Revelle Gov't Plans Announced

"College government must be formed now. It is extremely important to put it into effect--in ten years it will be too late."

As stated by Tom Shepard, newly elected president of the AS, this was the consensus of Provost Paul Saltman, Bob Boyd, and Prof. Walter Kohn at a special convocation of Revelle College held at noon last Monday.

Called to present the report of the Revelle Committee on Student Affairs (COSA), the unprecedented meeting allowed students in USB 2722, 2622 and the HL Auditorium to hear the opinions of four representatives, from the Provost's Office, the Associated Students, the Interhall Council, and the Revelle Faculty.

Provost Saltman announced that petitions will be available this week for the committee of six students who will write a constitution for Revelle's government. On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday next week at noon, open hearings will be held in the South Dining Hall of Revelle Commons to discuss various aspects of the COSA plan.

"The most important aspect of this plan," Saltman said, "is that it brings together the students, faculty and staff into the college concern, and involve the graduate students; it is essential that they participate."

The COSA recommendation, however, is not binding upon Revelle students. "It is only an outline of the ideas and concepts which will eventually be incorporated into a constitution, and

COSA Revelle Plan Revealed

COSA's plan for Revelle government, presented Tuesday, calls for representation from all members of the academic community. They envision a council composed of the College Dean, Resident Dean, Resident Fellow (grad student), three faculty, and six undergraduates - two juniors, two sophomores, and two freshmen.

Their proposals are stated in a series of recommendations. Undergraduate membership would be elective (early in the Spring Quarter), with faculty membership being determined by the Revelle Faculty. Graduate students, now in the process of organizing themselves, will also be represented.

COSA suggests the formation of several standing subcommittees under them--main body, to be called Executive Committees. Some examples are: Budget, Elections and Governmental Revision, Policy and Regulation, and Operational Committee Authorization and Membership.

Subordinate to these Executive Committees will be Operational Committees, of which there will be as many as are needed. These committees will deal with more specific areas, such as Residence Halls, Commuter students, and Student Counseling.

Two other suggestions are included in COSA's report. The first proposes that the future equivalent of ASUCSD be formed by a delegate from the COSA equivalent of each college. The other provides for students being able to petition for an open Town Hall Meeting of COSA.

Open meetings will be held next week on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday in the South Dining Hall to discuss this plan. All students who wish to make a presentation should sign up in the Provost's office with Mr. John Nuber, Resident Fellow in Beagle Hall.

Choice '68 Indicates Firm McCarthy Support

Senator Eugene McCarthy, D-Minn, has won a clear-cut victory over 12 other entries in the "mock election" Choice '68, held April 24 at college campuses across the country.

With votes counted from all but 250 of the 1207 colleges that participated - a total of 1,071,637 votes - McCarthy received 285,988 votes, or 28%. His closest contenders were Sen. Robert Kennedy, D-NY, with 213,832 (20%), Richard Nixon with 197,167 (18%), Gov. Nelson Rockefeller of New York with 115,937 (11%), and President Johnson with 57,362 (5%).

Vice President Hubert Humphrey was not on the ballot, having announced his candidacy too late. However, he received the most write-in votes of any candidate - 13,535 (2%). George Wallace and Ronald Reagan each received about 3%, with Charles Percy getting 1 and 1/2 %.

In a referendum on what course of military action the United States should pursue in Vietnam, 45 per cent of the student voters favored a phased reduction while 21 per cent urged an all-out effort.

Seventeen percent voted for an immediate withdrawal of U.S. forces, 9 per cent wanted an increase in the level of military activity and 7 per cent opted for the current effort.

As for the bombing of Vietnam, the vote was 29 per cent each for permanent cessation and temporary suspension.

Another referendum asked what should be given the highest priority in government spending to meet the urban crisis. In a close vote, education (40 per cent) edged out job training and employment opportunities (39 %). riot control and stricter law enforcement was a distant third, with 12 per cent.

The vote was jointly sponsored by Univac and Time magazine, with the results being tabulated by computer.

Student Power Coming Warns Ex-President Altenhoff

"If the administration and faculty do not start listening to the students, what happened at Columbia will happen at UCSD," warned outgoing AS President Richard Altenhoff at the Installation of New Officers banquet last Monday.

The second annual affair, held in La Jolla, honored the outgoing AS senators and officers and the ten new members of the AS Senate. All three college provosts --Paul Saltman, John Stewart and Armin Rappaport--among other guests, were present.

Altenhoff claimed that student power was possible now only through the seizure of a campus building. "How to avoid someone seizing one of the buildings will be a problem on this campus--this utopia."

As a warning to the new senators, Altenhoff said that the potential of the system of student government is limited. "If you do not accept this, drop out of the Senate."

The senior from Illinois also commented on the lack of respect for student opinion on formulations of rules. "We saw it in the cap and gowns decision. Student opinion was voiced and not listened to. The Chancellor decided we must abide by 'tradition.'"

In his inaugural speech Tom Shepard emphasized that "the AS is for the students. We must do what we think is best. But if by our actions we decrease our power, I will not stand for it."

Bill Eastman stood up before the banquet was ended by master of ceremonies Cris Hollinshead (outgoing Financial Coordinator) and offered a toast to the "starving children of this earth, living in deprived conditions. It will take a lot of convictions to change our course." He deplored the expenditure of AS fees to "stuff our stomachs."

In rebuttal to Eastman, Ralph Hinchcliffe, philanthropist from La Jolla, and personally responsible for planting flowers around the coffee Hut, asked what he had done to aid students. He then asked Altenhoff how he could talk of storming administration build-

Board of Ed. Confronted by Tues. the Ninth

Members of the San Diego community, including a contingent from UCSD's Tuesday the Ninth committee, confronted the Board of Education in regard to the problem of racial imbalance in city schools.

Following a noon rally on campus and a 2:30 rally downtown, a crowd of around 300 persons filed into the auditorium to hear the board meeting.

A white high school student spoke first, calling for student dialogues on the racial system. Then Vernon Fontanet, president of the Black Student's council at San Diego State, demanded more Black representation at higher levels in city schools, and called for an emphasis on racism in history courses. The council moved to consider the requests of the first speaker, but ignored those of the second.

The Citizens' Interracial Council, a community group seeking an improvement in the racial situation, was then represented by Reverend Ed Hansen. He demanded recognition of the fact that de facto segregation exists in San Diego, and a timetable for its elimination.

