trial court. People v. Lupton, 652 P.2d 1080 (Colo. App. 1982).

In addressing the question of corroboration, the trial court must balance all the evidence available. People v. Nyberg, 711 P.2d 719 (Colo. App. 1985).

In balancing whether sufficient corroborating circumstances exist, the examination focuses on when and to whom the statement was made, the presence or absence of corroborating evidence of the statement, the availability of the declarant to testify and, in the very real sense, whether the declarant's statement is truly against his penal interest, considering the likelihood of him being actually prosecuted. People v. Lupton, 652 P.2d 1080 (Colo. App. 1982).

In determining whether sufficient corroborating circumstances exist to permit introduction of a statement against interest into evidence, the trial court must examine, among other circumstances, when and to whom the statement is made and determine whether other independent evidence corroborates the contents of the statement. People v. Harding, 671 P.2d 975 (Colo. App. 1983).

The "unavailability" of a declarant for purposes of determining the admissibility of hearsay testimony rests on the good faith efforts made to produce such declarant, which efforts are based on a standard of reasonableness. People v. Walters, 765 P.2d 616 (Colo. App. 1988).

Test of good faith by prosecution in securing witness's attendance was shown where witness had been deported to Mexico despite protests by prosecution, was under orders to return for trial, had been subpoenaed by the defense, and was notified by the prosecution via a letter shortly before trial. People v. Hernandez, 899 P.2d 297 (Colo. App. 1995).

Statements are not admissable pursuant to this rule where prosecution failed to prove the declarant's unavailability. People v. Franklin, 782 P.2d 1202 (Colo. App. 1989).

A witness with a physical or mental disability is unavailable in the constitutional sense only if the disability is of a nature that requiring the witness to testify would result in further physical or mental injury to the witness and is of such a permanency that the witness would continue to be unavailable even if a reasonable continuance of the trial were to be granted. People v. Lyons, 907 P.2d 708 (Colo. App. 1995).

Whether the declarant was unavailable is applied in People v. Arguello, 737 P.2d 436 (Colo. App. 1987).

Trial court was correct in refusing to treat witness as "unavailable" where witness testified extensively and, although her memory was selective, witness's selective memory lapses benefited defendant. People v. Aguirre, 839 P.2d 483 (Colo. App. 1992).

Court need not make specific findings to support conclusions that child is medically unavailable to testify due to emotional trauma pursuant to § 18-3-413 (4) when courts findings are based upon uncontradicted testimony of experts who had interviewed the children. People v. Thomas, 803 P.2d 144 (Colo. 1990).

Statement clearly against penal interest that happens also to implicate defendant was properly admitted under section (b)(3) as an exception to the hearsay rule. People v. Blecha, 940 P.2d 1070 (Colo. App. 1996), aff'd, 962 P.2d 931 (Colo. 1998).

For the purpose of limiting application of the "residual exception" to the hearsay rule, a trial court should make on-the-record findings that a hearsay statement satisfies the prerequisites for admissibility under section (b)(5). People v. Fuller, 788 P.2d 741 (Colo. 1990).

Grand jury testimony of deceased must satisfy foundational requirements of section (b)(1) in order to be admissible. Party seeking admission of testimony must show a prior opportunity by the party against whom the testimony is offered to develop such testimony, and a similar motive to do so. In re Lynde, 922 F.2d 1448 (10th Cir. 1991).

In murder trial, victim's prior statements in verified complaint to obtain a restraining order were supported by circumstantial guaranties of trustworthiness and were properly admissible. People v. Meyer, 952 P.2d 774 (Colo. App. 1997).

Harmless error. Trial court's failure to establish that a hearsay statement satisfied the prerequisites for admissibility under section (b)(5) proved harmless error because the record revealed that the statements were supported by circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness and that the statements were cumulative and did not substantially influence the verdict or affect the fairness of the trial proceedings. People v. Fuller, 788 P.2d 741 (Colo. 1990).

In determining whether an error was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt, a reviewing court should consider factors including: The importance of witness' testimony to the prosecution's case; whether the testimony is cumulative; the presence or absence of corroborating or contradictory evidence on the material points of the witness' testimony; the extent of the cross-examination otherwise permitted; and the overall strength of the prosecution's case. Merritt v. People, 842 P.2d 162 (Colo. 1992); People v. Barnum, 23 P.3d 1237 (Colo. App. 2001), aff'd by an equally divided court, 53 P.3d 646 (Colo. 2002); People v. Harris, 43 P.3d 221 (Colo. 2002).

Considering the independent evidence linking the defendant to the crime, the persuasive corroborative evidence substantiating the victim's account of the assault, and the lack of importance of the hearsay statements to the prosecution's case, the impact these inadmissible statements had on the jury was insignificant, and this error appears to be ''so unimportant and insignificant'' that it is to be deemed harmless since the admission of the hearsay statements did not contribute to the defendant's guilty verdict. People v. Harris, 43 P.3d 221 (Colo. 2002).

Trial court committed no reversible error in admitting the transcribed testimony of three police officers in retrial of defendant whose previous conviction was overturned because defendant did not waive his right to be present during trial conducted in his absence. The officers did not present identification testimony, their testimony was cumulative and corroborative of eyewitness testimony concerning line-up procedures and the preparation of a composite drawing, and eyewitness testimony was overwhelming evidence of guilt. People v. Campbell, 885 P.2d 327 (Colo. App. 1994).

No per se rule that out-of-court inculpatory statements made by complicitors in custody are inadmissible against criminal defendants, but rather the court should have applied the two-part test established in Ohio v. Roberts, 448 U.S. 56 (1980) on a case by case basis. People v. Drake, 785 P.2d 1253 (Colo. 1989).

The hearsay exception for declarations against interest by an unavailable witness is not well-established; however, while a confession by a hired hit man was not admissible on this ground against the defendant who hired him, it was admissible because, considering the totality of the circumstances, it contained adequate guarantees of trustworthiness since it was genuinely self-inculpatory and was not coerced or motivated by expectations of leniency. Stevens v. People, 29 P.3d 305 (Colo. 2001) (applying Lilly v. Virginia, 527 U.S. 116 (1999), and Ohio v. Roberts, 448 U.S. 56 (1980)).

When a statement is offered to exculpate an accused under section (b)(3), the court must first determine whether the statement complies with the rule and secondly must determine whether the admission of the statement violates the defendant's right to confrontation. In determining whether the statement complies with the rule, the people must show by a preponderance of the evidence that corroborating circumstances demonstrate the trustworthiness of the statement. People v. Newton, 966 P.2d 563 (Colo. 1998).

When admissible the trial court should admit all statements related to the precise statement against penal interest subject to two limits: Statements that are so self-serving as to be unreliable and statements made to curry favorable treatment should be excluded. People v. Newton, 966 P.2d 563 (Colo. 1998).

When a statement is offered to inculpate an accused under section (b)(3), three elements must be satisfied. First, the witness must be unavailable; second, the statement must tend to subject the declarant to criminal liability; and, third, the people must show by a preponderance of evidence that corroborating circumstances demonstrate the trustworthiness of the statement. In assessing the third criteria, the court should limit its inquiry to the circumstances surrounding the making of the statement and not rely on other independent evidence. Appropriate factors for the court to consider are: Where and when the statement was made; to whom the statement was made; what prompted the statement; how the statement was made; what the statement contained; the nature and character of the statement; the relationship between the parties to the statement; the declarant's probable motivations for making the statement; and the circumstances under which the statement was made. The most important determination is whether the statement is genuinely self-inculpatory or whether it shifts the blame to the defendant. Bernal v. People, 44 P.3d 184 (Colo. 2002).

There is a three-part test to determine whether a statement inculpating a defendant may be admitted under section (b)(3) and will satisfy the Colorado and United States Constitutions: (1) The witness must be unavailable; (2) the statement must tend to subject the declarant to criminal liability and be of a kind that a reasonable person in the declarant's position would not have made unless the person believed it to be true; and (3) corroborating circumstances at the time the statement was made must demonstrate the trustworthiness of the statement. People v. Jensen, 55 P.3d 135 (Colo. App. 2001).

In the third part of the test, the court should consider when and where the statement was made, what prompted the statement, how the statement was made, and the substance of the statement. People v. Jensen, 55 P.3d 135 (Colo. App. 2001).

Statements against penal interest made by a codefendant to an accomplice are admissible where the accomplice testifies about such statements in court and is subject to cross-examination, and whose own credibility was a question for the jury to determine. People v. Jensen, 55 P.3d 135 (Colo. App. 2001).

Child victims were found medically unavailable to testify at sexual abuse trial; therefore, videotapes of their depositions were admitted pursuant to § 18-3-413 (4). Thomas v. Guenther, 754 F. Supp. 833 (D. Colo. 1990).

Both § 13-25-129 and this rule are residuary rules and apply only if hearsay is not otherwise admissible under other hearsay exceptions. Section 13-25-129 is the sole basis upon which hearsay evidence, which otherwise comes within the terms of that statute, may be admitted. People v. Bowers, 801 P.2d 511 (Colo. 1990).

Defendant's right to cross-examination at trial was not violated where, although defendant could not cross-examine the witness at trial because the witness died shortly after direct examination, the witness' deposition, at which he was cross-examined by the defendant, was read into the trial record and the direct examination did not raise any issues which were not covered in the deposition. Van Schaack v. Van Schaack Holdings, Ltd., 856 P.2d 15 (Colo. App. 1992).

It is neither appropriate nor necessary for the attorney making the objection to hearsay to identify and describe every hearsay exception and to argue against their applicability. The proponent of the hearsay statements has the burden to establish the foundation for admitting the statements under an exception to the hearsay rule. Blecha v. People, 962 P.2d 931 (Colo. 1998).

Failure to include the transcript of grand jury testimony on appeal makes the appellate record insufficient to determine whether the trial court abused its discretion in not admitting the grand jury testimony. People v. Clark, 2015 COA 44, 370 P.3d 197.

Applied in People ex rel. Faulk v. District Court, 667 P.2d 1384 (Colo. 1983); People v. Raffaelli, 701 P.2d 881 (Colo. App. 1985); People v. Buhrle, 744 P.2d 747 (Colo. 1987); People v. Chambers, 749 P.2d 984 (Colo. App. 1987).

Rule 805. Hearsay Within Hearsay

Hearsay included within hearsay is not excluded under the hearsay rule if each part of the combined statements conforms with an exception to the hearsay rule provided in these rules.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, ''Hearsay in Criminal Cases Under the Colorado Rules of Evidence: An Overview'', see 50 U. Colo. L. Rev. 277 (1979).

This rule does not apply to defendant's interview admission because, as a party opponent, defendant's statement does not require firsthand knowledge to be admissible. People v. Sparks, 2018 COA 1, 434 P.3d 713.

Rule 806. Attacking and Supporting Credibility of Declarant

When a hearsay statement, or a statement defined in Rule 801 (d)(2), (C), (D), or (E), has been admitted in evidence, the credibility of the declarant may be attacked, and if attacked may be supported, by any evidence which would be admissible for those purposes if declarant had testified as a witness. Evidence of a statement or conduct by the declarant at any time, inconsistent with his hearsay statement, is not subject to any requirement that he may have been afforded an opportunity to deny or explain. If the party against whom a hearsay statement has been admitted calls the declarant as a witness, the party is entitled to examine him on the statement as if under cross-examination.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, ''Hearsay in Criminal Cases Under the Colorado Rules of Evidence: An Overview'', see 50 U. Colo. L. Rev. 277 (1979). For article, ''Attacking the Credibility of a Non-testifying Hearsay Declarant'', see 29 Colo. Law. 51 (Mar. 2000).

General rule, prior to adoption of this rule, was that inconsistent statements used to impeach a witness were not admissible unless the witness had been asked about the time and place and to whom the statement was made. People v. Madonna, 651 P.2d 378 (Colo. 1982).

Trial court properly concluded that this rule allowed the prosecution to impeach defendant with evidence of his prior felony convictions, even though the defendant did not testify. Where defendant does not testify at trial, but he or she elicits his or her own hearsay statements through another witness, this rule authorizes the jury to hear impeachment evidence that would have been admissible if the defendant had testified. Prior felony convictions are admissible for this purpose. People v. Dore, 997 P.2d 1214 (Colo. App. 1999).

This rule creates a specific exception to the foundational requirements of C.R.E. 613. Thus, where a transcript of a witness' testimony at the first trial was admitted into evidence at the second trial, testimony of a police detective as to inconsistent statements made by the witness were admissible without the witness first having opportunity to explain the prior inconsistent statements. People v. Ball, 821 P.2d 905 (Colo. App. 1991).

Prosecution's reliance on this rule for use of testimony regarding defendant's silence was misplaced. People v. Welsh, 80 P.3d 296 (Colo. 2003).

Defendant's exculpatory statement to the police, admissible under the rule of completeness, is not subject to impeachment. If the prosecution wants to admit part of a statement, it ought to, in fairness, ''pay the costs'' of admitting it in its relevant entirety. People v. Short, 2018 COA 47, 425 P.3d 1208.

Rule 807. Residual Exception

A statement not specifically covered by Rule 803 or 804 but having equivalent circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness, is not excluded by the hearsay rule, if the court determines that (A) the statement is offered as evidence of a material fact; (B) the statement is more probative on the point for which it is offered than any other evidence which the proponent can procure through reasonable efforts; and (C) the general purposes of these rules and the interests of justice will best be served by admission of the statement into evidence. However, a statement may not be admitted under this exception unless the proponent of it makes known to the adverse party sufficiently in advance of the trial or hearing to provide the adverse party with a fair opportunity to prepare to meet it, the proponent's intention to offer the statement and the particulars of it, including the name and address of the declarant.

Source: Entire rule amended and adopted November 25, 1998, effective January 1, 1999.

Editor's note: This rule was relocated from Rule 803(24) and Rule 804(b)(5).

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, ''Tips for Working With Evidence in Domestic Relations Cases'', see 31 Colo. Law. 87 (June 2002). For article, ''Lights, Camera, Action—Video Will Executions'', see 42 Colo. Law. 45 (Jan. 2013).

To admit evidence under the residual hearsay exception, the court must determine that the statement is more probative on the points it is offered for than any other evidence the proponent could procure through reasonable efforts. Through reasonable efforts the prosecution could have obtained more probative evidence, so the court's admission of the documents under the residual exception was improper. People v. Gilmore, 97 P.3d 123 (Colo. App. 2003).

In considering the trustworthiness of statements to determine if they should be admissible under this rule, courts should examine the nature and character of the statements, the relationship of the parties, the probable motivation of the declarant in making the statements, and the circumstances under which the statements were made. People v. Jensen, 55 P.3d 135 (Colo. App. 2001); People v. Brown, 2014 COA 155M-2, 360 P.3d 167; People v. McFee, 2016 COA 97, 412 P.3d 848.

The reliability of a statement should be determined by the circumstances that existed at the time the statement was made. Corroborating evidence is not an appropriate ''circumstantial guarantee'' supporting a hearsay statement. Vasquez v. People, 173 P.3d 1099 (Colo. 2007).

Court did not abuse its discretion when it concluded that unavailable witness's testimony lacked sufficient circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness and refused to admit the transcript of the witness's police interview. The witness could not clearly recall the basic and crucial fact of the date and time that an alternative suspect was at another location. People v. Sandoval-Candelaria, 328 P.3d 193 (Colo. App. 2011), rev'd on other grounds, 2014 CO 21, 321 P.3d 487.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion when it refused to admit an emissions test report under the residual hearsay exception. The court found the vehicle identification number on the emissions test report and the testimony of a Colorado motor vehicles division emissions section employee verifying that the document was an emissions test report an insufficient guarantee of trustworthiness since the defendant did not present evidence of who conducted the test, whether the test was performed accurately, and whether the test was actually conducted on the car sold to the victim. People v. Carlson, 72 P.3d 411 (Colo. App. 2003).

Trial court properly admitted nonverbal statement of deceased victim where: (1) Victim had no motivation to lie; (2) victim was capable of understanding and responding to questions; (3) victim's perception and identification of perpetrator were not in question; and (4) the utility of cross-examination was remote. People v. Fry, 74 P.3d 360 (Colo. App. 2002), aff'd on other grounds, 92 P.3d 970 (Colo. 2004).

Trial court properly admitted identification statement by victim under the residual hearsay exception. The trial court determined in a pretrial hearing that, based on the circumstances of the statement, there was no substantial probability that the identification was unreliable. Pena v. People, 173 P.3d 1107 (Colo. 2007).

Trial court did not err in admitting statements made by the victim to twowitnesses prior to her death. There was sufficient indicia of reliability for the victim's statement, the statements were nontestimonial, not motivated by police investigation, and were prompted by questions based on personal observations of the victim's bodily injuries. People v. Lujan, 2018 COA 95, __ P.3d __.

Trial court improperly admitted preliminary hearing testimony of deceased witness at trial because preliminary hearing testimony does not possess requisite trustworthiness. People v. Fry, 74 P.3d 360 (Colo. App. 2002), aff'd on other grounds, 92 P.3d 970 (Colo. 2004).

A preliminary hearing does not provide an adequate opportunity to cross-examine sufficient to satisfy the confrontation clause requirements. Consequently, the use of a preliminary hearing transcript at trial is improper. People v. Fry, 92 P.3d 970 (Colo. 2004).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding testimony of defendant's sister because there were not sufficient guarantees of trustworthiness. People v. Preciado-Flores, 66 P.3d 155 (Colo. App. 2002).

Statements victim made to her sister, her mother, and two co-workers sufficiently trustworthy under exception. People v. Brown, 2014 COA 155M-2, 360 P.3d 167.

Statements victim made to her family members in which she communicated defendant's threats satisfy the requirements of this rule. People v. McFee, 2016 COA 97, 412 P.3d 848.

Trial court properly admitted testimonial hearsay statements under the doctrine of forfeiture by wrongdoing. The prosecution proved by a preponderance of the evidence that defendant forfeited his right to confront the evidence since he persuaded the witness not to testify against him. The trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the statements. People v. Jackson, 2018 COA 79, __ P.3d __.

ARTICLE IX
AUTHENTICATION AND IDENTIFICATION

Rule 901. Requirement of Authentication or Identification

(a) General provision. The requirement of authentication or identification as a condition precedent to admissibility is satisfied by evidence sufficient to support a finding that the matter in question is what its proponent claims.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

(b) Illustrations. By way of illustration only, and not by way of limitation, the following are examples of authentication or identification conforming with the requirements of this rule:

(1) Testimony of witness with knowledge. Testimony that a matter is what it is claimed to be.

(2) Non-expert opinion on handwriting. Non-expert opinion as to the genuineness of handwriting, based upon familiarity not acquired for purposes of the litigation.

(3) Comparison by trier or expert witness. Comparison by the trier of fact or by expert witnesses with specimens which have been authenticated.

(4) Distinctive characteristics and the like. Appearance, contents, substance, internal patterns, or other distinctive characteristics, taken in conjunction with circumstances.

(5) Voice identification. Identification of a voice, whether heard firsthand or through mechanical or electronic transmission or recording, by opinion based upon hearing the voice at any time under circumstances connecting it with the alleged speaker.

(6) Telephone conversations. Telephone conversations, by evidence that a call was made to the number assigned at the time by the telephone company to a particular person or business, if (A) in the case of a person, circumstances, including self-identification, show the person answering to be the one called, or (B) in the case of business, the call was made to a place of business and the conversation related to business reasonably transacted over the telephone.

(7) Public records or reports. Evidence that a writing authorized by law to be recorded or filed and in fact recorded or filed in a public office, or a purported public record, report, statement, or data compilation, in any form, is from the public office where items of this nature are kept.

(8) Ancient documents or data compilation. Evidence that a document or data compilation, in any form, (A) is in such condition as to create no suspicion concerning its authenticity, (B) was in a place where it, if authentic, would likely be, and (C) has been in existence 20 years or more at the time it is offered.

(9) Process or system. Evidence describing a process or system used to produce a result and showing that the process or system produces an accurate result.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

(10) Methods provided by statute or rule. Any method of authentication or identification provided by Colorado Rules of Procedure, or by statute of the State of Colorado.

To admit a recorded phone call, the proponent must establish it is an accurate recording of the call, or, if no witness with independent knowledge of the call's content can verify the accuracy, the proponent must present witness who can verify the reliability of the recording process. People v. Baca, 2015 COA 153, 378 P.3d 780.

Because the defense investigator could neither verify the accuracy of a recorded call's content nor the reliability of the recording process, the court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to admit the recording. People v. Baca, 2015 COA 153, 378 P.3d 780.

Taped telephone call by the defendant in which he identified himself to a detective was properly admitted under this rule and the court correctly determined that the recorded call was not included in prosecution's stipulation that it did not intend to introduce any statements by the defendant. People v. Czemerynski, 786 P.2d 1100 (Colo. 1990).

Mere fact that a document is authentic does not mean the document is admissible as competent evidence if the document constitutes otherwise inadmissible hearsay. People v. Morise, 859 P.2d 247 (Colo. App. 1993).

Trial court abused its discretion in allowing expert's testimony respecting the results of her tests because the items tested by the expert were not introduced and because the expert did not describe how the items she tested were marked. Thus there was no proper evidence establishing that the tested items came from either defendant or the victim, save for the expert's unexplained conclusory statements. People v. Valencia, 257 P.3d 1203 (Colo. App. 2011).

This rule merely establishes the requirements for admitting an item of physical evidence. However, even if the item itself is not admissible under this rule, the proponent may use other methods of proof to identify the item. People ex rel. J.G., 97 P.3d 300 (Colo. App. 2004).

Testimony identifying items sufficient for admission. Testimony by the investigating officer identifying items seized at the scene of a crime is sufficient basis to support the admission of such items into evidence, even if the officer did not initial or mark the item when it was seized, if at trial the officer identifies the exhibit as appearing to be the same, or to look like, the evidence found at the scene. People v. Beltran, 634 P.2d 1003 (Colo. App. 1981).

