Dream Catcher

I believe that dreams are very important. I believe that we all should sit down and think about our dreams and try to interpret them. A fun activity that I like to do, to help me interpret my dreams is: make a dream catcher. While making a dream catcher you have time to think about your dreams and it also helps you relieve any stress that you could have. It only takes about a half hour but it really helps you sort through your thoughts. It really calmed me down and made me forget about any problems I had going on. While I was making my dream catcher I also thought about my future and how in less than seven months I will graduate. It made me think about my future as an adult and what I want to become. I believe that everyone should take some time out of their busy schedules and sit down to make a dream catcher.

2. What's Your Dream? I have a horrible long-term memory. One of the only things I remember as a kid was our High School reading buddies. We tried to further that idea with something other kids look up to. My goal was to try to get kids more excited about reading. Watching the kid's reaction was enlightening to what really gets kids excited. It wasn't even the superhero persona. It was the attention we were giving them. They feel special that someone actually took time to spend time with them. To really get kids excited about reading, we just need to invest our time with them. Reading Club bought 15 books to donate to the library after we read them.

Salt. That's all I can smell and taste, whether it be from the ocean itself or just all the food that's covered in it. I'm not sure probably both. "Hey! Why are you out here so late?" The sea is calm and the cards are in the hole. Johnson, his voice I would know from anywhere. Not that I knew him well, it's just the only one aboard that is not Spanish other than me. "I'm out here for two reasons, the first is I don't play cards, and the second is that I like anyone here." Only one of those was true. I just wanted to end the conversation. Johnson was about to open his mouth, the Captain yelled "Last Call, Landing gear we need to be back up with what we use." Thank God he said that because now I had an excuse to stop talking. I walk to my bunk area a little light on the contacts but it works I heard no gun it, it ceased loudly. I need to stop damn that, but what do I care. Not my problems if it breaks. Before my execution finally stop away my conscience I heard "She's such a lover I don't know who said it but I didn't care. All it really was damn fight I am." The next few days were mostly a blur I didn't really care about the events on the ship but rather I was going through my life in my head.

When I was a younger girl I was always told about stories of brave knights saving princesses, attractive damsels, and what told that that/believe day I may meet a knight who sweeps me off my feet, though I only look out it once I always wanted to be the knight saving the princess. In the time I said it my mother laughed and finally kissed me good night. The night a shaker my life I didn't go right to bed and instead I snuck out of my room, the reason for doing so I can't remember but what I do remember was my father's words. He in great detail expressed how disappointed he was that I was born female. He wanted a boy to carry on the family legacy and to teach the ways of the sword. He had left it all in a chest in our spare room everything that he would use to train me. My mother was then behind for my name. In a way my name was an insult to him. Thrice she had heard the name from a friend and liked it. Unfortunately dad learned the origin of the name. It meant three wishes reminding her what I wasn't.

HOMEDALE PUBLIC LIBRARY

My name is Nateasha Harris and I am the lead coordinator of the Teens & Tweens Program in Homedale Idaho at our public library. This is my second year incorporating Teen Read Week into our program.

This year the Teens & Tweens have been doing a month-long coin drive to raise money for Make-A-Wish Foundation in honor of the "Turn Dreams into Reality" theme. The money we raise will not go to any child in particular, but rather to the cause in general. Make-A-Wish raises money to turn certain childrens' dreams into reality. These children have diseases, disabilities, etc. that are life-threatening. When Make-A-Wish enters their lives they grant their (presumably) last wish; whether that wish be to go to Disneyland or play ball with their favorite NFL team. Hopefully what money we do raise will help somebody's dream come true.

We also did two Teens & Tweens meetings that I entitled "The Teens & Tweens of the Round Table" during the month of October. It was Nathan Harris's dream to be a noble knight. So the following information was the project the Teens & Tweens participated in for TRW:

- Teen Name: Nathan Harris
- Dream: To be a knight
- Books/Materials used: "The Adventures of King Arthur" by Angela Wilkes, "The Seeing Stone" by Kevin Crossley-Holand, "The Lost Years of Merlin" by T.A. Barron, the "Knights Code of Chivalry" (found online), and more