Take a Lesson From Columbia

Reaction to the assassination of Dr. Martin Luther King was probably quite surprising to many Americans, both the extent of the violence that erupted and the profound and far-reaching effects it has had upon our society. Most probably the recent housing bill would never have passed if the stalling Senators on Capitol Hill had not been suddenly impressed by the urgency of the matter. Unfortunately it seems in this country that some catalyst is necessary to shake people out of their drifting, lethargic apathy before any action is taken.

Within the last week another event has occurred that has emphasized the urgency of a problem. This problem cannot be compared to the civil rights problem by any means. However, the analogy can be extended, for it took a dramatic event to awaken us to it. A discussion of this problem is especially appropriate in this, a student newspaper, as it has overwhelming significance to all members of the academic community. It raises questions that might ultimately call for a complete reappraisal of the current educational system.

The recent student take-over at Columbia University has made us aware of the existence of a new "gap." The situation there brings to light the almost total lack of communication between the administration and the administered. If so-called "official channels" did indeed exist at that university, they were certainly so clogged with bureaucracy and red tape that the administration was not aware of the extent of the students' grievances.

The immediate problem at hand at Columbia was that a group of students felt that the University was wrong in building a new gymnasium on property previously designated as a playground for the children of Harlem. But what was at stake in the long run was the question of the role that students deserve to play in the university of which they are a part. Should the policy of a university community like Columbia, which consists of more than 27,000 people, be determined by a board consisting of a handful of people? Isn't a university only what its faculty, students and administration working as a whole make it?

It seems that the modern university traditionally has two roles to fulfill. The first is to give professional competence to a person in order to enable him to earn a living in society. The other role, perhaps the more important one, is to encourage him to develop as a human being, exposing him to many different fields and viewpoints.

When it comes to the first role, that of giving professional competence, the authority of the educator cannot often be disputed. Who is the average student to tell his physics or history professor what he should or should not be taught?

However, when it comes to the second aspect of education, the student has much to say. Perhaps he is not satisfied with the state of society today. Perhaps he feels that we should be moving in different directions. Perhaps he feels that some of what he is learning bears no relation to his life. Should he not be free to explore the paths that he feels that will lead him to a greater understanding of himself and of life? Shouldn't he have a vital say in how he develops as a person? Shouldn't he also have a say in decisions made by the university that affect him directly, or as a thinking being?

The students at Columbia thought that they were entitled to have some say. It is unfortunate that their conflict with the administration led to a situation in which the students turn to violence. In the end more tension was created and the chances for student-administration cooperation without confrontation were dimmer.

Let us hope that not only the administration of Columbia University but all administrations at college campuses recognize that all members of the academic community should be allowed to take a part in shaping the destiny of that community. Let us hope that more administrations will recognize the value of RESPONSIBLE student opinion.

The Riots Were a Blessing, But ...

(The following Guest Editorial was submitted to the Triton Times by Special Forces 4 Robert Baum. He is currently stationed at Bien Hoa, Vietnam, and has been in that country for 14 months.)

The riots and the blood of these past few years have forced upon us the reality of a nation divided. We have seen our cities torn, burned, looted; tanks and Federal troops patrolling our property. The result of such sights has been good. This was the stimulus white America, the passive middle majority, has needed.

But now the time for silent toleration of the radical left and right, black and white, is past. We must mobilize our hearts to the greatest challenge of modern war-far's right in our own homes. This is guerrilla warfare at its finest. The pathway to peace will be paved by countless thousands of individual battles--battles of our own consciences, in our own minds. We can no longer retreat to our fortresses of bigotry, we can no longer suppress a people's rights. The future lies in a unified nation--black, red, white and yellow together. Until today we have attacked this problem in total blindness, rejecting without thinking. The Negro society is one to which the white do not and cannot belong. We have never, nor will ever, be on the inside. Therefore, it only follows that the Black man come outside. All must work together.

The Negro peoples have earned more than just the price of the admission ticket to society. They have suffered and died, just as whitey has, in the jungles and rice paddies of Viet Nam. Many Negroes have lived for generations in the United States. They have mixed taxes and blood freely in our pursuit of freedom and peace. Yet, we would accept an English or a German immigrant without a moments hesitation, whereas our own countrymen are barred from equality. Why? Why is it that an offense committed by a Negro is doubly damned? How can it be that our justice, which cannot differentiate between rich and poor, clean and dirty, can sense color?

Our fellow Americans do not ask for pity, for charity, but only for respect. Do they ask us to join hands? No. Do they ask us to carry picket signs? No. They ask only to be recognized for what they are, individuals to be judged solely upon his or her own merits by his fellow man. It is not for the white race to grant them their right or to apologize for previous failure to recognize them, but rather it is for us to realize the obligation that we accepted as Americans in 1789, "... that all men are created equal."

The riots were a blessing, they were overdue. Now it is the time to apply the lesson they taught us.

McGill Questions May Nomination

Editor, The Triton Times:

I read a news report on page 1 of the Triton Times (26 April 1968) on the subject of the expected announcement of a new Chancellor at San Diego. President Hitch was said to have indicated that the announcement is expected at the May meeting of the Regents in Santa Barbara.

As an interested observer of the process of selection and as a participant who has been deeply involved, I was rather surprised by the story. If an announcement to this effect should indeed come at the May meeting of the Regents, your correspondent would be the most surprised and relieved man on campus. To my knowledge the matter is under continuing (and still unresolved) discussion between the President, the Faculty Committee and the Regents.

The business cannot go on much longer without some resolution (perhaps an Acting Chancellor) but I know of no concrete development suggesting that the selection of a new Chancellor could be completed by mid-May. Incidentally, the selection of a new Chancellor is made by the President and the Faculty Committee reports to him, not to the Regents. In any event I hope that your story will prove to be correct.

Sincerely,
W. J. McGill
Chairman, San Diego Division

Future UCSD Prof Fears Student Apathy

Editor, The Triton Times,
Today's New York "Times" (Sunday, Apr. 28, 1968) carried a four-page advertisement in which the student leaders of American universities expressed their concern with the war in Vietnam. Every major university was represented, including also eight of the nine University of California campuses.

The University of California at San Diego was not represented. If the omission was not simply a typographical error, the UCSD students would seem to have dissociated themselves from the impulse toward moral and political responsibility which now characterizes the best element in the student movement, here and abroad, East and West.

I write this letter because I will be teaching at UCSD next year and am dismayed at the prospect of an apathetic or submissive or unthinking student community.