Physical evidence is authenticated if evidence supports a finding the item is what its proponent claims. This can be satisfied by testimony the evidence is what it is claimed to be. People v. Grace, 55 P.3d 165 (Colo. App. 2001).

If a reasonable jury could decide that physical evidence is what its proponent claims it to be, trial court should allow the evidence to be presented to the jury. Any question as to the authenticity of the evidence is properly decided by the jury. People v. Crespi, 155 P.3d 570 (Colo. App. 2006).

Satisfaction of authentication or identification as condition precedent to admissibility satisfied by evidence sufficient to support a finding that the matter in question is what its proponent claims. Testimony of a witness with knowledge that a matter is what it is claimed to be conforms to the requirements of this rule. People v. Esch, 786 P.2d 462 (Colo. App. 1989); People v. Lesslie, 939 P.2d 443 (Colo. App. 1996).

Properly authenticated text messages are admissible as evidence. People v. Heisler, 2017 COA 58, __ P.3d __.

Authentication of text messages has two components. First, a witness with personal knowledge must testify that printouts of text messages accurately reflect the content of the messages. Second, a witness with personal knowledge must provide testimony establishing the identity of the purported sender of the text messages. Identity may be established through a combination of at least two of the following: (1) the phone number was assigned to or associated with the purported sender; (2) the substance of the text messages was recognizable as being from the purported sender; (3) the purported sender responded to an exchange in such a way as to indicate circumstantially that he or she was in fact the author of the communication; or (4) any other corroborative evidence under the circumstances. People v. Heisler, 2017 COA 58, __ P.3d __.

There are two separate showings to authenticate printouts of Facebook communications to and from a defendant: (1) The records were those of Facebook, and (2) the communications recorded therein were made by the defendant. The first showing is analogous to authenticating phone records or emails. The second showing to corroborate evidence of authorship is necessary because a profile may be fictitious or accessed by another person other than the profile owner. People v. Glover, 2015 COA 16, 363 P.3d 736.

Based on testimony related to the defendant's profile and the absence of evidence that anyone other than defendant ever used his account, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by permitting the jury to conclude that a Facebook account belonged to defendant and he sent the messages contained in the printouts. People v. Glover, 2015 COA 16, 363 P.3d 736.

Authentication was satisfied when prosecution stated that it intended to use video animation to show the types of injuries generated by shaking a baby and that, because prosecution's expert would testify regarding the types of injuries discussed in the video, such video would assist the jury. People v. Cauley, 32 P.3d 602 (Colo. App. 2001).

Record of defendant's conviction of forgery maintained by the Kansas bureau of investigation was admissible as a public record under section (b)(7). People v. Deskins, 904 P.2d 1358 (Colo. App. 1995), aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds, 927 P.2d 368 (Colo. 1996).

Sheriff's office booking reports containing certification and signature of custodian of records were admissible as public records under section (b)(7). People v. Warrick, 284 P.3d 139 (Colo. App. 2011).

Although section (b)(9) may be used to authenticate computer records, there is no requirement that computer records be authenticated only in this way. People v. Huehn, 53 P.3d 733 (Colo. App. 2002).

Administrative law judge (ALJ) did not abuse his discretion by admitting documentary evidence under section (b)(1). Based upon witness testimony, ALJ committed no abuse of discretion in admitting record of request for purchase of political time and an agreement form for non-candidate issue advertisements as having been sufficiently authenticated under section (b)(1). As to admissibility of affidavit of performance used to indicate dates, airtimes, and the district in which the advertisements were broadcast, ALJ correctly held that political committee's agent would not have authorized payment of invoices if he doubted advertisements aired during relevant time period and in relevant legislative district. There was no need to further authenticate affidavit of performance because agent's conduct manifested ''belief in its truth'' under C.R.E. 801(d)(2)(B). Collectively, these documents support ALJ's findings that during relevant time period political committee arranged to broadcast television advertisements opposing legislative candidate to voters in candidate's district. Colo. Citizens for Ethics in Gov't v. Comm. for the Am. Dream, 187 P.3d 1207 (Colo. App. 2008).

E-mails may be authenticated through testimony explaining that they are what they purport to be or through consideration of distinctive characteristics shown by an examination of their contents and substance in light of the circumstances of the case. People v. Bernard, 2013 COA 79, 305 P.3d 433.

Applied in People v. Fueston, 717 P.2d 978 (Colo. App. 1985), aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds, 749 P.2d 952 (Colo. 1988); People v. Gilmore, 97 P.3d 123 (Colo. App. 2003).

Rule 902. Self-Authentication

Extrinsic evidence of authenticity as a condition precedent to admissibility is not required with respect to the following:

(1) Domestic public documents under seal. A document bearing a seal purporting to be that of the United States, or of any State, district, Commonwealth, territory, or insular possession thereof, or the Panama Canal Zone, or the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, or of a political subdivision, department, officer or agency thereof, and a signature purporting to be an attestation or execution.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

(2) Domestic public documents not under seal. A document purporting to bear the signature in his official capacity of an officer or employee of any entity included in paragraph (1) hereof, having no seal, if a public officer having a seal and having official duties in the district or political subdivision of the officer or employee certifies under seal that the signer has the official capacity and that the signature is genuine.
(Federal Rule Identical.)

(3) Foreign public documents. A document purporting to be executed or attested in his official capacity by a person authorized by the laws of a foreign country to make the execution or attestation, and accompanied by a final certification as to the genuineness of signature and official position (A) of the executing or attesting person, or (B) of any foreign official whose certificate of genuineness of signature and official position relates to the execution or attestation or is in a chain of certificates of genuineness of signature and official position relating to the execution or attestation. A final certification may be made by a secretary of embassy or legation, consul general, consul, vice consul, or consular agent of the United States, or a diplomatic or consular official of the foreign country assigned or accredited to the United States. If reasonable opportunity has been given to all parties to investigate the authenticity and accuracy of official documents, the court may, for good cause shown, order that they be treated as presumptively authentic without final certification or permit them to be evidenced by an attested summary with or without final certification.
(Federal Rule Identical.)

(4) Certified copies of public records. A copy of an official record or report or entry therein, or of a document authorized by law to be recorded or filed and actually recorded or filed in a public office, including data compilations in any form, certified as correct by the custodian or other person authorized to make the certification, by certificate complying with paragraph (1), (2), or (3) of this rule or complying with any Federal or Colorado Rule of Procedure, or with any Act of the United States Congress, or any statute of the State of Colorado.

(5) Official publications. Books, pamphlets, or other publications purporting to be issued by public authority.
(Federal Rule Identical.)

(6) Newspapers and periodicals. Printed materials purporting to be newspapers or periodicals.
(Federal Rule Identical.)

(7) Trade inscriptions and the like. Inscriptions, signs, tags, or labels purporting to have been affixed in the course of business and indicating ownership, control, or origin.
(Federal Rule Identical.)

(8) Acknowledged documents. Documents accompanied by a certificate of acknowledgment executed in the manner provided by law by a notary public or other officer authorized by law to take acknowledgments.
(Federal Rule Identical.)

(9) Commercial paper and related documents. Commercial paper, signatures thereon, and documents relating thereto to the extent provided by general commercial law.
(Federal Rule Identical.)

(10) Presumptions under legislative Act. Any signature, document, or other matter declared by Act of the Congress of the United States, or by any statute of the State of Colorado to be presumptively or prima facie genuine or authentic.

(11) Certified domestic records of regularly conducted activity. The original or a duplicate of a domestic record of regularly conducted activity that would be admissible under Rule 803(6) if accompanied by an affidavit of its custodian or other qualified person, in a manner complying with any Colorado statute or rule prescribed by the Colorado Supreme Court, certifying that the record—

(a) was made at or near the time of the occurrence of the matters set forth by, or from information transmitted by, a person with knowledge of those matters;

(b) was kept in the course of the regularly conducted activity; and

(c) was made by the regularly conducted activity as a regular practice.

A party intending to offer a record into evidence under this paragraph must provide written notice of that intention to all adverse parties, and must make the record and affidavit available for inspection sufficiently in advance of their offer into evidence to provide an adverse party with a fair opportunity to challenge them.

(12) Certified foreign records of regularly conducted activity. In a civil case, the original or a duplicate of a foreign record of regularly conducted activity that would be admissible under Rule 803(6) if accompanied by a written declaration by its custodian or other qualified person certifying that the record—

(a) was made at or near the time of the occurrence of the matters set forth by, or from information transmitted by, a person with knowledge of those matters;

(b) was kept in the course of the regularly conducted activity; and

(c) was made by the regularly conducted activity as a regular practice.

The declaration must be signed in a manner that, if falsely made, would subject the maker to criminal penalty under the laws of the country where the declaration is signed. A party intending to offer a record into evidence under this paragraph must provide written notice of that intention to all adverse parties, and must make the record and declaration available for inspection sufficiently in advance of their offer into evidence to provide an adverse party with a fair opportunity to challenge them.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, ''Authentication'', see 25 Colo. Law. 55 (Sept. 1996).

Out-of-state affidavit acknowledged by notary. An out-of-state affidavit of indigency, once sworn before and acknowledged by a notary, requires no further evidence of authenticity as a condition precedent to its admissibility. Otani v. District Court, 662 P.2d 1088 (Colo. 1983).

An administrative rule that does not satisfy the public notice requirements of § 24-4-103 may not be introduced as evidence in criminal proceedings. People v. More, 668 P.2d 968 (Colo. App. 1983).

Certified copies of public records provide sufficient authentication for purposes of proof under the habitual criminal statute. People v. Johnson, 699 P.2d 5 (Colo. App. 1984); People v. Shepherd, 43 P.3d 693 (Colo. App. 2001).

This rule does not require that each and every signature contained within an otherwise properly authenticated set of public documents be certified or embossed with a seal. People v. Martinez, 51 P.3d 1029 (Colo. App. 2001), aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds, 69 P.3d 1029 (Colo. 2003).

Promissory note is self-authenticating when produced in a suit to collect deficiency and constitutes prima facie evidence of nonpayment unless the defendant establishes a defense. Smith v. Weindrop, 833 P.2d 856 (Colo. App. 1992).

Certification in accordance with this rule makes the document self-authenticating and eliminates the need that a copy of the record be authenticated by testimony. People v. Vasquez, 155 P.3d 588 (Colo. App. 2006).

Interrogatory response and report of subcontractor's employee on city's ventilation system in city's action against contractor and subcontractor was self-authenticating and required no further evidence of authenticity as a condition precedent to its admissibility. Interrogatory response was a document accompanied by certificate of acknowledgment executed as provided by law by notary public or other officer authorized to take acknowledgments. City of Westminster v. MOA, Inc., 867 P.2d 137 (Colo. App. 1993).

Record of defendant's conviction of forgery maintained by the Kansas bureau of investigation that bore the state seal was not self-authenticating because it did not contain a signature purporting to be an attestation or execution as required by subsection (1). People v. Deskins, 904 P.2d 1358 (Colo. App. 1995), aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds, 927 P.2d 368 (Colo. 1996).

Facebook printouts are not a self-authenticating business record because there was no evidence presented that Facebook substantially relies for any business purpose on information contained in its users' profiles and communications. People v. Glover, 2015 COA 16, 363 P.3d 736.

Applied in People v. Wiedemer, 641 P.2d 289 (Colo. App. 1981); People v. Jenkins, 717 P.2d 994 (Colo. App. 1985).

Rule 903. Subscribing Witness' Testimony Unnecessary

The testimony of a subscribing witness is not necessary to authenticate a writing unless required by the laws of the jurisdiction whose laws govern the validity of the writing.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

COMMITTEE COMMENT

The Committee finds that the Federal rules in this area are for the most part an accurate representation of Colorado case law, statutes, and the Rules of Procedure. The Committee opinion is that the rules as adopted provide a more flexible guide to evidentiary problems relating to authentication and identification and thereby avoid the necessity of the search for a ''case in point.'' The rules would cover a number of cases and situations arising in trial, not currently reported in case law.

ARTICLE X
CONTENTS OF WRITINGS, RECORDINGS AND PHOTOGRAPHS

Rule 1001. Definitions

For purposes of this article the following definitions are applicable:

(1) Writings and recordings. ''Writings'' and ''recordings'' consist of letters, words, or numbers, or their equivalent, set down by handwriting, typewriting, printing, photostating, photographing, magnetic impulse, mechanical or electronic recording, or other form of data compilation.

(2) Photographs. ''Photographs'' include still photographs, X-ray films, video tapes, and motion pictures.

(3) Original. An ''original'' of a writing or recording is the writing or recording itself or any counterpart intended to have the same effect by a person executing or issuing it. An ''original'' of a photograph includes the negative or any print therefrom. If data are stored in a computer or similar device, any printout or other output readable by sight, shown to reflect the data accurately, is an ''original''.

(4) Duplicate. A ''duplicate'' is a counterpart produced by the same impression as the original, or from the same matrix, or by means of photography, including enlargements and miniatures, or by mechanical or electronic re-recording, or by chemical reproduction, or by other equivalent techniques which accurately reproduce the original.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, ''Admissibility of Imaging Systems'', see 25 Colo. Law. 61 (September 1996).

Accurate transcriptions of sound recordings are admissible to assist the jury in following the recordings while they are played. People v. Gable, 647 P.2d 246 (Colo. App. 1982).

Ordinarily, photographs are admissible to depict graphically anything a witness may describe in words, provided that the prejudicial effect of the photographs does not far outweigh their probative value. People v. Roark, 643 P.2d 756 (Colo. 1982).

Photographs may be introduced to show any matter which a witness could describe in words, including the appearance of the victim. People v. Mattas, 645 P.2d 254 (Colo. 1982).

Trial court has broad discretion in determining the admissibility of photographs. People v. Crespin, 631 P.2d 1144 (Colo. App.

1981).

Court's ruling not disturbed, absent abuse. Unless an abuse of discretion is shown, the trial court's ruling on the admissibility of photographs into evidence will not be disturbed on review. People in Interest of R.G., 630 P.2d 89 (Colo. App. 1981).

Trial judge to weigh inflammatory effect of photographs against value. When photographs are determined to have probative value, the trial judge's task is to determine whether their potential inflammatory effect far outweighs that value. The trial judge's determination will not be disturbed on review absent an abuse of discretion. People v. Dillon, 633 P.2d 504 (Colo. App. 1981); People v. Loscutoff, 661 P.2d 274 (Colo. 1983).

The admissibility of photographs into evidence in a homicide prosecution is a matter within the discretion of a trial judge, who must weigh the probative value against the potential inflammatory effect on the jury. People in Interest of R.G., 630 P.2d 89 (Colo. App. 1981); People v. Dillon, 633 P.2d 504 (Colo. App. 1981).

It is within the trial court's discretion to decide whether photographs are unnecessarily gruesome or inflammatory, and the court's decision will be reversed only upon abuse of that discretion. People v. Mattas, 645 P.2d 254 (Colo. 1982).

Photographs are not inadmissible merely because they reveal shocking details of a crime. People in Interest of R.G., 630 P.2d 89 (Colo. App. 1981).

Cumulative effect of photographs held not to incite the jurors to passion or prejudice. People v. Scherrer, 670 P.2d 18 (Colo. App. 1983).

Photocopies constitute duplicates. Fasso v. Straten, 640 P.2d 272 (Colo. App. 1982).

Carbon copies are duplicate originals. Equico Lessors, Inc. v. Tak's Automotive Serv., 680 P.2d 854 (Colo. App. 1984).

Photographs may be introduced which graphically portray the scene of the crime, appearance of the victim, and other facts which are competent for a witness to describe in words. In determining which photographs should be admitted, the trial court must exercise its discretion and weight the probative value of the evidence against its inflammatory effect. People v. Zekany, 833 P.2d 774 (Colo. App. 1991).

Applied in People v. Weese, 753 P.2d 778 (Colo. App. 1987).

Rule 1002. Requirement of Original

To prove the content of a writing, recording, or photograph, the original writing, recording, or photograph is required, except as otherwise provided in these rules or by statute of the State of Colorado or of the United States.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, ''Lights, Camera, Action—Video Will Executions'', see 42 Colo. Law. 45 (Jan. 2013).

Where disputed evidence is both a chattel and a writing, trial court has wide discretion in determining whether to require production of the original. In exercising this discretion, the trial court should consider the complexity of the writing, the danger of mistransmission of its contents, the difficulty of producing the original, and whether a bona fide dispute exists as to its contents. People v. Wortham, 690 P.2d 876 (Colo. App. 1984).

Summary evidence admissible under C.R.E. 1006 is not objectionable on the ground that it violates the best evidence rule. If proper foundation has been established, questions concerning the authenticity of the evidence or the credibility of the testimony go to the weight of the evidence, not its admissibility. Airborne, Inc. v. Denver Air Ctr., Inc., 832 P. 2d 1086 (Colo. App. 1992).

Where original videotape was admitted, the videotape constituted best evidence and it was not plain error to allow further testimony regarding the contents of the videotape. People v. Robinson, 908 P.2d 1152 (Colo. App. 1995), aff'd on other grounds, 927 P.2d 381 (Colo. 1996).

For an online registration process that requires a registrant to enter into an exculpatory agreement, this rule does not require production of a copy of the electronically executed agreement to the exclusion of all other proof of agreement to its terms to prove registrant executed the agreement. Berenson v. USA Hockey, Inc., 2013 COA 138, 338 P.3d 379.

Applied in People v. Williams, 654 P.2d 319 (Colo. App. 1982).

Rule 1003. Admissibility of Duplicates

A duplicate is admissible to the same extent as an original unless (1) a genuine question is raised as to the authenticity of the original or (2) in the circumstances it would be unfair to admit the duplicate in lieu of the original.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

COMMITTEE COMMENT

The Committee notes the desirability of requiring, in pretrial procedures, that any genuine questions as to the authenticity of the original, or of circumstances that it would be unfair to admit the duplicate, be raised, so that the offering party may take appropriate steps under Rule 1004 to obtain the original.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, ''Admissibility of Imaging Systems'', see 25 Colo. Law. 61 (Sept. 1996). For article, ''The Admissibility of Secondary Evidence: C.R.E. 1003 and 1004'', see 31 Colo. Law. 77 (May 2002).

Duplicates admitted in lieu of originals. Where the defendants were in possession of the copies for more than eight months prior to the trial and knew at that time that the originals were in the hands of third parties, it was proper for the court to admit the duplicates in lieu of the originals. Fasso v. Straten, 640 P.2d 272 (Colo. App. 1982).

When altered duplicates admissible. If alterations in the duplicates and/or the originals of otherwise admissible documents have been made, such documents are still admissible provided a full and satisfactory explanation of such alterations is made prior to their admission. People v. Wolfe, 662 P.2d 502 (Colo. App. 1983).

If the content of a videotape has not been altered, playing the tape at real-time speed, or in an enhanced or enlarged form that does not alter the original images, is generally permissible. People v. Armijo, 179 P.3d 134 (Colo. App. 2007).

Where there is no evidence of a discrepancy between the original and the duplicate, the unsupported supposition that the original may have been altered will not prevent introduction of the duplicate. Equico Lessors, Inc. v. Tak's Automotive Serv., 680 P.2d 854 (Colo. App. 1984).

Where defendant did not object to use of photocopy, its use did not so undermine the fundamental fairness of trial as to cast serious doubt on the reliability of conviction. People v. Chavez, 764 P.2d 371 (Colo. App. 1988).

While this rule and C.R.E. 1004 may allow for admission of a duplicate will into evidence in lieu of the original, in the case of a lost or missing will, the standards specified in §15-12-402 will control whether the will can be admitted to probate. In re Estate of Perry, 33 P.3d 1235 (Colo. App. 2001).

Rule 1004. Admissibility of Other Evidence of Contents

The original is not required, and other evidence of the contents of a writing, recording, or photograph is admissible if:

(1) Originals lost or destroyed. All originals are lost or have been destroyed, unless the proponent lost or destroyed them in bad faith; or

(2) Original not obtainable. No original can be obtained by any available judicial process or procedure; or

(3) Original in possession of opponent. At a time when an original was under the control of the party against whom offered, he was put on notice, by the pleadings or otherwise, that the contents would be a subject of proof at the hearing, and he does not produce the original at the hearing; or

(4) Collateral matters. The writing, recording, or photograph is not closely related to a controlling issue.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

COMMITTEE COMMENT

Subparagraph (1) of the rule will be in lieu of Rule 43(g)(1) of the Colorado Rules of Civil Procedure; subparagraph (2) will be in lieu of Rule 43(g)(6); subparagraph (3) will be in lieu of Rule 43(g)(2). With respect to subparagraph (2), the adoption of this provision has a direct correlation with the comments appended to Rule 1003 regarding pretrial procedure. The Committee suggests that subparagraph (2) be viewed in terms of available judicial process or procedure that is reasonable in the circumstances considering time and expense. For example, the FRE Committee's Advisory Notes refer to procedure including subpoena duces tecum as an incident to the taking of a deposition in another jurisdiction. Such time and expense would often appear to be unjustified, and should in part be taken care of by the pretrial procedures recommended in comments under Rule 1003.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, ''The Admissibility of Secondary Evidence: C.R.E. 1003 and 1004'', see 31 Colo. Law. 77 (May 2002).

This rule provides that the original of a written document is not required, and other evidence of its contents is admissible if the originals have been lost or destroyed, unless the proponent lost or destroyed them in bad faith; therefore, when the proponent cannot produce the original of a written document, because of its loss or destruction, the trial court should admit secondary evidence. Rodriguez v. Schutt, 896 P.2d 881 (Colo. App. 1994), rev'd on other grounds, 914 P.2d 921 (Colo. 1996).

This rule requires exclusion of evidence only when the proponent's bad faith causes the loss or destruction of the original document. The proponent must prove, to the satisfaction of the court, the absence of bad faith. Rodriguez v. Schutt, 896 P.2d 881 (Colo. App. 1994), rev'd on other grounds, 914 P.2d 921 (Colo. 1996).

In the event the original of a document is lost, destroyed or is not obtainable, or is in the possession of the opponent, other evidence of the contents of the writing is admissible. Decker v. Browning-Ferris Indus. of Colorado, Inc., 903 P.2d 1150 (Colo. App. 1995); Murphy v. Glenn, 964 P.2d 581 (Colo. App. 1998).

