Ceremonies to honor veterans

BY CHERYL BURKE
NEWS-TIMES

The Morehead City Historical Preservation Society will sponsor two ceremonies Monday, Nov. 12 at Bayview Cemetery in Morehead City to honor not only American veterans, but three British sailors who were killed during World War II defending the county's coast.

The first ceremony, a Day of Remembrance Service, will begin at 10:30 a.m. at the graves of the three British sailors. The sailors are buried in the cemetery on the west side of 20th Street.

At the closing of that ceremony, the group, led by a bagpiper, will walk across 20th Street to the Veterans Memorial, on the east side, to honor American veterans at 11 a.m.

Morehead City Historical Preservation Vice Chairman Bob Guthrie said the organization wants to honor American veterans who are willing to die for their country, as well as the British sailors who gave their lives defending America and Carteret County.

"It's important that we realize we owe a debt of gratitude to our veterans, and to the British who helped defend our shores during World War II," Mr. Guthrie said.

Veterans Day was originally known as Armistice Day, marking the anniversary of the end of World War I, which ended at the 11th hour of the 11th day of the 11th month of 1918, when the Armistice with Germany went into effect. It then evolved into the current Veterans Day holiday in 1954.

As for the British sailors who will be honored during the Day of Remembrance service, they died when their vessel, the oil tanker San Delfino, was torpedoed and sunk by a German U-boat offshore April 9, 1942, according to dates on the sailors' graves and preservation chairman Rodney Kemp.

The names of the soldiers are John L. Fisher, sailor Royal Navy, age 25; Maldwyn Jones, gunner, Royal Artillery, age 22; and an unknown sailor, Royal Navy, who is speculated to be R. Wyatt.

Review: ‘New Amsterdam’ strikes emotional chord

BY MEGAN LEWIS

TWM

Gripping scripts paired with skilled acting can elicit emotion from even the most dispassionate viewer. Television dramas, in fact, often set this sort of response as a goal. However, dramatic shows are saturated with victims of heinous crimes, an influx of terror and enough illnesses to fuel nightmares for decades. The glut of so-called dramatic moments has robbed many shows of their power to affect viewers.

Therefore, when NBC’s new medical drama “New Amsterdam” made its debut with a possible case of bioterrorism, it seemed like business as usual.

As the pilot episode continued, however, the writing and acting melded in that magical way they sometimes do to create something ... real.

For those overly attached to keeping their eyes dry, this might not be a good option. Of course, crying once is a fluke. It’s only if the show makes a viewer cry several times they should take notice. Just wait for episode 6.

“New Amsterdam” focuses on Ryan Eggold’s character Dr. Max Goodwin, who fulfills his first day as the medical director at the fictional titular New York-based public hospital during the pilot episode.

He’s apparently one in a revolving door of medical directors, but staff members who are paying attention quickly realize he’s different.

“How can I help?” is his mantra.

As the audience follows Dr. Goodwin on his first day, they also meet more key characters who round out this ensemble: Dr. Laura Bloom, played by Janet Montgomery, Freema Agyeman’s Dr. Helen Sharpe, psychiatrist Iggy Frome, played by Tyler Labine, Jocko Sims’ cardiac surgeon Dr. Floyd Reynolds and neurologist Dr. Anil Kapoor (Anupam Kher).

As the episode continues, all of these actors deliver strong dialogue, and several take full advantage of emotional scenes.

However, what really might hit viewers in the feels is the reality of the over-arching dilemma: a broken medical system.

Dramas always try to draw on modern events with varying amounts of success.

Where many medical dramas try to show doctors’ lives behind the scenes and instead fall into the trap of serial hookups in back closets, this one goes bigger. It goes all the way up to the corporate, bureaucratic side of medicine – to the fundraising and parties, public relations and media.

“You know, we all feel like the system is too big to change, but we are the system, and we need to change. Let’s be doctors again,” Dr. Goodwin says on his first day.

Where is his real-life counterpart? That’s what the audience might find themselves asking. That and its strong characters are where this show finds its power.

Who wouldn’t be attracted by that sort of idealism?

In a nation that feels its squaring off against a faceless “they” in many arenas – politics, medicine, social services and more – many respond like Dr. Reynolds, who says, “They’re not gonna let you come in here and just help people.”

Dr. Goodwin simply responds, “Let’s help as many as we can before they figure us out.”

Indeed, Carteret County is facing its own bureaucratic nightmare after Hurricane Florence. Confusion over who is responsible for what and what can be done by whom has ruled the atmosphere.

What can little-old-us do?