Sincerely yours,
Savvan Beroovitch
Assistant Professor,

Watson Speaks On Racism

Dr. Joseph Watson, UCSD faculty advisor for the Black Students' Council, and Mr. Kieth Lowe, acting Assistant Professor of Literature, talked with about forty people at last week's Jericho dialogue, "Black Nationalism and White Racism." Speaking at the University Lutheran Church, both men fielded a variety of questions dealing with law enforcement, education, and white attitudes.

They described racism as not only supporting but also passively accepting oppression and injustice as normal in today's society. They contended that whites must change the attitudes of other whites if any improvement is to develop. This involves enlightening those who are ignorant of the Black man's status and his problems.

The two speakers cited the Black Nationalist Movement as a collective ideology of blackness which offers humanism which is totally lacking in today's uncivilized white society. The movement now avoids integration because this requires that one accept white values and disregard his own black culture, and turn his back on his black brothers and sisters.

Watson condemned the present law enforcement policies and offered the suggestion to "get the cops off of our backs" and give black communities independence to solve their own problems and control their own lives.

A final point was made that, educationally, students are taught in courses other than math and science that whites are responsible for all that has been, is, and will be done that is worthwhile. Watson mentioned that a course involving non-white contributions to world progress should be established in the college curriculum. Furthermore, high-school counselors should direct black students toward college educations rather than vocational training and education.

Oceanographic Ships Depart

The "Argo" is heading out toward the Indian Ocean on a year long scientific exploration, named CIRCE. The expedition which left San Diego last month, will circle the earth doing research in the Pacific, Indian and Atlantic oceans.

CIRCE is primarily a deep-sea geological cruise, similar to S.L.O.'s MONSOON (1960-1961), LUSIAD (1962-1963) and DODO (1964) expeditions to the Indian Ocean. The main purpose of the expedition is to investigate bottom topography by sounding and photography, magnetic patterns, heat-flow, sediment thickness and chemical properties, and hard rock distribution and type.

The "Argo" will now be using satellite navigation, made possible with the newly installed computer. The system, which is reliable in any weather, is important to work where the position of data collected is important.

Dr. Fisher, who will be the chief scientist during August and September, will investigate under-sea trenches to see if, perhaps, these are breakages in the crust caused by a growing earth. Many scientists believe an expanding earth causes land masses to break apart and move away from each other.

CIRCE is primarily sponsored by contracts with the Office of Naval Research and grants from the National Science Foundation. The Argo, 213 feet long, is Scripps largest research vessel. Another expedition, called STYX, left this month on the "Agassiz".

Senator Bielsenon 'New Politics' Is Subject

Anthony Bielsenon, candidate for US senator from California, and endorsed by the California Democratic Council, spoke to UCSD students of the new politics that he feels is beginning to emerge in this country. This "new politics" is characterized by an attitude that things that must be done in this country can be done if one puts his mind to it. He spoke of the need for national moral leadership.

Bielsenon is currently a State Senator from the 26th Senatorial District (Los Angeles). He was the author of the controversial abortion bill that recently became law, and has sponsored many bills designed for protecting consumer rights. Bielsenon is a member of California's slate of delegated pledged to McCarthy.

Bielsenon described our present course as one that is "drifting towards disaster." Currently military spending is five times as large as domestic spending. This ration, he felt, must be reversed, for the first priority should always be people, starting with the people here in the US.

"For the first time in history," Bielsenon stated, "people have the wealth and means to eliminate poverty."

The immediate resolution of the Vietnam war should be our first priority at the moment, however. "I am sick of talking about it," he said. "Even though we're negotiating now, we are not slowing down action there."

The senator felt that it may have been necessary to engage in this war to learn the consequences of our "arrogance of power" in trying to militarily suppress a country such as Vietnam. He went on to say that there is something wrong with the fervent religious anti-communist attitude of many Americans. It should be realized, he felt, that there is no longer any monolithic

Senator McCarthy "Leadership of America Is 1968's Great Issue"

(The following is the text of speech delivered by Senator Eugene J. McCarthy at the Dane County Coliseum, Madison, Wisconsin, March 25. It is the third in a series of speeches made by presidential candidates.)

I entered the race for the Democratic Presidential nomination because the future of America is at stake in this election year of 1968. I entered because I believe the citizens of this nation deserve a choice, an alternative, to the policies of war abroad, and deprivation at home that are guiding this nation.

For the great issues of this election year are not only the war in Vietnam and the agony of our cities, but something much greater: the quality of leadership of this country.

The nation has come, in some cases slowly, to realize that the problem of our minorities and cities are of almost overwhelming importance today--and not a futile, seemingly endless war in Vietnam. Until recently, President Johnson had assured us that we could fight both wars--at home and in Southeast Asia. But two weeks ago he acknowledged what we have known for years--that the nation must brace itself for austerity, austerity brought upon us by the 30 billion dollars we spend each year in Vietnam. The President said federal programs would have to be cut by 8 or 9 billion dollars. But austerity, in this Administration, begins at the bottom--among the poor, the sick, and the distressed who are being asked to pay the price of war.

What kind of a man should be leading this bitterly divided nation--divided as it has not been since the Civil War?

I think any man who offers himself for the Presidency must meet three conditions of character, experience, and understanding. The President of the United States must be able to interpret and read with reasonable judgement the needs and aspirations of the people of the nation. I have served this country twenty years in the Senate and the House. I believe I have some comprehension of what this country is all about--where its minorities and children are headed and what they are seeking. I also have some understanding of where this country should be headed and what its people want.

Secondly, a President of the United States must know the limitations of power and influence, particularly since there is no greater power or influence than that entrusted by the people to their President. The President should understand that this nation doesn't really have so great a need for leadership, because the potential for leadership exists in every American. The President, instead of asserting leadership, must be prepared to be but a channel for the desires and aspirations of the people. He must guide the nation to the goals its people seek--and never impose the right of office upon them.

Finally, the office of the Presidency of the United States must never be a personal office. The President should not speak of the people, or the Cabinet members or the ambassadors, or the military, or the richness of this nation, as my people, my Cabinet, my ambassadors, my military or my richness.

Sheerin Talks on War and Draft

Father Sheerin, a priest of the Catholic Church, spoke to a very concerned audience last week on the subject of his feelings regarding the war in Vietnam and the American participation there. In his speech, he said that the United States has no business in the war because it is a civil conflict and we are not wanted there!