Same rationale for admissibility or exclusion of evidence under this rule applies to evidence other than written documents. Rodriguez v. Schutt, 896 P.2d 881 (Colo. App. 1994), rev'd on other grounds, 914 P.2d 921 (Colo. 1996).

Court erred in not applying the exception in subsection (1) to allow evidence of indemnification contract, allegedly lost or destroyed, and such error constituted clear evidence of mistake amounting to error of law. United Cable Television of Jeffco, Inc. v. Montgomery LC, Inc., 942 P.2d 1230 (Colo. App. 1996).

While this rule and C.R.E. 1003 may allow for admission of a duplicate will into evidence in lieu of the original, in the case of a lost or missing will, the standards specified in §15-12-402 will control whether the will can be admitted to probate. In re Estate of Perry, 33 P.3d 1235 (Colo. App. 2001).

Applied in People v. Banks, 655 P.2d 1384 (Colo. App. 1982), aff'd, 696 P.2d 293 (Colo. 1985).

Rule 1005. Public Records

The contents of an official record, or of a document authorized to be recorded, or filed and actually recorded or filed, including data compilations in any form, if otherwise admissible, may be proved by copy, certified as correct in accordance with Rule 902 or testified to be correct by a witness who has compared it with the original. If a copy which complies with the foregoing cannot be obtained by the exercise of reasonable diligence, then other evidence of the contents may be given.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

COMMITTEE COMMENT

This provision is in lieu of Rule 43(g)(3) of the Colorado Rules of Civil Procedure. The Committee does not recommend any changes in the language, but this is based upon the assumption that Rule 902 would be amended to provide for certification in accordance with Colorado statute.

ANNOTATION

Certified copies of public records provide sufficient authentication for purposes of proof under the habitual criminal statute. People v. Johnson, 699 P.2d 5 (Colo. App. 1984).

Testimony of expert. Any question concerning the expert's ability to make a dependable comparison from photocopies goes to weight to be given his testimony rather than to the admissibility of the copies. People v. Weese, 753 P.2d 778 (Colo. App. 1987).

Certification in accordance with C.R.E. 902 makes the document self-authenticating and eliminates the need that a copy of the record be authenticated by testimony. People v. Vasquez, 155 P.3d 588 (Colo. App. 2006).

Rule 1006. Summaries

The contents of voluminous writings, recordings, or photographs which cannot conveniently be examined in court may be presented in the form of a chart, summary, or calculation. The originals or duplicates, shall be made available for examination or copying, or both, by other parties at reasonable time and place. The court may order that they be produced in court.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

COMMITTEE COMMENT

This rule will replace Rule 43(g)(5) of the Colorado Rules of Civil Procedure.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, ''Summaries as Evidence'', see 16 Colo. Law. 1836 (1987). For article, ''Rule 1006: Admissibility of Summary Evidence'', see 22 Colo. Law. 35 (1993).

The most important considerations in determining whether summary charts are admissible are whether the summaries are sufficiently accurate and nonprejudicial and whether they would be helpful to the jury. Murray v. Just In Case Bus. Lighthouse, 2016 CO 47M, 374 P.3d 443.

Trial courts abuse their discretion when they admit summary charts that characterize evidence in an argumentative fashion rather than simply organize it in a manner helpful to the trier of fact. Murray v. Just In Case Bus. Lighthouse, 2016 CO 47M, 374 P.3d 443.

Failure by a party to seek discovery of underlying materials does not affect his right to examine and inspect the documents or records from which the summary is prepared. Int'l Tech. Instruments v. Eng'g Measurements, Inc., 678 P.2d 558 (Colo. App. 1983); People v. McDonald, 15 P.3d 788 (Colo. App. 2000).

This rule does not require that the records be delivered to the opposing party, provided the records are made available at a reasonable time and place. People v. McDonald, 15 P.3d 788 (Colo. App. 2000).

Prosecution's use of summary records pursuant to this rule requires the prosecution to be responsible for the cost of redacting confidential information in the underlying voluminous records so that the records can be available for examination and copying by the defendant. People v. McDonald, 15 P.3d 788 (Colo. App. 2000).

Summary evidence does not violate "best evidence" rule. Metro Nat. Bank v. Parker, 773 P.2d 633 (Colo. App. 1989); Airborne, Inc. v. Denver Air Ctr., Inc., 832 P.2d 1086 (Colo. App. 1992).

Evidence admissible under this rule not objectionable on ground that it violates the "best evidence rule". If proper foundation has been established, questions concerning the authenticity of the evidence or the credibility of the testimony go to the weight of the evidence, not the admissibility. Airborne, Inc. v. Denver Air Ctr., Inc., 832 P.2d 1086 (Colo. App. 1992).

Rule requires prosecution to be responsible for redacting patient names so underlying hospital records could be available for examination and copying by the defendant. Here, prosecution did not cause redaction to be done so records could be examined by defendant. Accordingly, trial court erred in placing that burden on the defendant. People v. McDonald, 15 P.3d 788 (Colo. App. 2000).

By permitting the admission of summaries into evidence, rule relieves the proponent of voluminous evidence from the burden of introducing each part of the voluminous record. However, in order to utilize this rule, the proponent must provide the opposing party an opportunity to examine the records from which the summaries were taken. If the content of records is such that an opposing party cannot examine them, the records cannot be said to be available. Therefore, if the records can be examined only after redaction of certain portions, then the proponent must be responsible for that process. This is part of the proponent's burden of making the records available to the opposing party. People v. McDonald, 15 P.3d 788 (Colo. App. 2000).

Trial court properly admitted summary chart that organized relevant facts chronologically but abused its discretion in admitting chart that included argument. Murray v. Just In Case Bus. Lighthouse, 2016 CO 47M, 374 P.3d 443.

Applied in Airborne, Inc. v. Denver Air Ctr., Inc., 832 P.2d 1086 (Colo. App. 1992).

Rule 1007. Testimony or Written Admission of Party

Contents of writings, recordings, or photographs may be proved by the testimony or deposition of the party against whom offered or by his written admission, without accounting for the nonproduction of the original.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

Rule 1008. Functions of Court and Jury

When the admissibility of other evidence of contents of writings, recordings, or photographs under these rules depends upon the fulfillment of a condition of fact, the question whether the condition has been fulfilled is ordinarily for the court to determine in accordance with the provisions of Rule 104. However, when an issue is raised (a) whether the asserted writing ever existed, or (b) whether another writing, recording, or photograph produced at the trial is the original, or (c) whether other evidence of contents correctly reflects the contents, the issue is for the trier of fact to determine as in the case of other issues of fact.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

ARTICLE XI
MISCELLANEOUS RULES

Rule 1101. Applicability of Rules

(a) Courts. These rules apply to all courts in the State of Colorado.

(b) Proceedings generally. These rules apply generally to civil actions, to criminal proceedings, and to contempt proceedings, except those in which the court may act summarily.

(c) Rule of privilege. The rule with respect to privileges applies at all stages of all actions, cases, and proceedings.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

(d) Rules inapplicable. The rules (other than with respect to privileges) do not apply in the following situations:

(1) Preliminary questions of fact. The determination of questions of fact preliminary to admissibility of evidence when the issue is to be determined by the court under Rule 104.

(2) Grand jury. Proceedings before grand juries.

(3) Miscellaneous proceedings. Proceedings for extradition or rendition; preliminary examinations in criminal cases; sentencing, or granting or revoking probation; issuance of warrants for arrest, criminal summonses, and search warrants; and proceedings with respect to release on bail or otherwise.

(Federal Rule Identical.)

(e) Rules applicable in part. In any special statutory proceedings, these rules apply to the extent that matters of evidence are not provided for in the statutes which govern procedure therein.

Editor's note: The Colorado Rules of Evidence do not apply to hearings under the Colorado Rules for Traffic Infractions. See Rule 11, C.R.T.I.

COMMITTEE COMMENT

The Colorado rule is culled from Rule 81 of the Colorado Rules of Civil Procedure and Rule 1101(e) of the Federal Rules of Evidence.

ANNOTATION

Grand jury or preliminary hearing. Hearsay, and other evidence which would be incompetent if offered at trial, is admissible and may well be the bulk of evidence offered to the grand jury or at the preliminary hearing. People v. Gable, 647 P.2d 246 (Colo. App. 1982); People v. Buhrle, 744 P.2d 747 (Colo. 1987).

The rules of evidence do not apply to a restitution hearing because restitution is part of the sentencing proceeding, not part of the trial. People v. Vasseur, 2016 COA 107, 409 P.3d 516.

Applied in Sherman v. District Court, 637 P.2d 378 (Colo. 1981); People v. Bowers, 801 P.2d 511 (Colo. 1990).

CHAPTER 34

The Colorado Rules for Reapportionment Commission Proceedings

---

Adopted by the

SUPREME COURT OF COLORADO

Effective October 22, 1981

CHAPTER 34

RULES FOR REAPPORTIONMENT COMMISSION PROCEEDINGS

1. These rules are adopted by the Supreme Court of Colorado pursuant to Article V, Section 48(1)(e) of the Colorado Constitution and apply to the revision and alteration of legislative districts after the federal census of 2010.

2. Upon submission of the Reapportionment Commission's plan for reapportionment of the members of the General Assembly to the Supreme Court, the review and determination of the plan's compliance with the requirements of Article V, Sections 46 and 47 of the Colorado Constitution shall take precedence over all regular docket matters before the Court.

3. No later than October 7, 2011, the Commission shall file the plan with the Court. The plan shall include a comprehensive map or maps of the proposed senatorial and representative districts, together with any statements describing the proposed plan and its implementation.

4. On or before ten (10) days following the Commission's filing of the plan to the Court, the Commission, and any other proponent of the submitted plan, shall file with the Court appropriate explanatory materials and legal memoranda in support of the plan.

5. Any opponent to the plan filed by the Commission may file a statement of opposition, a proposed alternate plan or plans, appropriate maps, and comprehensive explanatory, descriptive, and legal memoranda. Such materials shall be filed with the Court on or before 20 calendar days following the Commission's filing of the plan to the Court.

6. The Commission and any proponent shall have up to and including five (5) calendar days from the filing of any statement of opposition, to file with the Court a reply to such statement of opposition, if the Commission or proponent so desires.

7. The Court may request supplementary materials or legal memoranda from the Commission or any party appearing before the Court in this matter to be furnished within ten (10) days of the request.

8. The Court may require oral argument upon any issue raised by the Commission, other proponents, or opponents. Notice of the time and date of any oral argument and the procedures to be followed shall be mailed to the Commission and other parties.

9. The final submission of legal arguments or evidence concerning the plan shall be filed no later than November 9, 2011.

10. The Court may approve the plan without giving written reasons for such approval, but the Court shall give its reasons in writing for disapproval of the plan. If the plan is returned to the Commission, the Court shall specify to the Commission the time period in which the Commission shall revise and modify the plan to conform to the Court's requirements and to resubmit the plan to the Court. Petitions for rehearing must be filed within five (5) days of the announcement of any decision.

11. The Court shall approve a plan for the redrawing of the districts by a date that will allow sufficient time for such plan to be filed with the secretary of state but no later than December 14, 2011. The Court shall order that such plan be filed with secretary of state no later than such date.

12. An original and nine (9) copies of all materials and pleadings shall be filed with the Court. In addition, and where possible, an electronic version of all materials and pleadings shall be submitted to the Court in text searchable Portable Document Format (PDF), that exactly duplicates the appearance of the paper original, including the order and pagination of all the components.

13. All periods of time prescribed or allowed by this rule shall be computed in accordance with C.A.R. 26(a), except that intermediate Saturdays, Sundays and legal holidays shall be included in the computation. Regardless of the provisions of C.A.R. 25(a) to the contrary, filing under this rule may be accomplished by mail addressed to the clerk, but filing shall not be timely unless the papers are received by the clerk within the time fixed for filing, with no exceptions.

14. The Court shall provide notice of all filings with the Court by posting such filings on the Colorado Judicial website: http://www.courts.state.co.us/

15. These rules are effective upon adoption.

Source: 1, 3, 4, and 5 amended and adopted June 21, 2001, effective July 1, 2001; entire chapter amended and effective June 2, 2011.

ANNOTATION

Role of supreme court in review proceeding is a narrow one: To measure the proposed reapportionment plan against the constitutional standards. In re Reapportionment of Colo. Gen. Ass'y, 647 P.2d 191 (Colo. 1982); In re Reapportionment of Colo. Gen. Ass'y, 647 P.2d 209 (Colo. 1982).

Court's review proceedinging is meant to be swift and limited in scope so that elections from the new districts may proceed on schedule. In re Reapportionment of Colo. Gen. Ass'y, 647 P.2d 191 (Colo. 1982).

Choice among plans for commission, not court. The choice among alternative plans, each consistent with constitutional requirements, is for the reapportionment commission and not the supreme court. In re Reapportionment of Colo. Gen. Ass'y, 647 P.2d 191 (Colo. 1982); In re Reapportionment of Colo. Gen. Ass'y, 647 P.2d 209 (Colo. 1982).

Political considerations may not outweigh constitutional criteria. Although reapportionment is not without political considerations, these considerations are not among the constitutional criteria, and the commission may not allow them to outweigh the constitutional criteria. In re Reapportionment of Colo. Gen. Ass'y, 647 P.2d 209 (Colo. 1982).

While it is not improper for the reapportionment commission to attempt to resolve political conflicts engendered by the supreme court's disapproval of the original plan, problems created by partisan politics cannot justify an apportionment which does not otherwise pass constitutional muster. In re Reapportionment of Colo. Gen. Ass'y, 647 P.2d 209 (Colo. 1982).

Plan held unconstitutional. Where a reapportionment plan's districts are not as compact as possible, nor does the plan preserve communities of interest wherever possible, it violates the clear constitutional criteria of sections 47(1) and (3) of art. V, Colo. Const. In re Reapportionment of Colo. Gen. Ass'y, 647 P.2d 209 (Colo. 1982).

CHAPTER 35

The Colorado Rules for Magistrates

Amended and Adopted by the

SUPREME COURT OF COLORADO

September 30, 1999,

Effective January 1, 2000

ANALYSIS BY RULE

CHAPTER 35

COLORADO RULES FOR MAGISTRATES

Editor's note: Amendments made to the Colorado Rules for Referees, effective January 1, 1989, resulted in renumbering and retitling for rules 4 through 12. Amendments to these rules, effective September 12, 1991, resulted in retitling of chapter and retitling of rules 5 through 10 and rule 13.

Rule 1. Scope and Purpose

These rules are designed to govern the selection, assignment and conduct of magistrates in civil and criminal proceedings in the Colorado court system. Although magistrates may perform functions which judges also perform, a magistrate at all times is subject to the direction and supervision of the chief judge or presiding judge.

Source: Entire chapter amended June 16, 1988, effective January 1, 1989; entire rule amended and effective September 12, 1991; entire chapter amended September 30, 1999, effective January 1, 2000.

ANNOTATION

Magistrates exercise authority only at the discretion of the judges who appoint them. Therefore no impropriety in the provision of a court memorandum prohibiting magistrates from conducting bond hearings. Wiegand v. Larimer County Court Magistrate, 937 P.2d 880 (Colo. App. 1996).

Rule 2. Application

These rules apply to all proceedings conducted by magistrates in district courts, county courts, small claims courts, Denver Juvenile Court and Denver Probate Court, as authorized by law, except for proceedings conducted by water referees, as defined in Title 37, Article 92, C.R.S., and proceedings conducted by masters governed by C.R.C.P. 53.

Source: Entire chapter amended June 16, 1988, effective January 1, 1989; entire rule amended and effective September 12, 1991; entire chapter amended September 30, 1999, effective January 1, 2000.

ANNOTATION

When magistrates act in probate matters. The powers of magistrates and appellate review of their orders are governed, in the first instance, by these rules. When magistrates are acting in probate matters, their powers are additionally controlled by the Colorado Rules of Probate Procedure. Estate of Jordan v. Estate of Jordan, 899 P.2d 350 (Colo. App. 1995).

When magistrates act in juvenile matters. The procedural powers of a juvenile court after reviewing a juvenile magistrate's findings are governed by these rules and by relevant provisions of the Children's Code. People in Interest of R.A., 937 P.2d 731 (Colo. 1997).

Rule 3. Definitions

The following definitions shall apply:

(a) Magistrate: Any person other than a judge authorized by statute or by these rules to enter orders or judgments in judicial proceedings.

(b) Chief Judge: The chief judge of a judicial district.

(c) Presiding Judge: The presiding judge of the Denver Juvenile Court, the Denver Probate Court, or the Denver County Court.

(d) Reviewing Judge: A judge designated by a chief judge or a presiding judge to review the orders or judgments of magistrates in proceedings to which the Rules for Magistrates apply.

(e) Order or Judgment: All rulings, decrees or other decisions of a judge or a magistrate made in the course of judicial proceedings.

(f) Consent:

(1) Consent in District Court:

(A) For the purposes of the rules, where consent is necessary a party is deemed to have consented to a proceeding before a magistrate if:

(i) The party has affirmatively consented in writing or on the record; or

(ii) The party has been provided notice of the referral, setting, or hearing of a proceeding before a magistrate and failed to file a written objection within 14 days of such notice; or

(iii) The party failed to appear at a proceeding after having been provided notice of that proceeding.

(B) Once given, a party's consent to a magistrate in a proceeding may not be withdrawn.

(2) Consent in County Court:

(A) When the exercise of authority by a magistrate in any proceeding is statutorily conditioned upon a waiver of a party pursuant to C.R.S. section 13-6-501, such waiver shall be executed in writing or given orally in open court by the party or the party's attorney of record, and shall state specifically that the party has waived the right to proceed before a judge and shall be filed with the court.

(B) Once given, a party's consent to a magistrate in a proceeding may not be withdrawn.

(3) Consent in Small Claims Court:

(A) A party will be deemed to accept the jurisdiction of the Small Claims Court unless the party objects pursuant to C.R.S. section 13-6-405 and C.R.C.P. 511(b).

(B) Once given, a party's consent to a magistrate in a proceeding may not be withdrawn.

Rule 4. Qualifications, Appointment, Evaluation and Discipline

The following rules shall apply to all magistrates and proceedings before magistrates:

(a) To be appointed, a magistrate must be a licensed Colorado attorney with at least five years of experience, except in Class ''C'' or ''D'' counties the chief judge shall have the discretion to appoint a qualified licensed attorney with less than 5 years experience to perform all magistrate functions.

(b) All magistrates shall be attorneys-at-law licensed to practice law in the State of Colorado, except that in the following circumstances a magistrate need not be an attorney:

(1) A magistrate appointed to hear only Class A and Class B traffic infractions in a county court;

(2) A county court judge authorized to act as a magistrate in a small claims court;

(3) A county court judge authorized to act as a county court magistrate.

(c) All magistrates shall be appointed, evaluated, retained, discharged, and disciplined, if necessary, by the chief or presiding judge of the district, with the concurrence of the chief justice.

(d) Any person appointed pursuant to these rules as a district court, county court, probate court, juvenile court, or small claims court magistrate may, if qualified, and in the discretion of the chief or presiding judge, exercise any of the magistrate functions authorized by these rules.

Source: Entire chapter amended June 16, 1988, effective January 1, 1989; entire rule amended and effective September 12, 1991; entire chapter amended September 30, 1999, effective January 1, 2000.

Rule 5. General Provisions

(a) An order or judgment of a magistrate in any judicial proceeding shall be effective upon the date of the order or judgment and shall remain in effect pending review by a reviewing judge unless stayed by the magistrate or by the reviewing judge. Except for correction of clerical errors pursuant to C.R.C.P. 60(a), a magistrate has no authority to consider a petition for rehearing.

(b) A magistrate may issue citations for contempt, conduct contempt proceedings, and enter orders for contempt for conduct occurring either in the presence or out of the presence of the magistrate, in any civil or criminal matter, without consent. Any order of a magistrate finding a person in contempt shall upon request be reviewed in accordance with the procedures for review set forth in rule 7 or rule 9 herein.

(c) A magistrate shall have the power to issue bench warrants for the arrest of non-appearing persons, to set bonds in connection therewith, and to conduct bond forfeiture proceedings.

(d) A magistrate shall have the power to administer oaths and affirmations to witnesses and others concerning any matter, thing, process, or proceeding, which is pending, commenced, or to be commenced before the magistrate.

(e) A magistrate shall have the power to issue all writs and orders necessary for the exercise of their jurisdiction established by statute or rule, and as provided in section 13-1-115, C.R.S.

(f) No magistrate shall have the power to decide whether a state constitutional provision, statute, municipal charter provision, or ordinance is constitutional either on its face or as applied. Questions pertaining to the constitutionality of a state constitutional provision, statute, municipal charter provision, or ordinance may, however, be raised for the first time on review of the magistrate's order or judgment.

(g) For any proceeding in which a district court magistrate may perform a function only with consent under C.R.M. 6, the notice — which must be written except to the extent given orally to parties who are present in court — shall state that all parties must consent to the function being performed by the magistrate.

(1) If the notice is given in open court, then all parties who are present and do not then object shall be deemed to have consented to the function being performed by the magistrate.

(2) Any party who is not present when the notice is given and who fails to file a written objection within 7 days of the date of written notice shall be deemed to have consented.

(h) All magistrates in the performance of their duties shall conduct themselves in accord with the provisions of the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct. Any complaint alleging that a magistrate, who is an attorney, has violated the provisions of the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct may be filed with the Office of Attorney Regulation Counsel for proceedings pursuant to C.R.C.P. 251.1, et seq. Such proceedings shall be conducted to determine whether any violation of the Code of Judicial Conduct has occurred and what discipline, if any, is appropriate. These proceedings shall in no way affect the supervision of the Chief Judge over magistrates as provided in C.R.M. 1.