This idea is represented best in “New Amsterdam” when the audience is introduced to Jemma, played by Lizzy DeClement. Jemma is stuck in the foster system at its most pernicious: every family she bounces to is abusive or similarly unfit.

Dr. Frome, who Mr. Labine plays as a big-hearted teddy bear, is desperate to help but frustrated at every turn by bureaucracy.

“If you can’t help Jemma as a doctor, then just help her as a human being,” Dr. Goodwin says.

“Am I allowed to do that?” Dr. Frome asks.

“You are now.”

This idealistic approach to the material is what ultimately sets “New Amsterdam” apart and elevates it emotionally and intellectually.

Any show that causes its audience to meditate on current issues and question the status quo while also evoking an emotional response deserves to run as long as its actors have breath.

NBC has ordered 22 episodes for the first season of “New Amsterdam,” which was inspired by the nonfiction book Twelve Patients: Life and Death at Bellevue Hospital. New episodes, averaging 45 minutes each, air every Tuesday on NBC and are available to stream the next day on Hulu. The next episode will air Tuesday, Nov. 13.

Library seeks help

All county sixth- through 12th-grade students are invited to become a Shelf Reader volunteer at the Carteret County Public Library in Beaufort.

The library staff is currently busy "reading" the shelves to check for ownership, proper alphabetical sequencing and Dewey Decimal numerical sequencing, as well as the condition of all the books in the collections.

Each book has to be considered individually.

In addition, the staff is designing games, writing and recording book reviews, collecting information and adding to its web presence.

"All of these tasks require careful attention, hours and hours of manpower and many young and innovative minds," staff members said in a release.

For those interested, beginning Saturday, Nov. 10, Shelf Readers will hold an organizational meeting in the Young Adult section of library from 10 to 11:30 a.m.

Following training, a shelf reader should make a commitment of every other Saturday for an hour and a half a day.

For those who cannot volunteer on Saturdays, hours may be donated any time the library is open once the training program is complete.

Give the library a call at 252-728-2050 to register for training. Leave a name and number with the front desk librarian, attention Josie Boyette and the Shelf

Build living shorelines on workdays; good method to protect properties

The N.C. Coastal Federation needs volunteers to help build a living shoreline in Newport from 10 a.m. to noon Wednesday, Nov. 14.

Living shorelines are an erosion control method that create habitats for hundreds of marine creatures.

This particular living shoreline will be built using bags of recycled oyster shells.

The oyster shells will also attract new oysters to the shoreline to help clean and filter the water.

This work can be physically demanding, as volunteers will be passing and placing 10 pound bags of oyster shells along the shoreline.

Due to the rigor of the work, these events are most sustainable for adults and children over 12.

Volunteers will meet at 166 Sunny Point Lane on both days and must wear closed-toe shoes that can get wet and muddy.

Snacks, water, sunscreen and bug spray will be provided.

The federation and volunteers will be constructing this living shoreline in partnership with the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

This partnership allows individual homeowners to apply for assistance to build living shorelines and promote healthy coastal waters along our coast.

To register for either of these workdays, visit nccoast.org/events.

For more information on living shorelines, check out the Living Shorelines Academy.

The Living Shorelines Academy is an online exchange of information that encourages the use of environmentally-friendly living shoreline erosion control practices to protect valuable waterfront property.

Guardian Ad Litem needs volunteers

The Guardian ad Litem Program in Carteret County is in need of 20 additional volunteers to meet the current need of effective child advocacy for existing cases.

According to a release from the organization, the recent storms have displaced whole families, left some families forced to live in less than ideal situations for children and created additional stressors for families teetering on being able to effectively meet their children's needs.

Disruption of families has resulted in all service agencies in the county taxed for resources to meet needs.

Guardians Ad Litem are trained volunteers who speak for children's best interest in court.

When children have been exposed to abuse and or are subjects of neglect, petitions are filed to remove children from those circumstances.

Guardians ad Litem legally represent the best interest of those children and advocate for permanence as quickly as possible.

Thirty hours of training is required to be an effective advocate in the Guardian ad Litem role and each volunteer assignment typically lasts for 18 months.

During that 18-month commitment, volunteers are required to physically visit with the children assigned to them at a minimum of monthly, but most GALs see the children assigned to them more frequently.

Court attendance is an additional mandated component of this role and usually takes place one time every 60 days of service.

To learn more about this need in the community and how to help, call Gail Horne at 252-504-4525 or visit volunteerforgal.org and submit an application.

Once the application is received, volunteers will be contacted for an in person interview to determine how they might be able to help an abused or neglected child in Carteret County.