Father Sheerin's talk centered around two main areas, the war and the drafting of young men to fight in that war. Sheerin is against both of these policies but feels that, as a priest, he can only advise men of draft age to follow the dictates of their conscience with regard to deciding whether to serve in the armed forces and possibly fight in Vietnam.

In his first remarks about the war, Father Sheerin voiced the opinions of many people who feel that the war is unjust, immoral, and illegal. After giving a short recitation of Vietnamese history following the French defeat at Dienbienphu, he pointed out how involved the U.S. has become in the affairs of the Vietnamese people and their many governments. His words on the quality of the South Vietnamese governments indicated his unfavorable impression of them.

Following this historical outline, Sheerin gave his opinions on the current political situation in Vietnam and what the benefits of the conflict are versus the great damage the war is doing in terms of lives, and property. He also said that the "just war" theory has value but that it has been greatly misused since the two world wars. In a more general reflection, Sheerin remarked that communism is not the great evil we think it is today, but has value in certain instances. Whether Vietnam is one of them, he failed to say.

Father Sheerin related his opinions concerning the draft and the draft laws. "Supergeneral Hershey" is without respect for the consciences of others, which must be respected at all times, he said. The great dilemma now facing young men of military age is that of United States civil law or their personal conscience.

"Happening" Creator Speaks

Allan Kaprow, internationally known for his development of "happenings," will be a Regents' Professor on campus next week.

Kaprow will participate in "New Art Week," sponsored by the UCSD Departments of Music and Visual Arts, through 15 May. Culminating the week-long schedule will probably be a happening on Tuesday, May 14. It is rumored that it will be held on Scripps Beach.

Two seminars will be held today and Monday at 4 p.m. in USB 3070.

Kaprow has defined a "happening" as "an assemblage of events performed or perceived in more than one time and place. Its material environments may be constructed, taken over directly from what is available, or altered slightly; just as its activities may be invented or commonplace. A happening, unlike a stage play, may occur at a supermarket, driving along a highway, under a pile of rags, and in a friend's kitchen, either at once or sequentially time may extend to more than a year. The happening is performed according to plan but without rehearsal, audience or repetition. It is art but seems closer to life."

A graduate of New York University, with his masters degree in Art History from Columbia University, Kaprow has a distinguished background as a teacher and an artist. He has taught at Rutgers University, Pratt University, State University of New York and the Institute of Contemporary Arts in Boston. He has had solo exhibits throughout the world, from New York's Guggenheim Museum to museums in Stockholm, Amsterdam and Hamburg.

T.A.'s Speak Out on Humanities

by Susan Adams

The reactions of several T.A.s to the April 19 article, "Students Evaluate T.A.s," were somewhat unexpected and certainly provocative. It seems that Larry Dorman, Jerry Press, Roberta Sarfatti and Carol Sweedler agree that the humanities program is conceptually good but in practice falls short of its professed objectives.

Mrs. Sarfatti said she'd expected the article to be "dangerous," but instead of introducing controversial issues, it tries to be safe. She wanted to know whether students were in favor of discussing current problems in place of the material. There are apparently two views among T.A.s concerning this question. One is that the sequence should develop critical attitudes enabling students to see prejudices in any work, and that this is best accomplished by considering books removed from our time. It was pointed out that students do not learn the past to propagandize about current issues. Mrs. Sarfatti feels that it would be presumptuous of her to tell students what they should commit their lives to. On the other hand, a student claimed that he got an A from his T.A. because he was against the war.

All agreed, however, that making the material relevant in some way is necessary, whether in the classroom or out. According to Jerry Press, "learning really starts and probably ends at making the material relevant." What happens in between is the process of education. Mr. Dorman said that one encounters a person--the author--in every word read and that one should be subjective and judge oneself by that man's experience.

Jerry Press commented on the lack of emphasis on student responsibility in the article. A student's thing is to know the material. He must expect to find value from the books--be sympathetic to them. The purpose of humanities, says Mr. Dorman, "is to show that cash value isn't the whole thing--students should leave it with a love for these sort of books. Education is something you do to yourself," and is students feel that sections are lousy, they should take it upon themselves to provoke discussion by their questions.

Mrs. Sarfatti finds that real education happens not when students are lectured to but when people talk, bringing out their ideas and relating them. Her sections, like the other's, are primarily discussion. Mr. Press' biggest criticism of undergraduates on this campus is that they see learning intrinsically related to tables, blackboards, and T.A.s and professors, sine qua non. Plato has said that the bad thing about books is that they can't answer back; confrontation and fluidity of ideas happens best when the material is discussed and related outside the classroom.

Carol Sweedler commented that it is also the responsibility of the T.A.s and lecturers to make the students want to go home and read the books. She believes that T.A.s are not always conscientious, do not read the material and substitute discussion of the cafeteria crisis or A.S. elections for discussion of the books. Jerry Press, too, criticizes T.A.s who themselves do not take the sequence seriously, who are not available enough or prepared and who might contradict the professor simply because they didn't know what he really said. A course in teaching was suggested for T.A.s "before they are let loose in a roomful of undergraduates."

When the fact that T.A.s are not consistent was mentioned, Mrs. Sweedler thought that it was good in a sense. While she advocates maintaining standards she said, "Education is about you as a total person," and if you occasionally get a good grade because you're charming, perhaps that is part of it.

The difference between content and form was found to be generally meaningless by the T.A.s. Carol Sweedler said that the meaning was imbued with the form.

It was indicated by several of the T.A.s that the departments look on the humanities sequence only as an obligation to be fulfilled and thus they send in anyone available, regardless of their qualifications to teach a specific period.

Another universal criticism was the lack of organizing principle. As Jerry Press said, "How can a student be expected to see how things have progressed over 2600 years when professors and T.A.s can not. Dorman said that the courses should be structured around a problem rather than the books.

Mr. Press discussed how unrealistic it was to expect a T.A. to spend only 20 hours a week for 2 sections, allowing 15 minutes for conferences and 20 minutes to correct papers. Since it appears that discussions are considered more real and valuable than the lectures, Press also suggested that perhaps one 1 1/2 hour lecture and 2 sections a week would be more beneficial.

The problems and deficiencies are recognized and acknowledged by the majority. Of course, as Mr. Press states, the criticisms are mitigated by the fact that everyone has other responsibilities. However, he believes this is a "mistake we let the system impose on us--it is not inevitable or intrinsic."