Rule 6. Functions of District Court Magistrates

(a) Functions in Criminal Cases: A district court magistrate may perform any or all of the following functions in criminal proceedings:

(1) No consent necessary:

(A) Conduct initial appearance proceedings, including advisement of rights, admission to bail, and imposition of conditions of release pending further proceedings.

(B) Appoint attorneys for indigent defendants and approve attorney expense vouchers.

(C) Conduct bond review hearings.

(D) Conduct preliminary and dispositional hearings pursuant to C.R.S. sections 16-5-301(1) and 18-1-404(1).

(E) Schedule and conduct arraignments on indictments, informations, or complaints.

(F) Order presentence investigations.

(G) Set cases for disposition, trial, or sentencing before a district court judge.

(H) Issue arrest and search warrants, including nontestimonial identifications under Rule 41.1.

(I) Conduct probable cause hearings pursuant to rules promulgated under the Interstate Compact for Adult Offender Supervision, C.R.S. sections 24-60-2801 to 2803.

(J) Any other function authorized by statute or rule.

(2) Consent necessary:

(A) Enter pleas of guilty.

(B) Enter deferred prosecution and deferred sentence pleas.

(C) Modify the terms and conditions of probation or deferred prosecutions and deferred sentences.

(D) Impose stipulated sentences to probation in cases assigned to problem solving courts.

(b) Functions in Matters Filed Pursuant to Colorado Revised Statutes Title 14 and Title 26:

(1) No Consent Necessary

(A) A district court magistrate shall have the power to preside over all proceedings arising under Title 14, except as described in section 6(b)(2) of this Rule.

(B) A district court magistrate shall have the power to preside over all motions to modify permanent orders concerning property division, maintenance, child support or allocation of parental responsibilities, except petitions to review as defined in C.R.M. 7.

(C) A district court magistrate shall have the power to determine an order concerning child support filed pursuant to Section 26-13-101 et seq.

(D) Any other function authorized by statute.

(2) Consent Necessary: With the consent of the parties, a district court magistrate may preside over contested hearings which result in permanent orders concerning property division, maintenance, child support or allocation of parental responsibilities.

(c) Functions in Civil Cases: A district court magistrate may perform any or all of the following functions in civil proceedings:

(1) No consent necessary

(A) Conduct settlement conferences.

(B) Conduct default hearings, enter judgments pursuant to C.R.C.P. 55, and conduct post-judgment proceedings.

(C) Conduct hearings and enter orders authorizing sale, pursuant to C.R.C.P. 120.

(D) Conduct hearings as a master pursuant to C.R.C.P. 53.

(E) Hear and rule upon all motions relating to disclosure, discovery, and all C.R.C.P. 16 and 16.1 matters.

(F) Conduct proceedings involving protection orders pursuant to C.R.S. Section 13-14-101 et seq.

(G) Any other function authorized by statute.

(2) Consent Necessary: A magistrate may perform any function in a civil case except that a magistrate may not preside over jury trials.

(d) Functions in Juvenile Cases: A juvenile court magistrate shall have all of the powers and be subject to the limitations prescribed for juvenile court magistrates by the provisions of Title 19, Article 1, C.R.S. Unless otherwise set forth in Title 19, Article 1, C.R.S., consent in any juvenile matter shall be as set forth in C.R.M. 3(f)(1).

(e) Functions in Probate and Mental Health Cases:

(1) No consent necessary:

(A) Perform any or all of the duties which may be delegated to or performed by a probate registrar, magistrate, or clerk, pursuant to C.R.P.P. 4 and C.R.P.P. 5.

(B) Hear and rule upon petitions for emergency protective orders and petitions for temporary orders.

(C) Any other function authorized by statute.

(2) Consent Necessary

(A) Hear and rule upon all matters filed pursuant to C.R.S. Title 15.

(B) Hear and rule upon all matters filed pursuant to C.R.S. Title 25 and Title 27.

(f) A district court magistrate shall not perform any function for which consent is required under any provision of this Rule unless the oral or written notice complied with Rule 5(g).

For purposes of applying these rules, a motion filed in a dissolution of marriage case that seeks interpretation and clarification of a prior stipulation filed in the same case does not change the character of the action from a family law matter to a civil matter. People ex rel. Garner v. Garner, 33 P.3d 1239 (Colo. App. 2001).

Family law magistrate lacks jurisdiction to act on a motion regarding parenting time under the Uniform Dissolution of Marriage Act once decision-making responsibilities are at issue. In re Ferris, 75 P.3d 1170 (Colo. App. 2003).

Characterization of a common law marriage determination hinges on context in which the issue is raised. When the common law marriage issue is related to an effort to dissolve a marriage, it constitutes a ''family law case'', thereby implicating section (b) of this rule and § 13-5-301 (3). In re Phelps, 74 P.3d 506 (Colo. App. 2003) (decided prior to 2004 repeal of § 13-5-301).

Determination of the sequence of death is not a power that may be delegated by the probate court and exercised by a magistrate under subsection (d)(11). Estate of Jordan v. Estate of Jordan, 899 P.2d 350 (Colo. App. 1995).

Determination of the intent of the decedent is not a power that may be delegated by the probate court and exercised by a magistrate under subsection (d)(11). In re Estate of Hillebrandt, 979 P.2d 36 (Colo. App. 1999).

Section (c) of this rule allows a magistrate to conduct pre-trial discovery proceedings with the consent of the parties, but does not allow a magistrate to enter a default judgment against a party as a sanction for a discovery violation. Goderstad v. Dillon Cos., Inc., 971 P.2d 693 (Colo. App. 1998).

Subject matter jurisdiction for proceedings to determine parentage and related issues is conferred on the magistrate by § 19-1-108 (1). In re A.P.H., 98 P.3d 955 (Colo. App. 2004).

Requirement in § 19-1-108 (3)(a) that a magistrate inform the parties of their right to a hearing before a judge in the first instance is mandatory. In re R.G.B., 98 P.3d 958 (Colo. App. 2004).

Applied in Petition of Heostis v. Dept. of Educ., 2016 COA 6, 375 P.3d 1232.

Rule 7. Review of District Court Magistrate Orders or Judgments

(a) Orders or judgments entered when consent not necessary. Magistrates shall include in any order or judgment entered in a proceeding in which consent is not necessary a written notice that the order or judgment was issued in a proceeding where no consent was necessary, and that any appeal must be taken within 21 days pursuant to Rule 7(a).

(1) Unless otherwise provided by statute, this Rule is the exclusive method to obtain review of a district court magistrate's order or judgment issued in a proceeding in which consent of the parties is not necessary.

(2) The chief judge shall designate one or more district judges to review orders or judgments of district court magistrates entered when consent is not necessary.

(3) Only a final order or judgment of a magistrate is reviewable under this Rule. A final order or judgment is that which fully resolves an issue or claim.

(4) A final order or judgment is not reviewable until it is written, dated, and signed by the magistrate. A Minute Order which is signed by a magistrate will constitute a final written order or judgment.

(5) A party may obtain review of a magistrate's final order or judgment by filing a petition to review such final order or judgment with the reviewing judge no later than 14 days subsequent to the final order or judgment if the parties are present when the magistrate's order is entered, or 21 days from the date the final order or judgment is mailed or otherwise transmitted to the parties.

(6) A request for extension of time to file a petition for review must be made to the reviewing judge within the 21 day time limit within which to file a petition for review. A motion to correct clerical errors filed with the magistrate pursuant to C.R.C.P. 60(a) does not constitute a petition for review and will not operate to extend the time for filing a petition for review.

(7) A petition for review shall state with particularity the alleged errors in the magistrate's order or judgment and may be accompanied by a memorandum brief discussing the authorities relied upon to support the petition. Copies of the petition and any supporting brief shall be served on all parties by the party seeking review. Within 14 days after being served with a petition for review, a party may file a memorandum brief in opposition.

(8) The reviewing judge shall consider the petition for review on the basis of the petition and briefs filed, together with such review of the record as is necessary. The reviewing judge also may conduct further proceedings, take additional evidence, or order a trial de novo in the district court. An order entered under 6(c)(1) which effectively ends a case shall be subject to de novo review.

(9) Findings of fact made by the magistrate may not be altered unless clearly erroneous. The failure of the petitioner to file a transcript of the proceedings before the magistrate is not grounds to deny a petition for review but, under those circumstances, the reviewing judge shall presume that the record would support the magistrate's order.

(10) The reviewing judge shall adopt, reject, or modify the initial order or judgment of the magistrate by written order, which order shall be the order or judgment of the district court.

(11) Appeal of an order or judgment of a district court magistrate may not be taken to the appellate court unless a timely petition for review has been filed and decided by a reviewing court in accordance with these Rules.

(12) If timely review in the district court is not requested, the order or judgment of the magistrate shall become the order or judgment of the district court. Appeal of such district court order or judgment to the appellate court is barred.

(b) Orders or judgments entered when consent is necessary. Any order or judgment entered with consent of the parties in a proceeding in which such consent is necessary is not subject to review under Rule 7(a), but shall be appealed pursuant to the Colorado Rules of Appellate Procedure in the same manner as an order or judgment of a district court. Magistrates shall include in any order or judgment entered in a proceeding in which consent is necessary a written notice that the order or judgment was issued with consent, and that any appeal must be taken pursuant to Rule 7(b).

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, ''Family Law Magistrates: An Overview of Review and Appeal Procedures'', see 32 Colo. Law. 91 (Sept. 2003). For article, ''Appeals of County Court, Municipal Court, and Magistrate Rulings'', see 47 Colo. Law. 32 (Oct. 2018).

Section (a) of this rule, rather than former rule, applies to a motion filed after the effective date of this rule concerning 1996 child support stipulation. People ex rel. Garner v. Garner, 33 P.3d 1239 (Colo. App. 2001).

The consent distinctions in this rule relate to the ''with consent'' and ''without consent'' categories established in C.R.M. 6. Thus, review of matters that may be heard by a magistrate without consent of the parties is governed by section (a) of this rule. Conversely, review of those matters that, by rule or statute, required the consent of the parties is governed by section (b). People ex rel. Garner v. Garner, 33 P.3d 1239 (Colo. App. 2001).

Parties' consent in family law cases does not make the order subject to expedited appellate procedure prescribed in C.R.M. 7(b). In re Phelps, 74 P.3d 506 (Colo. App. 2003) (decided prior to 2004 repeal of § 13-5-301).

Characterization of a common law marriage determination hinges on context in which the issue is raised. When the common law marriage issue is related to an effort to dissolve a marriage, it constitutes a ''family law case'', thereby implicating C.R.M. 6(b) and § 13-5-301 (3). In re Phelps, 74 P.3d 506 (Colo. App. 2003) (decided prior to 2004 repeal of § 13-5-301).

A magistrate may, without the consent of the parties, act upon an inmate's in forma pauperis request and dispose of the case in accordance with its ruling thereon. Therefore, it is appropriate for such action to be governed by section (a), which sets out procedures for review of a magistrate's orders and judgments that have been entered without consent of the parties. Bryan v. Neet, 85 P.3d 556 (Colo. App. 2003).

A magistrate's order must fully resolve an issue before it may be reviewed by the district court or appealed to the court of appeals. In re Roosa, 89 P.3d 524 (Colo. App. 2004).

Failure to file motion for review with the reviewing judge justifies dismissal of appeal with prejudice. Matter of Estate of Burnford, 746 P.2d 51 (Colo. App. 1987); Estate of Jordan v. Estate of Jordan, 899 P.2d 350 (Colo. App. 1995); In re Estate of Hillebrandt, 979 P.2d 36 (Colo. App. 1999).

A party is not entitled to appellate review unless the party has first filed a timely motion for district court review of the magistrate's order. Such a motion for review must be filed within 15 days after the date of the magistrate's order. In re McCord, 910 P.2d 85 (Colo. App. 1995); In re Tonn, 53 P.3d 1185 (Colo. App. 2002); In re Moore, 107 P.3d 1150 (Colo. App. 2005).

A party must present an issue to the district court in a petition for review before that issue may be raised in the court of appeals. A party seeking review of a magistrate's decision must raise a particular issue in the district court so that the district court may have an opportunity to correct any error that may have been made by the magistrate. If a party does not raise an issue before the district court in a petition for review, but raises the issue on appeal for the first time, such party seeks to have the court of appeals correct an error that could have been corrected by the district court in a petition for review. People ex rel. K.L-P., 148 P.3d 402 (Colo. App. 2006).

A magistrate's order or judgment entered without the consent of the parties is not a decree and order to or from which an appeal lies, as envisioned in C.R.C.P. 54(a). Therefore, C.R.C.P. 59 is inapplicable to motions for review of a magistrate's order. In re Moore, 107 P.3d 1150 (Colo. App. 2005).

District court erred in denying appellant's motion for review based on the failure timely to provide a transcript. The Colorado rules for magistrates do not contain a separate section on procedure or any procedural rules specifying any time limits for filing a transcript of a hearing before a magistrate. There is no requirement that a transcript be filed at all in a review proceeding, and there is no requirement that the district court must consider a transcript, if one is provided, when reviewing a magistrate's order. In re Schmidt, 42 P.3d 81 (Colo. App. 2002).

A party seeking review of a magistrate's order shoulders the burden of providing a record justifying the rejection or modification of that order even though this rule does not require that a transcript be filed at all in a review proceeding and it provides no guidance on the procedures for filing a transcript. Absent such a record, the district court may presume that the magistrate's findings were supported by the evidence. In re Rivera, 91 P.3d 464 (Colo. App. 2004).

A magistrate has authority under § 13-5-301 to hear a C.R.C.P. 60(b)(2) motion without the consent of the parties. As a result, a district court has jurisdiction to review the motion. In re Malewicz, 60 P.3d 772 (Colo. App. 2002).

The rules governing magistrates do not authorize any motion except a motion for review. Thus, a magistrate's order issued in response to a motion for reconsideration is void. In re Roosa, 89 P.3d 524 (Colo. App. 2004).

Previous courts have concluded that a motion for reconsideration may be deemed a motion for review; therefore, a motion for extension of time to file a motion for reconsideration may also be construed to allow the late filing of a motion for review. In re Cooprider, 140 P.3d 312 (Colo. App. 2006).

When a magistrate enters an order outside the presence of the parties, the 15 days to file for review of the order begins to run on the date the order is mailed, not the date the order is made. In re Talbott, 43 P.3d 734 (Colo. App. 2002); In re Tonn, 53 P.3d 1185 (Colo. App. 2002).

In paternity action where grandmother sought to intervene for visitation rights, § 19-1-108 of the Colorado Children's Code is properly applied, not this rule, if parents have waived the right to a hearing before a judge. In re K.L.O-V., 151 P.3d 637 (Colo. App. 2006).

Magistrate has no authority to reconsider its own order, sua sponte, or to hear a motion for reconsideration made by a party. Once a magistrate has entered a written and signed order on a matter without consent, a party must file a motion for review of the magistrate's order with the district court judge. In re M.B.-M., 252 P.3d 506 (Colo. App. 2011).

Applied in Petition of Heostis v. Dept. of Educ., 2016 COA 6, 375 P.3d 1232.

Rule 8. Functions of County Court Magistrates

(a) Functions in Criminal Cases: A county court magistrate may perform any or all of the following functions in a criminal proceeding:

(1) No consent necessary:

(A) Appoint attorneys for indigent defendants and approve attorney expense vouchers.

(B) Conduct proceedings in traffic infraction matters.

(C) Conduct advisements and set bail in criminal and traffic cases.

(D) Issue mandatory protection orders pursuant to C.R.S. section 18-1-1001.

(E) Any other function authorized by statute.

(2) Consent necessary:

(A) Conduct hearings on motions, conduct trials to court, accept pleas of guilty, and impose sentences in misdemeanor, petty offense, and traffic offense matters.

(B) Conduct deferred prosecution and deferred sentence proceedings in misdemeanor, petty offense, and traffic offense matters.

(C) Conduct misdemeanor and petty offense proceedings pertaining to wildlife, parks and outdoor recreation, as defined in Title 33, C.R.S.

(D) Conduct all proceedings pertaining to recreational facilities districts, control and licensing of dogs, campfires, and general regulations, as defined in Title 29, Article 7, C.R.S. and Title 30, Article 15, C.R.S.

(b) Functions in Civil Cases: A county court magistrate may perform any or all of the following functions in a civil proceeding:

(1) No consent necessary:

(A) Conduct proceedings with regard to petitions for name change, pursuant to C.R.S. section 13-15-101.

(B) Perform the duties which a county court clerk may be authorized to perform, pursuant to C.R.S. section 13-6-212.

(C) Serve as a small claims court magistrate, pursuant to C.R.S. section 13-6-405.

(D) Conduct proceedings involving protection orders, pursuant to C.R.S. sections 13-14-101 et seq. and conduct proceedings pursuant to C.R.C.P. 365.

(E) Any other function authorized by statute.

(2) Consent necessary:

(A) Conduct civil trials to court and hearings on motions.

(B) Conduct default hearings, enter judgments pursuant to C.R.C.P. 355, and conduct post-judgment proceedings.

ANNOTATION

Magistrates exercise authority only at the discretion of the judges who appoint them. Therefore no impropriety in the provision of a court memorandum prohibiting magistrates from conducting bond hearings. Wiegand v. Larimer County Court Magistrate, 937 P.2d 880 (Colo. App. 1996).

Rule 9. Review of County Court and Small Claims Court Magistrate Orders or Judgments

(a) An order or judgment of a county or small claims court magistrate shall be the order or judgment of the county or small claims court.

(b) Any party to a proceeding before a county court magistrate shall appeal an order or judgment entered by the magistrate in that proceeding in the manner authorized by statute or rule for the appeal of orders or judgments of the county court.

(c) Any party to a proceeding before a small claims court magistrate shall appeal an order or judgment entered by the magistrate in that proceeding in the manner authorized by statute or rule for the appeal of orders or judgments of the small claims court.

Rule 10. Preparation, Use, and Retention of Record

(a) Record of Proceedings: Except as provided in C.R.C.P. 16.2 (c)(2)(e), a verbatim record of all proceedings and trials conducted by magistrates shall be maintained by either electronic devices or by stenographic means. The magistrate shall be responsible for maintaining such record and, in the event of subsequent review, for certifying its authenticity.

(b) Use of the Record: If otherwise admissible, a certified transcript of the testimony of a witness at a trial or other proceeding before a magistrate may be admitted as evidence in a later trial or proceeding.

(c) Custody and Retention of Record: A reporter's notes or the electronic recordings of trial or other proceedings conducted by a magistrate shall be the property of the state, and shall be retained by the appropriate court for a period prescribed in the Colorado Judicial Department Records Management manual. During the period of retention, notes and recordings shall be made available to the reporter of record, or to any other reporter or person the court may designate. During the trial or the taking of other matters on the record, the notes and recordings shall be considered the property of the state, even though in custody of the reporter, judge, or clerk. After the trial and review or appeal period, the reporter shall list, date and index all notes and recordings and shall properly pack them for storage. Where no reporter is used, the clerk of the court shall perform this function. The court shall provide storage containers and space.

INDEX TO

CHAPTER 36

Uniform Local Rules for all State Water Court Divisions

Adopted by the

SUPREME COURT OF COLORADO

August 13, 1990,

Effective September 1, 1990

CHAPTER 36

UNIFORM LOCAL RULES FOR ALL STATE WATER COURT DIVISIONS

NOTE: Except as expressly provided in these rules, the Colorado Rules of Civil Procedure, including the state-wide practice standards set out in C.R.C.P. 121, shall apply to water court practice and procedure. All prior water court local rules are repealed.

Law reviews: For article, ''Statutory and Rule Changes to Water Court Practice'', see 38 Colo. Law. 53 (June 2009).

Rule 1. Appearances

A party that is a corporation may act through its corporate officers or other nonlawyer agents for the purpose of filing applications and statements of opposition when a case is before the referee (or before the water judge acting as a referee); however, if a pleading supporting or protesting a referee's ruling is filed, except as otherwise provided by C.R.S. 13-1-127, a corporate applicant shall be represented by and the pleadings shall be signed by, an attorney licensed to practice law in the State of Colorado.

Source: Entire chapter added August 13, 1990, effective September 1, 1990.

Rule 2. Filing and Service Procedure

(a) For all cases filed pursuant to C.R.C.P. 90 after July 1, 2009, applicants and opposers represented by counsel shall electronically file and serve through the approved judicial branch e-filing service provider all applications, pleadings, motions, briefs, exhibits, and other documents on all parties and on the state and division engineer. C.R.C.P. Rule 121, Section 1-26, Electronic Filing, applies to water court filings. The state or division engineer shall also electronically file and serve upon applicants and opposers in the proceedings their consultation reports described in §§ 37-92-302(2)(a) & (4). Applicants and other parties who are not represented by an attorney shall file with the water clerk a single copy of the application and all other documents in original paper format. The water clerk on behalf of persons not represented by an attorney shall scan and upload such paper-filed documents to the approved judicial branch e-filing system. All documents and correspondence filed after the initial application shall contain the case number. Proof of service of documents, orders, and rulings shall occur through the e-filing system.

(b) An applicant shall file and serve upon all parties at least 21 days prior to hearing on any application before the water judge, a proposed order that sets forth any necessary findings, terms or conditions that the applicant reasonably believes the court should incorporate into the decree.

Source: Entire chapter added August 13, 1990, effective September 1, 1990; entire rule amended and adopted June 24, 2004, effective July 1, 2004; entire rule amended and effective February 19, 2009; (b) amended and adopted November 3, 2011, effective January 1, 2012.

Editor's note: Amendments to this section, adopted February 19, 2009, are applicable to applications filed on or after July 1, 2009, but any portions thereof that can be adapted for use by the water judge or referee without prejudice to the parties may be utilized in existing cases.

Rule 3. Applications for Water Rights

water right has become a water right, approval of a plan for augmentation, a finding of reasonable diligence, approval of a proposed or existing exchange of water, approval to use water outside of the state, and any other matter for which such a standard form exists shall be filed using the standard forms adopted by the water judges, or a format patterned after the standard form containing the information required by the applicable standard form. The applicant shall be responsible for providing all information required by the forms and this Rule 3.