SUDOKU

Here's How It Works:

Sudoku puzzles are formatted as a 9x9 grid, broken down into nine 3x3 boxes. To solve a sudoku, the numbers 1 through 9 must fill each row, column and box. Each number can appear only once in each row, column and box. You can figure out the order in which the numbers will appear by using the numeric clues already provided in the boxes. The more numbers you name, the easier it gets to solve the puzzle!

Wild Horses of Shackleford Banks opens at local gallery

The third annual art show featuring the wild horses of Shackleford Banks opened Oct. 13 at the Carolina Artist Gallery in Morehead City.

A gathering of artists and horse-minded souls came to view approximately 35 paintings, photographs and mixed media pieces which will remain on display until Saturday, Dec. 1, two weeks longer than originally scheduled.

This art show was scheduled to open Oct. 15, but Hurricane Florence forced a postponement. Artists submitted their work, and the work had been hung. The gallery was emptied prior to the storm, and artists returned their art after the storm.

The show's director, Crystal Wasley, thanked the artists for the extra work this entailed.

A share of the proceeds from sale of the artwork will go to support the Foundation for Shackleford Horses Inc.

The president of the Foundation is Margaret Poindexter, but was she was unable to attend the opening.

Park ranger Dr. Sue Stuska from the Cape Lookout National Seashore spoke to the guests about the foundation and reported all of the horses of Shackleford Banks made it through Hurricane Florence and Hurricane Michael.

While she explained that the horses take care of themselves, Dr. Stuska stressed that if an animal is seen either injured or sick to call the foundation and describe the animal, with a picture if possible and the location of the animal.

She also reminded spectators to respect the animals by not getting too close or disturbing their rights to peaceful, safe existence.

She conducts day trips to teach about these special horses and their environment.

During the reception, the show winners were announced. Artists could win first through third place and honorable mention.

In photography, Karen Mault won first place for "Peek-a-Boo;" Ike Terrell won second place for "The Look;" Paula O'Malley won third for "Against the Wind;" and Norm Kennely claimed honorable mention for "Quartet."

In painting, Diana Vincent took first for "Ginger Foal by the Watering Hole;" Dorothy McLennan won second place for "Hard Days Work;" Leslie Anthony

Lights exhibition illuminates NCSU Arboretum

For seven nights in November, the magical lighting exhibition Moonlight in the Garden will illuminate and showcase JC Raulston Arboretum at N.C. State University.

Sponsored by the N.C. Agricultural Foundation and presented by Southern Lights of Raleigh and more than a dozen suppliers, the exhibition is a once-per-year occasion to see the botanical gardens and Arboretum at night.

Exhibition dates are 6-9 p.m. Thursday-Saturday, Nov. 8-10 and Nov. 15-17.

"Moonlight in the Garden is an opportunity for us to light up the garden and share what a magical place the Arboretum can be at night," said Mark Weathington, Director of JC Raulston Arboretum in a recent release. "Children love being in the garden. One of the most rewarding aspects of the exhibition is the attraction of children, students, and people of all ages.

"Along with the colorful and festive lighting exhibition, Moonlight in the Garden is a chance to bundle up, welcome the fall season to North Carolina, dine at the best food trucks, enjoy the live music, have some hot cider, and roast marshmallows over the fire pits," Mr. Weathington continued.

Founded in 1976 and featuring more than 7,000 different types of plants, JC Raulston Arboretum is one of the most diverse botanical gardens in North America, based on benchmarking by the American Public Gardens Association.

Now ranked in the top 95 percentile in plant diversity, the Arboretum's mission includes plant collection, research, distribution and education.

"Nature brings joy to life and illumination at night reveals new dimensions of nature," said John Garner, volunteer project chair and President of Southern Lights of Raleigh. "Moonlight in the Garden is a huge lighting exhibition, using over five miles of cable powered by 20 transformers to showcase the Arboretum with the latest and best lighting technologies."

Tickets are limited, and advance reservations are recommended online at <https://securelb.imodules.com/s/1209/events/plain.aspx?sid=1209&gid=214&pgid=6120&cid=9953&Bledit=1&dids=997>.

Advance tickets are $10 for college students and members of the Arboretum, $20 for non-members, and $5 for children under 12. Prices are $5 higher at the gate, if available, except for children under 12.

Proceeds from Moonlight in the Garden will benefit daily operations of the JC Raulston Arboretum. Moonlight in the Garden is sponsored by, and fundraising efforts operate, under the auspices of the N.C. Agricultural Foundation Inc., a 501(c)3 nonprofit organization.

Luminaries light a path through the JC Raulston Arboretum at N.C. State University. This exhibition called Moonlight in the Garden will be open from 6-9 p.m. Thursdays-Saturdays, Nov. 8-10 and Nov. 15-17. (Contributed photo)