The T.A.s have attempted to effect change but are met with the objection, "Well, the students don't seem to mind." T.A.s like Roberta Sarfatti asked for criticisms and recommendations and really wants them--but there is little if any response. She would like to see these issues open into a real debate. According to Jerry Press, grad T.A.s would make demands if they knew the students would support them. "Students should start to mutter out loud." They can let their professors know what they feel is lacking in their classes, and can go to the A.S. government, which indicates an ability and willingness to get things done this year and who can communicate with the faculty better than individual students. They should "recognize and do something about the organic whole they're in."

Further comments from students or T.A.s--directed to the paper or to the T.A.s--are welcome.

"Seville" Remains Popular

Sunday, May 5, the Turnau Opera Players presented Gioacchino Rossini's "The Barber of Seville," at Sherwood Hall. The opera was performed in a new English adaptation which faithfully reproduced the vigor of Rossini's libretto. Even though Sherwood Hall does not provide appropriate facilities for the presentation of an opera, the audience was nevertheless delighted by the singer's enthusiasm, as was evidenced by the hearty though ill-timed applause.

The strong-singing performances by the master schemer Figaro and the old would-be lover Doctor Bartolo were supported by the hilarious acting of music instructor Don Basilio and the personal charm of the beautiful Rossina. Anthony Safina, playing the part of Count Almaviva, left much to be desired since at various times it was very difficult to understand him. Special recognition must be given to Lorine Buffington who played the part of the maid, Berta; her role was small, her singing and acting were truly delightful.

Nevertheless, the overall presentation was enjoyable, since the singing deficiencies were aptly overcome by the comic effects of Don Basilio's and Dr. Bartolo's acting. The lack of an orchestra was also partly surmounted by the piano accompaniment of Lloyd Walser.

Second Muir Building Begun

Groundbreaking ceremonies for Building 2B, the second building to begin construction in John Muir College at the University of California in La Jolla, was held last week at the building site just north of Miramar Road.

Building 2B is a five-story concrete structure with full basement which will provide 46,000 square feet of space for undergraduate and graduate biology laboratories, and the John Muir College administrative offices. Award of the construction contract for the $2.5 million building to the M.H. Golden Construction Company of San Diego was announced this week by Robert Biron, Vice-Chancellor of Administration at UCSD.

The complex of permanent buildings for John Muir College the second college to begin classes at UCSD, was begun May 26, 1967 with the start of construction of a seven-story laboratory and classroom building for the Departments of Electrophysics and Mathematics and the UCSD Computer Center.

A.S. Senate Notes

by Roger Showley

Mystery clouded the first meeting of the AS Senate last Wednesday as Tom Shepard, at the request of Dean Murphy, called the newly-elected body into Executive Session. Only the Senators, officers and secretary of the Senate plus the dean and faculty representative were permitted to participate. The subject of the closed session, which was never held in the previous administration, is being held in strictest confidence by all concerned.

Once the meeting was opened, several resolutions were passed. On Bill Eastman's motion, the Senate agreed to allow the Campus Draft Opposition Committee at the Berkeley campus to add the ASUCSD's endorsement to a statement questioning the Regents' recent decision to forbid a commencement exercise concerned with the draft. The ceremony, to be held in the Greek Theatre at Berkeley, where the traditional services are held at the end of the academic year, was to honor students who had agreed to oppose the draft and those who had chosen to pledge support. The question was whether the Regents were breaking their own rules by forbidding the expression of free speech. The blank-check endorsement by the Senate was made without regard to its content, which will be worked out in Berkeley. The motion was carried 5 to 3, with Paul Ricks, Steve Ishmael and Steve Greenberg opposed.

Paul Ricks announced that the negotiations for a new contract for food services on campus would reach a critical stage next week and asked that the AS become involved in the formulation of the contract. He will meet with Bill Borasri from the Business office and any other interested students to discuss the selection of a company for the Fall. Ricks also urged the Senate to consider a Town Hall meeting for the present quarter since it was favored by so many of the candidates during the campaign. The matter will be brought up at next week's meeting.

Concerning the AS Judicial Board, Eastman proposed that the Senators bring candidates for the positions to next week's meeting so that the Board can be filled as soon as possible. The most controversial part of the open session was a motion to recommend to the Revelle COSA to test amplification equipment on the Revelle Plaza at a hearing on college government next Monday or Tuesday. Dean Hull questioned whether such a change in COSA's plans would achieve the objective of the hearings, at which students and faculty will discuss particular features of the plan. Jeff Benjamin, Tom Baer and Tom Peiffer held that the hearing would be more effective outside where more students would be inclined to listen to the discussions. "If we hold a hearing as a rally," Benjamin asserted, "we could drum up student interest in the open hearings." COSA was originally going to test the sound equipment when it had decided the best possible time and circumstances. The resolution, passed unanimously, was sent to COSA, which was scheduled to discuss the test yesterday.

Before the end of the quarter, hopefully, all Senators and officers will have agreed to submit statements to the Triton Times at least once during each quarter next year in order to inform students what their representatives are accomplishing in their elected posts. The Triton Times will continue to present summaries of the AS Senate meetings next year to insure that students are aware of the Senate's actions.

S.F. Mime Troupe Practices Self Reliance, Professionalism

On their home turf, the twenty members of the San Francisco Mime Troupe practice self-reliance. The members live in different parts of town (none, any longer, in the Haight-Ashbury), range in age from 20 to 39, and include mothers, holders of advanced degrees, Hollywood drop-outs, a couple of founding Diggers and a real-estate man. They generally rehearse 20 hours a week, meet several times for mime and acting classes, and put on five shows. Otherwise they see little of one another. The Troupe, they emphasize, is not a tribe. "We work very hard and have to travel light," says a 23 year old actor, "so anyone we take with us has got to be able to walk. We love people who are looking to work, but we can't work with people who are looking for love." The company is often praised for its ensemble spirit. "No stars," says director R. B. Davis. "Sensitivity" and "temper," fostered in the dressing rooms of what is usually called Theatiah, don't get much nourishment in the Mime Troupe atmosphere, where, in the words of a Troupe writer, "you are what you do--nobody's interested in your personality".

Physical sustenance is equally spartan. Money comes from the hats passed after performances

LeRoi Jones Presents Work At State College

A predominantly white group of people from all over San Diego area crowded into Peterson Gym Saturday night to see the celebrated black poet-playwright LeRoi Jones who presented two of his plays and an assortment of poetry. The large attendance, as well as the searing effect of Jones' artistry proved the performance to be a powerful success. The show was sponsored by the Black Students Councils of San Diego for the purpose of raising funds to relieve Jones of the legal expenses put upon him by his recent trial in New Jersey.