(b) (1) More than one water right, claim or structure may be incorporated in any one application under one caption, provided that the required information is given for each water right, claim, or structure.

(2) Persons alone or in concert may file applications for approval of plans for augmentation, including water exchange projects, and subsequent changes thereto.

(3) In applications for determinations of rights to groundwater described in C.R.S. § 37-90-137(4):

(A) If the applicant claims consent of the owner(s) of the overlying land as the basis for such a determination, the application must include one or more of the following documents as applicable:

(i) If the basis for such consent is C.R.S. § 37-90-137(4)(b)(II)(A), the application must include (1) recorded copies of the written consent from the owner(s) of the overlying land to the applicant, which consent includes a legal description of the land and identification of the aquifers for which consent has been given, and (2) an instrument evidencing ownership of such land by such consenting owner(s) at the time such consent was granted.

(ii) If the basis for such consent is C.R.S. § 37-90-137(4)(b)(II)(C), the application must include a certified copy of (1) the ordinance or resolution described in C.R.S. § 37-90-137(8) that incorporates groundwater, and (2) the part of the detailed map described in C.R.S. § 37-90-137(8) that shows the land area as to which consent is deemed to have been given.

(B) Two or more overlying land owners may file a joint application for determinations or changes of rights to such groundwater to be withdrawn through a ''well field,'' provided that the application must contain sufficient information to demonstrate that lands subject to the application meet the requirements of a ''well field'' as defined in the ''rules and regulations applying to applications for well permits to withdraw groundwater pursuant to section 37-90-137(4), C.R.S.'' 2 C.C.R. 402-7. Such joint application may include only claims for determinations or changes of rights to groundwater described in C.R.S. § 37-90-137(4) and plans for augmentation (with or without exchanges) related thereto.

(4) Nothing contained in this rule 3(b) shall prevent the consolidation or bifurcation of applications or portions thereof under other applicable rules or law, or affect or discourage applications involving a single applicant or single water right, claim or structure.

(c) Where more than one water right was conditionally decreed under one case number, each water right so decreed may, but need not be, incorporated again in a single application for a finding of reasonable diligence or to make absolute, regardless of whether such rights remain in common ownership; however, such an application shall not be combined with any other case or application except by leave of court and the owner of each such right shall be an applicant in such application.

(d) The following guidelines shall apply in filing applications:

(1) Every application shall include the legal description of the location of the point of diversion and of the place of storage, if any, of the subject water right, and a general description of the place of use.

(2) In areas having generally recognized street addresses, the street address and also the lot and block number, if applicable, shall be set forth in the application in addition to the legal description of the point of diversion or place of storage.

(3) Every application shall state the name and address of the owner or reputed owner of the land upon which any new diversion or storage structure or modification to any existing diversion or storage structure is or will be constructed, or upon which water is or will be stored, including any modification to the existing storage pool. The applicant may rely upon the real estate records of the county assessor for the county or counties in which the land is located to determine the owner or reputed owner of potentially affected land.

(4) The actual address of the applicant and the mailing address, if different, shall be given in all cases. An address in care of an attorney is not acceptable in the absence of special circumstances which must be set out fully in an accompanying statement and approved by the water judge.

(e) An application for determination of matters relating to underground water rights shall be governed by the following additional requirements:

(1) Such application shall designate each well, using the state engineer's well permit registration or recording number, if one exists. If a permit required by law has been issued by the state engineer, copies of the permit and the well completion and pump installation report, if completed, shall be attached to the application. If the permit was denied, a copy of the order of denial containing the denial number shall be attached. If this documentation is not available at the time of filing of the application, it shall be supplied as soon as practicable.

(2) If the name of the applicant is not the same as the name appearing on the well permit, then prima facie evidence of ownership of the well site must be submitted to the court. Copies of recorded deeds are preferred for this purpose.

(f) An application for approval of a change of water right or plan for augmentation shall include a complete statement of such change or plan, including a description of all water rights to be established or changed by the plan, a map showing the approximate location of historical use of the rights, and records or summaries of records of actual diversions of each right the applicant intends to rely on to the extent such records exist.

Rule 4. Amendments or Corrections

(a) For purposes of the application of C.R.C.P. 15, the application shall be considered to be a complaint, and a statement of opposition shall be considered to be a responsive pleading. An amendment to an application shall contain a legal description of the structures to which the amendment applies.

(b) When an application is amended, or a petition for correction of a ruling or decree is filed, republication shall be required at the expense of the applicant for the following changes:

(1) A change of over 200 feet in structure location;

(2) A change causing the well to come within 600 feet of an existing decreed well;

(3) A change or moving of a structure to a different quarter section;

(4) An increase in amount of use or addition of type of use, but not a decrease in amount of use or deletion of a type of use;

(5) A request for an earlier date of appropriation;

(6) A change in the source of water; or

(7) Any other change not specifically described that the court in its discretion deems material.

(c) Upon a showing that no person will be injured, the water judge or referee may determine that republication is unnecessary.

(d) If the water judge or referee determines republication is necessary for an amended application, the consultation and recommendation procedures (as supplemented by Water Court Rule 6(e) and (n)) and state engineer determination of facts procedures described in C.R.S. §§ 37-92-302(2)(a) and -302(4) shall apply to the amended application. If the water judge's order for republication provides for the water judge to retain the application as amended, then the division engineer shall file a written recommendation in the proceedings as required by C.R.S. § 37-92-302(4) within thirty-five days of the order requiring republication of the amended application and, in the case of an amendment to an application for determinations of rights to groundwater from wells described in C.R.S. § 37-90-137(4), the state engineer shall file any determination as to the facts of such amended application as required by C.R.S. § 37-92-302(2)(a) within four months of the order requiring republication or shall promptly file a notice that no such determination is necessary.

ANNOTATION

Even though an application for the enlargement of a specifically-identified dam placed the location of the dam in the incorrect quarter section, there was no need to amend the application because the application correctly identified the name of the reservoir and none of the parties would be injured by not republishing the application. City of Black Hawk v. City of Central, 97 P.3d 951 (Colo. 2004).

Rule 5. Withdrawal of Application or Other Pleading

(a) An application against which no statement of opposition has been filed may be withdrawn upon written notice to the court and without a court order prior to the entry of a decree.

(b) An application against which a statement of opposition has been filed shall not be withdrawn or dismissed except by order of the court.

(c) A statement of opposition may be withdrawn without order of the court if the opposer files a withdrawal of the statement of opposition certifying that the applicant has consented to the withdrawal. In the absence of consent of the applicant, the withdrawal of a statement of opposition must be approved by order of the court.

Rule 6. Referral to Referee, Case Management, Rulings, and Decrees

(a) The water judge shall promptly refer to the water referee all applications. The referee upon referral by the water judge has the authority and duty in the first instance to promptly begin investigating and to rule upon applications for determinations of water rights, determinations of conditional water rights, changes of water rights, approval of plans for augmentation, findings of reasonable diligence in the development of conditional water rights, approval of a proposed or existing exchange of water, approval to use water outside of the state, and other water matters, in accordance with the applicable constitutional, statutory, and case law.

(b) The referee's authorities and duties include: assisting potential applicants to understand what information is required to be included in an application; in accordance with C.R.C.P. 90, consulting with the water clerk to ascertain whether applications substantially contain the information required by Water Court Rule 3 and the standard forms approved by the water judges and, if not, providing the applicant through the water clerk a list of the required information that was not included in the application; investigating each application to determine whether or not the statements in the application and statements of opposition are true and becoming fully advised with respect to the subject matter of the applications and statements of opposition; conferring with the division engineer and the parties concerning applications and working with the division engineer and the parties to obtain additional information that will assist in narrowing the issues and obtaining agreements; and issuing the referee's ruling and proposed decree in the case. The referee's ruling and proposed decree shall set forth appropriate findings and conditions as required by C.R.S. §§ 37-92-303 & 305, and shall be in an editable format acceptable to the water judge.

(c) The referee shall work promptly to identify applications that will require water judge adjudication of the facts and/or rulings of law and re-refer those applications to the water judge. The referee may re-refer a case to the water judge without first holding a status conference described in Water Court Rule 6(h). In the event that a matter is re-referred within three months after filing of an application that will require construction of a well, other than applications for determinations of rights to groundwater from wells described in C.R.S. § 37-90-137(4), the water judge may extend the time for the division engineer to file the type of written consultation report or recommendation required by C.R.S. § 37-92-302(2)(a) and (4) upon the division engineer having filed a notice showing good cause for such an extension.

(d) The applicant shall have the burden of sustaining the application and, in the case of a change of water right, a proposed or existing exchange of water, or a plan for augmentation, the burden of showing the absence of injurious effect. If any expert reports, disclosures, or opinions are presented to the referee, they shall be filed and include the signed Declaration of Expert set forth in the applicable water court form.

(e) To promote the just, speedy, and cost efficient disposition of water court cases, the goals of the referee, as contemplated by C.R.S. § 37-92-303(1), shall include a ruling on each unopposed application within 63 days after the last day on which statements of opposition may be filed, and all other applications as promptly as possible. In pursuit of this goal, the referee shall initiate consultation with the division engineer in every case promptly after the last day for filing statements of opposition. The division engineer's written summary report of the consultation is due within 35 days of the date the referee initiates consultation in accordance with C.R.S. § 37-92-302(4), except that for applications that require construction of a well, the summary of consultation report is due within 4 months after the filing of the application in accordance with C.R.S. § 37-92-302(2)(a). Upon request, the referee may extend the time for filing the summary of consultation report. If the referee determines that the summary of consultation report requires a response, the applicant shall file a written response within the time specified by the referee either in the case management plan adopted under section (l) of this rule 6 or by a separate order under section (n) of this rule 6. The referee shall not enter a ruling on applications for determination of rights to groundwater from wells described in C.R.S. § 37-90-137(4) until the state engineer's office has had the opportunity to issue a determination of facts concerning the application in accordance with C.R.S. § 37-92-302(2)(a). The referee and the division engineer may confer and jointly agree to forego consultation in a particular case because it is not needed; and, if so, the referee shall enter a minute order as provided in section (o) of this Rule 6.

(f) For good cause, upon agreement of the parties, or sua sponte, the referee may extend the time for ruling on the application beyond 63 days after the last day on which statements of opposition may be filed but not to exceed a total of 1 year following the deadline for filing statements of opposition, except that the referee may extend the time for entering a ruling to a specified date that is not more than 182 days after the expiration of the one year period, upon finding that there is a substantial likelihood that the remaining issues in the case can be resolved, without trial before the water judge, in front of the referee.

(g) If no statements of opposition to an application have been filed, the applicant's attorney shall promptly provide the referee with a proposed ruling and decree for consideration by the referee. The referee will prepare the ruling and decree for pro se applicants, and in all cases may convene such conferences or hearings as will assist in performance of the referee's duties.

(h) For all applications in which statements of opposition are filed, the attorney for the applicant, or the referee if the applicant is not represented by counsel, shall set a status conference with the referee and all parties. The status conference shall occur within 63 days after the deadline for filing of statements of opposition, unless the deadline is extended by the referee for good cause. The status conference may be conducted in person or by telephone. All parties must attend the status conference unless excused by the referee. The referee shall advise the division engineer of the status conference and invite or require the division engineer's participation. To assist discussion at the status conference, applicants are encouraged to prepare and circulate a proposed ruling and proposed decree to the referee, the division engineer, and the parties in advance of the conference.

(i) During the status conference, the referee and the parties will discuss the issues raised by the application and any statements of opposition, what additional information or investigations will be necessary to assist the parties and the referee to understand and resolve disputed issues and to assist the referee's preparation of a proposed ruling and proposed decree, and determine whether it will be possible to resolve the application and any objections without re-referring the application to the water judge for adjudication.

(1) If it is unlikely that the application and objections can be resolved without adjudication by the water judge, then the referee shall promptly re-refer the application to the water judge in accordance with C.R.S. § 37-92-303.

(2) If the applicant or another party does not believe that the application can be resolved without water judge adjudication and so notifies the other parties and the referee at the status conference, then the party shall promptly file a motion to refer the application to the water judge in accordance with C.R.S. § 37-92-303(2).

(3) The provisions of Water Court Rule 6 (j)-(l) apply to applications that remain before the referee upon agreement of the parties as a result of the status conference.

(4) As a condition for remaining before the referee instead of referring the application to the water judge for adjudication, the parties shall waive their statutory right to re-refer the application to the water judge for the period established in the case management plan. During such period the application may be referred to the water judge only with the consent of all parties or the consent of the referee.

(j) The parties shall discuss at the status conference whether expert investigations will be needed. If expert investigations are needed, the referee and the parties will discuss whether it would be appropriate for the parties to engage a single expert to make the necessary investigation and report the results of the investigation to the parties. The use of a single expert is not mandatory, and any party may choose to utilize its own expert. If all parties agree that the use of a single expert is desirable, the single expert shall be chosen by mutual agreement among the parties. If all parties agree that the use of a single expert is desirable, but the parties cannot agree on who should be selected, the referee may appoint a single consulting expert. The parties shall divide the costs of a single consulting expert equally among themselves unless a different cost allocation is agreed upon by the parties. If the parties agree to use a single expert in proceedings before the referee, then, absent the consent of all parties, that expert shall not be permitted to testify as an expert for a party in the same proceeding if the application is re-referred to the water judge or if a protest is filed by a party to the ruling of the referee.

(k) In consultation with the parties, the referee shall establish a case management plan for obtaining the necessary information and preparing a proposed ruling and proposed decree. The case management plan shall set forth a timetable for disposition of the application.

(l) Regardless of whether any expert is involved in the proceedings before the referee, the referee shall not be bound by the opinions and report of the expert, may make investigations without conducting a formal hearing, including site visits, and may enter a ruling supported by the facts and the law. The case management plan shall contain a listing of the disputed issues to the extent known, the additional information needed to assist in resolution of the disputed issues, additional investigations needed to assist in resolving the disputed issues, an estimate of the time required to complete the tasks, the time for filing a proposed ruling and proposed decree, the time for opposers to provide comments to the applicant on the proposed ruling and proposed decree, the time for the applicant to file status reports, and a schedule for further proceedings. The referee may make such interim rulings, including scheduling additional status conferences and allowing amendments to the case management plan, as will facilitate prompt resolution of the application and issuance of a proposed ruling and proposed decree. The proceedings before the referee shall be completed and the proposed ruling and proposed decree issued no later than 1 year following the deadline for filing of statements of opposition, except that the referee may extend the time as specified in subsection (f) above.

(m) If the parties are able to reach a resolution of the application, and the referee finds it to be supported by the facts and the law, the referee shall work with the parties to fashion an appropriate proposed ruling and proposed decree for filing with the water judge for approval. If such a resolution cannot be reached within the time period allowed by the case management plan, the referee shall enter a ruling on the application, which may be protested to the water judge as provided in C.R.S. § 37-92-304(2), or the referee may re-refer the application to the water judge, or any party may file a motion to re-refer the application to the water judge in accordance with C.R.S. § 37-92-303.

(n) At any time after the status conference on applications to which statements of opposition have been filed, or after the filing of applications to which no statements of oppositions have been filed, if some further information is reasonably necessary for the disposition of the application, the referee may require the applicant to supply the information in writing, by affidavit or at an informal conference or hearing. The referee may ask the division engineer for information as part of the referee's ongoing informal investigation, but shall discontinue making such requests if the state or division engineer has become a party to the case. In response to such requests, the division engineer may file supplemental written summary of consultation reports. The division engineer also may file a written report in response to new information in any proposed ruling or expert report filed by the applicant within the time specified by the referee. If the referee determines any written report filed by the division engineer requires a response by the applicant, the applicant shall file a written response within the time specified by the referee.

(o) The referee shall enter minute orders summarizing all conferences with the parties or the division or state engineers.

(p) The referee shall have the authority to dismiss for failure to prosecute applications of parties who fail to comply with the requirements of the Water Court Rules or any case management plan, and to dismiss statements of opposition of parties who fail to comply with the requirements of the water court rules or any case management plan. Such dismissal may be protested to the water judge by any party within 21 days from the date of the order of dismissal.

(q) Any time period contained in the water court rules, or the applicable rules of civil procedure, for an action by the referee or a party may be extended by the water judge for good cause. At any time the water judge determines that an application can be resolved without adjudication by the water judge, the water judge may refer the application back to the referee for disposition. To assist in the adjudication of water matters that are before the water judge, the water judge may direct the referee to perform identified tasks.

COMMITTEE COMMENT

Rule 6(d), (e), (f), (h), (l) & (n)

Effective July 1, 2014, Rules 6(d), (e), (f), (h), (l) & (n) are amended to clarify the role of the division engineer during the water referee's investigation of each application and to ensure that the participation by the division engineer is clear, meaningful, transparent, and timely.

Prior to these amendments, Rule 6(e) allowed the division engineer, upon the receipt of new information, to submit to the referee and the parties additional written reports after the division engineer's initial written report on the referee's consultation with the division engineer. The amendments move this provision to Rule 6(n) and modify it to clarify that the division engineer may file such written reports in response to new information in any proposed ruling or expert report filed by the applicant within the time specified by the referee.

To provide a more clear record of consultations between the referee and the division engineer, the amendments describe and permit the division engineer's filing of the initial written summary of consultation report as well as supplemental written summary of consultation reports in response to the referee's subsequent requests for information as part of the referee's ongoing informal investigation. The amendments further clarify which documents must be filed with the court so that they are provided to and received by the parties and the division engineer and, in Rules 6(e) and 6(n), affirm the referee's ability to require the applicant to file a written response to any of the division engineer's written reports to aid in the referee's investigation. To the extent practicable, the case management plan should be written or revised to include time schedules for the division engineer filing of all written reports and responses thereto.

The amendments to Rule 6(e) and 6(n) are intended to further implement the primary purpose of the referee's role in water court proceedings: to fashion a proposed decree that, with water judge approval, can be entered as a final decree if no protest to the referee's ruling is filed with the water court within the time the statute specifies. To this end, the General Assembly has authorized the referee to consult with the division engineer without the state or division engineer having to file a statement of opposition to the application. Rule 6 is also amended to adopt the ''rule of 7'' numbering for procedural time periods specified in this water court rule.

Rule 9. Transfer of Conditional Water Right and Change of Address

(a) Upon the sale or other transfer of a conditional water right, the transferee shall file with the water court having jurisdiction a notice of transfer which shall state:

(1) The title and case number of the case in which the conditional decree was issued;

(2) The description of the conditional water right transferred;

(3) The name of the transferor;

(4) The name and mailing address of the transferee; and

(5) A copy of the recorded deed.

(b) The owner of any conditional water right shall notify the clerk of the water court having jurisdiction of any change in mailing address.

(c) The clerk shall place any notice of transfer or change of address in the case file in which the conditional decree was entered and in the case file in which the court first made a finding of reasonable diligence.

Rule 11. Pre-Trial Procedure, Case Management, Disclosure, and Simplification of Issues

The provisions of C.R.C.P. 16 and 26 through 37 shall apply except that they shall be modified as follows:

(a) C.R.C.P. 16(b)-(e), C.R.C.P. 16(f)(3)(VI)(C), C.R.C.P. 16(g), and C.R.C.P. 26(a)(2)(B)(I)(g) shall not apply to water court proceedings.

(b) Presumptive Case Management Order. Except as provided in section (c) of this Rule, the parties shall not file a Case Management Order and subsections (1)-(10) of this section shall constitute the Case Management Order and shall control the course of the action from the time the case is at issue, unless the water court orders otherwise for good cause shown. The time periods specified in this Case Management Order are provided to take into account protested or re-referred cases that involve computer modeling or detailed technical analysis. Parties and counsel are encouraged to request a Modified Case Management Order, pursuant to section (c), to shorten time periods whenever possible, unless the water court orders otherwise for good cause shown.

(1) At Issue Date. Water matters shall be considered to be at issue for purposes of this Rule and C.R.C.P. 26 49 days (7 weeks) after the earlier of either of the following: entry of an order of re-referral or the filing of a protest to the ruling of the referee, unless the water court directs otherwise. Unless the water court directs otherwise, the time period for filing a Certificate of Compliance under subsection (b)(7) of this Rule shall be no later than 77 days (11 weeks) after a case is at issue.

(2) Responsible Attorney. For purposes of this Rule and C.R.C.P. 16(f), the responsible attorney shall mean applicant's counsel, if the applicant is represented by counsel, or, if not, a counsel chosen by opposers, or the water court may choose the responsible attorney. The responsible attorney shall schedule conferences among the parties, prepare and file the Certificate of Compliance, and prepare and submit the proposed trial management order.

(3) Confer and Exchange Information. No later than 14 days after the case is at issue, the lead counsel for each party and any party who is not represented by counsel shall confer with each other about the nature and basis of the claims and defenses, the matters to be disclosed pursuant to C.R.C.P. 26(a)(1), the development of a Certificate of Compliance, and the issues that are in dispute.

(4) Trial Setting. No later than 63 days (9 weeks) after the case is at issue, the responsible attorney shall arrange to set the case for trial pursuant to C.R.C.P. 121, section 1-6, unless otherwise ordered by the water court.

(5) Disclosures.

(A) The time for providing mandatory disclosures pursuant to C.R.C.P. 26(a)(1) shall be as follows:

(I) Applicant's disclosure shall be made 35 days after the case is at issue;

(II) An opposing party's disclosure shall be made 35 days after applicant's disclosures are made.

(B) The time periods for disclosure of expert testimony pursuant to C.R.C.P. 26(a)(2) shall be as follows:

(I) The applicant's expert disclosure shall be made at least 280 days (40 weeks) before trial;

(II) The applicant's supplemental expert disclosure, if any, shall be made after the first meeting of the experts held pursuant to subsection (b)(5)(D)(I) of this Rule, and served at least 217 days (31 weeks) before trial;

(III) An opposer's expert disclosure shall be made at least 161 days (23 weeks) before trial;

(IV) If the evidence is intended to contradict or rebut evidence on the same subject matter identified by another party under subsection (b)(5)(B)(III) of this Rule, such expert disclosure shall be made no later than 119 days (17 weeks) before trial.

(C) Additional Expert Disclosures. In addition to the disclosures required by C.R.C.P. 26(a)(2)(B)(I), the expert's disclosure shall include:

(I) A list of all expert reports authored by the expert in the preceding 4 years; and

(II) An executable electronic version of any computational model, including all input and output files, relied upon by the expert in forming his or her opinions. The court may require the party to whom this information is disclosed to pay the reasonable cost to convert the data from the electronic format in which it is maintained in the expert's normal course of business to a format that can be used by the expert for the opposing party(ies).

(D) Meeting of Experts to Identify Undisputed Matters of Fact and Expert Opinion and to Refine and Attempt to Resolve Disputed Matters of Fact and Expert Opinion.

(I) The expert witness(es) for the applicant and the opposer(s) shall meet within 49 days (7 weeks) after the applicant's initial expert disclosures are made. The meeting(s) may be in person or by telephonic means. The purpose of the meeting is for the experts to discuss the matters of fact and expert opinion that are the subject of the expert(s) disclosures and with respect to such disclosures: to identify undisputed matters of fact and expert opinion, to attempt to resolve disputed matters of fact and expert opinion, and to identify the remaining matters of fact and expert opinion in dispute. The applicant may subsequently file a supplemental disclosure pursuant to Water Court Rule 11(b)(5)(B)(II) to address matters of fact and expert opinion resolved in or arising from the meeting(s) of the experts.

(II) The expert witness(es) for the applicant and the opposer(s) shall meet within 28 days after the opposers' expert disclosures are made. The meeting may be in person or by telephonic means. The purpose of the meeting is for the experts to discuss the matters of fact and expert opinion that are the subject of the expert(s) disclosures and, with respect to such disclosures: to identify undisputed matters of fact and expert opinion, to attempt to resolve disputed matters of fact and expert opinion, and to identify the remaining matters of fact and expert opinion in dispute. Within 21 days after such meeting, the experts shall jointly submit to the parties a written statement setting forth the disputed matters of fact and expert opinion that they believe remain for trial, as well as the undisputed matters of fact and expert opinion, arising from the expert disclosures.

(III) The content of the meetings of the experts and the written statement prepared pursuant to Water Court Rule 11(b)(5)(D)(II) shall be considered as conduct or statements made in compromise negotiations within the ambit of CRE 408. In addition, the content of the meetings, including notes taken by the experts or other records of the discussion during these meetings, are not discoverable, and can only be used for purposes of the preparation of the written statements and reports required or permitted by Water Court Rule 11(b)(5)(D). The meetings of the experts shall not include the attorneys for the parties or the parties themselves, unless they are the designated expert(s).

(E) Declaration by Expert. Expert reports, disclosures, and opinions are rendered to the water court under professional standards of conduct and duty to the court. No person, including a party's attorney, shall instruct an expert to alter an expert's report, disclosures, or opinion. This does not preclude suggestions regarding the factual basis, accuracy, clarity, or understandability of the report, disclosure, or opinion, or proofreading or other editorial corrections, or an attorney communication of legal opinion to the expert of the attorney's client. The expert shall not include anything in his or her expert report, disclosure, or opinion that has been suggested by any other person, including the attorney for the expert's client, without forming his or her own independent judgment about the correctness, accuracy, and validity of the suggested matter. Matters of legal opinion pertinent to formulation of the expert's report, disclosure, or opinion are within the professional province and duty to the court of the attorney who represents the client who has retained the expert. Each expert witness's written disclosure, report, or opinion shall contain a declaration by the expert as set forth in the applicable water court form.

(F) Proposed Decree. Applicant shall provide proposed findings of fact, conclusions of law and decree at the time of its initial C.R.C.P. 26(a)(2) disclosures. All opposers shall provide comments on the proposed decree, including the language of specific decree provisions deemed necessary by the opposers, at the time of opposers initial C.R.C.P. 26(a)(2) disclosures. Applicant shall respond to opposers' suggested decree language by providing an additional draft decree at the time of its rebuttal C.R.C.P. 26(a)(2) disclosures. In circumstances where, as a result of identification of witnesses and documents within the time frame for such identification set forth in this Presumptive Case Management Order but with insufficient time to allow responsive discovery or supplementation by an opposing party, then modification of this Presumptive Case Management Order shall be freely granted.

(6) Settlement Discussions.

(A) No later than 35 days after the case is at issue, the parties shall explore possibilities of a prompt settlement or resolution of the case.

(B) No later than 84 days (12 weeks) before trial the parties shall jointly file a statement setting forth the specific disputed issues that will be the subject of expert testimony at trial.

(7) Certificate of Compliance. No later than 77 days (11 weeks) after the case is at issue, the responsible attorney shall file a Certificate of Compliance. The Certificate of Compliance shall state that the parties have complied with all requirements of subsections (b)(3)-(7) (except (b)(5)(B) through (F) and (b)(6)(B)), inclusive, of this Rule or, if they have not complied with each requirement, shall identify the requirements which have not been fulfilled and set forth any reasons for the failure to comply. A request for a Case Management Conference shall be made at the time for filing the Certificate of Compliance.

(8) Time to Join Additional Parties and Amend Pleadings. The time to join additional parties and amend pleadings shall be no later than 119 days (17 weeks) after the case is at issue.

(9) Pretrial Motions. Unless otherwise ordered by the court, the time for filing pretrial motions shall be no later than 35 days before the trial date, except that motions pursuant to C.R.C.P. 56 shall be filed at least 91 days (13 weeks) before the trial date.

(10) Discovery Schedule. Until a case is at issue, formal discovery pursuant to C.R.C.P. 26 through 37 shall not be allowed. Informal discovery, including discussions among the parties, disclosure of facts, documents, witnesses, and other material information, field inspections and other reviews, is encouraged prior to the time a water case is at issue. Unless otherwise directed by the water court or agreed to by the parties, the schedule and scope of discovery shall be as set forth in C.R.C.P. 26(b), except that depositions of expert witnesses shall not be allowed until 28 days after the time for filing of the opposers' C.R.C.P. 26(a)(2) disclosures. The date for completion of all discovery shall be 49 days (7 weeks) before the trial date.

(c) Modified Case Management Order. Any of the provisions of section (b) of this Rule may be modified by the entry of a Modified Case Management Order pursuant to this section.

(1) Stipulated Modified Case Management Order. No later than 77 days (11 weeks) after the case is at issue, the parties may file a Stipulated Proposed Modified Case Management Order, supported by a specific showing of good cause for each modification sought including, where applicable, the grounds for good cause pursuant to C.R.C.P. 26(b)(2). Such proposed Order need only set forth the proposed provisions which would be changed from the Presumptive Case Management Order set forth in section (b) of this Rule. The Court may approve and enter the Stipulated Modified Case Management Order, or may set a Case Management Conference.

(2) Disputed Motions for Modified Case Management Orders. Subsection (c)(4) of this Rule shall apply to any disputes concerning a Proposed Modified Case Management Order. If any party wishes to move for a Modified Case Management Order, lead counsel and any unrepresented parties shall confer and cooperate in the development of a Proposed Modified Case Management Order. A motion for a Modified Case Management Order and one form of the proposed Order shall be filed no later than 77 days (11 weeks) after the case is at issue. To the extent possible, counsel and any unrepresented parties shall agree to the contents of the Proposed Modified Case Management Order but any matter upon which all parties cannot agree shall be designated as ''disputed'' in the Proposed Order. The proposed Order shall contain specific alternate provisions upon which agreement could not be reached and shall be supported by specific showing of good cause for each modification sought including, where applicable, the grounds for good cause pursuant to C.R.C.P. 26(b)(2). Such motion need only set forth the proposed provisions which would be changed from the Presumptive Case Management Order set forth in section (b) of this Rule. The motion for a Modified Case Management Order shall be signed by lead counsel and any unrepresented parties, or shall contain a statement as to why it is not so signed.

(3) Court Ordered Modified Case Management Order. The water court may order implementation of a Modified Case Management Order if the Court determines that the Presumptive Case Management Order is not appropriate for the specific case. The Court shall not enter a Court Ordered Modified Case Management Order without first holding a Case Management Conference pursuant to subsection (c)(4) of this Rule.

(4) Case Management Conference. If there is a disputed Case Management Order or if counsel or unrepresented party believes that it would be helpful to conduct a Case Management Conference, a Notice to Set Case Management Conference shall be filed stating the reasons why such a conference is required. If a Notice to Set Case Management Conference is filed concerning a disputed Modified Case Management Order, or if the Court determines that such a conference should be held, the Court shall set a Case Management Conference. The conference may be conducted by telephone. The Court shall promptly enter a Modified Case Management Order containing such modifications as approved by the Court.

(5) Amendment of the Case Management Order. At any time following the entry of the Case Management Order, a party wishing to amend the presumptive Case Management Order or a Modified Case Management Order shall file a motion stating each proposed amendment and a specific showing of good cause for the timing and necessity for each modification sought including, where applicable, the grounds for good cause pursuant to C.R.C.P. 26(b)(2).

Editor's note: Amendments to this section, adopted February 19, 2009, are applicable to applications filed on or after July 1, 2009, but any portions thereof that can be adapted for use by the water judge or referee without prejudice to the parties may be utilized in existing cases.

COMMITTEE COMMENT

Rule 11(b)(5)(D)(III)

Amended Rule 11, which became effective July 1, 2009, provides for meetings of the experts without attorneys for the parties or the parties themselves. Effective July 1, 2011, Rule 11(b)(5)(D)(III) was amended, nunc pro tunc on and after July 1, 2009, to make explicit the non-discoverability and non-admissibility of the notes, records, content of discussions, and the experts' written statement prepared in accordance with Rule 11(b)(5)(D)(II). In response to arguments that this provision does not prohibit use of such material in pretrial proceedings, Rule 11(b)(5)(D)(III) is further amended to clarify the original intent of the rule that the only permissible use of information from the expert meetings is for purposes of the preparation of the written statements and reports required or permitted by Rule 11(b)(5)(D). This clarifying change applies nunc pro tunc on and after July 1, 2009.

Rule 11(b)(5) and (9)

Effective January 1, 2018, Rule 11(b)(5) was amended to require expert disclosures to be made earlier than deadlines under the previous rule. For the applicant's expert disclosure, supplemental expert disclosure, and opposer's expert disclosure, the new deadline is five weeks earlier than the previous rule. For rebuttal expert disclosures, the new deadline is four weeks earlier than the previous rule. This change was to allow more time after expert disclosures for settlement discussions, mediation, and preparation of pretrial motions pursuant to C.R.C.P. 56. At the same time, Rule 11(b)(9) was amended to require that pretrial motions pursuant to C.R.C.P. 56 be filed 91 days before trial instead of the previous rule requiring such motions to be filed 84 days before trial.

Amended Rule 11, which became effective July 1, 2009, provides for meetings of the experts without attorneys for the parties or the parties themselves. Effective July 1, 2011, Rule 11 is further amended in subsection (b)(5)(D)(III) to make explicit the non-discoverability and non-admissibility of the notes, records, content of discussions, and written statement prepared by the experts in accordance with the rule, and, further, to clarify that the meetings of the experts exclude attorneys for the parties or the parties themselves unless they are designated experts. These clarifying changes apply nunc pro tunc on and after July 1, 2009.

In addition, the following Suggested Guide is included in this Comment by way of example for conduct of the meetings of the experts and preparation of the joint written statement of the experts.

Suggested Guide for Conducting Meetings of the Experts in Water Court Proceedings and Preparing Written Statement

Introduction

The purpose of this guide is to assist experts engaged in water court cases to efficiently conduct the first and second meetings of the experts described in Water Court Rule 11 and prepare the written statement of the experts. As the title above indicates, this guide provides suggested procedures and guidelines in conducting these meetings and preparing the written statement. The experts in each case may adapt these guidelines for their own specific circumstances.

Conduct of the Two Meetings

Meeting Notes:

Water Court Rule 11(b)(5)(D)(III), as amended effective July 1, 2011 nunc pro tunc on and after July 1, 2009 reads:

- "The content of the meetings of the experts and the written statement prepared pursuant to Water Court Rule 11(b)(5)(D)(II) shall be considered as conduct or statements made in compromise negotiations within the ambit of CRE 408. For this reason, notes taken by the experts or other records of the discussion during these meetings shall not be discoverable, and none of the content of the meetings of the experts or the written statement prepared shall be admissible at trial. The meetings of the experts shall not include the attorneys for the parties or the parties themselves, unless they are the designated expert(s)."

Tips for Conducting the Meetings of Experts:

- Applicant's expert is the chair and therefore controls the flow of the meetings. If the Applicant has more than one expert in the case, one of its experts should be designated to run the meeting.
- Pass a signup sheet for names, phone numbers and email addresses.
- Prepare an agenda and stick to it.
- Limit protracted discussions and arguing.
- Don't become entangled in difficult issues and fail to cover others.
- OK to identify legal issues, but don't argue and discuss in detail.
- Try to keep meetings to a reasonable length.
- Participation in person is encouraged.

Scheduling the Meetings of the Experts:

Scheduling of the meetings of the experts is to be initiated by counsel for the parties, led by the attorney for the Applicant. The selected date should involve the largest number of participating experts possible. If scheduling does not permit one or more experts to attend, they have the option of submitting initial comments to the group via email prior to the meeting.

First Meeting of the Experts

Excerpt from Rule 11(b)(5)(D)(I):

> "Meeting Of Experts To Identify Undisputed Matters of Fact and Expert Opinion and To Refine and Attempt to Resolve Disputed Matters of Fact and Expert Opinion.
> The expert witness(es) for the applicant and the opposer(s) shall meet within 49 days (7 weeks) after the applicant's initial expert disclosures are made. The meeting(s) may be in person or by telephonic means. The purpose of the meeting is for the experts to discuss the matters of fact and expert opinion that are the subject of the expert(s) disclosures and with respect to such disclosures: to identify undisputed matters of fact and expert opinion, to attempt to resolve disputed matters of fact and expert opinion, and to identify the remaining matters of fact and expert opinion in dispute. The applicant may subsequently file a supplemental disclosure pursuant to Water Court Rule 11(b)(5)(B)(II) to address matters of fact and expert opinion resolved in or arising from the meeting(s) of the experts."

Timing of First Meeting:

Within 49 days following Applicant's initial expert disclosures.

Goals:

- Allow Applicant's experts to explain the engineering approach in the application.
- Identify and screen issues pertaining to facts and expert opinions.
- Discuss Applicant's draft decree provisions dealing with issues of fact and expert opinion.
- Enable Applicant's experts to address potentially solvable issues of fact and expert opinion in a supplemental report prior to the opposers' disclosures.
- Clarify issues of fact and expert opinion and clear up misunderstandings relating to the case.
- Exchange information, such as additional backup data and calculations relating to the expert disclosures.

Not Goals:

- Solve legal issues.
- Achieve final settlement of the case.
- Engage in unproductive argument.
- Write decree language.

Suggested Sample Agenda for First Meeting of the Experts:

- Introductions, roll call, pass signup sheet.
- Set ground rules and goals of expert meeting.
- Applicant's experts give a brief overview of the application.
- Applicant's experts walk through facets of case, one at a time.
  - Poll opposers' experts for whether or not they have issues for each facet.
  - Note and put aside contested issues for later discussion.
  - Opposers' experts discuss concerns regarding Applicant's initial disclosures.
  - Go around table, each opposer's expert provides brief discussion of areas of disagreement.
  - Provide alternative approaches if applicable.
- Applicant's experts verbally summarize issues discussed in meeting.
  - Categorize issues into areas of agreement and disagreement.
- Q & A Session
  - Exchange of information, arrange to provide additional backup information, if necessary.
- Schedule second meeting of the experts, if appropriate.
- Adjourn

Second Meeting of the Experts

Excerpt from Rule 11(b)(5)(D)(II):

> "The expert witness(es) for the applicant and the opposer(s) shall meet within 28 days after the opposers' expert disclosures are made. The meeting may be in person or by telephonic means. The purpose of the meeting is for the experts to discuss the matters of fact and expert opinion that are the subject of the expert(s) disclosures and, with respect to such disclosures: to identify undisputed matters of fact and expert opinion, to attempt to resolve disputed matters of fact and expert opinion, and to identify the remaining matters of fact and expert opinion in dispute. Within 21 days after such meeting, the experts shall jointly submit to the parties a written statement setting forth the disputed matters of fact and expert opinion that they believe remain for trial, as well as the undisputed matters of fact and expert opinion, arising from the expert disclosures."

Timing of Second Meeting:
Within 28 days following Opposers' expert disclosures.

Goals:

- Identify and screen remaining disputed matters of facts and expert opinion.
- Discuss decree provisions dealing with matters of fact and expert opinion.
- Enable Applicant's experts to address potentially solvable matters of fact and expert opinion in their forthcoming rebuttal reports.

- Organize a plan and schedule for preparing joint written statement setting forth disputed and undisputed matters of fact and expert opinion.

Not Goals:
- Solve legal issues.
- Achieve final settlement of the case.
- Engage in unproductive argument.
- Write decree language.

Suggested Sample Agenda for Second Meeting of the Experts:
- Introductions, roll call, pass signup sheet.
- Set ground rules and goals for meeting.
- Applicant's experts walk through matters of fact and expert opinion identified in objectors' expert disclosures. Applicant's experts do the following for each issue:
  - Summarize the matter.
  - Identify which parties' experts raised the matter.
  - Ask objectors' experts for additional explanation or clarification, if necessary.
  - Indicate whether issue appears to be resolvable, not resolvable, or if there may be common ground to limit the issue.
  - Call on objectors' experts to comment on matter, and possible common ground.
  - Repeat for each matter.
- Objectors' experts indicate if there are other matters of fact and expert opinion that were not discussed by the Applicant's experts.
- Discuss process and schedule to prepare joint written statement.
- One of the Applicant's experts prepares first draft and emails to objectors' experts. This should be done quickly while contents of meeting are fresh.
- Objectors' experts email comments on draft written statement to all experts.
  - One of Applicant's experts prepares final joint written statement, considering comments from objectors' experts. If, based on the comments from objectors' experts, any disagreement exists as to how an issue is summarized, then this disagreement should be set forth in the final joint written statement.
  - One of Applicant's experts submits final joint written statement to all experts and to Applicant's attorney for distribution to parties.
- Adjourn meeting

Purpose of Joint Written Statement:
Excerpt from Rule 11(b)(5)(D)(II):

> "Within 21 days after such meeting, the experts shall jointly submit to the parties a written statement setting forth the disputed matters of fact and expert opinion that they believe remain for trial, as well as the undisputed matters of fact and expert opinion, arising from the expert disclosures."

The written statement is not admissible at trial. The statement will be provided to all the parties and will be used by the attorneys when preparing a statement that will be filed with the court setting forth the undisputed matters of fact and expert opinion and the disputed matters of fact and expert opinion that remain for trial.

Suggested Process to Prepare Joint Written Statement:
One of the last agenda items for the second meeting of the experts should be discussion of the process, schedule and content of the joint written statement. One of the Applicant's experts should take the lead and prepare the first draft of the statement and send it to the other experts in the case. This should be done immediately after the meeting. Opposers' experts should promptly provide comments to Applicant's experts. If the experts cannot agree on specific language in the statement, this disagreement should be noted in the document. For guidance only, the following is a suggested outline of a sample written statement of the experts.

Suggested Outline of Sample Written Statement of the Experts

Applicant: [name of applicant]

Joint Statement of Undisputed Matters of Fact and Expert Opinion and Remaining Disputed Matters of Fact and Expert Opinion

[Date]

In accordance with Water Court Rule 11(b)(5)(D)(II) and the Case Management Order in Case No. [xxCWxxx], the experts shall jointly submit to the parties a written statement setting forth the disputed matters of fact and expert opinion that they believe remain for trial, as well as the undisputed matters of fact and expert opinion, arising from the expert disclosures. The first meeting of the experts working on this case was held at [location] on [date]. In attendance were [list of attendees, the objector that they represent, and whether they attended in person or by phone]. The second meeting of the experts in this application met at [location] on [date]. In attendance were [list of attendees, the objector that they represent, and whether they attended in person or by phone]. A draft of the joint written statement was prepared by [expert for applicant] and was delivered to the experts for objectors [objector No. 1, name of expert(s)], [objector No. 2, name of expert(s)], [objector No. 3, name of expert(s)] on [date]. Written comments were received via email from [name of expert] on [date] and [name of expert] on [date]. The following summarizes the undisputed the disputed matters of fact and expert opinion.

Undisputed Matters of Fact and Expert Opinion

[The following is a small sample list of possible matters, depending on the case involved]

1. Use of the Glover bounded alluvial aquifer method with the input parameters included in Table x of the Applicant's Supplemental Expert Report is an appropriate method to determine the lagging of stream depletions from the subject wells included in the application.
2. A study period of 1950 through 2003 is an acceptable period of analysis for historical use of the xyz Ditch.
3. The historically irrigated area for the XYZ Ditch was 120 acres.
4. The historical cropping pattern for the XYZ Ditch was 50% corn and 50% alfalfa.
5. There is sufficient unappropriated water available in the Hopeful River Basin to justify the junior conditional storage right for the ABC Reservoir.
6. Use of a Modflow-based numerical ground water model is an appropriate method for estimating lagging of recharge accretions.

Remaining Disputed Issues of Fact and Expert Opinion.

[The following is a small sample list of possible matters, depending on the case involved]

1. Whether or not the assumed 60 percent maximum irrigation field efficiency is appropriate for the subject irrigated lands under the xyz Ditch
2. Whether or not the 120 acres will dry up following the cessation of irrigation, or will evapotranspiration occur from shallow ground water.
3. Whether or not separate flow meters are needed to measure water pumped to each separate use under the wells.
4. Whether or not a 5 year projection tool for the plan for augmentation is sufficiently long to prevent injury.
5. Whether or not the Applicant has established a specific plan to use the water stored in the ABC Reservoir for industrial uses.
6. Whether or not the method of calculating future evaporation from the ABC Reservoir proposed by the Applicant is sufficient to prevent injury.
7. Whether the GGG Ditch historically irrigated 100 acres of land. Some of the objectors feel that there is insufficient factual basis to support the claimed 100 acres, and assert that additional investigation is needed.
8. Whether the river conductance value used by the Applicant in its Modflow River Package is correct.