Jones was arrested last Summer in Newark for driving around the riot area with firearms in his car. Two other persons in the car were also arrested. During the ensuing trial, the judge read two of Jones' latest prose poems, and was astounded by Jones' antagonistic denunciations of the white society. The judge declared that Jones was sick and needed medical attention, but Jones told the judge that he was the sicker one. However, the judge came to the conclusion that LeRoi Jones was doing more to increase the acuteness of the condition of the Negro community in Newark than he was in trying to ease it.

After this peculiar trial, Jones was sentenced to two and a half years in the New Jersey state prison and a $1,000 fine -- one of the severest penalties yet given out during the Newark trial cases.

Presently, Jones is out of jail on a $25,000 bond.

The first of the two plays presented Saturday night was entitled "Insurrection of Misplaced Love." It was a pantomime that depicted the white oppression of the black people and the final unmasking of the lies used to betray the black race. The second play, "Home on the Range," more boisterously washed out against white racism and the acquiescence of the "Negro" to the white dominance. The play ended with a burning denunciation of the white society.

During the period between the two plays, a group of men came on the stage chanting, playing rustic instruments or jingling bells. Individually, each person came up to the microphone and recited one of Jones' poems. The poems were read with much expression, and the men standing behind the speaker would chant and play their instruments along with the rhythm of the poem. In this way, the reading of the poem was intensified and given greater depth. The poems often had a double meaning: they blatantly decried the white racism while they also condemned the complacent "Negro."

The entire performance took place on a plain, wooden stage with a small backdrop. Darkness was used for the changing of scenery and characters. Few props were used; the austere look of the stage added to the meaning of the plays.

the board, answered the Reverend by telling of some of the board's projects, among which were recruitment of minority group teachers, additional funds for Southeast San Diego schools, and the open transfer system.

After some confusion, which resulted in a temporary recess, Barry Shapiro spoke for Tuesday the Ninth. He requested that Black teachers be given administrative position, and that a course in Black studies be initiated immediately in the schools. He also warned of the possibility of riots in the event that Black students are not dismissed from classes on May 19 to celebrate the birthday of Malcolm X.

Finally, a resolution was passed calling for a review of the situation, and a study of the possibility of a timetable.

Galbraith Defines Chancellor's Duties

by Susan Adams

Ideally, a university would embody fluid relationships between administration, faculty, and students, according to Chancellor John Galbraith. A harmonious set of values would result from the realization that all elements were promoting a common objective—the stimulation of a free intellectual environment.

The particular role of the chancellor was further elucidated by Dr. Galbraith. The chancellor has more authority today than two years ago; however, he exercises this authority with advice. He is obliged to listen to faculty committees on such matters as educational policy and to student-faculty committees on campus planning, student conduct and fees, public ceremonies and arts and lectures, although the final decision is his responsibility. Students must understand that they as well as administrators must be willing to listen and to expend time if they wish to effect change. Galbraith does not believe that the chancellor's power should be absolute; he is not "desirous of creating a philosopher-king", since one would probably not remain a philosopher if he became absolute king.

One specific duty of the chancellor is representing the university to the community. Dr. Galbraith sees something of a paradox; the university is created by the society, but is often critical of those who support it. It is difficult for some to understand, especially in such periods of stress as the present, that the University by its nature should not merely reflect the existing society.

Other duties of the chancellor include representing the particular campus within the university structure, in budgetary discussions for example. He must review or act on promotions or appointments and must oversee the vice-chancellors. At UCSD, with its distinctive college system, the provosts are also delegated great authority and students probably will look to them as the most immediate administrative presence.

The chancellor communicates to the members of the University community his views on relevant matters and is of course involved in making future plans. How UCSD will look in 30 years and the proportion and distribution of students are some matters which must be decided, "even though we know we will be wrong," said the Chancellor. "We must have plans to change."

A chancellor must "have an understanding of the academic life. The University is like no other institution. It must do more than produce people qualified for jobs."

Galbraith indicated that one other qualification for a chancellor is that he be a masochistic, since he is in a position to get it from all sides. But, he added, it is part of the job which he has found fascinating because it is involved in the process of creating. When he came to UCSD he believed that it had "as brilliant a prospect as anywhere in the country." The difference between '64 and '68 is that we are now closer to realization of that prospect.

Galbraith said he hoped a more positive feeling for this campus would develop within the student body—"A sense of pride in what I think is an outstanding educational institution—a manifestation of the sense of belonging here."

When asked what suggestions would be offered to a successor, Chancellor Galbraith suggested: "Be of good cheer. Be resolute. And take up volleyball"—when one is frustrated it serves as an excellent catharsis.

UC Scientists Elected to National Academy

Five more University of California scientists today were elected to the National Academy of Sciences, raising UC's membership to more than 100 members, largest ever from any single institution.

Election is considered to be one of the highest honors that can be accorded an American scientist or engineer. Members are elected in recognition of distinguished and continuing achievements in original research. Nearly one of every eight members is from UC.

The new UC members are Professors Louis G. Henyey, astronomy, and John H. Reynolds, physics, both at Berkeley; Henry W. Menard, Jr., geology, and William Prager, applied mechanics, both at San Diego, and Edward A. Steinhilber, organic biology, at Irvine. The five new UC members are among 50 elected nationally and among 10 from the state of California.

The election took place in Washington D. C. at the 105th annual meeting. The academy, which was established in 1863, is a private organization of 806 that must be ratified by the Revelle faculty and students."

Speaking from the point of view of the campus-wide Associated Students, Tom Shepard emphasized that UCSD's unique nature demands a different sort of student organization.

"What can the relation between 27,000 students and 12 different colleges be in 1990," he asked. "Traditional AS government cannot work at this school. We should take advantage of our different structure and make the AS more effective."

Shepard defined concern to be in those things which the colleges cannot financially support. "A college cannot support a newspaper or a radio station. It cannot speak for the University of California at San Diego in condemning something in the outside community."

In his administration, however, he warned that he would not allow the "AS to act at the expense of the colleges so as to destroy the identity of the colleges."

"Some think college government will subvert student government and effectiveness. But a student (at Revelle) is primarily a student (at his college). The college should be his main concern. Student power lies with the individual and it is in an integrated community—the college—that his power can be effective."

Bob Boyd, a member of the Revelle Interhall Council, said that students can only achieve decision-making power by "reliably influencing" the Provost's decisions, we have student power."