Rule 12. Procedure Regarding Decennial Abandonment Lists

For all decennial abandonment lists filed by the Division Engineers pursuant to C.R.S. § 37-92-401(4), the following procedures apply:

a. The water clerk shall cause notice of the availability of the final decennial abandonment list to be included in the resume and published in accordance with C.R.S. § 37-92-401(4)(d). In addition, the water clerk shall include the revised or unrevised final decennial abandonment list in its entirety in the copy of the resume described in C.R.S. § 37-92-302(3)(a) posted on the water court's web site in accordance with C.R.S. § 37-92-302(3)(c)(I)(D). Neither the water clerk nor the Division Engineer is required to publish the final decennial abandonment list in any newspaper. The published notice and resume for the final decennial abandonment list shall include notice of the deadline for filing any protest.

b. Any protest filed pursuant to C.R.S. § 37-92-401(5) shall automatically trigger a bifurcation from the original case in which the decennial abandonment list was filed without the necessity of a motion to bifurcate or any bifurcation order by the court. Each bifurcated protest case shall be assigned a new case number by the water clerk, shall include a reference to the original abandonment case number, and shall be published in the water court resume and newspapers in accordance with C.R.C.P. Rule 90 and C.R.S. § 37-92-302(3) and with notice of the deadline for any entry of appearance under Water Court Rule 12(d). The protestor shall be responsible for the costs of publication. Parties to the bifurcated protest cases shall not be considered parties to the original abandonment case for the purpose of filings and service in the original abandonment case, except as provided in Water Court Rule 12(j).

c. All other Water Court Rules, with the exception of Water Court Rules 3, 6 and 9, apply to the bifurcated protest cases. For the purposes of the applicable Water Court Rules, the final decennial abandonment list shall be considered an application, the Division Engineer shall be considered the applicant, any protest shall be considered a statement of opposition, and any protestant shall be considered an opposer.

d. Any person who may be affected by the subject matter of a protest or by any ruling thereon and desiring to participate in any hearing pursuant to C.R.S. § 37-92-401(6) must file an entry of appearance by August 31, 2022, or the respective tenth anniversary thereafter. If the water judge permits additional protests after June 30, 2022, or the respective tenth anniversary thereafter, as will serve the ends of justice pursuant to C.R.S. § 37-92-401(6), then any entry of appearance under this Water Court Rule 12(d) must be filed by the last day of the second month following the month in which an additional protest is filed. An entry of appearance must identify: (1) the portion of the decennial abandonment list with respect to which the appearance is being made; (2) whether the person is participating in support or in opposition to abandonment of the subject water right(s); (3) any factual and legal basis for any allegation that the person may be affected by the subject matter of the protest or by a ruling on the protest; and (4) any claim of ownership in the subject water right(s).

e. The at-issue date for a bifurcated protest case shall be 49 days after the deadlines for filing an entry of appearance by any potentially affected persons under Water Court Rule 12(d).

f. For the purpose of the proceedings within the bifurcated protest case, any person entering an appearance under Water Court Rule 12(d) in support of abandonment of the subject water right(s) shall have the same case management deadlines and order of presentation at hearing as the Division Engineer unless otherwise ordered by the water judge. Any person entering such an appearance in opposition to abandonment of the subject water right(s) shall have the same case management deadlines and order of presentation at hearing as the protestant(s) unless otherwise ordered by the water judge.

g. Any person who wishes to participate in a bifurcated protest case after the deadline for filing an entry of appearance must intervene pursuant to Water Court Rule 7.

h. If it is necessary to determine the ownership of or right to use a water right that is the subject of a protest to the decennial abandonment list in order to determine whether the water right has been abandoned, in whole or in part, then the water judge may exercise jurisdiction over any such controversy. If the water judge elects to exercise jurisdiction over such a controversy, the water judge shall order any party to serve additional notice under C.R.C.P. Rule 4, and to file such supplemental pleadings as the water judge finds necessary or appropriate to resolve such controversy. Any such controversy may be resolved by separate hearing and under a preliminary case management order prior to implementing the case management procedures of Water Court Rule 11 as to the Division Engineer's claim of abandonment. If the water judge does not elect to exercise jurisdiction over such controversy, then the water judge may order the applicable parties to commence a separate proceeding to resolve the controversy and stay further proceedings on the abandonment claim until the that controversy is resolved. If the water judge exercises jurisdiction over issues of ownership in such abandonment proceedings, the water judge will consider any requests by a party as to the place of trial, and venue is proper within any county in the water division notwithstanding C.R.C.P. 98.

i. Any order of the water court in a bifurcated protest case resolving the alleged abandonment of all or part of any water right that is the subject of a protest shall be entered in the bifurcated protest case and in the original abandonment case.

j. Within 63 days of resolution of all bifurcated protest cases, the Division Engineer shall file a motion in the original abandonment case for a judgment and decree listing: (1) the final decennial abandonment list as filed with the court by the Division Engineer; (2) identification of all orders by case number and date in the bifurcated protest cases and the resolution of the alleged abandonment of all or part of any water right that was the subject of a protest; and (3) a complete listing of the water rights, in whole or in part, abandoned by the water court. No conferral with any person shall be required prior to the Division Engineer filing the motion. In each bifurcated protest case, the Division Engineer shall simultaneously file notice of the filing of the motion in the original abandonment case and a copy of the proposed judgment and decree. Any party to a bifurcated protest case objecting to the form of the proposed judgment and decree may file a response to the Division Engineer's motion in the original abandonment case solely to identify any clerical errors in the proposed judgment and decree within 21 days of the date that notice of the motion's filing was filed and served in the bifurcated protest case, and the Division Engineer may file a reply.

Rule 13. Modification of Rules

The requirements of these rules may be modified with approval of the water court upon agreement of the parties, or by the court, in exceptional cases to meet emergencies or to avoid substantial injustice or great hardship. Any request for modification shall be presented to the judge before whom the case is pending and shall state in writing the grounds supporting it. The opposing party shall be given reasonable notice and an opportunity to contest the request in writing.

Editor's note: This Rule was numbered originally as Rule 12, but was renumbered to Rule 13 in accordance with Rule Change 2018(08), effective May 31, 2018.

COMMITTEE COMMENT

The amendment to the water court rules effective January 1, 2012 adopt the ''rule of 7'' numbering for procedural time periods specified in these water court rules. Statutorily-prescribed time periods incorporated into the rules have not been changed, except to express those time periods in numbers instead of words.

The amendments to water court rule 3 effective January 1, 2012 address applications that contain multiple claims, rights and structures, including applications filed by multiple applicants. Deletion of the words ''and that each has the same ownership'' from the former water court rule 3(b), now numbered water court rule 3(b)(1), is not intended to alter or change any provision of law pertaining to ownership of a claim, right or structure that may otherwise be applicable to the adjudication of an application.

CHAPTER 38

PUBLIC ACCESS TO INFORMATION AND RECORDS

Rule 1. Public Access to Information and Records

These rules shall be known and cited as the Public Access to Information and Records Rules or P.A.I.R.R.

The purpose of this rule is to provide the public with reasonable access to Judicial Branch documents and information while protecting the privacy interests of parties and persons. In addition, this rule is intended to provide direction to Judicial Branch personnel in responding to public records requests.

The Chief Justice is authorized to issue directives regarding access of the public to documents and materials made, received, or maintained by the courts. Such Directives of the Chief Justice are orders of the Supreme Court and shall govern release of records to the public. The Chief Justice on behalf of the Supreme Court is authorized, in the implementation of this rule, to appoint committees and assign custodians of records, and to designate the functions of such committees and custodians of records, as the Chief Justice may determine.

The Chief Justice has issued CJD 05-01, which is authorized pursuant to this rule without further action. Pursuant to CJD 05-01, the Chief Justice has appointed a Public Access Committee to adopt policy. The policy of that Committee is effective without further action. Because policy concerning public access to information is in development stages, as are components of the ICON system, the policy of any duly authorized committee appointed by the Chief Justice is effective when adopted. This rule is adopted by the Court on an interim basis, pending a final proposal by the Public Access Committee, public comment thereon, and further action by the court.

Custodians of records within the judicial branch are not authorized to release any records or material to the public inconsistent with this rule or the Chief Justice Directives. This rule is intended to be a rule of the Supreme Court within the meaning of the Colorado Public Records Act, including sections 24-72-204(1)(c) and 24-72-305(1)(b) (7 C.R.S.).

Rule 2. Public Access to Administrative Records of the Judicial Branch

This rule governs public access to all records maintained for the purpose of managing the administrative business of the Judicial Branch of the State of Colorado. Using the Colorado Open Records Act (CORA), sections 24-72-200.1 to -206, C.R.S. (2015), as a guide, the Supreme Court published a proposed Rule governing access to administrative records of the Judicial Branch, and the Chief Justice signed Chief Justice Directive 15-01 to govern interim access to administrative records. The Colorado Supreme Court received comments and held a public hearing on the proposed rule. The Supreme Court revised the rule in response to the comments received. Although CORA served as a guide in drafting this rule, the rule and CORA are not identical. Many of the rule's deviations from CORA reflect simple changes to language and streamlined organization of the rule for clarity and to better serve the public. Other, substantive deviations from CORA reflect the unique nature of the records and operations of the Judicial Branch. These changes are addressed in comments throughout the rule. This rule pertains only to administrative records and does not contemplate or control access to court records, which is governed by P.A.I.R.R. 1 and Chief Justice Directive 05-01. This rule is intended to be a rule of the Supreme Court within the meaning of CORA, including section 24-72-204(1)(c), C.R.S. (2015).

SECTION 1

DEFINITIONS

For purposes of Chapter 38, Rule 2, the following definitions apply:

(a) ''Administrative record'' means a record maintained for the purpose of managing the business or performing the duties of the Judicial Branch that is not defined as a court record in P.A.I.R.R. 1 and Chief Justice Directive 05-01.

(b) ''Confidential personal information'' means a person's home address, telephone number, social security number, birth date, bank account information, tax identification number, personal signature, personal email addresses, or similar unique identifying information other than a person's name.

COMMENT: CORA does not define ''confidential personal information'' or any similar term. The disclosure provisions in this rule permit the disclosure of many records so long as confidential personal information is redacted or otherwise not disclosed. This definition provides clear guidance to the public and to custodians regarding what information can be disclosed.

(c) ''Custodian'' means the person designated by federal or state statute, court rule, or court order as the keeper of the record, regardless of possession. Where no federal statute or regulation, state statute, court rule, or court order designates, the custodian is as provided in this subsection:

(1) For Colorado State Courts and Probation, the custodian is the Chief Justice. The Chief Justice has delegated custodial authority to the following: the chief judge in each judicial district; the chief judge of the court of appeals; and the presiding judge of the Denver Probate and Denver Juvenile courts in their respective courts. Each chief judge or presiding judge may delegate authority to the district administrator, clerk of court, chief probation officer, or other designee.

(2) For the Office of the State Court Administrator, the custodian is the State Court Administrator or his or her designee.

(3) For the Office of the Presiding Disciplinary Judge, the custodian is the Presiding Disciplinary Judge or his or her designee.

(4) For the Office of Judicial Performance Evaluation, the custodian is the Executive Director of the Office of Judicial Performance Evaluation or his or her designee.

(5) For the Office of Attorney Regulation Counsel and the Office of Attorney Registration, the custodian is the Attorney Regulation Counsel or his or her designee.

(6) For the Colorado Lawyer Assistance Program, the custodian is the Executive Director of the Colorado Lawyer Assistance Program or his or her designee.

(7) For the Colorado Attorney Mentor Program, the custodian is the Executive Director of the Colorado Attorney Mentor Program or his or her designee.

(8) For the Office of Alternate Defense Counsel, the custodian is the Director of the Office of Alternate Defense Counsel or his or her designee.

(9) For the Office of the Child's Representative, the custodian is the Executive Director of the Office of the Child's Representative or his or her designee.

(10) For the Office of the State Public Defender, the custodian is the State Public Defender or his or her designee.

(11) For the Office of the Respondent Parents' Counsel, the custodian is the Executive Director of the Office of the Respondent Parents' Counsel or his or her designee.

(d) ''Financial record'' means any documentation maintained to show the receipt, management or disbursement of funds by the Judicial Branch.

(e) The ''Judicial Branch'' includes Colorado State Courts and Probation, the Office of the State Court Administrator, the Office of the Presiding Disciplinary Judge, the Office of Judicial Performance Evaluation, the Office of Attorney Regulation Counsel, the Office of Attorney Registration, the Colorado Lawyer Assistance Program, the Colorado Attorney Mentor Program, the Office of Alternate Defense Counsel, the Office of the Child's Representative, the Office of the State Public Defender, and the Office of the Respondent Parents' Counsel. The Judicial Branch does not include the Commission on Judicial Discipline, Independent Ethics Commission, or the Independent Office of the Child Protection Ombudsman.

COMMENT: The Independent Ethics Commission was created by article 29, section 5 of the Colorado Constitution, and is an independent and autonomous constitutional entity. The Supreme Court does not believe it is appropriate to promulgate a rule governing access to records of a separate constitutional entity. The Commission on Judicial Discipline is also a separate constitutional entity, created by article 6, section 23 of the Colorado Constitution. Section 24-72-401, C.R.S. (2015) governs the confidentiality of information and records of the Commission on Judicial Discipline. The Supreme Court presumes that the legislature intended section 24-72-401, C.R.S. (2015), and not CORA to control the confidentiality of Commission on Judicial Discipline records. The legislation creating the Independent Office of the Child Protection Ombudsman specifies that it is subject to CORA. § 19-3.3-102(5), C.R.S. (2015).

(f) ''Person'' means any natural person acting in an official or personal capacity, and any corporation, limited liability company, partnership, firm, or association.

(g) ''Person in interest'' means the person who is the subject of a record.

(h) ''Personnel file'' means and includes home addresses, telephone numbers, financial information, and other information maintained because of the employer-employee relationship, and other documents specifically exempt from disclosure under this rule or any other provision of law. ''Personnel file'' does not include applications of past or current employees, employment agreements, any amount paid or benefit provided incident to termination of employment, dates of employment, classification, job title, job description, salary range, performance ratings, or any compensation, including expense allowances and benefits, paid to employees by the state, its agencies, institutions, or political subdivisions.

SECTION 2

ACCESS TO ADMINISTRATIVE RECORDS

(a) All Judicial Branch administrative records shall be available for inspection by any person at reasonable times, except as provided in this rule or as otherwise provided by federal statute or regulation, state statute, court rule, or court order. The custodian of any administrative record shall make policies governing the inspection of administrative records that are reasonably necessary to protect the records and prevent unnecessary interference with the regular discharge of the duties of the custodian or the custodian's office.

(b) The custodian must take reasonable measures to locate any specific administrative record sought and to ensure public access to the administrative record without unreasonable delay or unreasonable cost.

(c) This rule does not preclude the Judicial Branch from obtaining and enforcing trademark or copyright protection for any administrative record. The Judicial Branch is specifically authorized to obtain and enforce such protection in accordance with applicable federal law. This authorization does not restrict public access to or fair use of copyrighted materials and does not apply to writings that are merely lists or other compilations.

SECTION 3

EXCEPTIONS AND LIMITATIONS ON ACCESS TO RECORDS

(a) Exceptions and Limitations on Access to Records. The custodian of any administrative record shall allow any person to inspect a record or any portion thereof except based on the following grounds or as provided in subsection (b) or (c):

(1) Such inspection would be contrary to any state statute;

(2) Such inspection would be contrary to any federal statute or regulation;

(3) Such inspection is prohibited by court order or court rule; or

(4) Such inspection could compromise the safety or security of a Judicial Branch employee.

COMMENT: Paragraph (4) of this subsection is not in CORA. This provision recognizes that the records of the Judicial Branch contain information that could jeopardize the safety or security of its employees, and the Judicial Branch has an obligation to its employees to not release such information.

(b) May Deny Inspection. Unless otherwise provided by federal statute or regulation, state statute, court rule, or court order, the custodian may deny inspection of the following records on the ground that disclosure would be contrary to the public interest:

(1) Information related to research projects conducted by or in affiliation with the Judicial Branch.

(2) E-mail addresses provided by a person to the Judicial Branch for the purpose of future electronic communications to the person from the Judicial Branch.

(3) E-mail addresses of any person currently or formerly associated with the Judicial Branch by virtue of employment, internship, volunteer position, contracting, or appointment to a board, commission, or committee.

COMMENT: CORA does not have a similar provision governing e-mail addresses of employees. This provision is intended to protect against improper ex parte contacts and to protect personal and Judicial Branch e-mails from being subject to phishing, marketing, or other security risks.

(4) Individual signatures that constitute confidential personal information.

COMMENT: This provision is not in CORA. The Judicial Branch protects individual signatures because they can be misappropriated and subject to improper and illegal use.

(5) Contracts and assignment letters related to the Senior Judge Program unless confidential personal information has been redacted.

COMMENT: The Senior Judge Program is unique to the Judicial Branch, and the Judicial Branch has an interest in protecting the confidential personal information of judges in the Senior Judge Program.

(6) Financial records of judges and justices, Judicial Branch employees, or payees, unless confidential personal information has been redacted.

COMMENT: The rule is intended to protect the confidential personal information of judges and justices, Judicial Branch employees, and payees. Judges and justices are required to provide periodic financial disclosures to the Secretary of State. §§ 24-6-202, 203, C.R.S. (2015).

(7) Written communication from the public implying that the author intended the communication to be confidential and written communication from the public for the purpose of requesting assistance with personal matters affecting the author that are not publicly known, as well as any communication from the Judicial Branch in response.

COMMENT: The Judicial Branch regularly receives unsolicited correspondence from the public with highly personal information. This provision recognizes that disclosure of these personal communications may be contrary to the public interest. CORA contains a similar provision regarding correspondence between a constituent and an elected official on a personal and private matter. § 24-72-202(6)(a)(II)(C), C.R.S. (2015).

(8) Records related to legislation, including documents related to fiscal notes, proposed or introduced legislation, and the drafting of bills or amendments.

COMMENT: CORA addresses drafts of legislation and documents relating to drafting as part of its ''work product'' exception to disclosure. § 24-72-202(6.5)(b), C.R.S. (2015). The Judicial Branch takes a similar approach here.

(9) All data and records pertaining to administration of a licensing or certification examination, including application materials, test questions, applicant answers, scoring keys, all grading information and materials, and graded answers.

COMMENT: This provision is not in CORA. The Judicial Branch administers certain licensing and certification examinations, including the bar examination for attorneys. This provision recognizes that disclosure of exam materials or individual application materials may be contrary to the public interest.

(10) Security records, including records regarding security plans developed or maintained by the Judicial Branch, such as:

(A) Details of security plans and arrangements, investigation reports, audit reports, assessments reports, specific incident reports, warnings, investigations, emergency plans, building floor plans and blueprints, building access details, equipment, visitor and vendor logs, surveillance, network and systems topology, and network and systems security design;

(B) Reports of loss that relate to security measures;

(C) Any records of the intelligence information or security procedures of any sheriff, prosecuting attorney, or other law enforcement agency, or investigatory files compiled for any law enforcement purpose related to security measures;

(D) Portions of records of the expenditure of public moneys containing details of security plans and arrangements or investigations. Records of the expenditure of public moneys on security arrangements or investigations, including contracts for security plans and arrangements and records related to the procurement of, budgeting for, or expenditures on security systems, are otherwise available for inspection; and

(E) Any record provided by another public entity that contains details of security arrangements or investigations. The Judicial Branch custodian must refer a request to inspect the record to the public entity that provided the record and shall disclose to the requestor the name of the public entity.

This paragraph (10) does not prohibit the custodian from transferring records containing details of security arrangements or investigations to the Division of Homeland Security and Emergency Management in the Department of Public Safety, the governing body of any city, county, or other political subdivision of the state, or any federal, state, or local law enforcement agency. The custodian shall not transfer any record received from a nongovernmental entity without the prior written consent of the entity unless such information is already publicly available.

COMMENT: CORA contains a similar provision. § 24-72-204(2)(a)(VIII), C.R.S. (2015). This rule provides more specific detail on the types of security records maintained by the Judicial Branch.

Notwithstanding any provision to the contrary in this subsection (b), the custodian shall deny inspection of any record that is confidential by federal statute or regulation, state statute, court rule, or court order.

(c) Must Deny Inspection. Unless otherwise provided by federal statute or regulation, state statute, court rule, or court order, the custodian must deny inspection of the following records:

(1) Medical, mental health, sociological, and scholastic achievement data on individual persons and groups from which individuals can be identified, unless requested by the person in interest.

(2) Personnel files.

This paragraph (2) does not prevent the person in interest from requesting information from his or her own personnel file or from granting written, signed permission for a third party to access specific components of his or her personnel file that are subject to inspection by the employee.

(3) (A) Any records of sexual harassment complaints and investigations, whether or not such records are maintained as part of a personnel file; except that, an administrative agency investigating the complaint may, upon a showing of necessity to the custodian of records, gain access to information necessary to the investigation of such a complaint. This paragraph shall not apply to records of sexual harassment complaints and investigations that are included in court files and records of court proceedings. Disclosure of all or a part of any records of sexual harassment complaints and investigations to the person in interest is permissible to the extent that the disclosure can be made without permitting the identification, as a result of the disclosure, of any individual involved. This paragraph shall not preclude disclosure of all or part of the results of an investigation of the general employment policies and procedures of an agency, office, department, or division, to the extent that the disclosure can be made without permitting the identification, as a result of the disclosure, of any individual involved.

(B) A person in interest under this paragraph (3) includes the person making a complaint and the person whose conduct is the subject of such a complaint.