Referring to the recent upheavals at Columbia University, Boyd said that "coercion is the destructive way (to student power) but is not the way to do it. It is absolutely inflexible because it brings the system to a halt."

Assuming that student opinion is manifest in those who march, Boyd said that the "more democratic" way is to elect spokesmen who will reflect student opinion.

"Without the respect for the student body," he concluded, "the Provost will reject the total college opinion." COSA's government will allow the Provost to make "reliable decisions."

The faculty representative speaking at the convocation, Dr. Walter Kohn of the Physics Department, spoke of the "breakdown after 1000 years of scholastic tradition in the academic community" in spite of the "good things that have resulted from confrontations" between students and administrators.

The college system, Kohn implied, helps to avoid the breakdown of the universities.

"Experimentation and innovation is very much easier (at the college level) than in the eight other big monolithic colleges (sic) of the University of California. New ideas can be put into effect without running into opposition from the rest of the campus. When we make mistakes, they can be corrected and the other colleges can notice and correct or avoid them."

"The college plan offers much in the broader sense, for within the college system we can get away from the impersonal relationships one finds in large campuses. (In the college) we can work and live together and learn to develop some trust in each other, something very lacking in today's world."

Provost Saltman concluded the hour-long convocation by exposing the charred remains of the COSA plan which he had found on his door in an envelope Monday morning.

"I hope this is not the felling of the students of Revelle College," he said. "It is time to build, not to burn."

Partch Concert in Unique Music

A concert by noted composer Harry Partch will be presented in the University of California, San Diego Art Gallery on Saturday and Sunday, May 11 and May 12 at 8:30 p.m. The programs is sponsored by the UCSD Department of Music, where Partch was Regents' Professor during the fall quarter, 1967.

In the past 40 years Partch has been writing in his highly individualized style for instruments uniquely his own. As a young American composer, Partch rejected at least one of the mainstays of western music, the "equal temperament" tuning system of 12 tones to the octave, in favor of a system of scales based on "just intonation", an acoustical division of the octave into 43 or more tones. In his book "Genesis of Music", published by the University of Wisconsin Press, Partch sets forth the principles of his theoretical system, which offers "pure" intervals and exotic scales not possible in conventional western music.

Also reflecting the composer's inventiveness are the Partch musical instruments, largely of his own manufacture and for which he writes almost exclusively. They are made from wood glass and metal and are primarily percussion and plucked-string types.

A philosophy of music has grown out of his active concern for communication between himself and others as he tells stories using music, drama and dance. He aims at a "total theatre" objective and often uses films in his work. Not wanting to be confined to a musical tradition of European tastes and styles, Partch believes in a music that grows from an awareness of world-wide and milleniums-old cultures.

The May concert will include: "Castor and Pollux", and "Daphne of the Dunes," both choreographed by Susan Long; "Two Studies on Ancient Greek Scales," a film entitled "Rotate the Body"; and "Time of Fun Together" from Partch's recent work "Delusion of the Fury," choreographed by Judith Mullen. Thomas Nee of the UCSD Department of Music will direct the program, and Partch will provide an introductory commentary to the performances.

The concert is open to the public; no admission charge.

Leadership Cited As Key to '68 Elections

The role of the Presidency--at all times, but especially in 1968--must be one of uniting this nation, not one of adding it up in some way, not one of putting it together in bits and pieces, and not one of organizing it. The need of America is not a need for organization, but a need to develop a sense of national character, with common purposes and shared goals. Once this is accomplished, we can then move to the task of establishing equality and justice in America.

But this will never be accomplished as long as we must pursue the war in Vietnam. Why are we in Vietnam? Are we there because we are caught in some kind of deterministic and predetermined movement in history that forces us--somehow against our will. Are we there because Secretary of State John Foster Dulles signed this nation to a series of covenants and agreements with almost any other country that was willing? Are we there because of SEATO or CENTO? Are we in Vietnam because Dean Rusk tells us the credibility of our signed pledge is somehow at stake? Are we there because of the threat of two billion armed Chinese by the year 2000--as the Secretary of State views and presents it to his fellow Americans?

Or are we there because we must avenge those who have died in Vietnam--20,000 Americans killed in action? Does this mean we have to kill 31,000 Viet Cong or North Vietnamese? Or, finally, are we in Vietnam to prove that the decisions of President Johnson and his advisors are right and cannot be challenged?

Don't debate the issue in public, we Democrats who oppose the war are told. This is why I am making this challenge against an incumbent President of my party--I believe that the time has come for the people of this nation to pass their judgement on the war in Vietnam, the misguided priorities of America, and most importantly, on the purpose and role that this nation must play in the future. This is, I think, not the time for all good men to go to the aid of their party, but to come to the aid of their country.

Dr. Reynolds' research helped establish the nature and timing of events in the universe before the earth was formed, and added to knowledge about the sequence of developments in our solar system.

Dr. Menard discovered a long-sought area in mid-Pacific where a major under-water mountain chain had existed 100 million years ago. He is stationed at the Scripps Institution of Oceanography and is acting director of the Institute of Marine Resources.

Baseball Team Ends Season at Riverside

UCSD finished up its initial season of baseball against UC Riverside - JV last Friday. The Tritons lost both games; the final record for the season stands at 3 wins against 9 losses.

UCSD managed on run on 3 hits, with one error, while Riverside got 2 runs on 3 hits with 1 error, in the first game.

In the second game, the Tritons came back much stronger, but could not put down a Riverside squad that got 7 runs on only 6 hits. UCSD went 50% with 4 runs on 8 hits, and 3 errors.

The winning pitchers for UCR were Constable and Zuk; for the losers, John Weger and Jeff McCombs.

The UCSD Tritons averaged .206 batting percentage for the season, and the team slugging average was .266. Earned run average stood at 5.17.

Among the team leaders saw Steve Cooper finish the season batting .315, followed by Morrison at .293. Jeff McCombs led the squad with 12 runs, and with most stolen bases also 12.

Tritons Begin Assault On Records

Now that there are only three weeks left in the Triton running schedule, the UCSD squad is on its final stages of assault on the record books. The free-for-all effort officially started last Saturday at the 14th Annual Orange Invitational Track Meet held at Chapman College. The thinclads successfully rewrote two of the existing school records without any trouble and almost eradicated several others.

The day started out with preliminary heats in all but the distance races and the mile relay, meaning that most of the Triton runners were in two races for each event. The first race of the day set the first record of the day, the 440 yd intermediate hurdles by Tom Gatlin. Having broken the old standard three times this season, Gatlin easily coasted to victory in his heat with a 57.2 second clocking, well under his previous mark of 58.3. He hopes to drop the mark even more in the next meet.

Tom Wolfe, displaying his usual brilliance on the track as well as on the jumping runways, placed second in his heat of the 100 yd. dash in a time of 10.3 seconds. Returning to the finals with an injured hamstring muscle, Wolfe still managed to place fourth, in a time of 10.1 sec., acing out cross-town rival Mike Turnipseed of Cal-Western, who later complained he had pulled his hamstring during the race.

Soccer Team Holds First Practice Game

Thursday, May 9, the UCSD varsity soccer team held its first practice game of the season against Southwestern College in Chula Vista. The scrimmage was designed to give the Triton kickers experience for the game which will be held this Saturday, and an opportunity for Coach Sarolli to see his players in action.

Among the players whom Dr. Sarolli watched especially closely were Bill Cobern, playing right wing; Allen Jones and Gary Bogue playing fullback, and the teams goalie Dan Schickele. All four are first year players who will be an integral part in the teams performance in future games.

Dr. Sarolli is at present attempting to schedule more prac-

SENATOR EUGENE McCARTHY will host the first "staged" outdoor press conference this Saturday, May 11, at 5:30 p.m. in the Balboa Bowl, Harvey Furgatch, county chairman, stated today.

The presidential candidate will combine a public rally with an "on-stage" press conference during his one hour visit Saturday evening.

The rally will be free. Seats will be on a first-come-first-served basis with entertainment beginning at 4:30 p.m. The audience will hear a 20 minute address by McCarthy after witnessing a "live" on-stage press conference. All local media, including college and high school editors, are being invited to sit on the stage and question the candidate. "Hollywood entertainment will be announced later for this gala occasion," Furgatch concluded.

NEW IDEAS -CONSTANTLY appear on the theological scene. One of the latest and most controversial is expressed in The Passover Plot, a best seller by Dr. Hugh Schonfield. He asserts "that Jesus planned his own arrest, crucifixion and resurrection; that he arranged to be drugged on the cross, simulating death so that he could later be safely removed and thus bear out the Messianic prophecies" (from the cover).

Tonight, Friday May 10, at 8:00 pm in USB 2622 a panel will briefly review and then evaluate Dr. Schonfield's hypothesis. Dr. Jim Kennedy of Salk Institute, Dr. Frank Young of Scripps Clinic, and Dr. George Ladd of Fuller Theological Seminary will be on the panel and will answer questions after their presentations. Dr. Young, a former pathologist, will examine the causes of the death of Jesus, and Dr. Schonfield's theory. Dr. Ladd was well received when he spoke here at UCSD as part of the extension program.

REPRINTED FROM LA TIMES

A drug that has been shown to strikingly increase the learning ability of mice will be tested this summer on a group of mentally retarded children in Southern California, a UC Irvine researcher reported here.

Dr. McGaugh is a leading authority on the use of certain drugs to enhance learning ability. Studies done on animals have not yet revealed how the drugs work, but it is believed they make learning easier by improving the animal's memory.

Dr. McGaugh's work with mice, which he presented at the third international conference on "The Future of the Brain Sciences," indicates that the drug doubles or quadruples the animal's rate of learning.

"We have no idea whether it will have the same effect on humans, but I feel compelled to try," he said in an interview.

"We don't want to raise any false hopes. It's possible the drug will have no effect on humans."

The drug is pentylentetrazol (Metrazol), a compound which in the past has been used to put patients into convulsive shock as a treatment for mental disorders. The dosage used for learning enhancement is much smaller, however.

WANT TO BE DEVOID OF chauvinism, racism, misunderstanding, and ignorance? Here is a rewarding way to begin your ambition. Come on over to the language lab and choose a course in the 72 languages we have to offer you (in books, magazines, and recording tapes). Learn now, if you desire to have a greater knowledge in international matters without having to rely on informations from some second-hand interpretation. Learn now while you are young and your memories are good. Happiness is speaking a foreign language without sweat. Give it a try. We are open from 7:00 AM to 10:00 PM on weekdays and 1:00 to 9:00 PM on Saturdays, and 2:00 to 10:00 PM on Sundays.

"CAPITALISTIC FREE ENTERPRISE AND MARXISM" is the topic for dialogue at the University Lutheran Church next Wednesday, May 15, 7:30 p.m. Speakers will be Dr. Daniel Orr of UCSD Economics Department speaking on behalf of capitalism, and Dr. Stanley Moore of the Philosophy Dept. as a Marxist scholar.

Record Assault

With all the breaks going to UCSD in the early portion of the meet in was a sad day for two of the team members. The first tough break came when Eric Yeoman, who already was running on one sprained ankle received earlier in the week, hit a hurdle in the 440 intermediates and sprained the other in the fall. However, with both ankles taped very heavily, he was still prepared to battle in the mile relay until, to the long wait between events, the swelling finally got to him. It is hoped that after a weeks rest he will be able to return to active duty. At least Coach Johnson hopes so because he is entered in at least four events this Saturday.

The other hard luck case of the day came in the 440 yd dash prelims when Triton runner Marc Rothman was denied the opportunity to run in the finals later that day. Having run a better time than the two lone runners in the following heat, the Judges decided that Doug Parson of Pepperdine, who ran the same time as Rothman, would be the seventh man to run in the finals. There were originally to be six men to qualify (first two in each heat), but due to another tie in the first race (faster time) they could take seven but no more because of the number of lanes. Not only was Marc dismayed at the decision but also his coach, Richard Johnson. Both are awaiting Saturday's quarter race at UC Riverside. The field events tell another story, a good one. Long jumper Tom Wolfe, easily won the contest of the sand pit with a leap of 22'7" with teammate Jerry Nierengarten placing 5th at 20'4". Steve Garfalo, the nymph of the discus ring, won a big second in that event with mate Roy Dimon right on his tail in third. The pole vault foursome of Dent, Burdick, Bright, and Dower were in better than average shape when they finally had at least one pole for each man to jump with. Jim Dent placed 3rd at 12'6" with Burdick in 5th at the same height by ruling of fewer misses.

The distances races provided the final record of the day with Warren Kumley's mile performance. Warren bravely followed a very swift pace set by Mike Eck of Cal-State Fullerton to the new school record of 4:25.6. Eck broke his own record in that race by running 4:12. Jay "The Rabbi" Segal trying to set another record in the two mile came close with a clocking of 9:45 --- only 18 seconds off.