(C) A person in interest may make a record maintained pursuant to this paragraph (3) available for public inspection when such record supports the contention that a publicly reported, written, printed, or spoken allegation of sexual harassment against such person is false.

(4) Letters of reference.

(5) Trade secrets and proprietary information including copyrighted and trademarked materials, and other intellectual property constituting trade secrets and proprietary information; software programs; network and systems architectural designs; network, system, and individual login and logon credentials and passwords; source code; source documentation; project management materials developed or maintained by the Judicial Branch; information in tangible or intangible form relating to released and unreleased Judicial Branch software or hardware, user interface specifications, use case documents, images and design screens, database design structures and architecture; records of investigations conducted by Judicial Information Security, records of the intelligence information or security procedures relating to security events, incidents, or breach, and security structure, architecture, procedures, policies, and investigations; the Judicial Branch's original design ideas; the Judicial Branch's non-public business policies and practices relating to software development and use; and the terms and conditions of any actual or proposed license agreement or other agreement concerning the Judicial Branch's products and licensing negotiations.

This paragraph (5) does not prohibit the custodian from transferring records to the Colorado Chief Information Security Officer or other state or federal agencies as determined to be necessary by the custodian for information security purposes.

COMMENT: CORA contains a similar provision. § 24-72-204(3)(a)(IV), C.R.S. (2015). This provision of the rule is broader than CORA and contains additional protection of information technology records, including trade secrets and proprietary information. The Judicial Branch relies heavily on its Information Technology infrastructure and has invested in proprietary systems that may not be subject to disclosure.

(6) Library and museum records contributed by private persons, to the extent of any limitations placed thereon as conditions of such contributions.

(7) Privileged information; confidential legal, commercial, financial, geological, or geophysical data; and confidential personal information.

(8) Names, addresses, e-mail addresses, telephone numbers, and personal financial information of users of public facilities or cultural services that are owned and operated by the Judicial Branch. This paragraph does not prohibit the publication of such information in an aggregate or statistical form if the identity, location, or habits of individuals are not revealed. This paragraph does not prohibit the custodian from transmitting data to any agent of an investigative branch of a federal agency or any criminal justice agency as defined in section 24-72-302(3), C.R.S. (2015), who makes a request to the custodian to inspect such records and who asserts that the request for information is reasonably related to an investigation within the scope of the agency's authority and duties.

(9) With the exception of any records that are accessible pursuant to C.R.C.P. 251, any records related to reports of misconduct made to the Office of Attorney Regulation Counsel.

COMMENT: This provision is not in CORA. Records of reports of misconduct made to the Office of Attorney Regulation Counsel are governed by C.R.C.P. 251 and that Rule should not be circumvented by P.A.I.R.R. 2.

(10) Useful Public Service supervision files. This paragraph does not prevent the disclosure of records related to nonprofit agencies partnering with the Judicial Branch in the Useful Public Service program once signature verification pages have been redacted.

COMMENT: This provision is not in CORA. Useful Public Service supervision files are unique to the Judicial Branch.

(11) Portions of records that reveal a crime victim's confidential personal information.

COMMENT: This provision is not in CORA. This rule recognizes the confidentiality concerns of crime victims and is intended to protect their safety, security, and confidential personal information.

(12) Juror records, except as provided by federal or state statute, court rule, or court order. This paragraph (12) does not prohibit the publication or disclosure of information in de-identified aggregate or statistical form.

COMMENT: This provision is not in CORA. Juror records are unique to the Judicial Branch and must remain confidential to protect juror safety and security. Certain juror records are addressed by statute. §§ 13-71-101 to -145, C.R.S. (2015).

(13) Collection files pertaining to a person, including collections investigator files, with the exception that such files shall be available to the person in interest to the extent permitted by federal statute or regulation, state statute, court rule, or court order. Information regarding restitution collections efforts and payment plans shall be available to the victim(s) of the offender's crime(s) after confidential personal information has been redacted. Aggregate or statistical information related to collection files is available for inspection.

COMMENT: This provision is not in CORA. The Judicial Branch is responsible in many cases for collections and collections investigations related to court costs, fines, fees, and restitution. These files contain confidential personal and financial information. This provision strikes a balance between protection of certain offender financial information and information available to a crime victim owed restitution.

(14) Search warrants that do not have a return of service, except when requested by the law enforcement agency that sought the warrant.

COMMENT: This provision is not in CORA. Search warrant records are unique to the Judicial Branch, and search warrant records without a return of service may contain confidential case or investigation information.

(15) Individual-level responses to surveys conducted by or for the Judicial Branch to collect Judicial Branch performance evaluation information. The aggregate results of such surveys are available for inspection.

COMMENT: This provision is not in CORA. The Judicial Department relies upon honest and frank feedback regarding the performance of the branch. If individual-level responses are not expected to be confidential, individuals may be dissuaded from providing reliable evaluations.

(16) Draft reports and related documents prepared by or for the Judicial Branch for internal use in evaluating the performance of the Judicial Branch.

COMMENT: This provision is consistent with the definition of ''work product'' under CORA. §§ 24-72-202(6), (6.5), C.R.S. (2015).

(17) Reports and related documents prepared by the Judicial Branch to monitor protected party proceedings unless ordered by a judge in a specific court action. Aggregate or statistical information related to protected party proceedings is available for inspection.

COMMENT: This provision is not in CORA. Protected party proceedings are unique to the Judicial Branch, and confidentiality in these cases must be maintained to protect minors and those who do not have the capacity to proceed in court on their own.

(18) Purchasing records related to a service or product purchased from a vendor that are determined to be confidential pursuant to applicable procurement rules. Records related to the purchasing process, including criteria and scoring, are not available for inspection until the purchasing process is finalized and any information identifying the scorekeeper on the scoring sheets has been redacted.

COMMENT: Confidential purchasing records are addressed generally in CORA as confidential commercial and financial information. § 24-72-204(3)(a)(IV), C.R.S. (2015). This provision of the rule specifies more clearly that purchasing records determined to be confidential under the applicable procurement rules cannot be disclosed.

(19) The following financial records:

(A) Identifying bank account information such as bank account number, Public Deposit Protection Act account number, and account owner signature card;

(B) Federal tax identification information including Employer Identification Number; and COMMENT: This provision is not in CORA. The Judicial Branch does not disclose federal tax information.

(C) Financial records that reveal a crime victim's or a witness's confidential personal information.

COMMENT: This provision is not in CORA. The Judicial Branch has a strong interest in protecting the confidential personal information of witnesses and crime victims.

(20) Records regarding an independent contractor's personal financial information and records maintained for the purpose of evaluating an independent contractor's contract with respect to qualifications and performance under the contract, subject to the disclosures allowed under paragraph (18) of this subsection.

(21) Investigation records, such as:

(A) Any record of civil or administrative investigations authorized by federal statute or regulation, state statute, court rule, or court order conducted by the Judicial Branch unless the record is available for inspection pursuant to federal statute or regulation, state statute, court rule, or court order; and

(B) Any record of an internal personnel investigation, except that records of actions taken based on such investigation must be open to inspection. For complaints involving sexual harassment, records of the internal personnel investigation, including records of actions taken based upon such investigation, are not open to inspection except as provided in Section (3)(c)(3). Any records of investigations referred to the Commission on Judicial Discipline are governed by the Colorado Rules of Judicial Discipline.

COMMENT: CORA does not specifically address internal personnel investigations. This rule strikes a balance between providing a thorough and confidential process for investigating personnel issues and disclosing any action taken as a result of the investigation.

(22) Judicial application records submitted by or on behalf of an applicant for any judicial office in any court of record who is not listed on the nominee list certified to the governor as described in article VI, section 20 of the Colorado Constitution, unless local commission rules permit disclosure of such information. Portions of the Judicial Nominating Commission Application for Colorado State Court Judgeship designated as confidential, including letters of reference, are not available for inspection. The public portions of the applications of the nominees on the list certified to the governor are available for inspection until a judicial appointment is made. After a judicial appointment is made, the public portions of the application only of the person appointed are available for inspection.

COMMENT: Judicial application records are unique to the Judicial Branch. However, these applications are similar to applications for an executive position, which are protected from disclosure under CORA. § 24-72-204(3)(a)(XI)(A), C.R.S. (2015). The rule recognizes that some local commission rules may permit disclosure of certain information regarding all applicants, and the rule permits such disclosure.

(23) Work product, including all advisory or deliberative materials assembled for the benefit of the Judicial Branch that express an opinion or are deliberative in nature and are communicated for the purpose of assisting the Judicial Branch in performing its duties, such as:

(A) Communication, notes, and memoranda that relate to or serve as background information for such duties; and

(B) Preliminary drafts and discussion copies of documents that express a decision, determination, or conclusion by the Judicial Branch.

(24) Records protected under the common law governmental or deliberative process privilege, if the material is so candid or personal that public disclosure is likely to stifle honest and frank discussion within the Judicial Branch, unless the privilege has been waived. In some circumstances, public disclosure of such records may cause substantial injury to the public interest. If any administrative record is withheld pursuant to this paragraph, the custodian must provide a sworn statement describing each record withheld, explaining why each such document is privileged and why disclosure would cause substantial injury to the public interest. If the requestor so requests, the custodian must apply to the district court for an order permitting him or her to restrict disclosure. The application shall be subject to the procedures and burden of proof provided for in subsection (d) of this section. All persons entitled to claim the privilege with respect to the records in issue shall be given notice of the proceedings and shall have the right to appear and be heard. In determining whether disclosure of the records would cause substantial injury to the public interest the court shall weigh, based on the circumstances presented in the particular case, the public interest in honest and frank discussion within government and the beneficial effects of public scrutiny upon the quality of governmental decision-making and public confidence therein.

(25) Trial and appellate court memoranda, drafts of opinions and orders, court conference records, notes, and other written materials of a similar nature prepared by judges or court staff acting on behalf of or at the direction of a judge or court as part of the judicial decision-making process utilized in disposing of cases and controversies before Colorado courts unless filed as part of the court record and thus subject to Chief Justice Directive 05-01.

COMMENT: This provision is not in CORA.

(d) Petition for Order Permitting Restriction.

(1) In addition to any of the foregoing, if in the opinion of the custodian access to the contents of a record would do substantial injury to the public interest, notwithstanding the fact that the record might otherwise be available for inspection, or if the custodian is unable, in good faith, after exercising reasonable diligence, and after reasonable inquiry, to determine if this rule restricts access to the record, the custodian may petition the district court of the district in which the record or the custodian is located for an order permitting restriction of access to the record or for the court to determine if access to the record is restricted. A hearing on the petition shall be held at the earliest practical time. The person seeking access to the record must be served with notice of the hearing pursuant to the Colorado Rules of Civil Procedure and has the right to appear and be heard.

(2) In the case of a record otherwise available for inspection pursuant to this Rule, after a hearing the court may, upon a finding that access would cause substantial injury to the public interest, issue an order authorizing the custodian to restrict access. In the case of a record that may be restricted from access pursuant to this rule, after a hearing the court may, upon a finding that access to the record is restricted, issue an order restricting access. In an action brought pursuant to this subsection (d), the custodian has the burden of proof.

(3) The court costs and attorney fees provision of section 5 does not apply to petitions filed pursuant to this subsection (d) if the custodian proves and the court finds that the custodian, in good faith, after exercising reasonable diligence, and after making reasonable inquiry, was unable to determine if this rule restricts access to the record without a ruling by the court.

SECTION 4

PROCEDURE TO ACCESS RECORDS

COMMENT: This rule creates a different process than CORA for accessing records but with similar timeframes. Under the rule, the Judicial Branch responds to a request for inspection within three business days of receipt of the request. Certain extenuating circumstances specified in the rule may require additional time for a response. Any fees charged must be consistent with Chief Justice Directive 06-01, but the fees are similar to the fees under CORA.

(a) Request for Inspection. Each Judicial Branch agency will develop and make information available to the public outlining how to obtain access to administrative records pursuant to this rule. Any request for inspection must be made in accordance with the adopted procedures.

(b) Response. Within three business days of receipt of a request for inspection, the custodian must provide one or more of the following responses:

(1) The record is available for inspection.

(A) When a record is available for inspection, the custodian must provide access to a record or provide written notice of a time and location for inspection of the record within a reasonable time. Production is subject to payment of any fee required under subsection (c) of this section; and

(B) The custodian may determine whether the record will be provided in print or electronic format. If the requestor is unable to use or access records provided in electronic format, the custodian will provide a copy, printout, or photograph of the record.

(2) The record is not available for inspection.

(A) When a record is not available for inspection, the custodian must provide written notice that:

(i) The record requested is not maintained by the custodian to whom the request was made;

(ii) The request did not provide information sufficient to identify the record sought; or

(iii) The record is not available for inspection pursuant to section 3 of this rule.

(B) If the custodian denies access to a record, the requestor may request a written statement of the grounds for the denial. Upon receipt the custodian must, within a reasonable time, provide a written statement setting forth the grounds for denial.

(3) The custodian requires an additional seven business days to respond because extenuating circumstances exist. A finding that extenuating circumstances exist must be made in writing by the custodian and provided to the requestor. Extenuating circumstances exist only when:

(A) A broadly stated request is made that encompasses all or substantially all of a large category of records and the request is without sufficient specificity to allow the custodian reasonably to prepare or gather the records within the three-day period; or

(B) A broadly stated request is made that encompasses all or substantially all of a large category of records and the agency is unable to prepare or gather the records within the three-day period because all or substantially all of the resources necessary to respond to the request are dedicated to meeting an impending deadline or to a period of peak demand that is either unique or not predicted to recur more frequently than once a month; or

(C) The request involves such a large volume of records that the custodian cannot reasonably prepare or gather the records within the three-day period without substantially interfering with the custodian's obligation to perform other responsibilities.

(c) Fees.

(1) A custodian may impose a fee in response to a record request if the custodian has, before the date of receiving the request, either posted on the custodian's website or otherwise made publicly available a written policy that specifies the applicable conditions and fees for research, retrieval, redaction, copying, and transmission of a record. Assessment of fees shall be consistent with Chief Justice Directive 06-01. Where the fee for a certified copy or other copy, printout, or photograph of a record is specifically prescribed by federal statute or regulation, state statute, court rule, or court order, the specific fee shall apply.

(2) The custodian may notify the requestor that a copy of the record is available but will only be produced once the custodian either receives payment or makes arrangements for receiving payment for all costs associated with records research, retrieval, redaction, copying, and transmission and for all other fees lawfully imposed.

SECTION 5

RESOLUTION OF DISPUTES

(a) Any person denied inspection of a record under this rule may petition the district court of the district in which the record or the custodian is located for an order directing the custodian to show cause why the custodian should not permit inspection of the record. At least three business days before filing a petition with the district court, the person who has been denied inspection of a record must file a written notice with the custodian who denied inspection of the record informing the custodian that the person intends to file a petition with the district court. A hearing on a petition shall be held at the earliest practicable time.

(1) Unless the court finds that the denial of the right of inspection was proper, it shall order the custodian to permit such inspection and shall award court costs and reasonable attorney fees to the prevailing requestor in an amount to be determined by the court. No court costs and attorney fees may be awarded to a person who is a party engaged in litigation with a Judicial Branch agency and who petitions the court for an order pursuant to this section 5 for access to a record of the Judicial Branch agency if the court finds that the record sought is related to the pending litigation and is discoverable pursuant to applicable rules of procedure.

(2) If the court finds that the denial of the right of inspection was proper, the court shall award court costs and reasonable attorney fees to the custodian if the court finds that the petition was frivolous, vexatious, or groundless.

(b) In defense against a petition for an order permitting inspection, the custodian may raise any issue that could have been raised and is not limited by any response under sections 3 or 4 of this rule.

Rule 3. Media Coverage of Court Proceedings

(a) Expanded Media Coverage: A judge may authorize expanded media coverage of court proceedings, subject to the guidelines set forth below.

(1) Definitions. As used in this section, unless the context otherwise requires:

(A) ''Proceeding'' means any trial, hearing, or any other matter held in open court which the public is entitled to attend.

(B) ''Photograph'' and ''photography'' means all recording or broadcasting of visual images, by means of still photographs, videotape, television broadcasts, motion pictures, or otherwise.

(C) ''Expanded media coverage'' means any photography or audio recording of proceedings.

(D) ''Judge'' means the justice, judge, magistrate, or other judicial officer presiding over the proceedings. In proceedings with more than one judge presiding, any decision required shall be made by a majority of the judges.

(E) ''Media'' means any news gathering or reporting agency and the individual persons involved, and includes newspapers, radio, television, radio and television networks, news services, magazines, trade papers, in-house publications, professional journals, or any other news reporting or news gathering agency whose function it is to inform the public or some segment thereof.

(2) Standards for Authorizing Coverage. In determining whether expanded media coverage should be permitted, a judge shall consider the following factors:

(A) Whether there is a reasonable likelihood that expanded media coverage would interfere with the rights of the parties to a fair trial;

(B) Whether there is a reasonable likelihood that expanded media coverage would unduly detract from the solemnity, decorum and dignity of the court; and

(C) Whether expanded media coverage would create adverse effects which would be greater than those caused by traditional media coverage.

(3) Limitations on Expanded Media Coverage. Notwithstanding an authorization to conduct expanded media coverage of a proceeding, there shall be no:

(A) Expanded media coverage of pretrial hearings in criminal cases, except advisements and arraignments;

(B) Expanded media coverage of jury voir dire;

(C) Audio recording or ''zoom'' close-up photography of bench conferences;

(D) Audio recording or close-up photography of communications between counsel and client or between co-counsel;

(E) Expanded media coverage of in camera hearings;

(F) Close-up photography of members of the jury.

(4) Authority to Impose Restrictions on Expanded Media Coverage. A judge may restrict or limit expanded media coverage as may be necessary to preserve the dignity of the court or to protect the parties, witnesses, or jurors. A judge may terminate or suspend expanded media coverage at any time upon making findings of fact that: (1) rules established under this Rule or additional rules imposed by the judge have been violated; or (2) substantial rights of individual participants or rights to a fair trial will be prejudiced by such coverage if it is allowed to continue.

(5) Conditions for Coverage. Expanded media coverage shall be conducted only under the following conditions:

(A) Equipment Limitations.

(i) Video. Only one person at a time shall be permitted to operate a videotape, television, or motion picture camera. There shall be only one such camera at a time in the courtroom, except that, at the discretion of the judge, the camera operator may have a second camera. The camera operator may use a tripod, but shall not change location while court is in session.

(ii) Audio. The court's audio system shall be used if technically suitable and, in that event, there must be no interference with the court's use of its system. If the court's system is not technically suitable, then the person conducting expanded media coverage may install an audio recording system at his or her own expense upon first obtaining approval of the judge. All microphones and related wiring shall be unobtrusive and shall not interfere with the movement of those in the courtroom.

(iii) Still Cameras. Only one person at a time shall be permitted to operate still cameras, which shall make as little noise as possible. The still photographer may use a tripod, but shall not change location while court is in session.

(iv) Lighting. No movie lights, flash attachments, or sudden lighting changes shall be permitted during a proceeding. No modification or addition of lighting equipment shall be permitted without the permission of the judge.

(v) Operating Signals. No visible or audible light or signal (tally light) shall be used on any equipment.

(B) Pooling Arrangements. The media shall be solely responsible for designating one media representative to conduct each of the categories of expanded media coverage listed in subsection (I) of this section, and for arranging an open and impartial distribution scheme with a distribution point located outside of the courtroom. If no agreement can be reached on either of these matters, then there shall be no expanded media coverage of the type for which no pooling agreement has been made. Neither judges nor other court personnel shall be called upon to resolve any disputes concerning such pooling arrangements.

(C) Conduct of Media Representatives. Persons conducting expanded media coverage shall conduct themselves in a manner consistent with the decorum and dignity of the courtroom. The following practices shall apply:

(i) Equipment employed to provide expanded media coverage shall be positioned and operated so as to minimize any distraction;

(ii) Identifying marks, call letters, logos, symbols, and legends shall be concealed on all equipment. Persons operating such equipment shall not wear clothing bearing any such identifying information;

(iii) Equipment used to provide expanded media coverage shall not be placed in, or removed from, the courtroom while court is in session. No film, videotape, or lens shall be changed within a courtroom while court is in session.

(6) Procedures. The following procedures shall be followed in obtaining authorization for expanded media coverage:

(A) Request for Expanded Media Coverage. A written request shall be submitted to the judge at least one day before expanded media coverage is requested to begin, unless a longer or shorter time is required or permitted by the judge. Copies of the request shall be given to counsel for each party participating in the proceeding. The request shall include the following:

(i) The name, number, date and time of the proceeding;

(ii) The type (audio, video or still photography) of expanded media coverage requested and a description of the pooling arrangements required by section (e)(II), if any, including the identity of the designated representatives.

(B) Objections. Any party or witness may lodge with the judge a written objection to expanded media coverage of all or a portion of a proceeding.

(C) Judicial Authorization. The judge shall rule on a request or objection within a reasonable time prior to the proceeding or promptly after the request or objection if the proceeding has begun. The ruling shall be made on the record and the reasons therefore set forth briefly.

(D) The media or any witness may not appeal, or seek review by original proceeding, the granting or denial of expanded media coverage. A party to the case may seek review of a ruling by original proceeding, if otherwise appropriate, or by post-trial appeal.

(b) Other Use of Media.

(1) A judge may authorize the use of electronic or photographic means for the perpetuation of a record, or for purposes of judicial administration.

(2) A judge may authorize the broadcasting, televising, recording, or photographing of investitive, ceremonial, or naturalization proceedings.

litigation with a Judicial Branch agency and who petitions the court for an order pursuant to this section 5 for access to a record of the Judicial Branch agency if the court finds that the record sought is related to the pending litigation and is discoverable pursuant to applicable rules of procedure.

(2) If the court finds that the denial of the right of inspection was proper, the court shall award court costs and reasonable attorney fees to the custodian if the court finds that the petition was frivolous, vexatious, or groundless.

(b) In defense against a petition for an order permitting inspection, the custodian may raise any issue that could have been raised and is not limited by any response under sections 3 or 4 of this rule.
